Political Poster On Town Property

Who nailed a political poster on a tree in front of the Town Hall on town owned property?

That is the question town officials would like to have answered. Fifty-five inch and a half roofing nails were used to attach the poster to the tree. Custodian Frank Pennell had a hard time removing the poster.

Placing such a poster on town owned property is against the law.

She also stated that it was not what we received, but how we used it, the local association will grow according to what they have and how they use this knowledge. Mrs.

Life In Mexico Described To PTA

Speaking before the Pine Grove Manor P.T.A., Monday evening, Mrs. J. J. Slade of Middlebush described food, and dress among the Mexicans as she had observed it when she visited there last year. She displayed various costumes which she had brought back with her.

She demonstrated the ways in which peasant women adapt their shawls to various uses. Exhibits include a money belt, horseman's coat and vest of suede and silver and hat of felt and gold. Meat is scarce among the Mexicans, Mrs. Slade said, when they have it it is used in soup. Beans form a large part of the diet as do mushrooms which grow up to three or four feet in width. Orchid bulbs are edible and frequently used. Meal is ground by hand grinding stone called a mateti and food is prepared among the peasants upon

Much N. J. Soil Saved Last Year

NEW BRUNSWICK — Hundreds of New Jersey farmers in the state's seven soil conservation districts are finding their production increased 20 per cent or more as a result of soil-saving measures.

So says Harry R. Slayback, extension soil conservationist at the College of Agriculture, Rutgers University. He bases his estimate on past records.

Reporting on some of the work done last year, Slayback reveals that 375,000 linear feet of terraces were built. Contour cultivation was established on 4,328 acres, and contour strip cropping on 1,611 acres. In the forestry phase of the program, 4,135 acres were reforested, and woodland harvest cuttings were completed on 1,306 acres under the direction of competent technicians.

The State University conservationist reports also that 154 fishponds built on farms were stocked with 383,219 fish. He notes that the ponds help protect farm buildings from fire, while the fish will eventually provide food and entertainment for farm families.

Many meetings, demonstrations, training schools, tours and other activities made up the educational part of the program. In addition, work progressed on the Soil Conservation Service project of mapping New Jersey land. These maps furnish guides for farming, showing how the land can best be used according to its capabilities. So far, 2,187,223 acres have been surveyed.

Stillwagon further stated that,

"holding an office or chairmanship in a PTA is a definite challenge to all, and we should fill this position to the best of our ability." She stressed the importance of having a procedure book, and suggested that each officer and chairman have one and pass it on to her successor. She also stated that in order for a local unit to function properly it was necessary for them to have by-laws approved by the State and National, and to follow through on these by-laws.

Mrs. Salmon presided over a brief business session and called on various chairmen for their report. Mrs. Charles McClure, President of the Past President's Club, and Field Commander of the American Cancer Society of Somerset County announced that the County Council scholarships this year would be awarded to a student from Somerville High school and to a student at Bound Brook high, to further their education.

Mrs. McClure said she would be glad to make arrangements for programs on health, show moving pictures and slides, and supply a speaker, arrange for exhibits of Conclusions of the Grand Jury regarding the Veterans Cooperative Housing Project may become known Tuesday, when the jury reports to Judge Arthur B. Smith. Expected indements of fraud and mis-application of funds will probably be reported at that time.

The Grand Jury ended its deliberations Wednesday afternoon after hearing evidence of witnesses presented by Assistant Prosecutor Leon Gerofsky.

The tangled affairs of the development have been under investigation since December, 1947, when it was placed into receivership by Chancery Court Judge Wilfred H. Jayne.

The receiver and his attorney took volumes of testimony from officials, contractors and others who participated in the cooperative.

Nine of the present veteran-homeowners, who settled their case in the Somerville District Court, March 17, are continuing to pay $61.50 per month as rental for their homes.

These veterans staged a rent strike from July to January in protest against the receiver's failure to make promised repairs to the prefabricated houses.

Ownership of the property was transferred on January 1 to the Franklin-Hamilton Homes, Inc., as the result of judicial confirmation of the sale of the property.

This Infant Industry
Flourishes in New Jersey

Beads are among the earliest ornaments on record. Their durability makes them a medium through which history can be traced, even back to times of which no written records exist. Cave women once decked themselves with strings of gay beads and explorers long used them for barter as they made their way into distant primitive places.

When the Second World War closed foreign markets, manufacturers began making plastic beads. Though it boasts but a half dozen years, this modern industry is expanding rapidly with shipments going to many countries. Here in New Jersey we have the world's largest manufacturer of colored beads. Electricity is used to heat the raw product, melting and softening and piercing it. Then it grinds, shapes and polishes the beads. Today's woman wears plastic beads with pride.

Twitchell, Bernards Township, Supervising Principal.

The P. M. Session opened with a talk by Dr. A. M. Bean, State PTA Education chairman and County Superintendent of schools in Camden County. Theme of his talk was "The Little Red School House." He stated that, "If we go along with each other much can be accomplished," also that the "Little one room school house" had plenty of good things to remember, but we want more and better schools for our children today. He further stated, "that much of our education today comes from parents by working with the children and for the children." Dr. Bean said that parents should have more respect for their children today and for their actions and manner of speaking to each other and the children. Children are mimics and they learn by observing and listening.

Dr. Bean further observed that "many good teachers cannot be engaged due to low salaries offered, thereby our children today are losing out in their education. He also brought out the lack of interest on the part of fathers in the PTA movement. "School education involves both mother and father, the school, and the home and the entire community," and he continued, "the children of today are far superior in their attainments than what they were 30 or 40 years ago, therefore, they need different kind of an education and manner of approach." In closing he said, "It is up to each individual here to see that the right educators are obtained to take care of the educating of the children in your communities, and when you do get the right teachers keep them." A question and answer period followed.

Mrs. Dennis Liles, was in charge of the program; reservations, Mrs. L. Drake and Mrs. Sayfarth; registration, Mrs. C. Aller. Benediction was given by Rev. E. B. Irish.

Oven Meals

Cooking a whole meal in the oven is a work-saving method that is popular with many busy women. The modern gas range equipped with thermostat temperature control makes this a simple and practical way of preparing meals. When planning the menu select the meat first, then choose a vegetable and dessert which will cook at the same temperature and in the same length of time. When planning oven meals there are a number of general rules to keep in mind:

1. Root vegetables (beets, parsnips, turnips or carrots) may be steamed in the oven by placing them in a tightly covered dish with 1/2" of water. Time of cooking may be shortened or lengthened by regulating size and shape of the vegetable. For instance, slice or dice the beets to be cooked in an hour and leave whole the beets to be cooked with a roast in two or three hours.
2. Do not prepare the quick-cooking green vegetables (peas, fresh lima beans, asparagus, etc.) in the oven since the slower cooking destroys their color, flavor and some of the nutritive values. They may be used as leftovers, however, in scalloped dishes or casseroles.
3. Utilize the full capacity of the oven but be sure that foods to be steamed such as meat, vegetables and fruits are placed on the lower rack and cakes, puddings or breads, which are to be browned, are on the top rack.
4. Do be sure that all your casseroles and utensils fit in the oven without touching the sides or each other. Free circulation of heat is a must for oven cookery.
5. If the dishes in your meal bake for different lengths of time, plan to put each dish into the oven so that all will come out together.

YOUR SCHOOLS VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE

By Carleton M. Saunders
Vocational guidance is guidance which aids one in making a wise selection of a career. Too many high school and college graduates in the past have lacked this assistance. In the author's class, for example, there were one-half of the college graduates who did not know what they wanted to do for a living. They had taken the academic course with no set goal other than to obtain a degree and a liberal arts education. The high school and college students who have been given some vocational guidance at least know what they are interested in, jobs for which they have an aptitude, and what kinds of jobs there are in the world.

It is necessary to be interested in one's work to achieve real success in that job. By means of various tests students are made aware of their vocational interests. One student may be interested in things mechanical. He may enjoy tinkering with machinery. Another may be interested in mathematics while a third may be engrossed in languages. When a vocational counselor knows a student's interests, he can suggest certain jobs or careers for that student in keeping with his interests. Of course the student must have an aptitude for those jobs which are suggested. It would be foolish for a boy to study medicine if he fainted each time he saw blood or if he could not stand the smell of ether.

Tests have been developed by which students' aptitudes are revealed. Those tests include mechanics, mathematics, languages, mentality, and tests for secretaries. Aptitude tests cannot with finality determine the specific job a person ought to engage in but it can tell whether or not he has the ability to succeed in general areas of work. For example, a boy who rates high in mechanical aptitude may not be successful in making speedometers for cars but he might be a success in an automobile body garage where he straightens fenders or where he welds car parts.

Tells Opportunities Open

Having discovered the student's interests and aptitudes, the guidance counselor then proceeds to inform the student of various jobs in the community which may be available to him. If none of these appeal to him he is then informed of other jobs in various sections of the country. Since there are over 25,000 different types of jobs, a selection of suitable positions must be made by the counselor. Textbooks are available by which students become informed concerning jobs as well as problems of orientation, methods of study, health, educational choices, friendship, courtesy, use of leisure, character development, and community life - all assist the student to understand what is important in and on the job. The newspaper, central organizations which make occupational studies and summaries, bureaus of occupational research, workers, fictional books about jobs the radio, visual aids, and vocational conferences are other means by which the student comes to understand some of the various jobs for which he may be suited and educated. Those students who

STRICTLY A NEWSENSE: If Mickey Rooney returns to England this summer he'll have a partner in the act, a fellow named Joe Yule. (Yop, it's Pop!) On the other hand, health and mood permitting, England may send a distinguished visitor -- George Bernard Shaw -- Bing Crosby's correspondence with close friends is about as informal as his clothes. He writes notes on the back of gin rummy score sheets -- Jean Sablon who provides a delightful evening at Nick & Arnold's Versailles in New York, confesses he learned his style of crooning by listening to Bing Crosby records in Paris. Of all the imported name-entertainers, Sablon is my personal preference. His diction is so perfect I can almost understand what he's singing about -- Olivia de Havilland contributes this honey for our sign collection, spotted on the front lawn of a Beverly Hills bungalow: "For Sale. Any Reasonable Offer Will Be Rejected."

STRICTLY STAGGERING: Ralph Horgan, the auto dealer, is tinkering with a terrific publicity idea -- staging a One Cent Sale of Cars -- in brief, offering a limited number of used car buyers a real old job for an additional penny. A shoe chain is testing out how much easier their new shoes absorb the shocks of people who are in their feet a lot, by having scores of mailmen, waiters, policemen, etc., wear them for actual observation -- Bob Christenberry, Hotel Astor's major domo, enlisted the cooperation of editors of school and college publications, in a Metropolitan-wide scholastic and collegiate poll, to determine which bands students prefer to play his famous Astor Roof during the coming season. "Death of a Salesman" is doing more to humanize big businessmen than all the preachings in the world. It's more than just a perfect play -- it's a poignant lesson from the pulpit of life -- The vocal group, Ili, Lo, Jack and the Dame, have a new gimmick that's custom-tailored to the times. They inaugurated the idea at the Raleigh Room -- doubling as a musical group between vocals. Makes the act one of the best intimate room entertainment buys in the business -- Gene Austin, who made "My Blue Heaven" one of the most famous songs of our generation, is back in action and already up in the four-figure per week salary bracket -- YAK-YAK DEPARTMENT: Milton Berle looks ten years younger. Success lifted his face -- At Leon and Eddies celebrity night shindig in honor of Singapore's Tommy Chen last Sunday night, to make the tribute complete, Eddie Davis personally cooked a dish of dynamite for Tommy -- Arthur Murray, whose 3000 dance instructors just picked Mayor O'Dwyer as one of the ten best dancers in America, didn't name the dance that won the title. But we presume it's a soft-shoe specialty known as the Wire Tap -- Usually alert photographers missed a classic shot when N. Y.'s Police Commissioner O'Brien supervised the destruction of more than 2500 pinball machines. As the top cop slashed a hatchet on one machine, a red light flashed on and screamed: "Tilt!"

A chain of theatres soon will announce a new innovation -- air Clare Hoffman read a letter in Congress last week asking whether he's a widow, spinster, or a happily married woman -- In case Dr. Kinsey is interested -- the Government Printing Office has just published a new pamphlet. It's titled: "Instructions on the Sex of Watermelons" --
