THE TERN OF A HILL.
 At the foot of a hill, where the waves were breaking, a tern was seen to alight. It was a young bird, and its wings were still wet with the spray of the sea. It looked up at the sky with a longing gaze, and its heart was full of yearning.
 It had been born on the island, and it had never seen the mainland. It had heard the voices of the birds that flew over the water, and it had seen the ships that sailed in the bay. But it had never seen the mainland, and it longed to see it. It had heard the voices of the birds that flew over the water, and it had seen the ships that sailed in the bay. But
 to see it.
