CHRONICLE BOOK AND JOB PRINTING OFFICE,
1888.

PREFACE.

Baldwin's Directory of the Oranges, Bloomfield and Montclair, in its ninth edition, appears in improved form, the page having been enlarged from the old duodecimo form to regular octavo. Notwithstanding the increase thereby gained in the number of names to a page, the book, owing to the regular increase, contains as many pages as ever. The most important event of mutual interest between the places is the uniting by horse railroad of the city of Orange and the township of Bloomfield, which railroad has been in operation about one month. Livingston township is included among the seven municipalities now covered by Baldwin's Directory.

A new feature of the general business is the publication of special editions of the Bloomfield and Montclair Directories, a feature which has already met with encouraging appreciation in the advance orders placed.

Additions and important changes in the maps, both of Orange and Bloomfield and Montclair, have been made, and they are now carefully corrected to date. The street directory shows the numbers at which streets in Orange and East Orange intersect, so as to conform to the new numbering system in those places.

There is one serions drawback to the making of a directory in this locality, namely, the frequency with which duplications, even triplication, of street names occurs, rendering absolutely accurate work an impossibility. In one municipality a single name of an avenue is repeated twice, while it is a common thing for an avenue and street to bear the same prefix. Great care has been exercised, however, to avoid error, and the publishers have reason to believe that improvement has been made in this respect.
