> Dempsy and Smoot, two dilapidated old liars, sat in the shade of Lockett's stable in San Antonio, and strove for the mastery in mendacity. Dempsy felt a little sore because Smoot's buffalo story, which has been published in Texas Siftings, was somewhat more stupendous than anything he had been able to trump up.

"Did I ever tell you about that smart dog I owned before the war?" asked "Not that I know of. Did you own a log before the war?' "L should say so. I owned three packs of fox hounds before the war. I was a rich man in them days. I owned five or six plantations, with three or four hundred niggers on each plantation. was elected to Congress a time or two, but I refused to serve," said Dempsy. "Yes, that must have been about the time I was traveling around over Europe with the Prince of Wales and them sort of fellers. But what about the dog? said Smoot, placing his tattered apology for a straw hat on his head. "Nothin', except I paid a thousand dollars in gold for him. He used to sit at the same table with me. I had a "Lot's of trouble. Why, it took two | plate for him at the table. and Dempsy heaved a great sigh, as if he had relieved his mind of something. Having got off this stupendous lie, Dempsy tilted back his chair and smoked in silence, evidently under the impression that he had stumped Smoot-He was distaken. Nobody could ever outlie Sm ot if the latter was given time to collect his thoughts.

"I've owned just such dogs in my time, millions of 'em," said Smoot. "I remember one dog I had when I had a sheep ranch in Frio county. I had planted a little patch in termarlerses and cowcumbers, and every night the jack-rabbits would come and eat up them vegetables. One day that dog heard me say that I wished all the jack-rabbits was in the lot place: %]. warn't talkin' to the dog, but he over-
