[Compiled from Lemon Helper Quarterly, by per-mission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Palls-delphia.] After speaking the seven parables which are fully recorded in Matt. xiii, one of which, as given by Mark, was our lesson a week ago, He went the same day at evening into a boat to cross the sea of Galliee to the other side, and as they sailed He fell saleep, but a great storm arising, they awoke Him, and with a word, "Peace, be still," He rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm. Now, if by the deep they meant the Sea of Galilee, their request and after conduct would seem strange indeed; but the Revised Version Revised Version helps us by translating "abyss" instead of "the deep." The word is used seven times in Revelation (Rev. ix, 1, 2, 11; xi, 7; xvii, 8; xx, 1, 3) and in Lukev iii, 31; Rom x, 7. In the R. V. it is in all these places translated "abyss;" in the A. V. it is everywhere in Revelation "bottomless pit," and in the other two places "the deep." The request of the demons, then, was that Jesus would not shut them up in the abyss or bottomless pit.

The demons and the Gadarenes get their requests, but this man's is defied. Learn from this that answers to prayer do not always indicate love, nor denials anger. To be one with Him and rest in His will is everything. 20. "He departed and began to publish in Decapolis, how great things Jesus had done for him." We are saved to be his witnesses, the salt of the earth, the light of the world, cities on a hill, fruit bearing branches, living epistles; and to this end He gives to each believer His Spirit.
