VOLUME ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-ONE With this issue of the Rahway Record we begin the first number of Volume 121 of a newspaper that has had a long and interesting history. It has been a daily, s i-weekly, and weekly paper these changes being made to suit the demands of the local community for a newspaper that could and would supply the news as there was need. A number of owners have directed its policy, and many editors have shaped the profundity of its editorials. The politics of the paper for the most part, has been the middleof-the-road variety, but standing squarely, always, for menand issues that would seem to retain the government in the hands of the people and provide the most of all good things one's mind-in thinking of Florence-art and the Medici.

A newspaper that serves the people well must be honest and fearless, and, as such, it cannot help but enjoy the confidence of the people. The Rahway Record has not hesi- breathed the breath of life into Florentine art, yet, it was tions, public officials or whatever counsel was needed for he good of the community.

The primary purpose of a newspaper is to disseminate news so that the community may be well informed. But it_must_also warn of dangers seen and unseen, speak encouragingly of those who are weak-and praise those who merit words of approval. As a weekly periodical, going into almost every home in Rahway, the Record has become a family bulletin, keeping the people posted on all the important incidents and events that take place in Rahway.

Politics has to do with the American way of life. With he demands of the war forcing dictatorial government upon the nation more and more, there is no greater service today that the newspaper can give than to keep the people informed of the inroads thus made on our form of general the war is over the nation may again return to its accepted democratic way of governing the return to its accepted democratic way of governing the nation. The Uffizi gallery and Pitti palace, almost as famous Europe as the Louvre, are preeminent in their collections i masterpieces. The Uffizi, though smaller than the Louvre at Paris, is recognized as having the finest paintings of any gallery in Europe, and the works of Botticelli and Raphael there are outstanding. The artist and the scholar were early drawn to Florence, for here, with the world's most distinguished painters, also lived Dante, and her writers of recognized fame.

The city was made historic during the period of the renaissance, by the erection of a most attractive tower by Giotto, a noted architect as well as painter, and the building of the cathedral of Santa Del Fiore, which s later decorated by the great master, Michael Angelo. Here also may be seen the Franciscan church of Santa Croce, with its noted chapel Pozzi, the Westminster Abbey of Italy, a magnificent structure, where many great and notable men of Italy lie buried. And in the Academy of Arts, among many works of the great masters, is found Michael Angelo's statue of David, a fine companion piece to his statue of Moses that resides in the Church of St. Peter's in vinculi in Rome.

Florence was the birthplace, and is today, the centre of European art. Here also was the seat of the family of the the wealthy family of DeMidici, merchants and bankers, a century later, that sponsored and encouraged art to the extent that Florence became the great art city of Europe, for painting and architecture reached their zenith durin Lthis period

Two schools flourished, the Florentine and the Venetian, Florentine art leaning strongly toward the religious and the mystical, while the Venetian school saw art largely in the nude, bordering on the sensuous. The Venetian school introduced the use of oil in painting. The Medici were patrons of both schools, and while one regrets the very black pages that occasionally appear in the long history of this-family, founded early in the Fifteenth century, yet the sordid is tempered somewhat hy the foot that the fredict gave to the Roman Catholic church two of its ecclesiastical heads, Pope Leo X and Pope Clement VII.
