THE TWINS OF GLENAIRLIE.

(Concl'd.)

Mrs. Duff's motherly eyes were the first to note it, and she summarily put an end to the drawing-lessons, on the plea that the stooping was bad for Morag's chest. She did that she might rest a while, and take more air and exercise. So she drove her miles into the country each day, and, when the evenings lengthened and she grew a little stronger, Elsie and Mr. Vivien would slowly stroll with her along the shore of the great ocean. Sometimes they would linger upon the white sands and gaze westward to the line where sky and waters met, and Morag would long for a ship to sail straight across the blue expanse into the heavenly harbor.

"What remarkable ideas of navigation you have, Morag!" Elsie once said. "As if you could sail into the sky!"

"It's a pretty idea," she answered softly; and then she added, "How beautiful the glen must be looking! The birks will be a blaze of gold in whole groves. I can shut them when I shut my eyes."

"Open your eyes and take no fear there, and show me the beauties of Glenairlie," said Mr. Vivien; but he turned his eyes towards her as he spoke—not on either of the lovely views.

"Many happy returns of the day!" said Mr. Vivien, one day, as Mrs. Duff's birthday came round. [illegible] "Elsie, you must be kind to-day, for it is my birthday!"

"Oh, Mr. Vivien, [illegible] Mrs. Duff has given me leave to-day! The sheep! I never knew a lady so fond of sheep! I wish it was the birthday of the north sheep, Morag, with your fleece!"

She closed her eyes, and leaned her head one of the wide chairs of Lady [illegible] out to her. He leaned the book, making one to Elsie, saying—

"What is the sweet?"

"Mine has a Cross," whitten up in it," answered Morag.

"And mine has a 'Locket'!" exclaimed Elsie. "Oh, are you going to give me a locket? How nice! I'm very fond of lockets! I have [illegible] so pretty! Oh, thank you, indeed!"

Her delighted exclamations made her cold headed them to the gifts. In Morag's lap a cross of pearls, dazzling gold, in Elsie's a massive locket. She opened it, a scream of delight as she took it out, and press it for spring. There was Mr. Vivien's face as little Elsie's first offer painted upon ivory, could delineate it.

"How lovely! Look, Morag, is it not a very pretty picture and a splendid likeness?"

Morag took the trinket in her hand and gazed at it long and earnestly.

"It is very like," she said, as she handed it to Mrs. Duff.

"Do you not like the cross?" asked Mr. Vivien. "I thought it a rather pretty one when I bought it."

"I like it very much. Thank you for giving it to me."

"Morag needs the mountain air. I must take her home to Glenairlie for a few weeks," said Mrs. Duff, looking fondly at her darling's lily face.

"Oh, no, no!" she cried, [illegible] so earnestly that they all looked at her in surprise. "I am growing stronger every day. I would rather not go home."

"I have a secret to reveal," said Mr. Vivien, "I have rented a pretty cottage ten miles out in the country, and I must tell you all to be ready to leave Rahway in a week. Suppose we start at once?"

"No, dear, it is [illegible] you, as I see will distress this new idea. In which direction is your cottage, Vivien?"

"On the Glenairlie road. It's a lovely spot, as I have said, and [illegible] a perfect thicket of roses. Mrs. Smallman is talking of giving her cottage in their holidays so it is the best, Elsie?"

"I forget to tell you she has done it. I am free for six weeks."

"There is no reason why we should not go to-morrow," said Mrs. Duff. "The town is too close and trying for Morag during the summer heat. How long do you propose to keep us?"

"As long as I can. But don't talk of leaving before you are there."

"You are very kind," said Morag.

"Elsie and I are very grateful."

"Don't mention it," [illegible] smiled Mrs. Urquhart. "[illegible] quires a change also; [illegible] quite a family party. [illegible] drinking your health in capital coffee. Long life and happiness to you both!"

Two days later good Mrs. Urquhart and her drawing-room, dining-room, and attic inmates were all comfortably settled in the picturesque little cottage of Braeside.

Morag seemed to revive at once, and Elsie ran out and in among the flowers like a delighted child. She gathered roses in baskets, and put them in every available glass and dish in the house. But there was one flaw in her otherwise perfect happiness, and neither love nor summer weather could make her quite forget it. She had lost her locket, her precious birthday gift. She had missed it on the first day of their holiday at the cottage, and went back to town at once and searched the house from top to bottom, but in vain. It had disappeared.

In the first flush of her disappointment, she shed bitter tears; but, as Mrs. Urquhart remarked truly, it was a hard to be ugly—

"Opposite within being the thing [illegible]."

So she dried her eyes and tried to smile, and it was hard to see the first hands the ornament before it had been worn.

Morag sighed [illegible]

"No, dear, I [illegible] take it [illegible] Mr. Vivien."

"Mr. Vivien, dear, [illegible] Mr. Vivien."

[illegible]

"Morag, my dear friend, my loved pupil, you must come and be my sister, for Elsie has promised to be my wife."

She rose to her feet and stood before him in the waning light. He had never seen so fair a vision [illegible] up a woman's face before as played upon that face at this moment.

"My Heaven, he's [illegible] Mr. Vivien! [illegible] Mr. Vivien! [illegible] happy, Vivien! I [illegible] myself. Oh, my dear, my dear! [illegible] I love you, too!"

[illegible]

"Yes, [illegible] the sole [illegible] Ah, sir, we have gained in [illegible] things by our long stay in [illegible] others."

"We have [illegible] the affection and sympathy of [illegible] impatient [illegible] said, laughing coldly, "my sisters are [illegible] than [illegible]."

[illegible] Elsie's last remark in [illegible]

"Yes," she said, [illegible] "[illegible] The poet [illegible] Burns [illegible] is that you are a R. A. [illegible] I must not complain if [illegible] my [illegible] Let us go home now. I don't [illegible] I have [illegible] Burns [illegible] again."

Mrs. Duff is still hale and hearty, Sir James Rudley Hall is married and [illegible] mamma. Elsie and Vivien [illegible] call her "Grandie," and she spoils them to her heart's content. And good Mrs. Urquhart is there to continue for the rest of her life. When she grows too old to act as housekeeper, she will remain as a retired friend. Elsie herself will care for her, and guide her tottering footsteps down life's last slope. She has a room which she guards jealously, and [illegible] not reveal for untold gold. It is that Lady Vivien was [illegible] lodge in her back [illegible] and [illegible] the income which will pay the rent.

from the gloom and bitterness and apathy into which her friends feared she was fast sinking she was rescued by a power strong as Death itself, which drew her back into the golden sunlight and pleasant places—by a love stronger, more passionate and enduring than the love she had lost. For years before she returned to Glenairlie; but, when she did, she realized her girlish dreams. She was the richest lady in the glen; and the poor Highlanders found in her a beneficent fairy.

Once again she climbed Benairlie, and from its lofty summit gazed across the hilltops of the rugged Highland. Her husband stood beside her, still and observant; he knew that he had no place in the picture which engrossed her for the time.

She saw two girls standing there with life's morning all around them. She saw the purple shadows on the mountains which one of them had tried to paint. She saw a face pure and pallid as a lily which would never grow old or embittered, for the angels changed it. She saw a churchyard in a lowland city, and a grave distinguished by a white cross of Carrara marble which bore upon its surface only the simple name—"Morag."

She turned to her husband, and the tears clung. She saw her in the [illegible] English village [illegible] Highlands. She found her [illegible] dress [illegible] coat and street [illegible] shade always.

Mrs. Duff is still hale and hearty, Sir James Rudley Hall is married and [illegible] mamma. Elsie and Vivien [illegible] call her "Grandie," and she spoils them to her heart's content. And good Mrs. Urquhart is there to continue for the rest of her life. When she grows too old to act as housekeeper, she will remain as a retired friend. Elsie herself will care for her, and guide her tottering footsteps down life's last slope. She has a room which she guards jealously, and [illegible] not reveal for untold gold. It is that Lady Vivien was [illegible] lodge in her back [illegible] and [illegible] the income which will pay the rent.

THE NATION'S CHARACTERISTICS

Shrewdness and [illegible] are the prominent characteristics of the American people. They will take no stock in an article unless it is meritorious. When Dr. Swayne launched his Ointment for the Piles, that itches intensely at night on a person's human suffering, the physicians laughed, but the people tried it all the same and manifested their appreciation in a National endorsement. Now the physicians and humanitarians are laughing the other way. This world is full of incentives.

WHY SHOULD WE KEEP THANKSGIVING DAY?

Among our national holidays, if we except Thanksgiving, it is easy to find reasons to justify their annual celebration. All the others have their origin from conspicuous historical events. The great events which a common faith in the magnitude of these events and joy in a common pride in their commemoration. Everybody knows that in the observance of Fourth of July and Christmas we celebrate in the one case a national epoch, and in the other, the birth of Him without whom there would be no christianity.

But what is there in Thanksgiving day to justify its annual recurrence? Certainly there is no specific event out of which grew a common cause for its celebration. In fact, so far as we know, it is not founded upon any particular event at all. There is a doubtful tradition that on an occasion when the Pilgrims were in fear of perishing from want of food, they ordered a day of fasting and prayer for deliverance. Before the appointed time the supplies had arrived. The fast was changed to a feast, and since then the day has been annually observed and has been called the Thanksgiving day.

At all events, whatever may be its origin, the modern theory justifying it, is to uphold the idea, that in each year we should devote one day to express our gratitude for Providential favors granted to us as individuals and as a people during the particular year. We think the theory is upon very general, vague and in so many individual instances unauthorized reasons. We have no idea, that the people generally think at all about the reasons. The action of the seasons, the country is so very [illegible] President and various [illegible] incumbent upon them to worry themselves in efforts to excel each other in promulgating the most happy words of proclamation. Scores of a number of clergymen devote their sermons to the proposition of a sermon or perhaps more than sermons. Outside of the efforts, a day is devoted upon any one. The bulk of the people, without any reference to the object of the celebration, indulge in whatever pleasure may be prompted by the impulse of their living hearts.

This want of a specific object to gather all a common cause for thanksgiving is due to one of two things, either the day furnishes no real occasion for which citizens can display their gratitude, or supplies no motive to excite our zeal. It is to be hoped that we have no individual grievances to trouble us with on this.

But be good and for the people than fair it is not at all likely, that every one of an individual or community of the most prosperous experience sufficient happiness to enable him sincerely to express a day in public thanks for it.

To those who, like Jos. Chas. Edwards, believe that, in such a country as U. S. S. A. [illegible] the only legitimate ground to exist at all is due to the influence of prejudices of the Admiralty the fact of [illegible] supplies a common cause for the celebration of the day. To the [illegible] Holy Willie, be in their prayer with the invocation:

"O [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

The fact of not yet being able to form a part of that unhappy [illegible] sufficient reason for joining in giving thanks.

But worldly, since people are [illegible] in their actions. They [illegible] Thanksgiving from the standpoint of a day [illegible] which [illegible] knowledge [illegible] a favor. In their minds it has become [illegible] of something beyond what is due. Looking back over the past year in that worldly way, many certainly have to give thanks more than they have [illegible] deserved. They, beyond all question, should be specially thankful. But what shall those who have received more [illegible]? Has should they respond to the President's invitation? Clearly, if the others in receipt of undeserved favors are bound to offer thanks, by the same reason the [illegible] fled in withholding them.

Nevertheless we believe in continuing the celebration of the day. Even with it we have found it [illegible] than we could have. We are about the only Christian country that refuses to [illegible] the occasion of the appropriate Sunday observance. In addition to this, all the others have more holidays than we. Also people we are ashamed to confess that we do anything, for the sake of precedent. When we set to work to enjoy ourselves, we are afraid to let up on account of it. We stick personal enjoyment by stealth, like a thief. Herbert Spencer has told us our great sin is overwork. We all know this is so. We wear ourselves out not so much by the struggle for existence but for luxuries. Holidays make rest and pleasure respectable. Considering the time many men devote to business, these occasions seem almost necessary to enable them to get acquainted with their families and neighbors.

As this day has no especial event to commemorate, it gives us a chance to utilize it in a general way. By it we can learn that the setting apart of a few days in each year solely for enjoyment is a great need to us as a people. A portion of this time might be profitably devoted to deciding whether one's own conduct during the preceding year entitles him to thanks, for any good he has done to others, himself being the judge. In any event we have no doubt the day will be regularly remembered long after the present generation is forgotten.

The prize offered for a poem published in Philadelphia, where a prize of $20 in gold to the person who should write the most words from the first chapter of Genesis within a circle the size of a silver quarter of a dollar. The prize was awarded to Mrs. Lillie E. Wood, of Hartford. Mrs. Wood accomplished the wonderful feat by writing the entire chapter within the prescribed limits, and to show how wonderful that was it is only necessary to count the words which the lady crowded into this small space. In the first chapter of Genesis there are thirty-one verses and every verse is [illegible] sixty-five words, not counting the spellings of the numerals at the beginning of the verses, as the writer was permitted to omit these. The reading matter and the punctuation had to be crowded into the quarter of a dollar circle, into which she put the 705 words and 114 punctuation marks.

Corporal Gaylard Lebrecht Blucher, Post Sergeant-Major at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, a few days ago received from Berlin Prussian orders of a position on his staff to aid in the reorganization of the Army of the Khedive of Egypt. Corporal Blucher is a lineal descendant of the famous Marshall Blucher, Prince of Wahlstadt, of Waterloo fame, after whom he is named. He graduated at the Universities of Bonn and Heidelberg. In 1875 he entered the Prussian army as a second lieutenant in the First Regiment of the Guards, and during the Austro-Prussian war he was [illegible] in the staff of the Crown Prince commanding the Seventh Corps. Subsequently he was chief of military attache of the German Legation at Copenhagen, and held for about three years at Rangoon. While in Egypt he acquired the Arabic tongue. In 1876 he was promoted to a First Lieutenancy, and in the Russo-Turkish war he again performed the duties of military attache. During the campaign he was appointed Military Administrator of the Department of the Balkan, which position he held until the withdrawal of the Prussian army of occupation. In 1881 he quitted the army and came to America. Said to be skilled as an officer of the Second Artillery, he was offered a Captaincy and Barracks in the Khedive's Bodyguard, but he was Captain Volontaire Bastard.

A pigeon on "Sugar and Spice" Wednesday was released from the Lounge Island Heights, Brooklyn, Tuesday night, by Chief Justice Charles P. Daly. He [illegible] that some of the greatest engineers of Europe, Harold excepted, feel both a great admiration for the architect of the swift-footed messenger of "Little Arthur," now known as "Rocky Arthur," than all the other engineers in the world. The speaker told a story of the origin of "Robin Adair." A young Irish physician of the name of Robin Adair, wishing to London supper that night, where there was a Countess who was sick, had been broken by the overturning of a stage coach. His professional services were required to perform a difficult work so skillfully that she insisted he should not leave her. Ultimately she took him to London and introduced him to the best social circles. He became enamored of an Earl's daughter and taught her to sing "Robin Adair." Afterwards he was parted from her in a cruel fate. She connected his name with the song, using it for a refrain, and at length the song, thus changed was picked up and carried to celebrated tenor upon the English stage, who it met with the same instantaneous success as did "Home, Sweet Home." Dexter Daly said that the time of "Auld Lang Syne" had its origin in a Gaelic proverb signifying "Yankee Doodle" was originally a sweet dance, and that "John Anderson my Jo John" and "Cricket on the Lawn" were the same tune written in a little different time. This time was that of an older one than Luther, which ran, "There was a little man who loved a little maid," and before that, in the time of Queen Elizabeth, it was a dance.

WHAT ALASKA PAYS US. When Mr. Seward purchased Alaska a majority of the people of this country unfriendly to it, and said it was a very bad and costly bargain. According to the official figures the Government has already realized in the way of revenues from the contract with the Alaska Fur Seal Company for the right to catch seals upwards of $10,000,000, or $4,000,000 more than the purchase money paid to Russia for the entire territory. It is estimated that this Company will have paid into the Treasury by the time of the expiration of its contract with the Government, some eight or nine years hence, fully $20,000,000.

GENERAL GRANT'S defense of Fitz John Porter, lately published in the North American Review, has called out a reply from Senator Logan, who has been Porter's most earnest opponent. Senator Logan reviews the familiar facts at considerable length in the Chicago Tribune, and says: "Suppose his officers had taken it upon themselves to determine the manner of obeying imperative commands, how long does any one suppose they would have kept their commands? And suppose General Grant's justification of the disobedience of orders, as he has stated it now in defence of Porter, had been published by him (Grant) to his armies, and been so understood by his Generals, does any one suppose by such discipline he would ever have made the success he did and become the Hero he is?"

NOT THE OLDEST BOOK. — Captain Ward, of Sumpter, South Carolina, according to the Louisville Courier-Journal, has the oldest newspaper, oldest book and oldest candle in America. He has a copy of the Nottingham Post, published in England, October 12, 1711, by John Collyer. The book is the "Life of William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle," and was written by Margaret, his wife. It was published by A. Maxwell in 1675, a hundred years before our independence, and contains 269 pages. The candle is of wax, two and a half inches in diameter, and about an inch long. It was used in the private chamber of Queen Elizabeth.

It is very remarkable that any intelligent person should suppose that a newspaper of 1711 and a book of 1675 are the oldest in the United States. In the libraries of antiquarians, and in many public libraries, there are hundreds of newspapers and books whose dates run so far back of these as to make it scarcely worth while to mention them. The first newspaper in America was published in Boston, September 25, 1690, and we are not aware that a copy is extant in this country. But the Boston News Letter was established in 1704 and continued every week until 1776, and in England newspapers have been published ever since 1640. We have in this country hundreds of newspapers printed earlier than 1711.

And as to books, we, in the last number of the Observer, mentioned a volume in our own possession published in 1587, about one hundred years before Captain Ward's oldest book. The next book we take up was printed in 1660, and we could find scores and scores of a still earlier date. Two hundred presses were at work in Europe in the year 1500, and in Mexico they were printing in 1536, and in Massachusetts in 1639. The "Bay Psalm Book," of which there are several copies, was printed in 1640. Eliot's Indian New Testament was printed in 1661, and is among us to this day, and the whole Bible in 1663.

We would think that there was some error in the form of the statement in the Louisville Courier-Journal, if it were not that in one of our own evening papers we read that Colonel Thomas W. Knox disputes the report that Captain Ward, of Sumpter, S. C., has in his possession the oldest book in America, the date of its publication being given as 1685, and gives a description of his volume, printed in 1681.

It is very singular that these gentlemen do not know that the Lenox Library has cases filled with the finest specimens of the earliest printing extant, and that volumes printed between 1400 and 1500 are to be found in numbers of our private as well as public libraries.—N. Y. Observer.

GENERAL NEWS.

Miss Anna Dickinson denies the report that she has withdrawn from the stage. She says that she is under engagement to lecture and read plays, and to act in the Western States.

The English amateur champion runner George, defeated Myers, the American champion, in a three-quarter mile race, at the Polo Grounds in New York city, on Thursday, winning the championship medal.

The Rhenish provinces of Germany are suffering heavily from floods. In the Diet at Berlin Tuesday, Herr von Putthamer read a telegram from the Emperor at Coblentz stating that the water was flooding its way from all sides into the castle garden, and that half of the boat bridge had been torn away. It was impossible, the emperor said, to foresee what the end would be.

A Washington despatch says: "The impression prevails that the Garfield Fair will not fulfill the hopes of its projectors. The expenses have been considerable, something like $18,000 having been expended, and doubts are often expressed whether it will much more than bring back this sum. The attendance Tuesday was not large, and there were apparently few visitors from out of town. If the number of these does not increase the prospects of the fair will be far from bright."

Madame Nilsson sang for the first time in New York, at Steinway Hall Tuesday evening. The hall was decorated with Swedish and American flags, and the audience was very large. Madame Nilsson sang with great effect, and the audience was enthusiastic from beginning to end. Her rendering of "Angels ever bright and fair," was followed by Schubert's "Serenade," the duet "La ci darem," from "Don Giovanni," had to be repeated, and the "Jewel song" from "Faust" supplemented by two Swedish songs and "Way down upon the Suwanee River."

A new invention has been introduced by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad at the Union Depot, in Chicago, instead of the old fashioned stock of local tickets, of which there were over four hundred for various points, a small rotary press is used. A roll of cardboard containing 1,000 tickets printed in two colors is used. A simple movement of a lever inks the type, dates and fills in the destination, registers date and amount and separates the ticket and duplicate stub from the roll. The duplicate stub serves the agent for his report.

The New York Academy of Music was crowded on Tuesday on the occasion of the public meeting to promote subscriptions for the pedestal of Bartholdi's statue of Liberty. Many States were represented in the gathering. Among those present were Governor Cornell, General Hancock, Peter Cooper, John Kelly, William M. Evarts, ex-Governor Morgan, John Jay, Parke Godwin, John Taylor Johnston, Frederick R. Coudert, Anson Phelps Stokes, Joseph H. Choate, ex-Governor Ward, of New Jersey; Justice Noah Davis, Joseph W. Drexel, Henry H. Gottinger and others. The Garde Lafayette was on the platform, in full uniform. William M. Evarts presided, and opening the meeting said that President Arthur had expressed a desire, with his Cabinet, to be present, but the near approach of the session of Congress prevented it. Eloquent appeals were made, and arrangements were perfected to obtain subscriptions for the object named.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY.

D. R. Locke, "Petroleum V. Nasby," (Editor Toledo Blade,) writes:

I had on a foreigner of my right hand one of those peasant pets, a "run-round." The finger became inflamed to a degree unbearable, and swollen to nearly twice its natural size. A friend gave me HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE, and in twenty minutes the pain had so much subsided as to give me a fair night's rest, which I had not before had for a week. The inflammation left the finger in a day. I consider it a most valuable article for the household.

CURES THE PILES.

Edouard Reintard, of New York, writes: It gives me great pleasure to say that a single box of HENRY'S CARBOLIC SALVE effected a complete cure of Piles with which I had been troubled for over a year, and which nothing else that I used would cure.

Yale College, by defeating Princeton at foot-ball on Thanksgiving Day, has again secured the college championship.

A druggist in New Richmond, O., Mr. E. J. Dunham, writes us the following: "I consider Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup one of the very best things made. I use it altogether in my own family and can therefore recommend it.

Four tall men attracted much attention among the crowd of passengers in the Jersey City depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad on Saturday evening. Two of them were seven feet tall and broad in proportion, a third was about six feet eight inches, and the fourth, a boy, was a little over six feet. They are brothers of the Shields family, from Texas. The taller are twins, and are twenty-four years of age. The boy is eighteen years of age. They said their father was seven feet high, and that they had three brothers in Texas of that height.

The New York Sun Tuesday morning revived the familiar story of the alleged abduction, fifty years ago, of William Morgan by Freemasons. The article was written by Thurlow Weed, who was prominent in the Anti Masonic party, and who never doubted to the day of his death that Morgan had been murdered by Masons for revealing their secrets. Mr. Weed's main authority was the statement of one William Whitney, who died fifteen years ago, and who told Mr. Weed that he was one of the party of Freemasons who had drowned Morgan in the Niagara river. The statement has been published before, and the Sun's object in repeating the ancient scandal which was Mr. Weed's monomania for many years is not plain.

A WORD TO OUR READERS

WHEN YOU READ OF A MEDICINE THAT will cure all diseases, beware of it for every scientific physician or druggist knows how fallacious such statements are. But when you read of a medicine composed of well known and tried vegetable remedies that claims to cure only a certain disease, and furnishes high proof that it does this, you can safely believe it and well recommend it to your friends as it will cure you. Dr. V. R. Stone, late Physician and Surgeon of the U. S. A., has placed before the public a preparation called which no doubt is the greatest scientific preparation yet discovered for the cure of Dyspepsia in all its forms and refers to Ladies and Gentlemen of the highest respectability, that have been cured of cases from five to twenty years' standing, and pronounced incurable by the best physicians in the country.

The following references should be sufficient to convince the most skeptical:

SWEETHEARTS AND DAFFODILS.

From the Chicago Tribune.

"Let us sit here."

Brierton Villa is ablaze with light this Summer evening, while on the lawn that stretches away towards the heavy western gate there are little knots of merry young people, the Chinese lanterns with which the grounds are illuminated bringing into strong relief the pretty dresses of soft, white goods that the ladies wear, while the rustic seats scattered here and there over the velvety green of the lawn, lose much of their angularity and hardness of outline when seen in the dim half-light that pervades the place.

"Aren't you tired, Regy?" asked Gladys McMurtry, as she nestles easily in one corner of a great chair made of the gnarled branches of an old oak that after braving the storms of centuries, and losing its limbs in bold defiance of all the forces of nature, had been cut down at the mandate of a landscape gardener in order that the owner of Brierton Villa might have an unobstructed view of his broad domain as he sat in the conservatory of a Summer afternoon looking out upon a broad vista of meadow land, garden plat, and fields of yellow grain. Very pretty was the picture as Gladys sat there in the big oaken chair, her soft brown eyes looking doubly beautiful beneath the fluffy mass of golden hair that overhung them, while the tiny feet encroached in silk of finest texture that peeped out from beneath the peignoir dress was itself a poem.

"I am never tired," replied Reginald O'Rourke; "at least not when with you" and he pauses suddenly, as if afraid he had have said too much. But as he sits there, looking at Gladys with a wistful tender, I would call a battle for your thoughts, the girl cannot but feel that in with the love of this man is something of which any woman might be proud. And then, as Reginald sees himself beside her she takes her hand in his, the girls face is all one with blushes.

"You must know that I love you, darling" he says; "and can you not love me a little in return?"

But the blushes have fled from the pretty face now, and in their place is a look of haunting fear—a whole-hearted come-to-expression that fills Reginald with horror.

"What has happened," he asks leaning over her. "Is it possible that I have been mistaken, that you do not love me?"

For answer she pleads her arms about his neck, and as her face falls forward on his shoulder the girl breaks down in a storm of sobs. "God help me," she says, "I love you far too well."

"Then why are you weeping?" he asks, kissing away the tears as he speaks.

Looking up to him with the beautiful brown eyes in which the tear-drops are shining, she answers him slowly and with infinite pathos:

"Because I am sure to think how sorry you will be broke."—From "Sweethearts and Daffodils," by Marie Halstead.

EATING 100. BOLGER.—At a hotel in this city a couple from the country, of Mississippi extraction, took a seat at the dining table. Directly after a young couple seated themselves opposite, and the gentleman took a stalk of celery from the dish and commenced eating it. The old lady opposite looked at him a moment with an expression of disgust, and then, nudging her husband, said, in a stage whisper, "D'ye notice the blackguard eating the celery?"—Detroit Times.

A Kerlin street youngster returned from school one day, highly elated over the fact that he had been playing "tag" and had kissed several of the little girls. A member of the family asked if that was the first time he had ever kissed the girls.

He replied, "Yes, I didn't know they wanted it so bad."

His big brother was telling this "nothing" to his girl one evening, when she said: "Funny, isn't it, how children find out the truth."

He was half way home before his meaning became clear to him. He proceeded to kick himself twice around the square for his stupidity in not taking the hint.

"Judge, yet another very short inquiry. I would like to ask you a question," interrupted Gillmody to Judge Black, one of the most prominent lawyers of Austin. "What is it?" questioned the Judge. "Two twin sisters living in the same house have both of the same age, that look precisely alike, and are dressed alike. These two children get mixed up, and the question is, how will the mothers go at it to find out which child belongs to them?" "If the children were as much alike as you say, perhaps they were not mixed up at all." "But they were changed." "Are you sure of it?" "Certainly." "Then change them back, and each mother will have her own. Give me something harder."—Texas Siftings.

The extent to which race prejudice is sometimes foolishly carried is illustrated by a controversy which is agitating the public school in St. Louis. Two children of an educated lady who is of mixed French and Indian blood, have been turned out of the schools on account of the dark color of their skin. Their mother represents that she is obliged to appeal to the courts to open the doors of a school to her children, and although she succeeded, yet the prejudice of some of the pupils and their parents is so strong that it is expected the case will again receive judicial attention.

Mrs. Furman, Tiebbs, N. J., says: "I have used Brown's Iron Bitters and can highly recommend it as a strengthening medicine."

Fogg asserted the other evening that he knew of a woman who never appended a postscript to a letter. Everybody was astonished until he informed the company that the woman referred to didn't know how to write.

☞ Faded articles of all kinds restored to their original beauty by the Diamond Dyes. Perfect and simple. 10 cents, at all druggists.

A Paris dentist, formerly an American, has had his secretary imprisoned for three years for "stealing from him during the past ten years at the rate of $20,000 a year." Why he didn't discover the thief earlier is very strange. A secretary couldn't have stolen $20,000 a year from us more than five years at least, before we would have discovered the loss.—

WHAT ALEXANDER MIGHT HAVE DONE.

The late Czar of Russia was eminently a great man as his action in liberating thirty-six million serfs from slavery qualified him to be. Yet with all his greatness Alexander left it to Swayne to liberate the world from the annoyance and pain of sores of skin diseases, by producing Swayne's Ointment. Think of the tens, hundreds, thousands it has cured, and then remember it is economical, effective reliable, and pure, and if you will only try it you will have a cure.
