In this book, he calls for: -An international security body to enforce the peace, as the U.N. did in the Congo, with the resultant slaughter of helpless civilians and the speedy success of the Communists. -- An international agency to control education at all

-- An international council to release information -control the press and electronic media. An international group to control food production.
An international hody to control credit and finance. -- Greater American sacrifices. In none of these one-world objectives is freedom or the preservation of national sovereignty given the time of day. The emphasis is entirely on domination by the clitists of all facets of national and private life.

All these horrors are detailed in the first four pages All mese morrors are detailed in the first four pages of the Brezzeinski opus. Then the author recounts how financial magnate David Rockefeller, chairman of the board of the Chase Manhattan Bank, went about setting up the Trilateral Commission.

An obscure Georgia governor, Jimmy Carter, was recruited tearly on. One must wonder why. Arms sales heighten military instability

The vote in the Senate to expand United States arms sales to the Mideast vividly demonstrates the dilemma of the arms race. As the world's biggest supplier of modern weapons, the United States continues to continue to the same of the same and the same of the modern weapons, the United States continues to contribute to the military instability that is sweeping the less developed nations in the Mideast and in Africa.

The sale of the most modern jet fighters to Saudi Arabia, without doubt, changes the military balance in he region. Despite three wars in the last two decades, more weapons continue to pour in from the United States, the Soviet Union, France and other arms supwhen President Carter spoke out against the arms race in his campaign, he piedged that the United States would reduce its sale of military equipment abroad. But since Carter took office, U.S. sales have increased by almost $2 billion. Furthermore, other nations in Africa and the Fax East are expected to seize on the sale of jets to the Arab states to deman equal treatment. This new surge in arms sales will boost U.S. arms traffic to a record $13 billion this year, it is the second largest export market behind farm commodities. During the past year, world-wide arms sales and military defense spending by all nations approximated $500 hillion. The economies of many of our states and of thousands of workers. In short, the arms race that President Eisenhower warned against in his farewell message to the nation has developed a momentum of its own. The diplomatic discussions between Washington and Moscow concerning a limitation on strategic military weapons, such as missiles and new bombers, is only a very small part of this equation.

The Strategic Arms Limitation Talks bolds little, if any, promise of slowing down the arms race in conventional weapons, such as tanks, artillery, machine guns, rockets and other arms that are common in areas of conflict.

Lately, many of the underdeveloped nations of Africa have joined in the arms race, even though they cannot afford to purchase raw materials and other essentials needed to stimulate their economies and to maintain a needed to stimulate their economic and the allowable to complying with the limitation dependence allowed, available to of increase allowed, available to of certain to discuss the samount of increase allowed, available to of certa

In some respects, the United States finds itself trapped in a Catch 22 situation. The more oil the United States imports from the Mideast, the more we may be pressured to sell sophiaticated and coatly weapons to countries like Iran and Saudi Arabia to help keep the price of oil down. price of oil down. Oil rich Iran is caught in the arms trap, too. Iran has been pressuring the oil-producing nations to raise oil prices on the world market ever since it entered into an agreement in 1973 to purchase an almost unlimited supply of U.S. made weapons.
Sales to Iran average $5 hillion a year, making it the largest purchaser of U.S. weapons. Iran has been obliged. to purchase these weapons on credit; this in turn has the General Accounting Office in a confidential report to Congress. The agency said these sales are imposing a drain on critical military skills needed by U.S. armed forces, and the United States was not recovering the full cost of the arms sold or loss. ill cost of the arms sold to iras. The large number of American military technicions in Iran to train crews in the maintenance and operation of the modern jet fighters, and other sophisticated military equipment contributed to the short supply of highlytrained specialists in this country. As the GAO found, there is a shortage in 69 different kinds of specialists.

I intend to ask the Defense Dept, if the latest sales to the Mideast will aggravate the shortage of U.5, specialists needed to maintain, our own world-wide force.

In approving the sale to Egypt and Saudi Arabia, the President may have opened a Pandora's box by symbolically equation I.S. aggingment with conductation of the sale of the ically equating U.S. assistance with sophisticated mili-tary wespons.

'Instant Voter' proposal hould be concelled

While it is reassuring to know the proposed "Instant Voter" legislation was temporarily shelved by the U.S. Congress, the sad fact is those seeking mob rule never abandon their efforts to achieve it.

Right here in New Jersey we are confronted by the very dangerous Senate Bill No. 276 sponsored by state senate president, Joseph Merlino, and others.

This legislation would permit as unregistered voter to present identification at a ministipal cleak a state or registered to vote at once.

Unfortunately, this open invitation to fraudpassed the floor of the Assembly for a vote any day. Public opinion must be railied to insist on its defeat.

Incredibly, Senate Bill No. 276, which applies only to General Elections, further permits someone without proper identification, a driver's license or other government document which includes an address, to register on election day if a permanently-registered voter makes a sworn statement verifying the prospective voters identity. Under the previous proposal, registered voters would be able to vouch for as many as five new voters.

Such a hill negates the validity of the whole alternal. voters identity. Under the previous proposal, registered voters would be able to vouch for as many as five new voters.

Such a bill negates the validity of the whole electoral process. We all know fraud and chicanery exist on a massive scale in certain counties and cities—the most infamous being, perhaps, Cook County in Illinois.

The bill throws the doorwide open for legally—unqualified voters to swarm to the polls and merrily cast their votes in return for cash favors from a certain candidate or political machine. or political machine. If an American citizen is not sufficiently interested in exercising the privilege of the franchise to manage to register, even by mail in New Jersey, 30 days before the November General Election, then he does not deserve to vote.

If New Jersey is to allow a person to walk in and register five minutes before he votes, there is no possible way his identification can be checked. He might well be like the despicable "Welfare Queen" in Chicago, who had 250 allases, 31 addresses, three Social Security numbers and records of eight deceased husbands!

Even if a fraudulent voter is apprehended later, there is no way to stop his illegal vote from being counted. If honest, responsible citizens are to feel confident the election system is trustworthy, there must be no possibility their votes will be cancelled by chican ery and fraud.

The growth in jobs, living standards and pace of productivity depends on this continual. vested a smaller portion of income between 1960 to 1974 than nost other industrial nations. So the capital investment bandwagon has been an easy one to jump aboard. But rhetoric and action are two different things. And there's neen far less tough examination of the causes of this poor performance than we'd like to see in Washington 🚈 🙃 🚁 🕏 The causes are fairly evident. and business tax rates shrinks the investment flow. Inflation, fueled in part by budget deficits, pushes individuals into higher tax brackets, leaving less to put in savings, and it artificially inflates the corporate tax to a point where would be investors fiture "why bother?" Regulations also keep investment to a trickle by forcing the diversion of funds into unproductive channels. Budget defi-cits, besides feeding inflation, have another restrictive effect—they siphon off funds from the private sector that might have gone for investment in business expansion. So it all comes down to a change in government policies. If a householder has any reason to believe he or she was overcharged because of an unfair weighting of a moving van, he should telephone the State Office of Weights and Measures at (609) 292-4615.

STEAK ROLLS PARISIENNE

The recipe uses beef, wine and a good brown sauce. To peel a garlic clove can be difficult at times. To peel and crush at the same time, simply lay the flac side of a cooking knife on top of the garlic clove and press hard on top or hit the flat side of your first down on top of the flat side of the knife to squash the clove. The skin then peels off easily. It also releases the flavor. The skin then peels off easily. It also releases the flavor.

To dust anything withflour, including these rolls, you shake on a light coating with your hands and den shake off the excess.

When a recipe calls for papper, always use a pepper mill with fresh-ground pepper. It is easy and, if you practice, you can gauge the musher of grinds per quarter tempoon or whatever.

In some recipes lard and Crisco are used as interchangeable terms, but not in this one. This lard is the hard kind you can cut into strips or clunks.

This recipe calls for dry white wine and domestic is as good as any.

Brown stock can be made from scratch, but I use beef broth from a can or inutillon cules. The brown stock is better, but you don't always have the beef or veal shanks on hand or the seven hours to make it. If enough readers really want a recipe for brown stock, I'm sure I can supply it in a future column.

A "bouquet garni" is a group of seasonings put together in a sieved container, they can be removed latter. You can make it from a three-lack strang of cheese-cloth, placing the seasonings in the middle, gathering it at the top, and tying it off with a string. Leave the string end long enough to drape over the edge of the pot, so you can remove it easily, but not long enough to canch fire.

Three choosed onions.

Three chopped onions.
Two tablespoons of butter or margarine.
One crushed garlic clove.
Six buncless sixloin coats to belt a Three quarters of a pound of lard. Flour. Salt and pepper. Half a cup of dry white wine.

Two cups of brown stock or beef broth, One cup of light beer. Three sprigs of paraley. Half a teaspoon of thyme. One bay leaf.

moderate heat until they are soft. Add garlic clove and saute the mixture for five minutes. Cover the mixture and keep it warm.

With the flat edge of a meat cleaver pound the steaks between two abeets of wax paper to form rect ngles, six inches by four inches.

Sprinkle the steaks with salt and pepper. Stee half pound of lard thinly and cut the alices into p. 3 four-inches long and half an inch wide. Lay a strip to the latter on the center of each steak and roll the steak lengthwise around it, tying the ends with string. You may have to the the middle, too. Dust the rolls with four.

In another large skiller, brown the steaks in one table-spoon, attring the hrown bits clinging to the bottom:

Pour the reduced wine over the steak and entered. Addit of the brown stock or beef broth, beer and a hospassing parasity the aktillet containing the steak and onton.

Bring the liquid to a boil and simmerit, cowered, for 5 minutes. Remember, atmore means rolling or tumbling on top, but not holling. Simmer the mixture.
