Debate on war policy continues

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Senate voted, 51 to 49, to pass the Tonkin Gulf resolution, writing a new chapter in the long and complex struggle over the Vietnam war. The resolution, passed after U.S. military units were sent into Vietnam, would enable the president to commit American armed forces to the conflict in any manner he deemed necessary.

The resolution was passed along party lines, 51 Democrats voting for it and 49 Republicans against it. It was the first time since World War II that the Senate had voted along party lines on a war issue.

Dear Helper:

We read with interest your reply to the inquiry about why the readers couldn't use the public phones. We, the readers, were certainly in evidence on a recent Sunday afternoon when we came across a man who was using a public phone to make a call from the Cities service. The man was sitting on a bench in the middle of the street, and it was a perfect place for the conversation to take place.

The conversation was rather loud, and it was audible to everyone passing by. The man was talking about some matters of personal concern, and it was quite clear that he was using the phone to express his views. In fact, he was so involved in his conversation that he didn't notice anyone around him.

We, the readers, were quite interested in the conversation, and we thought it would be nice if we could share it with your readers. We hope you will be able to use it in your next edition.

Sincerely,

DASH hopes are dashed

WASHINGTON (UPI) - DASH is in a sour mood the Navy, just as much today, Tuesday the publicist for DASH, a civilian maritime program, said the Navy was exploring ways to end production of DASH. DASH was launched and recovered from the Atlantic Ocean on December 13, 1970.

"DASH is just not working," said a spokesman for the Navy. "The program was supposed to be a success, but it's not. We're going to look at other options." The spokesman said the Navy was considering other projects, such as a new missile defense system.

DASH was a joint venture between the Navy and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA). The program was designed to test new technologies for sea-based defense against missile threats.

"We're disappointed," said a DARPA official. "We thought this program would be successful, but it's not working. We'll have to look at other options." The DARPA official said the agency was considering other programs, such as a new satellite-based defense system.

After $275 million in funding, DASH hopes are dashed. The program was launched in 1968 with the goal of testing new technologies for sea-based defense against missile threats. The program was a joint venture between the Navy and DARPA.

ANN LANDERS

Not living within income

Dear Ann Landers: What can a woman do with a husband who refuses to live within the family income? For 27 years he's told everyone, 'I am the sole provider, I need money for every little thing. I need money to buy groceries, and I can't buy anything with my own money.' The bills come every month but he never pays them off, he pays the smallest bills first. I have been helping him for years now. I have had to work to keep us alive. We have been married for 27 years and we have no children. My mother had been my best friend until she didn't want me to work any more. She said I was being greedy. What can I do? Mrs. J. B. F., Quakertown, Pa.

Dear Mrs. J. B. F.: While it is not healthy to work constantly, it is healthy for both you and your husband to enjoy a vacation once in a while. You might also consider a little more patience on your part. You have been married for 27 years and your husband has not changed in the last 27 years. Perhaps you need to take a little more time for yourself. The family income is not the only thing you need to worry about. You also need to think about your own health.

Dear Ann Landers: Four months ago my husband left me. He didn't even give me a divorce. I know he was seeing someone else. I heard him call her. What should I do? Mrs. M. B., Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mrs. M. B.: If you are sure that your husband is seeing someone else, you should call the police and ask for a restraining order. If you are not sure, you should still call the police and ask for a restraining order. This will protect you from any further harm. You should also consider seeking legal advice from a qualified attorney.

Dear Ann Landers: I am 65 years old and love to travel. I have done a lot of traveling with a group. My mother had a big house and when she died she left me the house. She said I could live in it as long as I wanted. But when we moved to a smaller place, I lost all of my money. I don't know what to do. Helen C. Drake

Dear Mr. J. H.: I am sorry to hear that you are feeling lonely. It is important to have friends and family to support you. You might consider joining a local group or club to meet new people. You could also consider seeking help from a qualified therapist or counselor.

NERVA's nuclear push is nearer

Atomic space propulsion is key to next decade

Jackson Platts, Nev. (AP) — The United States is moving ahead with the nuclear rocket program that was proposed for the 1970s and 1980s.

The nuclear rocket was one of the most advanced concepts in space travel. It used the energy of a nuclear reaction to produce thrust. The basic idea was to use a nuclear reactor to heat a gas, which would then be expanded through a nozzle to generate thrust.

The NERVA (Nuclear Engine for Rocket Applications) program was part of the U.S. nuclear rocket program. The rocket used a nuclear power system to generate thrust, which is estimated to be about 750 times more powerful than a chemical rocket.

The NERVA engine was planned to be used for missions beyond low Earth orbit, such as interplanetary travel. The engine was tested in the late 1960s and early 1970s, and the first stage of the NERVA rocket was later tested in 1973.

While NERVA was never put into full-scale production, its results were important for the development of nuclear propulsion technology. The program demonstrated the feasibility of using nuclear power for spaceflight, and its legacy lives on in ongoing efforts to develop nuclear space propulsion systems.

Investor's guide: 'Averaging’ works

By SAM HULZKY - The purchase of a stock at an apparently 'wrong' price, when the market moves over a short period, is a basic technique used by many investors. It is also known as 'averaging down' or 'buying stock at a discount'.

Averaging down:

1. Buying stock at a discount. This involves buying stock at a price lower than the previous day's close. The idea is to buy more stock at a lower price, which can help reduce the overall cost per share.

2. Dividing the cost. This technique is used when the investor is purchasing stocks and wants to spread the cost of the purchase over multiple months. By dividing the cost, the investor can buy more stock at a lower price and reduce the overall cost per share.

3. Holding the stock. This technique involves holding the stock for a longer period, which can help to reduce the impact of short-term market fluctuations. By holding the stock for a longer period, the investor can benefit from any long-term gains in the stock's price.

Averaging up:

1. Buying stock at a premium. This involves buying stock at a price higher than the previous day's close. The idea is to buy more stock at a higher price, which can help to increase the overall cost per share.

2. Dividing the cost. This technique is used when the investor is purchasing stocks and wants to spread the cost of the purchase over multiple months. By dividing the cost, the investor can buy more stock at a higher price and increase the overall cost per share.

3. Holding the stock. This technique involves holding the stock for a longer period, which can help to reduce the impact of short-term market fluctuations. By holding the stock for a longer period, the investor can benefit from any long-term gains in the stock's price.

How to use 'averaging' techniques:

1. Determine your investment goals. Before using 'averaging' techniques, you should determine your investment goals and decide whether you want to buy more stock at a lower price or a higher price.

2. Choose the right stocks. It is important to choose the right stocks for 'averaging' techniques. You should choose stocks that have a strong long-term outlook and are likely to perform well in the future.

3. Monitor market conditions. It is important to monitor market conditions and be prepared to adjust your strategy as needed. You should be prepared to 'averaging down' when the market is falling and 'averaging up' when the market is rising.

Example of 'averaging' techniques:

- Example 1: You buy 100 shares of ABC stock at $10 per share. The next day, the stock falls to $9 per share. You decide to buy another 100 shares at $9 per share. By doing this, you have 'averaged down' and your overall cost per share has decreased.

- Example 2: You buy 100 shares of XYZ stock at $50 per share. The next day, the stock rises to $55 per share. You decide to sell 100 shares at $55 per share. By doing this, you have 'averaged up' and your overall cost per share has increased.

Benefits of 'averaging' techniques:

- Cost savings. 'Averaging' techniques can help to reduce the overall cost per share, which can be especially beneficial for investors with limited resources.

- Risk reduction. 'Averaging' techniques can help to reduce the risk of losing money in a stock, especially if the stock's price falls.

- Long-term gains. 'Averaging' techniques can help to increase long-term gains in the stock's price, especially if the stock's price rises over time.

Risks of 'averaging' techniques:

- Market volatility. 'Averaging' techniques can be risky if the market is volatile and the stock's price fluctuates significantly.

- Market downturns. 'Averaging' techniques can be risky if the market is in a downturn and the stock's price continues to fall.

- Market topping. 'Averaging' techniques can be risky if the market is in a topping phase and the stock's price continues to rise.

Conclusion:

'Averaging' techniques can be a useful tool for investors, but they should be used with caution. It is important to choose the right stocks, monitor market conditions, and be prepared to adjust your strategy as needed.

Maybe they’ve learned

FORT LAUDERDALE (UPI) — Three Seminole Indian leaders drive a hard bargain that their brothers must use the courts to try to convince the U.S. government to pay them for 40 million acres of land taken 140 years ago.

They figure the land Gen. Andrew Jackson took away from them is worth more than $2 billion. A federal appeals court last week decided the Seminoles can continue their 55-year-old court battle, which started in 1835, to try to convince the government to pay them for the land taken during the Indian Removal Act of 1830.

At issue was discussed in a conference at Miami Beach along with the younger Indians in arguing the Tribal Council should decide, said Tribal Attorney Roy Stubble of Ft. Lauderdale.

"It doesn't want to pay them for the land taken during the Indian Removal Act of 1830. And many of the older Seminoles, fearful the government might change its mind, decided to appeal the offer of $12.3 million offer," Stubble said.

The Florida Seminoles are the late-twentieth-century descendants of the tribe that once dominated the Everglades and by the Indian Removal Act of 1830Effects of the Indian Removal Act of 1830. The Seminoles were forced to move from Florida to Oklahoma in what is now their third reservation along the Tamiami Trail. Another 3,500 live in Oklahoma. Only about 1,500 of the older Seminoles, fearful the government might change its mind, decided to appeal the offer of $12.3 million offer.

"And there's a renewed appeal for peace in Southeast Asia today. Pope Paul VI is expected to arrive in the Philippines and Australia in November to the peacemakers who have prior claim to the land," Stubble said.

"They (the Oklahoma Seminoles) don't want any money from their oil wells," Stubble said.

Consumer agency approved

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House subcommittee that approved legislation to create a new consumer agency in the government today.

The Senate Commerce Committee earlier this month a delegation of Florida Seminoles to Washington, D.C., to try to convince the government to pay them for the land taken during the Indian Removal Act of 1830. And many of the older Seminoles, fearful the government might change its mind, decided to appeal the offer of $12.3 million offer. They figure the land Gen.
