

Rutgers student makes tax instructions easier

Taxpayers who this year find Internal Revenue Service Federal Income Tax Form 1040 and its related schedules easier to read and fill out can thank Leo Campbell, a student at Rutgers University.

Mr. Campbell, a doctoral candidate in reading at the Rutgers Graduate School of Education, served as an IRS consultant from March to September, helping the agency simplify and clarify the instructions for filing the 1978 tax.

A native of South Plainfield, now living in North Brunswick, the reading specialist rewrote the instructions and tested its readability against last year's instructions.

By using shorter words and sentences, employing contractions and avoiding "legals" wherever possible, he changed the instructions from an overall mid-high school reading level to a mid-grade standard, the average reading level of an American adult.

Few changes were made in the form itself since it was rewritten last year and received favorable public response.

The editorial team in the Forms and Publications Division of the IRS changed the graphic design of the instructions, utilizing more white space and bolder type headings for reading ease.

Other changes included placing information in a chronological, line-by-line order, eliminating the need to flip-back between cross references, Mr. Campbell said.

For instance, 10 steps for preparing the return, which were lumped together at the beginning of the instructions, now appear in the line-by-line order when they are needed.

The graduate student said more use has been made of dependent clauses at the start of each instruction. "These 'if' clauses let taxpayers know right away if certain instructions apply to their situation," he said.

Certain tax-related information also has been deleted, where it was redundant. The taxpayer did not need to know the definitions of various terms in the instructions.

Eliminated were numerous references to and explanations of the Internal Revenue Code, because Campbell and his team felt since the concept is new, some things just can't be simplified beyond a certain level. But wherever possible, "zero bracket amount" replaced "standard deduction" in the last tax year.

TAKE FORMS MORE EASILY... The Internal Revenue Service, with the help of Rutgers University of New Brunswick's reading specialist, Leo Campbell, has simplified the instructions for filing out this year's No. 1040 federal income tax form.

Similarly, the term "community property state" was broadly defined in the 1977 instructions, but nowhere were the eight states listed. The new instructions simply list the states and refer the taxpayer to another publication for details.

Language alterations in the text include such changes as "in excess of" to "more than," "exclusively" to "only," "elect" to "choose," and "control" to "all."

Several readability formulas were applied in the project, including one developed by Dr. Edward Fry, director of the Reading Center at the Rutgers Graduate School of Education.

Readability, explained Mr. Campbell, measures the supposed difficulty of such language variables as word and sentence length, vocabulary or clarity of terms, and the frequency with which certain words are used.

One of the most difficult aspects of the task, he added, was to try to simplify certain concepts governed by strict legal guidelines.

"Because of the complexity of some of the tax laws, some things just can't be simplified beyond a certain level. But wherever we could 'drop bureaucratic jargon' or technical terms, we tried to explain them," he concluded.

Chemical arms should receive new priority

By E. Sidman Wacker

To the average American, the very thought of chemical warfare is frightening and repulsive. However, the unpleasant reality must be faced: United States and North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces are engaged in a sophisticated chemical warfare threat from the European Community, for which the latter are already trained and equipped.

The area of chemical warfare is today the one where the comparison between U.S. and Soviet capabilities is most lopsided, with the Communist superpower being assessed, not by factors of two or three, but by two or three orders of magnitude. Although the Soviet Union has a large chemical industry, it is not equipped to produce chemical weapons in large quantities. The U.S. has a large chemical industry, but it is not equipped to produce chemical weapons in large quantities.

Greater export volume needed to boost dollar

The way the dollar has been battered and devalued over recent months against the German mark, the Japanese yen and even the Italian lira provides an ominous signal of slipping United States leadership in international economic affairs.

The creation of a $30 billion special fund of foreign currencies to buy dollars for exchange in foreign money markets will help assure the price of the dollar will not slip precipitously while the fund lasts. This will be more time to work on an anti-inflation program which can assure a more stabilized currency.

The decline of the dollar on the world market stems in large measure from confusion and concern at home and abroad about our nation's economic policy. International businessmen fear we may take off on another trip down the expansionary trail leading to even more inflation, higher taxes, higher costs and skyrocketing interest rates.

Balanced budget more gaining more backers

Several weeks ago I introduced a resolution calling for a Constitutional Convention to propose an amendment to the United States Constitution which would require the Federal Government to have a balanced budget.

If this or similar legislation passes 34 state legislatures, the Congress must call a convention to draft a balanced federal budget amendment to the Constitution. Twenty-one states have already passed such resolutions.

This method of amending the Constitution is not widely known or understood. Most people think of a Constitutional amendment as something that is passed by Congress, and then sent to the states for ratification. This is not the case. A Constitutional amendment can be passed by a two-thirds vote in both houses of Congress, and then sent to the states for ratification. This is the method used for the Equal Rights Amendment.

Holiday shopping tips can keep you happy

There is a large illegal market in stolen credit cards. Even if the card is lost or stolen, under federal regulations, your maximum liability is $50 if the card is reported to the issuer within 60 days of the loss.

Before the shopping rush begins, take a moment to make sure your credit cards are in good standing. If you have a card that is not in good standing, you may be liable for the full amount of the card's balance.

Balanced budget more gaining more backers

Several weeks ago I introduced a resolution calling for a Constitutional Convention to propose an amendment to the United States Constitution which would require the Federal Government to have a balanced budget.

If this or similar legislation passes 34 state legislatures, the Congress must call a convention to draft a balanced federal budget amendment to the Constitution. Twenty-one states have already passed such resolutions.

This method of amending the Constitution is not widely known or understood. Most people think of a Constitutional amendment as something that is passed by Congress, and then sent to the states for ratification. This is not the case. A Constitutional amendment can be passed by a two-thirds vote in both houses of Congress, and then sent to the states for ratification. This is the method used for the Equal Rights Amendment.
