JESSIE'S SISTER.

(Concluded.)
"You are still more fortunate than I," I return, somewhat bitterly, "inasmuch as Miss Frohman has given me more—what I have I took."
Love looks at Anna to see how she will receive this. She colors faintly.
"I beg your pardon if I have been wanting in politeness, cousin Val."
"I am sorry you should imply such a thing from my words," I answer half-sarcastically, and, feeling that am getting very warm over something—though I scarcely know what —I go and cool myself by a saunter through the conservatory, which runs along two sides of the house.
The rooms are crowded when I go to Anna for my first dance, and it is with difficulty that I make my way to her. Perhaps the blaze of light, the perfume of flowers, the whirling figures around me, and the entrancing music have all combined to turn my brain—perhaps it is none of these, but the slow fire in my own heart; still, be it as it may, the strong excitement which I feel to-night leads me on—careless of how I may offend or astonish—to say a good deal that I should not in my usual frame of mind.

"This is our dance, Anna," I say, shouldering my way through a knot of her adherents, with a bold assurance of tone and manner that makes them fall back.

"I believe it is," she replies, looking rather surprised as she meets my unassuming smile.

I lead her a little way before I speak again—
"Our first dance for ten years, Anna."

"I have never danced with you cousin Val."

"What—not when you were a little girl, and I used to come to your Christmas-parties?"

"No; we never danced together." Something in her tone sends an odd regretful thrill through my heart.
I bend lower over her golden head till my lips almost brush the glittering tresses of her hair.

"Did I never ask you, Anna?"
"No"—in a whisper.

For a minute neither of us speaks.
At last she begins to gather up her dress in preparation.

"Come, Anna," I say; "we are losing the best of this; then, as we encircle her with my arm, and we glide round to the old "Guares";"
"You must forgive me, Anna; I was a brute."

We say no other word during the brief exquisite five minutes we spend together. I am scarcely conscious of anything save that for the moment she is mine, that her lovely angel-like head is near my shoulder, her soft breath sometimes on my cheek.

When it is over, I give her up to her next partner, and go away.
I dance very little after that. Jessie is in great request, and gives me only one quadrille. Lizzie, seeing that I do not care about it, forbears to remonstrate; so for the greater part of the time I stand against the wall or disturb desperate flirtations in the conservatory and many a black look do I get for my pains.

I commence an eager search for my promised partner for the dance before supper; but nowhere is he to be found. I think I have searched every corner of the conservatory and hunted through all the rooms, and at last I stand gnawing my mustache in vexation, watching the very dance I should have joined with Anna.

I turn lounging by the glass doors of the conservatory, looking on savage at the whirling couples, when a well-known voice falls upon my ear.

"At least tell me if I have a rival." I turned round sharply. There are white curtains hung on either side of the doors, and through the inner ones I see indistinctly two figures, one dark and the other light. I do not do what all honorable gentlemen would be supposed to do in such a case—walk away instantly beyond hearing. I stand up close to the hinges of the door, with my ear as near the crack as may be, without attracting the attention of those in the ball-room. It may be unpleasant; I do not care. I will hear something at any rate; for, if I mistake not, it nearly concerns me.

In my astonishment and subsequent movement to a better position for my eavesdropping, I miss her answer, and it is Lowe's voice which again greets my ears.

"Perhaps I have no business to ask such a question," he says, in deep thoughtfulness; "but I cannot give up hope unless I know that another has won what I crave. I shall never give up until then."

"Then let me assure you at once, Mr. Lowe," rejoins Anna, in gentle but very decided accents, "that I can give you no other answer at any time, and am very sorry that I have caused you pain, but indeed I have no idea—"

"I always thought you cared for—"

"For your sister?" he questions.

"So I thought I did—till I saw you."

"Poor beggar!" I say to myself.
"How could you think it was she I loved?" Lowe says, "when I never left your side, when I saw and heard no one but you?"

"Indeed, Mr. Lowe," she protests gently, "I never thought of myself in the matter at all; I supposed that, when my cousin returned from India and took up so much of Jessie's time, you contented yourself with my company in the absence of hers."

"Before he came," begins Lowe with passionate eagerness, and then brings a sudden hoarseness that strikes a grim smile to my lips.

RAHWAY, N. J., APRIL 16, 1884.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican electors of New Jersey, and all other voters, without regard to political differences, who are in favor of elevating and dignifying American labor, and of securing to the masses of the people, the right of suffrage and all the rights and privileges of citizenship, are hereby invited to assemble at the city of Trenton, on THURSDAY, THE 19th OF APRIL, at 12 o'clock noon, for the purpose of electing four delegates to the National Convention, to be held at Chicago, June 12th next, for the purpose of electing a President and Vice President, to be supported at the next general election. The basis of representation under this call will be one delegate for each two hundred Republican votes cast at the last Presidential election, and one delegate for each fraction thereof exceeding one hundred votes. The delegates for each two hundred votes, provided that every township, ward and precinct, legally defined as such (as in Jersey City), shall be represented by at least one delegate.

Under the rules prescribed by the National Republican Committee the Republicans of each Congressional district have the option of electing their delegates to the National Convention either in conventions held in the respective districts within fifteen days next prior to the meeting of the State Convention, or as sub-divisions of such State Convention, but the practice in this State having informally been to select the district delegates at large, it is recommended that this usage be adhered to and that the delegates to the State Convention from the several Congressional districts, meeting as distinctive Congressional Conventions in Trenton on the day of the State Convention, and one delegate each to the National Convention.

By order of the Republican State Committee.

CLARET A. HOBART, Chairman.
JOHN Y. FOSTER, Secretary.

WEATHER REPORT.

Table with 4 columns: Date, Time, Weather, and Temperature. Rows include data for April 24, 25, and 26.

Mr. George F. Brown, the druggist, has the latest New York city directory at his store, for the accommodation of the public.

LOCAL NEWS.

The Water Board meets to-night. There was a false alarm of fire, Monday evening, about 8 o'clock.

The official canvass of the result of the election, held Tuesday of last week, is published in another part of this paper.

Mr. George M. Friese, the railway agent for the Bessel chaffed pipes, reports that he is receiving an unexpected number of inquiries.

There is to be a grand temperance rally at the Opera House to-night. A delegation will be present from the various churches and societies.

Mr. William H. Hall, having received eleven votes for Constable, in the 34th Ward, at the election last week, was regularly declared elected to the office.

The well known Clothing House of Colyer & Co., Broad street, Newark, is visited by a throng of people of all ages.

Since the announcements were made for the temperance meeting to be held this evening, the committee in charge has learned that a choir of about twenty singers will accompany the pianist.

Remember the Grand Musical and Literary entertainment at the Opera House next Tuesday night, and the musicals of the Railway Amateur Musical Union.

Quite some excitement was created in Cherry street, Tuesday night, Mr. H. Simmons had his house tied in front of Avery's shoe store, and when Columbia Drum and Life Corps paraded through the street, the horse became frightened and began to charge.

Mr. Fred W. Dunham, has accepted a position in the choir of the First Presbyterian church of this city as precursor. It is unnecessary for us to comment upon Mr. Dunham's singing as his abilities are well known by many hearers.

The term "Amateur politicians" which our neighbor has evolved from his fertile brain is a set of reflection upon the abilities and motives of certain members of the Union Club.

The Second Annual Convention of the New Jersey Sunday School Association for the third district, comprising the counties of Essex, Hudson, Union, and Warren, will be held in the Presbyterian church, Woodbridge, N. J., on Wednesday April 23, 1891.

Interesting sessions will be held, Monday afternoon and evening, and the services of eminent workers in this field have been secured. There will be an introductory service of great interest on Tuesday evening, April 25th.

Rev. J. J. Hurlbut, Rev. J. M. McNeely, Rev. A. H. Lewis, Rev. W. H. Brodie, Dr. James V. Foster, Dr. W. Woodard, Dr. J. C. Curwies, Jas. H. Durand, G. Thorne, Dr. Wm. Edgus, Committee.

There is to be voting at the Argus Circle fair to-day, this evening, and to-morrow afternoon and evening, for articles, to be awarded to the most popular young lady member of the Sentinel Archery Club, and the most popular Physicist in the city.

At a meeting of "Washington Hose Co. No. 1," the following officers were elected, to serve during the ensuing year.

Do not fail to go to the Argus Circle Fair. It is for the benefit of the church of the Holy Comforter, and is to be held in the large rooms over Shann & Son's store, Main street.

The "Church workers of St. Paul's Church," will hold grand fair on Thursday and Friday evenings, April 24th and 25th, children's collection on Friday.

The Easter Anniversary of the Sunday School of the church of the Holy Comforter, was held at the church on Sunday, April 22nd.
