THE YEAR 1945

The year 1944 holds out considerable promise for the United States in many different ways, with a dark cloud hanging in the background that indicates an aftermath of a year of war with no respite in sight.
 With the Allies holding what will probably be the last battle that will be made by the Nazis along the Siegfried line, and the continuance of Allied bombings of oil important industrial centers and transportation points in Germany, there seems every reason to believe that the war will be over early in the coming year. This, however, will not free industrial plants that are making war supplies, with Japan still to be obliterated.
 In the United States many more small industries will probably be reconverted as the months come and go, with the Government gradually releasing more and more of its war production so that smaller plants may continue in operation and get well established by the time Japan has been wiped out.

Prices and wages are bound to advance, the one following the other, each taking turn about, and dread inflation, with no legitimate outlet for the expenditure of "hot" pocket dynamite," only being kept from sweeping the country by drastic measures on the part of the Government.
 We will probably see discharged and returned several million of our boys, before the year has passed, many of whom will be placed in schools and kept by the Government on a dole.
 The good times, always enjoyed by a nation at war not avoided, are almost certain to continue in the United States until the war is over, with conditions in Europe growing worse and worse—the United States forced to furnish supplies of food and clothing to keep millions of people from starving to death.

The people of this country, so well favored in the past, having kept the enemy away from their shores, will find themselves, during 1945, depending upon the Government more than ever, not only to keep the nation going, but to keep it from cracking up.
 The syphoning off of all surplus wages, in savings and in war bond investments will be the surest method for the people to help the Government over a situation that is becoming more and more critical, and which will probably continue unabated through the year 1945.

LET MOTHERS BE ON GUARD

Whether American mothers wish or not, there seems to be every evidence that the United States is destined to have some form of compulsory military training. The question should not be permitted to be brought to a vote in Congress until the international issue of a World Court and military police to enforce world order is first settled.
 If it is decided that there shall be military police to enforce world peace—which we doubt very much will ever come to pass—then, of course, the United States will be called upon to maintain a large military organization, but if there is not, why should there be compulsory military education?

In the first place, the very fact that we have compulsory military training, implies, on the face of it, that we are looking for another war. If we expect another war it will be because the allied nations deliberately choose it, military training encouraging it. If we, as a nation, prepare for another war, it is an admission that the U. S. Army, the U. S. Navy and the big munition and shipbuilding plants of the United States are in control of the military policy of the nation and are going to continue to exert that influence as long as the people will be fooled into letting them do so.

All wars can be avoided if the majority power of a league of nations shall simply say that all international differences must and shall be settled by an arbitration court. In this, the United States should take the lead. But that will never come to pass in our day, because it would mean practically putting the ammunition plants of the nation out of business. These cannot exist unless we have a big war every generation, as we have had ever since this nation came into existence.

The only need of compulsory military training is to maintain an army and navy of sufficient strength to meet world needs, providing that cannot be met by volunteers for the service. It has not only been demonstrated in this war, but there has been given the testimony of a number of our leading army officers, that six weeks is ample time to train an army of men for general service in the U. S. Army or in the U. S. Navy. Why then should there be compulsory training?

That a Christian nation should not wage war at all, under any circumstance, is the unmistakable teaching of Christ—the brotherhood of man absolutely precludes war—and that civilized human beings should ever favor war, except when attacked, as the United States was by Japan, just does not make sense.

While war may advance science along some lines, yet its terrible toll of lives, its gigantic cost in money, and its paralyzing effect on the nations participating, as witnessed today in Europe, should discourage any and every effort on our part to engage in war, except when a majority of the nations refuse to unite to outlaw war as a social condition inconceivable to civilized nations.

Everything went along nicely until the second year, when the first baby came to the White family, and his hair was coal black. The owner of the farm was incensed and ordered the man to vacate. The man went into court and won the case. The judge decided the color of the child's hair was an act of God, and was not subject to the wish of its father.

Babies have had a hard time of it in the world—at least ever since the time of Moses, who, however, did not fare so badly with Pharaoh's daughter.

As soon as they can toddle they are "children," and while children are found to be necessary to preserve the human race, children are not wanted in most apartments that are rented. However, we have never felt this an injustice, because children are more or less destructive, even when well trained, for you never know when a child, full of life, pep and energy will do at any given moment.

They may pull a doily off the parlor table onto the floor, and a bottle of ink with it, or tip the dining-room table over. They may turn on a faucet, while the mother is over to the neighbors, letting the water run all over the floor and through the ceiling of the rooms below. They may make the parlor walls a picture gallery or leave a big scratch on the parlor door, without provocation, and almost while you are watching them to see they do nothing of the kind. These accidents just must not be avoided with children.

In the case of the Teals, the baby was considered a "nuisance," possibly because of frequent squalls heard from the Nursery apartment. There might be other reasons, but the will was made that a piano, or even a vocal, and it would be no violation of OPA regulation, even though it required a little more heat in the apartment because of the infant's health. All those things are taken care of by the OPA. The judge, therefore, found no violations could be sustained and dismissed the case. The helpless infant had won.

Franklin Rose Company, No. 2, had a pig and "possum" roast Monday night, which was well-attended and thoroughly enjoyed. Frank Ryno was carver-in-chief, (and we are informed he is an expert in that line.) Besides the roast pig, there were three possums, one fat chicken and one extra fat, with the usual embellishments upon such occasions, not forgetting the liquid refreshment. It being Christmas eve, our representative was unable to accept the invitation to be present, but his mouth has watered ever since he heard what was there.

Rahway 25 Years Ago

"Old friends are best," said Seldon, the English writer, way back in the 17th century, and it was never more truly typified than on Saturday evening, when the members of the Gray Bible class of the Second Presbyterian Church, War, were given a rousing welcome home at a banquet at the Cross Keys Inn. That old friends applies was evidenced by the fact that the returned heroes were greeted by "Bugs," "Stew," "Mollie," "Dock," "Ed," "Rats" and such other familiar appellations as would indicate years of intimate relationship, which had grown even more tender and permanent through the temporary separation. Not one of the boys could feel that his service to his country and to the world in general, by the part he took in the great conflict, was not appreciated to the fullest extent.

Rahway 15 Years Ago

While 1,200 children stamped and shouted their approval of the program staged for their benefit Christmas morning at the Rahway Theatre, their hosts, the Rahway Lodge of Elks, stood aside or assisted in the program, an occasion required, and reflected on the spontaneous way that their young charges received their efforts. The program was perfect, according to the children, but then, when kids get together, directed by a group of godfathers who know how to do the right thing for a fellow, and when the day is topped off with a generous gift of candy for each one, almost any program would be applauded to the skies. The dog in Rin-Tin-Tin just about pleased the kids down to the ground, and when the big animal leaped from the top of a two or three story building into a moving machine to upset the equanimity of the villain and bring confusion to his nefarious plans, nothing could have been more acceptable, unless it had been Babe Ruth himself who took the jump.

Rahway 10 Years Ago

A Republican council bowed its way out of the 1934 picture into history Friday night and left behind it several choice plums, which indigestion within the party caused to be left untouched. Heartier Democratic appetites are expected to gobble these same plums without much ado. The spoils had been in the outgoing council's keeping, since July, but remained undisturbed until the very last. The omission gives the incoming Democratic council, in addition to a full share of other appointments, the opportunity of naming a tax assessor and caretaker and special officer at the First Ward wading pool.

GIVEN PROMINENT ROLE

David Mostovsky, son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Mostovsky, of 1184 Fulton street, had a prominent role in the Ithaca College drama department's production of A. A. Milne's "The Tigger Book," that was produced for three nights in the Little Theatre of Ithaca, N. Y. Professional casts have presented the play on both the London and New York stages.

Dry Cleaning Prices Ceiled

Dry cleaning and pressing establishments in North Jersey are receiving this week price ceiling lists on which they are required to enter their dollars-and-cents ceiling prices for 12 services. They are required to display the lists by January 15 for the benefit of customers. This was announced by District OPA Director Richard J. Tarrant.

The price posters, listing four items of men's wear, and eight items of women's wear, will show each retailer's ceiling price for cleaning and pressing these garments. The prices will be itemized for "Clean and Press," "Press Only," and for "wash and dry" for five years; G. Stanley Hoyt, Jacob W. Doll and Frederick R. Kalmus conducted the installation ceremony.

1942. Boards will check the lists to see that the correct ceilings are listed.

THE AMERICAN FORUM

The old general store with its cracker box and old-fashioned counter—the forerunner of the American forum. It was a place of freedom of speech and discussion of political issues. Forums in the old town hall, on the air, in the press, carry on the American's heritage of Free Speech—and Free Enterprise. Let us preserve this heritage, for through it and it alone can a great America be of aid to an arrested civilization.
