Even if failure may be fairly said to have marked the first grand stage of our latest African campaign, those who have taken part in it can, with a clear conscience, wash their hands of the blood of the just person they were sent to rescue; for, as a matter of fact, as soon as the route—right or wrong-was decided on, there was absolutely not one day's delay from start to finish

And such a finish! Exquisitel sad to all, from the general command to the humblest member of the expedition; and, let us charitably suppose, not without some tinge of sadness to those on whom the terrible weight of the respon sibility of the delay and consequent catastrophe must ever lie.

Probably no campaign was eve entered upon, the end of which after an exceedingly short time was more eagerly longed for by all concerned, though in various

Longed for, probably, by it commander, who must have always foreseen that a check such as h has experienced would, if its effects were to be counteracted and the status quo recovered, inevitably lead to many months of compara tive inaction for his troops in one of the most trying climates in the world. Longed for by those who volunteered to take part in it fondly hoping to have been ere now on their triumphal return home, ready to account to all and sundry the stirring events and incidents, the relation of which becomes so much more lifelike with the pleasing preface of quorum pars fui. And, last but not least, longed for by those few who, having spent the anxious and uncertain months of last spring and summer in the unsupported Nubian out posts, had hoped that now, at all events, their warfare was accomplished, and that they were not doomed, as is their lot, to pass the burning summer in the rather less risky posts they presently occupy on the line of communications.
