there might be; but I am willing-quite said Doctor Fairbrother to his colleague. "If to-morrow he is not materially bet-It is a night of crisis for Constance as well as for the sick man. She is racked with anxiety; she cannot sleep. The influence of Charteris on her life has gone, as if it had never been. All her thoughts are given to March. "Does one never realize the value of a thing till it is taken from them?" she asked herself, with a sobbing breath. "All these years I have been so utterly indifferent: and now I can never let him know that I am not the weak, vain fool In this way the night passed, and when the first faint light of morning brike, she turned away her face, for what news might it bring?

A little later a step passed her door;
the kindly also of Mrs. Pennel looked "I thought you might be awake, Miss Melfort, said the good woman, "and I've just come to tell you that the the property of the short of th tell to hear the west, that the shock of the state is too great for her to take is the will not like is shough, breathlessly.

"I hope not The doctors think he will not. But child, your face is as white as a sheel!"

The good huly goes off, leaving Constance in a trance of amazed relief, as, burying her face in the pillow, she exclaims, with a low voice, "Thank Gol?"

She is still as pale as a lift when Mrs. She is still as pale as a lily when Mrs.
Stansfeld sees her a few hours later, but her expression is brighter than it has been for many a day.

"She is glad to be spored this mar"She is glad to be "Poor Major ringe," thought sha "Poor Major March! What a pity it is he has set his heart on a girl way never will care for him!" "Good news my dear, this morning," she said, aloud. "The crisis has passed so favorably, that the doctors think he will recover now."
Later in the morning Mr. Charteris Later in the morning Mr. Charteris came, and it chanced that Constance was standing alone outside the hall-door.

"I have a favorable report for you," she said, as she shook hands with him. Major March is decided better this morning. I have already heard," he answered "I met one of the doctors in swered. "I met one of the doctors in Cisborough. But I have come to see her eyestrown. "Pray sit down."
"Is not this a sudden resolution?"
"It is. I have had a talegram to day which makes it necessary that I should

"Yes, "she said. "I cannot take a long one; but for a few minutes I will "God knows what spell you have which makes you unlike other women!" is Mr. Charteris' first remark, when they have strolled on towards the wood for a few minutes in silence. "But I do love as I thought I should never love woman in this world. Constance, you promised to answer me when I came back. Will you answer me now? She withdraws the hand he would take, and says, in a clear, steady voice, "I have no answer to give you Mr. Charteris, except that this is a speech I did not expect, and which is not worthy of any reply."

"This telegram," said he drawing i from his pocket, "is from my consin, saying that she has arrived from Italy, and asking me to meet her. If I do not go, all is over between us. Will you bid me stay, Constance?" ' she answered, gently; "I cannot bid you stay; but I am not sorry you have spoken like this-I mean or your own account," she added, as his eye kindled and he drew a step nearer; but I am glad you have proved that money was not everything to you, as I had begun to think it was. 'Justice!" cried Grace. "I have it from papa- and he knows-that Mr. Charteris is really uncertain whether he can marry his cousin; for, although she s not a ward in Chancery, there are difficulties in the way. And he thinks that sooner or later he is certain of Major March's fortune." false or true, said Constance. "I have told him, finally and decidedly, that I cannot marry him." Belmont. "Will you not come with me to tell mamma that Major March is better? The walk will do you good." "I think I shall," said Constance "It is such a glorious day! And what a day it might have been!

CHAPTER XXXII

"This I consider decided an anticlimax," said Major March, as he found in Mr. Melfort's sitting-riom before a cheerful fire. He felt that life was a very pleasant thing even while he uttered this remark. 'What is this you think an auticlimax?' asked Mrs. Melfort. "Well, it strikes me to," said the arrangements to die, he ought to die. and be brought back to bie, and be made much of, as you are making so much of me. the charmed convalescent. "By the way, I ought to tell you that I had a letter from Charteris the other day. He wrote from Hasting." "Indee!!" said Constance. "I hope he is well ' "Quite well," answered Major March.

His real object in writing, I think, was to tell me that he was about to marry his "He is afraid I care," thought Coustance. "How little does he really know!" Aloud she said, "How disappointed he was, when he came to see you, that he "If he came to see me?" said Major March. My dear friend, I know I have no chance with her, and I never had." You may have, yet, though, now, said the Major. The young man shook his head "I have given up at last," he said. And there is no great wisdom in it,

They were near the house by this when suddenly Fred turned to Major March and said, "Only one man has a chance now; and pardon me for won fair lady. There was no time for another word, for Mr. Melfort was approaching. Indeed, Major March was too much astonished to answer reasonably, if he had had the opportunity. It was time for his departure at the close of his visit, and Fred volunteered to order his horse.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Melfort happened to be out of the room, and with that unique fair face he felt he must speak.
"Constance," he said quickly, with the memory of Fred's words in his ears, "It is said that 'faint heart never won fair lady.' I never broke a promise pefore | I am going to break one now. You were so generous to a dving man will you be less so to a living one? It is for the last time I ask it. There was an instant's pause, then

If we follow the process of decay which takes place in the grave, it will be found that hving organisms take part in the decay of the buried body, just as they do when beef or mutton is consumed by a main, In absolutely pure air, flesh does not decay, and is in fact preserved for an indefinite time But air is very seld in absolutely pure for in it are an infinite number of floating micro organisms, either as spores or fully developed. On the tops of mountains these organisms, which are named bacilli, bacteria, or micrococci, are sparsely found. In the air of the country they are common, in that of towns they abound, over sewers or above churchyards they positively swarm, What are they? Are they plants or animals? This is a question that science has not yet decided. Chemists are very low type, because animals are Now, the great function of these micro-organisms which play such an important part in the economy of the world is to convert potential energy he vos bad been fooled already. Dot when I lived there -when I was a boy. into actual energy, or, to put it more simply, to convert passive affinities into active affinities. In organized matter there is for a time the repose of the chemical attractions of those four elements-carbon, hydrogen, nitrogen and oxygen, which constitute the great bulk of the body. The micro-organisms are engaged in the resolution of the dead body into those active forms of chemical energy-carbonic acid, water and ammonia. The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Note-The above Diagram illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Scheuler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Scheiller only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, healdes, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts. * While the diagram shows some of the dlum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. ## SUPERIOR TO ROYAL.

Rutgers College (the New Jersey State Scientific College) New Brunswick, N. J., July 7, 1885.

Analyses and careful examinations of Cleveland's Superior and Royal Baking Powders enable us to bear testimony to the superiority of Cleveland's. It yields more carbonic acid gas than the Royal, and contains no ammonia salts. Cleveland's Baking Powder is made of pure substances and is absolutely free from any kind of adulteration. We endorse it most cordially as an honest and efficient article, and one that will give entirely satisfactory results.

A WORD ABOUT ORGANS.

Many of the uninitiated, when about to purchase organs look for the instrument with the most "sropa" upon it, for the least money. In these days nothing can be judged by the "stops," neither by the "sets of reeds"—which are the vibrators making the music. In former days when every "stop" put upon an organ was of practical use, and indicated an additional "set of reeds," a full swell, a tremolo, or coupler, some judgment of the instrument could be arrived at by the number of stops—but that day is past, and there are now organs made with from a dozen to twenty destops on, while, for all practical purposes, a single stop, or, perhaps, none at all, would do just as well—it the instrument is provided with a knee-swell. It is the number of genuine "sets of reeds" that adds to the musical powers of the organ, and not the stops; but even this has become deceptive; formerly a "set of reeds" was understood to mean a full five octaves of reeds extending all the way across the organ; now some makers divide the one set o reeds into five sections, and call each octave a "set of reeds"or "five sets of reeds" when there is but one set in the whole

We desire to deceive no one, and hence give "what we know about organs" after considerable experience with various
