SUGGESTIONS FOR THE SICK ROOM.—In preparing a meal for any one whose appetite is delicate, it should be made to look as tempting as possible. The tray should be covered with the whitest napkin, and the silver, glass and china should shine with cleanliness. There should not be too great a variety of viands, and but a very small portion of each one. Nothing more quickly disgusts a feeble appetite than a quantity of food presented at one time.

The patient never should be consulted beforehand as to what he will eat or what he will drink. If he asks for anything give it to him, with the doctor's permission; otherwise prepare something he is known to like, and offer it without previous comment. One of the chief offices of a good nurse is to think for the patient. His slightest want should be anticipated and gratified before he has time to express it. Quick observation will enable one to detect the first symptoms of worry or excitement, and to remove the cause. An invalid never should be teased with the exertion of making a decision. Whether the room is too hot or too cold, whether chicken broth beef-tea or gruel is best for his luncheon, and all similar matters, are questions which should be decided without appealing to him.

Household troubles should be kept as far as possible from the sick room. Squabbles of children or servants should never find an echo there.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

We ... the ... from A. D. ... to A. ... St. Paul ... great ... Rome ... the Gentiles ... Corinthians ...

... Christians of St. Paul ... to the ...

The fourth lesson is on the magnificent theme of "Victory over Death." It is taken from that splendid argument for the Resurrection contained in 1. Cor. 15, which is so familiar and so precious to all Christian readers of the Scriptures. This chapter and its doctrine are the crowning glory of the famous Epistle.

The fifth lesson is on "The Ministry of Reconciliation," and it holds forth the great fundamental truth which is the very basis of the gospel offer of salvation, and the burden of the Christian minister's message, that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them," having "made him to be sin who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him."

The ... called us to notice the beautiful and ... as "fruit of the Spirit." This fruit grows only on ... the Lord's planting, and under the cultivation of the Holy Spirit.

The seventh lesson described to us "The Christian Armor," that celestial panoply, armed with which every believer ... and more than conqueror ... spiritual foes. ...

The subject of the eighth lesson was "The Mind of Christ," and we were taught that this was a humble mind, a loving mind, a self-sacrificing mind, ... in all ... should ...

The ninth lesson had for its theme, "Practical Religion," and we were instructed that "religion, like learning, touches nothing that it does not adorn," but that every relation in life, with its appropriate duties, is the better for her influence.

"The Coming of the Lord" was the subject of the tenth lesson. We were told that the Lord would come, which is the ... of great practical importance for us to know. We were not told when, from which the inference was plain that it was none of our business.

"The Christian in the World" was considered in the eleventh lesson, from which it was easy to learn that while the Christian must be in the world, he must not be of the world.

The quarter's lessons closed with "The Christian Citizen," and its teaching showed us that if all men illustrated the character which it portrayed, our world would be a better place.

And thus we have had the privilege and responsibility of three months' additional study of the Word of God. We shall have proved ourselves but poor scholars of these lively oracles if we have not been made wiser and better by this opportunity. May God forgive our unfaithfulness as teachers, or as students, and still hear our prayer: "Sanctify us by thy truth! THY WORD IS TRUTH!"

A correspondent of the ... writing of the ... days of Narragansett, when there was but one hotel and one boarding house, the latter always filled with "pretentious people from Philadelphia," says Gen. ... Schenck was stopping there, and one morning he encountered two ladies in the water and courteously offered his services to "bathe" them. After the bath he escorted his damsels to their bathing-house, where he was met by a laughing friend, who told him that everybody had been enjoying a good joke at his expense.

"How so?" asked Schenck.

"Why, you have been bathing two of the servant girls."

"Well," responded Mr. Schenck "that explains it. I thought they were too polite for boarders."

A drunken man was swaying unsteadily in the street, when a dog with a tin pan tied to its tail ran between his legs. The collision was so forcible that that the man was upset, and the dog ran on minus a piece of its tail. The man got up bewildered, rubbed the bruised end of his spinal column, picked up the dog's tail, and then soliloquized: "This is (hic) unfortunate! Never before knowed or suspected I had such a thing as a tail till I go an' fall down an' break it off. Might've made a (hic) fortune 'zibitin' myself as man with tail. There'd bin millions in it—millions (hic) in it! Jes' my luck. Whenever I get a good thing it's always gone before I (hic) find it out."—Virginia City Chronicle.

A MIDNIGHT STRUGGLE.

In the early autumn of the year 187–, ... I was ...

... the road by sundown.

Thoroughly wearied with my day's ride, I at once began preparation for retiring, and had drawn off one boot, when Bose came in rather hastily, looking furtively over his shoulder, and then cautiously closing and locking the door.

"Mars Ralph, dar's gwine to be trouble in dis house afore morning," he said.

I saw in a moment that something had occurred to upset the faithful fellow's equilibrium.

"Why, Bose, what is it? What do you mean?" I asked, barely restraining a smile.

"I tell you, Mars Ralph, we'd better trabbel furder" was the rather mysterious reply. "You see dat gal dere told me dar would be a muss if we stayed in this old house all night."

By close questioning I elicited the fact that the girl had really warned him that the four men, whom I had noticed together, were a desperate set of villains, and probably had designs upon our property, if not our lives.

The girl had seen two of them at the stable while I was at supper, and by cautiously creeping into a stall next to the one in which they stood had heard enough to convince her that they meant mischief. Subsequently to this she also saw the landlord in close confab with the entire party, and from his actions judged

"Now, Bose, Mars Ralph, I go down, ... and see if can strong enough to ..."

... was half way out of the window before I could speak.

"No, Bose; you shall not," I answered firmly, drawing him back into the room. "You must—"

The words were lost in the din of a furious and totally unexpected attack upon the door.

"Mars Ralph," whispered Bose, significantly, and with a quick ...

A deafening report followed, and ...

"Sabe us! how it do kick," exclaimed Bose, under his breath.

The blow had fallen like an unexpected thunderbolt upon the bandits, and a moment later we heard their retreating footsteps down the corridor.

"Dar'll be more of 'em heah 'fore long, Mars Ralph," said Bose, with an

A single look to see that the window was clear—we knew there could be no path leading down for a long distance either way, or they would never have attempted to descend the rope, and we plunged headlong into the dense forest that clothed the mountain side.

We got clear, it is true; but with the loss of our animals and baggage; for the next day, when we returned, with a party of ... we found the place ... smouldering ashes, and ...

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

... the Great High Priest ... the Old Testament, and ... were types of him. This may be said to be the main design and glory of the Epistle—to illustrate and commend the superiority of Jesus to Moses and to the Levitical priesthood, and to ... royal and eternal dignity on the Saviour's brow.

The Epistle may be divided into Doctrinal and Practical, and yet exhortations of a practical character and important didactic instruction are found in each division. ...

Then, Christ and Moses are compared, and the work of the latter ...

... doubts of the Academy and the pride of the Portico and the prejudices of the Synagogue and the fasces of the lictor and the swords of thirty legions were humbled in the dust."

If we have not a sympathizing Saviour, then we have no Saviour at all.

2. Christ sympathizes with sinners, but not with sin.

He suffered for sinners, but he did not sin with them. Therefore he can hate the sin, while he loves the sinner.

3. With Christ as our Advocate, we can go boldly to the throne of grace. For as our Advocate he has—

(a) Authority to plead. "There is one God and one mediator between God and man—the man Christ Jesus."

(b) He has full knowledge of the Law, and it is safe in his hands.

(c) He can show that it will not be dishonored, even if sinners trusting in him are freely forgiven, for he can show how "God can be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus."

(d) He pleads for sinners under the power of an intelligent sympathy with them.

SWEET KITTIE KILLAIRE.

We will ever give many a chorus
To the wings of the evening breeze,
The porches ... covered,
With honey ... sweet,
Two theme with smiles and kisses,
Their perfume at her feet.

Now to see fields of clover,
And daises growing wild,
Such as I used to play among
When but a little child;
The hillsides and the meadows,
The woods, the fields, the road,
Give nature's sweetest picture
To that sweet earth abode.

The violets star the meadows,
And the water that comes from the hill,
Winds through a mirrored streamlet,
To the different watermill;
The water keeps on gliding
In its never-ending flow,
But its song in my heart abides,
Was learned long years ago.

The lawns around the cottage
Are trim, and look so neat;
Sweet velvet grassy cushions,
For Kittie's dainty feet;
A spring of purest water
Keeps bubbling—bubbling up,
And many splendid draughts I've had
From Kittie's ... cup.

An orchard's near the home ...
Whose trees bear luscious fruit,
Pears, apples, plums, and peaches,
Of many kinds to suit;
Fat cattle, too, are grazing
In the meadow land near by,
And fowls mix up their cackling
With the wizard-like peacock's cry.

'Twere difficult to mention,
Or tell in one short tale,
The beauties of that homestead,
The home in Glen's vale.
It's one that all might covet,
I'm glad that one so rare
Should grace that "cot of roses,"
As our sweet Kittie Killaire. C. W. H.

A STORY OF THE SEA.

The good ship "Americus" engaged in the East India merchant service, was on her homeward passage. Her crew was jubilant at the prospect of soon reaching home; but probably no one aboard the ship was in better spirits than the skipper's pretty daughter, Mabel Stanford, who had accompanied her father on this voyage.

Suddenly, like a thunderbolt from a clear sky, a dark cloud of wrongs and sufferings, which had been hanging over the ship, broke upon them in all its terrible power, sending broken hearts ... the hopes of the crew, and driving the captain and his daughter nearly distracted with grief.

Mabel Stanford was the general favorite of that ship's company. None could help liking and admiring her pleasant ways, and she, all unconscious of the fearful web she was so innocently weaving, did her best to make the voyage pleasant.

Among Miss Stanford's ardent admirers, and one whom she seemed especially to favor was the second mate, young Frank Heywood, who loved her with all his heart. It was whispered among the crew that they would make a fine match, but the skipper did not look upon the would-be union in that light; it was generally known that he would prefer the first mate, Warren Gregg, who was also a suitor for his daughter's hand.

Warren Gregg, the first mate, was a man not far from thirty, who had followed the sea from his boyhood, and was considered a first-class seaman. He was a little below medium height, with a stout, thick frame, and frank, open features, which greatly belied his true disposition. This was his second trip as mate on the "Americus," and though he had succeeded in winning the good will of the captain, he was generally disliked by the crew for his haughty and overbearing ways. That he loved Miss Stanford with all the ardor of which his nature was capable, there was no doubt, and it is perhaps needless to say that he looked upon the attention the manly, handsome Heywood paid her, with anything but pleasure. In fact he was mad with jealousy, and the opportunity only was wanting for his pent-up passion to break forth into a torrent of hatred and vengeance. However he had so managed to govern his actions, that no one dreamed of the fierce mental conflict which was racking his brain.

Affairs were at this state—Miss Mabel openly receiving the attentions of Heywood, while her father and brother, the supercargo, were silently working to bring about a different result, and Gregg still trying to win her from his rival, his passion growing fiercer and fiercer as his case grew more hopeless, till plans for revengeful triumph went flitting through his brain, ready to be tried in case his means should fail—when an incident occurred which tended to bring about an estrangement between the captain and his daughter's lover.

It had been the aim of the unscrupulous Gregg from the first to bring about a quarrel between the captain, or his son Lewis and Heywood. Thus he was continually embittering the minds of both against the young mate, until at last his object was accomplished.

Heywood and young Stanford had an open quarrel, brought about by the machinations of the first mate, who had caused the hot-headed supercargo to accuse the other of stealing a ring he had mysteriously lost, which of course quickly aroused the temper of the latter, when a hot discussion ...

... the captain ... Lewis, but had been ... forgive and be forgiven. ...

"Heywood's story was received with shouts of derision. The circumstantial evidence was too overwhelming against him for anyone to have the least suspicion that his seemingly inconsistent story was anything but a false fabrication gotten up for the occasion.

As soon as order could be restored, the captain stepped forward with a pair of manacles, and placing them upon the doomed man's wrists, said,

"Before God and man, Frank Heywood, I believe you to be guilty of murdering my son. ...

"Oh, father," don't!" cried Mabel, ...

"Tut, tut, girl, no more of this!" said her father sternly. "Men, do your duty!"

A couple of the sailors stepped up to obey their superior's order, when, with a low cry, Mabel sprang forward between them and her lover, as if to shield him from their grasp. Without a word the captain, in spite of her tearful entreaties, rudely snatched his daughter away.

Heywood, chancing to look up, caught sight of the mate, Warren Gregg, standing but a short distance off, an exultant look of fiendish satisfaction gleaming in his ... eyes. ...

"All a lie! All a lie! All a lie!"

Scarcely had the intonations of the strange words died away, and before the surprised and startled crew had time to recover from the shock of the unexpected and mysterious warning, when again the same voice, sounding so much like the dead, was heard, giving this time the surprising expression:

"'Twas Warren Gregg! 'Twas Warren Gregg! 'Twas Warren Gregg!"

... "Murderer!" cried the skipper, as soon as the crew had succeeded in overpowering him. "We will keep him in irons, and wait further developments."

... the following night in the ... more sad and mournful ... time:

"Warren Gregg, a murderer! a ..."

... Gregg called the ... to whom he made a ... mistaking him for ... and then, upon his ... the guilty wretch begged ... The only reply he received was to wait until he reached ...

... morning, a few days later, ... and no trace of him could be found, it was supposed that he must have got upon the deck during the night, when unseen and unheard, he had thrown himself into the sea. That to escape the punishment of man he had gone to receive the judgment of his Maker, with another crime upon his already blackened soul.

The voice from heaven was not ... the superstitious mariners ... to their satisfaction, by ... showing that the dead had already ... vindication of the character of the innocent victim.

In the due course of time port was duly made.

A year later Frank Heywood and Mabel Stanford were united in wedlock, and the congratulations of all their friends. But the strangest and best part of it all was, that among the wedding guests was Lewis Stanford, the bride's brother, who, instead of having perished on that night, as was supposed, had, by the aid of a box which had been thrown overboard among some other things, managed to keep afloat till morning, when an outward-bound ship had picked him up; and after considerable difficulty, he had succeeded in getting home in season to attend his sister's wedding.

The cup of happiness was full to overflowing, and in their great joy the crimes and misdoings of the evil-minded mate were forgiven and forgotten.

Years afterward a flock of young Heywoods would gather around their mother and ask her to repeat to them the story of that fearful ordeal of a life when their father saved himself from an ignominious death by his ... ventriloquism, which, unknown to his accusers, he possessed, ... such a satisfactory result.

GOING BACK TO DER SHOE PESSNESS.—One on Michigan avenue a few ... 70 years of age started a ... confectionery store some months ago, and the other day sent word to his creditors ... in town that he ... failed, and desired to compromise. ... down to the store, which ... in full blast, and the four sat down for a talk.

"You see, shentlemens, I do no possness, and my family eats up all der broffits," explained the tradesman, by way of excuse.

"You owe me $12," replied one of the creditors, "and each of these others $15 a piece. That makes $42."

"Shust forty-two," sighed the old man.

"Now, then, how much money have you on hand?"

"Shust sixty tollar und no more."

"Very well, as you have had bad luck we will settle with you for one hundred and twenty cents on the dollar, and you can go on as before."

"Yaw. I will do dot, shentlemens, and I am much obliged for such kind treatment."

He got his money, the twenty per cent. was added to the claims and paid, and before the creditors retired he insisted upon treating them to ice cream. They had been gone an hour before the old man rushed out and hailed a policeman and said:

"If I fails in pesness and pays 120 cents on der dollar, what does it mean?"

"It means that you don't understand how to fail," was the reply.

"Is dot bossible?" whispered the old man.

"I should say so."

"Vhell, I go pack to der shoe pessness again. Vhen I fails in dot pessness I makes eferthing. Vhen I fails in dis pessness I pays more as I owes."—Free Press.

THE RELIABLE MAN.

Of all the qualities that combine to form a good character, there is none more important than reliability. Most emphatically is this true of the character of a good business man.—The world itself embraces both truth and honesty, and the reliable man must necessarily be truthful and honest. We see so much all around us that exhibits the absence of this crowning quality, that we are tempted in our bilious moods to deny its very existence. But there are nevertheless, reliable men, men to be depended upon, to be trusted, in whom you may repose confidence, whose word is as good as their bond, and whose promise is performance. If any one of you know such a man, make him your friend. You can only do so, however, by assimilating his character. The reliable man is a man of good judgment. He does not jump at conclusions. He is not a frivolous man.—He is thoughtful. He turns over a subject in his mind, and looks at it all round. He is not a partial or one-sided man. He sees through a thing. He is apt to be a very reticent man. He does not have to talk a great deal. He is a moderate man—not only in habits of body but also of mind. He is not a passionate man; if so by nature, he has overcome it by grace. He is a sincere man, not a plotter or schemer. What he says may be relied on. He is a trustworthy man.—You feel safe with your property or the administration of affairs in his hands. He is a brave man, for his conclusions are logically deducted from the sure basis of truth, and he does not fear to maintain them. He is a good man, for no one can be thoroughly honest and truthful without being good. Is such a quality attainable? Most assuredly so. It is not born—it is made. Character may be formed; of course, then, its component parts may be moulded to that formation.

The Washington (N. J.) Star is hot-footed after Daniel F. Beatty, the Mayor of that borough, for advertising that he was entrusted with the charge of its city bonds amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars.—This man Beatty is a great advertiser, and he advertises himself and his business in such ways as no man who has any self-respect would care to do; and his latest effort about being entrusted with city bonds to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars is a sheer fabrication—in fact, made up out of the whole cloth—as the figures given in the Star of last week, attested to by the collector and clerk of Washington, shown that the total debt of Washington is but $17,301.51. The Star is very justly incensed at the course pursued by Mr. Beatty, and claims that he has done an injury to the people of Washington, and particularly the property owners, by heralding broadcast through the land the insinuation that his town is in debt through his false statement that he had been entrusted with hundreds of thousands of dollars of its city bonds. We wish the Star would more thoroughly ventilate more of the short-comings of Mr. Beatty, but on second thought we hardly thing that anything that might be said about Beatty will ever affect his cast-iron cheek.—Dover Index.

PROPER WAY TO COOK EGGS.—Butter a tin plate and break in your eggs; set in a steamer; place over a kettle of boiling water and steam until the whites are cooked. They are more ornamental when broken into patty tins, as they keep their form better.—The whites of the eggs, when cooked in this manner, are tender and light, and not tough and leathery, as if cooked by any other process; they can be eaten by invalids, and they certainly are very much richer than any other method. If cooked in the shell, they taste of the lime contained in them; and if broken into boiling water, it destroys their flavor.

LABOR IS HONOR.

Yes, labor is honor, ...
... labor is ...
... the world ... for labor ...
What true manner is labor's reward?
Life's breakers may batter and beat on life's breast;
True labor can stand every breaker the best,
And true labor is happy at heart.

Yes, labor is honor! but virtue alone
For the errors of weakness through life can atone,
And true honor to virtue is wed;
Let labor to virtue find strength and support,
Since labor can never command ...
When no virtue in labor is met.

Yes, labor is honor, and honor will stand
When hopes in this world may ...
... and strand,
In the glory of ages to come;
When the spirit relieved from ...
... day,
Shall rest in its proudest and noblest array,
In a brighter and happier home!

A REMEDY FOR CONSUMPTION.

A physician communicates to the Chicago Tribune what he deems a valuable preparation to be devoted in cases of pulmonary consumption. He says: Some months ago the little daughter (aged 11) of a trunk maker in this city, one Mr. Gordon—I am permitted to use his name—was pronounced a hopeless consumptive; and to have seen her at that time, one would suppose there was good ground for the decision, as she was a mere skeleton, had a terrible cough, expectorated over half a pint a day of greenish, blood streaked tuberculous matter, and was so exceedingly nervous that she could scarcely sleep at all, night or day. She had been doctoring a long time with cough and consumption specifics, and one or two physicians had tried their skill on her; but without avail—her life gradually drawing to its close. Meeting her father one day almost heartbroken at the idea of losing her, I gave him this prescription:

One half pound of finely cut up beef steak, fresh;
One drachm pulverized charcoal;
Four ounces pulverized sugar;
Four ounces rye whiskey;
One pint boiling water.

Mix together, let it stand in a cool place over night, and give from one to two teaspoonfuls of liquid and meat before each meal.

This was tried and in four or five weeks this little girl was so rosy and healthy, free from all cough and other symptoms of disease, that it was considered a miracle in the neighborhood in which she lived. What caused this great change? Simply the supplying of the system with more carbon than the disease could exhaust, thereby giving nature the upper hand in the conflict.

I have used this preparation very frequently and have never found it to act otherwise than beneficial. The dose should be small at first, until the stomach becomes used to it, and then gradually increased.

FASHION NOTES.—Paper stockings are among the latest inventions. It is said the real ones are to be made out of newspapers. Hosiery dealers always have a large stock in trade. Many people consider stockings a ... shame. The latest fashion item from Paris states that ... will commit suicide in dirty stockings. Hayes has been so free with his vetoes that Mrs. Hayes he states to introduce her millinery bill. It is said a goat can eat almost anything, but when it comes to chewing on an old ... for a quarter of an hour, he ... if he might be making a bird's eye of his stomach for nothing ... the job. Of course women can keep a secret, but it takes a good many of them to do it. The length of a lady's train should never be under ... feet. The best way to ... is to dip your head in cold oil and then apply a match. Men who have been sunstruck say it is almost as disagreeable as being struck by a cross-eyed woman. A fashion item says "charming caps for breakfast are of muslin, have brown ... bordered with scant ruffles that are neatly scallop'd." It doesn't tell how they are cooked, and we don't believe we could eat one, no matter how they were served up. ... muslin cap for breakfast ... never take the place of scalloped oysters.

BUTTER IS A NOUN.—One of our Western ... was a guest at a White Mountain hotel where the waiters are Massachusetts school ma'ams. At the dinner table he said to one of them, "Miss, won't you please pass the butter?" "Butter," said the school-ma'am, very promptly, "is a noun; common noun, because it is the name of a thing, and a very poor thing sometimes; singular number, if strong enough to go alone; feminine gender, mostly, as may be seen by the long hairs often found in it; and judging from the odor of this, it must be in the objective case, governed by a delicate smell understood." The Western man stared and said he believed he would try and get along without any butter if that was what ailed it.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.
