POETRY.

LOVE.

BY ELI CANNADAY.

A lovely face is good indeed,
Where love is there,
A palace, it is love doth need,
To teach and bear.

The heaviest tasks will lighter grow
When love inspires;
And love makes pain to melt as though
It never were.

Love is a lamp that sheds its light
O'er sorrow's way,
Makes though the darkness of night
Full as day.

Love is a power so blest and mighty
Its sway extends
Over all souls it touches
When most to love.

MISCELLANEOUS READING.

"FOR PITY'S SAKE."

"Fred, Miss Houghton is to arrive this evening. Would you mind going down to the carriage to meet her? I can't get off myself, and it will seem forlorn enough to her only an empty carriage awaiting her."

A peulsing whistle promoted from the depths of the Wall street money-changer's mind which the young man addressed, pretty little Mrs. Vere's bachelor brother, and announced himself.

He was a handsome specimen of the blonde type, enjoying a few weeks' furlough from his army duties at his sister's home.

The laziest man in the regiment he was called, but the bravest as well, with now and then a sudden light in his clear gray eyes which lent moderately beautiful to the hidden strength and meaning of his real nature.

"Mrs. Houghton?" he now drawled out slowly and interrogatively, in response to the demand made upon him. "You mean the children's new governess, I suppose—a demure spinster of forty or thereabouts, or, worse still, a young gushing creature, bereft, in one fell blow, of fortune and friends. Seriously, Nannie, it's an awful bore, and, considering that my captain's pay won't admit of any criminal schemes, I think, perhaps, it would be so well not to put false ideas in this young (?) woman's head by sending me to great lengths."

"Don't go, Uncle Fred," chimed in the children, aged respectively six and eight. "We don't want any governess."

"Hush, children! Don't worry me, Fred! Do go, like a good fellow! I assure you, from all I hear of Miss Houghton, she is a charming medium between your two absurd comparisons, and will probably give you no second thought. Here comes the carriage to the door. Now, Fred, don't miss her!"

"No hope of that," he groaned, as he lifted himself to his six-feet stature, and moved leisurely to the door.

A half hour after the Eastern train came puffing and snorting into the station. Only a few passengers had this point of thoughtlessness, and Fred Vere seemed with calm indifference, when suddenly he started. A young lady, quietly but richly dressed, passed him, the hand from the thoughtful brow, and clear-cut features, and revealing their faultless beauty. In her arms she carried a little dog. She directed her course to the chaise-driver.

"Can I get a vehicle here to take me to Mrs. Vere's?" she questioned.

"Mrs. Vere's own carriage is in waiting. Her brother, Captain Osgood, came down, expecting some friends."

"Then I will not intrude upon them."

But at this instant the young officer stepped to her side.

"The carriage is at your service, miss. Pardon me, and allow me to introduce myself as Captain Osgood, Mrs. Vere's brother."

"I have heard of you," she answered, smiling, and disclosing two rows of white, even teeth. "I am very glad to meet you."

And the proof of the words, she extended one tiny, perfectly-gloved hand.

"Out for a governess, upon my word, and doesn't answer much to Nan's description," thought Mr. Fred.

But nevertheless, he felt quite warranted in meeting the frank advance very cordially, and soon, in their homeward drive, after first disposing of what seemed to him an unwarrantable amount of baggage, they were chatting away like old friends.

When the house was reached, Captain Osgood withdrew. He would let the women-folk alone, and not betray the momentary weakness into which he had been lapsed.

"Mrs. Vere is in the library, miss" proclaimed the butler.

The young lady followed him to the door indicated.

"Well, Fred, your were disappointed, after all," began the mistress of the room, without turning her head, as her quick ear detected the opening of the door—"Miss Houghton, I beg pardoning me for another illness and consequent detention, arrived just after you left the house. It was so—"

But her sentence remained unfinished, as some one stole softly behind her and clasped two tiny gloved hands close over her eyes.

"Who am it be?" she questioned.

The hands were withdrawn. She looked up.

"Fraude!" she exclaimed, and rapturously enlarged the girl in her arms. "Where did you come from?" was her first question, when she found breath.

"Straight from Paris, dear. When I reached New York, I heard that you were up in your country-home, and so I determined to come immediately up and take you by surprise. I meant to stay—or at least a fortnight with you, sweetie, so you must make the best of it."

"A fortnight! I shall hold you garrisoned for the summer. But tell me did you see Fred, and introduce yourself?"

"Mr. Fred, he seemed to know me. I found your carriage waiting; he presented his self in due form; I accepted the goods the gods gave, and asked no further questions."

Mrs. Vere burst into a ripple of irrepressible laughter.

"Fraude," she exclaimed, "she has mistaken you for the children's governess. What will he say when he learns the truth?"

And she repeated the conversation as it had occurred before his leaving the house. A sudden idea seemed to seize upon the listener.

"Let us keep it up, Nannie," she pressed eagerly. "We can trust him to do his part, I will sink my identity in that of Miss Houghton, and prosecute him with my intentions."

Rare indeed the sister's heart misgivings had been, after all, what real harm could it do her? And so it was agreed; and next morning the children were duly presented to their new governess.

The last detailed account of her summer, as a region of terror. They now wondered, as the days wore on, why they had always heretofore been deprived of such luxury.

For two hours they were closeted each morning in Miss Houghton's own, pretty morning room, the prettiest room in the house, mamma had given her; but, strange to say, Brother Fred seemed to consider it quite the proper thing, under the circumstances.

For two hours, then, it was their daily prison! Candies were distributed, and generously distributed, with but one prohibition, that when Uncle Fred questioned them about their studies, they should not betray the fact of his first visit they were growing fat and lazy.

But Uncle Fred was too absorbed in his own thoughts to watch the children. For the first time in his life, he was to make serious calculations as to how far a captain's pay might go, and whether by any amount of stretching, and any improbable labor and economy, it would be enabled to supply two, when heretofore it had been considered wholly inadequate for one.

"I never swore I would never marry a bedress," he said to himself, when the household had glided on without changing for some two weeks, "but the world probably thinks me a fortune-hunter, or a fortune-hunter, or that the woman herself might one day mistake me; and I have seen people to marry a poor woman, because it would seem a great national sacrifice. And yet, I wonder if she loves me—I wonder if I could make her happy?"

He had found in these three weeks, the two morning hours of the children's tasks the longest of the day.

He had observed that the governess looked pale, and prescribed for her a daily ride. She had had no opportunity, as she laughingly declared, to persecute him with the attentions, as a father, in time worn on, to show them with a certain shyness, new and foreign to the gay nature.

Meanwhile the conspirators sat in the library, scanning, with perplexed brows, a letter open before them.

It announced Miss Houghton's arrival on the evening of that day.

"What was to be done? The arch-dog spiraators solved the question.

"Write Fred a note, Uncle, pin and I will return to New York to-night. The new governess will arrive. His loves expains in a week. After he goes, I will explain."

"Very like Victor Hugo, my dear," retorted Mrs. Vere, "as to the plitiness of your sentences; but I fear it won't flow so conspicuously as you imagine."

"What does this mean?" questioned Captain Osgood, a few hours later, of his sister, "I hear the carriage is ordered for the seven o'clock train to take Miss Houghton to the depot."

"She is not quite my idea of a governess," meekly and trembingly answered Mrs. Vere, quailing before his pale face and flashing eyes.

He cast upon her the look of cold contempt he had given her, and turned off, in just as time to catch the flutter of a white dress upon the lawn. Straightway he went toward it.

"I did not mean to be abrupt, Miss Houghton," he began, when, with quick strides, he had gained her side, "but I hear that you court had another home. Would you accept one if offered you? Do very smoothly, your beauty and your grace, but guarded by a man's honest love? I love you, darling! Will you be my wife, and share a soldier's fortune?"

The rich color flushed into the girl's cheeks, as she met the clear, frank gaze of the soul-lit eyes.

"Ah, she had meant only to play, but she too, had been burned by the fire's fierce flame!

"Yes! offer me this from pity, Captain Osgood," she said, in low, trembling tones. "I appreciate your noble generosity, but I must not accept it."

"From pity! he repeated. "Do not pity them! Look in my eyes—do you read them? Listen to my voice—is it pity moves it? Let my past speak for my future. Ha, pity accused it? Oh, my love, tell me that you love me, and you shall never more know what it is to stand alone in the world."

"Your sister has been discharged, my Captain Osgood. I have discharged myself," she said, with sudden resolution.

And then, standing before him, she told him all the entire story. His face, as he listened, grew deathly white.

When the last word had left her lips, he turned and strode toward the house, leaving her standing motionless and alone. His sister met him in the doorway.

"Who is she?" he questioned, in hoarse tones, "this girl whom you have called Miss Houghton?"

She knew then that he would have the truth:

"It is Florence Maxwell," she answered, "Fred, forgive me."

He laughed, a jarring laugh.

"Miss Maxwell, the heiress, oh!—the girl whom all men sought for her beauty and her gold. Tell her, for me, it was Miss Houghtorthat I asked to become my wife, and not Miss Maxwell, who had been the object of my love for years."

And he strode out of the house again, and up the road, all unconscious of the little swift figure following him.

He had disappeared, at last, under the shadow of a great oak, when she overtook him.

"Pastor me!" she said.

And, at the sound of her voice, he raised his haggard face, with a groan.

The sight, the sound, overcame her scruples. She fell on her knees beside him.

"You loved me for myself," she said. "Oh, Fred, I am so alone in the world! You said, dear, it was for love's sake, not for pity. Now, for pity's sake, give me the love, without which, I have learned, all my life would be poor and barren, but with which I shall be always rich and happy."

"Then for pity's sake—only for pity's sake—but with a great joy in his eyes, he opened wide his arms and took her in.

McCLELLAN VINDICATED.

Mr. George Tickner Curtis, in "McClellan's last service to the Republic," published in three parts by the North American Review, tends in the third part of his theories to account for reasons in the mind of the President which actuated him to relieve General McClellan from the command of the army of the Potomac at the moment when his strategy had penetrated Lee's center, dividing his wings under Longstreet and Jackson, thirty miles apart, and crossing Hooker's corps to the attack of Longstreet, which would have left the way to Richmond unprotected. Mr. Curtiss in the honest effort to say rather less than more than the truth, and to the legal truth to give the benefit of a doubt to the accused wrong door, struggles hard to account for the act which Mr. Lincoln himself never accounted for either privately or publicly, because, as Mr. Curtis says, good, he could not. Mr. Curtis looks from a distance of eighteen years with the leisurely eye of a war-worn veteran in the interest of the successful, conquerors, in his first theory, the act of relief to be the result of matters growing out of the Harrison war letter and the after Pope Campaign. His second theory takes a larger field, but he approaches it like an explorer into a hidden cave, dark, dangerous and filled with unknown spirits which he would fain avoid. At the mouth he encounters "Cortorer in the shadow of Stanton and uses the language of Dante's "Inferno" to apostrophize the Jesuits who would be sacred dread and covers the chasm with a veil of doubt as to the forces beyond. Shakespeare says "The evil that men do lives after them, the good is oft interred with their bones" and then proceeds to magnify the pretended good of Cesar and even extol the evil. It is said that charity with the noble Roman was a principle of action and that the laws refuse to hear witnesses against the interest of the dead. Perhaps this is the christian spirit; but it is not for the historian of posterity. Public good as well as public evil recorded in history are the lights of experience to guide the future. If it was necessary to sacrifice General McClellan upon a policy of state craft which requires secrecy, no blame can attach to the administration. If abolition of slavery was the son of the body politic which required the surgeon's knife, known to the unwilling patient, necessities were proper to prevent the pain. No one will doubt that the people would have consented to change the Constitution in 1862 to abolish Slavery, if the rebellion had been then crushed. It was not possible to foresee the second to the struggle which the people were clamorous for success. There was no remedy for the conflict, but save our Capital and at the same time to prevent the capture of Mr. Lincoln by the enemy. The people must charge themselves with the destruction of life and treasure when they demanded the maintenance of the Constitution with the restoration of the Union from an administration elected upon the principle that slavery should not exist in a free country.

Mr. Gerhart had said: "There was no irreconcilable conflict between free and slave labor and that if our country all or, worse still, a young gushing creature, bereft, in one fell blow, of fortune and friends. Seriously, Nannie, it's an awful bore, and, considering that my captain's pay won't admit of any criminal schemes, I think, perhaps, it would be so well not to put false ideas in this young (?) woman's head by sending me to great lengths."

"Don't go, Uncle Fred," chimed in the children, aged respectively six and eight. "We don't want any governess."

"Hush, children! Don't worry me, Fred! Do go, like a good fellow! I assure you, from all I hear of Miss Houghton, she is a charming medium between your two absurd comparisons, and will probably give you no second thought. Here comes the carriage to the door. Now, Fred, don't miss her!"

"No hope of that," he groaned, as he lifted himself to his six-feet stature, and moved leisurely to the door.

A half hour after the Eastern train came puffing and snorting into the station. Only a few passengers had this point of thoughtlessness, and Fred Vere seemed with calm indifference, when suddenly he started. A young lady, quietly but richly dressed, passed him, the hand from the thoughtful brow, and clear-cut features, and revealing their faultless beauty. In her arms she carried a little dog. She directed her course to the chaise-driver.

"Can I get a vehicle here to take me to Mrs. Vere's?" she questioned.

"Mrs. Vere's own carriage is in waiting. Her brother, Captain Osgood, came down, expecting some friends."

"Then I will not intrude upon them."

But at this instant the young officer stepped to her side.

"The carriage is at your service, miss. Pardon me, and allow me to introduce myself as Captain Osgood, Mrs. Vere's brother."

"I have heard of you," she answered, smiling, and disclosing two rows of white, even teeth. "I am very glad to meet you."

And the proof of the words, she extended one tiny, perfectly-gloved hand.

"Out for a governess, upon my word, and doesn't answer much to Nan's description," thought Mr. Fred.

But nevertheless, he felt quite warranted in meeting the frank advance very cordially, and soon, in their homeward drive, after first disposing of what seemed to him an unwarrantable amount of baggage, they were chatting away like old friends.

When the house was reached, Captain Osgood withdrew. He would let the women-folk alone, and not betray the momentary weakness into which he had been lapsed.

"Mrs. Vere is in the library, miss" proclaimed the butler.

The young lady followed him to the door indicated.

"Well, Fred, your were disappointed, after all," began the mistress of the room, without turning her head, as her quick ear detected the opening of the door—"Miss Houghton, I beg pardoning me for another illness and consequent detention, arrived just after you left the house. It was so—"

But her sentence remained unfinished, as some one stole softly behind her and clasped two tiny gloved hands close over her eyes.

"Who am it be?" she questioned.

The hands were withdrawn. She looked up.

"Fraude!" she exclaimed, and rapturously enlarged the girl in her arms. "Where did you come from?" was her first question, when she found breath.

"Straight from Paris, dear. When I reached New York, I heard that you were up in your country-home, and so I determined to come immediately up and take you by surprise. I meant to stay—or at least a fortnight with you, sweetie, so you must make the best of it."

"A fortnight! I shall hold you garrisoned for the summ

"I will maintain that the entire freedom of thought and speech is consistent with the noblest aspirations of man and the happiest condition of his race.

"Power may destroy the forms but not the principles of justice; these will live in spite even of the sword."—Letter of General Hancock, March 8, 1869.

"Military interference with elections is prohibited by law, and no soldiers will be allowed to appear at any polling places unless, as citizens of the State, they are registered as voters, and then only for the purpose of voting."—Order of General Hancock, December 19, 1867.

"Nothing can intimidate me from doing what I believe to be honest and right.

"The great principles of American Liberty are still the lawful inheritance of this people, and ever should be."—General Order of General Hancock, November 29, 1867.

CHICAGO AND CINCINNATI.

The contrast between the Republican Convention at Chicago and the Democratic at Cincinnati was striking.

The Republican was a mob, wrangling for a week, and full of bitter personal animosities to the last.

The Democratic was a dignified deliberative body, finishing its business in reasonable time, acting with wisdom and re-establishing party harmony.

For President,
WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK.
For Vice President,
WILLIAM. H. ENGLISH.

HANCOCK AND ENGLISH.

All of the gentlemen balloted for in the Democratic National Convention possessed ample qualifications to fill the positions in connection with which they were named, but with due deference to the others, we think the nominations for President and Vice President were given to those pre-eminently worthy to receive them. The Cincinnati Convention faithfully represented the Democracy of the Union by placing in nomination

WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK,
of Pennsylvania,
and
WILLIAM H. ENGLISH,
of Indiana.

Better selections could not possibly have been made, as the enthusiastic approval of not only Democrats, but Independent voters throughout the length and breadth of the country abundantly attests.

They are both nominees of the highest order of merit, stainless in personal character, intelligent and capable, patriotic and fearless for the right.

It is an honor to support such candidates, and it becomes the duty of Democrats and Conservatives to rally in might and make their majority next November overwhelming.

We are proud of the ticket made at Cincinnati.

A thousand cheers for
and
HONEST GOVERNMENT.

Then conquer we must, for our cause it is just—
In Hancock and English we may well put our trust,
And the flag of our party, in victory shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

HANCOCK AND VICTORY.

Never before did a nomination for President elicit such general and enthusiastic congratulations as has that of General Hancock. Telegrams from every section of the United States have been pouring in upon him. It is the old Jacksonian spirit. The following are a few specimen despatches:

"I cordially congratulate you upon your nomination."
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
New York.

"Accept my sincere congratulations on your nomination. That you will be elected I have no doubt."
A. G. THURMAN,
Ohio.

"I beg to tender you my sincere congratulations on your nomination."
H. B. PAYNE,
Ohio.

"My hearty congratulations. New Jersey sons will stand by you as their sires did by Revolutionary patriots."
THEO. F. RANDOLPH,
New Jersey.

"Your nomination is honorable alike to you and to the great Democratic party. No one congratulates you more sincerely and no one will strive more heartily to elect you than I."
T. F. BAYARD,
Delaware.

"Neither too soon nor too heartily can I express my great delight at your nomination for the Presidency. The convention in honoring you with its confidence honored itself and faithfully expressed the wish of the great Democratic party. With you for our candidate I feel that victory is assured."
HENRY HILTON,
New York.

"Hearty congratulations to the next President of the United States."
WM. PINKNEY WHYTE,
Maryland.

"We congratulate you on your nomination. New York is sure for your election."
JOHN KELLY,
AUG. SCHELL,
New York.

"I heartily congratulate you on your nomination, and regard your election as certain."
JOHN J. CISCO,
New York.

"Receive my heartfelt congratulations. Your nomination means [illegible] election. The Constitution and the Union will be safe when the laws are administered by one whose valor on the field was only equalled by his wisdom in the councils."
WM. SAULSBURY,
Delaware.

[illegible] foregoing are from [illegible]

but mark the following from a leading Republican editor in Pennsylvania—

"I congratulate you for your nomination for President, and predict your election and complete restoration of peace to all sections. Your life-long friend."

For President,
WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK.

BASE SLANDER REFUTED.

(From the New York World of Nov. 14 & 25, 1879.)

"WASHINGTON, November 13.—The mention of General Hancock's name in connection with the Presidential nomination has led, as his friends supposed it would lead, to spiteful outcroppings over the hanging of Mrs. Surratt, an affair which his official position just after the war compelled him to direct. A few days ago in the Indianapolis Journal an interview was printed about General Hancock, of which the following is part:

"The Democrats can't nominate General Hancock," said a Catholic priest to me the other day, in response to my expression of opinion.

"Why not?" I asked.

"Because" he said with much feeling, "he hanged Mrs. Surratt without cause and persecuted her for her religion."

"I don't see how he hanged her," said I, "more than General Holt, who was Judge Advocate, or Stanton, who was Secretary of War, or Andy Johnson, who was President."

"Hancock," exclaimed the priest, "had her immediate custody, and he absolutely refused to let her see her clergyman or any clergyman of her Church after she was sentenced. He did all he could to send the woman to——; but no doubt her earnest request for clergy was passed to her credit in the books beyond the sky."

"I never heard of that," I said.

"Well, Catholics have," said the priest, "and if Hancock should arise and have the impudence to ask for Catholic votes they would bury him under their indignation."

"The above extract appeared in the Post of this city this morning. The reporter of the World called upon Rev. Father Walter, of St. Patrick's Church, with this interview. He was Mrs. Surratt's adviser, and he it was whom General Hancock was credited with having insulted. Father Walter is a tall, square-shouldered man, with enough fire in his face and vigor in his movements to make one almost wish that he and General Hancock could put on the gloves together, they are so nearly matched.

"'I am glad you come,' he said, 'for this isn't the first of these flings at General Hancock. I have blamed myself often for not declaring the truth in the matter, for I am the only one that should tell it, so far as it concerns myself. Yet, being a priest, I have felt bound to hold my peace. Besides, so far no tangible harm has resulted from silence. For some weeks back, though, I have seen that circumstances might arise which should change my determination; this attack seems to me to call for the kind of response that will make such objections to General Hancock impossible in the future. That is what I said to-day to Bishop Keane, of Richmond, when I informed him that I had about decided to brand all such stories as false over my own signature.'

"'Would you object to doing it now?' the reporter asked.

"'Not at all,' Father Walter replied, and seating himself at a table he wrote this denial:

Truth and justice compel me to deny the statement with reference to General Hancock's participation in the execution of Mrs. Surratt, which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning. I attended Mrs. Surratt on that occasion, and met with no interference on the part of General Hancock. General Hancock had great sympathy for this unfortunate lady, and waited until the last moment, hoping for a reprieve. I consider it an act of justice to General Hancock that this statement should be made.

(Signed) J. A. WALTER,
Pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Washington.

"'There. That is the first statement I have made for the public in all these years,' Father Walter said a trifle sadly. 'I hope it may be the means of enough good to compensate for all the harm that these stories have done.'

"An assertion made to-day by an ex-army officer was abundantly corroborated in the War Department that, so strong was General Hancock's hope for a reprieve for Mrs. Surratt that on the day of the execution he stationed relays of cavalry along the streets from the White House to the Arsenal that no delay might ensue in communicating the fact. In the arsenal are photographs of the scaffold at the time of the execution. They show Father Walter at Mrs. Surratt's side."

This was followed by another despatch published November 25, as follows:

"WASHINGTON, November 24.—When General Hancock was here last week he met the Rev. Father Walter at the house of a mutual friend. General Hancock's carriage was at the door, and after the visit Father Walter entered the carriage at General Hancock's request and they drove off together. Their conversation lasted for nearly an hour. From an army officer who knew what was said it seemed that General Hancock began the conversation by thanking Father Walter for the statement and card he had published in the World about the defamatory stories in connection with the hanging of Mrs. Surratt. 'That denial alone was necessary,' General Hancock said, 'to destroy a vicious falsehood, and it was sufficient to do it.' Father Walter replied that he felt he had done merely his duty, and that while he was by no means inclined to arouse bad feeling in the matter he thought that while the press were disposing of it they might as well at the same time place the blame for the execution where it belonged, upon Andrew Johnson. When the time for the execution had been fixed,' he said, 'I went to President Johnson to urge a postponement for a few days. Mr. Johnson peremptorily refused to postpone the execution and acted as though he suspected I would be led to hope that one favor might be followed by others and that eventually a reprieve might justly be demanded. I tried to disabuse him of such an impression by declaring that if he would grant us but ten days no other favor would be asked of him. Shortly before the execution I called at the White *House a second time. My card was re*turned with a message that Mr. Johnson would not see me. I asked him then for a hearing of ten minutes, but he refused; then for two minutes, and he still refused. There was no reason in his refusal, and I hope he felt at the time of his impeachment trial that the refusal of the Senate to grant him ten days in which to prepare a defense was in a measure retributive.'

"A letter was received by an army officer here from one of General Hancock's most intimate associates a few days after the publication in the World of Father Walter's statement, which said that General Hancock was highly gratified at the course of the World regarding the affair, and that both he and his friends felt that the prompt refutation through the World had set the infamous stories at rest forever.

"Ex-Governor Hartranft, in conversation to-day about the stories in connection with the execution of Mrs. Surratt, said he was glad that they had been effectually disproved; that he himself had immediate charge of the execution, and that afterwards he received letters from Mrs. Surratt's daughter and others thanking him for the consideration he had shown both to the prisoners and their friends."

No Credit Mobilier bribery and corruption, no Boss Shepherd wooden pavement swindle, no New York Custom House rascality attaches to Hancock and English. Their reputations are as pure as the driven snow. Honest men can vote for them.

Another Sound steamer has been burned and forty or fifty lives lost. The steamer Seawanhaka, plying between New York and Glen Cove, was discovered to be on fire about 5 o'clock [illegible] afternoon, when she was just off Ward's Island, from some unknown [illegible]. The captain steered the burning vessel to a marshy shore, where she [illegible] and was entirely destroyed, [illegible] however, there was a terrible loss of life from fire and water.

THE PLATFORM.

The Democrats of the United States, in convention assembled, declare.

First. We pledge ourselves anew to the constitutional doctrines and traditions of the Democratic party as illustrated by the teaching and example of a long line of Democratic statesmen and patriots and embodied in the platform of the last National Convention of the party.

Second. Opposition to centralization and to that dangerous spirit of encroachment which tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever be the form of government, a real despotism. No sumptuary laws, separation of Church and State, for the good of each; common schools fostered and protected.

Third. Home rule; honest money—the strict maintenance of the public faith—consisting of gold and silver and paper convertible into coin on demand; the strict maintenance of the public faith, State and national, and a tariff for revenue only.

Fourth. The subordination of the military to the civil power, and a general and thorough reform of the civil service.

Fifth. The right to a free ballot is the right preservative of all rights, and must and shall be maintained in every part of the United States.

Sixth. The existing Administration, is the representative of conspiracy only, and its claim of right to surround the ballot boxes with troops and deputy marshals to intimidate and obstruct the electors, and the unprecedented use of the veto to maintain its corrupt and despotic power, insults the people and imperils their institutions.

Seventh. The great fraud of 1876–77 by which, upon a false count of the electoral votes of two States, the candidate defeated at the polls was declared to be President, and for the first time in American history the will of the people was set aside under a threat of military violence, struck a deadly blow at our system of representative government. The Democratic party, to preserve the country from the horrors of a civil war, submitted for the time, in firm and patriotic faith that the people would punish this crime in 1880. This issue precedes and dwarfs every other. It imposes a more sacred duty upon the people of the Union than ever addressed the conscience of a nation of freemen.

Eighth. We execrate the course of this Administration in making places in the civil service a reward for political crime, and demand a reform by statute which shall make it forever impossible for the defeated candidate to bribe his way to the seat of a usurper by billetting villains upon the people.

Ninth. The resolution of Samuel J. Tilden not again to be candidate for the exalted place to which he was elected by a majority of his countrymen, and from which he was excluded by the leaders of the Republican party, is received by the Democrats of the United States with sensibility; and they declare their confidence in his wisdom, patriotism and integrity unshaken by the assaults of a common enemy; and they further assure him that he is followed into the retirement he has chosen for himself by the sympathy and respect of his fellow-citizens, who regard him as one who, by elevating the standards of public morality and adorning and purifying the public service, merits the lasting gratitude of his country and his party.

Tenth. Free ships and a living chance for American commerce on the seas and on the land. No discrimination in favor of transportation lines, corporations or monopolies.

Eleventh. Amendment of the Burlingame treaty. No more Chinese immigration except for travel, education and foreign commerce, and therein carefully guarded.

Twelfth. Public money and public credit for public purposes solely, and public land for actual settlers.

Thirteenth. The Democratic party is the friend of labor and the laboring man, and pledges itself to protect him alike against the cormorants and the Commune.

Fourteenth. We congratulate the country upon the honesty and thrift of a Democratic Congress, which has reduced the public expenditure $40,000,000 a year; upon the continuation of prosperity at home and the national honor abroad, and, above all, upon the promise of such a change in the administration of the Government as shall insure us genuine and lasting reform in every department of the public service.

DEMOCRATIC ENTHUSIASM.

In no past campaign have the Democrats of Plainfield been so united, harmonious or joyful over nominations as that of Hancock and English. The headquarters of the party, on Front street, opposite the Post Office, are nightly filled with earnest friends of the ticket who gather there to read and discuss the political situation of the day. Arrangements have been made to swing to the breeze a handsome Hancock & English banner in a few days, while an organization is being perfected among the soldiers of the late war, to be known as the Hancock Veteran's Association. Already over one hundred names have been signed, and next Wednesday evening the Association will be perfected, as may be seen by a call in another column. A suitable piece of ordnance will be procured in a few days, which placed in the hands of veterans, will in thunder tones announce to the party of fraud and Credit Mobilier that the friends of true government and Hancock & English are numerous in this vicinity. As soon as arrangements can be perfected a Grand Mass Meeting will be held in some suitable place in the city. The Democracy of Plainfield intend to make the invalid party of fraud "git up and git" in this city at the coming election. Their war cry will be

HANCOCK AND VICTORY.

There was another narrow escape from a steamboat disaster on the East river Tuesday last. The steamboat Long Branch, with an excursion party of seven or eight hundred Sunday school children and adults, collided with an oil scow, being towed up the river by a propeller, just after she had left her dock at Brooklyn. The bows of the Long Branch were stove in. There was no panic, the boat being immediately run into a slip on the New York side, and the passengers disembarked.

The American rifle team have again won a victory, beating the Irish team at Dollymount on Tuesday. The shooting on both sides was marvellous. On the 800 yards match the teams tied, each gaining 436 points. In the 900 yards match the Americans scored 436 to the Irish team's 428 points. In the 1000 yards match, the Americans stood 420 points and the Irishmen 416 points. The grand total at the finish was Amer*ica, 1292; Ireland, 1280 points. Such* shooting has never been witnessed before, and every American's heart must throb with pleasure over the victory, while according just praise to the gallant riflemen of Ireland, who gave them such a close contest.

DUNELLEN ITEMS.

On Sabbath last Rev. T. S. Brown, closed his ministerial labors as pastor of the Dunellen Presbyterian church, (the pulpit of which by appointment of Presbytery) he declared vacant, at the close of the evening service. Mr. Brown has served that church faithfully and efficiently for the past six or seven years.

On Monday evening the explosion of a lamp in the dwelling of Captain Jones, set fire to chairs, table, carpet, etc., and but for the timely aid of neighbors who rushed in and extinguished the flames, the building and contents would doubtless soon have been consumed. Mrs. J. who was alone with her family and a female servant, was so shocked and terrified that she fainted, thus diverting the attention of some who were fighting the fire, to her restoration to consciousness.

A second narrow escape from a disastrous conflagration, occurred at the residence of Mr. S. D. Marlow, on Church street, at about 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. Some children were playing about the yard in front of the house, when suddenly, Mrs. Marlow discovered the front porch to be on fire. She immediately sounded an alarm, and neighbors responded so quickly, that the fire was confined entirely to the floor of the porch, and was soon extinguished. When the first man appeared upon the scene, the entire floor and lattice work of the porch was already ablaze, and quite a stiff breeze was blowing—fortunately, however, rather away from than toward the house. The extemporized bucket brigade worked with a will, and the fire being so accessible, they soon had it under control. The fire seemed to have originated in the dry leaves under the porch, which, of course, burned like tinder. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been the thoughtlessness of little children playing with matches. Had ten minutes more time elapsed or help have been less promptly summoned, nothing could have saved the building; and had it gone that of Mr. Charles West would have been in great peril, and would probably have gone as the wind was in that direction.

Personals.

Mr. Wm. Smalley, son-in-law of Geo. Headley, Esq., and family, started for the White Mountains on Tuesday afternoon last, where Mr. S. hopes to gain renewed strength and health.

B. F. Depew, Esq., and wife started yesterday for a visit to Mouse Island, Maine, where they will remain a month or two. The Captain has our best wishes for success in capturing members of the finny tribe.

Gen. Eli Long and family, of North Plainfield, are sojourning at Bluff Point, Yates Co., N. Y. The Gen. will miss his bass fishing in the Raritan, but will make up for that pleasure by big catches in the streams about Bluff Point.

Mr. Walters, father of ex-Councilman S. C. Ryder, attained the age of 79 years on Sunday last, and is in very good health.

Mr. John P. Gross has left for his usual sojourn among the mountains of the Adirondacks. The fact is indisputable that owing to certain enviable circumstances that have come to pass, this will be the first summer's enjoyment that he ever experienced. No cards.

The many friends of Dr. Westcott, of Scotch Plains, are still congratulating him on his recent marriage with a most estimable lady.

The wife and family of Mr. Charles Potter, Jr., left Plainfield last Monday morning for their summer residence, where they will spend about two months.

From the letters sent home by Messrs. George Vincent and Ernest Ackerman, it is easy to understand these gentlemen are having a most enjoyable time in the Old World.

Mr. Charles Foster, one of our licensed hackmen, is trying his hand at building fires for his brother-in-law, who is an engineer on the New York and Long Branch R. R.

NORTH PLAINFIELD PARAGRAPHS.

A warrant has been issued to Collector E. C. Van Norstrand by the Township Committee of North Plainfield, and that officer will proceed immediately to collect all taxes for the year 1878 that are unpaid. Wherever the amount due is not forthcoming, the property on which the tax is levied will be sold at once.

FIRE MATTERS.

No. 2 steamer is again ready for duty, having received a thorough overhauling since her pumps were found packed with sand after a "wash," about a week ago.

The fire alarm bell in the tower will be rung at daybreak, July 5th, in honor of the celebration of the nation's birthday.

Resolution of Condolence.

At a regular meeting of Plainfield Lodge No. 44, I. O. O. F., held June 29th, 1880, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Supreme and Almighty Being of the Universe, in his divine wisdom, has seen fit to remove by death the wife of our beloved brother, Clarkson M. Hammond; Therefore be it

Resolved, That we extend our deepest and most heartfelt sympathy to our brother in his great bereavement; and that we tender our affectionate consolation to him, in the confident hope that from this world of care and sorrow, she has been transported to the enjoyment of Eternal Life Above.

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore our dear brother's loss, and bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, in the dispensation of Divine Providence, we extend our sympathy to our sorrowing brother in his great affliction. We cannot but feel for our dear sorrowing brother for his great loss. May God in his mercy support him in his great bereavement and spare him to be a shining light in our Order.

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolutions of condolence to our dear brother be entered on the minutes of the Lodge.

Resolved, That a copy of the above resolutions be sent to our beloved brother and published in the Plainfield papers.

A Mother's Grief.

The pride of a Mother, the life and joy of a home, are her children, hence her grief when sickness enters and takes them away. Take warning then, that you are running a terrible risk, if they have a Cough, Croup or Whooping Cough, which lead to Consumption, if you do not attend to it at once.—SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE is guaranteed to cure them. Price 10 cts., 50 cts. and $1.00. For lame Back, Side, or Chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster.—Price 25 cts. Sold by W. H. Voorhees and H. P. Reynolds.

The Best I Ever Knew Of.

J. G. Starey, a prominent and influential citizen of Iowa City, says: "I have had the Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for several years, and have used every Remedy I could hear of, without any relief whatever, until I saw your Shiloh's Vitalizer advertised in our paper, and was persuaded to try it. I am happy to state that it has entirely Cured me. It is certainly the best Remedy I ever knew of. Price 75 cts. Sold by W. H. Voorhees and H. P. Reynolds.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY, a marvellous Cure for Catarrh, Diptheria, Canker Mouth, and Head Ache. With each bottle there is an ingenious nasal injector for the more successful treatment of the complaint, without extra charge. Price 50 cts. Sold by W. H. Voorhees and H. P. Reynolds.

Impure Breath.

Among all the disagreeable consequences that follow the decay of the teeth, an impure breath must be the most mortifying and unpleasant to its possessor, and it is the most inexcusable and offensive in society; and yet the cause of it may easily be removed by cleansing your teeth daily with that justly popular dentifrice, Fragrant SOZODONT. It purifies and sweetens the breath, cools and refreshes the mouth, and gives a pearl-like appearance to the teeth. Gentlemen who indulge in smoking should cleanse their teeth with SOZODONT, as it removes all unpleasant odors of the weed. Ask your druggist for it.

HIGGINS' GERMAN LAUNDRY SOAP

Is perfectly pure, being made of carefully selected stock, and is therefore the cheapest. Ask your grocer for it, and see that you get only the genuine article. A trial will convince you of its merits.

Census of North Plainfield.

Census Enumerator, Isaac Brokaw, has completed his duties in taking the census of North Plainfield. He finds the number of inhabitants to be 3,333. The census of 1875 showed the population to be at that time 1,142 white native males, 1,173 white native females, 29 colored males, 28 colored females, 255 foreign males, 231 foreign females. The oldest person found in the Township was Mrs. Badgley, (white) residing near Scotch Plains, aged 99.

Our Candidate for President.

WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK, was born in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, on February 14, 1824. He graduated at West Point in 1844, since which time he has rendered valuable and distinguished service to his country in the field. After his graduation he served on the frontier, and took in the war with Mexico, and was brevetted as first lieutenant for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco. From 1848, after the close of hostilities with Mexico until 1858 he was again on frontier duty at various stations, and from 1859 to 1861 he was quartermaster of the Southern district of California.

At the breaking out of the war of the rebellion he was recalled to Washington and was made brigadier general September 23, 1861. During the Peninsula campaign he was especially conspicuous at the battle of Williamsburg and Frazer's Farm. He took an active part in the subsequent campaign in Maryland, at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. Promoted to the rank of major-general, he commanded a division at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. On July 1, 1863, the first day of the battle of Gettysburg, he was sent by General Meade to decide whether a decisive battle should be given there or whether the army should fall back. He reported that Gettysburg was the place to fight, and took immediate command until the arrival of Gen. Meade. In the decisive action on July 3d, he commanded the left centre, which was the main point assaulted by the enemy. He held his position, but was severely wounded. For his conduct on this memorable field he received on May 30, 1866, the thanks of Congress.

The severity of the wound received at ...

... New York. Mr. English is a Democrat by birth, education and conviction, and fearlessly upholds the principles of Democracy.

His own idea of what those principles are can be best understood by the following forcible words uttered by him in a recent interview:

"I am for honesty in money as in politics and morals, and think the great material and business interests of this country should be placed upon the most solid basis, and as far as possible from the blighting influence of demagogues. At the same time I am opposed to class legislation and in favor of protecting and fostering the interests of the laboring and producing classes in every legitimate way possible. A pure, economical, constitutional Government that will protect the liberty of the people and the property of the people, without destroying the rights of the States or aggrandizing its own powers beyond the limits of the Constitution, is the kind of government contemplated by the fathers, and by that I think the Democracy propose to stand."

He was clerk of the Claims Committee in the United States Senate in 1850, and at the close of the session he resigned his position and retired into private life. In October of the same year, in response to the call of the people, he was elected Secretary of the Constitutional Convention, which assembled at Indianapolis. The adoption of the new Constitution necessitated the revision of the State laws, and 1851 Mr. English was elected to represent his county in the State Legislature. So popular was he at this time, that notwithstanding he was only 29 years of age, he was elected Speaker of the House, and during his three months in that capacity no appeal was taken from any of his decisions. ...

SPORTSMEN'S CORNER.

The Essex Gun Club having been authorized by the President of the New Jersey State Sportsmen's Association, to take charge of the Tournament for the Fourth of 1880, it is proposed to hold said Tournament at Newark, on the same ground, and on the 2d, 3d, and 4th. Programmes will be issued as soon as possible and sent to all parts of the State.

The reason why women have little or no success at fishing is because not one of them possesses nerve enough to hold one worm between their teeth so that they can use both hands in getting the hook out of their back hair.

That prince of birds, the woodcock, was never more plentiful in New Jersey than this season. The late drouth was favorable, as the young birds escaped the floods, but the usual epoch after July 4 is denied the sportsman, for, under the new law, squirrel and woodcock are not to be shot until September 1. As the woodcock is a bird of passage, the birds will have flown beyond the reach of the hunter before the legal season commences. We understand that fifteen sportsmen of this section have formed themselves into a club to enforce the law and will post themselves on the most favorable woodcock grounds on the Fourth to detect and punish any infringement.—Morristown Banner.

Black bass fishing will not be lawful till July 1st.

Years ago, we quietly dropped bait fishing as a habit. We were led to do so from finding that our boy fly enhanced the look of fifteen assorted size and colors, brought to our aid lesser sized and greater numbers of bass than did the wriggling worm or dirty—nasty—sluggish—tired of near singing companion. We small creeps find a shallow place or a quiet river which to make our rest when on a fishing jaunt with our lovely fisherwoman, who perhaps were wedged and cramped in uncomfortable boat in hot stream, patient but jockeying, awaiting the bite that never not while we were wading off these to the weeds, with the cool water kaping our limbs with a pat-a-pat and a musical gurgle that increased the fisher's healthy glow, and the bites into a healthy appetite of the many good things that lay store lying around loose for us; with files swarming out the likely, sitty or the provoking post, and with the fish and muskies in our lusty brought their active play, as we made our way hither and there, across the rapids and through the shallows and pools.

We do not mind bass fishing, we won't use bait.—No! no!—If we go a-fishing—we go to catch fish. If we go for the sport—and if they won't take our flies, and do take our bait, why, then we have to bring your honor's garden—worms will use.

But we do mean to say that, for nearly all kinds of fish that lie in the streams of our State, the fly, when used with judgment and skill, is the most killing lure. Of course, we do not include the catfish, the sucker, that are purely bottom feeders, but gives a sharp rayed fish, but a chub, perch, or sunny, is a fish, bass, or a striped one, and a relatively shallow pool of rapid, and we'll bet that our catch will be bigger than that of the hunkers and best worm or grub gorged bass that ever set out on a long day's fish and bait into the deep waters.—De Kiles.

Undoubtedly there are parties, pot hunters, who will violate the law regarding the shooting of woodcock before the legal day of September, and undoubtedly there will be found persons who having no to thumse relish for this game bird, will purchase them of said pot-hunters. We therefore desire to remind such villians of the law that the penalty for killing or having unlawfully in possession any woodcock between the 1st day of January and the 1st day of September of each year (the law having been changed last winter) is Ten Dollars for each bird. The various game societies throughout the State are offering rewards to any person giving information to them which shall lead to the arrest and conviction of said violators of the game law. The members of The New Jersey Game & Fish Protective Society are determined to rigidly enforce the law on the subject and prosecute to the fullest extent any and all persons guilty of killing or having unlawfully in possession woodcock. Any information which will lead to such a desired object by those wishing the law upheld, should be sent to the Secretary, at Plainfield.

The annual encampments in Elizabeth have conquered their labors, and are now reviving their work. The total population of the city exceeds 27,000, being an increase of 3,000 since the last census. The First, Second and Third wards show the greatest percentage of increase, the population of the Fourth ward has increased 250 in the past five years and 350 since the last census.

COMMENTS.

Garfield was once a Campbellite Baptist minister and Arthur is the son of a Baptist minister. Methodism in Republican politics has received a set back.

Will Garfield call Schuyler Colfax to his table if elected?

Who now is for Blaine first, last and all the time, excepting Gail Hamilton?

The dark horse has the salary-grab ringbone, the Du Bois quinsy, and the Credit Mobilier glanders.

Our Republican exchanges take pride in saying that Garfield is "a poor man." He is undoubtedly a poor man to be President.

Garfield's pedigree seems to be a trifle mixed. Already it is said that he came from Welsh, Irish and Dutch stock. And then there was his Credit Mobilier stock.

Garfield used to be a canaller—he can glide up Salt river next November in a canal boat. A cheap transportation.

The New York Herald says truly that the American people "have not edged the doors of the White House firmly against imperialism only to open them on other hinges to corruption."

All good Democrats are taking a deep interest in the Herald's editorials, which begin with "Garfield's no doubt the his alleged connection with De Golyer, and the Credit Mobilier. Query—Will he explain?"

A correspondent of the Evening Post of Monday evening said:

"There is only contempt for Kelly and his gang. The story is told authentically that yesterday Matthew Conahan, who invited over by a messenger from Kelly with the request that a meeting might be arranged. After some respectful inquiry regarding Mr. Kelly's health, Mr. Conahan asked the messenger if he would take back a report of the message which he (Conahan) was about to deliver to him. Being assured that he would do so, Mr. Conahan told the messenger to say to Mr. Kelly that in the opinion of the Nevada delegation he (Kelly) was "a political scoundrel with whom no gentleman of the Nevada delegation desired to associate."

It is amusing to see how the Republican press are bringing forward naked prominently Judge Black's letter examining James A. Garfield. The transparent ignorance of facts is apparent when we consider that Garfield, in his testimony, claimed that he never touched the gun and in fact never saw it, Black, on the other hand (who, by the way, was paid to write as he did) shields his client on the plea that he (Garfield) handled the gun, but didn't know that it was loaded. And the Republicans consider that such a mitigation clears their candidate.

Instead of shut doors in liquor saloons on Sundays, the best Methodists here law now open open wide on all day long. All curtains, wooden screens, stained glass, or ground glass doors and windows must come down or stand aside, so that everybody can see what is going on within. This is a novel method to bring about the restrictions of temperance, and judging from the complaints against it, not without the effects in the three or four weeks that it has been in force.

Our words do follow us. "Oakes Ames is dead," sadly remarks the Buffalo Courier, "but his note-book yet speaketh."

Wm. S. Young, captain of the last steamer Narragansett, attended the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church in Jersey City on Sunday evening. During the sermon, Rev. Dr. Harcourt, the minister, denounced all the Narragansett's officers as cowards. Captain Young, who sat in front of the pulpit, rose, and said "any one who made such a charge was a liar." He was conducted to the nearest station-house by one of the trustees, and locked up to answer the charge of disorderly conduct.

HOW A BITTER WAS FIXED.

A shoemaker in the First Ward had been troubled considerably by parties coming into his little shop and loafing around his three-legged bench, talking politics and painting the floor with tobacco juice. Now he had exhausted his patience, and yesterday he had vowed to be a virtue with him, so he made up his mind that he would fix them. On Monday last two young men came in, ostensibly to inquire about mending a pair of shoes, but in reality to chew tobacco and whittle sticks with his shoe-knives. But that shoemaker was ready for them, and he had everything in readiness before they came in. There were two dilapidated shoemaker's benches near the wall, on which the setters were wont to lounge, and on each of the hollowed-out bottoms of these benches the brilliant brain of the shoemaker had suggested that he should deposit some wax. The day was warm and the wax seemed to sweat with delight as the shoemaker smeared it out. "Sit down, my friends," he said, as he bent over his work to hide the grin lurking in the corners of his mouth. "It's very warm."

"Yes," chorused the two, as they settled themselves on the wax, very quietly for a few minutes, and "don't mean to stay long."

The shoemaker thought that if that were the case he did not doubt but that the young men would set there for some time. He smiled all to himself while he worked and while the wax was warming, and cast anxious glances now and then to see if his friends were getting along well as far as they had got. It was nearing the noon hour and it occurred to the sitters that they would depart for home. They attempted to leave, but that wax had been purchased direct from the makers, and it held on like a postage stamp to an envelope. No, they did not leave: they stayed right there where the wax was, and the shoemaker went out for his dinner. They were there at one o'clock, and at five o'clock they were there still, and if that wax had not been cut with a hot knife those sitters would have been there yet. That shoemaker has ordered a supply of wax from the same manufactory, and is now prepared to receive callers who wish to discuss the political affairs of the day.
