(Continued from 1st page.) The Melbourne Cup, which is to the Australians what the Derby is to Englishmen, always attracts an immense concourse of people from all parts of the Australian continent. The rough element is conspicuous by its absence, as the police look after them strictly. That class of persons commonly called "roughs" in America are known throughout Australia as f'larrikins," a term more expressive than euphonlous. It is this class, as a rule, which gives so many subjects for police te. ports in the Melbourne newspapers. Melbourne journalism is very tair on We Mean Cured, Not Merely Relieved the whole, though occasionally rather equal. The principal daily papers are the "Argus," the "Times," the "Age," Daily Telegraph," and "Herald." The first of these is a first-class paper in every way, containing thoroughly well-written articles, and all the latest news. The other papers call for no special mention with the exception of the "Herald," a penny evening paper which is famous for circulating extraordinary rumors one evening and contra dicting them the next. At the same time, however, it occupies a very high place among colonial newspapers, and the little falling above mentioned is not entirely unknown among certain of our American fournals. One word in conclusion as to the scenery of Melbourne. There is no use disguising it: Melbourne, that is the country round it, is not pretty.

Matthew Hale Smith was writing letters to the Journal over the signature of "Burleigh." Smith wrote a detestable hand, and Charles O. Rogers, who was then making the Journal jump with his activity, enterprise and liberality, was very nearly his match in this particular. One day a compositor camedown to Mr. Rogers with some of Burleigh's "copy," saying that if he had of Burleigh's "copy," saying that if he had got to set that sort of stuff they'd have to pay him by the hour, because he couldn't make his salt setting it by the thousand Rogers immediately wrote Burleigh a note telling him that if he couldn't write so that his letters could be read he had better either quit writing or get some body to do his writ-ing for him. In a day or two there ar-rived an envelope with Rogers signature cut out from the letter and pasted upon it and "care Boston Journal" written beheath. Upon being opened it read as follows "Dear Sir—I have received a letter which. from the printed heading. I assume to be from the Journal office. If you will get somebody that can write a legible hand t inform me whom it is from and what it is all about I shall esteem it a favor. Yours truly, Matthew Hale Smith." The next time Mr. Smith came to Boston he wa handsomely entertained at Young's and Charlie Rogers paid the bills.

Some years ago we heard the story of tanner who lived near a thriving town.— He concluded to build a stand, or sort of a store, or one of the main streets, for the purpose of vending his leather, buying, rawhities and the like. After completing his building he began to consider what sort of sign it would be best to put up, in order to attract attention to his establishment, and for days and weeks me search in the stablishment. and for days and weeks was sorely puzzle on the subject. Several devices were adopte and on a further consideration rejected. last a happy idea struck him: he bored a auger hole through the door post and stuck flaunting out.

After a while he noticed a grave looking personage standing near the door with his spectacles on gazing intently on the sign.

And there he continued to stand gazing and gazing, until the curiosity of the tan-ner was greatly excited in turn. He stepout and addressed the individual; "Good morning," said he. "Morning," said the morning," said the "Morning," said the other, without moving his eyes from the sign. "You want to buy leather?" said the storekkeper, "No." "Do you wish to sell hides?" "No." "Are you a lawyer?" "No." "Are you a doctor?" "No." "No." "Are you a doctor?" "No." "What are you then!" "I am a pullosipher, sir, and I have been standing here for an hour, trying to see if I could ascertain how the call got through the auger hole, and I can't make it out to save my life."

A CURIOUS THEORY OF BATHING ACCI-DEKTS.—A naval official writes to the London Standard as follows: Being in an out-of-the-way place, I only saw your editorial remarks on bathing accidents recently. I ask for space in your paper to relate what happened to myself some years tack. The ship I belonged to was lying for a long time in Aden harbor. Some of the men went to play cricket every evening. To save the trouble of sending a large hoat with them, we use to send our clothes on shore in the joily boat, and the greater portion of the men would jump over board and swim to the shore. Of course we use to reach the shore of course we use to reach the shore of course we use to reach the shore of the shore we use to race to reach the shore first; one evening while so doing I had a (ug to win, and got very much out of breath and began breathing through my mouth. A pull of wind came from the hills and raised a ripple, little globules of water fig. ing along the surface. Breathing hard, I sucked a globule into my throat, and imsucked a glootle into my taron; and immediately had the suffocating sensation that occurs when a glass of water is said "to go the wrong way." I could neither get any breath in nor any out, and I soon began to feel I was dying on the top of the water. There must have been a dozen men close to me, but I could not speak much less call to them. I kept swimming much less call to them. I kept swimming for the shore. In about thirty seconds my senses began to leave me. I ceased swimning, and my legs went down, when, luckly for me, they touched the bottom; a violent jump helped me to cough in the drop of water. I staggered on shore and fell quite exhausted on the beach, much to the surprise of all the men with me. A man taken with palpitation of the heart can stop swimming and call out, unless he is struck with apoplexy; but a man with a drop of water in his windpipe cannot speak, but goes on swimming strongly [fill] speak, but goes on swimming strongly till within a few seconds of his death. I have paid much attention to accounts of bathing accidents, and have invariably found that, although the body of a person supposed to be selzed with cramp is picked up in a minute or two afterward, ine recovery takes place. The remedy, or rather the prevention of such a sudden death is very easy—only broathing through the nose while swimming, keeping the mouth closed.
