METUCHEN — In the third year of Minimum Basic Skills testing, a high percentage of Metuchen students performed at or above state standards at all grade levels tested.

The tests sample student achievement at four grade levels in word recognition, comprehension and study skills on the reading test, and computation, number concepts, measurement and geometry, problem solving and applications in math.

Of 126 third-graders, 100 percent met standards in reading; 98.4 percent in math. In the sixth grade, of 147 students tested, 89.1 percent met standards in reading; 85.5 percent met standards in math.

At the secondary level, 89.1 percent of 183 ninth-graders met standards in reading and 92.3 percent succeeded in math, while 93.7 percent of 190 11th-graders met standards in reading and 91.5 percent did so in math.

In addition, a significantly greater percentage of district students scored in the higher performance ranges this year than in past years. Major improvements were in the third-grade math at Campbell School and sixth-grade math at the Franklin Middle School.

Analysis of group scores will be done to assist the district in planning program improvement. The individual student roster is used to identify students who have scored below statewide standards and may be deficient in basic skill areas.

It is the district's responsibility to verify that students' performance on this test accurately reflects their competencies. Other standardized test scores as well as classroom performance are reviewed to help select students who are in need of remediation.

Scores for all students will be shared in the fall with parents, together with results of the local testing program.

louise saul / Bad dreams

I dreamed I wanted to know how much money I was offering my local police, teachers and municipal employees. It turned out to be a nightmare.

"How are the negotiations going?" I asked my friendly school board negotiator.

"We agreed not to talk about it," he smiled paternally.

"Is it true teachers want a union shop?" I pushed.

"You'll never get any information from me," he said. "I'm a man of honor. I'm ethical."

"That's commendable," I told him. (God forbid I should sound unethical.)

I tried Martha, my dear, old friend. "Why are you teachers angry?" I asked. "What are we offering you? How much money do you want?"

"You're presuming on our friendship," she said.

"That's right, I am," I admitted. "But it's just that I want to get a handle on the raise we taxpayers are offering. And I want to know if we're giving you a fair deal."

"Tell you what," she said. "I can't discuss negotiations or money but I've got this perfectly great recipe I'm willing to let you have."

"I don't want your recipe," I said. "I want to know where my money is going, how much of it will be left, if I'll be able to take a vacation and whether to start a job action of my own. Why are negotiations breaking down? How much money is involved?"

"To tell the truth," she said, "I don't know. But I wouldn't tell if I did."

"What do you mean, you don't know. You've already participated in a sickout."

"We were showing solidarity," she explained.

"Wow," I said. "That's awful. You take a job action and don't know what it's for. And it's my money and I don't know what we're offering you. I don't even know whether to be angry or sympathetic. I don't know whether you're trying to rob me blind or just asking for a reasonable increase."

"You don't have to know," she said. "It's not pertinent to the situation."

"The hell it isn't," I said. "It's my money." (I get very assertive in dreams.)

There was nothing to do but leave the teachers and head for my representative on the municipal team negotiating with the PBA.

"What do our police officers want this year?" I asked.

"I can't tell," he said. "I promised."

"You mean you won't tell me how much of my money you're willing to give away?"

"That's a quaint way to put it," he smiled. "It may be quaint, but it's true."

"This is too sensitive to discuss..."

"I heard a rumor that the PBA is asking that its members get three new holidays — birthdays, anniversaries and the hottest day of the year."

"You left out Frank Serpico Day," he said.

"If they get three more holidays," I said, letting him know I was in no mood for jokes, "I suppose other municipal employees will get them too — including you."

"Since I'm a municipal employee, I would say that's accurate," he agreed.

"I don't like that," I said. "You're on the taxpayer's team — that's my team. And you're negotiating for things that you're going to get yourself in the end. Isn't there something wrong with that?"

"No, because I'm honest."

"I'm so happy to hear that," I gushed. (Even in dreams you can't step completely out of character.)

Still, things went rapidly down hill. The street in front of my house was clogged with cars as police officers staged a slowdown. My neighbor's children, forced to stay home because of the teachers' sickout, were tearing up the front lawn. Municipal employees were holding a solidarity march in my living room.

I hopped on my bike and begged the police not to ticket me so I could go to the bank. I wanted to get some money to give to the negotiating teams, to end the job actions.

Thank God, I woke up.

Backyard Gardener

Tomato is the favorite

by Patrick Denton

The tomato is the most popular garden vegetable in North America. No other vegetable crop produces as great a dollar value per square foot of garden space.

A single, robust hybrid vine will take up to six square feet of space and can produce 30 pounds of tomatoes.

With a few tricks, you can be harvesting tomatoes before the season's peak, when tomatoes are still fetching high prices in the market.

First, choose early hybrid varieties. They will produce earlier, and given adequate moisture and a good mulch, will continue producing fruits until frost in cold season areas.

Another tip is to transplant very small tomato seedlings into the garden. The plants should have no more than six leaves.

Set them in early, just after the average date of the last frost, but protect them with bottomless plastic jars. The little plants will begin establishing a large and efficient root system while the weather is still cool.

Once the weather warms, they will quickly put forth sets of blossoms for early fruit.

In long-season areas, a later variety of tomato can be transplanted into the garden at the same time, for a second crop.

Another key element in getting maximum value from your tomato plants is finding ways to keep them producing as long as possible.

One trick is to lay a mulch around the plants once the soil is warm. The mulch will help retain soil moisture and warmth to keep the tomatoes happier longer.

Look for ways to protect the plants from cool weather. Some home gardeners give their whole tomato patch a plastic blanket each night when the temperatures begin to drop. This works especially well if the tomatoes have been grown in cages. Each cage simply receives its plastic drapery late each afternoon.

With the threat of frost, bring remaining tomatoes indoors to ripen.

Two win top awards

Louise Saul, associate editor of the Sentinel Newspapers, and Carol Chen, valedictorian of Cedar Ridge High School in Old Bridge, were honored Saturday with first-place awards in the annual National Federation of Press Women writing competition. The awards were presented at the NFPW convention in Des Moines, Iowa.

Mrs. Saul's article, "Bereaved Parents Find A Lifeline," took first place in the feature category. Earlier this month, it took first place in a contest sponsored by the New Jersey Federation of Press Women. All first-place state winners compete for the national award.

Miss Chen won the NFPW high school editorial contest with an editorial on the draft: "What is the price of honor?" She plans to enter Harvard in the fall and eventually hopes to become a physician.

Mrs. Saul is a former teacher who has been with the Sentinel Newspapers since 1962. She holds a bachelor's degree from Wagner College and a master's degree from Columbia University.

Earlier this year, she took second place in the editorial category of a national contest sponsored by the Suburban Newspapers of America. In addition, she received two other first-place awards from the NJFPW, in the column and interview divisions.

In 1977, Mrs. Saul garnered two national awards from NFPW. In the same year, she won first place from the New Jersey chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, a national journalism honor society, for a series on commuters.

During her years at the Sentinel Newspapers, Mrs. Saul has also received more than a dozen awards from the New Jersey Press Association for both her column and feature stories.

She and her husband, Edwin, live in East Brunswick and are the parents of two daughters, April, 25, and Amy, 21.

Fellowship established

The graduate schools of Rutgers and Princeton universities have announced the establishment of the David A. Morse Dissertation Fellowship in the social sciences in honor of the man who served as director-general of the International Labour Organization from 1948 to 1970.

The fellowship, to be offered each year, will provide a $5,000 stipend plus tuition for a graduate student at either university who wishes to make use of the Morse Collection in conducting research for his or her dissertation. Morse's papers, spanning the years 1900-1973, are housed at the Seeley G. Mudd Manuscript Library of Princeton University.

Deadline for applications for the academic year 1981-82 is March 1, 1981.

Morse, who served as assistant secretary, undersecretary and acting U.S. secretary of labor between 1946 and 1948, is now a partner in the law firm of Surrey and Morse, with offices in New York City, Washington, D.C., Paris, London and Jeddah, Saudi Arabia.

He has served as a Rutgers University trustee and a member of the Board of Overseers of the Rutgers University Foundation.

The recipient of numerous awards, including a special commemorative gold medal from UNESCO, he accepted the Nobel Peace Prize on behalf of the International Labour Organization in 1969.
