RAHWAY, N. J., MAY 6, 1885.

Even 14 in. talk lines failed to talk the wizards of the blue.

Mr. Keiley to be consoled by sauerkraut for the loss of his macaroni.

Newark has reorganized its Board of Health under the state law.

The United Kingdom spent in 1884 for liquor over $20,000,000, of which about $372,000,000 went for beer.

The Russia-England dispute with its hundreds of convulsion distorted names is a terrible strain on the "coups."

The great political drama goes on, every appointment not being ushered in by a chorus from the kickers.

They say that Postmaster Ward of Newark would be less dangerous in the post-office than out of it and so let him stay.

Fred Douglas praises the present administration to be more valuable were they less attributable to interested motives.

The Macon Telegraph thus muses on the muggies: "The trouble with the deserters is that it is always more costly to feed them after they have left their flag than fight them when serving under it."

The laugh is on the other side of the mouth now. The Mormons have found out that the Edmunds bill amounts to something after all. The U. S. prosecutor, after conferring Angus M. Cannon one of the Mormon leaders as a polygamist.

Senator McPherson thinks that "office seekers are the most hated class in the community." This will not prevent them, however, from swallowing their tongues and public and still hanging on to the coat tails of this man of influence.

The funny man of the Tribune is responsible for the statement that the following is being distributed among the different departments in Washington: "Notice - Any office detected in the act of seeking an old red handanna will be immediately dismissed."

The poor people of Vineland have a friend in school teacher who offers to sell coal on the installment plan allowing his customers to lay in their winter's supply and pay twenty-five cents a week for each ton, thus enabling them to take advantage of the low summer rates. May not this be a good hint to other dealers?

One of our funny exchanges thinks that "the crowned head that is set to act as arbitrator between England and Russia had better umpire a few preliminary base ball games," because "it is just possible that if they should be dissatisfied they might plug the referee even if they cracked a crowned head in doing it."

The Trenton Times has found that the Taylor Opera House was worthy of occasional censure as well as occasional praise. The opera house managers did not look at it in that light, so cut off the Times from complimentary tickets and advertising patronage. It is well that the advertising public should know that, taffy does not always go with advertising space.

A colored clergyman of Charlotte, N. C., who weighs 320 pounds and is six feet ten inches in height, has ordered and received a pair of shoes twenty inches in length and seven and a half inches in the greatest width. The Democrat would no doubt say that he will now have a big bill to foot, taking special pains to put "foot" in quotation marks that the point of the joke might not escape its readers.

The missing witness, who it was claimed by Orton would be able to identify him as Roger Tichborne, is said to have turned up in San Francisco. Orton has served his term of banishment and has been in England for about a year. He is still at work trying to prove himself the Tichborne heir. The newly discovered witness will be sent to England so that there is some prospect of a repetition of the world famous trial.

Says Senator McPherson in an interview published in the Trenton Times: "A true Jersey democrat stands by his party for the love of it and not for the promise of office." President Cleveland seems to have fully believed in the truth of this in the appointment of appointments. New Jersey is ever faithful to Democracy and thus is love rewarded. New Jersey's is indeed a sad case of unrequited affection.

It is mean we know to take advantage of the infirmities of age, but we cannot resist the temptation to an occasional idle moment to stir up the kind hearted and well meaning, but irascible elderly occupant of the Woodbridge Republic's editorial chair. This time, not satisfied with blasting our ambitious by being us an "extremely youthful individual," he is sure to remain him "very much of a six weeks' old examinee deprived of his mother's care." Is there any wonder that we cannot resist the temptation when we are treated to such choice bits of humorous reply as these?

Our announcement of Judge Magie's conversion to tricycling has created considerable newspaper comment throughout the state. Says the Camden Press:

"Ancient and honorable as are the laws of New Jersey, and the methods through which they are administered, it is shown that the spirit and progress of the age is fully exemplified in those commissioned to administer the laws aforesaid. These remarks are justified by the fact that Judge Magie, of the Supreme Court, has provided himself with a new Humber tandem tricycle, with which he and his daughter take an airing in the Elizabeth boulevards. The New Jersey Supreme court has never failed to inspire respect from other courts and judges of other states and countries - save and except in the case of the Lord Chief Justice of England - but a New Jersey Supreme court with a Humber tricycle attachment is something that Chief Justice Coleridge will trifle with at his peril."

The term "chestnut" as applied to an old joke has been resurrected and now occupies a prominent place in the slang of the day. By way of accounting for its origin and removing an erroneous popular impression the Chicago Times says: "It is with genuine satisfaction we learn that the term 'chestnut,' as applied in the colloquial slang of the day to a stale joke, implies no reflection upon the character of the chestnut of commerce and the Italian roasting machine. A gentleman with every appearance of authority, 'chestnut,' as appropriately applied to a joke, was first used concerning some literary whimsies in the performance of a minstrel company at the Chestnut Street theater, Philadelphia. One of these was reprinted in the 'Globe' of the Continental hotel in this city and the theater promptly reprinted on the ground that the Chestnut Street theater had a copyright on the word 'chestnut' to every story they heard frequently repeated. 'Without this explanation the public might have gone on using the term 'chestnut,' supposing all the time that it derived its slang significance from the very unpleasant sensation occasioned by biting into a 'most seeming fair' nut of the cutaneous vulgaris only to fill the mouth with the bitterness of its mold or the dustiness of its nut."

THE MAYORS MESSAGE.

TO THE HONORABLE, THE COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF RAHWAY.

GENTLEMEN: On the principle that it is the duty of the citizen to accept a public trust, when called upon, I assume a personal responsibility in this matter and inexperience in public affairs would not have prevented me from accepting the honor of the office of Mayor of this city. The City Charter makes it the duty of the Mayor to communicate to the Common Council at each meeting in each year, a general statement of the financial and other affairs of the city, in relation to its government and finances, with such recitals as may be necessary to explain the same. It is my duty to report to you the financial and other affairs of the city, in relation to its government and finances, with such recitals as may be necessary to explain the same. It is my duty to report to you the financial and other affairs of the city, in relation to its government and finances, with such recitals as may be necessary to explain the same.

FINANCES.

First, the unfortunate condition of our city financially, has already attracted too much attention. It is a condition which is not only a disgrace to our city, but a source of great embarrassment to our citizens. The City Charter makes it the duty of the Mayor to communicate to the Common Council at each meeting in each year, a general statement of the financial and other affairs of the city, in relation to its government and finances, with such recitals as may be necessary to explain the same. It is my duty to report to you the financial and other affairs of the city, in relation to its government and finances, with such recitals as may be necessary to explain the same.

THOUSANDS SAY SO

T. W. Adams, Grand, Kan., writes: "I never hesitated to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers. Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known, will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Geo. W. Brown, Boston, Mass."

NOT A SINGLE GRAY HAIR

"You may laugh and think me a vain thing," writes Mrs. J. R. C. of San Francisco, to a friend in this city, "but I have not a gray hair in my head, and yet (and say) I am fifty and a day. Recently my hair was not only quite gray but quite thin. Parker's Hair Balsam made in New York, I think, still wonders for me. Try it if you have occasion. It really does what I say, and restores the color also. Not a dye, not greasy, highly perfumed. Only reliable 50c. dressing."

COMMERCIAL SCHOOLS

Our public schools have been conducted during the year with great economy and highly satisfactory results. The year has been marked by the more than usual number of our children who attend school, in proportion to the number of our population. ANOTHER VICTORY OVER THE MEDICINE MAN OF NEW BRUNSWICK

Read the following editorial from the New Brunswick Daily Home News, Wednesday, March 25, 1885: A MARVELOUS CURE. A Home News reporter having heard of the restoration of the sight of a young woman named Annie M. Edick called at the house where she lived. Edick had been blind for several years, and had been treated by various medical men, but had not been cured. The reporter called on Prof. Wilson, who had been cured of his blindness, and who had been cured of his blindness, and who had been cured of his blindness.

ness has he to go behind the scenes? George, do you know he is a Courtier? What does that matter? If he were a beggar he would be the same kind—

"Do you think he will marry you?" George drew herself up proudly. "Of course he will; but, M. Michaud, do not imagine it is his rank I care for."

"No, George, I know you do not; but, my child, life is not like the stage." M. Michaud's voice was trembling; he was so grieved for George; he was so grieved for her; he was so grieved for her; he was so grieved for her.

"You are so good," continued George, hurriedly. "My best friend, I know I am asking what I never ought to ask, and yet—"

"George, when I asked you on this very seat to give me your promise, I believed you would be true to it. I said to myself, George is not like other girls, she will say yes, and mean it; she will not think herself free till I release her."

"And you thought right, Monsieur. I have done nothing underhand, nothing to be ashamed of. You said we should be released, and I still feel bound by my word and yours."

"And I, George," said M. Michaud, "taking off his hat for a moment, as if he were performing a religious duty, "and I, George, before Heaven, I will not release you."

M. Michaud might have sat a long time on the seat, plunged in deep thought, only, curious enough, his cousin came by almost immediately, and catching sight of him laughingly warned him that he was courting death in the shape of a bronchitis.

"Take a turn with me, mon cousin," continued Blaise. "I want to speak to you. I want to tell you I am going to leave Paris soon."

"So I am, but there's something better than money or fame—peace of mind; mine will be gone if I stay longer, and to say the truth—don't forget my impertinent—is about Mlle. George. Do not look so astonished, Gustave, I haven't a thought I would wish to hide, only, of course, she is beautiful, and you—well, you have won her, and you are my cousin."

M. Michaud's face was a study at this moment; and the mouth that had been drawn into a full and relaxed smile almost parted his lips, an expression of kindness broke over his face, making its plainness invisible.

"Blaise, give me your hand. You are a noble fellow! You would throw up your appointments rather than win from me."

"Yes, I would. Not that it is easy; and of course you know you did throw me in her way."

"You haven't told her this?" "What do you take me for?" "Forgive me! Only, Blaise, she loves another, not me nor you, but a man I believe to be a scoundrel. He goes on yet further, Blaise, help me to find this out to my sick him, and George will—I know her, and she will herself recoil from him as a dove would from a snake."

Never before had Blaise Michaud had such a struggle with himself. He had so far acted rightly; but how could he go farther, and help to snatch George from one who loved it in order that his elderly cousin should keep her for himself? And yet surely this cousin was fond of George and good.

As to George, would she not be happier with the worthy Michaud than with a villain? If she could be saved from such a fate, would any sacrifice be too great, even if she never knew to whom she owed her happiness? And Blaise accepted the offer.

"Look here, Gustave, between us, as you say, we can find out this man, show her what her fate would be, and—if it is as you think—"

"Then I hope George may still be M. Michaud's fiancée," said the elder man wringing his cousin's hand. "Blaise, mon ami, I am glad you hunted me out when you came to Paris." Blaise murmured an inaudible answer, but it certainly was not "So am I." Rather he desired heartily that he had never cast his eyes on Gustave Michaud and George, his fiancée.

The world seemed suddenly convulsed for George when she left M. Michaud's side; but she knew she must try and set her ideas straight before the evening, when she should see Henri Delbes, to give him her final answer. She had promised that, and though she had cried bitterly over the thought of asking for release, yet never for a moment had she believed M. Michaud would say no. Now as she hurried along towards home she called him wicked, selfish, cruel; and then again she looked back on his unvarying kindness, his patience, his goodness to her, and she was tortured by her ingratitude.
