o'clock to enable teachers, parents, students and administrators of the elementary-school sending districts and non-public schools, as well as all other community participants, to take part in school visitations in accordance with the "Exploring Vocational Opportunities" project.
The open house will enable parents and, especially eighth-grade students, to visit the school and gain a greaater understanding of vocational opportunities in the regional high schools by having classes in operation and appropriate teaching staff available to inform and counsel those attending.

The need for first-hand visual contact becomes important when the entire breadth and scope of the vocational programs, housed in the high school, is considered. In addition to the regular teaching staff, a guidance counselor will be available in the school to answer questions regarding course and career choices. This Career-Vocational Education program will be administered by Stanley Grossman co-ordinator of industrial arts and home economics education, with the assistance of Mrs. Emma Massey, business and distributive education co-ordinator. Programs being exhibited will include: Machine shop. cabinet shop, mechanical drawing, automobile shop and co-operative industrial education, metal shop, general shop, photography, beauty culture, office procedures and co-opera-tive office education, distributive education, "Foods and Clothing." "Personal and Family Living" and guidance resents Rahway and Clark, Robert Franks, was assigned to the Assembly's Fnergy and Natural Resources Committee in the current term of the Legislature.

Assemblyman Franks said the assignment was his "first choice" because the solution to the state's energy problems "will be an essential business of the Legislature for several years."

"I'm delighted," the first-term Republican added. "None of us are satisfied with progress made in our state in energy matters since the national crisis began and I expect our committee will take the lead in seeking solutions to these proin seeking solutions to these pro-blems."
