"Act immediately," replied Tom, "but not rush up there like a mad bull. Listen to me. The course to pursue seems to me plain enough. The $hadow is here now, in the other room. I will send him up to Mott street to take observations, and to determine, as nearly as he can, in which of the four houses Miss Templeton is confined. This he can probably do exactly, for he is excellent at that sort of thing. While he has gone about this business, you and I will go to a friend of mine—the head of a private detective agency, and we will get from him a force of trusty men to assist us. But the first thing we must do will be to get out of this building unobserved by the "Seize him and tie him up." said Hol-"No," laughed Tom, "that won't do. We want him to remain here under the impression that we are still in this of-Noibrook, who had cooled down con-

The janitor killed and the mother and sister abhas keys to them all, and he can carry us through to the rear hall without it being necessary to go out on the one we ordinarily use. "The very thing," said Tom. "I'll send word to him at once." "Hold on a moment," interposed Tom.

"Send out a trusty clerk to him, and let the janitor come to us from the rear hall, unlocking the doors as he comes, Hanford." so that when we do leave we can go This was agreed and acted upon. In the meantime two other clerks went out into the hall, and in the presence of the spy had this conversation: "By secorge, it's hard lines, isn't it?"

"What's hard lines?" "Why, I promised my best girl to take her to Coney Island to-night, and here comes Mr. Holbrook in at a late hour and tells me not to go away, for he will have some copying for me to do." "Well, he'll be through by six." "Not be. Mr. Bryan and he have business that will keep them here until

To descend quickly by a corner staircase was but a moment's work, and the three were soon rapidly treading their way through while in the other it was written on rapidly treading their way through crowded Nassau street. At Printing House square the Shadow parted from them, turning to the east. Fom and Holbrook turned to the west and crossed the City Hall park. Reach on failing to distinguish any reseming Broadway, Tom led the way to the second floor of a building which faced upon the post office. Entering an office in the rear, a well built man, whose frame was suggestive of great strength, about forty-five years quite unlikely, however able the conold, arose and greeted Tom effusively. This was the chief of the private detective agency. Tom presented Holbrook and said "A word or two in private with you, "This way then, Tom." They entered than this hurried scrawl had done, and
