RAHWAY, N. J., NOVEMBER 23, 1859.

How He Said Grace.—A man being late on a tramp to Canada says that at a certain farm house in the back woods, where he had occasion to stop, the following rich scene took place:

The family were sitting up after their breakfast, and sat down to the part. The old man being a bit of a squire, and that being the private parlor of the morning's repast, had his particular piece laid on the side of the dish next to him. The old man commenced saying grace as follows:

"Lord, we thank thee for the bread and drink in this morning, whereas thy servant, my son, has been so long away,

and has not had a morsel to eat,

since he left home,

we thank thee for him,

and for his safety,

and for his health,

and for his strength,

and for his courage,

and for his fortitude,

and for his wisdom,

and for his knowledge,

and for his skill,

and for his experience,

and for his judgment,

and for his discernment,

and for his sagacity,

and for his prudence,

and for his discretion,

and for his tact,

and for his courtesy,

and for his politeness,

and for his manners,

and for his deportment,
