Bank robber kills area man

By DAN BREEN

IRVINGTON — Bank manager John Luley, a Middletown resident, was shot and killed yesterday morning during a robbery at the Investors Savings and Loan Association branch he managed.

Police here said last night they "have nothing to go on" but vague descriptions in their search for the three men who held up the Stuyvesant Avenue bank at 9:20 a.m.

Relatives and friends gathered all day yesterday at Luley's home on Elmwood Avenue in the Leonardo section of Middletown to comfort his wife, Marsha, and the couple's two sons, aged 7 and 3.

Deputy Chief John P. Clark said Luley, who serves as president of the Middletown Kiwanis Club, was shot "for no apparent reason."

Three young black males entered the bank, brandishing guns, Clark said, and one of them told everybody to get down on the floor as the others hopped over the bank counter and began emptying drawers.

Witnesses to the robbery and murder told police Luley was at his desk on the telephone when the gunmen arrived. He turned around after the announcement and the gunman in the lobby then fired a single shot which hit Luley in the upper left side of his chest, Clark said.

"Evidently, he heard the announcement of the holdup and turned to look, and that's when the guy standing in the middle of the bank shot him," Clark said.

"He (Luley) didn't know what was going on," Clark added. "Witnesses said he offered no resistance."

The gunmen then fled out the bank's back door, leaped over a nearby fence and sped off in a waiting car, black with a maroon roof, and possibly a Thunderbird, Clark said.

"We don't know where they went from there," the deputy chief added.

Luley was pronounced dead at the scene at 9:35 a.m.

The amount of money taken in the holdup could not be determined yesterday, police said.

The 36-year-old bank manager had been a township resident since December 1975, neighbors said, just before he became the branch manager of the Investor Savings and Loan Association office in Navesink on Route 36, Middletown.

At the time of his death, he was president of the Middletown Kiwanis Club and active in community affairs, said John F. Pflieger, a long-time friend of Luley's.

Pflieger and Luley's pastor, Rev. Richard L. Wilson of the United Methodist Church of Middletown, helped break the news of the shooting to Marsha Luley.

Wilson said last night that he was troubled and exhausted after spending most of yesterday with Luley's family.

"I don't know what to say — I haven't had time to think about John or what I'd say about him," the minister said.

Pflieger said the incident was "just awful." "I just talked to him Monday — at someone else's funeral," said Pflieger, a township funeral

Man charged as a major state bookie

By ANDREW SHEEHAN

HOLMDEL — It was what they call a textbook bust.

A 1982 Cadillac pulled into a parking lot off Route 34 at approximately 4 p.m. yesterday with a 6-foot-3, 290-pound man sitting behind the wheel.

Another unidentified man described as an accomplice stepped out of his car, approached the Cadillac, and began speaking with the driver. After the men engaged in three minutes of chat, two Monmouth County investigators stepped out of their cars and approached the Cadillac.

Other county men stepped out of two other cars in the lot and another ran from his car to a gas station across the street.

Two township police cars screeched to a halt in front of the lot's two entrances. Two officers with shotguns jumped out and approached the growing crowd around the Cadillac, but the man behind the wheel had already decided not to resist.

County Chief of Detectives Frank Licitra slapped handcuffs around the wrists of Donald Hingos, a 42-year-old ex-Newark policeman, suspected of being one of the largest bookmakers in the state.

"That's the beauty of this type of arrest," Licitra said as his men guided the hulky Hingos into a police car. "You move in quick and hard and they can't beat you."

Paul J. Feldman, senior staff attorney in the county prosecutor's office, said Hingos of Clark is believed to have headed a massive bookmaking operation dealing in sports betting in both New Jersey and New York.

"In New Jersey alone he was taking action in excess of $1 million a week," he said.

Driving back to Freehold to request a granted bail request of $50,000 from Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr., Feldman described the Hingos as a man "interested in taking bets on almost anything."

"He probably would have made a bet on whether he'd get arrested today and given you great odds he wouldn't be," Feldman said.

Feldman, who has headed a three-year crackdown on sports betting and bookmaking in the county, charged Hingos with three counts of conspiracy to promote gambling pending additional charges.

He said the county seized from the car $37,500 in cash, $23,000 in checks and the records of betting transactions between Hingos and his clients.

Later in the evening, Prosecutor Alexander D. Lehrer received a phone call from two of his investigators in the Elmhurst section of Queens, New York. At approximately 8 p.m., Lehrer said, the investigators in conjunction with the Manhattan South Public Morals squad arrested two men suspected of working for Hingos.

Lehrer said authorities arrested Allan Pinus of Queens and George Freoline of Scotch Plains and seized "tremendous amount" of gambling records in the house.

Feldman described the two men as "sitters."

"A sitter is a guy who works on a salary basis for a major bookmaker," Feldman began. "He takes the bets over the phone and relays

LEAVES HEARING — Charles E. Quoris, accompanied by his lawyer, leaves municipal court last night after his hearing on sexual assault charges.

19-year-old charged in rape of woman, 83

By DAN BREEN

MIDDLETOWN — A 19-year-old East Keansburg man arrested early Wednesday in connection with the Nov. 9 rape, assault and robbery of a 83-year-old township woman faced a hearing in municipal court last night on the charges.

Charles E. Quoris, of 60 Baldwin Ave., was arrested at his home at 4 a.m. Wednesday and charged with aggravated sexual assault, robbery, aggravated assault, and impersonating a police officer in connection with the rape of the 83-year-old woman and a similar incident that occurred in September, police said.

At last night's hearing, Municipal Court Judge Kenneth Jodi read the charges to side.

According to the charges, Quoris entered the woman's house in the early morning hours and attacked her in her bed. He also brandished a knife and threatened her with it, thereby committing robbery, and slapped her in the face, according to the charges.

Bail was set at $50,000, Joel said. Quoris also was charged with four disorderly persons offenses for allegedly impersonating a police officer to four different women on various dates in September.

Detective Lt. Walter Monahan would not disclose details pertaining to the three-month investigation.

After the Nov. 9 incident, police issued a bulletin for a dark-haired young man, possibly Hispanic.

At the time, Police Chief Joseph McCarthy called the crime "heinous" and pledged an "intensive, all-out effort" to make an arrest in the case.

In November, police said the rape and robbery might be related to September incidents in which a man with a similar description appeared at at least one East Keansburg residence and identified himself as a member of the "county narcotics strike force" to a woman who answered the door.

The man threatened to rape the woman, who also was elderly, and then stole her purse and fled, police said.

Investigating the incidents were Detective Sgt. William Brunt, Detective Stephen Xanthos and Patrolman James J. Murphy.

The charges, Joel said, would be turned over to Monmouth County Prosecutor Alex- See 19-year-old, page A4

Report charges CETA plan fails

By JOEL SIEGEL

FREEHOLD — The county's "hardcore economically disadvantaged" were inadequately helped last year by the county's multi-million dollar job training and placement program funded under CETA, the federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, a federal review of the county program charges.

The review, prepared by the U.S. Department of Labor's regional office in New York, also says the program placed 31 percent less participants into "private sector" jobs than planned.

"You are serving the most employable of the unemployed to the detriment of the most severely economically disadvantaged who have substantial barriers to employment," the review says. "This practice is contrary to both the stated intention and spirit of the CETA act."

In 1982, county CETA's budget was $3.6 million, of which $1 million was funneled to PIC, the Monmouth County Private Industry Council. PIC is an appointed body of business and civic leaders in charge of certain CETA activities in an effort to involve the business community in employment and training programs.

The review, dated Dec. 20, covers fiscal year 1982, a 12-month period ending Sept. 30. During that time bitter feuds erupted between PIC and the county Board of Freeholders, and also between PIC and the larger CETA program, over the operation of PIC programs.

David Riley, an area administrator of CETA programs for the Department of Labor, says the "desk review" of the county's program "is worded about as strongly as we tend to get."

But he said the county's program "is by no means at the bottom of the barrel," compared with other such programs in the state. "It's somewhere between heaven and hell," he said.

In addition, he said the area's poor economy may be the reason why job placement goals were never met. "We could have been more harsh, had we not considered the times we live in," Riley said.

According to the review, the "vast majority" of those served by county CETA programs last year were not the hardcore poor and disadvantaged targeted by the county's 1982 CETA plan. The review calls this "creaming."

A total of 1,910 persons were served by CETA Title IIB programs, which includes

Long Branch weighs earlier bar closing

By W.L. HAACKER

LONG BRANCH — Following an impassioned plea from a fellow legislator, the City Council at its regular meeting last night indicated it would favor closing down community bars an hour earlier to halt the pilgrimage of drunken drivers into town.

Sea Bright Councilman Charles F. Rooney asked council to consider moving back the closing hours for the town's taverns one hour to 2 a.m. to stop drunks from driving into town for one more hour of imbibing after the surrounding community's saloons had closed.

"I've been a councilman for 16 years and I've seen more car accidents caused by drunk drivers than I care to mention," he said. Rooney said he started his crusade five years ago when he managed to get officials of Sea Bright's neighbor, Highlands, to agree to the earlier closing if he could institute such a change in his town.

"I favor the uniform closing," he told council. "I'm an ultra-conservative who doesn't like the state telling us what to do — ask your (police) chief if he doesn't think the 3 a.m. closing time isn't dangerous."

Rooney said roads into Long Branch were treacherous when a driver has been drinking. "I think if you can get Asbury and Red Bank to adopt similar plans it would be worthwhile," he said. "Anything is worthwhile if it saves lives."

Mayor Philip D. Huhn said he believed that council and his administration agreed on that the 2 a.m. closing time was a reasonable request. City Administrator Robert J. Collins said he would see about discussing the issue with the town's eight tavern owners.

Rooney told reporters that when Sea Bright's roads are closed, the community experienced a "substantial drop" in alcohol-related automobile accidents.

"It's a moral issue with me," he said. "If they pass it, they will save lives."

CHARLES ROONEY

In other action, the council approved unanimously a $267,000 emergency appropriation to perform a county-ordered reevaluation of property.

Most of the allotment — $240,000 — will go to the tax appraisal, the assessment and the upgrading of the existing tax maps, according to Finance Director Ronald J. Mehlhorn, Sr.

He explained that the city would pay for the process over a period of five years at approximately $52,000 per year.

He said the county ordered the appraisal after property values dropped below 63 percent of assessed value. The survey would be performed by Property Evaluations, Inc. and would be completed by September 1.

BODIES REMOVED — A body is loaded aboard an ambulance yesterday after police in Memphis stormed a small house where a patrolman had been held captive for 30 hours only to find his brother officer already dead. Seven members of a religious sect led by Lindberg Sanders, 49, died in a gunfight with police.

Cop tortured, slain

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Police stormed a house and killed seven religious zealots yesterday in a futile attempt to save a fellow officer who had been taken hostage and tortured before he was slain, authorities said.

A police assault team lobbed tear gas into the modest residence of a former mental patient, opened fire with automatic weapons, and burst into the house shortly after 3 a.m.

Killed in the shootout was Lindberg Sanders, 49, an unemployed construction worker who the mayor said described himself as "the black Jesus," and six other members of a religious group that believed the world was coming to an end. Authorities said the group also thought of police as "anti-Christ" agents of the devil.

Also found dead was Patrolman R.S. Hester, 34, who had been taken captive by Sanders on Tuesday.

Police Director John D. Holt said the decision to assault the house came after police with electronic eavesdropping devices heard someone inside the house say, "The devil is dead."

Police said they were met by gunfire from at least two rooms of the three-bedroom house whose windows had been nailed shut with the doors barricaded with furniture.

NAMBLA draws fire from clergy group

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of clergymen, claiming "a moral wrong should never be the basis of a civil right," yesterday attacked the North American Man-Boy Love Association and gay rights bills.

"These bills prevent discrimination due to sexual orientation," said Rabbi Yehuda Levin, chairman of the Jewish Coalition for Traditional American Values. "How long will it be before bestiality, necrophilia? ... It's a Pandora's box."

He said the new organization, Interfaith Leaders Against NAMBLA and All Child Abusers, was formed after recent publicity involving NAMBLA, which opposes laws that set a minimum age of consent for sexual activity.

NAMBLA was in the headlines in connection with the kidnapping of 13-year-old Charles Dyson of Highlands, who, authorities say, was taken by his abductors to a NAMBLA cottage in Wareham, Mass., and later taken to Vermont. The boy was returned safely to his family last month, and two men are being held on kidnapping charges in Monmouth County.

In a news conference in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral — where NAMBLA demonstrated last year — Jewish, Protestant and Catholic clergymen stated their opposition to NAMBLA.

NAMBLA spokesman Bob Rhodes dismissed the news conference as "a political ploy by a group of religious fascists" and as "blatant homophobia" designed to "drive a stake through the heart" of efforts to pass a city gay rights ordinance.

Most of the clergymen's fire was reserved for homosexuals as a group and for attempts to pass gay rights legislation.

Levin said homosexuals "actively recruit people of all ages," and he urged blood banks to prevent homosexuals from donating blood because they could spread the acquired immunity deficiency syndrome that has become more widespread in the gay community.

The Rev. Bishop Gregory, secretary of the Synod of Bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church Outside of Russia, said homosexuality "undermines America" and "serves Communism."

"God punishes such sins as homosexuality," he said.

The Rev. Roger Fulton of the Neighborhood Church of Greenwich Village said "NAMBLA is a very active and frequently recognized part" of the gay rights movement, noting that NAMBLA takes part in the annual Gay Pride march up Fifth Avenue.

However, homosexual groups have said they do not endorse NAMBLA's campaign for an end to consent laws.

"We are not trying to harass, we are not trying to (stage a) witch hunt" against gay individuals, said Fulton. He said all the clergymen want is an end to laws that he said help spread homosexuality.

Monsignor John Kean of Brooklyn said homosexuality "undermines the family." The result, he said, is "a tragedy."

THE WORLD

Miss Bermuda draws jail term

LONDON — A beauty queen who was Miss Bermuda in November's Miss World contest received a three-year jail sentence today after pleading guilty to smuggling 2.2 pounds of cocaine into Britain.

Heather Ross, 22, wept as she was sentenced at Reading Crown Court, 36 miles west of London. Judge Kenneth Jones recommended she be deported, which means she will not have to serve her sentence.

Ross was arrested Nov. 28, one week after the Miss World contest in London, when she landed at Heathrow Airport from Amsterdam with a suitcase lined with enough cocaine for around 60,000 doses, with a street value of $316,000, the prosecution said.

She was acting as a courier for an international drug ring, and information she provided police has resulted in the arrest of the man who gave her the suitcase, court testimony showed. The man, who has not been identified, awaits trial in Britain.

Chile acts to take over banks

SANTIAGO, Chile — The government announced last night that it was taking over eight financial institutions, including the two largest private banks, and liquidating three of them.

Finance Minister Rolf Luders said the takeovers were designed to end a crisis of confidence in the banking system, relieve sound banks and companies of high interest burdens and help pull the economy out of a year-old recession.

He said the lack of stability in banks and other financial institutions was the nation's most serious problem.

All financial institutions were ordered closed today while state administrators assumed control of seven banks and a finance company.

Luders said the state would guarantee deposits in these banks as well as the rest of the financial system until the end of the year.

The government acted after ordering all banks to conduct a state-supervised review of their outstanding loans that was to determine which should be foreclosed.

Philippine president resigning

MANILA, Philippines — Carlos P. Romulo, foreign minister of the Philippines for the last 14 years, has submitted his resignation to President Ferdinand E. Marcos and plans to retire, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today.

The spokesman said Romulo would make a formal announcement of his decision at a party marking his 84th birthday tonight. Neither Romulo nor Marcos made any immediate public statements.

The spokesman, George Reyes, quoted Romulo as saying he wanted to make way to "a new generation (which) is waiting in the wings (and) wants a share in the burden of affairs of state."

He quoted Romulo as saying that he also had "various other reasons" for resigning.

Romulo has served in government posts since the nation was a U.S. Commonwealth before World War II.

A one-time newspaper editor and publisher, was a wartime aide to Gen. Douglas MacArthur. Romulo later held various diplomatic posts and was minister of education from 1966 to 1969, when Marcos made him foreign minister.

Fighting rages in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Leftist guerrillas overran a town in one northern province yesterday, battled U.S.-trained troops in another and set off dynamite charges at a construction site that rocked the capital.

A guard at the site said about 10 armed youths arrived, held the guards at gunpoint and then placed the dynamite that wrecked 19 pieces of heavy machinery. No casualties were reported.

The attacks were part of the renewed offensive the guerrillas announced last Sunday and came as government leaders ended an internal crisis caused by the six-day mutiny of Col. Sigifredo Ochoa Perz, a provincial commander. He agreed to step down under pressure from other military officers.

In the northern province of Morazan, a local civil defense commander said guerrillas captured Cacopera, 110 miles northeast of San Salvador.

THE NATION

Reagan: Discount cop error

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — A policeman's error in collecting evidence, even when it technically violates the Constitution, is insufficient reason to dismiss a case, the Reagan administration has told the Supreme Court.

The administration, trying to kill the so-called exclusionary rule that bans illegally gathered evidence, told the court yesterday the provision contributes to the nation's crime problem.

Solicitor General Rex E. Lee said in a written brief that after 69 years of applying the rule, "The time has come for recognition by this court that, at least in the case of reasonable good faith violations of the Fourth Amendment, the exclusionary rule is entirely unjustified."

The rule is based on the Fourth Amendment, which prohibits illegal search and seizure. Enacted by the Supreme Court for federal trials in 1914, the rule bars illegally gathered evidence from criminal trials.

The court broadened the ruling in 1961 to cover state and local trials.

John Shattuck, representing the American Civil Liberties Union, told the court the Reagan proposal is "a devastating mistake."

Shattuck argued that judges would have no way to determine whether policemen were acting in good faith. He said they would simply have to accept the government's assurance that they were.

"This would send a signal to local police that it's not necessary to get a warrant in all cases and place a terrible burden on them in judging when to get a warrant," Shattuck said.

Modifying the rule is a major objective of the Reagan administration's anti-crime program. Legislation it proposed to provide a good faith exception to the rule has stalled in Congress.

Higher telephone bills sought

MADISON, Wis. — More than 250 persons in southern Wisconsin have asked a state commission to double their phone bills, hoping to protect 85 local jobs by helping a family-owned telephone company.

"This is the first time anybody in this agency can remember anything like this happening," Public Service Commission spokesman Al Guyant said yesterday. "It's a very genuine expression of part of the community's feelings."

As far as Guyant knows, no one has written opposing the proposed rate boost for financially ailing United Telephone Corp., which serves 10,000 customers in Green, Iowa, Dana and Lafayette counties.

In effect, people writing the commission are asking to pay an average of $12.20 per month for their telephone services rather than the average $6.25 they now pay or the $7.20 rate tentatively approved by the commission last week. Commissioner Branko Terzic said.

New 'flying machine' unveiled

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Real estate tycoon Marvin Kratter always wanted to have wings. Now he can at least float like a butterfly in his new amusement ride that lets people ride on air.

The ride uses a 120-mph blast from an airplane propeller, and Kratter is betting a chunk of his fortune that the idea will catch on around the world.

Kratter has bought international rights to a Canadian-born amusement ride that allows participants to experience some of skydiving's euphoria without the risk. He says his version, a half-block from the Las Vegas Strip, is a big success at $15 a flight, and he's franchising the venture, called Flyaway, internationally.

The customer dons a special suit, shoes and helmet, steps into a chamber, spreads arms and legs, and is carried aloft for about 5 minutes on a rush of wind created by a DC-4's propeller.

Masters of the sport can slip up and down the current of air, turning flips, occasionally as gracefully as a bird.

Marooned sailors return home

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Champagne and spaghetti abounded at a welcome home party yesterday for Robert, Margaret and Christian Aros, who were shipwrecked in the South Pacific for 25 days before being rescued.

"We're very happy to be back — happy to be alive," Aros, 50, said by telephone from his Long Beach home. "It's been a tough day and we're pretty exhausted, but we're happy to see our loved ones and be back home."

Last month the family set out on a three-year cruise aboard their 36-foot sloop Vamanos. Aros, an experienced sailor, conceded that a navigational error led the boat to ground on Heron Reef and sink, stranding them with only a dinghy, a wind surfboard belonging to Christian, 17, and precious little food or water.

After 23½ days adrift, they beached on a sand bar near the Fiji Island, where they were spotted two days later by a group of islanders on a day's outing.

Sneaker thief draws 50 years

HOUSTON — A man convicted of stealing a pair of sneakers was sentenced to 50 years in prison because Houston juries "are getting tired of crime," a prosecutor says.

Donald Westerholt, 31, was convicted of stealing a pair of Adidas sneakers from a J.C. Penney store and then threatening security guards with a pistol when they tried to stop him. On Wednesday, the jury sentenced him to a 50-year prison term and a fine of $32 — the price of the sneakers.

"They (the jury) gave him 50 years for the gun," said Prosecutor Wilford Anderson. "With all that's going on in something. This type of sentence is a message that people are getting tired of crime."

It was not immediately known if an appeal would be filed. Anderson said Westerholt had a prior conviction for aggravated assault, which the jury also considered in assessing

F. Lee Bailey due in TV debut

LOS ANGELES — Flamboyant criminal attorney F. Lee Bailey has new plans to put people on the hot seat — but in a studio, not a courtroom, on a new television show called "Lie Detector."

The syndicated nightly program, to debut Jan. 24, will pit celebrities and unknowns against a polygraph machine for a $25,000 prize.

Contestants will tell a story no one believes and take a lie detector test to see if what they said is the truth.

'Drug czar' veto expected

WASHINGTON (AP) —

Concerned about costs and the prospects of increasing the government's drug enforcement bureaucracy, President Reagan is vetoing a crime bill that would have created a "drug czar."

Administration officials said the president planned to veto the measure today, disregarding the advice of a key Senate Republican and a liberal Democrat.

The drug czar would have been given extensive powers over federal agencies to conduct the government's efforts to stem the abuse of drugs and the smuggling of drugs into the United States.

Reagan was urged to approve the bill by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and by Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., a sponsor of the measure. They visited the White House last week to lobby against a veto.

The congressional watchdog agency, the Government Accounting Office, supported the measure, stating that central management of drug enforcement was necessary.

The drug czar, who would have been appointed by the president, could order Cabinet officials to follow his priorities.

Associate Attorney General

Rudolph Giuliani said the drug czar provision of the crime bill was "naive, simplistic and hopelessly flawed."

Giuliani called the measure irresponsible, saying it would force a reorganization of Reagan's Cabinet system and law enforcement programs without ever having been the subject of a congressional hearing.

Business, auto sales on rise

By The Associated Press

The U.S. auto companies said new car sales in early January rose 11.6 percent from a year earlier, with the best sales rate for that period in three years.

A government report, meanwhile, said overall business sales rose 1.2 percent last November. That was a reversal from the 2 percent drop of last October.

The Commerce Department's report on business sales also said businesses reduced their inventories of unsold goods by 1.1 percent in November. The combination of faster sales and leaner inventories was a good sign for the economy, indicating that new orders for manufactured goods could pick up.

The auto industry, which has suffered severely in the economic stagnation of the past three years, is among the major industries showing new signs of life. The companies' sales in December were up 25.3 percent from a year earlier.

The auto companies also reported yesterday that the number of U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff fell this week to 269,227 — the first drop in eight weeks.

In their sales reports, the five major auto companies said they sold 112,322 new cars in the first 10 days of January, and the daily sales rate of 16,046 was the best for that period since 1980.

Ford Motor Co. had the best year-to-year increase, up 33.3 percent. General Motors Corp. reported a 9.9 percent sales gain. Sales at Chrysler Corp. dropped 13.1 percent, and Volkswagen of America Inc. was off 8.1 percent. American Motors Corp., which does not report 10-day sales, was up an estimated 99.6 percent.

In other economic developments yesterday: In Washington, the new chairman of U.S. Chamber of Commerce brushed aside President Reagan's appeal for each business to hire one unemployed worker, saying "It is probably a good idea — but nothing more than a good idea." Robert T. Thompson told reporters he had dismissed the idea of his board endorsing such a program for the chamber's 250,000 member companies.

Landowners in Texas seek Mexican payment

WASHINGTON (AP) — A lawyer for the Mexican government has cautioned a U.S. District Court judge not to compensate descendants of the landowners for their loss, but the descendants say no payment has been made thicket" by trying to force Mexico to pay $1 billion to descendants of former Texas landowners who lost their land.

"It just isn't wise to balance for our courts to question the acts of a foreign government that take place in a foreign jurisdiction," John H. Shenefield told Judge Thomas F. Hogan on yesterday.

Shenefield asked Hogan to dismiss a suit that revives a century-old battle over 12 million acres of Texas land taken in the late 1800s from its original settlers. Mexico agreed in 1941 to waited 42 years," Vicki Jackson, an attorney for the descendants, told Hogan. "There are some reasonable limits."

After two hours of arguments, Shenefield gave both sides two weeks to file additional comments.

Robert Salazar, another lawyer for the descendants, said that though 2,500 heirs have been identified, more than 20,000 could eventually benefit from a settlement. Shenefield argued that under that law, Hogan has no such jurisdiction.

Walesa returns to work

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa is going back to work at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk, saying he is "determined to fight with peaceful means" for the aims of the independent labor movement he led from its founding at the Baltic port yards.

"I shall return to the birthplace of Solidarity convinced that at present I belong among the people who have given me their full confidence," Walesa said in a statement read by an aide to Western reporters over the telephone yesterday. The statement said Walesa would return to his electrician's job today.

Solidarity, the only independent trade union in the Soviet bloc until it was suspended under martial law, was banned last Oct. 8 by a new labor law that sharply restricts the growth of new unions.

Under the law, workers cannot strike for political demands.

Shore Regional plans to add board member

FREEHOLD — The Shore Regional High School Board of Education will expand from nine members to 10 this year in reaction to changes in the district's population, Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr. ordered yesterday.

Shebell declared the expansion necessary to protect the constitutional rights of the district's residents. The judge also declared unconstitutional the state law governing regional school board apportionments, as it applies to Shore Regional.

The ruling calls for Monmouth Beach to gain one member on the board, beginning after this spring's school elections. Shebell also ordered that each Monmouth Beach representative be given slightly less than one vote, while each Oceanport representative will have slightly more than one vote.

Attorneys involved in the case described Shebell's move as a temporary measure designed to keep the board functioning until the state Legislature draws up a new law solving Shore Regional's peculiar problem.

The judge's decision came on a suit by the Borough of West Long Branch against the State of New Jersey, county Superintendent of Schools Milton G. Hughes, Shore Regional High School, and the three other Shore Regional municipalities.

West Long Branch filed the suit to block a proposed reapportionment plan, calculated by the state Department of Education, which reduced that borough's representation from four seats to three. The plan would have shifted the seat taken from West Long Branch to Monmouth Beach, which now has one member on the board.

John R. Orlovsky, a special counsel hired by West Long Branch, said when the suit was filed that the state's plan violated the constitutional principle of "one-man, one-vote."

The validity of Shore's apportionment plan, Orlovsky said, depends on how many residents each municipality's members represent, and how close that number is to the average of about 2,040 residents per board member. The state Supreme Court has ruled that any deviation greater than 10 percent from the average is not acceptable, the attorney asserted.

Dr. Ernest C. Reock Jr. of Rutgers, a governmental research expert hired by West Long Branch, determined that, given the 1980 population figures, there was no way to keep the deviation below 10 percent for a nine-member board without giving greater weight to one municipality's votes. Reock recommended that the board be expanded to 10 members, with West Long Branch keeping its four representatives and Monmouth Beach gaining one.

Shebell accepted the expert's recommendation and assigned new weights to the votes of Monmouth Beach's two representatives and Oceanport's three members. Each Monmouth Beach vote will be worth 0.9 vote when the board is expanded, while each Oceanport ballot will be worth 1.1 votes.

Compared to the present format, Monmouth Beach will move from controlling 11 percent of the votes to controlling 18 percent, while West Long Branch's control will decrease from 44 percent to 40 percent, Sea Bright will decrease from 11 percent to 10 percent, and Oceanport will remain virtually unchanged.

"If it ever got down to a hotly contested issue, you might need a calculator," commented G. Stephen Ingram, the Oceanport borough attorney.

According to John Warren Jr., the Monmouth Beach attorney, all the attorneys in the case agreed that the apportionment law was unconstitutional in regards to Shore Regional. The remedies Shebell chose can be found in state law, Warren added, although they did not apply to a nine-member board.

Regional school boards are reapportioned every ten years, after the release of each new federal census.

ander D. Lehrner. Joel asked Quoris if he had any questions, reminding him that the hearing proceedings were tape-recorded and that anything he said could be held against him in court.

"Do I have to go to the county jail?" Quoris asked.

"If you can't make bail, you will be," Joel replied.

The judge also provided Quoris with two applications — one for the pre-trial intervention program, a county program designed for rehabilitation that the young man may or may not qualify for, according to the judge, and another for an attorney through the Public Defender's office.

The disorderly persons charges, Joel said, would be held in abeyance until the more serious offenses are dealt with.

the records and the information to the bookmaker.

Feldman said Hingos employed at least 30 such men in New York and New Jersey to serve as a "conduit" between the sports bettor and the bookmaker. The sitters, in turn, would hire "accommodating bettors," who refer trustworthy clients and comb the taverns for potential bets.

Feldman said the man who approached Hingos in the parking lot was also a sitter, who was waiting for money to pay off his successful clients.

Feldman said Hingos "took a bath" on the bets made on easy National Football League playoff victories by the New York Jets, the Green Bay Packers, and the Los Angeles Raiders. He said evidence indicates that Hingos had to pay out $250,000 this week to successful bettors.

In the past three years, Feldman said county has arrested over 30 people for bookmaking in Monmouth County due to a crackdown on "open and notorious" sports betting activity in the area.

He said many bookmakers now are afraid to have sitters located in the county and have turned instead to placing sitters in New York to take Monmouth County action.

"We've put the fear of God into a lot of people who used to be very open about bookmaking," Feldman said.

In New York, Feldman said bookies and sitters feel "insulated" from the law due to infrequent prosecutions and the threat of only nominal fines of "$200 to $500." He said New York and New Jersey law enforcement often do not work closely on interstate operations.

"A lot of times when these guys get hit, they're back in business the next day," Feldman said.

"They think they can insulate themselves from any liability," he said. "But, that's not what happened today."

Report: CETA plan fails

"Classroom" and "On the Job Training" programs. Of these participants, 1,293 were "young people without children." 409 were receiving welfare and 60 percent were "high school graduates and above."

The review then charged: "Based on your data, services are being provided to the most easily served portions of the population."

Approximately 890 persons were served by CETA Title VII programs, which provide services to program participants. Of this group, only 16 percent was composed of welfare recipients and 80 percent had at least a high school diploma, the review says.

Counting both program groups, which includes PIC programs, the county CETA agency planned to make placements in private sector jobs at the rate of 59 percent of participants. However, a rate of 41 percent was achieved. Thus the rate of private sector placement was off by 31 percent, well above the 15 percent deviation considered the acceptable limit by the Department of Labor, Riley said.

A third category of CETA programs, the Youth Employment Training Program, didn't fare well either, the review shows. The rate of participants in this program who gained employment was only 10 percent, off 38 percent from program goals.

On the positive side, the review notes that participants in all three kinds of CETA programs, including PIC programs, had a "positive termination" rate close to projections. A positive termination is recorded whenever a participant gains employment, returns to school, or joins the military.

The review also found that program costs were within acceptable limits.

County officials maintained early last year that the programs were running poorly because of problems within the Private Industry Council and its programs, which were integrated into the CETA program.

However, a comparison of the final 1982 review with first and second quarter reviews shows the private placement rate remained at the same sub-par rate throughout the year.

In anticipation of a change in federal policy this fall giving the business community a greater role in job training and placement programs, the Freeholders closed the county CETA agency last fall and merged its activities into the Private Industry Council, which was made semi-autonomous and given a $5.2 million budget.

PEKARSKY TUNES IN — Henry Pekarsky, host of a 10-minute weekly program on Storer Cable Communications Inc.'s Channel 8, targets service in his broadcasts.

Hazlet official airs his message on cable

By RAY GERMANN

HAZLET — Henry Pekarsky, councilman and police commissioner, says he is dedicated to "letting people know what is going on in Hazlet" and has chosen cable television to get his message across.

Pekarsky currently hosts a 10-minute weekly program on Channel 8 of Storer Cable Communications Inc. called "Spotlight on Hazlet" and says the recently filmed documentary will be an extension of that series.

"This documentary is the first of its kind for Storer," he said. "It is designed as a pilot for the other 23 municipalities covered by the station and if it works out, it may be done throughout the area."

The weekly show consists primarily of interviews with people from various levels of public service.

Pekarsky is interested in seeking election to the New Jersey Legislature's 13th district if Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner runs for John Gallagher's Senate seat in November. He said he interviewed Van Wagner in connection with recent cuts levied against local school boards. "We also spoke about the recent tax increases approved in Trenton," he said.

Also interviewed on the Spotlight program was Joseph Dispenziere, the newly appointed superintendent of schools. "That turned out to be one of the best watched programs we had," Pekarsky said. "We had a lot of calls from people who wanted the program to go on longer."

In the documentary, Pekarsky said, emphasis was put on local agencies such as the police and health departments. He also said an interview with Police Chief Holmes Gormerly was particularly interesting.

"We spoke with the civil defense coordinator and discussed the procedure in case of a major accident in which heavy rescue equipment is needed. There is only really one vehicle in the area that is equipped to handle a lot of casualties at once under adverse conditions," Pekarsky said.

Members of the police force exhibited some of the firearms that are kept at police headquarters. "Some of those weapons are antiques, and quite unusual," he said.

There was also a mini-seminar on how to discourage burglars by changing old door locks. "We spoke about the crime rate in the area which seems to have been on the decline lately," Pekarsky said.

He spoke with Environmental Commission Chairman Florence Craig about the acquisition of Natco Lake near Route 36 and about the advantages and drawbacks of the acquisition.

Pekarsky said he has filmed about four hours of interviews which will be cut down to 30 minutes for the program. He said it will probably be shown in two or three weeks.

Pekarsky said he is concerned that some citizens are not as aware of municipal happenings as they should be and that he believes the program will help fill that information gap.

"Especially for people who don't have children in the school district, it is very difficult to keep up with what is important," he said.

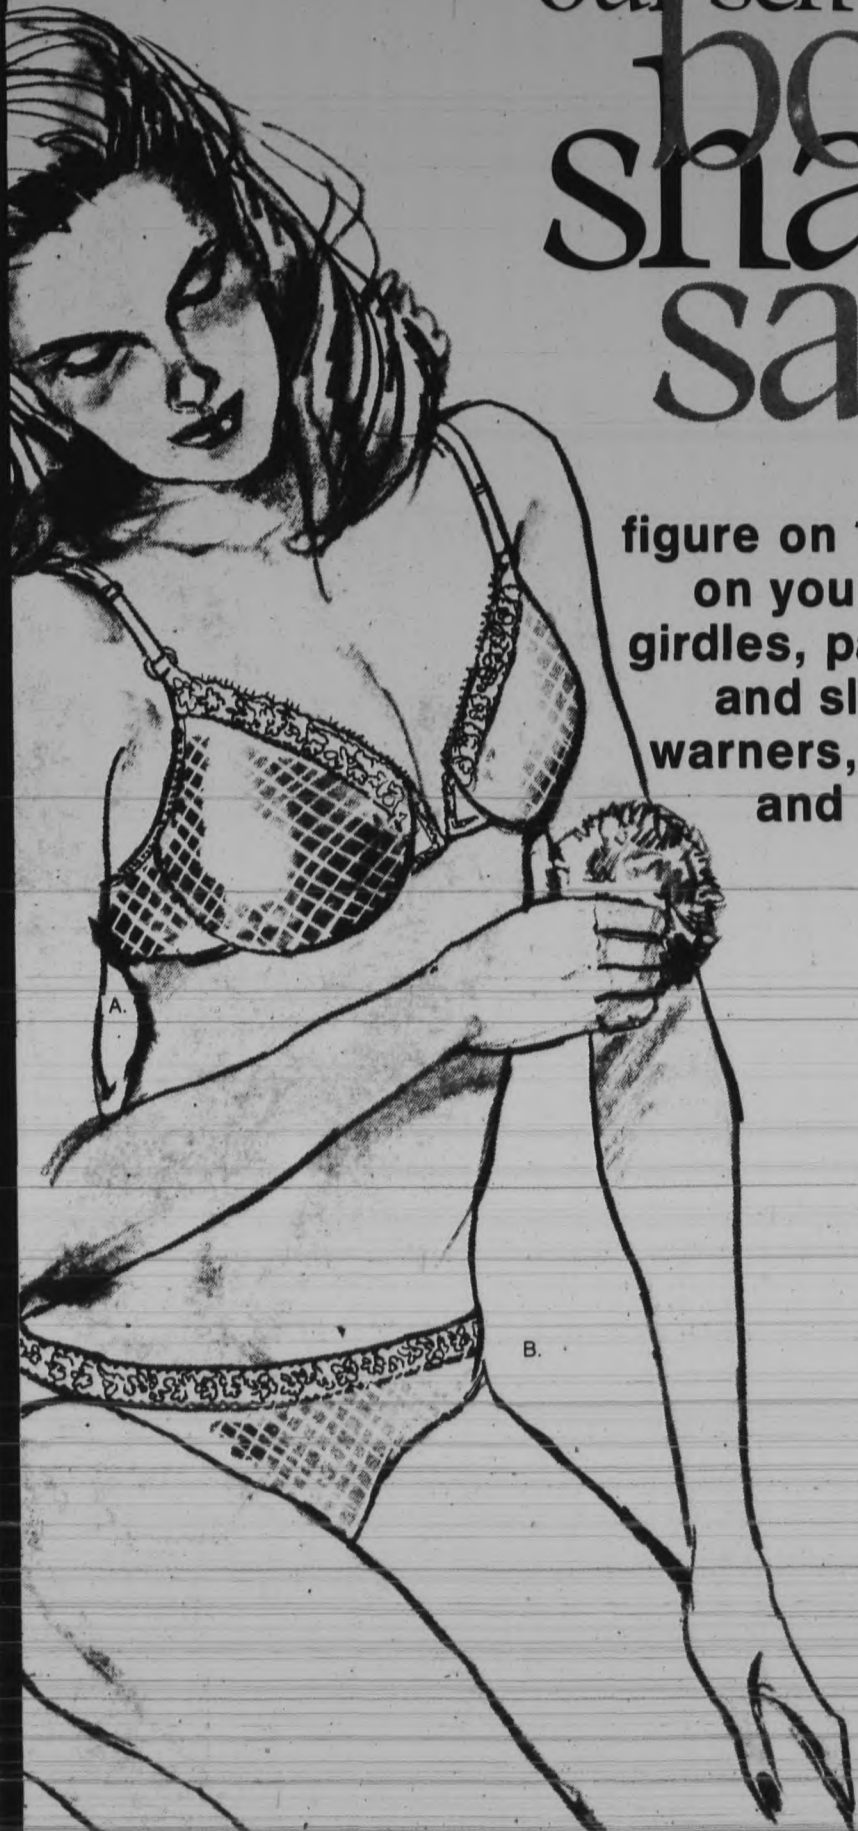

He said children often bring pamphlets and announcements home from school which give parents a "feel for what is going on."

"This idea is not intended to be a substitute for local newspapers," he said, "just a supplement to them."

The documentary also delves into the history of the community and the development of the major highways, train station and bus depot. "Unfortunately it does not get into interviews with private citizens because there simply wasn't time," he said.

Pekarsky wrote the script for the program but had help from Storer personnel on the filming and lighting.

Filming was a very time consuming process. "One of the initial problems I had was in scheduling interviews correctly. Setting up lighting took a lot longer than I anticipated," he said.

City man is accused of murder

FREEHOLD — The governors of Illinois and New Jersey have signed warrants for the extradition of a Long Branch man who is accused of murdering his wife in an Illinois village.

Charles Messina, 35, was arraigned before Superior Court Judge Alvin Y. Milberg yesterday on the two governors' warrants. Next Friday, Messina will return to Milberg's court for a hearing to determine probable cause for his extradition.

A construction worker by trade, Messina is accused of murdering 26-year-old Robin Messina with a blunt instrument April 22, 1982, in Bolingbrook, Ill., Detective Robert Steinke of the Bolingbrook police reported.

Messina, who apparently was raised in Monmouth County, moved to Bolingbrook five years ago, where he stayed until fleeing shortly after the alleged homicide, Steinke said.

The victim's body reportedly has not been found, although Steinke declined to comment on that issue. Police believe the dead officials say, because Messina allegedly told Bolingbrook Detective James Bonk that he killed his wife.

"We're not fighting extradition," asserted Fred

"We're insisting on all the rights provided to us by the Constitution of the Next week's hearing is expected to answer three questions: whether a crime was committed, whether Messina was in Illinois at the time the crime was committed, and whether the defendant is the man sought in the warrants.

'Ah, but it's not as bad as the Great Depression'

Dr. King remembered

Tomorrow is the 54th anniversary of the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., inspirational leader of the non-violent civil rights movement, a man of peace whose life was ended violently by an assassin's bullet that terrible April day almost 15 years ago.

Dr. King came to national attention during his leadership of the 1956 Montgomery bus boycott, which gave birth to the modern civil rights movement. He was gunned down in Memphis, where he was rallying support for the right of city sanitation workers to unionize. In those 12 years, he became the conscience of the nation, a leader not only of blacks oppressed by prejudice and poverty, but of all Americans determined to bring about social justice.

The 1964 Civil Rights Act is a national monument to Dr. King. The Nobel Peace Prize was among his international honors. In commemoration of him, today is a legal holiday in New Jersey.

But we honor Dr. King truly only as we move toward realization of his great dream of a nation free of racial prejudice, united in love and brotherhood.

As we observe Dr. King's birthday this year, the unemployment rate for black Americans is 20.8 percent, more than double the rate for white Americans; for black teen-agers, the unemployment rate is 49.5 percent, compared to 21.6 percent for white teen-agers. The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights says that discrimination alone is the reason for that disparity. At the same time, the Reagan administration is retreating from affirmative action policies that are our best promise of combating discrimination. And the Civil Rights Commission also has found that federally funded programs providing nutrition, housing and social services to elderly Americans discriminate against the black elderly and against other older persons who are members of minority groups.

Dr. King called us to work for his dream of a day "when all God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the Old Negro spiritual: Free at last! Free at last! Thank God Almighty, we are free at last!" We honor him only as we keep working for the dawning of that day.

Growing Freehold Township

At a special meeting this week with the Freehold Township Planning Board, Environmental Committee and Industrial Commission, N. J. Bell representatives unveiled an artist's rendering of the corporate data center it is planning to build on Route 537 in that municipality. The plans will go before the Planning Board at its Jan. 25 public meeting.

The $20 million computer facility, which N.J. Bell hopes to have occupied by 1985, will be an attractive ratable. It will add about $21,000 to the township's tax coffers. The three-story building, which will house about 430 employees, will be "barely visible" from the road, according to Mayor Robert Mantel. And the building will occupy a small part of the 177-acre tract; the rest of the land will be kept in its natural state and will be leased to farmers.

N.J. Bell's planned computer facility is the kind of industrial development municipalities and Mantel's enthusiasm about the project is well justified. The planned project attests to the continuing growth of Freehold Township and its attraction for desirable ratables.

Pupils' progress

The Red Bank Board of Education this week recognized 58 students of accomplishment. At a ceremony attended by more than 200 parents, it presented "Most Improved Pupil" certificates to 16 primary and 42 secondary school students for overall improvements in grades, test scores and behavior. The accomplishment obviously reflected diligent work and commitment by the young people, and by their parents and teachers, too. We congratulate them all on their success.

A really presumptuous wine

WASHINGTON — The telephone call to the U.S. Park Police in Washington that morning was businesslike. A security officer at the Mayflower Hotel, the dowager of the city's hostilities, asked that a police escort be provided for "a French dignitary" arriving at National Airport.

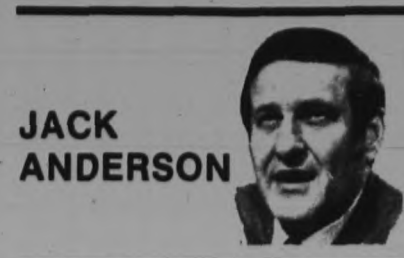

"They said there was a lot of press involved, and they were concerned for safety," recalled Lt. Ronald Miller. Security is the first priority in requests for a police escort.

Miller obligingly dispatched a motorcycle officer to escort the dignitary from the airport to the hotel. When the officer arrived at National, he found a limousine, two Mayflower employees and "a female VIP with luggage." Presumably, she was the French dignitary.

Off they roared up the parkway, across the 14th Street Bridge and into downtown Washington, the late-morning traffic giving way to the familiar sight of a police-escorted limousine. It was a few minutes before noon when they pulled up at the hotel entrance.

It was the last leg of a long journey that had begun at one minute past midnight on Nov. 15 in east central France. The VIP — described by sources as gay, soft, light and very young — had crossed the Atlantic on the Concorde, then had made the trip from Kennedy Airport to National in a chartered Learjet.

But the VIP, though undeniably French, was hardly a dignitary. It was six bottles of Beaujolais Nouveau — a tasty, popular, lighthearted table wine. It's the kind of wine a host might offer with the old line, "I think you'll be amused by its presumption."

The Park Police, of course, were not amused by the presumption of the new wine and its companion, Joy Palmer, Washington manager of International Vintage Wine Co., a division of Heublein.

The whole thing was a publicity stunt to alert American wine buyers to the fact that, as happens every year, a new Beaujolais vintage had arrived. The Mayflower and the Plaza Hotel in New York each had invited journalists and other newsgazers to lunch for a sampling of the 1982 vintage.

For reasons that are important to wine lovers — or at least to press agents — each hotel wanted to be the first to decant its Beaujolais. The Plaza, whose six bottles had arrived on the same Concorde, seemed to have the edge. But the Learjet and the Park Police escort got the Mayflower guests their wine while the Plaza's was still creeping through Manhattan traffic.

Lt. Miller told my reporter Andrea Siegel, with stoic understatement, that he feels he was "taken" by the Mayflower's deceptive request for an escort. The Park Police is the only constabulary that can legally escort VIPs from the airport in Virginia across the Potomac into the District of Columbia.

They get more than 100 such escort assignments each year. It was the Park Police, for example, who escorted President Johnson's body from Andrews Air Force Base, Md., to the Capitol to lie in state. Most of the VIPs are both human and alive, but the Park Police often safeguard Very Important Parcels for the Smithsonian Institution.

The Beaujolais caper was the first time the Park Police had escorted booze, however. "And it will be the last," vowed Lt. Miller grimly.

Footnote: There was a genuine French dignitary at the Mayflower lunch: Jean-Marc Thevenin, commercial attache at the French Embassy. He made his way to the hotel un-

Kean sets old, difficult goals

By PATRICK BRESLIN
TRENTON (AP) — Hearing Gov. Thomas H. Kean's annual message this week was like reading yellowed newspaper clips.

In the speech Tuesday, his first formal report on the state of New Jersey government, Kean cited a litany of old but unaccomplished goals.

Kean said he wanted a job training program, more efficient government, new civil service laws, legislation to hold down automobile insurance costs, measures to reduce street crime, laws to punish drunken drivers more harshly, a steady source of funds for highway and mass transit improvements and money to build more prison cells and relieve overcrowding.

Many of those projects named by the Republican governor had been backed by his Democratic predecessor, Brendan T. Byrne. Others have been the subject of bills in the Democrat-controlled Legislature for several years.

Democratic criticism of Kean's speech, therefore, was muted. The harshest criticism was that "there were no new, bold, imaginative programs," as Assembly Speaker Alan J. Karcher put it, and Assembly Majority Leader John Paul Doyle's comment that Kean avoided any mention of the state's continuing fiscal problems.

But what Kean seemed to be saying was that 1983 — an election year affected by a lingering recession — is no time to be promoting new ideas when literally dozens of long-overdue projects have not been completed.

Kean also lectured the Legislature on the evils of partisan bickering, saying, "When future generations judge our actions, they will care little about our political victories, no matter how important they seem to us at the time."

It was a change in tone from his inaugural address, in which he had used lofty phrases to inspire bipartisanship. That approach failed and Kean has frequently called his first year as governor "frustrating" because of the year long battle with the Democrats over tax increases.

The main thrust of Kean's speech was that with the enormous tax battle over with the enactment of the sales and income tax increases on Dec. 31, it is time to clear the decks of as many measures as possible.

To avoid direct conflict with the November legislative elections, these goals should be attained in the next six months. The Legislature usually adjourns for the summer when the state budget is enacted June 30. With all 120 seats in the Assembly and Senate up for election, legislators will be busy with their campaigns during the fall.

That deadline, and the number of goals mentioned by Kean, makes his agenda an aggressive one, even if it is not innovative.

Doyle noted that Kean's goals are "not easy to resolve," or they would have passed years ago. In addition, he said, the Democrats may push measures to revamp the state's tax structure to make it more equitable, even though Kean has suggested leaving tax reform until after the elections.

"I won't accept the theory that, merely because this is an election year, we should do only those things" mentioned by Kean, Doyle said.

But Kean's major supporter in the Assembly, Minority Leader Dean A. Gallo, said he believes Kean's entire agenda could be enacted this year, "with the exception of some compromise."

"Based on the fact that they've languished in the Senate or Assembly, they've become almost to a critical point where reform has to take place," Gallo said, referring to most of Kean's proposals.

"We're going into a highly political year with the election of both houses, but I think his programs are doable. They are not pie in the sky," Gallo said.

FROM OUR READERS

Work together

Eatontown

To the Editor:
(The following is a copy of a letter sent to Eatontown Mayor Joseph Frankel and the Borough Council.)

As a taxpayer and voter in the Borough of Eatontown, I felt compelled to write to you to let you know of the contempt I feel each evening as I read either the Asbury Park Press or the Red Bank Register, only to find that because of each of you, that my town has made the headlines again.

It is obvious that the voters of Eatontown elected Democrats because they were unhappy with the manner in which the Republicans replaced Mr. Grossman with Mr. Bitterly, and I would be the first to agree that the manner in which it was done was wrong. However, there comes a time when a change is good for every one.

Mr. Frankel, you are now trying to railroad your people in just as the Republicans did last year, and come next November you may find your party in the same position that the Republicans were last November. Winning an election did not give you carte blanche to do as you please. Did it not occur to you that it might have been an excellent idea to interview the other applicants. You just might have found that you have a very qualified candidate among them, and one that might be mutually agreeable to both parties.

Lets face it, we the voters put all of you gentlemen where you are. We put you there to do a job for the good of Eatontown. None of you are doing your job. When I read the paper, I have the feeling that they are not really writing about intelligent adult men, but very small boys fighting over their trucks.

I hope that all of you will start to work together for the betterment of Eatontown, which means get the best people we can find in our town. Don't give a person a job because they are a political crony, friend or relative of someone. There has already been too much of that, and you know it! Don't waste taxpayers' money on unqualified people.

I have lived in Eatontown for 25 years and I want to be proud of my town, but gentlemen, I can't be proud of my town when it makes the headlines every night.

Joyce C. Caffyn

Gratitude

To the Editor:
On behalf of the hundreds of children and parents served by the Northshore Family Center, may I express my gratitude to The Daily and Sunday Register for its fine cooperation. Our case load numbers 2,800 children in 1,500 families.

Your newspapers have brought the plight of needy people to the attention of the entire community. Many readers responded generously to Christmas appeal for donations. Through this publicity, families received toys and food baskets, so essential in these times of hardship. At this season of sharing, we also wish to thank publicly the individuals, organizations and corporations who sent donations for our families at Thanksgiving and Christmas.

All through the year, The Register has featured additional Family Center services that benefit our clients. We especially appreciate your highlighting foster homes in The Sunday Register on Dec. 5.

You have publicized other information, extremely helpful to our clients, including new office locations.

We look forward to the continuing cooperation of your excellent staff. They truly understand the needs of those in our community who are troubled by the problems of poverty.

Advice to mayor

Fair Haven

To the Editor:

On New Year's Day our new mayor took office. She's to be congratulated. She has done that which was necessary to gain the confidence of most of her constituents, and it is now incumbent upon her to perform for the benefit of the majority.

We know that Nancy Kern's government will be by committee, nevertheless, she is now in the seat where the buck stops. She may handle her chores with aggressive, persuasive leadership (not always pleasant, but satisfying when successful) or, like her predecessor, might assume that those in her administration will always perform as expected. She should not take the latter route. It will lead to pitfalls that will entrap her.

One of our military giants once described leadership as being the ability to persuade individuals to do unpleasant jobs because they want to. By putting herself before us, Nancy Kern has implied that she has that ability. Let's hope she doesn't disappoint us, for if she doesn't have that implied ability she will be discovered, and it will be a heartrending experience for her.

Here's good luck to her.

TODAY IN HISTORY

By The Associated Press
Today is Friday, Jan. 14, the 14th day of 1983. There are 351 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:
On Jan. 14, 1784, the United States ratified the peace treaty with England that ended the Revolutionary War.

On this date:
In 1809, England and Spain formed an alliance against Napoleon Bonaparte.

In 1914, Henry Ford's first assembly line went into operation, greatly reducing the time it took to produce a car.

In 1942, American forces under Gen. Douglas MacArthur resisted Japanese attacks on Bataan in the Philippines.

In 1969, 25 crewmen were killed by an explosion on the world's biggest warship, the U.S. carrier Enterprise, while the ship was on maneuvers off Hawaii.

Ten years ago: The Miami Dolphins completed a perfect National Football League season with a 14-7 win over the Washington Redskins in Super Bowl VII at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

Five years ago: Secretary of State Cyrus Vance delayed his departure for Jerusalem because of a dispute between the two countries over the Palestinian issue at an upcoming foreign ministers meeting.

One year ago: In the aftermath of a crash that killed 78 people, emergency crews pulled the wreckage of an Air Florida Boeing 737 from the icy waters of the Potomac River.

Today's birthdays: Actor-author Tom Tryon is 57. Actress Faye Dunaway is 42.

Thought for today: "Music is the universal language of mankind." — Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, American poet (1807-1882).

Rent committee points rapped by councilman

By W.L. HAACKER

LONG BRANCH — An "arbitration review board" to handle landlord-tenant rent disputes is one of the recommendations made by a rent study committee and at least one councilman is critical of the report and its solutions.

The report, which the rent study committee wants to discuss with council on February 24, will be discussed at the earliest convenience if the actions of council during last night's work session are any indications.

"We've dilly-dallied too long on this already," said an angry Council President William D. Walling. "We've already spent the money for the study and we took a lot of heat on this during the campaign, so let's get it over with."

"Rent control is the most important issue we are going to handle," said Councilman Frank Pallone Jr., who was criticized by the committee in its cover letter.

The eight-page study, which was made available to the press following the regular council meeting, made five recommendations:

- city council fund an additional $25,000 to perform a more in-depth study of the housing problems in this resort community;

- change a city ordinance to require that landlords establish a security fund to finance emergency repairs when the landlord is not willing to do so;

- that council require landlords to submit annual operating reports for their properties and to include categories for depreciation and rent receipts;

- the formation of an arbitration review board to be armed with sufficient power to adjudicate any complaint relative to rent increases, maintenance, service, etc. Where warranted, such a board could recommend rent reduction for services not supplied or maintenance (not) performed; and,

- to investigate and "overhaul if necessary" the city's code enforcement division for not forcing compliance on code violations alleged by tenants.

According to the report, the committee was formed in December 1981 to investigate and define "low vacancy, excessive rent increases and equitable return on investment."

Councilman Pallone already sees problems with the committee's recommendations.

Pallone, an attorney by profession, said the "arbitration board" would be useless if all it had was the power to "recommend."

He said he favored an ordinance which would tie rent increases to inflation or the consumer price index and "put the onus on the landlords to prove their case for a rent hike."

The councilman said the board could approve a larger rent hike if a "hardship could be proven."

He suggested that at least half of the board be comprised of tenants.

Pallone said he had problems with the committee itself, which was only comprised of three tenants in a group of 11.

"They were a minority from the start," he said.

He also said the survey sample was not valid because it didn't question the large apartment complexes in the city.

The survey, conducted by Resolve, Inc., took a random sampling of 200 from questionnaires supplied by 739 persons — or only 11.2 percent of the 600 rental units.

Pallone reacted hotly to charges made in the report's cover letter by committee Chairman Roy Iskove that the councilman used a public forum for political purposes.

"I attended the only public hearing held by the committee to raise the issue of rents hikes this year," he said.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF — Max's Hot Dog stand in Long Branch will open a second branch on the site of the former Surt Lounge on Ocean Avenue.

Treat for fast food fans: Max's stand branches out

LONG BRANCH — The connoisseurs of fast food eateries will have another haven to add to their lists if history repeats itself.

If everything goes according to plan, there will be another Max's Hot Dogs in this community — a second Long Branch branch, so to speak.

The announcement was made last night by Robert Maybaum and his family, which has controlled the internationally known boardwalk hot dog stand since the 1950s.

Maybaum credited the expansion to Mayor Philip D. Huhn and the announcement was made in the mayor's city hall office.

"The city cooperated greatly in getting this project started," Maybaum said.

Maybaum's father, Melford, purchased the stand in the 1950's from Max Altman, Inc., which started the business in the 1930's.

"The new Max's will be run in the boardwalk image — only modern with many extras," he said.

Maybaum said the construction will start immediately and be completed before June 1. The new Max's will sit on property formerly occupied by the Surt Lounge on Ocean Boulevard. Maybaum said the property purchase and construction will run around $500,000 and will probably use the existing structure, which burned down last spring.

"It will be quite an operation," explained Celia Maybaum, wife of the late Melford Maybaum. "It will provide a lot of employment for the community and will be another restaurant people can love."

Robert Maybaum said he planned to employ about 30 to 40 people in the new Max's.

It also will provide the city of Long Branch with an enhanced eatable, which Mayor Huhn said the city needs.

The old Max's, located opposite Chelsea Avenue on Ocean Avenue, serves grilled foods that have become internationally known.

"People have flown in from Europe to eat at Max's," Celia Maybaum explained. "Former Gov. Brendan T. Byrne flew in for my late husband's funeral and Gov. Tom (Thomas H.) Kean has eaten there too."

Robert Maybaum said that even though the current economic situation has not been too favorable for restaurants which serve mainly middle-class customers, he still is optimistic and "very confident" the new venture will sizzle.

"We never considered anyplace else," he said, crediting the mayor for creating an atmosphere for business investment.

When asked if the project will be a success, Celia Maybaum explained, "everyone loves hot dogs — kids love hot dogs — of course it will be a success."

Mayor Huhn said that since he was elected he has tried to make investment in Long Branch more profitable for the businessman.

Accused killer to plead self-defense

By JON HEALEY

FREEHOLD — Accused murderer Scott Franz intends to plead self-defense when he comes to trial next month for the fatal shooting of his step-father, defense counsel Thomas Smith Jr. said yesterday.

Franz, 18, of 401 Euclid Ave., Loch Arbour, is charged with firing one shot through the head of Alfred Podgis, 58, as the step-father lay in bed July 5. Franz' prep-school classmate, 18-year-old Bruce Curtis of Middleton, Nova Scotia, is charged with the shooting murder of Franz' mother, 56-year-old Rosemary Podgis.

Smith would not discuss the reasoning behind the defense strategy. However, during a preliminary hearing before Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr., Smith indicated that members of the Podgis family would testify during Franz' trial that the two victims mistreated their children.

Curtis' attorney, Michael D. Schottland, declined to specify what defense his client would present at the trial.

Franz allegedly gave a statement to police indicating that he shot his step-father and that Curtis shot Mrs. Podgis. This statement was revealed during a pre-trial hearing Nov. 12.

Meanwhile, Schottland said he has asked the state Supreme Court to reduce his client's bail, which stands at $250,000. Both Curtis and Franz have been confined to the Monmouth County jail since their arrest in mid-July.

Schottland's motion, if granted, would allow Curtis to be released on a 10 percent cash bond.

Yesterday, Superior Court Judge John A. Ricciardi denied a motion by Smith to have Alfred Podgis' body exhumed. The purpose of exhuming the body, Smith said, would be to determine whether the victim had been shot at close range.

First Assistant Monmouth County Prosecutor Paul F. Chaiet reported that an expert witness — the Philadelphia medical examiner — has determined the wound to Mr. Podgis' head to be a contact wound. This type of wound indicates that the shot was fired from a short distance away.

However, Smith argued that the shot was fired from across the bedroom, not from point-blank range. According to Smith, the coroner made no mention in his original report of any contact wound.

Ricciardi told Smith that he could not order the exhumation without some expert testimony supporting the attorney's contention. Smith said he has not decided whether to seek that testimony and try his motion again.

Schottland asked Ricciardi to order Chaiet to produce written reports or synopses from all his expert witnesses. Ricciardi denied the motion, saying criminal procedure does not require the prosecutor to submit synopses of witnesses' testimony.

Curtis' attorney also asked Ricciardi for an order forbidding Chaiet to use statements made by the defendants to psychiatrists as part of his proofs. Ricciardi declined to issue an order, saying court rules already prohibit prosecutors from using such statements to prove their cases.

According to police, Franz shot his step-father with one of Alfred Podgis' .30-caliber rifles in the upstairs bedroom. Curtis allegedly shot Mrs. Podgis once in the stomach with a second .30-caliber rifle, also owned by Mr. Podgis, as the mother was preparing breakfast, police charge.

The pair allegedly dumped the two bodies in a Pennsylvania state park early the next morning, then returned to Tinton Falls, where they threw the rifles into a storm drain.

Police in Richardson, Texas, picked up the pair at the Richardson Holiday Inn July 10, ending a five-day nationwide alert for the pair. After allegedly shooting the elderly couple, the two suspects reportedly visited the casinos in Atlantic City and the World's Fair in Knoxville, Tenn.

Both Podgises worked for the U.S. Postal Service in Englishtown, supervised by Rosemary Podgis' daughter, Barbara Jean Czacherski. Franz, who was graduated with Curtis the month before from an exclusive Nova Scotia prep school, worked at the A-1 Specialties auto parts store in Englishtown.

BRSA chief refutes state report

By JO ASTRID GLADING

UNION BEACH — The release of a state study on the Bayshore Regional Sewerage Authority's personnel and operational problems points to the need for funds to enact odor control rehabilitation projects on the ailing plant, according to its executive director, Frank Shields.

"If Frank Shields dropped dead tomorrow there would still be odors coming from that plant. People have to realize we don't run an ice cream parlor over there," Shields said.

The report, conducted by the Department of Environmental Protection, Shields said, was received during the BRSA's December meeting and has not been discussed among the BRSA commissioners.

The report was prepared by the DEP's Division of Water Resources after a three-month survey of the plant's operations.

Shields, whose request for contract renewal last fall was tabled until the January meeting Monday, suggested the leak of the highly critical report was politically motivated by commissioners who do not want him reinstated.

"Only me and the commissioners had copies of that report," he said.

He added one-half of the report is devoted to design deficiencies in the plant, while the remainder stresses personnel and managerial deficiencies.

"I don't care where you go. Go to any big corporation or any factory, and I doubt you'd get a favorable report as far as management goes," Shields insisted.

But Herbert Kukasch, a commissioner who has opposed him in the past on his contract renewal, said the report's emphasis on the "lack of management" is at the center of the plant's operational problems.

"It all comes down to that, really," he said. Kukasch said the report points to "overstaffing, untrained and unmotivated personnel, and backstabbing" among employees as a few of the 14 pages devoted to managerial problems.

"The plant is really out of control. The report is in essence very critical and leveled at management and supervision," Kukasch said.

Shields pointed to the need for better industrial pretreatment programs by BRSA's industrial contributors, and an estimated $5.8 million in plant rehabilitation needed for odor control.

The plant has been the constant target of community criticism in the past for the frequent stench it emits. Residents claim the smell becomes unbearable in the summer months.

A health survey of the surrounding neighborhoods, conducted by Health Officer Robert Hary and released Tuesday, concluded residents in the vicinity suffered an increased incidence of acute upper respiratory ailments, in addition to "unnecessary physical and mental anguish to nearby residents."

Shields, however, defended both his plant and his management record in the face of both the health report and the damaging DEP report.

Not only has DEP neglected to give BRSA any industrial pretreatment standards to apply to the plant's industrial effluent, he said, but also low morale can be largely attributed to an inadequate facility left to employees to operate.

"They only have so much to work with," Shields explained. "No one we serve has had any bathroom backup because of any wrongdoings at that plant."

Health move spurs public query

By JO ASTRID GLADING

UNION BEACH — A health-conscious public raised a number of questions before the Borough Council last night over the proposed move from a regional health department to the county health department.

Concerns centered around the loss of the local Board of Health's power to make ordinances and the lack of a regional office as close as Matawan.

Regional Health Officer Robert Hary and County Health Officer Lester Jargowsky presented their respective services before the council Tuesday night.

The public forum afforded council members response time and a chance to air their warring viewpoints on the move. Mayor Vincent Farley expressed his own fears the regional board would suffer from a pull-out and that the borough's problems are similar to those suffered by neighboring municipalities and are therefore best treated by a health department that serves the area.

contract with the county would lock the town in should it be dissatisfied. He compared it to "an old carnival gimmick — once they get you in they got you."

Ellison, the main mover in the push to move to the county, pointed out the savings the move would bring to the borough.

The regional office will charge $2,000 county services will cost $14,000.

But earlier in the day, new Councilman Paul Smith had expressed his concern over the differences in increased costs from the two services between 1982 and 1983. The regional board had only a seven percent increase, while the county instituted a 40 percent increase.

Smith, who constitutes the deciding vote should the council members maintain their current positions, said that increase is not a good sign that county services will remain cheaper.

The public also raised questions over the recent receipt of more than $150,000 from International Flavors & Fragrances due to a billing error that began in 1979.

One member of the public wanted to know why the Council employed T&M Associates as the engineering firm, when the error in billing dates back to their previous stint as borough engineers. Ellison explained that the responsibility of billing falls to municipal employees, and not the contracted engineering firm.

A second citizen demanded to know why interest was not charged for the late sewerage use fees. Ellison explained that the error was Union Beach's, and the corporation was not obligated to even pay the full amount in one payment, as it did in the past.

Keating, who helped to uncover the billing error, disagreed strongly and said, "I do believe the interest is due us and I do believe they were not good neighbors.... If they were not a taxpayer in this town then they wouldn't have nothing to worry about."

In an interview last night IFF spokesman William Dalton said he regretted Keating's remarks and felt they were an insult to the men and women who work for IFF, pointing out that 90 percent of the company's employees are from the Bayshore.

"It's a shame that an elected official would insult the very people that work for this company," he added.

Republican will replace Manning

By DANIEL LOWENTHAL

EATONTOWN — If Republican Councilman Timothy Manning submits his resignation at the Jan. 26 Borough Council meeting as expected, his seat will be filled by a fellow Republican to be named by the Borough Council at a later date.

John Schuster III, municipal chairman of the Republican Party, said he will nominate three people to the council to be considered for the vacancy. As of yesterday, Schuster said no one had contacted him with interest in the council seat.

"I will call people I think might be interested and ask them to get back to me," Schuster said. "I'll then sit down with the Republican councilmen and Republican Party leaders and will make a decision."

Three names will then be passed to the council. Along with Mayor J. Joseph Frankel, the council will then review the qualifications of the three candidates and choose one to fill Manning's unexpired term.

The seat will be up for election in November.

Manning told the council Wednesday night that he will resign Jan. 26 because he will soon move to Ohio as a vice president for Towner Petroleum Corp.

Manning, 27, was elected to the council in 1980. He served as chairman of the Parks, Parking, and Playgrounds committees and he also helped to found the Tenants' Rights Committee.

A borough resident for most of his life, Manning finished his two-year council service as a hero to many, but not to those in his own party.

Manning cast the key vote that allowed the council to remove GOP-appointed borough Business Administrator Paul Bitterly and then replace him with former administrator Harold Grossman.

"We, as politicians, put out flyers, shake hands, and try to get people to listen to what we have to say," Manning said before voting to remove Bitterly. "But we have an obligation — when we get elected — to listen to them (the people). Therefore, I vote yes."

That vote, along with those of the three Democratic councilmen, meant Bitterly was gone. He served as administrator since Jan. 1982, when the GOP council majority gave him the job after firing Grossman.

At the time, Bitterly was a GOP councilman. He abstained in the vote to remove Grossman.

Grossman had been administrator for 8½ years. He spent last year as administrator in Jackson. With Manning's support, Grossman will now replace the man who replaced him.

After Manning cast his vote, he was heralded by Frankel, Democratic councilmen, and residents present for voting, in effect, to hire a man he fired one year ago.

"Councilman Manning and I have had big league disagreements, but it takes a big person to look at a situation and change his mind," said Council President Theodore F. Lewis Jr., as the audience applauded.

But, GOP Councilman Edward Stominski called Manning "the instigator, the leader of the pack" who wanted to remove Grossman last year. Stominski voted against removing Bitterly as did fellow GOP Councilman John V. Lonergan.

With Manning's departure from the council, the Republican Party will — for the second year in a row — pick three people it considers worthy to fill an empty seat.

When Bitterly resigned from the council to become administrator last year, the council appointed Anthony Messina to fill the one-year unexpired term. Messina lost a bid for election in November.

Like last year, Schuster will get to make the replacement recommendations to the council. He said he would like to see the council fill Manning's seat within one council meeting after Manning departs.

"There's no reason to keep an empty seat an empty seat," Schuster said.

If Manning, as he announced, submits his resignation Jan. 26, the first available meeting for replacement would be Feb. 9.

Conference scheduled

MIDDLETOWN — High school and college students, educators and members of the general public are welcome to participate in a week-end conference to study concepts of "Authority, Leadership and Responsibility," sponsored by Brookdale Community College in Lincroft.

The conference is scheduled from 6 p.m. Feb. 4, to noon, Feb. 6.

Police circulate a photo of unidentified dead man

By DANIEL LOWENTHAL

TINTON FALLS — To help solve what Borough Police Chief Wayne White called his "toughest case," police will circulate a recently drawn sketch of an unidentified man who was found murdered on West Park Avenue on Dec. 3.

"We'll take it to bars and restaurants and to local commercial places," said Detective Sgt. Melvin McKeller. "We'll start with a small circle and work out. If we have to, we'll retrace every step."

The sketch, drawn by state trooper Lew Trowbridge, shows the unidentified man with his eyes open. In all pictures released to date, his eyes were closed. Trowbridge believes the drawing also gives a more accurate representation than the photographs of the man's entire face.

"All pictures show him lying down," said Trowbridge, who works out of the State Police's composite drawing unit. "The pictures make it look like his nose is very broad, he has a double chin, and his eyes slope downward. But you know what gravity does. The sketches make modifications."

Trowbridge reviewed all of the photographs taken when the man was found and those from the county morgue. In some of them, the man was propped up and appeared thinner than in the previous pictures released.

Police have been baffled for more than a month trying to learn the identity of the man, believed to be about 30 years old, who had been shot at close range with a 9mm automatic before being left at the site just 50 feet from a Garden State Parkway overpass. Police believe he was a native of Peru, Colombia, Chile or even the Middle East.

Police recently sent the man's fingerprints and photographs to consulates in New York representing 160 countries to be passed to police departments in the different countries.

"One problem is not all of the countries have central police agencies," Patrolman Kenneth Arscott said. "The European countries have them but many of the Latin and South American countries don't."

McKeller said he expects to begin hearing from some of the consulates next week.

Police have also given information about the case to Interpol, an international organization with records of immigrants from throughout the world.

REMAINS A MYSTERY — Tinton Falls Police released this drawing of an unidentified murder victim. The sketch will be circulated to bars, restaurants and other commercial establishments throughout the area.

School meeting slated

LITTLE SILVER — The Board of Education last night decided to hold a special public meeting Thursday regarding the proposed reorganization of the elementary schools at 8 p.m. in the Markham Place School auditorium.

Three proposals for reorganizing the 662 students in the two schools will be considered, according to Nicholas D'Apolito, board president.

One proposal is to transfer all third graders to the Point Road School. The Markham Place School and the Point Road School have separate third grades.

Another is to have kindergartens in both schools, to have grades one through four at the Point Road School, and grades five through eight at the Markham Place School. Under this proposal, all changes would be made for the beginning of a school year.

A third would be similar to the second proposal, except the change would take place over a period of years.

Day-care system needs nurturing

By ELLEN GOODMAN

Sometimes the State of Day Care is like a distant third-world country. It only gets into the paper when something has gone wrong there. This time it was a study in the Journal of the American Medical Association pointing to child-care centers as a new source of infections and disease. An editorial in the same issue went so far as to warn that the hygiene situation in these centers is "reminiscent of the presanitation days of the 17th century."

It took a few days for coolness to prevail as other doctors turned off the alarm. The increased risk of such diseases as dysentery and hepatitis, it turns out, is real, but small.

Following the course of this story, from the crisis to the calm, I noted how much attention we focus on the relatively minor problems germinating in the lives of those who do have access to day care. By comparison, we easily overlook the problems of those who don't have access.

I am not talking about the horror stories of children without care, although the Children's Defense Fund has collected some pretty grisly ones. There were the two children, 3 and 4 years old, left in a car in a plant parking lot in Wichita because their mother lost day care and was faced with losing work. There were also the children left alone in Michigan who set fire to the house.

I am referring this time to the big picture. As Helen Blank of the Children's Defense Fund says, "The story of day care is what's not going on."

There are currently 8 1/2 million children under 6 whose mothers are in the work force. These are numbers that have doubled in the past 20 years.

The Department of Health and Human Services says that in 1981, 1.9 million children were in small and large day-care centers and over 5 million were cared for privately in homes other than their own. But behind those neat figures is a rag-tag system of chance and chaos. As Blank notes, "We know that people are doing catch as catch can."

For those families who can afford day care the issue is one of quality and caring. No one who has watched friends agonize about their decisions could read Deborah Fallows' careless observations in last week's Newsweek without a few gasps. Are these people, as she wrote, imparting a message that "working parents can buy a parent-substitute as easily as they can buy a frozen dinner"? Hardly.

But it's the poor, especially the working poor, who face an increasingly grim picture. In the past year, between the cuts in federal funding and state budgets, families have lost subsidies and centers have lost funds. The single-largest day-care program, Title XX, was cut from $3.1 billion to $2.4 billion.

We are now witnessing what the National Council of Churches described in its study of church-related day care as the "gentrification" of day care. In many centers, the children of low-income families are being replaced by middle and upper-income families.

In Grand Rapids, for example, an inner-city center that had 55 low-income children a year ago, now has 31 children, none of whom is subsidized. In Wilmington, Del., a Salvation Army center has just about halved the proportion of children with Title XX subsidies.

What has happened to the low-income families? The CDF, which is preparing a report on the effects of day-care cuts, says that in Johnson County, Kan., 17 percent of the parents who lost day-care subsidies quit work, 10 percent of the children were in unlicensed day care, and 7 percent were in no day care at all.

Even the problems of day-care disease that figured so prominently in the news last week, especially with the call for better hygiene, are related to money. Many states with financial woes have increased the ratio of children to staff, and cut back on staff training and wages. The same states have slashed their own supervisory and licensing staffs. As Blank says, the medical concerns "aren't an excuse for limiting child care but for supporting the system."

Since the end of World War II, the day-care issue has been a pawn in the debate over whether mothers of young children should or shouldn't work. We have left each family to its own hassle.

Today, the economy has wiped out choices for millions of mothers. Should or shouldn't, they simply must work. By 1990 it's predicted that half of all the preschool children, or 11 million, will have mothers in the work force. Will we still be saying, "The story of day care is what's not going on"?

TEAMWORK — Ruth Van Deursen, right, who suffers from multiple sclerosis, receives some help from friend George Hewitt during a shopping trip in San Bernardino, Calif. Since they were brought together by a program for the disabled, Hewitt, who is partially retarded, has worked for Van Deursen as her attendant, helping in shopping, cooking, cleaning and other chores.

The disabled paired to tend one another

SAN BERNARDINO, Calif. (AP) — Ruth Van Deursen has multiple sclerosis and George Hewitt is mildly retarded. Thanks to each other, they now lead more productive lives in a program to help the handicapped give mutual aid.

Since they were brought together by a program for the developmentally disabled, Hewitt has worked as Van Deursen's attendant, moving her in and out of her wheelchair, taking her shopping, cooking, cleaning and washing for her.

Van Deursen pays Hewitt for his work, helping him to keep a steady job. They found each other through Rolling Start, a non-profit organization that operates services for the disabled and helps to pair attendants with physically disabled people.

Rolling Start runs the Transitional Living Center here, teaching students to cope with their disabilities and become more mobile.

In the past year, Rolling Start has extended its attendant-training program to the developmentally disabled — the mentally retarded and those with cerebral palsy or emotional problems.

Training director Jeff Killian said 80 percent of the trainees have found jobs. One is Hewitt, 22, a former Pacific High School student who said he "wasn't doing much of anything" after he failed to get into auto mechanics or electronics. He completed the six- to seven-week course of half-day sessions in the Attendant Care Training Program that includes lectures, films and work experience.

"I was taught how to catheterize people who need it, how to transfer a disabled person from bed to wheelchair and from chair to commode or bath," he said. "I learned how to dress people ... cook, wash clothes, shop for groceries and clean house."

"In the time I've been Ruth's attendant I've enjoyed the work very much," Christine Rozzano, a Rolling Start counselor for both Hewitt and Van Deursen, said. "I know he has had problems getting to this point, but now he's working, making some money and making a contribution to society."

"George is a good cook," said Van Deursen, who is equally satisfied with the arrangement, "and you can see how he keeps the place clean."

In 1968, Van Deursen, now in her early 30s, learned she had multiple sclerosis, a disease of the central nervous system. At the time she was a registered scuba diver, was newly married, and was about to get her pilot's license.

"Then my marriage fell apart, there was a divorce and I moved (from the East) to California," she said. She also lost her managerial-level job, she said, and now is unemployed, but takes classes at the Transitional Living Center.

Multiple sclerosis is an incurable and progressive disease whose precise cause is not known. It gradually weakened Van Deursen's legs and stiffened her hands. She said her eyesight is also weakening.

Rozzano says the center wants to spread the word about the mutual aid program. "We believe many people, especially the elderly, don't know about it," Rozzano said. "We want to reach them, particularly those in nursing homes who could be living in their own homes if they had the same kind of attendant care Ruth is getting."

ASK DR. BROTHERS

Psyche may instigate addiction

By DR. JOYCE BROTHERS

Dear Dr. Brothers: I'm 20 and hung up on cola — at least, I seem to be. My girlfriend says it's impossible to become addicted to something as harmless as this. My fears about drinking too much cola began when a buddy suggested that I keep track of what I drank by jotting it down in a notebook and carrying it around with me. After two weeks of this, I was shocked to discover that I usually drink a dozen cans or bottles daily and sometimes even more. When I try to stop, I become so nervous that I feel it isn't worth the agony. Could I be addicted to cola? — D.R.

Dear D.R.: People can become psychologically addicted to almost anything, including sex. Once you start using something, such as food, alcohol, drugs or gambling as a way to cope with problems, you're in trouble. The person, for instance, who has sex only because he's anxious or depressed or nervous is using sex in an attempt to escape himself and his problems.

According to research by Elliot Diamond and John Henry Pfifferling, some people drink so much cola they deserve to be labeled "colaholics." These people reported a strong craving for it and withdrawal symptoms when they stopped. Although they're not sure, these researchers feel that the caffeine may create a dependency. The caffeine may interact with sugar in different ways. They noted that those who seemed addicted to cola were apt to come from families who drank an unusual quantity of it.

Try to take a fresh look at the problems you're trying to deny or escape when you reach for the cola. While it may be caffeine that's keeping you hooked, there are other more important issues to be faced.

Dear Dr. Brothers: My husband recently switched jobs and initially he was very happy because the new position meant more money and a better location. He now has to spend much less time commuting. In his old job, he was in charge of more than 20 people and in his present job, he works alone and is in charge of one. This has made him almost impossible to live with at home. It's as if he suddenly wants to lord it over me and the children. We take the place of all his former underlings. He refuses to admit that he has a great need to control. He refuses to even discuss it, but I know it's there. — C.H.

Dear C.H.: There's no question that people have different needs and some individuals need a lot more power than others in order to be happy. It appears that your husband misses the power he had, and may now be trying to rebuild his self-esteem by exerting more power over you and your children.

It's important for him to recognize his needs. He probably has much more power in his present job than he thinks he has, although it's less obvious and direct. When one feels a sense of powerlessness, especially when it comes with a sudden loss of power, the person experiences increased stress and this can lead to depression.

Certain professions attract people with a high need for power. Your husband may find he'd be happier in a different job, even though it might pay less. He won't be able to decide this, however, until he accepts what's making him uncomfortable and dissatisfied. In the meantime, let him know that you and your children have your own needs for freedom and independence.

Nurserymen sponsor flower show poster contest

MORRISTOWN — Students in grades seven through 12 from are invited to design colorful and eye-catching posters to promote the 1983 New Jersey Flower and Garden Show.

The poster contest, now in its 14th year, is sponsored by the New Jersey Association of Nurserymen and is being run in conjunction with the 1983 Flower and Garden Show, which will be held at the Morristown National Guard Armory, Feb. 26-March 6.

Theme is "Ideas — Gardening in the Garden State". Poster contest entries can illustrate any aspect of New Jersey gardening, from a large backyard floral display to a small container garden on an apartment terrace.

Townsend Scudder, Ambleside Gardens, Belle Mead, of the New Jersey Association of Nurserymen is chairman of this year's poster contest. The contest is expected to draw more than 300 entries from public and private school students from every county. Entries will be judged on the basis of impact, originality and design. All winning posters will be on display at the Armory during the show.

There are two categories of competition. Category I is for students in grades 7 through 9, and Category II is for students in grades 10 through 12. First prize in each category will be a $100 U.S. Savings Bond, second place winners will receive $50 bonds, third place winners will receive $25 bonds, and five honorable mention awards will receive $10 each.

A complete set of guidelines has been prepared and sent to school art departments. Scudder said many art teachers are using the poster contest for a class project, but that students not involved in art classes are also welcome to enter. They may obtain guidelines from their art teacher or, if necessary, from Lawrence D. Little, Jr., 233 Blake Hall, P. O. Box 231, Cook College, New Brunswick, N.J. 08903.

Deadline for submission of the posters to any local County Agricultural Extension Office is 4 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 15.

All entries must be on poster board, measuring 22 x 28 inches, must contain the name of the show, the dates and the site, and should illustrate some aspect of horticulture.

Hoboken housing official to be Jan. 21 guest of Ethical Culture Society

SHREWSBURY — The Monmouth Ethical Culture Society, a humanistic religious and educational group, will meet Friday, Jan. 21 at 8:15 p.m. in the community room of The Register, Route 35.

"The Enemy Is Us," is the topic. Speaker will be Sal Santantello, director of Housing and Neighborhood Preservation in Hoboken. He is also coordinator of the Essex Ethical Culture Society. Understanding the consequences of our behavior and building a more humane society will be the thrust of his address.

The Feb. 18 program will feature Joseph Chuman, who will speak on "Atheism: Mature and Immature."

The Rev. Daniel Berrigan, peace activist, is scheduled to speak to the Monmouth Ethical Culture Society in the spring.

The Society meets on the third Friday of every month in The Register building. The public is invited. Deborah Kurtz, Deerfield Lane, Aberdeen, may be contacted for more information.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Sweet way to end meal

DEAR HELOISE: For those after-meal cravings for something sweet when you know you've already had more than enough, go brush your teeth. This accomplishes three things: (1) Gives you a clean, sweet taste; (2) Somehow subconsciously signifies that the meal has ended; and (3) Does your teeth a favor also. — Kathleen

OLD SWEAT SHIRTS Dear Heloise: Don't throw away those fleece-lined sweat shirts. There are so many uses for them. I have always saved old T-shirts, towels and sheets in a rag bag. But those old sweat shirts work great for polishing and waxing the car. My husband uses the smooth side for polishing. What a shine! I use them in the house for dusting, polishing and waxing the floor. — Janice Sharp

Have a hint for Heloise? Send it to Heloise P.O. Box 32000 San Antonio, TX 78216

PET POINTERS Dear Heloise: Our dog Chester was ruining the sofa by lying on it all the time. We put a smoke alarm under the cushion and when he jumped up on the cushion the alarm would go off. He would get down immediately without being told to do so. The one I used has the alarm button on the top and the alarm goes off when the button is pressed. Hope this will work for others as well as it did for us. I should add that it took about two weeks for him to get the message. He then started on another chair. I put the alarm under that cushion and it only took one day. He never went back. — Nancy Rosseland

PENNY FOR A CLEANING Dear Heloise: My job requires that I wear a suit every day. Since I don't have my suits cleaned and pressed every day I couldn't tell which ones were ready for the cleaners and which ones weren't. I finally thought of tucking a penny away in the pocket each time I wear the suit. That way I can keep track of how many times I've worn each suit and when it's due to go to the cleaners. — Glen Masters on one side, throw the pillow to the other side, pull up the sheet and blankets and fold over. Put the pillow in place and pull up the bedspread, evening the side and top. Now go around to the other side, remove pillow, straighten sheet, blankets, spread and pillow. After some practice, I can make that bed in about one and one-half minutes. — K.W.

FROZEN PUDDING Dear Heloise: I made pudding popsicles out of a box of instant chocolate pudding mix. I followed the directions on the box as for pudding. After it was all mixed, I poured the pudding into little popsicle containers and put them in the freezer. Tasted just great! — Ann White

TOUCH-UP TOOL Dear Heloise: I found my furniture was getting little scratches on it. I came across a great touch-up tool. Using a cotton swab dipped in brown wax shoe polish, I repaired my furniture. You can use the other end of the cotton swab to clean off the excess polish. Having a small child, I keep the cotton swabs handy. — Helen BrownL

SLIM GOURMET

Adaptations of exotic fare

By BARBARA GIBBONS

Savor the flavor of faraway places...try these Slim Gourmet adaptations of exotic dishes. Although they taste extravagant, the low calorie counts make these bargain fare.

- MOROCCAN CHICKEN AND COUSCOUS CASSEROLE
2 pounds cut-up frying chicken
1 large sweet Spanish onion
5 T. chopped dried mixed fruit (or raisins)
1 c. dry couscous (semolina cracked wheat)
½ cup orange juice
½ cup water (or fat-skimmed chicken broth)
2 t. cumin seeds (or 1 t. ground cumin)
½ t. cinnamon (or mixed apple pie spice)
Salt and pepper, to taste
- Slip chicken pieces, skin-side up, under broiler to brown the skin and melt the fat. Combine remaining ingredients in a casserole. Arrange chicken pieces skin-side up on top. Cover casserole with lid or foil, and bake in a preheated 350-degree oven 50 to 60 minutes, until chicken is tender. Remove cover during the last 10 minutes, if desired, to crisp the chicken skin. Makes four servings, 340 calories each.
- MIDDLE EASTERN ZUCCHINI SALAD
1 medium zucchini, quartered lengthwise, cubed
1 eating orange, peeled, seeded and diced
1 Tablespoon minced onion
2 Tablespoons lowfat lemon yogurt
1 Tablespoon low-calorie ("light") mayonnaise
Salt and pepper, to taste
Optional: toasted sunflower seeds
- Note: For lemon yogurt, you may substitute a combination of plain yogurt, a few drops of lemon juice and sweetener to taste.
Combine ingredients, except sunflower seeds; mix well.

Makes two servings, 80 calories each. Just before serving, if desired, top each portion with 1 teaspoon sunflower seeds, approximately 15 calories more per serving.

- ARABIAN SOUP
2 lean lamb shanks, or turkey thighs (about 1½ pounds of meat)
2 quarts water
2 potatoes, peeled and thickly sliced
1 large sweet onion, chopped
16-ounce can sliced stewed tomatoes
3 Tablespoons lemon (or lime) juice, or to taste
1 teaspoon chili powder
Optional: small clove garlic, minced
Optional: salt, MSG
16-ounce can chickpeas, drained
Optional: plain lowfat yogurt and paprika
- Cover lamb (or turkey) with the water in a soup pot. Heat to boiling; skim foam. Cover and simmer until meat is very tender, 1 hour or more. Drain and refrigerate broth. Allow meat to cool. Dice meat into cubes and refrigerate (discard bones and skin). Skim fat from the surface of the stock; heat to boiling. Add remaining ingredients, except chickpeas and yogurt, if using; cover and simmer 40 to 50 minutes. Add drained chickpeas and diced meat. Heat through. If desired, top each serving of soup with a dollop of yogurt (10 calories per tablespoon), sprinkled with paprika or additional chili powder. Makes six servings, 275 calories each with lamb; 350 calories each with turkey. (Serve with torn pieces of pita bread or French bread, if desired.)
- Italian Chicken Cacciatore, Spanish Chicken with Rice, French Chicken in Wine and more. Send a stamped self-addressed envelope and 50 cents to SLIM GOURMET CHICKEN WITH A FOREIGN FLAIR, P.O. Box 624, Sparta, N.J. 07871.

ANN LANDERS

Easy girl gets dumped

Dear Ann Landers: Please print this. I am not the only teen-ager who needs an answer. How come I meet a guy who thinks the world of me — until I let him have what he wants? Then he loses all interest — I mean, walks right by me without even saying hello. This happened twice last year and it just happened again. What is the matter with these guys? They treat a girl terrific and then start saying things like, "You are driving me crazy. I am only human and I NEED you." One guy even said he would like to marry me someday and we should find out now if we are sexually compatible. Give me some answers, Ann. I feel like a dummy. — Ellen In Colorado

Dear Ellen: Wake up and smell the coffee. Those guys are interested only in fun and games. They dump you after they get what they want because you were too easy. Then there's the matter of self-respect. Some guys are ashamed of themselves when they use a girl that way. They want nothing more to do with her because she is a reminder of something they aren't proud of. High school sex is hazardous to your health. Stop being so reckless. Talk to your school counselor and find out why you are so free and easy with your favors. Dear Ann: I must comment on that letter about the night shift. I, too, work the night shift. I am a nurse. Should we tuck our patients in at 10 p.m. and say, "See you in the morning" — no medication, IV's or bedpans until 6 a.m. — and shut off all the monitors because there is no one around to watch them anyway?

Night shift means Christmas Eve, New Year's, Easter, your birthday. Sick people need care 365 days a year. I don't like working nights, but someone must do it. And that goes for policemen, telephone operators and hotel clerks. Be fair and print this. — One Of Them In Long Island

Dear One: Right you are. Thanks for an opportunity to accentuate the positive. Dear Ann: What is proper when one has the new telephone device that allows a person to receive a second call while engaged in a first? I believe it is rude to cut off the first caller just because another call comes in. A once-close friend of mine always did that. Recently she bawled me out for avoiding her, complained that I never call anymore. Just as I began to explain, her phone clicked. She told me she had to take another call. Unless the second call is an emergency, I believe one should tell the second caller, "I have someone on the line and will return your call as soon as possible," then go back to the first call and wind it up gracefully. Right or wrong? — San Antonio

Dear S.A.: You are right. This problem is one I've been hearing a lot about since all the high-tech telephone equipment has been popping up. Thanks for writing. Don't get burned by a "line" that's too hot to handle. Play it cool with Ann Landers' guide to "Necking and Petting — What Are the Limits?" Send your request to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Ill. 60611, enclosing 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Deborah chapter installs officers

RED BANK — Joyce Wallach, Holmdel, was installed as 1983 president of the Red Bank Chapter of Deborah Hospital Foundation. Browns Mills, at its annual luncheon in Gables Restaurant. Wallach was also elected to serve a third year on the executive board of directors of Deborah Foundation. Jennifer Rice, Moorestown, assistant director of New Jersey Region of Deborah, installed Wallach and the ensuing '83 chapter officers: Ursula Lieb, Middletown, fund-raising vice president; Grace Bogostion, membership vice president; Edie Scola, Middletown, treasurer; Arthur Eckstein, Shrewsbury, assistant treasurer; Mary Jane Mansfield, Highlands, financial secretary; James W. Staples, Shrewsbury, assistant financial secretary; Regina Carter, recording secretary; Sarah Levy, social secretary; Margie Marx, corresponding secretary; Julie Van Tassel, chaplain; Ruth Lopomo, Fort Monmouth, sergeant-at-arms; Vivian Staples, Shrewsbury, public relations for publicity. Elected as trustees were: Mary Fanner, Belford; Jane McCarter, Ramoth, Arnone, Virginia Westee;

The chapter presented Fanner, its outgoing president, with a jeweled gavel. Fanner reported that the chapter raised $115,000 dollars in 1982, the third largest sum raised by a chapter in New Jersey for Deborah, where a complication-free operation costs from $25,000 to $30,000. The hospital recorded in 1982 more than 4,485 admissions, 38,028 patient-days, 8,800 cardiac catheterizations, 950 open-heart operations on adults, 145 such operations on children, 122 pulmonary patient procedures, and 1,666 surgical procedures. All funds raised by the Red Bank Chapter are donated to Deborah, founded 60 years ago, which corrects operable heart defects and treats all lung diseases without regard to the patient's race, religion, or ability to pay for care.

Twin Lights accord reached

By JON HEALEY

FREEHOLD — After more than six years of controversy, the Borough of Highlands and the developers of the Twin Lights Condominiums appear to have resolved their differences.

The two sides agreed yesterday to settle a Superior Court suit brought by the borough against the developers, Twin Lights Terrace Inc. and James Snyder, and the developers' bonding company.

The settlement calls for Snyder and the bonding company to pay the borough $40,000 as compensation for stabilization work allegedly left unfinished on the slope below the condominiums.

The Twin Lights Condominiums were constructed in 1972 on a bluff overlooking Sandy Hook Bay. Residents there charged that the construction denuded the slope, causing mudslides and erosion.

The developers pledged to correct the problem and purchased a $50,000 performance bond from the Aetna Insurance Co. to insure that the work was completed. After the stabilization project was finished, however, the residents charged that the developers did not deliver all they had promised.

In the settlement, Aetna agreed to pay $35,000 to the borough and Snyder agreed to pay Highlands $5,000. This money is expected to be used to pay for landscaping and stabilization work on the slope below the Twin Lights Condominiums.

The settlement was delayed in part by the residents, who formed the Twin Lights Condominium Association, which would not accept less than $40,000 of the $50,000 performance bond. The developers, on the other hand, offered only $35,000.

The $35,000 was offered to avoid the long and expensive process of litigation, according to Marianne McKenzie, the Woodbridge attorney representing the Snyders and Twin Lights Terrace Inc.

The Twin Lights Condominium Association, which represents nearly 300 tenants, previously won the right to intervene in the borough's suit against the developers, giving the association a say in any potential settlement.

Appearing in court yesterday to put the settlement on the record were McKenzie; Edward Christopher, special counsel to the borough; Walter Fessler, a Newark attorney representing Aetna; and Lee W. Shelly, a Long Branch attorney representing the condominium association.

Data cleared at kiddie porn trial

By JON HEALEY

FREEHOLD — The county prosecutor's office may use evidence seized in a raid on the Wall home of Donald and Carol Martin at the two alleged child pornographers' trial next week, Superior Court Judge Donald J. Cunningham ruled yesterday.

This evidence includes whips, studded belts, paddles and "nude photographs of children being beaten," according to court papers.

Also seized from the Martins' Barbee Lane residence were tape recorders, tapes, a television camera, typewriters and a copier, according to court papers.

The Martins' attorneys, Charles Moriarty of Oakhurst and Robert Coogan of Brielle, charged that a U.S.

postal inspector had made misstatements to a federal magistrate in his application for the search warrant. The defense counsels also argued that not enough evidence had been presented to the magistrate to justify searching the Martins' home.

The assistant Monmouth County prosecutors handling the case, Linda B. Kenney and John C. Whipple, replied that Postal Inspector Raymond J. Mack presented the magistrate order forms which advertise nude photographs of children being spanked and other sexually explicit items. These pieces of evidence demonstrated the need for a search warrant, regardless of any accompanying misstatements, the prosecutors argued.

Whipple added that the justification for searching Martins' home and car was provided by reports of a two-day surveillance on Donald Martin by county investigators.

Cunningham did not make public any reasons for his decision. More pre-trial motions are scheduled to be heard next week.

Donald Martin, 42, an Asbury Park guidance counselor, and Carol Martin, 40, a substitute teacher, have pleaded innocent to 18 counts of endangering the welfare of children, theft, conspiracy, hindering apprehension and unlawful possession of weapons.

The couple allegedly distributed sado-masochistic photographs of children under the age of 16, as well as obscene audio tapes and periodicals. The photographs allegedly depict acts of violence against children, purportedly for certain viewers' sexual stimulation, according to Prosecutor Alexander D. Lehr.

State releases 'final' school aid figures

By BARBARA KATELL
State House Correspondent

TRENTON — After two weeks of confusion, local school districts in Monmouth County yesterday received "final" school aid restoration figures from the state.

But some state legislators from the county questioned whether the latest set of figures are to be relied upon by local districts. They noted that at least four different sets of aid figures circulated in the state over the past week.

And they warned that the latest figures and the entire formula under which state aid is distributed to the more than 600 school districts in the state may be the subject of more legislation or a court-mandated revision.

Under the latest set of figures, all so-called "equalization aid" districts — the poorer school districts — would have approximately 60 percent of aid cut last spring restored to their current budgets. So-called "minimum-aid" districts — the richer districts in the state — would get back the entire amount cut from their budgets.

This is a sharp departure from the way the additional equalization aid would have been distributed under figures released last week.

Under those figures, a district such as Red Bank would have had only 7 percent of its aid restored. And some urban districts would have received more money than was cut.

The change in the formula means districts such as Red Bank, Middletown, Fair Haven and Ocean will receive considerably more money from the state than was estimated last week.

Middletown's aid, for example, will increase by more than $500,000 instead of $200,000.

But the higher aid will come at the expense of districts which receive urban aid as well as equalization aid, such as Keansburg and Union Beach.

Instead of an additional $63,000, Keansburg will get $28,000. And Union Beach will see its restoration reduced from $54,000 to $27,000.

"The latest set of figures gives us a whole new set of winners and losers," observed state Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner, D-Monmouth and Middlesex.

"The argument is not yet over. If we are going to tilt the formula back away from the urban aid districts, we will create a whole new set of imbalances."

And Assemblywoman Marie S. Muhler, R-Monmouth, said that she is "not convinced that we now have the final figures. I don't know if we have the formula right yet."

But Assemblyman Anthony M. Villane Jr., R-Monmouth, noted the latest set of restoration figures were distributed after a ruling by the state attorney general. And he predicted these would be the final figures.

Fair Haven Superintendent of Schools Robert Chartier also expressed the opinion that the latest figures will be the actual amount local districts will receive.

"The state Department of Education apparently was not sure of what the legislative intent was, and that's why it needed the attorney general's opinion," Chartier said. "I certainly hope these are the true figures."

"The original set of figures was very disadvantageous to suburban districts," Chartier continued. "Now we will get $39,000 restored, while under the original formula, we would have only gotten $11,000 restored."

"The attorney general has given the state a clear direction, and the aid figures given to the school districts should be the approximate amounts they will get," said Van Wagner. "But I don't know if there will be a legislative challenge or a legal challenge to the figures."

Van Wagner said the challenge in court could come from urban aid districts such as Jersey City or Keansburg. They could argue that they are being short-changed because the Thorough and Efficient Education Law formula has never been fully funded, or they could contend that the state has violated a state Supreme Court mandate to equalize educational opportunity in the state.

Van Wagner noted, on the other hand, the legal challenge could come from some suburban equalization-aid districts. They could argue that the restorations are unfair because they are only receiving 60 percent of the aid they lost in the cutbacks last spring while minimum-aid districts will get back all the money.

Van Wagner, Muhler and state Sen. John P. Gallagher, R-Monmouth and Middlesex, have called for legislative review of the factors used in determining a district's equalization aid. They are demanding the review because of the severe cuts imposed on such districts as Red Bank, Fair Haven, Ocean, Highlands, Middletown and Tinton Falls when equalization aid was reduced last spring.

Van Wagner noted that under the current formula, some districts now getting equalization aid could receive more state money if they were reclassified as "richer" minimum-aid districts.

Calls for review of the entire T&E formula have also been made by legislators representing such poor districts as Jersey City. They contend the equalization aid formula has been weighted to benefit the wealthier suburban districts.

The current controversy over the T&E aid formula began last month when the Legislature adopted a new tax package and voted to restore $45 million to school aid. Of this, minimum-aid districts are to share $18 million; equalization-aid districts are to share $27 million.

It is how the $27 million is to be distributed that has caused most of the controversy in the past two weeks. The state first attempted to give more back to the urban-aid districts than to the other equalization-aid districts. This, apparently has now been changed so that each district will be given a restoration amount in proportion to the amount cut by Kean last April.

County expects no layoffs in '83

By JOEL SIEGEL

FREEHOLD — The threatened layoff of up to 200 county employees this year probably won't come to pass, but continuing budget woes may prompt some form of hiring freeze, County Administrator Theodore J. Narozanick said yesterday.

"It would appear that if there are vacancies, there is a good strong possibility we may not fill them," Narozanick said. "Right now, it doesn't look like there will be a layoff."

Narozanick took pains to qualify his assessment, saying the situation could change before the county's 1983 budget is adopted later this winter.

But this was Narozanick's most optimistic forecast since last spring, when the administrator first suggested that layoffs might be necessary this year.

Narozanick briefly discussed the budget yesterday at the workshop meeting of the county Board of Freeholders. The board will begin a detailed review of the proposed budget next week, when three budget workshop sessions are scheduled.

Total requests for the 1983 budget are now up to $97 million, and Narozanick said the budget may go as high as $99 million before the board begins its annual cutting ritual. The 1982 county budget was $94.9 million.

"There will have to be substantial reductions made in many of the budget appropriations," Narozanick said. "In order to stay within the 'cap' law, and within a reasonable tax rate, I foresee that we are in for very long discussions, but that is nothing new to the Board of Freeholders."

The $97 million budget is well over the county's state-imposed budget cap. If adopted, it would also result in a "substantial" tax increase, Narozanick said, explaining the necessity for cuts.

The county has to be especially frugal this year because last year's revenues, especially from probation department fees and investment income, were lower than expected, Narozanick said. The same situation existed in 1981, when the county was forced to use $1.2 million in surplus to cover expenditures.

In addition, the county is expecting less federal and state aid this year. This week, for example, Narozanick received word that the county's expected $3.6 million allotment of federal revenue sharing funds would be pared to $2.1 million, he said.

To save money, the county has refrained from filling some vacant positions since the middle of last year, Narozanick said. He said many vacancies now exist, but he did not have a figure on the number of such openings.

The county now employs 1,960 people. Twenty-two others are on leave and three more are paid with federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) funds, Narozanick said.

The administrator also told the freeholders that a priority list of capital items must be developed. The list will be used to guide the board in funding the projects. "Where do we want to go, what do we want to do, and will we have the ability to pay," Narozanick explained.

The first freeholder budget workshop session will begin Monday at 10 a.m. in the Hall of Records, here. Additional sessions are scheduled for next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Expo '83 starts today

MANALAPAN — Expo '83, the second annual goods and services exposition organized by the Western Monmouth Chamber of Commerce, begins today at noon at Manalapan Mall, Route 9.

The 49-display exhibition, which last year attracted approximately 10,000 people, is intended to introduce western Monmouth County residents to local corporations and small businesses, according to Carol Gorgonne, executive director of the chamber.

The exposition, which will run through Sunday, features large firms like Jersey Central Power & Light Co. and smaller companies like The Finicky Framer, Mrs. Gorgonne said.

Along with the displays, the mall will be filled with continuous entertainment throughout the weekend, including music by The Suzuki Violins and the sound of folk singer Gary Strunthus. Pat Meyers' exercise session for seniors gets the entertainment off to a start at 4 p.m. today, followed by a performance by Helena The Belly Dancer at 5 p.m.

One of the exposition's highlights will be the judging of the exhibits from 10 a.m. until noon tomorrow by Marlboro Mayor Saul Hornik, Freehold Township Mayor Robert Mantei, Manalapan Mayor John M. Walsh, Freehold Mayor J. William Boyle and Colts Neck representative Fred Neimann.

Ribbons will be awarded for several winners and a plaque will be given to the first prize winner, according to Expo '83 chairman Jim Schmitt. Along with Schmitt, Lorrie Determann is chairman of the project.

Bus stop causes Red Bank clash

RED BANK — Chief of Police George Clayton Jr. said police officers "had no alternative" but to issue separate summonses for illegal parking to two bus drivers who were picking up passengers in front of the bus ticket office at 176 Monmouth Street recently.

But to Louis Rollo, owner of the Asbury Park-New York Transit Corp. buses whose drivers were ticketed, "the whole thing stinks like a dead mackerel."

"It's where we've been picking up people for 40 years," said Rollo. "It's a logical place to stop."

The two men's opinions represent opposing points of view about the best solution to traffic hazards on the crowded block of Monmouth Street directly across from the train station.

Rollo claims that if he brings his northbound buses into the turnaround at the train station, as police officials have recently requested him, he will endanger passengers who will have to cross busy Monmouth Street to board the bus.

Clayton, for his part, believes that a double-parked bus is not only against state law but can lead to dangers from westbound cars impatiently pulling around the buses into eastbound traffic which they cannot see.

And there's another problem. Rollo, and bus drivers who received summonses, point to a new driveway adjacent to the architecture firm of Ronald Ryan at 172 Monmouth St. as the source of all the recent trouble.

The firm now occupies the renovated Shamrock Bar, vacant for several years, and the driveway at 174 Monmouth Street replaces a vacant lot, the site of a luncheonette which burned several years ago.

Both properties were formerly owned by borough mayor Michael J. Arnone, who sold them last September to Ryan.

When buses pulled up to the ticket station to collect passengers waiting inside, they used to park next to a vacant lot. Now they often block a driveway, a fact which bothers Ryan and his employees.

"I've got no problem with the buses," said Ryan. "As long as they don't block my driveway. But one day I had to wait five minutes to get out of my driveway."

"They never should have put that driveway there," Rollo said. "Whoever thought it up has no knowledge of traffic or engineering."

Planning board chairman William Byrne, who sat on the board which approved the plans for the building and driveway last fall, said the question of buses blocking the driveway — or the driveway impeding the buses — "never came up at the planning board."

Rollo said he plans to fight the tickets — which he claims have not been issued to operators of other bus lines which park curbside or double-park to pick up passengers.

"We're ready to spend the next year in court," he said.

"It doesn't make any sense. You can't disrupt a major stop in a way contrary to people's safety and comfort."

But according to Clayton, the borough has the law on its side in this case.

An ordinance permitting a bus stop directly in front of 172 Monmouth Street formerly existed, he said. But in 1976, when the train station was renovated, the ordinance was repealed, to encourage drivers to pull into the train station turnaround to pick up and discharge passengers.

Formerly, Clayton said, the ordinance was not enforced.

"It wasn't that bad because you had a vacant building and a vacant lot," he said. "We never had any problems until recently when they put the driveway in."

Clayton suggested that drivers could legally pull curbside into the one-hour spaces in front of the ticket agent and the neighboring drycleaners and be within the bounds of the law.

"There's nothing we can do about that," he said. "But they can't double-park. And they can't block the driveway."

Clayton also said the police have showed no favoritism in issuing tickets to buses illegally parked.

"We were ticketing the buses that violate the law," he said. "They (Rollo's buses) seem to be the only buses that do it."

For his part, Clayton does not see the issue as a problem.

"I feel it will be less dangerous than it was in the past when the buses were double-parked," he said of routing the buses into the turnaround to pick up passengers.

Passengers crossing the street to get to the bus stop suggested "are going to have to exercise caution when crossing the street."

But in the end, he added, if drivers can only "get used to" the change, "I think it will work out fine."

Other buses originating at Adelphia Road are the 6:13 a.m., the 6:33 a.m. and the 6:53 a.m. buses.

leaving from the Freehold terminal will make all stops the bus originating from Adelphia Road makes.

One bus, a 6:05 a.m. from Lakewood, also will stop at Aldrich Road and West Farms Road before Adelphia Road. The Lakewood bus will not stop at Freehold Terminal.

For further information about the Wall Street service, commuters may call toll free, (800)-772-2222 in New Jersey and from New York, (201)-761-5100, from 6 a.m. to midnight daily.

Rumson councilman touts cut in crime rate

By KATHLEEN STANLEY

RUMSON — The borough's crime rate was cut in half from 1981 to 1982, with only 33 incidents of breaking and entering reported last year, Council President Charles S. Callman announced at last night's meeting.

Rumson suffered a rash of burglaries in 1981, totaling 67 incidents over the 12-month span, Callman said. This was up from 48 housebreakings in 1980, he added.

"This is the direct result of fine police work," Callman said. "Capt. Jack Gaynor and his men solved practically every burglary."

Callman interrupted his police report to castigate The Register for billing former Rumson resident Charles Minning as a "Rumson man" in a Wednesday headline. The headline reported that Minning faced hashish smuggling charges in the same case in which another former Rumson-Fair Haven Regional High School graduate, William E. Beaty, was recently convicted.

"The local paper reports only the bad things that happen," Callman said, adding that Minning and Beaty came from "good upstanding families" and that he couldn't believe the charges were true.

Borough Administrator J. Gary Sammon added that he was acquainted with Minning, and that he "seemed like a good man."

Returning to the recently released borough police report, Callman noted that automobile accidents were down by 20 to 213 from last year's 233.

Arrests declined by 13 percent in 1982, dropping from 156 in 1981. Two hundred forty-four arrests were reported in 1980.

First aid calls increased from 283 last year to 301 in 1982.

Reported dog bites remained status quo, with 24 cases reported in each of the last two years, the council member said.

In new business, the council passed a resolution, increasing the annual boat launching fee from $25 to $35 for 1983.

J. Gary Sammon said the state has plans to dredge "from the main channel of the Navesink River to the mouth of the creek," thereby justifying the council's action.

In addition, Rumson residents planning to have a garage sale during the coming year will be required to pay $5 for a permit, up from the $1 permit fee of 1982, according to a council decision. A public hearing has been scheduled for Jan. 27.

Edwin Connor, superintendent of the borough's sanitary systems, and Robert Gaynor, his assistant, were commended by the council for their efforts in maintaining the sewer systems.

"Good maintenance means we have a much more efficient system," Councilman Patrick J. Moran said.

Sammon was appointed the 1983 Community Development Program representative for the borough.

In additional business, the council voted to renew the Special Citizens Area Transportation program for 1983.

And in a letter, Sammon notified the council of a change in ownership of the Rumson Wine & Spirit Shop, Inc. The store's stock was transferred from John A. Moschberger of Fair Haven to Charles and Colleen Messina of Little Silver, and John and Nancy Mulheren of Rumson.

Mayor Charles F. Paterno announced February has been proclaimed National Children's Dental Health Month and urged all parents to have their children's teeth checked in the interest of good health.

Reinstated squad captain delivers her 6th baby

KEANSBURG — Only yards away from The King James Nursing Home, an emergency squad was called Tuesday night.

It was Isabelle McDermott's sixth baby, Patricia Meyers' fourth baby, and the first for Theresa Prentice.

After the birth, Prentice and her new son were left resting comfortably at Monmouth Medical Center, Long Branch, where the two newborns were taken. The Keansburg First Aid Squad went on to answer five more calls until well past midnight.

"The mother thought it might be a girl, but I told her it was a boy even before I found out for sure," McDermott said of the delivery she performed.

The imminent arrival of the guest of honor, she said, became apparent by the time the trio had reached Atlantic Highlands.

"When the pains go from three minutes apart to a half a minute, and you see the baby is going to present itself, you know it's not going to wait to get across the bridge to Long Branch.

The emergency obstetrics came on the heels of McDermott's reinstatement to the first aid squad by a court order.

She was ousted from the squad last fall by a majority vote of the entire first aid squad for alleged poor administration.

reinstatement order was handed down by superior court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr. in December, who mandated that the charges against McDermott be re-evaluated by the squad's executive board.

"I still have to have a squad hearing before a proper executive board," McDermott said last night. "The charges are all false. I'm sure that when everything's presented to them they'll agree."

Express bus from Route 9 to Wall Street announced

NEWARK — The New Jersey Transit Corp. announced yesterday it will provide direct Route 9 bus service to New York's Wall Street area from the western area of the county.

cost the same amount as the current trip to the Port Authority. It was the brainchild of NJ Transit officials who were asked to come up with "new creative ideas for expanded types of service," according to NJ Transit spokesman Anthony Grazioso.

Asked whether the new service was in response to the popularity of commuter van pools organized by the Manalapan Township Transportation Committee in December, Grazioso replied, "This is another positive approach NJ Transit is initiating to attract more commuters."

By the end of the month, the Manalapan service will have 38 vans on the road, accommodating close to 300 passengers daily. It is the first such service organized by a municipality in the state, and transit experts have estimated $1 million in farebox revenues from the competition.

Only NJ Transit's newest MC9 buses will be used on the Route 9 Wall Street line. Seven of the buses, tagged The Wall Streeter express, will travel on weekdays during the morning and evening rush hours.

There will be no weekend or midday service.

George Heinle, director of bus operations for NJ Transit, said that additional buses will be added to the route if the service "catches on."

The new service will in no way affect service to Newark, Jersey City and New York, Heinle said.

The first bus will leave from Adelphia Road at 5:53 a.m., stopping at Ryan Road, Gordons Corner Road, Union Hill Road, Throckmorton Lane, Ehlers Lane and Ernston Road. The bus is scheduled to travel through the Holland Tunnel, arriving on Wall Street at 7:33 a.m. and the Battery at 7:35 a.m.

Other buses originating at Adelphia Road are the 6:13 a.m., the 6:33 a.m. and the 6:53 a.m. buses.

leaving from the Freehold terminal will make all stops the bus originating from Adelphia Road makes.

Social history of the dance examined

By JON HEALEY

In America, men and women are classed by their peers day in and day out, consciously and unconsciously, fairly and unfairly.

They are graded according to sex or appearance. They are ranked by their salary, their profession, their cars, their possessions.

They also are judged according to their dancing. But in this respect, the classes in America may be moving closer together.

Throughout history, dance has been seen as a symbol of caste. In renaissance times, the waltz divided the nobleman and the countryman. In modern America, upper-crusters like Gene Kelly and Fred Astaire perpetuated this ballroom mystique, which seemed to emphasize breeding as much as ability.

Then there came the jitterbug, perceived as the province of reckless youths (as differentiated from proper youths) and blacks. It was from this reckless energy that the rock era, and rock dancing were born.

Those raised in the past 20 years may remember their parents ridiculing the squeaky-clean youths on Hullabaloo for their dancing style. "That's filthy!" was a common reaction, as was, "They seem retarded."

In the late 1960's, dancing moved to the back burner as psychedelic music overtook the bubbly pop of rock's origin. From psychedelic music came the complex rock of the 70's, with ponderous bands like Pink Floyd and Led Zeppelin further slowing down the tempo.

Disco debuted in the 1970's to a loud chorus of catcalls from young, white, middle-class American males — the mainstream — who had developed a taste for the slower tempo of rock and roll. Outside of the major cities, this class of men viewed disco as music for blacks and gays — witness the notorious anti-disco rally in a Chicago baseball stadium.

MUSIC NOTES

The fact that blacks and gays pioneered disco probably contributed to the mainstream's reluctance to take it up. Like the jitterbug, disco required a modicum of training, and those who could not do it felt inadequate and resented it.

Since disco was a dance for couples, those men who could not dance also may have felt their masculinity threatened (another point shared with the rock mainstream's anti-gay bias). Nevertheless, disco continued to make inroads into the suburban mentality, although it could not join communities that were otherwise segregated.

Today, a new era of dance music has taken hold of the mainstream, one different in sound but similar in approach to the music of rock's early years. This is new wave.

Although new wave was considered "wimp music" at first by the mainstream middle class, as dance music it avoided one hurdle that hindered disco — new wave dancing required no experience, no training, no knowledge of patterns.

In this respect, it is even more accessible and caste-free than the music of the early '60's; there is no social penalty for not knowing how to do the Dolphin. Dancers are not judged according to what moves they can or cannot make. And no one has to lean against the wall because he or she cannot Pretzel.

New wave also does not threaten middle-class male masculinity as much as couples dancing like disco, although new wave artists seem to pay great attention to sexual roles. For example, look at New Romantics like Soft Cell, whose bizarre lead singer, Marc Almond, affects androgyny to heighten the seaminess of his themes.

Then there's the rockabilly artists like the Stray Cats, whose appendages are embroidered with tattoos. Listen carefully to "Rock This Town" by the Strays and hear them deride disco.

Finally, for those whose masculinity needs an even greater boost, there is hardcore, the bitter fast-and-loud edge of new wave. Real hardcore fanatics have been known to shave their heads and pierce their ears with blunt instruments before embarking on an evening of slam-dancing.

In all of these styles — New Romantic, rockabilly, hardcore — dancing plays an integral part. Indeed, all three can be considered forms of dance music, although the political content of hardcore should not be overlooked.

The advent of synthesizers, while contributing to the emergence of new wave, also has changed the face of funk. Here is one area where the racial gap in music may be bridged, as the two forms evolve along parallel paths.

Two forms of dance music which already have joined black and white are British "two-tone" music (also known as "ska," "dub," and "rock steady") and the African-influenced Burundi beat.

Two-tone music, which emerged in England during the '60's and re-emerged a decade later, is a variant of reggae, which is another caste-free expression. The Burundi beat is a percussion-dominated sound rooted in tribal rhythms.

Two of the most popular bands in England are two-tone bands, The Beat and Madness. The Beat is beginning to catch on here as well, as are Burundi-derivatives Bow Wow Wov and Adam Ant.

So the outlook on the modern scene calls for music shared between cultures, not confined. And as the exchange increases, the use of dance as a bell-weather for caste may gradually disappear, until the day comes when everyone learns how to waltz.

Report prince gave his dog tag to Koo

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew has given his actress girlfriend Koo Stark one of the navy dog tags he wore during the Falkland Islands war and she's wearing it on a gold chain around her neck, two British newspapers reported today.

The Daily Mail and the Daily Mirror said the 26-year-old Miss Stark displayed the red identity disc this month while on holiday without Andrew in the Swiss ski resort of St. Moritz. The papers published photographs of her wearing it.

On one side is inscribed "HRH The Prince Andrew." HRH stands for His Royal Highness.

ART BY HORN — E. Michael Horn of Rumson is exhibiting 15 paintings at the West End Cultural Center, 101 Brighton Ave., Long Branch, through Feb. 13. Pointed out as one of his favorites is "Blue Tablecloth." Gallery hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays and 1 to 5 p.m. Sundays.

"HERE IS THE WORK OF A MAJOR FILM MAKER AT THE PEAK OF HIS FORM."
A bitter, brisk, sometimes abruptly moving satire. Miss Sukowa is smashing. Mr. Mueller-Stahl, Mr. Adorf and everyone else in the large cast are excellent. Unexpectedly rich... 'Lola' should be enjoyed for the sheer, joyous effrontery of it! - Vincent Canby, New York Times
"LOLA MUST BE SEEN!"
More intuitive and more pragmatic than much of Fassbinder's previous work. I was somewhat surprised by the film, and yet it helped me understand more clearly the distinctive qualities of his art. - Andrew Sarris

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Born today, you are ambitious, energetic, talented -- and that is an unbeatable combination as far as success is concerned. You think of yourself as competent and deserving; consequently, you approach any challenge with enthusiasm and the conviction that you cannot fail. You are understanding of other people's foibles -- but you prefer to work, play, and, in general, socialize with people of your own ilk -- people who have drive, intelligence, and who know what they want out of life. You have little use for the lazy.

Women may gain reputations as beauties; men will have to guard against attempting to succeed on the basis of looks alone. You are highly intelligent and should not succumb to any temptation to coast through life rather than think through it.

Also born on this date are: John Dos Passes, author; Faye Dunaway, actress; Albert Schweitzer, physician, philosopher.

SATURDAY, January 15
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) -- Emphasize at-home projects recently launched but not yet really underway. Guard against over-confidence.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) -- Your willingness to correct errors and begin again makes real success possible today. Join friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) -- Though Lady Luck cannot bring you success, there is much to be said for happy coincidence at work today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) -- A surprise gift from an old friend makes the day for you. Repay in kind later, think about it now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) -- One who has been holding out against your progress and promotion is roundly defeated now. Be grateful.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) -- You will need more cash than you think to handle an upcoming new expense. Begin now to save.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) -- An inspired moment early in the day may make it possible for you to complete present projects simultaneously.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) -- Make an adjustment on the domestic scene; otherwise, you may find yourself defeated by at-home elements.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) -- Take a chance on your own readiness to succeed. If you wait much longer, you may overwait the time for gain.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) -- An intuitive approach to present problems on the home front may backfire. Look to academic procedures.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) -- Legalities may slow your progress considerably today. In the long run, however, they pay off in gain.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) -- Determine your course of action as early in the day as possible. Act according to plan -- without fail.

BRIDGE ADVICE

By Alfred Sheinwold

Declarer took the ace of clubs and led her last heart. "You wouldn't have the ten of spades?" she asked East as she ruffed with dummy's nine of spades.

He didn't, so the ruff got her to dummy and allowed her to discard her losing club on the king of diamonds.

"I knew it," dummy groaned as he scored 1530 points. "If I'd bid six no-trump we'd've scored 150 honors. You can't trust a woman to notice these things."

My friend took both top hearts, cleared the ace of diamonds out of the way and led a third heart. After some thought East ruffed his partner's winning heart and returned a club.

DAILY QUESTION
 Partner opens with two diamonds (forcing to game), and the next player passes. You hold ♠ 5 7 9 Q 3 2 2.

J 9 5 2 ♠ J 10 9 4. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two no-trump (the negative response). A positive response to a game-forcing opening bid invites partner to try for a slam. You have six points in high cards, two points for the doubletons, one point for length in partner's suit and one point for a high card in partner's suit -- but you shouldn't dream of suggesting a slam without a single ace or king.

Nets' streak makes fan of storeowner

RED BANK — A club record 11-game winning streak by the New Jersey Nets has made a loyal fan of Bud Natelson. Natelson, of Natelson's mens clothing store in Red Bank, said he recently acquired 50 New Jersey Nets tickets through store manager Jack Sherrier to give away with each purchase of Nets outerwear. "Since the streak has gotten big, those tickets have been selling like hotcakes," he said.

"I was never a big New Jersey Nets fan in the past," he said, "but I sure am now."

He said the tickets, which are for Saturday night's game when the Nets face the New York Knickerbockers, cost $6 a piece when they were purchased in September.

"For the first few months that stuff (the Nets outerwear) just wasn't moving," he said. "But the streak has changed all that, it kind of snuck up on us."

"It doesn't matter if they buy a $6 shirt, or a $65 suit, they still get a ticket," he said.

The Nets winning streak reached 11 in a row with a 120-114 victory over the Indiana Pacers Wednesday night. It is the longest winning streak in the NBA this season.

Tonight the Nets are scheduled to play the Celtics in the Boston Garden — where they haven't won since 1980.

"I hope the streak lasts a lot longer," Natelson said, "at least until Saturday." He said his vested interest in the streak has made him more aware of events in the professional basketball. "It sort of makes you identify with the team, and root for the streak to continue," he said. "Even if it wasn't for this ticket thing I think it would be interesting ... but not as interesting."

The ticket promotion is the first of its kind for the store, Natelson said, but he said the success of this promotion may breed more like it in the future.

Natelson said the store at Broad and Front streets has been in existence since 1888. He said his family acquired the store in 1945.

Red Bank runs past RBC

By JEFF TUCHMAN

LITTLE SILVER — The Red Bank Regional High School boys basketball team needs a tuneup about as much as an '83 Porsche.

The Bucs, who accelerated past Red Bank Catholic, 94-53, last night, face No. 2 Manalapan Monday at Rutgers University. Red Bank, the top-ranked team in Monmouth County at 11-0, used a full court, man-to-man press to ignite the sleek, high-octane offense to dump the Caseys.

"What you see out there, you'd see in practice every day," Bucs coach Nick Pizzulli said. "We run the break from all of our defenses."

The break worked in the game as well as it had in practice. George Hall led it, and all scorers, with 25 points. The 5-8 guard shot nine-for-13 from the field, seven-for-nine from the line, and contributed four steals in less than three quarters of action. He had 15 points off the break.

Casey girls stun Buccaneers, C2

Forward George Sims scored 20 for the Bucs, now 7-0 in the Shore Conference "B" Division North. Guard Edgar Boynton added 17, while reserve Russell Perry chipped in with 11.

"If I had to play me, I'd try and play me straight up," said Hall, who is considering attending Division II Longwood College in Virginia. "I'd try to stop our running game."

The Caseys stopped the running game for about two and a half minutes last night and still trailed Red Bank, 11-8. That's when Hall and Company put it into gear and took off. The Bucs scored 20 out of the next 22 points, including nine by Hall, to take a 31-10 lead early in the second period. Red Bank led, 52-24 at the half. Hall had 18 points.

It was more of the same in the third quarter, with Red Bank outscoring the Caseys, 31-12. Using mostly third string players in the Bucs lineup, Red Bank opened a 90-40 lead in the fourth quarter.

"We played only one defense tonight," Pizzulli said. "That was full court man-to-man. We double teamed them in the corners, which made them pass the ball under pressure." That produced the steals, which the Bucs turned into fast breaks and fast points.

Bob Scrabis was high-man for the Caseys with 15 points. Red Bank Catholic led briefly, 4-2, as Scrabis hit a 12-footer and Todd Walsack added a 14-footer. The Caseys also outscored Red Bank 17-11 in the final period.

Sims shot 8-13 from the field and had a team-high six steals. Perry was high-rebounder with nine.

The Bucs used center Dan Stubbs and forward Barry Phoenix sparingly, as both big men nursed injuries. They had four points apiece. Phoenix has been scouted by several colleges lately, including Monmouth College, the University of New Haven and George Washington University. Stubbs is being recruited by Rutgers University on a football scholarship. He played tight end for Red Bank in the fall.

Both Stubbs and Phoenix are expected to be at full strength Monday against 8-1 Manalapan. The Braves are coming off a one-point loss to Christian Brothers Academy. The Colts are expected to take over the No. 2 spot in the Daily Register Top 10 Tuesday.

In yesterday's other high school contest, Rumson-Fair Haven Regional broke open a close game in the final quarter behind the play of Bob Austin and went on to a 54-43 "B" North victory over winless Shore Regional.

The team were tied at 30-30 going into the fourth quarter, but Austin hit a pair of field goals and six straight free throws as the Bulldogs outscored the Blue Devils, 24-13. Austin, who made 11 of 12 free throws, finished with 21 points. Joe Kenney added 14 for Rumson, now 3-7.

Rich Bohnert was high man for Shore with 10 points.

Hawks face high-flying L.I.U.

By DAN ROSENBAUM

WEST LONG BRANCH — Monmouth College returns to Division I play tomorrow.

And in high-scoring fashion. Following two games — and two victories — against Division II opponents Mercy and Pace, the Hawks (3-6) travel to Queens, N.Y.

to face the run-and-gun Blackbirds of Long Island University, who currently sport the fourth highest scoring average in the nation (90.4 points a game). Game time is 8 p.m.

Of course, included in that total is the 140-76 beating the Blackbirds administered to Pace, which Monmouth beat 88-74 in its last game. L.I.U., now 7-3, lost to University of Nevada-Las Vegas, a top 20 team, by 23 points, and has also been beaten by Hofstra and St. Francis of N.Y.

In fact, the Hawks and Blackbirds have three common opponents: Pace, George Mason (L.I.U. won 82-79, Monmouth lost 91-71), and Fairleigh Dickinson (L.I.U. won 88-81, Monmouth lost 70-68).

Comparisons aside, that 90.4 points a game is something to be concerned about. Monmouth Coach Ron Kornegay admits that much.

"We know they score a lot of points, and we're concerned about that," Kornegay admitted. "We're going to have to try to slow the ball down and prevent them from getting their break going. We're going to have to get them to play our game — but it's going to be difficult."

Danny Wright, Monmouth's 6-8 forward who scored 23 points against Pace, is in full agreement with his coach.

"It would be stupid to try and run with them," said the sophomore transfer from the University of Massachusetts. "We don't have a great fast break. What we're going to have to do is hit the boards hard and wear them down physically."

Easier said than done.

The Blackbirds are led by 5-10 senior guard Robert Cole, the leading scorer in L.I.U. history with 1,447 points. Cole, from Orange, is currently averaging 18.2 points a game. Interestingly, Cole played against Monmouth's leading scorer, point guard Gary Carter, in high school.

"He's a good player, and I'm looking forward to playing him," said Carter, whose 27 points against Pace moved him into eighth place on the all-time Hawk scoring list. "But I'm looking forward more to the win."

Cole's backcourt mate is 6-1 junior Robert Brown, who averages 10.6 points a game. Up front the Blackbirds set up with 6-6 senior Russell Davis (19.1, 7.9 rebounds), 6-4 junior Jeff Meriwether (10.4, 5.5) and 6-8 senior Todd Person (14.8, 9.3).

Note: All the Blackbirds are in double figures.

"It should be a great matchup between Cole and Carter," Kornegay pointed out. "Robert's a great player, one of the finest guards in the Metropolitan area, and he's done it for years against Division I competition."

Monmouth will go with a lineup of the 5-11 Carter and 6-3 Mason McBride in the backcourt, 6-8 Wright and 6-4 Wilson Ross at the forwards and 6-10 Jesse Stout at center.

"I know their coach (Paul Lizzo) very well," Kornegay noted. "We played one another when he was at Fairleigh Dickinson (and Kornegay was at Monmouth)."

Which won't help the Hawks keep the scoring down. But getting physical might.

Isles back to winning ways, much to chagrin of Devils

EAST RUTHERFORD (AP) — Perhaps it was just a matter of time until the New York Islanders got their act together.

The three-time defending National Hockey League champions went through a seven-week stretch where they looked more like chumps than champs. They posted an 8-14-7 record over that span and fell dangerously close to fourth place in the Patrick Division.

But the Islanders appear to be back on track and their 5-2 dismantling of the New Jersey Devils last night was their fourth straight victory. They were paced by goaltender Roland Melanson and their No. 1 line of Bryan Trottier (two goals), Mike Bossy (three assists) and John Tonelli (a goal).

"I'm just glad we're back to winning," said Melanson, who has been in the net for all four triumphs in the streak and has surrendered only eight goals in his last five starts. He made 25 stops against the Devils, with only Jeff Larmer and Don Lever putting the puck past him.

Melanson watched from the bench while Billy Smith backstopped the Islanders to their last two Stanley Cups. But, for the time being, "Rollie the Goalie" has supplanted Smith as No. 1 in the Islander goal.

"I know that when Smitty plays, I have to be patient and understand and that when I play, he has to be patient and understand," said Melanson. "We both know it's a team game and, as long as the team is winning, it doesn't really matter which one of us is in there."

While Melanson was keying the defense, Trottier, Bossy and Tonelli were taking care of the attack. Tonelli got it started just 45 seconds into the game, speeding around defenseman Carol Vadnais and putting a backhand through the legs of New Jersey goalie Glenn "Chico" Resch.

"That really helps to get the team going," said Tonelli. "It's a good starting point and we built on it."

Bossy and Trottier did the building. When Resch stopped Bossy's shot, Trottier pounced on the rebound at 17:04. Then, at 4:15 of the second period, Bossy deflected a clearing pass by Devils defenseman Mike Kitchen, carried the puck around the New Jersey net and hit Trottier in front. Trottier put a backhand between the legs of Kitchen and behind Resch for his second goal of the night and 20th of the season.

"Playmaking is a part of my game I feel I can do as well as scoring," said Bossy, one of the game's premier goal-scorers who has consistently improved his passing throughout his 5½ NHL seasons. "When we can go out and be explosive and put the pressure on and get goals from that pressure, that's where we have our success."

"We've been making some nice plays the last three or four games," said Trottier. "We've been doing it as a line and (goal) production comes along with it."

Hold it! Here's how it's done

There's more to wrestling than tag teams and sleeper holds.

For the next six weeks, The Daily Register is going to bring you all you need to know about amateur wrestling, the kind of wrestling performed in high schools throughout Monmouth County.

We'll travel to half a dozen county high schools and have the best wrestlers and coaches show, in graphic detail, all you need to know to appreciate the ancient art.

Beginning Monday and every Monday for six weeks, only in The Daily Register.

This week: Takedowns at Middletown South.

Lady Hawks face Queens, FDU in two pivotal 'Cosmo' games

By DAN ROSENBAUM

WEST LONG BRANCH — With a two-game winning streak and their home and away uniforms carefully sorted out, the Monmouth College Lady Hawks are set for two of the most important games this season.

Tuesday night, Monmouth trounced Wagner, 84-52, without the services of starters Bonita Spence and Sharon Mitchell, who accidentally brought the wrong uniforms to the game, which was played at Brendan Byrne Arena. Jackie Messina and Dottie Alexander filled in admirably.

Lady Hawk Coach Milt Parker will have Spence and Mitchell back in the starting lineup tonight when Monmouth travels to Queens, N.Y. to play Queens College, and again on Monday when the team hosts Fairleigh Dickinson at Alumni Gym. Game time for both contests is 7 p.m.

Both are Cosmopolitan Conference games. The Hawks, 6-6 overall, are currently 1-0 in conference play.

"Right now," Parker said, "I'll give them (Spence and Mitchell) the benefit of the doubt because they've had so much more playing time. But I can go with my subs with a little more confidence from here on in."

In Queens, Monmouth is facing a very inexperienced team, a team which is just 2-9 going into tonight's action. The Lady Knights start three freshman and two juniors, and their coach, Sharon Beverly, is the wife of former New York Jet defensive back Randy Beverly.

The leading scorer is 6-1 junior forward Faye George, who averages 12.5 points and 10 rebounds a game. Guard Sheila Ragland, a 5-7 freshman, is averaging 12.4 points a game. Her backcourt mate, 5-8 junior Avis Wilkerson, averages 12.2 a game and leads the team with 53 steals. The other starters are 6-2 center Ann Leo (5 ppg, 7 rpg) and 5-9 forward Adrian Todd (7.5, 5).

"I don't force them (Queens) being as tough as FDU," Parker pointed out. "FDU and Montclair State are the two pivotal games as far as the conference is concerned."

What makes FDU especially tough is the presence of Janice Reeves, a high-scoring forward from down Florida way who's averaging well over 20 points a game.

"Janice Reeves has to be one of the best players on the East Coast," Parker insisted, "and she'll be one of the most physical players we'll face all year. I'm sure they're going to try to get the ball to her as much as possible."

Should the Hawks win both games, it would make them 3-0 in the Cosmopolitan Conference and put them in a very good position to win it. Still, Monmouth must win the conference playoff to gain an automatic bid into the post-season tournament, and with six losses to date, winning the playoff looks to be about the only road to post-season activity.

Center Cindy Hook leads the way for the Hawks, averaging 18.2 points and 10.4 rebounds a game. Forward Rosie Strutz (14.2, 7.3) and point guard Spence (10.9) are the other players in double figures.

PRESSURE — Monmouth College's Tammy Strutz, left, crowds Siena's Heidi Harkins (15) during an earlier season game. The Lady Hawks face Queens College tonight.

Erhardt to return to Giants

EAST RUTHERFORD — Ron Erhardt will return to the New York Giants next season as their offensive coordinator, head coach Bill Parcells said yesterday.

Erhardt, head coach of the New England Patriots from 1979-81, joined the Giants last season under Ray Perkins.

Parcells, who joined the Giants in 1981 as their defensive coordinator and became head coach when the 1982 regular season ended because Perkins left to succeed Paul "Bear" Bryant as head coach at the University of Alabama, had been hired by Erhardt as an assistant coach for the Patriots in 1980.

Parcells had announced last week that assistants Pat Hodgson (receivers), Bill Belichick (linebackers) and Romeo Crennel (special teams) would remain with the club.

Parcells said he plans to announce within the next few weeks whether any of the other four assistant coaches currently with the team — Bill Austin (offensive line), Fred Glick (defensive backs), Lamar Leachman (defensive line) and Bob Lord (running backs) — will return.

WATCH OUT! — Janice Andrews (34) of Red Bank Regional, getting the squeeze from Alice Ducey (42) and Liz Fitzpatrick (31) of Red Bank Catholic, displays some anxiety during yesterday's game.

No. 9 RBC shocks 4th-ranked Bucs

RED BANK — Red Bank Catholic High School let a 15 point third quarter lead slip away and had to rally in the final seconds to stun Red Bank Regional, 49-48, in a Shore Conference "B" North game and a battle of Top 10 powers.

RBC's Sandra Satter hit two free throws with two seconds left to put the Caseys up by three. Red Bank, ranked fourth, scored a meaningless basket at the buzzer.

The Caseys, ranked ninth, had scored the first four points of the second half to improve upon their 11 point halftime lead. The Bucs (9-2) then scored 16 of the next 18 points in the period to tie the score, 35-35.

With just three minutes left in the contest, the Caseys (7-3) trailed by five, but Diane Joy, who had 16 rebounds and 11 points, scored the next eight RBC points as the Caseys regained the lead.

Debbie Collins scored 18 points for the Caseys and Liz Fitzpatrick had 10 points and 11 rebounds.

Rumson-F.H. Reg. 55, Shore Reg. 40
RUMSON — The Killen sisters, Jill and Leslie, scored 13 points in the first period as Rumson-Fair Haven Regional ran off to a 19-2 lead over the Blue Devils in cruising to a conference win.

Leslie wound up with 15 points and Jill was next high in the game with 13. She also had five assists.

Cathy Anderson was the high rebounder for the Bulldogs with seven, and Mary Karlo, who also had 12 points, added six rebounds.

Kerry Harmon of Shore Regional led all scorers with 16 points.

"B" South

Howell 51, Allentown 37

HOWELL — Howell opened a 13 point first half lead and then sealed the game at the free throw line in the fourth quarter.

Kathy Lynch, with 14 points and nine assists, and Colleen Andryszewski, with 14 points, paced the Rebels. Lily Frejer chipped in with 13 points and 11 rebounds.

Howell, 3-5, hit 11 of 17 free throws in the fourth quarter to keep the game out of Allentown's reach.

Branchers set to tackle TRE

LONG BRANCH — The high school wrestling season isn't very old, but Long Branch is about to face its toughest test of the year when it travels to Ocean County tomorrow afternoon to take on Toms River East.

WRESTLING

The Raiders (4-0) have an awesome line up, with outstanding wrestlers in almost every weight class. But Long Branch coach Chuck Rutan and his team would have it no other way.

"They have a real nice team," he said. "They have good balance and skill and are well coached. Our kids enjoy wrestling a good team. They've been looking forward to it and have been building up to it."

In the Middletown South Wrestling Tournament held just after Christmas, the Raiders placed seven of twelve wrestlers in the finals and walked away with five gold medals. Only two wrestlers failed to make it to the semifinals as the Raiders rolled to an easy victory over a field that included several Monmouth County squads. Middletown South, in fact, finished a distant second, being outscored by the Ocean County school, 150-96.

The Raiders may not find things that easy when they line up across the mat from the Wave, also unbeaten at 3-0. Long Branch has faced some quality competition already this season.

As always, the team is led by a pair of Skove's, Andrew at 134 and younger brother Thomas at 128. Andrew is already 12-0, while Thomas is 7-4. Two of those losses, however, have come at the hands of tough Dan Moody of Voorhees.

Brancher Gene Lane (7-3) will likely face Middletown Tournament champion Mike Gere at 121. Alex George (6-3) will probably face another Middletown champion, Matt Krebs, in the 169 bout and Dan George (11-1) should face off against Middletown semifinalist Eric Priest at 157.

Eagles, Wave split in swim

LONG BRANCH — Middletown South and Long Branch High Schools split a pair of swimming meets yesterday, the Long Branch boys edging the Eagles, 61-51, and the Middletown girls routing the Wave, 94-18.

Steve Maher and Dave Ennis each won a pair of events for Long Branch and swam on the winning 400 freestyle relay team. Maher took the 200 and 500 freestyle events and Ennis won the 200 individual medley and the 100 butterfly.

Fred Reanik placed first in the 100 freestyle and John Wells was the other winner for the Wave, coping first in the 100 backstroke.

Tom Enns swam the final leg of Middletown's winning 200 medley relay and also took the 200 freestyle and the 100 breaststroke. Eric Reits captured the diving for the Eagles.

The Middletown South girls won every event while raising their record to 3-2. Karen Keller led the assault with victories in the 200 freestyle and the 100 butterfly, while also swimming on the victorious 400 freestyle relay team. Kristen Pascale was a member of the winning 200 medley relay team and took the 200 individual medley as well. Other winners for the Eagles were Cheryl Rath in the diving, Kim Bowley in the 50 freestyle, Karen Bauman in the 100 freestyle, Beth Falvo in the 500 freestyle, Kristen Thomas in the 100 backstroke and Ellen Frick in the 100 breaststroke.

Garrison wins in golf

NEPTUNE — Steve Garrison of Bamm Hollow Country Club beat out a field of eleven pros to capture this week's winter golf tournament held at Jumping Brook Country Club.

Garrison shot a 41-37-78 over the par 79, 154 total over a three day event.

Jumping Brook's Rob Roseana shot a 37-37-74 to win the amateur low gross tournament by four strokes and Bob Roussell of Howell Park won the amateur low net bracket with an 82-12-70.

John Gamberg, also of Jumping Brook, won the closest to the pin competition with a 9-iron shot that ended up 22 inches from the hole on the par 3, 122-yard 15th hole.

Nets seek 12th straight in unlucky Boston Garden

NEWARK (AP) — The New Jersey Nets are the National Basketball Association's hottest team with 11 straight victories, but to get No. 12 they must beat the Boston Celtics tonight at Boston Garden — where they haven't won since 1980.

"If you can't get motivated for that game, there's not any game in the world that'll motivate you," said Buck Williams, the Nets' leading scorer and rebounder. "And playing in the Garden is like playing in the Hall of Fame. I remember the first game I played there; I concentrated on the (championship) banners instead of my man."

Williams' comments came in a telephone interview yesterday from Indianapolis, where the Nets defeated the Indiana Pacers 120-114 Wednesday night to break the franchise record for consecutive victories set in 1975 — when the club was in the American Basketball Association.

He said the Nets will be "sky-high" against the Celtics, who have a six-game winning streak.

"That game really means a lot. But we feel we can beat everybody," he said. "Before, there wasn't that type of attitude."

Williams, the second-leading rebounder in the NBA, behind Philadelphia's Moses Malone, has been instrumental in the winning streak, but he said no one player has been the key.

"It's not me, not Mickey Johnson. It's a group effort. Without guys coming off the bench, this streak would've ended a long time ago," he said.

Johnson, who joined the Nets Nov. 10 in a trade that sent guard Phil Ford to Milwaukee, came off the bench five games into the streak to replace injured forward Albert King. He led the club in scoring four straight games.

The nine-year veteran was named the NBA Player of the Week for the period ending Sunday, after averaging 21 points, 8.5 assists and 6.3 rebounds in four games. He scored 32 points, leading the Nets to a 110-96 victory Tuesday night over the defending NBA champions, the Los Angeles Lakers.

Williams said that beating the Lakers convinced him that the streak, which began Dec. 23 with a 97-90 victory over the Washington Bullets, was legitimate.

"We'd played some pretty good teams, but once we beat Los Angeles, I realized the streak was for real. They're one of the best in the league," he said. "We gained confidence.

"We have the three ingredients for a winning formula. One, each player complements the other. You can't have three rebounders and two shooting guards. Two, is the talent has blended — we let each man do what he can do best. Three, we all play unselfishly."

Williams, the NBA Rookie of the Year last season, is the closest Nets' player to being a superstar, but he said: "You can't depend on one player every night. You need three or four."

King led the victory over the Pacers. He came off the bench to play his best game since suffering strained knee ligaments two weeks ago. He scored 21 points and grabbed seven rebounds in only 21 minutes.

Center Darryl Dawkins also has played an important role since being acquired during the offseason from the Philadelphia 76ers. Although he leads the league in personal fouls and has fouled out of 11 games, Dawkins clogs the middle of the lane and is averaging 10.9 points, 5.5 rebounds and 2.2 blocked shots per game. Mike Gminski, who relieves Dawkins, is averaging 7.3 points and 5.0 rebounds.

Otis Birdsong, the team's highest-priced player with a reported $1 million contract, struggled after a bout with the flu and lost his starting job for several games. But he regained it four games into the streak when Mike O'Koren fractured his wrist. Birdsong is averaging 14.3 points, while his backcourt partner Darwin Cook is averaging 14.0 points and is among the league leaders in steals.

"You know what the streak has done? It's made us play looser," Williams said. "We don't feel any pressure."

No. 4 Indiana turns back Illinois

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Indiana's front line may have scored 60 of the Hoosier's 69 points, but guard Winston Morgan got a lot of the credit from leading scorer Randy Wittman.

"He got me the ball, he got Ted (Kitchel) the ball, and he got Uwe (Blab) the ball," said Wittman, who scored 27 points to lead Indiana to a 69-55 victory over Illinois last night.

Morgan, making his first start of the season, got nine assists as the fourth-ranked Hoosiers boosted their record to 11-1. Wittman said Morgan's play was one of the keys to victory.

Another, said Wittman, was Illinois mistakes in the second half.

"We stole the ball, forced them to make turnovers," said Wittman, who got 17 points in the second half. "It was our patience on offense and knocking the ball loose on defense."

Blab got all 13 of his points in the first half, and Kitchel finished the game with 20.

"We made some good moves to the basket in the second half," said Indiana Coach Bobby Knight. "But, our defense still has some cracks in it."

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

Purdue 64, Ohio St. 57
WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Sophomore forward Jim Bullock scored a career-high 18 points and ailing center Russell Cross added 17 as Purdue, reeling off 13 straight points against foul-plagued Ohio State in the second half, beat the 20th-ranked Buckeyes.

The Boilermakers, now 2-1 in the conference and 11-2 for the season, took control when Ohio State's big men got into foul trouble midway through the final period. The Buckeyes, who led by 10 points in the first half, still led by five when 6-foot-10 freshman Keith Wesson picked up his fourth foul.

Arkansas 66, Texas A&M 64
COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Arkansas

center Joe Kleine scored 19 points and guard Willie Cutts' two free throws with six seconds to play helped protect a fading lead and pace the seventh-ranked Razorbacks to a Southwest Conference victory over Texas A&M.

The dramatic climax preserved the Razorbacks' unbeaten record at 12-0 while the Aggies fell to 7-9. Arkansas moved to a 2-0 record behind 3-0 Houston in SWC games and the Aggies fell to 1-2.

Iowa 66, Northwestern 57

CHICAGO — Greg Stokes scored seven straight points early in the second half to put Iowa ahead to stay and the 12th-ranked Hawkeyes rolled to a victory which knocked Northwestern out of sole possession of first place in the Big Ten.

Stokes led the Hawkeyes with 17 points while Jim Stack topped Northwestern with 25. Andre Goode added 16 for Northwestern while Mark Gannon had 13 for Iowa with Michael Payne and Bob Hansen adding 12 each.

Holtz, Osborne hit NCAA ruling

Two football coaches maintained yesterday that up to a third of today's major college athletes, mostly blacks, could not have met new NCAA standards requiring minimum scores on college entrance exams.

And the testing organizations said no more than half of black high school students who take the exams make the minimum score needed for them to be able to compete in sports their freshman year.

The new regulations, which take effect in 1986, were approved by the NCAA convention in San Diego this week. They require that to be eligible to participate as freshmen, athletes must have a combined score of 700 on verbal and math Scholastic Aptitude Tests or 15 on the American College Testing Examination. A perfect score is 1,600 on the SATs, and 700 on the ACT test.

The rules also require that an incoming student have a C average in a core curriculum that includes three years of English, two of math, two of social sciences and two of natural sciences. Few coaches took exception to that.

But Coach Lou Holtz of Arkansas and Coach Tom Osborne of Nebraska both echoed coaches and administrators at black colleges — that the new requirements are culturally biased and will affect blacks far more than whites.

"I don't think there's a correlation between test scores and success in college. I think it's more important how many get out of college, not how they get in," said Holtz, who estimated that somewhere between a quarter and a third of the athletes in the Southwest Conference would have been ineligible as freshman under the new rules.

"I feel it's discriminatory," said Osborne, who said that as many as a third of the athletes in the Big Eight would not have met the new standards.

"You might have two individuals with the same basic intelligence. If one had not been in a good school system, had not been in a home where there are books, where a certain kind of vocabulary is in use, that person will not do as well."

Balance key for Michaels

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Coach Walt Michaels isn't going to deceive himself into believing his New York Jets can advance in post-season play by stopping either the running or passing of the Los Angeles Raiders.

The teams meet in Los Angeles tomorrow in the second round of the National Football League playoffs. The Jets are 7-3 and the Raiders 9-1.

"They have good running and passing balance," Michaels said Wednesday. "Their running has been good. When you look at it overall and what do you have to stop, you have to stop a team."

In last Sunday's 44-17 victory over Cincinnati, the Jets effectively neutralized the Bengals' strong passing game and stopped the run.

New York sacked Ken Anderson four times and picked off three of his passes while allowing only 62 yards on the ground.

"It was the best pass rush I've seen all year," Anderson said after the game. "I wish I could use the sacks as an excuse, but I can't."

The Raiders, in Michaels' opinion, will pose a tougher task because of their balance.

"I think it will be harder stopping their run (opposed to Bengals' passing)," he said. "You don't have a classic fullback like Pete Johnson, but you have two good runners."

The Jets' coach was referring to Marcus Allen and Kenny King.

WALT MICHAELS

Allen, a rookie, led the NFL in scoring with 84 points on 14 touchdowns and rushed for 697 yards on 160 carries, third in the AFC.

Last week he rushed for 72 yards, caught six passes for another 75 and scored two touchdowns in the Raiders' 27-10 victory over Cleveland. King added 30 rushing yards and 11 passing yards in the victory.

Quarterback Jim Plunkett also had a big game against the Browns, completing 24 of 37 passes for a career-high 386 yards. The Raiders amassed a club postseason record of 510 total yards in the game.

Tabb chosen top athlete

NEW YORK (AP) — Record-shattering Mary Decker Tabb, the best woman's distance runner in American history, was named winner of The Associated Press' Female Athlete of the Year Award for 1982 yesterday.

The 24-year-old Tabb, the first woman track and field athlete to win the honor since Chi Cheng in 1970, received 29 votes in the annual balloting by sports writers and broadcasters.

Tennis player Martina Navratilova finished second with 21 votes and golfer JoAnne Carner was third with 9. The 1981 winner, tennis player Tracy Austin, failed to receive a vote this time.

The AP's 1982 Male Athlete of the Year was Wayne Gretzky of the Edmonton Oilers.

"Wow!" the surprised Tabb exclaimed after learning of the award. "That's great. It's a great honor. I like for people to know what I'm doing."

"It also means that people are beginning to recognize women's track and field athletes. Since I've been running (since she was 11 years old), it doesn't seem we have been recognized as we should."

It was hard to ignore Tabb in 1982.

In the indoor season, she shattered the world best in the mile three times, lowering it the last time to 4 minutes, 20.5 seconds, and reduced the world bests in the 2,000 meters to 5:53.4 and the 3,000 to 8:47.3.

Zoeller in lead; Palmer gets 66

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fuzzy Zoeller reeled off a string of four consecutive birdies on the way to a 7-under-par 64 and the first-round lead yesterday in the $300,000 Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open while Arnold Palmer stayed in position with a solid 66.

"I hit the ball a lot more solid than when I've been out on the regular tour recently," said Palmer, 53, probably the most popular player golf has produced. It was his lowest score in regular-tour competition in at least two years.

"I should be reasonably pleased with it, I suppose," Palmer said. "But I felt like it could have been a couple of shots better. But I'm not complaining about it."

"My game is not, and has not been very good lately," said the man whose last regular-tour triumph came 10 years ago.

"But it seems to be improving and I think it's on the verge of being a little bit better."

Mets get hurler Torrez

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran right-hander Mike Torrez, 36, was traded by the Boston Red Sox to the New York Mets yesterday for a player to be named later.

The Red Sox and the Mets had agreed on the deal at the major league meetings in Hawaii, but the trade was held up when Torrez demanded adjustments in his contract, which has two years remaining.

WHAT NOW, ARNIE? — Veteran golfers Gene Littler, left, and Arnold Palmer seem a bit up in the air as to what club to use on the 13th tee at yesterday's opening round of the Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open.

SONMOR RESIGNS — Minnesota North Star coach Glen Sonmor, center, who sported two black eyes and a possible broken nose as he guided his team against the Toronto Maple Leafs last night, resigned following his team's 2-1 victory. Sonmor, who received the injuries in a fight with Pittsburgh fans Wednesday night, said "Obviously, it's getting to me."

Whiting, ling, mackerel still inshore

Weekend fishing prospects continue good for whiting, ling and mackerel in inshore waters for codfish 20 or more miles out. There are plenty of fish within a few miles of the beaches.

The weather, generally very mild up until yesterday, has been bringing good crowds of fishermen to the north and mid Jersey shore. Last Friday night the parking lot at Belmar Marine Basin was so jammed with vehicles it was hard to believe that this is January, not July or August.

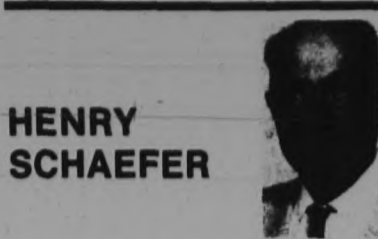

The party boat S. S. Miss Belmar, which had been running for cod 35 or more miles off shore earlier in the winter, was loaded and ready to sail for whiting, ling and mackerel by 6:15 a.m. on Saturday. Ordinarily, the boat sails at 7:30 a.m. when it is fishing close to shore.

"We can afford to eat again," said Capt. Robert Nash, who usually handles the day trips when Capt. Alvin Shinn makes the night runs. Nash said that the fishing on Sunday was only fair when the high man had about 40 whiting, but some people had only a few.

As a rule, twice daily party boats don't sail during the middle of the winter, but two trippers were still running this week at Belmar, Brielle and Point Pleasant Beach.

Capt. William Van Wetering of the Capt. Bill Van, Belmar, made both trips with good turnouts and good fishing on Saturday. He got out again on Sunday morning but declined to sail because of very rough water in the afternoon.

Out again on Tuesday, Van Wetering found ling biting in the morning and whiting in the afternoon. He said he really didn't expect the fish to bite well so soon after a heavy blow.

The boats at Atlantic Highlands were well patronized all last week, and on the weekend, too. Capt. Ronald Santee Sr. of the Fishermen, Atlantic Highlands, said that individual catches were high during the week when the wind was light and the boat could drift. William Strunz of Atlantic Highlands caught 102 whiting in one day.

Capt. George Bachert of the Sea Fox, Atlantic Highlands, said he found the going much slower when he was forced to fish at anchor over the weekend.

When breezes are light, most all of the northern boats like to drift for whiting near Ambrose Light Tower. But in a blow, they anchor up off Scotland, catching both ling and whiting. However, despite the conditions on Sunday, Capt. Martin Haines of the Sea Pigeon, Perth Amboy, said some of his fishermen caught from a half bucket to a full bucket of fish.

Mike Terefenko of Port Monmouth was a recent pool winner on the Jamaica out of Brielle with a four-pound whiting. Capt. Howard Bogan reports he has been fishing eight miles out both on the day and the night trips. He said people have been catching full bags of whiting on the 7 p.m. trips and full bags of both mackerel and whiting on the 7:30 a.m. outings.

Bogan said that the best rig consists of a number of red tubes with either a jig or a sinker at the end.

Capt. John DeRose of the Spray III, Belmar, who sails for codfish at 3 a.m. daily except Mondays, reported he hasn't missed a trip in two and a half weeks. Most of the fish are schoolies weighing five to 10 pounds, with some over 20 pounds. He has been fishing wrecks and open bottom as close as 20 miles out.

His pool winner on Sunday came from Mays Landing. DeRose said some of his customers come from as far as Maryland, Delaware and Washington D.C. Some come from Atlantic County.

The only other codfish boat locally is the Jamaica, II, Brielle, which sails by 3 a.m. every Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday.

Yesterday's cold weather was welcomed by businessmen and would-be ice fishermen in the northwestern corner of the state who have been hard hit by the extremely mild weather they have been having this winter.

Even if winter should really set in now it would take two weeks or more to freeze a safe crust of four inches on big lakes like Hopatcong.

Helyn Wagner, owner of Bait & Boat Sport Shop in Stanhope, said the winter business has been the worst since 1972 due to lack of ice. All of the lakeland shops have plenty of bait and ice fishing gear but few customers so far.

For many years the Knee Deep Hunting and Fishing Club of Lake Hopatcong has staged an ice fishing contest in which hundreds of people have taken part each winter. However, the plans are up in the air this winter because, in addition to a lack of ice, the lake has been drawn down by about 10 feet.

The drawdown, however, has been keeping the Musconetcong River in fine shape and fair numbers of people have been fishing for trout, some with flies.

Last month, one man caught a four-pound rainbow in the river just above the Stephen's State Park bridge. It was one of the tagged fish released in the river by the Newark Bait & Flycasting Club in September.

Other, but smaller, trout wearing club tags have been taken recently. The state stocks all of its stream trout from just before the season through the Memorial Day weekend.

Business Sluggish wholesale prices seen

NEW YORK STOCKS

Table of stock prices for various companies, including AC, AMF, AMR, and others. Includes columns for company name, price, and change.

By SALLY JACOBSEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the final 1982 results are totaled, prices at the wholesale level should register their slowest rise in more than a decade, private economists say.

In advance of today's release of year-end figures, economists were predicting the Producer Price Index for finished goods rose around 3.5 percent last year.

If so, that would make the 1982 increase the smallest since the 3.2 percent of 1971.

If a bit higher, the gain could match the 3.7 percent of 1976.

Even so, the new rate will be sharply under the 7.1 percent of 1981 and the surges of 11.8 percent in 1980 and 12.8 percent in 1979.

Thomas Thomson, chief economist for San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, said the recession is the "primary factor that brought the rate of increase down."

The recession, which economists believe is finally ending, also has been blamed for the high levels of unemployment.

Most analysts say the tradeoff for the improved price picture has been the high jobless rate, which reached 10.8 percent last month. That was the highest since 1940.

In addition to the weak economy, Sandra Shaber, economist at the consulting firm of Chase Econometrics in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., credited the worldwide oil surplus and abundant crop harvests with helping hold down price hikes last year.

Through November, the Labor Department reported, wholesale prices were rising at an annual rate of 3.7 percent.

But economists were looking for little, if any, change in those prices in December, which would work to force the annual rate down further.

Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., predicted prices were unchanged in December, and Donald Ratajczak, economic forecaster at Georgia State University, looked for a 0.1 percent rise, after seasonal adjustment.

Price changes that show up in the producer price measure are a good barometer of how food, energy and other commodity prices will move at the retail level. The Consumer Price Index, however, checks for a broader range of items, including housing and medical care, than does the wholesale inflation measure.

Inflation in consumer prices was running at a 4.5 percent annual rate through the first 11 months of 1982, almost half the 8.9 percent in all of 1981. If that rate holds steady through year's end, it will be the smallest hike since the 3.4 percent of 1972, when wage and price controls were in effect.

Final 1982 figures on consumer prices won't be released until late next week.

More moderation in prices is forecast for this year as economists expect last year's cost-weakening factors to carry over.

Yardeni is looking for an even smaller increase — about 3 percent — in wholesale prices in 1983.

A continuing high level of unemployment, he said, will ease pressures for big wage increases and that in turn will help hold down price boosts.

Other analysts forecast a pickup in the inflation rate once the economy starts recovering.

But Thomson said the economy "won't pick up enough steam to allow" sharp price rises.

Reagan may speed payroll taxes

By CLIFF HAAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — As a commission struggles against a deadline to draft a rescue plan for Social Security, a top White House aide says President Reagan might consider speeding up the system's scheduled increases in payroll taxes.

But White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III said yesterday any acceleration in payroll tax hikes would only be considered "if tied to reforms on the spending side."

The Social Security reform commission is scheduled to submit its report and go out of business tomorrow, but there are few indications the panel has been able to reach a consensus on a comprehensive plan.

The panel may have to settle for little more than a "list of options," said Rep. Barber Conable Jr., R-N.Y., a commission member.

Baker, one of the top White House officials working with commission members in last-ditch attempts to forge a compromise, said yesterday that Reagan "might consider" accepting the speed-up in the payroll taxes if accompanied by changes in benefits.

"But he is firmly opposed to adding Social Security taxes on top of those that are already scheduled," Baker said in a San Francisco speech to the Commonwealth Club of California.

He added: "Even if the commission is unable to reach agreement, we have stronger hopes now that a bipartisan coalition can be forged in the Congress on Social Security."

Meanwhile, Conable, the top Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, said it will be "very difficult to get a final agreement."

He said in an interview that he expected the commission finally would issue "a list of options and a statement of the areas of agreement."

There would be little benefit in the commission submitting a report which lacked broad backing because that would "simply create a target for political sharpshooters," he said.

On another front, Sen. William L. Armstrong, R-Colo., led a group of conservative commission members in sharply criticizing a plan under discussion to accelerate payroll tax increases scheduled for 1985 and 1990 and to give workers an income tax credit to offset the extra amount they would pay.

The plan would switch government revenue from the income tax account to the Social Security account, with no net change in the current tax structure.

"The tax credit idea is about the poorest part of this proposal, and it is also in my judgment the least likely to be adopted," Armstrong told reporters yesterday outside the commission's headquarters after he met with four other conservative members of the panel.

In general, liberal Democrats have supported speeding up the payroll taxes while Republicans have favored reductions in future benefit increases.

Sources close to the panel, who asked not to be identified, said the payroll tax increase-tax credit was also the sticking point with White House negotiators who came to a deadlock Wednesday in talks with key members of the panel. A final negotiating session is set for tomorrow morning.

Quality of common stocks defined

By DAVID R. SARGENT

Q — Frequently in your column you advise readers to invest in "quality" stocks. Exactly how does one determine the quality of a common stock? — J.B., Massachusetts.

A — Quality is an elusive, often ephemeral, condition. Today's good quality stock may not be tomorrow's, and yesterday's blue chip is all too often tomorrow's "dog."

Big railroad issues were blue chips in the 20's and unattractive speculations in the 30's. Many electric utilities suffered the same fate in those years, only to recover to quality status in the 50's and 60's, and then slide part way back to speculative status in the 70's.

Nothing is for sure or forever in the investment business — except, of course, death and taxes — so one should have certain standards or criteria with which to assay the quality of a common stock. Here is a set of such rules which are used in considering the quality of stocks recommended in this column.

First, how does the company's sales growth look, compared to that of the Gross National Product (roughly 7 percent for 1983, or 3 percent after inflation)? Does the company's total volume of sales or revenues move up year after year, based on new product development or steady demand for a basic good? Second, is the company strong financially? Generally speaking, the smaller the debt load, the higher the quality, although utilities are heavy borrowers. An industrial company would earn a good quality rating with an equity-to-debt ratio of 5-to-1.

Third, analysts check several other ratios to determine financial soundness. The return on investment capital (earnings divided by total assets less current liabilities) should be 10 percent to 20 percent. The operating profit of a quality company should be 15 percent to 30 percent. The current ratio (current assets divided by current liabilities) should be 2-to-1 or higher.

Fourth and last, in a healthy company, earnings and dividends should double in a five-to-eight-year period. Standard & Poor's common stock ratings (A+ to D) are based on earnings and dividend performance.

All of these criteria must be weighed with some intelligence, taking into account the company's overall experience, the standards in the particular industry, and other factors. They are not hard and fast rules but only guidelines for determining quality, which is another way of saying risk to the investor.

The higher the quality an issue has, the lower the risk to the stockholder.

Here is a list of five good quality stocks, based on the above criteria: American Express, Bristol-Myers, Dayton Hudson, Eastman Kodak, and Hewlett-Packard (all NYSE).

BOARD OF ADJUSTMENT OR PLANNING BOARD BOROUGH OF EATONTOWN, NEW JERSEY
RESOLUTION
WHEREAS FAMILY MOTOR HOMES, INC. has applied to the Board of Adjustment or Planning Board of the Borough of Eatontown for permission to use the property for rental of Ryder Trucks in addition to the present non-conforming use of sales and rentals of motor homes at premises located at 272 Highway 35, Borough of Eatontown, and known as Block 112 Lots 16-20 on the Tax map of the Borough of Eatontown which premises are in a P20-88 Zone; and

WHEREAS, the Board, after carefully considering the evidence presented by applicant and the adjoining property owners and general public has made the following factual findings:

In February 1982 applicant entered into an agreement with Ryder Truck Rental Company making applicant an authorized dealer limited to two trucks on the premises; any other left on the site must be removed within 24 hours of drop-off; the applicant presently sells and/or rents motor homes of not less than 22 feet long whereas the largest Ryder truck available is 22 feet; the present use is non-conforming and the proposed additional use represents an extension of the existing non-conforming use; applicant's basis for the expanded use is economic, indicating the existing business may fail if additional revenue from the proposed expansion is not obtained; and

WHEREAS, the Board has determined that the relief requested by applicant is in the public interest and will not result in substantial detriment to the public good and without substantially impairing the intent and purpose of the Zoning Plan and Zoning Ordinance of the Borough of Eatontown.

NOW, THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED by the Board of Adjustment or Planning Board of the Borough of Eatontown, on this 6th day of January, 1983 that approval of the application of Family Motor Homes, Inc. be granted, however, to the following conditions:

1. The maximum number is limited to Ryder Truck Rentals.

2. This variance is limited to two Ryder trucks.

3. No part of any truck shall be located forward of the front line of the existing building.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Elizabeth Taylor wanted to adopt a baby girl she met in Israel, but dropped the idea when the child's father reappeared, a press spokesman said yesterday.

Taylor encountered 12-month-old Karen Peretz at a day care center in Jaffa, north of Tel Aviv, during her post-Christmas tour of Israel, spokesman Dolph Browning said.

"She was instantly taken to (Karen)," Browning said, adding that Miss Taylor asked about adoption after being told that the baby's mother was dead and that her father was missing.

"Inquiries were made, but after a five-day period the father reappeared and said absolutely not, so that was the end of it," he said, adding that the adoption proposal never got past "the inquiry stage."

Browning said he didn't know whether the girl's father, Abraham Peretz, 26, had taken his daughter out of the day care center.

Taylor was recuperating at home yesterday in Los Angeles from a car accident in Tel Aviv that injured her neck and ankle.

"She's resting, recuperating," said Browning. "She's seeing her own physicians and is almost as good as new. She required no hospitalization."

The Dec. 31 accident and Israeli government warnings prompted her to cancel a meeting with Lebanese President Amin Gemayel.

Scaffolder admits to hitting soccer player

LONDON (AP) — A man pleaded guilty Thursday to hitting former British soccer star George Best over the head with a beer glass and was ordered to spend 60 days in jail.

Sean Murphy, 49, a scaffolder from Liverpool, admitted "maliciously wounding" Best in a London pub Tuesday night. But Murphy said he would appeal the sentence handed down in Bow Street Magistrates' Court.

Best, 36, a former Manchester United and Northern Ireland international star who also played soccer in the United States for several seasons, required eight stitches to close two head wounds.

Police Sgt. William Powell told the court Best was sitting at the bar of the Chequers Pub when he was attacked by Murphy, who had been asked to leave the premises. As Murphy moved along the bar, he smashed his beer glass over Best's head, Powell said.

"This was entirely unprovoked. The offense seems to have occurred because the defendant had too much to drink," Powell said.

Defense lawyer David Duke-Cohan said Murphy had not recognized Best.

Bank robber kills Middletown man

By DAN BREEN

IRVINGTON — Bank manager John Luley, a Middletown resident, was shot and killed yesterday morning during a robbery at the Investors Savings and Loan Association branch he managed.

Police here said last night they "have nothing to go on" but vague descriptions in their search for the three men who held up the Stuyvesant Avenue bank at 9:20 a.m.

Relatives and friends gathered all day yesterday at Luley's home on Elmwood Avenue in the Leonardo section of Middletown to comfort his wife, Marsha, and the couple's two sons, aged 7 and 3.

Deputy Chief John P. Clark said Luley, who serves as president of the Middletown Kiwanis Club, was shot "for no apparent reason."

Three young black males entered the bank, brandishing guns, Clark said, and one of them told everybody to get down on the floor as the others hopped over the bank counter and began emptying drawers.

Witnesses to the robbery and murder told police Luley was at his desk on the telephone when the gunmen arrived. He turned around after the announcement and the gunman in the lobby then fired a single shot which hit Luley in the upper left side of his chest, Clark said.

"Evidently, he heard the announcement of the holdup and turned to look, and that's when the guy standing in the middle of the bank shot him," Clark said.

"He (Luley) didn't know what was going on," Clark added. "Witnesses said he offered no resistance."

The gunmen then fled out the bank's back door, leaped over a nearby fence and sped off in a waiting car, black with a maroon roof, and possibly a Thunderbird, Clark said.

"We don't know where they went from there," the deputy chief added.

Luley was pronounced dead at the scene at 9:35 a.m.

The amount of money taken in the holdup could not be determined yesterday, police said.

The 36-year-old bank manager had been a township resident since December 1975, neigh-

NJ Transit to offer express from Route 9 to Wall Street

NEWARK — The New Jersey Transit Corp. announced yesterday it will provide direct Route 9 bus service to New York's Wall Street area from the western end of the county.

The service, to begin Monday, will cost the same amount as the current trip to the Port Authority. It was the brainchild of NJ Transit officials who were asked to come up with "new creative ideas for expanded types of service," according to NJ Transit spokesman Anthony Grazioso.

Asked whether the new service was in response to the popularity of commuter van pools organized by the Manalapan Township Transportation Committee in December, Grazioso replied, "This is another positive approach NJ Transit is initiating to attract riders and hold riders."

By the end of the month, the Manalapan service will have 38 vans on the road, accommodating close to 500 passengers daily. It is the first such service organized by a municipality in the state, and transit experts have estimated NJ Transit stands to lose as much as $1 million in farebox revenues from the competition.

Only NJ Transit's newest MC9 buses will be used on the Route 9 Wall Street line. Seven of the buses, tagged The Wall Streeter express, will travel on weekdays during the morning and evening rush hours.

There will be no weekend or midday service. George Heinle, director of bus operations for NJ Transit, said that additional buses will be added to the route if the service "catches on."

The new service will in no way affect service to Newark, Jersey City and New York, Heinle said.

The first bus will leave from Adelphia Road at 5:53 a.m., stopping at Ryan Road, Gordons Corner Road, Union Hill Road, Throckmorton Lane, Ehlers Lane and Ernton Road. The bus is scheduled to travel through the Holland Tunnel, arriving on Wall Street at 7:33 a.m. and the Battery at 7:35 a.m.

Other buses originating at Adelphia Road are the 6:13 a.m., the 6:33 a.m. and the 6:53 a.m. buses.

The 6:05 a.m. and 6:45 a.m. buses leaving from the Freehold terminal will make all stops the bus originating from Adelphia Road makes.

One bus, a 6:05 a.m. from Lakewood, also will stop at Aldrich Road and West Farms Road before Adelphia Road. The Lakewood bus will not stop at Freehold Terminal.

For further information about the Wall Street service, commuters may call toll free, (800)-772-2222 in New Jersey and from New York, (201)-761-5100, from 6 a.m. to midnight daily.

Pump station use to cut Marlin Estates sewer cost

By TERRY MOORE

MARLBORO — An existing sewerage pump station in a neighboring development is expected to reduce by some $260,000 the cost of sewerage about 100 homes in septic-soaked Marlin Estates, according to Western Monmouth Utilities Authority officials.

Cost estimates have decreased from $1.1 million to $840,000, because an existing pump station in Pride's Walk development will be used in lieu of a new pump station proposed for Texas Road, according to WMUA Executive Director Russell Nerlick.

Nerlick said he expects to learn Feb. 4 whether the state Department of Environmental Protection will classify Marlin Estates as an "imminent health hazard," which would designate it for immediate sewerage funding.

WMUA officials met last night with Mayor Saul Hornik and Councilwoman Sally Mollica to discuss the ongoing problems in the development.

If the state EPA chooses to fund the project, the state would administer a $350,000 federal grant for the township and WMUA project, said Arnold Bellush, WMUA Manalapan commissioner.

Hornik said the township would have to bond $250,000 to pay for its portion of the project.

Nerlick said WMUA would contribute $230,000 towards the plan.

Nerlick said WMUA seeks to fund the project with the authority's existing accounts, rather than bond the $230,000.

Pointing out the unique nature of the Marlin Estates proposal, Nerlick said, "it's an unusual situation when the authority and the township get together to fund something."

During the meeting, which took place immediately after the Township Council meeting, Hornik said that he thought the proposed bonding would be supported by council members. However, Bellush told Hornik that the bonding figure should not be brought before the council "until you (the township) receive the offer of a grant."

The housing development, which was built in 1972, was constructed without sewers because "there was no sewer plant at all" at the time, Bellush said.

The 10-year-old plan, which officials expect to be completed by February 1984, is a "reasonable and important project for the region," Bellush said.

"We think (the estimated cost of the project) will be the actual cost, today, in this economy," Bellush said.

LEAVES HEARING — Charles E. Quoris, accompanied by his lawyer, leaves municipal court last night after his hearing on sexual assault charges.

19-year-old charged in rape of woman, 83

By DAN BREEN

MIDDLETOWN — A 19-year-old East Keansburg man arrested early Wednesday in connection with the Nov. 9 rape, assault and robbery of a 83-year-old township woman faced a hearing in municipal court last night on the charges.

Charles E. Quoris, of 60 Baldwin Ave., was arrested at his home at 4 a.m. Wednesday and charged with aggravated sexual assault, robbery, aggravated assault, and impersonating a police officer in connection with the rape of the 83-year-old woman and a similar incident that occurred in September, police said.

At last night's hearing, Municipal Court Judge Kenneth Joel read the charges to Quoris, who stood silent, a detective by his side.

According to the charges, Quoris entered the woman's house in the early morning hours and attacked her in her bed. He also brandished a knife and threatened her with it, thereby committing robbery, and slapped her in the face, according to the charges.

Bail was set at $50,000, Joel said.

Quoris also was charged with four disorderly persons offenses for allegedly impersonating a police officer to four different women on various dates in September.

Detective Lt. Walter Monahan would not disclose details pertaining to the three-month investigation.

After the Nov. 9 incident, police issued a bulletin for a dark-haired young man, possibly Hispanic.

At the time, Police Chief Joseph McCarthy called the crime "heinous" and pledged an "intensive, all-out effort" to make an arrest in the case.

In November, police said the rape and robbery might be related to September incidents in which a man with a similar description appeared at at least one East Keansburg residence and identified himself as a member of the "county narcotics strike force" to See 19-year-old, page A3

Expo '83 starts today in Manalapan

MANALAPAN — Expo '83, the second annual goods and services exposition organized by the Western Monmouth Chamber of Commerce, begins today at noon at Manalapan Mall, Route 9.

The 49-display exhibition, which last year attracted approximately 10,000 people, is intended to introduce western Monmouth County residents to local corporations and small businesses, according to Carol Gorgonne, executive director of the chamber.

The exposition, which will run through Sunday, features large firms like Jersey Central Power & Light Co. and smaller companies like The Funky Framer, Mrs. Gorgonne said.

Along with the displays, the mall will be filled with continuous entertainment throughout the weekend, including music by The Suzuki Violins and the sound of folk singer Gary Strungoin. The entertainment off to a start at 4 p.m. today, followed by a performance by Helena The Belly Dancer at 5 p.m.

One of the exposition's highlights will be the judging of the exhibits from 10 a.m. until noon tomorrow by Marlboro Mayor Saul Hornik, Freehold Township Mayor Robert Mantei, Manalapan Mayor John M. Walsh, Freehold Mayor J. William Boyle and Colts Neck representative Fred Neimann.

Trophies will be awarded to several winners and a plaque will be given to the first prize winner, according to Expo '83 chairman Jim Schmitt. Along with Schmitt, Lorrie Determann is chairman of the project.

There will be given out Sunday at 4 p.m., including a trip for two to Disneyworld's new Environmental Prototype Community of Tomorrow, which Mrs. Gorgonne described as "a world's fair type of setup where different companies and countries have exhibits."

Public advocate challenges adults-only trailer parks

TOMS RIVER (AP) — The state's public advocate's office sued Thursday to force trailer parks reserved for those over 50 to admit younger families.

The suit, filed in Superior Court, asks that an Ocean County community be barred from ousting two young families from a mobile home park where they have lived for more than six years, although they do not meet the age requirements of the facilities, said Kenneth Meiser, deputy director of the state Division of Public Interest Advocacy.

Jackson Township is charged with violating the constitutional rights of the families and violating state relocation laws by trying to evict the families, Meiser said.

A township law sets aside only 14 percent of the trailer park spaces in the community for young couples. Meiser said the statute will be attacked on grounds that it does not provide a "fair share" for those who are not senior citizens.

The objections are similar to those used in the controversial 1975 Mount Laurel zoning decision that said developing communities must set aside room for a "fair share" of low- and moderate-income housing.

"What we're saying is that there has to be a reasonable balance," Meiser said. "If Jackson would have had 10 percent or 20 percent of the spaces set aside exclusively for seniors, we never would have brought this suit. They went totally overboard."

Public Advocate Joseph Rodriguez said his concern in the Jackson Township case "is not just over two families who are effectively being denied a place to live ... but what we see as a growing state pattern of younger families with children being excluded from mobile home parks.

"We support senior citizen mobile home communities, but we believe younger families also deserve equal opportunities to take advantage of what may be for many of them the only kind of housing they can afford," he added.

The advocate's lawsuit is in the names of Gregory and Judith Ann Chaser and Robert and Cheryl O'Conner, who live next to each other in the Oak Tree Mobile Home Park.

Under the township law, three of the community's five mobile home sites operate as "adult parks" and only accept couples where one spouse is at least 42, provided they have no children under age 20.

O'Conner is 42, but he has a 3-year-old son and his wife is younger, he said during a telephone interview. He declined further comment. The Chasers are also under 42.

The township has said that the families do not meet the age requirements and there is no trailer park space available elsewhere in the community because of the 14 percent limit on younger families.

The township has ordered the two families to appear in municipal court Feb. 10 for an eviction hearing.

Rodriguez said that Jackson Township once limited most trailer park spaces to senior citizens. The community later relaxed the law to admit some younger people when demand for spaces for senior citizens waned, he added.

"It captures us completely off guard. We know nothing about it," said township Mayor Richard Borys.

UNIMPRESSED — State Democratic Party Chairman James Maloney gives his evaluation of Governor Thomas H. Kean's performance during his first year in office.

Democrats open campaign by flanking Governor Kean

By PATRICK BRESLIN

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — The Democratic report card is out, and Republican Gov. Thomas H. Kean has been given an "F" grade for his first year in office.

And as this legislative election year begins, two major party primaries are on tap in the state Senate.

All 120 seats in the Legislature will be filled in the November elections, and both parties plan a major push to win firm control of the legislative branch.

Currently, the Democrats have a slim 21-19 Senate advantage and a 43-37 Assembly majority.

A major issue in the election is bound to be Kean's performance as governor, which drew criticism Thursday from Democratic State Chairman James F. Maloney.

"No long-range programs were presented as a result of Kean administration initiatives," Maloney said.

He said Kean has not fulfilled his 1981 campaign pledges to cut several taxes, and instead has raised the income, sales and cigarette taxes. He said Kean has not been a leader, but has merely reacted to budget problems.

Maloney displayed a "report card" giving Kean "F" grades for economy, education and appointments, with only one "A" — for raising taxes.

But Kean said Maloney's news conference was "baloney."

"I don't frankly think that the public thinks much of that sort of thing," Kean said.

Maloney said his presentation was not the kickoff of the Democrats' 1983 campaign, but he promised that the party would present a unified theme for the November elections.

He said the theme for that campaign and the amount of money that may be spent have not been determined yet.

Already two major party battles have been declared for the June primaries being held for Senate nominations.

In Morris County, where the Republican Party is dominant, Assemblywoman Leanna Brown said she would challenge the re-election effort of Sen. James Vreeland, a nine-year veteran who last year failed in a bid to become the minority leader.

Mrs. Brown, who has been in the Kean administration on the tax increase plans, while Vreeland was among the five Republican senators who dropped their support of Kean's unsuccessful gasoline tax proposal.

Vreeland said he thinks the tax votes will be "a significant part of the campaign," but Mrs. Brown disagreed. She noted that both she and Vreeland voted for the new 6 percent sales tax.

Judge OK's Abscam suit

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Quoting Shakespeare, a federal judge has ruled that the family of a deceased state official indicted during the Abscam probe can sue Time Inc. for defamation.

The ruling, issued Wednesday, allows the family of Kenneth N. MacDonald, former vice chairman of the state Casino Control Commission, to seek monetary damages for a February 1981 Life magazine article they found objectionable.

MacDonald was indicted in June 1981 on one bribery and two conspiracy charges stemming from the Abscam investigation of government corruption. He was 60 years old when he died last April from stomach cancer, a month before the federal Justice Department dropped the charges.

U.S. District Judge H. Lee Sarokin quoted "Othello" in arguing that more damage is done when a person's name is discredited than when his person or property is harmed:

"Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing; 'twas mine; 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands; But he that filches from me my good name Robs me of that which not enriches him, And makes me poor indeed."

Sarokin rejected precedents in New Jersey that maintained a libel or defamation action ceases if the person allegedly defamed dies.

"To say that a man's defamed reputation dies with him is to ignore the realities of life and the bleak legacy which he leaves behind," he wrote.

Thomas J. Spies, MacDonald's attorney, said the ruling clarifies a state law that allows survivors of deceased plaintiffs to continue certain suits.

"This is the first time the issue has been definitively defined," Spies said. "The opinion is extremely well-reasoned and a beautiful opinion to read, and not just because we won."

Time officials released a statement Thursday supporting the contested article.

"Time Inc. is naturally disappointed by Judge Sarokin's decision," they said. "We hasten to point out, however, that this decision relates only to the question of the effect of this suit on Mr. MacDonald's death. It is not ... addressed either to the merits of Mr. MacDonald's claim or the reporting done by Life magazine."

Fate of rail service is in Reagan's hands

ATLANTIC CITY (AP) — Rail passenger service across South Jersey hinged Thursday on whether or not President Reagan would approve $30 million to rehabilitate track from Lindenwold to the shore.

Reagan must sign the bill by Friday or it will die without becoming law.

Rep. James J. Florio, D-N.J., who sponsored a portion of the legislation to upgrade the old Pennsylvania-Seashore Line, said he was unsure what Reagan planned to do with the bill, known as the Railroad Safety and Improvement Bill.

Renewed rail service from this resort to Camden County has been considered vital and a 1981 federal study said it would be one of the best investments in mass transit since the casinos opened in 1978.

Last July, the federal Railroad Safety Board declared several portions of the railway unsafe for speeds over 10 mph, according to Albert Matteo, who supervises a maintenance crew at the old railroad depot here.

Railroad workers carefully monitor developments in political circles because their jobs are at stake, said Matteo, who spent 41 years with the railroad and is scheduled to retire within two years.

"We don't know what's going on. We just sit and wait," said Matteo, whose four-man crew at the end of the line rebuilds engines on trains that come from throughout New Jersey.

He said he was unsure what would happen if the money were not appropriated.

The proposed rehabilitation would allow passengers to transfer to the Lindenwold High Speed Line for the trip to Philadelphia.

An optimistic state Transportation Commissioner John P. Sheridan and others earlier this week had estimated the federal money would allow construction on the delapidated rail bed to begin by fall, with passenger trains running by 1985.

Florio, in remarks to the state Senate transportation and communications committee this week, said the Atlantic City corridor could become "the most heavily used rail corridor in the country."

But someone must agree to run the railroad before the federal government would spend the money in the bill, Sheridan said whoever agrees to operate the line must sign a five-year commitment.

High court allows asbestos lawsuits

TRENTON (AP) — The state Supreme Court has knocked down a legal dam blocking the progress of lawsuits by people who claim they suffered illnesses caused by exposure to asbestos fibers.

"There are cases around the state for about 2,000 people that can now proceed in some form," Alan Darnell, a lawyer representing 130 clients with asbestos damage claims, said

A state Supreme Court ruling Wednesday canceled a state appeals court order issued last December that stopped all asbestos cases from proceeding for six months.

Although the state Supreme Court cleared the way for pretrial work on cases to continue, it said that no trial can begin in state court without the approval of Superior Court Judge John Keefe, who has been handling the matters in Middlesex County where most of the lawsuits have been filed.

The Supreme Court's action permits the work to proceed in all suits other than those against the Manville Corp. and Unarco Corp., which have filed for protection under federal bankruptcy laws.

Manville's novel bankruptcy move claims that although the firm is solvent, it would be bankrupted if it was forced to pay damages in all asbestos suits filed against it across the country.

The two firms are shielded from lawsuits while the bankruptcy action is decided.

THE STATE

State jobless benefits stretched

TRENTON — Unemployed New Jersey residents who qualify for Federal Supplemental Compensation payments will be able to receive 14 weeks of benefits instead of 10 weeks under an agreement signed Thursday by Gov. Thomas H. Kean.

The FSC program is for unemployed workers who exhausted their normal unemployment benefits after June 1, 1982. The program is scheduled to end March 31, 1983.

Labor Commissioner Roger A. Bodman announced that workers who are no longer receiving the benefits may reopen their claims to receive the additional four weeks of benefits.

He said letters are being mailed to about 40,000 workers who probably qualify but that any workers who think they qualify may file a claim with his local unemployment office.

Water quality plan questioned

NEW YORK — New Jersey and New York officials expressed reservations Thursday about a federal proposal to give states more flexibility in determining standards of water quality.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency proposal would allow states to weigh the benefits of water protection standards at specific sites against the costs.

In a public meeting at the federal agency's New York office, the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection reacted unfavorably to the government proposal.

Douglas Clark, an official in the New Jersey state agency, said the state agency would be continuously defending its decisions if the federal proposal were enacted. He said this would be costly.

Delay in silent minute trial asked

TRENTON — Both sides in the battle over New Jersey's mandatory minute of silence in public schools said Thursday they will ask a federal judge to postpone hearings on the law because they need more time to prepare their cases.

U.S. District Judge Dickinson R. Debevoise granted a temporary order banning the silent minute last Monday. He set a Jan. 18 hearing on the American Civil Liberties Union's arguments that the state law is an unconstitutional way to reinstitute prayer in public schools.

Richard Altman, an ACLU attorney, and Lawrence T. Marinari, who will represent the state Assembly and Senate, said they would ask Debevoise to postpone the hearing for about two months to give them more time to gather information.

Prisoners' group gets donation

An anonymous contribution of $1,500 has arrived in time to save the Rahway Lifers Group, but the prisoners need more money soon if they hope to continue counseling youngsters on the harsh realities of prison life.

The Lifers, comprising Rahway State Prison inmates serving life sentences, have been giving teenagers two-hour tours of life behind bars to frighten them from a life of crime. Their program was the subject of the Emmy Award-winning television documentary, "Sinner's Struggle."

For the last five years, raising money has been "a constant struggle," said William McGuire, chairman of the Lifers' Citizens Advisory Board. He estimated the inmates need $12,000 to $15,000 to keep the Juvenile Awareness Program functioning.

But a contribution of $1,500 arrived at the prison last week from an out-of-state firm that wished to remain anonymous, McGuire said. And that money is enough to keep the group from emptying its coffers for at least two months.

Shore Regional plans to add board member

FREEHOLD — The Shore Regional High School Board of Education will expand from nine members to 10 this year in reaction to changes in the district's population, Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr. ordered yesterday.

Shebell declared the expansion necessary to protect the constitutional rights of the district's residents. The judge also declared unconstitutional the state law governing regional school board apportionments, as it applies to Shore Regional.

The ruling calls for Monmouth Beach to gain one member on the board, beginning after this spring's school elections. Shebell also ordered that each Monmouth Beach representative be given slightly less than one vote, while each Oceanport representative will have slightly more than one vote.

Attorneys involved in the case described Shebell's move as a temporary measure designed to keep the board functioning until the state Legislature draws up a new law solving Shore Regional's peculiar problem.

The judge's decision came on a suit by the Borough of West Long Branch against the State of New Jersey, county Superintendent of Schools Milton G. Hughes, Shore Regional High School, and the three other Shore Regional municipalities.

West Long Branch filed the suit to block a proposed reapportionment plan, calculated by the state Department of Education, which reduced that borough's representation from four seats to three. The plan would have shifted the seat taken from West Long Branch to Monmouth Beach, which now has one member on the board.

John R. Orlovsky, a special counsel hired by West Long Branch, said when the suit was filed that the state's plan violated the constitutional principle of "one-man, one-vote."

The validity of Shore's apportionment plan, Orlovsky said, depends on how many residents each municipality's members represent, and how close that number is to the average of about 2,040 residents per board member. The state Supreme Court has ruled that any deviation greater than 10 percent from the average is not acceptable, the attorney asserted.

Dr. Ernest C. Reock Jr. of Rutgers, a governmental research expert hired by West Long Branch, determined that, given the 1980 population figures, there was no way to keep the deviation below 10 percent for a nine-member board without giving greater weight to one municipality's votes. Reock recommended that the board be expanded to 10 members, with West Long Branch keeping its four representatives and Monmouth Beach gaining one.

Shebell accepted the expert's recommendation and assigned new weights to the votes of Monmouth Beach's two representatives and Oceanport's three members. Each Monmouth Beach vote will be worth 0.9 vote when the board is expanded, while each Oceanport ballot will be worth 1.1 votes.

Compared to the present format, Monmouth Beach will move from controlling 11 percent of the votes to controlling 18 percent, while West Long Branch's control will decrease from 44 percent to 40 percent, Sea Bright will decrease from 11 percent to 10 percent, and Oceanport will remain virtually unchanged.

"If it ever got down to a hotly contested issue, you might need a calculator," commented G. Stephen Ingram, the Oceanport borough attorney.

According to John Warren Jr., the Monmouth Beach attorney, all the attorneys in the case agreed that the apportionment law was unconstitutional in regards to Shore Regional. The remedies Shebell chose can be found in state law, Warren added, although they did not apply to a nine-member board.

Regional school boards are reapportioned every ten years, after the release of each new federal census.

The man threatened to rape the woman, who also was elderly, and then stole her purse and fled, police said.

Investigating the incidents were Detective Sgt. William Brunt, Detective Stephen Xanthos and Patrolman James J. Murphy.

The charges, Joel said, would be turned over to Monmouth County Prosecutor Alexander D. Lehrer.

Joel asked Quoris if he had any questions, reminding him that the hearing proceedings were tape-recorded and that anything he said could be held against him in court.

"Do I have to go to the county jail?" Quoris asked.

"If you can't make bail, you will be," Joel replied.

The judge also provided Quoris with two applications — one for the pre-trial intervention program, a county program designed for rehabilitation that the young man may or may not qualify for, according to the judge, and another for an attorney through the Public Defender's office.

The disorderly persons charges, Joel said, would be held in abeyance until the more serious offenses are dealt with.

Colts Neck plans procedures to meet environmental needs

COLTS NECK — The Township Committee last night initiated a proposed ordinance which would specify procedures for potential developers to fill out environmental impact statements.

Under current ordinance, those parties with applications before the Planning Board must fill out environmental impact "short form" statements, which go to the township Environmental Commission for review, Mayor Thomas Foley said.

Under the proposed ordinance, all parties would be required to fill out the short form and the Environmental Commission would recommend to the Planning Board whether additional study would be necessary. If so, the applicant would fill out a "long form" environmental statement, Foley said.

Foley said the ordinance, which he expects will be introduced by this spring, will "ensure objectivity by establishing uniform forms — and — procedures — everybody understands."

bors said, just before he became the branch manager of the Investor Savings and Loan Association office in Navesink on Route 36, Middletown.

At the time of his death, he was president of the Middletown Kiwanis Club and active in community affairs, said John F. Pfeleger, a long-time friend of Luley's.

Pfeleger and Luley's pastor, Rev. Richard L. Wilson of the United Methodist Church of Middletown, helped break the news of the shooting to Marsha Luley.

Wilson said last night that he was troubled and exhausted after spending most of yesterday with Luley's family.

"I don't know what to say — I haven't had time to think about John or what I'd say about him," the minister said.

Pfeleger said the incident was "just awful."

"I just talked to him Monday — at someone else's funeral," said Pfeleger, a township funeral director who will be handling arrangements for Luley.

William Millevoi, who has lived across the street from the Luleys for most of the time they've lived in Leonardo, said Luley was a "good family man."

"He liked to do things with his kids," Millevoi said. "He was active in his church."

"He was big with sports and kids," Pfeleger said.

Luley has worked for Investors Savings and Loan since 1974, serving as manager of its East Orange branch before coming to Middletown.

Before working in East Orange, he lived in Dumont and was employed as assistant manager of the State-wide Savings Bank main office in Jersey City.

Luley served in the U.S. Marines and was a graduate of Union College in Barbourville, Ky. He lived most of his life in his native Bergen County.

After the meeting, Mollica and Monmouth County health officer Lester Jargowsky said they are concerned about the health of the development's residents.

Jargowsky, who also is the township's health officer, said 20 of the development's residents have had to dig overflow ditches that extend into the street. Jargowsky also said 32 of the development's residents had sewage back-up in their homes and 43 residents were concerned about their dogs tracking outside waste into their homes.

Local, county, state and federal government officials have urged the DEP to recognize the area's problem as an imminent health hazard. DEP reports it is currently working to establish specific criteria for such a classification.

BODIES REMOVED — A body is loaded aboard an ambulance yesterday after police in Memphis stormed a small house where a patrolman had been held captive for 30 hours only to find their brother officer already dead. Seven members of a religious sect led by Lindbergh Sanders, 49, died in a gunfight with police.

Cop tortured, slain

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Police stormed a house and killed seven religious zealots yesterday in a futile attempt to save a fellow officer who had been taken hostage and tortured before he was slain, authorities said.

A police assault team lobbed tear gas into the modest residence of a former mental patient, opened fire with automatic weapons, and burst into the house shortly after 3 a.m.

Killed in the shootout was Lindbergh Sanders, 49, an unemployed construction worker who the mayor said described himself as "the black Jesus," and six other members of a religious group that believed the world was coming to an end. Authorities said the group also thought of police as "anti-Christ" agents of the devil.

Also found dead was Patrolman R.S. Hester, 34, who had been taken captive by Sanders on Tuesday.

Police Director John D. Holt said the decision to assault the house came after police with electronic eavesdropping devices heard someone inside the house say, "The devil is dead."

Police said they were met by gunfire from at least two rooms of the three-bedroom house whose windows had been nailed shut with the doors barricaded with furniture.

NAMBLA draws fire from clergy group

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of clergymen, claiming "a moral wrong should never be the basis of a civil right," yesterday attacked the North American Man-Boy Love Association and gay rights bills.

"These bills prevent discrimination due to sexual orientation," said Rabbi Yehuda Levin, chairman of the Jewish Coalition for Traditional American Values. "How long will it be before bestiality, necrophilia? ... It's a Pandora's box."

He said the new organization, Interfaith Leaders Against NAMBLA and All Child Abusers, was formed after recent publicity involving NAMBLA, which opposes laws that set a minimum age of consent for sexual activity.

NAMBLA was in the headlines in connection with the kidnapping of 13-year-old Charles Dyson of Highlands, who, authorities say, was taken by his abductors to a NAMBLA cottage in Wareham, Mass., and later taken to Vermont. The boy was returned safely to his family last month, and two men are being held on kidnapping charges in Monmouth County.

In a news conference in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral — where NAMBLA demonstrated last year — Jewish, Protestant and Catholic clergymen stated their opposition to NAMBLA.

NAMBLA spokesman Bob Rhodes dismissed the news conference as "a political ploy by a group of religious fascists" and as "blatant homophobia" designed to "drive a stake through the heart" of efforts to pass a city gay rights ordinance.

Most of the clergymen's fire was reserved for homosexuals as a group and for attempts to pass gay rights legislation.

Levin said homosexuals "actively recruit people of all ages," and he urged blood banks to prevent homosexuals from donating blood because they could spread the acquired immunity deficiency syndrome that has become more widespread in the gay community.

The Rev. Bishop Gregory, secretary of the Synod of Bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church Outside of Russia, said homosexuality "undermines America" and "serves Communism."

"God punishes such sins as homosexuality," he said.

The Rev. Roger Fulton of the Neighborhood Church of Greenwich Village said "NAMBLA is a very active and frequently recognized part" of the gay rights movement, noting that NAMBLA takes part in the annual Gay Pride march up Fifth Avenue.

However, homosexual groups have said they do not endorse NAMBLA's campaign for an end to consent laws.

"We are not trying to harass, we are not trying to (stage a) witch hunt" against gay individuals, said Fulton. He said all the clergymen want is an end to laws that he said help spread homosexuality.

Monsignor John Kean of Brooklyn said homosexuality "undermines the family." The result, he said, is "a tragedy."

Higher telephone bills sought

MADISON, Wis. — More than 250 persons in southern Wisconsin have asked a state commission to double their phone bills, hoping to protect 85 local jobs by helping a family-owned telephone company.

"This is the first time anybody in this agency can remember anything like this happening," Public Service Commission spokesman Al Guyant said yesterday. "It's a very genuine expression of part of the community's feelings."

As far as Guyant knows, no one has written opposing the proposed rate boost for financially ailing United Telephone Corp., which serves 10,000 customers in Green, Iowa, Dana and LaFayette counties.

In effect, people writing the commission are asking to pay an average of $12.20 per month for their telephone services rather than the average $6.25 they now pay or the $7.20 rate tentatively approved by the commission last week, Commissioner Branko Terzic said.

New 'flying machine' unveiled

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Real estate tycoon Marvin Kratter always wanted to have wings. Now he can at least float like a butterfly in his new amusement ride that lets people ride on air.

The ride uses a 120-mph blast from an airplane propeller, and Kratter is betting a chunk of his fortune that the idea will catch on around the world.

Kratter has bought international rights to a Canadian-born amusement ride that allows participants to experience some of skydiving's euphoria without the risk. He says his version, a half-block from the Las Vegas Strip, is a big success at $15 a flight, and he's franchising the venture, called Flyaway, internationally.

The customer dons a special suit, shoes and helmet, steps into a chamber, spreads arms and legs, and is carried aloft for about 5 minutes on a rush of wind created by a DC-4's propeller.

Masters of the sport can slip up and down the current of air, turning flips, occasionally as gracefully as a bird.

Marooned sailors return home

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Champagne and spaghetti abounded at a welcome home party yesterday for Robert, Margaret and Christian Aros, who were shipwrecked in the South Pacific for 25 days before being rescued.

"We're very happy to be back — happy to be alive," Aros, 50, said by telephone from his Long Beach home. "It's been a tough day and we're pretty exhausted, but we're happy to see our loved ones and be back home."

Last month the family set out on a three-year cruise aboard their 36-foot sloop Vamanos. Aros, an experienced sailor, conceded that a navigational error led the boat to ground on Heron Reef and sink, stranding them with only a dinghy, a wind surfboard belonging to Christian, 17, and precious little food or water.

After 23½ days adrift, they beached on a sand bar near the Fiji Island, where they were spotted two days later by a group of islanders on a day's outing.

Sneaker thief draws 50 years

HOUSTON — A man convicted of stealing a pair of sneakers was sentenced to 50 years in prison because Houston juries "are getting tired of crime," a prosecutor says.

Donald Westerholt, 31, was convicted of stealing a pair of Adidas sneakers from a J.C. Penney store and then threatening security guards with a pistol when they tried to stop him. On Wednesday, the jury sentenced him to a 50-year prison term and a fine of $32 — the price of the sneakers.

Prosecutor Milton Anderson said an appeal would be filed.

Anderson said Westerholt had a prior conviction for aggravated assault, which the jury also considered in assessing the sentence.

F. Lee Bailey due in TV debut

LOS ANGELES — Flamboyant criminal attorney F. Lee Bailey has new plans to put people on the hot seat — but in a studio, not a courtroom, on a new television show called "Lie Detector."

The syndicated nightly program, to debut Jan. 24, will pit celebrities and unknowns against a polygraph machine for a $25,000 prize.

Contestants will tell a story no one believes and take a lie detector test to see if what they said is the truth.

Reagan: Discount cop error

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — A policeman's error in collecting evidence, even when it technically violates the Constitution, is insufficient reason to dismiss a case, the Reagan administration has told the Supreme Court.

The administration, trying to kill the so-called exclusionary rule that bans illegally gathered evidence, told the court yesterday the provision contributes to the nation's crime problem.

Solicitor General Rex E. Lee said in a written brief that after 69 years of applying the rule, "The time has come for recognition by this court that, at least in the case of reasonable good faith violations of the Fourth Amendment, the exclusionary rule is entirely unjustified."

The rule is based on the Fourth Amendment, which prohibits illegal search and seizure. Enacted by the Supreme Court for federal trials in 1914, the rule bars illegally gathered evidence from criminal trials.

The court broadened the ruling in 1961 to cover state and local trials.

John Shattuck, representing the American Civil Liberties Union, told the court the Reagan proposal is "a devastating mistake."

Shattuck argued that judges would have no way to determine whether policemen were acting in good faith. He said they would simply have to accept the government's assurance that they were.

"This would send a signal to local police that it's not necessary to get a warrant in all cases and place a terrible burden on them in judging when to get a warrant," Shattuck said.

Modifying the rule is a major objective of the Reagan administration's anti-crime program. Legislation it proposed to provide a good faith exception to the rule has stalled in Congress.

'Drug czar' veto expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concerned about costs and the prospects of increasing the government's drug enforcement bureaucracy, President Reagan is vetoing a crime bill that would have created a "drug czar."

Administration officials said the president planned to veto the measure today, disregarding the advice of a key Senate Republican and a liberal Democrat.

The drug czar would have been given extensive powers over federal agencies to conduct the government's efforts to stem the abuse of drugs and the smuggling of drugs into the United States.

Reagan was urged to approve the bill by Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and by Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., a sponsor of the measure. They visited the White House last week to lobby against a veto.

The congressional watchdog agency, the Government Accounting Office, supported the measure, stating that central management of drug enforcement was necessary.

The drug czar, who would have been appointed by the president, could order Cabinet officials to follow his priorities.

Business, auto sales on rise

By The Associated Press

The U.S. auto companies said new car sales in early January rose 11.6 percent from a year earlier, with the best sales rate for that period in three years.

A government report, meanwhile, said overall business sales rose 1.2 percent last November. That was a reversal from the 2 percent drop of last October.

The Commerce Department's report on business sales also said businesses reduced their inventories of unsold goods by 1.1 percent in November. The combination of faster sales and leaner inventories was a good sign for the economy, indicating that new orders for manufactured goods could pick up.

The auto industry, which has suffered severely in the economic stagnation of the past three years, is among the major industries showing new signs of life. The companies' sales in December were up 25.3 percent from a year earlier.

The auto companies also reported yesterday that the number of U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff fell this week to 269,227 — the first drop in eight weeks.

In their sales reports, the five major auto companies said they sold 112,322 new cars in the first 10 days of January, and the daily sales rate of 16,046 was the best for that period since 1980.

Ford Motor Co. had the best year-to-year increase, up 33.3 percent. General Motors Corp. reported a 9.9 percent sales gain. Sales at Chrysler Corp. dropped 13.1 percent, and Volkswagen of America Inc. was off 8.1 percent. American Motors Corp., which does not report 10-day sales, was up an estimated 99.6 percent.

In other economic developments yesterday: In Washington, the new chairman of U.S. Chamber of Commerce brushed aside President Reagan's appeal for each business to hire one unemployed worker, saying "It is probably a good idea — but nothing more than a good idea." Robert T. Thompson told reporters he had dismissed the idea of his board endorsing such a program for the chamber's 250,000 member companies.

Rudolph Giuliani said the drug czar provision of the crime bill was "naive, simplistic and hopelessly flawed."

Giuliani called the measure irresponsible, saying it would force a reorganization of Reagan's Cabinet system and law enforcement programs without ever having been the subject of a congressional hearing.

Landowners in Texas seek Mexican payment

WASHINGTON (AP) — A lawyer for the Mexican government has cautioned a U.S. District Court judge not to "move into a diplomatic thicket" by trying to force Mexico to pay $1 billion to descendants of former Texas landowners who lost their land.

District Court Judge Robert H. Shenefield told Judge Thomas F. Hogan on yesterday.

Shenefield asked Hogan to dismiss a suit that revives a century-old battle over 12 million acres of Texas land taken in the late 1800s from its original settlers.

Mexico agreed in 1941 to compensate descendants of the landowners for their loss, but the descendants say no payment was made.

"Your honor, we have waited 42 years," Vicki Jackson, an attorney for the descendants, told Hogan. "There are some reasonable limits."

After two hours of arguments witnessed by nearly 100 of the descendants, Hogan gave both sides two weeks to file additional comments.

Robert Salazar, another lawyer for the descendants, said that though 2,500 heirs have been identified, more than 20,000 could eventually benefit from a settlement.

Shenefield argued that under that law, Hogan has no such jurisdiction.

Walesa returns to work

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa is going back to work at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk, saying he is "determined to fight with peaceful means" for the aims of the independent labor movement he led from its founding at the Baltic port yards.

"I shall return to the birthplace of Solidarity convinced that at present I belong among the people who have given me their full confidence," Walesa said in a statement read by an aide to Western reporters over the telephone yesterday.

The statement said Walesa would return to his electrician's job today.

Solidarity, the only independent trade union in the Soviet bloc until it was suspended under martial law, was banned last Oct. 8 by a new labor law that sharply restricts the growth of new unions.

Under the law, workers cannot strike for political demands.

Layoffs rejected for county employees

By JOEL SIEGEL

FREEHOLD — The threatened layoff of up to 200 county employees this year probably won't come to pass, but continuing budget woes may prompt some form of hiring freeze, County Administrator Theodore J. Narozanick said yesterday.

"It would appear that if there are vacancies, there is a good strong possibility we may not fill them," Narozanick said. "Right now, it doesn't look like there will be a layoff."

Narozanick took pains to qualify his assessment, saying the situation could change before the county's 1983 budget is adopted later this winter.

But this was Narozanick's most optimistic forecast since last spring, when the administrator first suggested that layoffs may be necessary this year.

Narozanick briefly discussed the budget yesterday at the workshop meeting of the county Board of Freeholders. The board will begin a detailed review of the proposed budget next week, when three budget workshop sessions are scheduled.

Total requests for the 1983 budget are now up to $97 million, and Narozanick said the budget may go as high as $99 million before the board begins its annual cutting ritual. The 1982 county budget was $94.9 million.

"There will have to be substantial reductions made in many of the budget appropriations," Narozanick said. "In order to stay within the 'cap' law, and within a reasonable tax rate, I foresee that we are in for very long discussions, but that is nothing new to the Board of Freeholders."

The $97 million budget is well over the county's state-imposed budget cap. If adopted, it would also result in a "substantial" tax increase, Narozanick said, explaining the necessity for cuts.

The county has to be especially frugal this year because last year's revenues, especially from probation department fees and investment income, were lower than expected, Narozanick said. The same situation existed in 1981, when the county was forced to use $1.2 million in surplus to cover expenditures.

In addition, the county is expecting less federal and state aid this year. This week, for example, Narozanick received word that the county's expected $3.6 million allotment of federal revenue sharing funds would be pared to $2.1 million, he said.

To save money, the county has refrained from filling some vacant positions since the middle of last year, Narozanick said. He said many vacancies now exist, but he did not have a figure on the number of such openings.

The county now employs 1,960 people. Twenty-two others are on leave and three more are paid with federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) funds, Narozanick said.

The administrator also told the freeholders that a priority list of capital items must be developed. The list will be used to guide the board in funding the projects. "Where do we want to go, what do we want to do, and will we have the ability to pay," Narozanick explained.

The first freeholder budget workshop session will begin Monday at 10 a.m. in the Hall of Records, here. Additional sessions are scheduled for next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Review criticizes Monmouth CETA job program

By JOEL SIEGEL

FREEHOLD — The county's "hard-core economically disadvantaged" were inadequately helped last year by the county's multi-million dollar job training and placement program funded under CETA, the federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act, a federal review of the county program charges.

The review, prepared by the U.S. Department of Labor's regional office in New York, also says the program placed 31 percent less participants into "private sector" jobs than planned.

"You are serving the most employable of the unemployed to the detriment of the most severely economically disadvantaged who have substantial barriers to employment," the review says. "This practice is contrary to both the stated intention and spirit of the CETA act."

In 1982, county CETA's budget was $8.6 million, of which $1 million was funneled to PIC, the Monmouth County Private Industry Council. PIC is an appointed body of business and civic leaders in charge of certain CETA activities in an effort to involve the business community in employment and training programs.

The review, dated Dec. 20, covers fiscal year 1982, a 12-month period ending Sept. 30. During that time bitter feuds erupted between PIC and the county Board of Freeholders, and also between PIC and the larger CETA program, over the operation of PIC programs.

David Riley, an area administrator of CETA programs for the Department of Labor, says the "desk review" of the county's program "is worded about as strongly as we tend to get."

But he said the county's program "is by no means at the bottom of the barrel," compared with other such programs in the state. "It's somewhere between heaven and hell," he said.

In addition, he said the area's poor economy may be the reason why job placement goals were never met. "We could have been more harsh, had we not considered the times we live in," Riley said.

According to the review, the "vast majority" of those served by county CETA programs last year were not the hardcore poor and disadvantaged targeted by the county's 1982 CETA plan. The review calls this "cream-

A total of 1,910 persons were served by CETA Title IIB programs, which includes "Classroom" and "On the Job Training" programs. Of these participants, 1,293 were "young people without children," 409 were receiving welfare and 60 percent were "high school graduates and above."

The review then charged: "Based on your data, services are being provided to the most easily served portions of the population."

Approximately 890 persons were served by CETA Title VII programs, which provide services to program participants. Of this group, only 16 percent was composed of welfare recipients and 80 percent had at least a high school diploma, the review says.

Counting both program groups, which includes PIC programs, the county CETA agency planned to make placements in private sector jobs at the rate of 59 percent of participants. However, a rate of 41 percent was achieved. Thus the rate of private sector placement was off by 31 percent, well above the 15 percent deviation considered the acceptable limit by the Department of Labor, Riley said.

A third category of CETA programs, the Youth Employment Training Program, didn't fare well either, the review shows. The rate of participants in this program who gained employment was only 10 percent, off 38 percent from program goals.

On the positive side, the review notes that participants in all three kinds of CETA programs, including PIC programs, had a "positive termination" rate close to projections. A positive termination is recorded whenever a participant gains employment, returns to school, or joins the military.

The review also found that program costs were within acceptable limits.

County officials maintained early last year that the programs were running poorly because of problems within the Private Industry Council and its programs, which were integrated into the CETA program.

However, a comparison of the final 1982 review with first and second quarter reviews shows the private placement rate remained at the same sub-par rate throughout the year.

In anticipation of a change in federal policy this fall giving the business community a greater role in job training and placement programs, the Freeholders closed the county CETA agency last fall and merged its activities into the Private Industry Council, which was made semi-autonomous and given a $5.2 million budget.

Edward P. Walsh, the PIC executive director since June, suddenly announced his resignation last week, effective Feb. 1. The move forces PIC to seek its fifth executive director in 18 months. Walsh's retirement is not related to the review, officials say.

Karl V. Fox, the former CETA head who now monitors the PIC program for the freeholders, said the review outcome is at least in part due to poor economic conditions, goals that were too high, and the PIC-CETA feud of last year.

He pointed out that everyone in the program met economic eligibility guidelines, and that since the third quarter Department of Labor review, changes have been made in the program's "Internal Monitoring Unit."

Harry Larrison Jr., director of the Board of Freeholders, the "sponsor" agency ultimately responsible for this year's PIC funds, said he is disappointed by the review.

PIC must improve upon the statistics this year, he said, or face the end of its autonomy in the same way the county took control of the PIC program for several weeks last spring.

Police arrest bookmaker according to the book

By ANDREW SHEEHAN

HOLMDEL — It was what they call a textbook bust.

A 1982 Cadillac pulled into a parking lot off Route 34 at approximately 4 p.m. yesterday with a 6-foot-3, 290-pound man sitting behind the wheel.

Another unidentified man described as an accomplice stepped out of his car, approached the Cadillac, and began engaged in three minutes of chat, two Monmouth County investigators stepped out of their cars and approached the Cadillac.

Other county men stepped out of two other cars in the lot and another ran from his car from a gas station across the street.

Two township police cars screeched to a halt in front of the lot's two entrances. Two officers with shotguns jumped out and approached the growing crowd around the Cadillac, but the man behind the wheel had already decided not to resist.

County Chief of Detectives Frank Licitra slapped handcuffs around the wrists of Donald Hingos, a 42-year-old ex-Newark policeman, suspected of being one of the largest bookmakers in the state.

"That's the beauty of this type of arrest," Licitra said as his men guided the hulky Hingos into a police car. "You move in quick and hard and they can't beat you."

Paul J. Feldman, senior staff attorney in the county prosecutor's office, said Hingos of Clark is believed to have headed a massive bookmaking operation in New Jersey and New York.

"In New Jersey alone he was taking action in excess of $1 million a week," he said.

Driving back to Freehold to request a granted bail request of $50,000 from Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr., Feldman described the Hingos as a man "interested in taking bets on almost anything."

"He probably would have made a bet on whether he'd get arrested today and given you great odds he wouldn't be," Feldman said.

Feldman, who has headed a three-year crackdown on sports betting and bookmaking in the county, charged Hingos with three counts of conspiracy to promote gambling pending additional charges.

He said the county seized from the car $37,500 in cash, $23,000 in checks and the records of betting transactions between Hingos and his clients.

Latter in the evening, Prosecutor Alexander D. Lehrer received a phone call from two of his investigators in the Elmhurst section of Queens, New York. At approximately 8 p.m., Lehrer said, the investigators in conjunction with the arrested two men suspected of working for Hingos.

Lehrer said authorities arrested Alan Pincus of Queens and George Pincus of Queens, who had "tremendous amount" of gambling records in the house.

Feldman described the two men as "sitters."

"A sitter is a guy who works on a salary basis for a major bookmaker," Feldman began. "He takes the bets over the phone and relays the records and the information to the bookmaker."

Feldman said Hingos employed at least 30 such men in New York and New Jersey to serve as a "conduit" between the sports bettor and the bookmaker.

Monmouth St. bus stop is hub of controversy

RED BANK — Chief of Police George Clayton Jr. said police officers "had no alternative" but to issue separate summonses for illegal parking to two bus drivers who were picking up passengers in front of the bus ticket office at 176 Monmouth Street recently.

But to Louis Rollo, owner of the Asbury Park-New York Transit Corp. buses whose drivers were ticketed, "the whole thing stinks like a dead mackerel."

"It's where we've been picking up people for 40 years," said Rollo. "It's a logical place to stop."

The two men's opinions represent opposing points of view about the best solution to traffic hazards on the crowded block of Monmouth Street directly across from the train station.

Rollo claims that if he brings his northbound buses into the turnaround at the train station, as police officials have recently requested him, he will endanger passengers who will have to cross busy Monmouth Street to board the bus.

Clayton, for his part, believes that a double-parked bus is not only against state law but can lead to dangers from westbound cars impatiently pulling around the buses into eastbound traffic which they cannot see.

And there's another problem. Rollo, and bus drivers who received summonses, point to a new driveway adjacent to the architecture firm of Ronald Ryan at 172 Monmouth St. as the source of all the recent trouble.

The firm now occupies the renovated Shamrock Bar, vacant for several years, and the driveway at 174 Monmouth Street replaces a vacant lot, the site of a luncheonette which burned several years ago.

Both properties were formerly owned by borough mayor Michael J. Arnone, who sold them last September to Ryan.

When buses pulled up to the ticket station to collect passengers waiting inside, they used to park next to a vacant lot. Now they often block a driveway, a fact which bothers Ryan and his employees.

BUS STOP POLITICS—Bus drivers were issued summonses at this stop at 176 Monmouth St.

"I've got no problem with the buses," said Ryan. "As long as they don't block my driveway. But one day I had to wait five minutes to get out of my driveway."

"They never should have put that driveway there," Rollo said. "Whoever thought it up has no knowledge of traffic or engineering."

Planning board chairman William Byrne, who sat on the board which approved the plans for the building and driveway last fall, said the question of buses blocking the driveway — or the driveway impeding the buses — "never came up at the planning board."

Rollo said he plans to fight the tickets — which he claims have not been issued to operators of other bus lines which park curbside or double-park to pick up passengers.

"We're ready to spend the next year in court," he said.

"It doesn't make any sense. You can't disrupt a major stop in a way contrary to people's safety and comfort."

But according to Clayton, the borough has the law on its side in this case.

An ordinance permitting a bus stop directly in front of 172 Monmouth Street formerly existed, he said. But in 1976, when the train station was renovated, the ordinance was repealed, to encourage drivers to pull into the train station turnaround to pick up and discharge passengers.

Formerly, Clayton said, the ordinance was not enforced.

"It wasn't that bad because you had a vacant building and a vacant lot," he said. "We never had any problems until recently when they put the driveway in."

Clayton suggested that drivers could legally pull curbside into the one-hour spaces in front of the ticket agent and the neighboring drycleaners and be within the bounds of the law.

"There's nothing we can do about that," he said. "But they can't double-park. And they can't block the driveway."

Clayton also said the police have showed no favoritism in issuing tickets to buses illegally parked.

"We were ticketing the buses that violate the law," he said. "They (Rollo's buses) seem to be the only buses that do it."

For his part, Clayton does not see the issue as a problem.

"I feel it will be less dangerous than it was in the past when the buses were double-parked," he said of routing the buses into the turnaround to pick up passengers.

Passengers crossing the street to reach the buses, he suggested, "are going to have to exercise caution when crossing the street."

But in the end, he added, if drivers can only "get used to" the change, "I think it will work out fine."

Reinstated captain delivers baby

By KATHLEEN STANLEY

The mother thought it might be a girl, but I told her it was a boy even before I found out for sure," McDermott said of the delivery she performed.

The imminent arrival of the guest of honor, she said, became apparent at the time the trio had reached Atlantic Highlands.

"When the pains go from three minutes apart to a half a minute, and you see the baby is going to present itself, you know it's not going to wait to get across the bridge to Long Branch."

The emergency obstetrics came on the heels of McDermott's reinstatement to the first aid squad by a court order.

She was ousted from the squad last fall by a majority vote of the entire first aid squad for alleged poor administration in her position as captain. The reinstatement order was handed down by Superior Court Judge Thomas F. Shebell Jr. in December, who mandated that the charges against McDermott be re-evaluated by the squad's executive board.

"I still have to have a squad hearing before a proper executive board," McDermott said last night. "The charges are all false. I'm sure that when everything's presented to them they'll agree."
