Woman's Triumph

A Severe Surgical Operation. It is Endured without taking Ether.
Subject—Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rensselaer, N. Y.

From the Correspondence of the Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman.
The Case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rensselaer, N. Y., furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Dyspepsia of the stomach, without success. Not until her husband had become a mass of putrid flesh did she turn to Dr.
Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the stomach, and that she must be prepared to undergo a severe surgical operation. She declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and re-joices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle.

THE SUNSHINE NEVER FAILED US YET.

Upon the sadness of the sea
The sunset broods regretfully;
From the far, lonely spaces, where Withdraws the wistful afterglow.

So out of life the splendor dies;
So darkens all the happy skies;
So gathers twilight, cold and stern,
But overhells the planets burn.

And up the east another day Shall chase the bitter dark away;
What though our eyes with tears be wet,
The sunrise never failed us yet.

The blush of dawn may yet restore
Our light and hope and joy once more.
Sad soul, take comfort, ne'er forget
That sunrise never failed us yet.

VIOLET'S WAGER.
"Done?" interrogated Doctor Franks, with an amused smile.
"Done," replied his companion, placing her hand laughingly in his.

"It is foolish wagers on my part, Violet," concluded the Doctor, kissing her hand with eager tenderness; "for I, above all people, know there is something about that no one can resist."

"You surely are joking, John? I cannot believe it! You would not, without first consulting me, go and propose off-hand to a girl I have never seen, know nothing about, and whom you yourself never saw until a few months ago? And," continued Miss Franks, without giving her brother a chance of replying, "to think of you beginning to talk of love and marriage, and all that sort of rubbish, when you will be thirty-six on your very next birthday!"

"You ought to know better,"
"My dear Emily," began John.
"Don't dear Emily! me, sir?" interrupted Miss Franks.
"I can't be very dear to you when you when, after keeping your house for more than twelve years, you treat me in such a manner. However I have no doubt Miss What-her-name will attend to the messages, study economy, and have your interests more at heart than I, who am only your sister, have had."

"I told you I had proposed, Emily; but you interrupted me before I knew whether I had been accepted or not."
"Accepted or not! indeed?" said Miss Franks sarcastically. "Of course you're accepted—snapped at. Do you think I give so little of my own sex as to know them credit for being the charming gossamer creatures they would have you simper them to be? No, John; I remember when you were a baby and I was a good-looking—yes, I repeat it, a good-looking—frank, outspoken girl of twenty, drawing my own conclusions as to the artistic proprieties of my companions, and the pitiable credulity of the men they tried to ensnare."

"Well," remarked John, "I am sure that you know my future wife, and you believe that I have chosen for my own happiness, and, believing that, I know you too well to think that she would not be satisfied with your hands. And of one thing be lieve me, I shall never forget your unselfishness, your patient striving for my welfare, your ever-ready sympathy and loving care."

"Don't talk like that, John," said Miss Franks tearfully, and taking his face between her hands she kissed him impulsively and hurried from the room.

Doctor Franks sat down in rather a disturbed frame of mind. He loved and respected his sister, and was grateful to her; she had kept house for him since he had been in practice, studying his comfort in every way; and he was really sorry that she should feel herself personally slighted at the first mention of his approaching marriage. No idea of marriage had entered the Doctor's head until quite lately, when he had fallen desperately in love with the niece of a new patient of his; but he had thought it better to be assured that his love was reciprocated before taking his sister into his confidence.

At dinner Miss Franks was evidently determined, by an extra display of dignity and ceremony, to efface all remembrance of her previous weakness; but, after a time, her womanly curiosity overcame all other feelings.

"Pray, John, what is this child's name?"
"What child? Oh, I beg pardon! You mean Miss Lloyd—Violet Lloyd."
"Did you say she was seventeen?"
"No," replied the Doctor, smiling; "she is twenty-three."

"Oh, no matter! It is very nearly the same thing—she is quite young enough to make ducks and drakes of your money before you've earned it!"

"Emily," said the Doctor more sternly than he had yet spoken, "I hardly think it fair, and certainly very unlike your sister, to form an opinion of a person you have never seen. I am the more hurt at your prejudging Violet, as I had hoped you would remain with us to help her in the management of the house. Of course we cannot expect a child like her to know anything of such uninteresting things as other feelings."

"No, John, thank you all the same," answered Miss Franks in a mollified tone, without noticing the quizzical twinkle in the Doctor's eyes; "such an arrangement would be far from pleasant to me or to my future wife. I shall take lodgings near at hand, so as to be of use to you should you want me."

"I am afraid Violet will be disappointed.
She had quite settled that you would retain your own rooms, joining us only when you liked."

"I am much obliged to her," replied Miss Franks stiffly, "but you know I never get on well with young people."
"At any rate, do me one favor; don't make any arrangements until you have seen her."

"I suppose that means that you wish me to call upon her very soon? When is the wedding to take place?"
"We have not yet decided; but not before the autumn."

THE CHICAGO NOMINEES.

We had hoped to be able to announce the names of the candidates to be nominated at Chicago in this issue. But in an important respect the delay in making the nominations is valuable. On last Tuesday the excitement between the friends of the principal candidates was so great as to threaten a bolt in the Convention, and a consequent disruption in the party. Grant's friends insisted upon what is called the unit rule—namely, when a State Convention instructs its delegates to vote as a unit, a majority of the delegates from that State speak for the whole number of delegates and thus the minority in such delegate are made to vote for a candidate to whom they are opposed.

Had this delay been compelled the Grant men to yield to the views of those opposed to them and whoever secures the nomination will get it because a majority of the whole Convention, consisting of individuals, each representing a State, will vote for it. Without this yielding Grant could not have been elected if nominated. The demand of an enforcement of the unit rule was in itself so unfair as a popular principle that Grant's friends have lost ground by favoring it. They retired from the position not because it was an unjust one but because they had to surrender to overwhelming numbers. Their surrender will hurt them even more than their original position.

Blaine's friends are confident and like himself coming over with much and more. So far in their tactics they have made no mistake. The drift of the Convention seems to be in their favor.

The contest between Grant and Blaine is so close it is very clear if either's friends feel sure he cannot get the nomination they will do everything they can to defeat the other. If Grant's friends can't nominate him, their next wish will be to defeat Blaine and vice versa.

In our opinion the best course is to assume no Southern State will be Republican next fall. With laws passed which have lost in 1876, the Republicans carried but two and there is doubt as to these. Now, with all protective laws removed they will not carry any. The candidate therefore required is one who will carry a solid North. Blaine and Washburn, Edmunds and Washburn, Sherman and Washburn, or substituting Garfield for any one of the above and success is sure.

IS OUR NEW CITY GOVERNMENT A FAILURE?

Is there any intention on the part of the Democratic majority in our city Council to make an endeavor to readjust our city debt? So far, not the first move has been made in that direction. Can an agreement be made with creditors by which the city can keep its debt in hand, property is utterly valueless, no one dares to purchase because of the fear of an immediate future tax increase upon it. People will not even rent because of the general ruin upon the city's financial reputation. All other questions sink into insignificance compared with this overwhelming one of readjusting our debt. Yet the Council has been in power over a month, and during all that time has ignored this question. Its chief concern has been to keep over and repeat of the passage of a new ordinance intended to restrict the number of liquor saloons everywhere within the limits of decency. This entire indifference to vital questions and entire absorption in devotion to the ruin vote show that the frame mind as the man exhibited who left his friends to starve in a garret while he went to a country to wile away a few days.

By the way, when the Mayor vetoes a bill it is not to be allowed no consideration of it, but only the right to vote upon it. At the last meeting a veto was received from him. Petitions from numerous citizens asking the Council to pass the bill, were not taken up, were not permitted to be read nor was any discussion allowed upon the question. This action was disgraceful. No member of Council who refused to receive and listen to respectful petitions of his constituents, and to his office. In every legislative body not only are petitions entitled to be read but the fullest attention is always allowed upon the main question—shall the bill become a law without the veto. This the Council has refused to do. The Council has refused to receive and listen to respectful petitions of his constituents, and to his office. In every legislative body not only are petitions entitled to be read but the fullest attention is always allowed upon the main question—shall the bill become a law without the veto. This the Council has refused to do.

The beauty of the day they crowded our citizens to the cemetery where the principal services were held. The whole program was carried through, and so smoothly and successfully as to give additional impressiveness to the occasion. When everything was well done it would be too much to say that the services were not a success, yet we are sure no participant in the services will object to our saying that much of the charm of both the Sunday and the cemetery service was due to the choir under the direction of Mr. J. H. Hays.

We are glad to witness the growing interest felt in all parts of the country in the observance of Decoration Day. The effect of this commemorating the patriotism of our soldiers cannot be overestimated but the fact that such slight wounds as Cadet Whitaker received could be made to feel in the show of authority and in such conditions as to merit a passing notice. The singular effort of that well-known speaker, Charles F. Smith, the trip and speaking probably made a fine addition to the occasion.

Whoever may be nominated at Chicago to-day or to-morrow, the proceedings of the convention have already shown that the Republican party, which dominated the first successful candidate for President in the world will be exhausted in military struggle, and that the building will not be reached before Saturday.

Never within our recollection has a political convention occurred where the issue has been so intense and the determination of the followers of the several candidates so resolute as in the one now in session at Chicago. The reason is obvious. For the first time in the history of the Republican party—no might say in the history of either party—has there been a deliberate attempt to force a candidate on the party against its expressed will. It was the unexcused existence of this purpose on the part of Grant's principal supporters that caused the excitement of the preliminary canvass, and which has now at Chicago united the friends of all other candidates in a league to defeat that dog.

Thus far the opponents of a third term have been successful in all the preliminaries to the final struggle. They have obtained control of the Convention and with that all which Cameron and Conkling hoped to secure for Grant, but lost through inability to secure a majority uniformly to their purpose. And it is well for those powerful leaders no less than for the Republican party that it has been so, for had the tactics adopted by Cameron as Chairman of the Republican Committee at its first session been adhered to, they must have resulted in a conflict which would have caused a split in the Convention and probably would have so divided the party as to render the election of any candidate who might have been selected an impossibility.

As matters now stand a full and free expression of the popular will is secured. The delegates chosen by the people of the districts will be protected in voting as directed by their constituents; no man however influential, will be allowed to control the vote of another, nor will the majority of a delegation be permitted to vote as a unit. The candidate of a minority. The one man power has been broken; there will be fair play at Chicago, and in securing this the opponents of Grant have gained a victory which will do much towards ensuring a Republican success in November. Should General Grant, after all, become the candidate of the party, it will be possible for those who now oppose his nomination, to support him by their votes without loss of self-respect or sacrifice of consistency, a thing they could not have done had his nomination been secured by the methods employed by the three Senators who have managed his cause.

Republicans may well congratulate themselves on what has thus far been secured. Whoever now obtains the nomination can do so only through the free, unobstructed action of the delegates to the convention, and when this fairly chosen the candidate selected will receive, as he will deserve, the cordial support of the entire party. We believe that the opposition to Grant has found its chief support and all bitterness in an intense dislike to the arbitrary and despotic measures adopted to secure his nomination. With the defeat of those measures the bitterness will pass away. Grant seems to us unlikely to secure the nomination; but should he do so the present success of his opponents, in securing a fair expression of the will of the Convention, will give him a strength before the people he could not otherwise have had and render his election possible.

As a party, Republicans believe in democracy to the will of the people. They are opposed to the tortuous and unscrupulous methods of some politicians. They are self-respecting and possessing an unerring conception of their rights; they will not consent to surrender them even though their assertion might cause temporary disaster to the party with which they act, but to which they are bound by duty and duty they do not belong. We therefore regard what has been already secured at Chicago, in the impartial organization of the Convention, the recognition of the right of the voters to designate their own delegates and the defeat of the unit rule as a victory of the Republican principle secured in important only to the election of a Republican President. In November, a result it will go far towards ensuring.

DECORATION DAY.

The services announced for Decoration Day, under the direction of Barry Post, G. A. R., were fully carried out. The preliminary Sunday service in the Opera House, a prominent feature in the future observance of the day. Six of our churches gave up their regular evening services to unite in honoring the memory of the men who laid down their lives for the country. Long before the time fixed for the services, the Opera House was filled to its utmost capacity, and numbers went away unable to find standing room.

Monday morning dawned clear, bright and beautiful. The rains of two preceding days had laid the dust and cooled the atmosphere, just what was wanted to reunite and comforted to favor the grand and affecting ceremonies of the day, which were carried out in a manner reflecting great credit on the Past and its Commander, Mr. C. H. Miller, to whose energy and perseverance much of the success of the occasion was due.

The beauty of the day drew crowds of our citizens to the cemetery where the principal services were held. The whole program was carried through, and so smoothly and successfully as to give additional impressiveness to the occasion.
