VAN RIPER-PIKE CASE.

LAWYER ANGLEMAN OF THE DEFENSE FILES AN APPEAL.

The Case Will Now be Tried Over at Elizabeth.—A Warrant Issued for Mr. Joseph Pike's Arrest on a Charge of Stealing.

After Justice Mosher rendered his decision yesterday in the Van Riper-Pike case, Lawyer Angleman, of the firm of Jackson & Angleman, who represented Mr. Pike, filed an appeal, and the matter will now be tried in a higher court.

The particulars of the case are about as follows, according to the evidence brought out at the trial yesterday:

During the Summer of 1891 Mr. Joseph Pike, son of Mr. Noah W. Pike, of East Front street, was stopping at "The Pierfont," at Ocean Grove. While there he met Miss Mary Van Riper of Paterson, a niece of Judge Van Cleef of that place. She loaned him her diamond ring which she values at about $150. He pawned it in New York for $40, and afterwards gave the ticket to his father. Mr. Pike returned the ticket to Miss Van Riper and she secured her ring by paying the $40 besides $12 interest claimed by the pawnbroker.

Much correspondence passed between Miss Van Riper and Mr. Noah Pike in regard to the money she had paid to the pawnbroker for the ring. Mr. Pike, at first, offered to pay it and then refused. He said he offered to pay the money at first to shield his son from arrest, but later he thought he would let the law take its course, as he thought it appeared like a criminal matter.

Judge Van Cleef, the young lady's uncle, then took a hand and threatened to bring suit unless the money was paid. He said it was not their intention to bring suit until Mr. Pike admitted to him that he merely kept up the correspondence until his son got out of the jurisdiction of New Jersey law. Mr. Pike, on the stand, denied having made such a confession.

Lawyer DeMera represented Miss Van Riper, and at the conclusion of the trial had a warrant issued for the arrest of Mr. Joseph Pike for stealing.

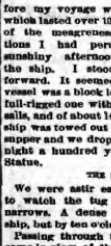
100 DAYS ON A SHIP.

THE FIRST OF A SERIES OF LETTERS.

A Landsman's Experience—Letter No. 1 tells of the Start; the Pilot; Arranging the Watches and Portrays a "Real Handy Sailor-man." Other Letters will tell of Adventures.

Letter No. 1.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—



HOSE only who have experienced the delights of a sea voyage can really appreciate the pleasures derived from such a trip.

I had read many tales of the sea and felt that nothing more could impress me. Before my voyage was ended, however, which lasted over 100 days, I was aware of the meagreness of the descriptions I had perused. One bright sunshiny afternoon I went aboard the ship. I stood aft and looked forward. It seemed to me as if the vessel was a block long. The ship was a full-rigged one with double top gallant sails, and of about 1600 tons burden. The ship was towed out to the harbor before supper and we dropped anchor for the night a hundred yards East of Liberty Statue.

THE START.

We were astir early in the morning to watch the tug tow us through the narrows. A dense fog enveloped the ship, but by ten o'clock it cleared away. Passing through the narrows we soon came in view of the lightships "Sandy Hook" and "Scotland." The pilot, a jolly old fellow, was very entertaining, giving bits of his experiences and many funny anecdotes. A few minutes past noon, we gave the pilot our letters. Orders were given to spread sail, which was soon done, and, with a hearty handshake and a "Bon Voyage," our pilot bade us farewell.

The white canvasses as they floated out in the breeze one by one soon caught the wind and before long we lost sight of the pilot's boat, which returned to the harbor.

Land was still in sight when night came. To attempt a daily account of this most charming trip would prove too lengthy so I shall only speak of those events which are the most interesting.

LIFE ON SHIP-BOARD.

Of course, on ship board, many little things occur which are laughable only at the time, the hilarity of which wears away as time progresses.

The Jack-of-Tars life is truly a busy one, in every sense of the word. He is constantly at work at something or other, and is a veritable jack-of all trades, especially the ships carpenter, or "chips," as his associates term him.

The cook bears the synonym of "doctor" and his correct name is rarely heard during the whole voyage. It is such a common practice for sailors to have nicknames that they always accept them with good grace.

The sailor's work is chiefly repairing and cleaning the ship. During our trip the old paint was entirely scraped off and a fresh coat applied and when we entered the harbor of our destination our ship fairly shone with her polished brass and glittering coat.

This work, when weather permits, is done during the "watches," or the sailors time on duty, which lasts four hours and then they are relieved by another set taking their places.

This period is only broken once during the twenty four hours, that is when the regular watches are replaced by the "dog-watches" which last two hours each, i.e. from four to six p. m. and from six to eight p. m. But for this arrangement one watch would be on duty eight hours during the night and the other only four.

When the ship first sets sail the first and second mates calls the crew aft. Then each alternate in selecting the sailors until they are equally divided, they are then known as the "Starboard watch" and "Port watch" each under the immediate supervision of the first and second mates respectively. The work of the crew reminded me forcibly of a miniature village.

"A REAL HANDY SAILOR MAN."

The ship's carpenter is always a man that can turn his hand at anything, always a practical ship-builder and house carpenter besides, turns in to help the crew stow a sail, is the blacksmith, moulds out a mast or yard and sets it, in fact is the best utility man aboard ship. The sail maker helps the crew trim sails but does little else excepting to make the sail more sails stronger by putting in extra stitches and making over the old ones. His time is fully occupied for it is nothing uncommon to have two or three sails carried away during a squall or blow. A. PLAINFIELDER.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Rev. Mr. Koechli Respecting Rev. Dr. Heischmann.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Permit me to say a few words in regard to the answer which Dr. Heischmann has given to my "correspondence from the 191 m."

1. I acknowledge Dr. H's confession of partial ignorance of the circumstances.

2. I have had no intention whatever to prejudice the Americans against our Lutheran citizens. What I said, I have said about Dr. Heischmann and not about them. We never take laymen as true representatives of the creed of churches and their consequences, but ministers who have subscribed to them.

3. In spite of the assurance of Dr. Heischmann, we say again that there is more than one branch of the Lutheran church, even in this country, which consider themselves to be the only true evangelical church on earth, and will give sufficient proof of this at another opportunity, as the discussion about this point might go too far in this paper.

4. If the heart of Dr. Heischmann is more liberal and fraternal than the creed of the church to which he belongs, we accept it willingly and say "Welcome, brother."

F. KOECHLI, Pastor.

The Event Celebrated by Mrs. Van Nostrand Yesterday.

Less than a mile distant from the house in which she now lives, Mrs. Van Nostrand was born in 1788, and her long life has been passed entirely within the neighborhood of Millstone.

Mrs. Van Nostrand has twelve grandchildren, thirteen great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. The last is two years old. She has five children living, and her age with theirs aggregates 461 years.

Property Required by the Central.

Willard I. Voorhees, J. Bayard Kirkpatrick, and I. S. Snedeker, the Commissioners appointed to condemn the Florida Grove property for the use of the Central Railroad in running its branch from Round Brook to Perth Amboy, met at Bound Brook yesterday.

The Commissioners in making their award give the owners $1,185.71 for the property, and $7,487.56 damages, making a total of over $8,600. The owners wanted $12,000, and the original offer of the company was the only $1,000. The property contains valuable clay, and the water front will be so obstructed that it will be very difficult to ship it, besides the grove is a popular Summer resort and brings a large rent. It is owned by Richard Acken of New Brunswick, Mr. Veil, of Rahway, and A. Q. Qureby of Newark. An appeal may be taken.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

WEATHER AND CROP CONDITIONS.

Report for the Week Ending Monday, September 4th.

OR the week ending Monday, September 4th, the observers and crop correspondents of the New Jersey Weather Service report that the temperature has been not about the average, the rain fall was rather unevenly distributed, being below the average in some sections and above in others. The heavy wind storm of the 29th and 30th did much damage to fruit trees, corn and some of the early varieties of vegetables, such as lima beans, peppers and tomatoes. Corn that was already prostrated by the storm of the previous week, was twisted and torn and many of the leaves blown away, making it almost worthless for fodder. In the extreme northwestern part of the State corn will be a better crop than was at first expected as there it was not so badly injured by the winds.

In the peach districts the destruction is great. Many baskets of peaches are on the ground, both ripe and unripe fruit, while branches were broken and trees twisted off and uprooted. Apples were also blown off in great quantities, especially the Winter variety; and this crop, that promised a large yield in the early part of the season, will be small.

A MYSTERIOUS BOMBARDMENT.

Showers of Stones Thrown at a House from an Unknown Source.

FAST two nights W. J. Keeler, of Dudley avenue, Westfield, has been annoyed by showers of stones thrown against his house. The stones came from all directions. Last night a big stone narrowly missed Mr. Keeler's head. This aroused Mr. Keeler. He emptied his revolver in the direction whence the stones seemed to come, and then went downtown for Constable Marsh. On the way back they met a lot of W. A. C. members out for a stroll. They got clubs and joined in the search. Their arrival at the house was the signal for a shower of stones.

Constable Marsh, with fifteen men and boys, began a search of the adjoining grounds. No one could be found, and yet the stones appeared to fly as regularly as ever. One grazed the constable's head.

Suddenly the bombardment ceased. The watchers waited a long time afterwards, but not a stone was thrown.

CROWDS AT THE FAIR.

Thousands of Visitors at Waverly Park.

There were thousands of visitors at the New Jersey State Fair at Waverly Park yesterday, and they came from all the New Jersey counties. An exhibition of all the fancy coach, carriage, saddle and matched horses was given in front of the grand stand in the morning. The judges completed the awards in all the departments, and the spectators in the afternoon knew the prize-winners by the blue and red ribbons. More than one thousand carriages and family coaches passed through the gates in the course of the day, and from two to four persons in each vehicle.

The Celebrated

Hunting's Circus, Museum and Menagerie were largely patronized and enthusiastically received by two great audiences which crowded them last Saturday. It is superior to the average shown as the cash-in-advance subscription list is to the old time pay-when-you-get-ready style. "It is a fine family and don't you forget it. One ticket admits to all the new attractions. Each other one contains more of merit than some whole shows of far greater pretentions. Mr. Hunting has "Made Money" on the show business and no mistake and we extend cordial welcome whenever the notion occurs to visit Hartford, the gentlemanly courtesy of all connected with the entire outfit is not one of its least commendable features.—Hartford, Conn., Courant.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Gold Mines.

Reports from several gold mining districts are somewhat encouraging. The "clean up" for two weeks in the Homestake and Associate mines, South Dakota, amounts to $300,000. Eastern capitalists are preparing to work other mines already known more carefully and economically. Nothing is even moderately valuable veins and placers, would pay to be closely worked in the present condition of things.

The most cheerful reports, however, come from parts of the Americas not yet belonging to the United States. In Dutch Guiana there are great goldfields, said to equal in richness any yet discovered. Now is the time to cultivate them. Nearer home, in southeastern British Columbia, have been located in the past two years some mines of which a newspaper on the ground, the Kaslo Examiner, says, "Within 18 miles of Kaslo are now discovered more rich mines than there are within 200 miles of Denver."

The Kootenai river, a tributary of the Upper Columbia, is the crookedest stream in North America probably. It is the shape of the letter "S." It crosses the line between the United States and British Columbia twice, once on the northern edge of Montana, once on the Idaho border and finally pours into the Upper Columbia almost on an exact line west of its source. It is navigable by small steamboats, and these are now loaded down every trip with prospectors old and new from the states and elsewhere. The Kootenai flows through the Selkirk mountains, a spur of the Rockies as crooked as the river is. In the mountain gulches of the Selkirk range is found the richest wealth, which if it were on our side of the line would raise a greater excitement than the Creede mine did a couple of years ago, for the Selkirk mines are richer. Gold, lead and silver have been found in immensely paying quantity.

The point of departure where miners secure their outfit for the mountains is Kaslo, a little new town on the Kootenai, a short distance north of the Montana line. Kaslo has been created by the mines. An assayer there says he has a quartz specimen which would run $50,000 of gold to the ton. Lead and silver ores are proportionally rich.

Our British brethren prefer to go slower than we do, thinking it an evidence of superior mind. But when it comes to opening up gold mines, we can tell them this policy is dead wrong.

A Week of Terror.

Two fearful railroad accidents—one on Long Island, the other in Massachusetts—a labor riot in Chicago and two of the most frightful cyclones ever known along the Atlantic coast will long keep in memory the close of the summer of 1893. Every one of these has something to do with causing the storms—who knows? We only know that man's science counts for nothing when nature unchains her tremendous forces even for a few moments. The sage is as ignorant and helpless as the savage.

The atmosphere of the week of disaster hung dense and murky along the Atlantic coast states for days before each of the great storms, as if heavy with coming doom. When the West India cyclones came, they struck the southeastern states with appalling fury, especially the second one. Charleston and the South Carolina coast got it the worst. Charleston has indeed been stricken. A destructive storm in 1885, the earthquake in 1886, and now a cyclone, which has annihilated millions of dollars' worth of property. Just one after another wrecked her. Sixty per cent of the rice crop for 1893 is gone and a third of the rich sea island cotton crop. How many were drowned, most of them hapless negro laborers and their families, will probably never be definitely ascertained, as they were scattered through the islands along the coast. But the number will not fall far if any short of 700.

A strange mix of mankind took place at the world's labor congress in Chicago. There was Miss Grace Dodge of the New York Industrials. There was sockless Jerry Simpson of Kansas. There, too, was Dr. Zacher of Berlin, a learned German professor, while here and there were scattered Carroll Wright, United States labor commissioner, Henry George, Felix Adler, Tom Mann, the London labor agitator; Victor Delahaye of Paris; Walter Besant, the novelist; Anne L. Diggs, one of the Kansas farmer brotherhood, the Catholic Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul and finally the president of the Tuskegee Industrial institute for black pupils at Tuskegee, Ala., Booker T. Washington. Mr. Washington has the reputation of being the ablest colored man in the south. Probably there were at once more brains and more eranium there represented together than at any other one of the world's Chicago congresses.

A very pretty paper gives confusion upon one of its columns in the following virgins language, "A billygoat's knowledge of astronomy is scientific and accurate compared with Blank's knowledge of the national banking system."

FIGHTING OFF REPEAL.

Silver Senators Indulge In Some Mild Filibustering.

THE HOUSE ADOPTS ITS RULES.

Voorhees Says the Date of a Vote on the Wilson Bill Has Not Yet Been Fixed—No Change In the Meeting Time Will Be Made—A Flood of Bills in the House.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.—It has been said that it was decided to bring the repeal bill to a vote on the 18th of this month, but Mr. Voorhees denies that there has been any discussion upon that proposition and that any day has ever been suggested. It is known, however, that just as soon as the leaders on the administration side believe that legitimate debate has been exhausted and that discussion has degenerated into a species of oratorical filibustering they will endeavor to force a vote by passing a resolution providing for continuous sessions of the senate day and night until a vote is reached.

The silver men, however, meet this programme with one of their own, which even thus early in the proceedings brings to the front the question of endurance. They began it Tuesday and have kept it up. It is simply demanding a call of the senate and the attendance of a quorum whenever during the debate on the part of the silver men it becomes apparent there is no quorum present in the chamber.

Silver's Right of Way Respected.

The action of the various committees, or rather their nonaction, indicates that there is to be no general legislation until repeal has been acted upon. Every committee has before it important bills bearing upon every conceivable subject, and yet, save a few bills for private relief, not a report has been made to the senate. This is understood to be in accordance with the programme that nothing shall be permitted to get in the way of the measure the senate is now debating.

The indications in the senate did not point to speedy action on the house bill to repeal the purchasing clauses of the Sherman law. The first two hours were occupied by Mr. Morgan in advocacy of the resolution which he had offered on Thursday to provide for a joint select committee on finance, and which, he avowed, was intended to supersede the finance committees of both the senate and the house.

There were 40 minutes to spare after he took his seat before the repeal bill would come up as the unfinished business, and that interval was occupied in a somewhat acrimonious colloquy between senators and in a yea and nay vote on a motion to take up the repeal bill. The bill was taken up by a vote of 35 to 24, and Mr. Morgan's resolution went to the calendar, from which it can only be taken on a motion and by a majority vote.

The remainder of the day was consumed by Mr. Stewart in a continuation of the speech on which he had spent four hours of Tuesday's session.

The House Agrees on Its Rules.

The house has finally adopted the code of rules which will govern it during the fifty-third congress, subject to the decision of the committee on rules, which under the rules has almost despotic power to direct the business of the body.

The rules vary but little from those that controlled the fifty-second congress. When first reported, they contained one radical change and re-enacted the clause which permits 100 members to constitute a quorum in committee of the whole. This clause was borrowed from the rules of the fifty-first congress, and although every member of the committee on rules was in favor of it the proposal brought against it on the Democratic side proved too powerful, and the committee gracefully surrendered their point, and the clause was stricken out.

A Flood of Bills.

After the adoption of the rules by the house Speaker Crisp announced that it would be in order for members to send bills and resolutions to the speaker's desk for printing and reference, and petitions to the box for reference only. Immediately every page on the floor was converted into a messenger and loaded with bills. Many members did not wait the services of a page, but themselves bore the precious load to the desk and delivered them.

The clerks were almost overwhelmed by the mass, there being several hundred bills presented. The mere work of numbering and sorting them for reference will occupy the file clerk and his assistants for a day or two. Most of the bills of a general character have already been published.

After agreeing to the rules the house adjourned until Saturday.

Secretary Carlisle had quite a conference with some of the leaders of the house, after which he went to the senate and had a long talk with Chairman Voorhees of the finance committee. It was after Mr. Carlisle had conferred with a number of senators that the conclusion was reached that it would be well not to push the resolution providing for the change of the hour of meeting to 11 o'clock for the reason that such action might be construed as a desire on the part of those friendly to the repeal bill to press it too hard.

PENNSYLVANIA'S DAY.

Governor Pattison and Staff Attend the Exercises Today.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—Pennsylvania's day at the World's fair was celebrated today with much ceremony and great eclat. Governor Pattison is present, with his entire state staff, attended by the famous City Troop of Philadelphia and the Philadelphia naval battalion.

A number of excursion trains were run from all parts of the state, and there was a big outpouring of former Pennsylvanians now resident in Chicago and the western states. There will be four set pieces—the Pennsylvania coat of arms, the keystone, the name Pennsylvania in letters 10 feet high, and a picture of William Penn.

The ceremonies took place this morning in the state building, speeches being made by the governor, Colonel A. K. McClure of Philadelphia, Chief Justice Sterrett of the supreme court, Lieutenant Governor Watres, Attorney General William U. Hensel and Judge Beck of Philadelphia.

The invocation was by Bishop I. D. Foss of the Methodist Episcopal church of Philadelphia.

The reception of Governor Pattison and Lieutenant Governor Louis A. Watres by the national committee was cordial. They came in with National Commissioner Woodside and State Commissioners Thomas Bradley, Bigler, Whitman and Searle who came with the governor to help in the celebration of Pennsylvania day.

Governor Pattison said he had come with the Pennsylvania commissioners to celebrate their state day, and he was pleased to pay his respects to the national commission. He had no doubt as to the importance of Pennsylvania's exhibit at the exposition. At first he had some doubts whether the work of the Centennial could be excelled, but he was now satisfied that Chicago had set an example for all time and all nations to follow.

Arrested Inspector Williams.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Inspector Williams was arrested by one of his subordinates and was taken to a station house as a prisoner. Then he was set free. The man who made the arrest is one of the men recently additions to the force and is attached to a down town precinct which includes the approaches to a busy ferry. The new policeman had been especially instructed to look out for green goods men, confidence men and suspicious persons, who are often to be found about crowded ferry houses, and thought the inspector looked like one.

Counterfeiters Arrested.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 7.—Counterfeiters have taken advantage of the prevailing scarcity of currency to float a large number of spurious $2 and $5 silver certificates. Two arrests have been made, the prisoners giving their names as Victor Farrelli and Gerces Gieti. Fifty-nine dollars in counterfeit bills was found on them and $34.98 in good money. From papers found in their pockets it is believed that they are a part of an organized gang of counterfeiters having headquarters on Mulberry street, New York.

Wreckers Weakened the Bridge.

Only the last car, an empty sleeper, was wrecked, and no one was injured. About 60 feet of the bridge is wrecked and lies in the stream 15 feet below.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

Both Met Their Death on the Halliday Farm.

IDENTIFIED BEYOND A DOUBT.

The Two Victims Were Mrs. McQuillan and Her Daughter—Mrs. Halliday Still Appears to Be Insane—Her Husband Not Thought to Be Dead Now.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Sept. 7.—The double murder at Burlingham has been so thoroughly investigated as possible at this time. The news from Walden and Newburg is confirmatory of the theory that the McQuillans, mother and daughter, started from their home with Mrs. Halliday.

James McQuillan, a fourth cousin of Joseph McQuillan of Newburg, reaches Bloomingburg in company with Adam Sloan, a friend. The body of the young woman was shown them and fully identified as that of the daughter of Joseph Mc-

MRS. HALLIDAY.

Quillan. The body of the elder woman being buried a full description was given the men, and Mrs. McQuillan left perfectly satisfied that the victims were his relatives. The undertaker advised that the body of the mother should not be disinterred on account of its condition.

Two Pistols Found.

The rumor that Mrs. McQuillan had $400 with her when she left home is not thought to be true, but that the girl had a gold watch and two rings, which are missing, is known.

Two pistols were found in a vault in an outhouse on Justice Thayer's place, where the suspected woman was first taken when arrested. The pistols are of 32 caliber. The caliber corresponds with the bullet found near the bed in the house and with the bullets in the murdered women.

In the same vault where the pistols were found later there was dug out an ounce vial without a label containing chloroform and two boxes of cartridges, one full and the other partially empty. Mrs. Halliday, on her return from Bloomingburg with Constable Scott on Monday, went to the outhouse where the pistols were stopped at Justice Thayer's. It is thought she dropped pistols and chloroform and cartridges while there.

The inquest was continued, but nothing of interest was brought out. The suspected murderess is still in Constable Scott's care at his house. She continues to treat her callers to the same disconnected, visionary speech and natural or assumed crazy actions. Many of the neighbors are inclined to believe that Paul Halliday, the husband of the women under arrest, is not dead, but has decamped.

Assistant Prosecutor Bowen conducted the inquest with vigor. As soon as the manacled woman had been brought in from his house by Constable Scott and seated the hearing began.

"Are you guilty or not guilty?" asked Mr. Bowen. For answer the woman plucked at the imaginary vermin which overrun her and cried wildly:

"Take them off! Take them off!"

"Did you kill those two women or not?" insisted Mr. Bowen peremptorily.

"Oh, my bones, my poor bones!" cried the wild creature, swaying her body violently.

"Bother your bones!" answered the prosecutor.

Justice Thayer set it down that she declined to plead. After a similar category in regard to the right of counsel the prosecutor instructed the justice to set it down that she waived the right of counsel.

What the Gravelins Think.

PROVIDENCE, Sept. 7.—The bodies of the two women found in Paul Halliday's barn at Middletown, N. Y., were not those of Mrs. George Gravelin and her daughter of this city. Mrs. Gravelin is a daughter of Paul Halliday and up to three years ago was in the habit of writing her father annually. Since that time neither herself nor daughter has been in Middletown.

George Gravelin is employed by the Providence Gas company as a mechanic. He blames his father-in-law for taking his wife back after the burning of the house. Mr. Gravelin says the stove in the Halliday residence is an immense affair, and a body could easily be concealed there. He believes that Mrs. Halliday committed the triple murder and is of the opinion that she is insane. Neither Gravelin, his wife nor daughter ever saw the gypsy wife of Paul Halliday, who is accused of his murder.

VETERANS CHOSE ADAMS.

They Elected Him as Their Commander In Chief.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 7.—The Grand Army people will probably finish their business and leave for home this evening. Already the jam at the Union station of people leaving has begun.

The encampment proper shows a disposition to rush through with its business rapidly. The election of officers was short, and the three following were elected, practically without opposition:

John J. B. Adams of Massachusetts, commander in chief; Colonel I. N. Walker of Indiana, senior vice commander, and J. C. Bigger of Texas, junior vice commander.

The new commander in chief, John J. B. Adams, or Jack Adams, as he is called at home, is one of the most popular veterans in New England. For years he has been identified with the Grand Army as one of the most active and influential members of the Department of Massachusetts. The only report of interest during the session was that of the commander in chief, Weisert, which was devoted almost entirely to pensions.

An episode occurred which is likely to cause a whole lot of trouble. The Ladies of the G. A. R. are at swords' points with the Relief Corps and have never been recognized as a body by the G. A. R. Commander Blodget of a Chicago post appeared at the door with four ladies, and Mr. Weissert invited them up, supposing they were Relief Corps women, and one of them, Mrs. Sheriff, president of the Ladies of the G. A. R., made a bitter speech against the Relief Corps.

The next encampment goes to Pittsburg. There was no other applicant.

REVOLT IN BRAZIL.

The Navy Makes a Bold Move and Blockades Rio Janeiro.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—The Anglo-American Telegraph company, at 8 Broad street, sent out notice that the Brazilian government has suspended all telegraphic service to and from that country. Until further advices are received messages for Brazil will not be accepted.

The Herald's correspondent in Montevideo telegraphs that the officers of the naval fleet now at Rio Janeiro intimated to President Peixoto that he should resign. The fleet consists of the cruisers Aquidaban, Republica and Trajano and three torpedo boats. The demand of the officers was made by Admiral Custodio Jose Mello.

In the fortress of Santa Cruz is stationed a garrison loyal to the Peixoto administration. They are under fighting orders and are awaiting an attack on the fort by the squadron. The port of Rio Janeiro has been blockaded. News has been received officially confirming the reports of the revolt.

Peixoto vetoed a bill which made it impossible for the vice president to become president. This enraged the naval officers, and to this is attributed the revolt.

BIG YACHTS OFF TODAY.

A Trial Race of the New Cup Defenders.

THE FOUR BIG SLOOPS ARE IN IT.

The Winner of This Race is to Meet the Valkyrie, the Crack English Yacht, in a Struggle For the America's Cup and International Supremacy.

NEW YORK, Sept. 7.—Today is the first of the series of most eventful days in the history of American yachting. The trial races are run today which are to decide which of all the speedy American yachts is to be selected to defend the America's cup against the English Valkyrie. Today's race consists of a run 15 miles to leeward or windward and return and will be sailed down the New Jersey or up the Long Island course. If the wind continues in the northwest, the race will probably be along the New Jersey coast.

The anchoring ground for the yachts will be off Bay Ridge. Sandy yesterday afternoon many a trim sail floated proudly on the waves between Staten Island and the Ridge, but today the scene there is one such as is never witnessed except during an international contest.

The Four Big Sloops.

When Lord Dunraven challenged, through the Royal Yacht squadron, for a race for the cup, yachtsmen in New York and Boston at once set to work to get all the boats built they could to defend the cup. They realized that the Valkyrie would be a smart kind of a craft, and to make no slip up in the defense of the cup four yachts were built of different types.

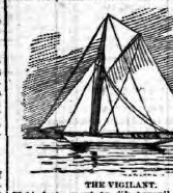
Two were constructed by the Herreshoffs at Bristol and two in Boston. Of the two Herreshoff yachts, one is a centerboard and the other is a keel boat. The Boston boats were by different designers. One was from the board of Stewart & Binney. This is a deep fin keel craft, and the other was from designs of Mr. J. B. Paine and is a combination fin keel and centerboard.

Much of the interest in the coming trial events centers around the four big sloops—the Jubilee, Colonia, Vigilant and Pilgrim. On all four the last finishing touches have been made, and they should be now as fit for the forthcoming struggle as were Dobbins and Domino when they galloped proudly out at Sheepshead for their famous match race.

The Measurements.

All of the cup defenders have been measured except the Jubilee. The first to be measured was the Vigilant. Her racing length will be 96.35 under the New York Yacht club's rules of measurement and allowance. The dimensions which are the basis of this length are: Length of the load water line, 86.34 feet; mast hoop, 100 feet; mast to jib stay, 74.85 feet; mast to jib topsail stay, 75.99 feet; length of spinnaker boom, 74.03 feet; perpendicular hoist for determining sail area, 128.88 feet; length of topmast, 56.88 feet; length of gaff, 34.76 feet.

The Pilgrim was measured at Boston Tuesday just prior to her leaving for New York. Her racing length will be about 96.31 feet. Her length on the load water line is 85.28 feet; length of main boom, 98.84 feet; distance from mast to jib stay,



THE VIGILANT.

73.14 feet; mast to jib topsail stay, 75.13 feet; length of spinnaker boom, 74.13 feet; perpendicular hoist, 111.38 feet; length of topmast, 47.68 feet; length of gaff, 54.55 feet.

The Colonia was officially measured yesterday morning after leaving the drydock at Erie Basin.

Her length on the load water line is 85.48 feet; length of main boom, 100.15 feet; distance from mast to jib stay, 74.62 feet; distance from mast to jib topsail stay, 76.27 feet; length of spinnaker boom, 75 feet; perpendicular hoist, 122.75 feet; length of topmast, 56.88 feet; length of gaff, 55.22 feet.

General Paine in the Race.

The Colonia's racing length has not been estimated, but her dimensions, save only that of water line, are so close to the Vigilant's that she will probably come out far short of her centerboard sister.

General Paine announced his intention of being on the Jubilee. He will lend his valuable services to assist his son in sailing the boat in the trial races. As the general is admitted to be one of the finest amateurs in the country, this fact will give the Jubilee chances quite a boom.

FASHIONS

MIDSUMMER STYLES.

Comfortable Shirt, Blouse and Other Independent Waists to Order.

Belted waists and blouses have proved a boon for the long sultry days. The fancy for these exceedingly comfortable garments is popular one in all fabrics from 6 cent prints to chiffons and mousselines de sole that have heretofore been reserved for elaborate toilets. Chiffon waists are worn with a variety of skirts of the same or contrasting colors. Exceedingly useful is the black chiffon waist, which may properly be worn with any closed skirt. The serpentine waist is a popular one for street dresses. These independent waists in a word are attractive and convenient of whatever material made. While having an appearance of negligee quite charming when worn indoors on a sultry day, these are readily made proper for street wear by the addition of a jacket which can be easily removed on entering the house.

The furore for jackets continues, and almost all dresses are made either with a real or simulated one. The sonave and Eton jackets are still worn, but the very newest jacket now falls a little below the waist line.

Skirts appear to have settled down to the moderately extended style easily adjusted on the hips and gathered full at the back. Popular materials for midsummer dresses are the mousseline de sole or silk muslins, crepons, batistes, taffetas and lawns. Lace still retains its position and is very much used for furnishing the delicate muslins and gauzes now in favor.

In our cut is illustrated a charming little French bodice of pongee silk; with yoke and deep ruffle of gingham lace with blue ribbon inserted in close lines. A frill of the same lace is set around the yoke. Little rosettes of ribbon placed at intervals on yoke, neck and sleeves impart a pleasing finish to the whole.

WOMAN AND HOME.

THE KNOWLEDGE WHICH ASSISTS IN HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT.

A Word For the Babies—The Freedom of Modern Women—Homeless Matrimony. A Suggestion About Gasoline Stoves. Household Disinfection.

It is a woman's province to control and manage the household. Whether she does it wisely or unwisely rests with herself. No one else can absolutely fill her place. She should therefore, study the science of home affairs with the same application and assiduity that she would give to a difficult problem which may require weeks, months, even years, to work out, but which in the end must be solved.

A man enters the arena of business with the full purpose of being master of whatever he undertakes. He knows that he must succeed. Reputation, social position, comfort, progress, the happiness of his family, even life itself, may depend upon his efforts. If woman would feel the same responsibility in regard to her home—that she must succeed in making it a peaceable, health giving, moral giving abode, and would never waver until she had accomplished it—we should reach a state of advancement in the understanding of life which, except among some in the cultured classes, is not general today.

I do not maintain that the study of household science will enable women to do all this, but such study will help greatly, perhaps more than anything else, toward that end. It is one of the important factors in that result, and if for no other reason than that it will make life for women in the performance of their household duties pleasanter, more satisfactory, soothing, easier, it is more than worth trying. To work in the dark is ever perplexing; to work in the light of intelligent understanding is one form of happiness.

The study of household science, taken in its full and broad sense, leads into boundless fields of research. The phenomenon of heat, the currents of the air, the life and chemical nature of the products of the earth, the mysterious and complex processes of nutrition, fall almost without mention into such work. The sciences of chemistry, physiology and bacteriology are its foundation stones. In fact whatever bears upon the physical life of man is included in it.—Miss M. A. Boland in Popular Science Monthly.

A Word For the Babies.

The baby, bathed and powdered and dressed in the finest and daintiest robes which a mother's love and taste can procure, is tucked into its luxurious little carriage and sent out with the nurse for an airing. The nearest park, if the baby lives in town, is the selected spot, and thither the nurse trundles her charge, to find other babies and other nurses awaking her, the babies waving and blinking on their pillows, the nurses cheerfully hobnobbing together or flirting contentedly with the uniformed policemen who stroll in leisurely fashion up and down the walks, warning children and vagrants to "keep off the grass."

At home the mother is busy with her sewing, or her book, or her correspondence. The baby is off her mind for the moment, and her hands are free for other duties. Has she not a right to this breathing spell, and does she not need it, since so hard day's work done by laboring man or woman ever quite equals in strain on vitality and drain on strength the exclusive care for hours upon hours of a little creature whose helplessness and whose preciousness alike lay it as a burden in one's arms and on one's heart?

But dear mother! If she could see her baby in the park as the baby is often seen and prized by compassionate strangers! The sun beats down on the little face, blinding it poorly its beams in the delicate eyes. The flies crawl over it. It frets and fumes and fidgets, and the nurse bounces and jostles it up and down or allows it to fret undisturbed. If old enough to assert its will and show its temper, the nurse perhaps loses her temper and asserts her will and ill treats the little creature, though to do justice to the women who usually officiate in our nurseries they are seldom actively unkind. Ignorance and indifference may be charged upon them, not deliberate cruelty nor brutality.—Harper's Bazar.

The Freedom of Modern Women.

In view of all the women's congresses and things one is tempted to ask the cynic's question What signifies? Isn't the woman question, with a big W, being just a trifle overdone? Few be trying to hinder woman from being as many doctors and lawyers and ministers and fishing authorities and undertakers and professional embalmers as she pleases. No one. Ask any of the energetic women who have made a success in these or a hundred other so called men's professions or callings, and she will frankly tell you that the men with whom she has worked or studied side by side have *willingly helped, not hindered, her prog*ress.

To what end is all this placing of women on an exhibition stage, as it were, and pointing at them with pride and explaining? It will be a sensible state of affairs when we get through marveling at women, because in spite of their sex they are doing something, and come to regard them as human beings, with the powers and limitations natural to their race.

It was a notable fact that when at the press congress Susan B. Anthony declared that not until women could own and run a big daily newspaper entirely by themselves would they be free, every working, active newspaper woman present dissented. The sensible woman does not want to be set off in a cage by herself. She wants to work side by side with men as human beings. She does not want to be looked upon as the nineteenth century phenomenon. She wants to be let alone and allowed to work out her own salvation, as she, is doing now—thousands of her! Now let somebody start a man question.—Domestic Monthly.

Homeless Matrimony.

We learn from a newspaper published up on the Hudson that the Troy collar girls, of whom there are thousands, do not as a rule enter upon a home life after marriage. Says the

There are many married women who work in our shop, and I know many others who work in other shops. Their husbands work also, and each clothes himself or herself and earns his or her own living. The men in Troy actually expect when they marry that their wives after a short period will return to work, which they accordingly do.

This is an unfortunate condition of affairs, bordering on the serious. It is agreed that the object of matrimony is the rearing of a family, and the Troy plan discourages that; or at least robs the children and parents as well of the helpful and ennobling influence of home. There can be no true home life where the mother's life and work are apart from it.

There is an assault on the American home along the line. Between the omnipresent saloon, the prevalence of clubdom, the attractions of city life, the cruel exactions of real poverty and the temptations of pride and social ambition, the old fashioned home suffers severely, and the effect on citizenship, character and national aims and traits is farreaching. The sociologists might well devote themselves to the conservation of this basal institution. The French have no word in their language for "home;" our word must undergo a change unless checks are applied.

It is unnatural that a wife and mother's sphere should be outside the activities and interests of her own home, and it must be disastrous when necessary individual cases of such life give way to the introduction of a system of homeless matrimony.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Suggestion About Gasoline Stoves.

The persistency of the gasoline stove in exploding, no matter how great the care *employed in its use, has caused however*ous end of worry and annoyance. Mrs. Mary E. Henry of this city, who has had some practical experience with the deadly dealing gasoline stove, has found what she considers an explanation of the mysterious explosions that are of almost daily occurrence. The reason very rarely nowadays of exploding gasoline stoves due to filling the tank while the stove is lighted. That piece of carelessness is of rare occurrence nowadays. Most of the explosions have been from heretofore inexplicable causes.

Not long ago Mrs. Henry filled her supply tank by mistake with coal oil instead of gasoline. It was a fortunate error, as the coal oil, being more penetrating than gasoline, soon disclosed the presence of a small leak in the bottom of the tank. A man was called in to mend it, and he said if the tank were used for a month longer without repairing there would have been an explosion, as the gasoline vapor would have escaped and caused an explosion.

Mrs. Henry infers from her experience that most of the mysterious explosions of gasoline stoves are due to the defective material employed in making the supply tanks. She thinks that there should be an inspector to examine the material put in gasoline tanks to see that every housewife should have her supply tanks painted occasionally while the stove is in use. In this way the source of danger would be reduced to a minimum.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Household Disinfection.

One of the commonest household disinfectants is probably that sold under the name of crude carbolic acid, which consists of a mixture of pure carbolic and cresylic acids, and is of a reddish brown color. Its strong, tarlike odor renders it a not disagreeable deodorant, but its solubility in ordinary water, which is in inverse ratio to the amount of cresylic acid present in the mixture, is considerably diminished; it mixes, however, much more freely with hot water, and for all practical purposes the solution thus produced is sufficiently useful.

Patients in some cases object to the smell, and in these instances some other disinfectant of course to be resorted to, but this is not the fact with the majority, while its inexpensiveness renders it acceptable in public institutions, offices, railway stations and dwellings, where economy is an object. A refined preparation of the article known as crystalline carbolic acid is more expensive, but of much more easy application. It mixes readily with warm water, so that a saturated solution is easily made.—New York Tribune.

Dear Food Not the Most Nutritious.

The maxim that "the best is the cheapest" does not apply to food. The best food in the sense of that which is sold at the highest price is frequently the most unsuitable for people in health. The food that is best fitted to the real wants of the user may be the very kind which supplies the second requirement of the human body. Round steak at 15 cents a pound contains as much protein and energy, is just as digestible and is fully as nutritious as sirloin at 25 cents. Meat and fish are high nutritive value as salmon and costs from an eighth to half as much.

Oysters are a delicacy. If one can afford them, there is no better food. But of all foods them, but 25 cents invested in a pint would bring only 25 grams—about an ounce—of protein and 200 calories of energy. The same 25 cents spent for flour at $6 a barrel, or 3 cents a pound, would pay for 420 grams of protein and 13,700 calories of energy. When a day laborer pays twenty cents for a pound, the actually nutritive material costs him three times as much as it does his employer, who buys it in flour at $6 a barrel.—Professor W. O. Atwater in Forum.

Inculcating Consideration.

Teach a young child to wait upon itself and upon its parents. Let it bring father his slippers, cane, but or gloves and mother her workbasket, thimble or book. Encourage it to perform any little offices that come within its powers as a tiny child. It will be proud to execute these small commissions, and so it grows older it will form a fixed habit of considering the wants of others. Improvement of the character is likely to make the body more beautiful. Mind and physique are closely allied. Noble impulses, high aspirations and unselfish character are indicated by a high chest, well poised head and elastic footstep.

Let us therefore cultivate in our children beauty of mind and physique. The young mother, whose interest in the topic is most keen, must study the movements and tendencies of her children and take time to teach them to be polite and orderly in their habits, while their natures have the plabiness of youth. Let her do this and her reward will be both great and certain.—Housekeeper.

Beauty Requires Plenty of Sleep.

Plenty of sleep is essential to one who would preserve her beauty to old age. The sleeping room should always be well ventilated, and no article of clothing should ever be worn at night which has been worn during the daytime. Sleep is natural restorative for weary nerves and broken down tissues. Children should always retire early and be permitted to sleep until they awake naturally and entirely refreshed. It is positive cruelty to force a child out of bed when it begs for a few minutes longer to sleep. Bodily growth may be greatly retarded by failure to get the requisite sleep during the growing years.

When troubled with insomnia, one can often easily overcome the trouble by getting upon soon as the wakefulness comes on and thoroughly airing the bed clothing. Then, standing at an open window, practise breathing for a half hour or by inhaling through the nose all of the air that the lungs will hold at each respiration and exhaling slowly through the mouth.—Ex change.

A Use For Old Linen Handkerchiefs.

Your oldest linen kerchief should be used as a toilet rag. If it tatters, all the better. You want something in the way of a cream towel that has long ago parted with every vestige of newness. Dip it in your cream pot and gently rub across the forehead, over the cheeks from the mouth line to temples, under the eyes, can toward the hair and as far down as the exposure of the neck line goes.

When you feel that every pore is cream soaked, you can begin to dry your face. This must be done gently, but effectively, because if slack about it you will find when you use your powder puff that the skin is plastered with a sort of paste that is maddening. This is especially true when your lotion is not of the very finest quality.—Philadelphia Times.

Petroleum to Cure Diphtheria.

Paris medical men continue to give their opinions vaguely on the subject of the diphtheria by petroleum as carried out by Dr. Flahout, a provincial physician. All unite in testimony as to the fact that such a treatment is by no means original. Dr. Fauvel, a celebrated throat specialist, says that in pulmonary maladies the application of pure petroleum has produced splendid results. Moreover, during the American war of secession wounds were dressed with the oil. The doctor, however, counsels mothers whose children are affected by the dreadful malady of diphtheria or croup to put their trust for the present in pure lemon juice, which should be sponged or brushed over the throats of the sufferers.—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

Breadmaking.

In an article on "breadmaking as an Accomplishment" an English contemporary refers to the scarcity of breadmakers among cooks. Says the writer: "It is astonishing how comparatively few good bread cooks will nowadays undertake domestic baking. I was staying with some friends in a furnished house at an out of the way place where, the village bread was so sour and bad as to be pronounced uneatable, and they were obliged to have a supply twice a week by train from a town 40 miles away, their cook having to go seven miles to the station to fetch it, and this because their London cook—as expensive and otherwise efficient servant as her sister—did not understand the mystery of setting the dough to rise."

A Black and White Morning Dress.

Small checks are coming in. A small black and white check is one of the nicest, neatest things for morning wear. A middle aged lady the other day wore a twist of the smallest black and white check. A little black and white bonnet to match, surmounting a carefully dressed head, completed a costume of which the whole effect was delightful. How is it that the well dressed woman of 50 often looks so much nicer than the girl of 20? Probably it is that the girl has an idea it doesn't matter how she puts on her clothes, but depends for her appearance entirely upon her youth and freshness. She is mistaken. An ill dressed girl has no chance by the side of a carefully dressed woman.

The Working Girls of Boston.

The following facts are taken from an address given by Mr. Bicknell at the Mount Bowdoin Church, Boston:

The number of working women and girls in Boston, not domestics, is 23,000. The average weekly earnings of each girl for a year is $4.87—the average yearly income $230.67. Seventy per cent live at home with parents or relatives. Ninety per cent are single. The average age is 25 years, the average age at which they begin work 17 years and the average term of service 7.6-10 years. They are employed on an average 48 weeks in a year. A small percentage have regular vacations, but the most suffer from periods of enforced idleness.

Mme. Urso's Praise of Women Musicians.

Mme. Camilla Urso says that women play the violin in better tune than the men and with more expression and certainty than the average orchestral performer. In Dublin and Melbourne she employed women violinists for her orchestra and declares that they were quick to understand, prompt at rehearsal, attentive to the conductor's remarks and free of fault finding when the rehearsals were long. They were anxious to give full returns for the money paid them, and Mme. Urso believes it would be to public advantage were women oftener employed in orchestras and paid the wages that the same grade of musician of the other sex receives.

Schools of Household Science.

Mrs. Ewing, the noted authority on household affairs, says: "The remedy for the present condition of things is the establishment of a training school in household science in all your cities and towns. You can make them self supporting after the first year. You can organize these classes and go into them yourselves and learn the best methods of doing housework, and you must encourage your daughter to attend them also. If you do this, the cook and the girls who do the housework will follow. You cannot pass them ahead of you in the opportunity. Make the best of the new line, and they will be grateful for the opportunity.

Ironing With the Clothes Wringer.

*An authority on domestic economy ad*vises the housekeeper who is constantly on the wringer and stockings put through the wringer will be smooth enough for all practical purposes if the roller is tight. Life is too precious to be wasted sprinkling, folding, unfolding, ironing, refolding and airing a lot of white goods.

Finger Polish.

A mixture of equal parts of beeswax and castile soap melted in turpentine will keep polished floors in admirable order if well applied to the floor in the morning. Where there is much traffic the polish will have to be applied every week, but ordinarily once in three or four weeks. Only a thin layer should be put on, and it must be thoroughly rubbed in or it will attract much dust.

"Running ears" should never be neglected. Such a condition makes the child a disagreeable neighbor in a school. The disease is always a source of danger to the child itself and may be a source of danger to its companions.

Mme. Modjeska carries in "Henry VIII" a handkerchief which is said to have been the property of Queen Isabella. This handkerchief is one of the rarest pieces of old Spanish lace in existence.

To successfully wash chamois gloves make a lather of white soap and tepid water, to which has been added a small quantity of ammonia. Rinse in warm water and dry gently.

A child who is old enough to understand what is said to him is not too young to learn that he must do his share in the fight for recovery when sickness assails him.

A towel rack made with several arms fastened to a half circular center, which in turn fastens to the wall, is a convenient place for drying dish towels.

When He "Knew It All."

Some old people who have strong and decided views as to the intense egotism of youth are apt to take the opportunity of possessing a good share of that quality, which years do not always eliminate.

One old gentleman who is well past the "threescore years and ten" allotted to mortal man was reasoning not long ago with a youthful friend who has yet to see his twenty-fifth year.

"Why, my boy," remarked the sage in a tone of infinite condescension, "when I was your age I thought I knew everything—everything! But did I? For from it. Why, it was not until five years ago, my young friend, that I got to where I then thought I was!"—Youth's Companion.

Proof Wanted.

The clergyman called on Mrs. Velox. "If your husband," he said, "would only believe it, it would pay him to be religious."

"Well," replied Mrs. Velox, "if you could give him proof of that you couldn't keep him out of church with a cannon."—Drake's Magazine.

Not in Favor.
