Pretty summer dresses are made of batiste d'Alsaco, with a pattern of tiny rosebuds and forget-me-nots, in natural colors, thrown over a dark reddish-brown background. Each width has a fancy border which is to be cut off and used for trimming. These dresses are cut round with out any train. The white lace balayeuse tucked inside does not show beyond the edge. Frillings of fine white muslin simply hemmed and trimmed with narrow lace are put around the neck and sleeves.

As beaded bonnet crowns are now very fashionable, and the handsomest of them are rather expensive, many ladies who have time prefer working their own. Tulle or silk net is used for the foundation. The design to be used must first be traced on transparent paper or linen, and the net tacked over it, the pattern being worked in fine cut beads of either jet, gold, amber, emerald green, or in the delicate shades of hellotrope, china blue, or wholly of pearl and FOR SALE AT BROWN'S DRUG STORE erystal beads.

Cashmere will be the favorite wool ma terial the coming season, and the importers are making ready for the demand. Let us be glad, for of all the wool material there is nothing from black to white that makes more durable costumes, that combines so prettily with satin, velvet, silk, or plush, that embroiders with better effect, or, after it is all worn out, forms a goodly part of THEO and HUGO. another dress. Cashmere from its light summer weight to the Thibet drap d'ete weights, in all the many shades, must ever remain a favorite fabric with women of judgment.
