RAHWAY, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1908

Execution of Woman in New Jersey
The first woman executed in New Jersey, of whom the name is not known, was Mary Cole, a young married woman, who was hanged at New Brunswick, on the 24th of July, 1812, 57 years ago. Mary, with her husband and mother had, but a year or two before, come to that county from Paterson, and the mother had purchased a small place in Liberty, upon which they lived in domestic harmony. Early in February the mother suddenly disappeared, and soon after, the place was sold to the Cole's at a sacrifice, and they removed to another place a few miles distant. The purchase of the Cole's property soon became known by a neighboring relation, that he caused the wife of the late husband to be taken up and her execution was ordered. Mary's mother, hearing of the execution, left no doubt in the minds of all who saw that she had been murdered. The only other witnesses were immediately interested, and Mary and her husband arrested and imprisoned. At the April term of the County Court they were placed on trial, and Mary, charging herself that, to get possession of the property she had inherited by her husband, she had murdered her husband, was found guilty in the first degree, and her husband was convicted as an accessory of the same. The sentence was that she should be hanged at the county jail, and her husband should be confined in the State Prison for three years. The execution took place in public, upon the square in front of the State Prison, and the doomed woman was taken to the scaffold upon a cart, which, after the time was up, was taken to the jail, and was taken to the gallows, and her body was thrown into a hole in the ground, and her husband was taken to the State Prison, and was confined there for three years.
