Precept and Practice.

All picket, a bright day following the rain, the grass, the trees, the flowers, drops of water on the leaves, the blue sky, the sun, the whole glorious panorama of nature, and the human figures in it, was the most developed and obedient of original patterns. It was an exquisite day, and every thing was in its place. Even the sweet breeze was in its place, and the sun was in its place, and the birds were in their places, and the flowers were in their places, and the trees were in their places, and the grass was in its place, and the water was in its place, and the sky was in its place, and the clouds were in their places, and the rain was in its place, and the thunder was in its place, and the lightning was in its place, and the wind was in its place, and the snow was in its place, and the ice was in its place, and the hail was in its place, and the frost was in its place, and the dew was in its place, and the mist was in its place, and the fog was in its place, and the smoke was in its place, and the steam was in its place, and the vapor was in its place, and the gas was in its place, and the air was in its place, and the earth was in its place, and the water was in its place, and the fire was in its place, and the metal was in its place, and the stone was in its place, and the wood was in its place, and the glass was in its place, and the paper was in its place, and the ink was in its place, and the pen was in its place, and the hand was in its place, and the eye was in its place, and the ear was in its place, and the nose was in its place, and the mouth was in its place, and the tongue was in its place, and the brain was in its place, and the heart was in its place, and the soul was in its place, and the spirit was in its place, and the life was in its place, and the death was in its place, and the resurrection was in its place, and the judgment was in its place, and the heaven was in its place, and the hell was in its place, and the eternity was in its place, and the time was in its place, and the space was in its place, and the matter was in its place, and the force was in its place, and the energy was in its place, and the motion was in its place, and the rest was in its place, and the peace was in its place, and the joy was in its place, and the love was in its place, and the hope was in its place, and the faith was in its place, and the charity was in its place, and the wisdom was in its place, and the knowledge was in its place, and the understanding was in its place, and the reason was in its place, and the will was in its place, and the conscience was in its place, and the duty was in its place, and the right was in its place, and the truth was in its place, and the God was in his place, and the universe was in its place, and the infinite was in its place, and the eternal was in its place, and the absolute was in its place, and the perfect was in its place, and the complete was in its place, and the finished was in its place, and the done was in its place, and the amen was in its place.
