A CHRISTMAS CAROL. The moon came out, and crowned the bills With holy calm; The stars flashed down on silver rills And groves of palm; While tranquil at the day's surcease, Blest Bethlehem slept, a thing of peace.

Even damb Nature's pulses thrilled With tender awe, As if she felt, thus hushed and stilled, More than she saw; And 'neath the starlight bent her knee, In reverent, glad expectancy.

Down on the plain, in peaceful wise, The white flocks slept, While shepherds, 'neath the crystal skles, Their vigils kept; And midnight's awe and silence fell Upon their souls in this lone delt.

And then-a glory from the place Where angels kneel; The light, it seemed, of God's own face, And swift did steal The luster from the shining stars, And chained the moonlight's shimmering bars. Then God's bright messenger came down, With princely mien; And happy face outshown his crown

While by the gracious words he said, He raised each shepherd's drooping head. Fear not! for lo, I tidings bring, Of greatest joy; Whose music through the world shall ring. Without alloy: I bear you news of priceless worth, Of Christ, the King, come down to earth

And raiment's sheen;

Then suddenly the sky grow bright With angel-eyes: Their earol stirred the pulse of night In tender wise: And echoed o'er the slumbering land, All loving, rev'rent, jubilant, grand! "Glory to God! to sinful man,

The light died out; the earth again Grew dim and still, The angels left the starry dome, And Christ lay born in earthly home. O Lord come down to us to-night, Give us that grace, O grant one glimpse of th' shepherds' sight-
