THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

This having been the week for closing the schools of this city for the summer, the subject of education has naturally been in the ascendant with hundreds of parents and scholars, whose interest has been shown by large attendance at the closing exercises of the schools. This general interest we are glid to record, for the efficient and liberal support of our public schools is of the first importance.

In a country such as this, where all power more valuable to the community of which they form a portion. No parent in this age and country can afford to let the intellect of his children go untrained nor their minds remain unstored; the most irrational economy ever practiced by a community is one which abridges the educational advantages supplied to its youth.

The present condition of the public schools of Rahway, taking all things into consideration, is tolerably satisfactory. The teachers, without exception, we believe, are faithful and efficient, and are generally esteemed by their pupils. The painful divisions and bickerings, which existed a few years ago, hava@entirely disappeared, and the work of the year has been performed in a spirit of generous cooperation.

A STORT ABOUT ZACH CHANDLER.—At one time, while the High Joints were in session, a rupture on some points in diplomacy was very likely to take place. and the whole thing prove a flat failure.

Mr. Fish was in a wonderful state of excitement about the matter, because it was his personal ox that was to be gored by any mishap. The English representatives had received orders not to yield the point in disbute, and if they could not obtain the concession, to come home. This ominous word came direct from her Royal Highness tile Queen, and the British diplomats lost no time in communicating that fact to the Representative of Risker. Becretary of State.

In his sore dilemma he invited the President and Cabinet to discuss the problem over a dinner plate at his house that eve uing, and all were on hand. It was, of course, the general opinion that our gov-ernment must insist on the point, but how to do so in a diplomatic way was the question. At last Mr. Fish suggested that Zaci Chandler, then in the Benate, be called in as consulting physician; and, there being an evening session, the stalwart Michigan-der was soon driven to the couclave in Mr.

Fish's carriage,
"Well, what's the matter now!" demanded old Zachariah.

Mr. Fish proceeded to unfold the dilemma in his polished phraseology, making the whole question clear to Mr. Chandler's mind, "Now Benator, what would you suggest? What shall we dot" The Benator brought down his cane on the floor and said: Do about it? Why, tell the old lady to go to the devil! You can put it in betdiplomatic language; but that's the Boys,-The original noise producer and nerve destroyer of the time. And yet in themselves a most interesting study. For instance:

The best boy—every mother owns him, every father is proud of him, and yet it takes a great deal of the "corrective" to make him at his best.

The worst boy—belongs to the next door neighbor every time, and is the hatefulest, stupidest boy that ever stole a schoolmate's dinner or drowned your little girl's pet kit-

The funny boy— is always cutting up some trick to bring a laugh. He turns himself inside out, and if he makes a hit he keeps at it until he winds up his career in a circus ring, retailing thousand and one year The saucy boy-calls his mother a" squint oyed logarithm," invents astonishing nick-names for all the cranky people in the neigh-borhood, and with his hands in his pockets stants on the strott corners and yelps his "asse" right in the face and oyls of every-body-yet he never seems to reap his roward.
The scholarly how-norms over school

The scholarly boy-pores over school books when he ought to be out playing balt. He corrects his mother's grammar, improves the style of his father's conversation, and the style of his father's conversation, and with an air of superiority kindly allows his parents to exist under the same roof with him, and be proud of his attainments.

The tough boy—reads dime povels, smokes a clay pipe, frequents the "nigger heaven" in theatres, steals from the apple stants on the corners, is up nights, goes home in a beastly state of intextention by the time he is fourteen; and at twenty stands of the corner in checked pant, "loud" wister, plug hat and a low necked ahirt, a llying picture of dissipation. Boys, dent think it "smart" to be tough.

The newsboy—take one whist of him as he stands attreen dreep waiting to buy his papers. The world over, the newsboy carries a distinctive odor, recking with tobacco amoko, opion soup, and the result of a changeless shirt. But he can give an intelligent answer to any question you ask him, and he is the longest distance from a fool of any of the boys. He eats great quantities of lasty and delights in "giving it away,"
