WHAT MIGHT HAVE REEV.

In spite of the pains and trouble at which by while she enlarged on the beauties of a quiet half hour with Nancy Earle, they and descanted on the merits of bainer shadow of the wide spreading tree beautifully had they settled themselves there in town? he asked.

Probably never in his years of service had Col. Barnes ever had made to him or heard given by any one else such an excuse for an indiscretion at the table; in fact it was so new that he did not in the least know what to say. And while he was still staring at Tommy, speechless with surprise, I must confess that Beautiful Jim, whose sense of humor was not small, went off into smothered agonies of laughter such as at last bade fair to choke him. And the more he tried to disguise it by the help of a big pocket handkerchief and a make believe cough the more and "Well, Earle," he said, in a voice as shaky as his dignity, "I am very glad to see that you have sense to know and to honestly own when you've have and to honestly own when you've been in fault.

Miss Earle was especially busy, her pleasant winning manner and fair, bright face bringing her many and many a customer who otherwise Beautiful Jim, however, suffered by this popularity, for he could not manage to get a word with her, or hardly one. He knew that she and Tommy were going chances, and Alleen had already got seven-home on the Monday morning, and he town to be the box with the knew, too, that he could not hope by any chance to get even a two days leave on So Beautiful Jim, despite the gay and giddy throng of which he made one, was as nearly miserable as he could be while he had still the privilege of watching his

"Oh!" she cried in dismay, "and Mrs. Trafford is having a tensiter the parish. "Yes, I know," said he wretchedly. Then after a moment he exclaimed in a brighter tone: "There's one fellow haven't asked, so there's just a chance yet for me." Then I shall not say good by today," said Miss Earle, with decision. I hate saying good by. Don't you?"

"It depends," said Jim, guardedly. It depends a good deal on the other person. Now, if I was saying good by to you," he said, in a desperate tone—and just as Miss Earle was beginning to show the prettiest of danger signals in her cheeks and a droop in her sweet eyes, some—some—idiot, Jim said to himself, savagely, came clumsily along and knocked a heavy teatray against her arm, making her shrick out in unmistakable pain.

Now, then! Where are you going?"

Jim thundered, looking daggers at the inckless individual.

It is to be hoped that the recording ingel does not put down all the naughty words that rise in the heart and never pass the lips; if he does, he must have had a busy ten minutes that Esturisly afternoon, for Beautiful lim's unspoken thoughts were—well, far from sainty

'Oh! yes, Mr. Beresford, we shall be delighted if you do," she replied heartily.

'Ah! I shall not be able to get leave until well on in September, or perhaps even October, and you won't be in town then," he said, in dejection and gloom.

'You're sure not to be in town, then." and pleasure of his senior officer.

And that happened to be the very last "I am not so sure," she said. "True, chance he had of a quiet quarter of an hour with Nancy Earle before she left Blankhampton. For no sooner did they months and intend to stay all the winter emerge from the shelter of the place, and we generally find ourselves home again in Hans place early in Octothan they were seized upon by two of the Leslie girls, who demanded in their We may stay in the country longer friendliest tones what was the state of business at Lady Margaret's stall.

Now, in Beautiful Jim's opinion, as in bring friends for the shooting. I suppose my father would like to be there if he did that of many another man, the Leslie country people bore him, and he says the house is a draught trap. And then he likes his paper at breakfast time, and he likes his club and his whist and all that. Oh, I dare say you will find us at home if sisters were quite the most brilliant and attractive girls in the town, but, as a truthful chronicler of Blankhampton life, I must own that, at that moment, he found himself wondering what in the wide world he could ever have seen at-fate, the cushion and its noble maker the duchess, at the inquisitive person who desired to see it, at everything, in short, excepting Miss Nancy Earle.

"Look here," he said, brusquely. "Need you hawk that thing about any longer? 'I thought he seemed uncomm fight-for him, that is," returned Norsh, "and he is as gone on her as possible. What a joke—and oh! poor old fellow. what a shame we couldn't leave them together; she's going away on Monday."
"Oh, there's the parish to-morrow," said Norah, easily.

Sarah cried. Young Towers told me so, because Jim wanted him to do it, and he wouldn't. He said old Jim was in an wful way about it." "Then I think he might have taken it, nasty little wretch! said North, who had but little love for Towers. "Let us snub him all we know to-morrow."

But all the snubbing in the world didn't alter the fact that Beautiful Jim had that he was eating his very heart out in barracks on Nancy Earle's last day in

> CHAPTER XIII IN NEW QUARTERS At last the time of young Stuart Earle's first long leave was over, and he went to Blankhampton to join his regiment, when for several months his life was certainly not of the most pleasant kind, and was very different from any experience he had had before. For one thing, he had made a bad impression at his very first appearance among them on each and all of his brother officers, from his commanding officer down to the latest joined subaltern, so that every one of them was on the look out for the smallest sign of that "cheek which every man of them felt it was his personal and particular duty to try to eradicate. A difficult task even for the the objection that Nancy was almost as worn out by her labors as Miss Adair; united strength of a whole regiment; for Tommy's native bounce was apparently of unlimited quantity, while in quality as bounce, it was of the very first water So far as his manners in the mess room were concerned, he was in an incredibly short time what Beautitul Jim called "licked into shape," but in other ways Tommy proved himself to be simply in corrigible. For instance, he never could be brought to see that in Blankhampton society he was in any way inferior to his senior officers, and even in the palace of himself—eighteen shillings to be wheedled out of eighteen unwilling pockets—eighteen men or women to captivate by ado about openly chaffing Beautiful Jim, or telling an absurd tale at the major's expense, than he did of firting despersion and praces, than he did of firting despersion at lives to give her a moment's rest, and he would like to have burned the thing.

Tommy, trying not to look as if his jaw expense, than he did of firting despersion at lives at little Violet Lealis, who was dropping perceptibly, yet with an unstable sort of feeling that the lady, before six months had gone by, Tommy had the name of being the most impudent what she said, "there must be plenty of ready and willing she was, worn out and shire regiment or the old city of Hlank."

We dear how more to captivate by the lord bishop himself he made no more ado about openly chaffing Beautiful Jim, or telling an absurd tale at the major's expense, than he did of firting despersion at live was dropping perceptibly, yet with an unstable sort of feeling that the lady, before six months had gone by, Tommy had the name of being the most impudent what she said, "there must be plenty of the old city of Hlank."

We dear how more to look as if his jaw was dropping perceptibly, yet with an unstable sort of feeling that the lady, before six months had gone by, Tommy had been small social celebrity in her way in Blankhampton, was right in what she said, "there must be plenty of the old city of Hlank."

Why, it's baby—such a nothing—such a non-danger-ous scrap of humanity—that they let you make the young show of yourself that you do. But what I want to know is, what the devil do you mean to come to?
"Well, really, Jim," Tommy replied with a certain "last of the Earles" haught ness in his tone, "it seems to me you troubling yourself in a very unnecessary shouts of derisive laughter. "Tommy Tommy, you'll be the death of me yetyou will, indeed," he said. "Your private affairs—why, bless me, child, the last joined sub hasn't got any private affairs except in 'applying' for leave. officers who knew what manner of place Walmsbury really was. But the elation of this young Alexander longing for more worlds to conquer, did not last long. From "the fellows" he learned nothing; indeed, for any information he would have had from them he would have remained in the ignorance which is bliss, doubly so in this case, until he reached Walmsbury itself; but in Blankhampton it was different. "Going to Walmsbury," cried one lady to whom he told his news with a very

it was not very long before Master Tommy Earle got into very unmistakable mischief, indeed. It is not often that I wish my readers to follow me through a very close description of bricks and mortar, of stairways and rooms, of doorways and windows; but it is really necessary that they should know something of the plan upon which the messrooms and officers quarters at Walmsbury were arranged.

It was not a barracks intended for the accommodation of a regiment, but only for a detachment of such regiment as might be quartered at Blankhampton.
On the left of the principal entrance gate stood the larger of two blocks of buildings—this contained the guard room and cells, the men's rooms, and the married and sergeants' quarters; on the right was a second block, which contained on the ground floor the orderly room and office the messrooms, and some other rooms used either for married officers quarters or as quarters for stall officers, such as the doctor or paymaster, if one hap-pened to be needed. On the floor above were seven good sized rooms and a large kitchen used in common by all the officers' servants on that story.
This kitchen overlooked the road, and was of lifegular shape, owing to the fact that the well of the staircase was taken out of it. On the side of it furthest from the entrance gate was an empty room. and on the other were the two rooms usually appropriated to the officer commanding the detachment, though, in this case, Owen had not troubled to furnish both rooms, and had only brought a portion of his goods and chattels from head quarters. Thus the room on either side of the kitchen was empty, while on the other side of the corridor which cut that floor of the building in halves were the quarters occupied by the doctor-who referred to be on the upper story—Beauiful Jim, Tommy Earle and young Man-with an amused laugh. "Mischief! I believe you! The young fool—the idiot—the—just look here," holding out his hand. "Why: that's Tommy's flashiest ringocats all Evelyn Gabrielle's rings to fits," Jim exclaimed. "Where in the world did you get it? Surely young Tommy hasn't been 'reduxed' so as to pay visits to his avuncular relative?" "If that was all there wouldn't be much harm done," returned Owen. "No, it's much worse than that. You know that pert little barmaid at the Duck's Tail?"

"I went in there this afternoon to get the address of that horse dealer that Whittaker told me about, and I found my lady dusting her bottles and counters and so on with this blazing on her hand. Knew the ring in a minute, and, by Jove! I was down upon her like a terrier on a rat. 'Where did you get that ring?' I "'What's that to you? she said, with as much cheek as even Tommy himself could have shown. "You get it out of Mr. Earle, said I. "And what if I did? she returned. "'A good deal,' said I; 'in fact, just this: You're a good many years older than Mr. Earle—ten at least—you're anything but a reputable woman, and, in fact, if you were as good as an angel out of heaven—which you are not—you're just about the last woman in the world that his family would ever receive if you hamboozled him into marrying you. I see you're wearing it on your engaged finger, I suppose that means that you have. inveigled him into promising to replace it by a plain one. But he will do nothing of the sort, and you will just hand that what she said, "there must be plenty of ring over at once to me. We don't allow our young officers to go about marrying any one they like, particularly such a woman as you are.

"'And if I don't? she asked, insolently "If you don't! LESSONS REVIEWE FOURTH QUARTER OF THE INTER-NATIONAL SERIES, JUST CLOSED.

Lesson XIII, for December 80, 1888—General Topic, the Development of the Commonwealth of Israel from Their Occupation of Canana to Birth of Obed. The third quarter closed with the children of Israel entering on the Promised Land, which they soon occupied, except the portions still occupied by the Jebusites and other nations whom God had left "to prove them," because they had partially failed to keep His com-mandments. The remaining lessons of the fourth quarter detail the wonderful history of a period of four centuries and more, during which the chosen people went through a sucession of trials for the development of the character. There is a strange and remarkably interesting series of repetitions, each phase having its own peculiarities, yet all enforcing the same lesson—that unfaithfulness brings punishment.

The processes are uniform; first there was peace, and with it prosperity till the people forgot God, neglected His ordinances and only in cans. Sensations of a Bope Walker.

I am often asked as to my sensations when walking the rope; but if by that is meant of whether I feel fear or nervousness, I must belps me wonderfully in preserving my bal-ance. With my own weight and that of the balancing pole there must be about 230 pounds bearing on the rope, which naturally gives considerably, this sagging being one of the chief difficulties we have to encounter in keeping our balance. I prefer to perform in the open air; for in a hall or theatre even of the largest dimensions the vitiated air found
