PREFACE

Since 1878 the present publisher of Baldwin's Directory, or his direct predecessors, have published the Directory of Bloomfield and Montclair. It has always been included in the Directory of the Oranges, but for several years it has been issued separately, and latterly the contiguous towns—Belleville, Franklin, Caldwell and Verona—have been added to it, for the convenience of its many patrons. The regular house to house canvas has been made by experienced men since May first. This shows that all of the towns are growing vigorously, and new names and new businesses are to be found on nearly every page.

One of the valuable features of the Directory is the map of Essex County, given free with every book, which distinctly shows the cities, towns, roads, water courses, elevations above tide water, etc. Business men find this very convenient when sending goods to parts of the county not frequently traversed by their teams, and pleasure riders make use of it in laying out their afternoon drives.

The Bloomfield and Montclair advertisers should bear in mind that their announcements are published in the Directory of the Oranges as well as in their local directory, and thereby meet the eye of many thousands of people, who would not see them if they were confined to the home book only.

As the Baldwin Directories are recognized by the publishers of similar works throughout the country as the standard authority in the field they represent, it is sought by them in exchange for theirs. This enables the publisher to invite the public to avail themselves of any of the directories of the large cities which they may wish to consult by calling at the office of publication in Orange.
