The Centennial Commission, provided by an Act of Congress, has appointed Wednesday, the 10th day of April, 1873, as the day for the opening of the Centennial Exhibition, and has requested the President to issue a proclamation to that effect. The President has complied with the request, and has issued the proclamation. It is dated on the 1st inst., and is addressed to the people of the United States and to the nations of the world. It recites the fact that the Centennial Commission has selected Philadelphia as the place for the Exhibition, and that Congress has appropriated $1,500,000 to aid in the undertaking, and has provided that the Exhibition shall be opened to the public on the 10th day of April, 1873, and shall remain open for fifteen days. The President invites the co-operation of the people of the United States, and of the governments of the world, in the celebration of the Centennial year, and in the Exhibition. He says that the Exhibition will be a fitting celebration of the progress of the country during the first century of its existence, and will be a proper introduction to the second century. He hopes that the Exhibition will be conducted in such a manner as to promote the peace and friendship of all nations, and that it will be a means of bringing the people of the United States and the people of other countries into more friendly relations with each other. He says that the Exhibition will be a proper occasion for the display of the triumphs of peace, and that it will be a suitable time for the proclamation of universal amnesty.
