termination, as she took a step or two nearer, and looked him squarely in the eyes. The defiant speaker was an old, malic ious-looking Indian named Nushbawun. She was the last of her tribe who remained in the neighborhood of Milford. Indeed. there were not a hundled of her race to be found in the whole State of N---- and she herself was not even half civilized. She bore an uncanny reputation. Those who scorned to own themselves weak enough to believe in witchcraft or diabolism, said she was a thievish, hypocritical old squaw; others, less strong-minded feared her, and tried to propitiate her; not that they really believed she was a witch, or had the "evil eye" -if their own state ments might be trusted. So what with her herb medicines for the sick, whether man or beast; her wellmade baskets, her charms and philtres sold on the sly to credulous lovers, and her prophecies of future events for the believ-
