Local judge throws out breathalyzer

By ANDREW SHEEHAN

KEYPORT — Municipal Court Judge Ronald Horan last night ruled that the breathalyzer cannot be used as evidence against accused drunk drivers in the four municipalities in which he presides — Highlands, Keansburg, Keyport and Sea Bright.

Horan's ruling sets in motion a probable statewide challenge to the use of the breathalyzer, the machine used by police to measure the amount of alcohol in a driver's blood stream.

Termining the evidence against the breathalyzer as an effective tool "overwhelming," Horan made his ruling three weeks after the concluding arguments in a four-month-long case examining the accuracy of the machine.

In his decision, Horan said attorneys Francis X. Moore, Thomas J. Smith Jr., Robert Holden, Thomas W. Andrews and Ronald L. Leuddeke proved that the machine's readings could be affected by outside radio frequency interference, and are thus inadmissible as evidence.

"The results of the breath test in any given test are unreliable," Horan ruled from the bench.

The immediate effect of the ruling will be to bar the use of the breathalyzer as evidence against 60 persons pending trial in Horan's four municipal courtrooms for driving under the influence of alcohol.

In addition, any person convicted of driving while intoxicated in the municipalities will be able to reopen his case without breathalyzer evidence being used against him.

In view of Horan's decision, the successful attorneys also asserted that the breathalyzer should be thrown out across the state, and that the more than 60,000 statewide convictions over the past two years could be reopened because the state Attorney General's Office argued on

PROTESTER DRAGGED AWAY — A woman protester is hauled to the paddy wagon after being arrested for throwing something at a policeman while protesting a visit to Pittsburgh by President Reagan.

Pittsburgh jobless boo Reagan visit

PITTSBURGH (AP) — President Reagan, taking his pitch for high technology job retraining amongst a sea of unemployed steelworkers, ran into one of the largest protest demonstrations of his presidency yesterday.

After a tour of the Control Data Institute, where 125 jobless steelworkers are being trained to repair computers, Reagan spoke to the National Conference on the Dislocated Worker while thousands stood outside in a cold rain waving signs and chanting.

"Reagan, Reagan, he's no good. Send him back to Hollywood," they said.

Among the banners: "Reagans Friends Get Tax Breaks. Steelworkers Get Pink Slips." And: "Buck Stopped Here When Ronald Reagan Took Office."

The president, whisked into the hotel through an underground garage, could see only a smattering of the crowd, which police estimated at 3,500.

Kean bans oversized trucks on Route 9, other highways

TRENTON (AP) — Charging that federal transportation officials have ignored safety and overstepped their authority, New Jersey's governor is refusing to allow oversized trucks on most federally designated state highways, including Route 9 in Monmouth County.

"The federal government has proposed a totally unsafe system," Gov. Thomas H. Kean said yesterday, the day federal legislation was supposed to open 901 miles of state highways to longer and wider trucks.

Under the law that raised the gasoline tax 5 cents a gallon, larger trucks were allowed on the federal interstate highway system and on other state "primary" roads built with federal funds and designated by the federal Transportation Department.

The 339 miles of interstate highways in New Jersey will be open to twin trailer trucks and wider "double bottom" trucks, as will the New Jersey Turnpike and the Atlantic City Expressway.

But all remaining state roadways ordered opened by federal officials will remain off limits to bigger rigs. Kean and state Transportation Commissioner John Sheridan Jr. vowed at a State House news conference in Trenton.

"I don't think the federal government looked at the roads they would allow the trucks on," said Kean.

"We don't want people coming out of Burger King and getting creamed by one of these big trucks," said Debbie Lawler, a state Department of Transportation spokeswoman.

One of the roads the state is refusing to allow the big trucks to travel on is US Route 9, which runs from Lewes Ferry in Cape May County through Atlantic, Ocean and western Monmouth County to NJ 18 in Sayre Woods South, a two-lane highway without controlled access. Route 9 has a bridge with a 12-ton weight limit in Atlantic County that could not accommodate heavier trucks, Lawler noted.

The governor instructed state police to begin enforcing the state mandate last night, saying: "They could stop trucks, tell them to turn around or order them to split up."

First Assistant Attorney General Thomas Greefish said truck drivers refusing to follow the orders could be arrested for "willfully refusing to follow directions."

Meanwhile, Kean said that the state attorney general's office will consider joining a Connecticut lawsuit challenging the federal regulations.

Cosby to plug N.J. theme

By JIM MANION

TRENTON (AP) — Gov. Thomas H. Kean yesterday unveiled a $1.1 million promotional campaign for New Jersey designed to lure summer vacationers and improve the state's image.

With the theme of "New Jersey and You. Perfect Together," the state is launching a seven-week media blitz today that will pump more than $858,000 into radio, television and print advertising.

"We have a program which shows the state's commitment toward improving its image," Kean said. "We are proud of our assets and achievements. This promotional campaign enables us to reflect that pride to others."

The theme, selected by the advertising firm of Bozell & Jacobs of Union, which received the promotional contract, will be pitched in the media ads and even printed on state lottery tickets, Kean said.

New Jersey often is portrayed nationally as a pollution-plagued "corridor" state between Philadelphia and New York without reference to the beauty of its back roads and beaches, Kean said.

"What people think about New Jersey is not the truth," Kean said.

Although New Jersey is often the butt of national jokes, Kean said he personally selected Philadelphia comedian Bill Cosby to narrate several television ads because of his sincerity.

Trades council backs Gallagher

By BARBARA KATELL
State House Correspondent

MIDDLETOWN — Officials from the Monmouth-Ocean Building and Construction Trades Council, AFL-CIO, held a joint press conference with state Sen. John P. Gallagher, R-Monmouth and Middlesex, yesterday afternoon, to announce the council's support of Gallagher's re-election bid.

Council President James A. Gratton, business manager for Local 400, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said the vote of the council to support Gallagher "was unanimous."

And Gratton, a long-time supporter of Gallagher, said the vote represented "28 locals and 7,000 members."

Gratton, who serves on Gallagher's "labor advisory committee," asserted that the support of the building trades council means that the Monmouth-Ocean Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO, also will endorse Gallagher over Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, the Democratic candidate for the Senate seat, because the building trades "have more than their fair share" on the larger council.

Other labor officials previously asserted that it will take a two-thirds vote to win the endorsement of the Central Labor Council, and that neither

EPA scandals don't hit home, local official says

By JO ASTRID GLADING

MIDDLETOWN — While EPA officials have been battling it out and political appointees have been dropping like dominos, there has been little effect on the agency's rank-and-file, the lone Monmouth County EPA official contended recently.

"Things are rather sensitive within the agency right now," admitted Richard Griffiths, the project officer for the Environmental Protection Agency's Oil and Hazardous Material Simulated Environmental Test Tank, located at U.S. Naval Weapons Station Earle.

In the past four months, he has watched from his Leonardo office while his boss resigned, half a dozen congressional investigations into EPA operations began and public scepticism towards the agency's dedication to a clean environment mounted.

"It hasn't been felt by me. It's affected the Washington people, but Research and Development is generally buffeted somewhat from the political side."

Burr's island is up for sale

SUVA, Fiji. — Actor Raymond Burr wants to sell the island in Fiji where he has lived part of each year since he bought it in 1969 for about $11,000. The island, Naitaba, about 160 miles northeast of Suva, is being offered for sale at $2.5 million. Suva real estate agent David Ragg said Burr wants to sell the island to avoid complications with the settling of his estate after his death. Naitaba is one of the largest privately owned islands in the 350-island Fiji group. On the island, there is a 930-acre cattle and coconut farm, 16 staff houses, a church, a school and a dairy in addition to Burr's house. Burr's other investments in Fiji include an orchid farm and shares in a daily newspaper, the Fiji Sun.

Herschel razzle dazzles 'em again

SOUTH HACKENSACK, N.J. — Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker, who left college to accept the highest-paying contract in professional football history, has confirmed that he married his girlfriend of three years in a quiet ceremony last week.

The New Jersey Generals' running back married his University of Georgia girlfriend, Cindy DeAngelis, in a ceremony performed Thursday by Bloomingdale Mayor Vincent Sabio.

The 21-year-old Walker denied marriage reports over the weekend while in Arizona with the Generals for a United States Football League contest with the Wranglers.

But at a news conference Tuesday announcing he signed a long-term agreement to endorse accessories for Franklin Sports Industries Inc., he confirmed he had been married last week, Generals spokesman Kevin MacConnell said.

Walker is playing under a three-year contract worth an estimated $5 million.

Wallace's hospital stay may end today

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — Gov. George C. Wallace may leave the hospital today, an aide said.

Wallace's press secretary, Billy Joe Camp, said yesterday there was "a tentative projection" that the 63-year-old governor would leave University of Alabama Hospitals today. Meanwhile, Camp said, Wallace was "doing pretty good."

Wallace has been hospitalized since March 19 because of an increase in the chronic pain he has suffered since shot by a would-be assassin in 1972. The wound left him paralyzed from the waist down.

Lebanon rejects joint patrols

By The Associated Press

Lebanon has turned down a proposal for joint military patrols with Israel as the price for Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon, Beirut newspapers reported yesterday.

In other developments, a Palestinian blew himself up trying to plant a bomb near an Israeli post in the Lebanese port of Sidon, and a murderer was scheduled to be hanged in a Beirut park Thursday — the first execution in a public place in Lebanon's modern history.

Ibrahim Tarraf, 26, was convicted of murdering an engineer and his mother and sawing up their bodies in the park in 1981. Informed sources said the public and the press will be barred from the execution, even though it will take place in the park.

Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, was in Kuwait to meet with the emir of Kuwait and was scheduled to go on to Saudi Arabia to continue his talks with Arab leaders to seek support for his meetings with King Hussein of Jordan.

Arafat and Hussein have been talking about the possibility of joining Middle East peace talks, but no breakthrough has been reported that would allow Hussein to represent the PLO in any negotiations.

In Kuwait, the PLO renewed its call for an Arab summit to coordinate policy.

The Lebanese position on Israel's withdrawal was conveyed to the Israelis during Tuesday's round of talks in the Lebanese seaside resort of Khalde, just south of Beirut, according to the newspapers.

The independent daily An-Nahar, whose publisher, Ghassan Tuani, is Lebanon's chief coordinator of the talks, said Lebanon suggested as a compromise the establishment of joint U.S., Israeli and Lebanese commissions to oversee security arrangements, but insisted the task of patrolling southern Lebanon is solely for the Lebanese army.

An-Nahar said the proposed joint commissions would replace the Lebanese-Israeli mixed armistice commission, set up in 1949, when the two neighbors concluded an armistice agreement following the first Arab-Israeli war in 1948.

Israel contends that subsequent Arab-Israeli wars rendered the armistice null and void, but Lebanon asserts the treaty is still valid because Lebanon took no active role in any of the Middle East wars over the last 35 years.

An-Nahar said the Lebanese negotiating team has come out of the latest round of the three-month-old troop withdrawal talks with the impression that Israel was procrastinating "because it wants a price for the withdrawal that Lebanon cannot afford to pay."

Fundamentalist exits from USSR

MOSCOW (AP) — One of the 27 Siberian Pentecostals trying to emigrate left the Soviet Union yesterday, and one of the Christian fundamentalists camped in the U.S. Embassy for nearly five years indicated they expected the rest to get out also.

Lydia Vashchenko, 32, who left the embassy in January 1982, flew to Vienna to await the arrival of an American woman interested in her case. Another friend said she had not decided where to settle, but the United States, Britain and Israel were possibilities.

She is the first well-publicized dissident allowed to emigrate since Yuri V.

Andropov succeeded the late Leonid I. Brezhnev as Communist Party chief in November.

Her sister Lubov, one of four other members of the family who have been living in the embassy basement since June 1978, said as soon as 11 younger brothers and sisters still in Siberia join Lydia in the West, "we will leave the embassy."

An embassy spokesman said Lydia's departure was "an encouraging sign." But he said there was no indication that the Soviet government was preparing to let any of the other 26 emigrate.

The other Pentecostals who want to leave the country are the 11 Chmykhalovs. Two of them — the 60-year-old mother, Maria, and 21-year-old son, Timofei — are with the Vashchenkos in the embassy, and the other nine are in Chernogorsk, in south central Siberia, where both families live.

The embassy has been host to the Pentecostals since June 1978, when the group that became known as the Siberian Seven rushed past the Soviet guards at the gates and refused to leave until the U.S. government got permission for them to leave their homeland.

Gallagher receives backing of Trades Council

Gallagher nor Van Wagner is likely to gain that kind of support, which would be a prerequisite for an official endorsement by the state AFL-CIO.

Van Wagner, a 10-year veteran of the Assembly who is giving up his seat to challenge Gallagher for the Bayshore Senate seat, has long enjoyed the support of organized labor.

But Gratton insisted yesterday that Gallagher's voting record "was the best in the Senate." He first expressed regret that Van Wagner has chosen to oppose Gallagher, since he, too, has a good labor voting record. And he asserted that Van Wagner is "being misled" by county Democratic Chairman John Fiorino into running against Gallagher.

But later, Gratton amended his remarks to assert that the Democratic assemblyman has "a pretty good record, nowhere near as good as Gallagher's."

Other labor people have said the two men's labor votes are almost identical. But they have pointed out that one of Gallagher's brothers is a building trades union official.

Gallagher confirmed yesterday that his brother, Edward L. Gallagher, is business manager for Local 22 of the Sheet Metal Workers, AFL-CIO, in Union County, and another brother is a member of the same union.

Gratton acknowledged that two years ago, the building trades unions "were split" between Gallagher and then-incumbent Sen. Eugene J. Bedell, a Democrat, "because Bedell was from the labor movement, he was one of ours." Despite the endorsement of most of organized labor, Bedell lost to Gallagher in an upset in the heavily Democratic district.

When told last night of the building trades council endorsement of his opponent, Van Wagner expressed surprise at the timing of the announcement.

"Why are they announcing now? Isn't it a bit early?" Van Wagner asked. "I think endorsements are important, I'm just surprised they endorsed so early. I can't ever recall an endorsement of a candidate from either party without first having all the candidates appear before the membership.

"I've always enjoyed the support of the rank-and-file and I hope to continue to get it in this election," Van Wagner said.

Van Wagner said he believes he and Assemblyman William E. Flynn, D-Middlesex and Monmouth, "had the best two labor records in the Assembly." And he noted that "I was on a panel two weeks ago for the carpenters' union of Monmouth, Ocean and Mercer counties, where I was introduced as a friend of labor."

Gratton was accompanied to the press conference by Council Vice President Walter E. Holtz, business agent of Local 8, Masons and Bricklayers; and Thomas J. Sperling, business manager, Local 9, United Association Building Tradesmen of the Plumbing and Pipefitters Industry, both AFL-CIO. Gratton said the council vote to support Gallagher was taken Monday at a meeting at the Molly Pitcher Inn. Red

Top Salvadoran leftist killed

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — A key leader of El Salvador's leftist guerrillas, Melida Amayo Montes, was "brutally assassinated" yesterday in a suburb of Managua, the Interior Ministry said.

The ministry said she was killed at the house where she was staying near the Central American Institute of Business Administration 10 miles south of the city center. A ministry statement did not say how she was killed or why she was in leftist-governed Nicaragua.

Police surrounded the area and searched all vehicles that passed on nearby streets.

Commander Ana Maria, as she was known within rebel ranks, was second in command of the Popular Forces of Liberation, the oldest and most radical of the five leftist bands fighting to overthrow the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador. Cayetano Carpio is the group's leader.

China files protest over asylum

PEKING — China late yesterday protested the Reagan administration's decision giving political asylum to Chinese tennis star Hu Na, calling it illegal, immoral and "one more case" of U.S. interference in Chinese affairs.

Choosing an unusual hour, Chinese Vice Foreign Minister Han Xu called U.S. Ambassador Arthur W. Hummel Jr. to the Foreign Ministry at 9:30 p.m. to hand him what the Chinese called a "strong protest."

One hour later, Qi Huaiyuan, director of the Foreign Ministry's information department, told reporters of the action at a special briefing and released a copy of the protest note.

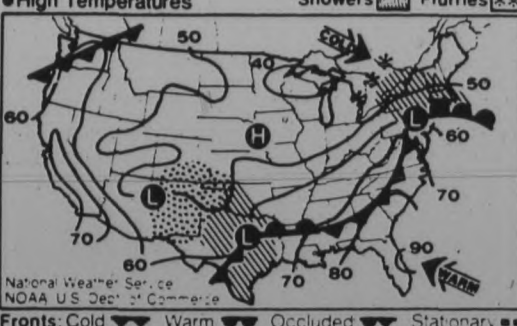

French premier pledges to invest

PARIS — Premier Pierre Mauroy told Parliament yesterday that along with the Socialist government's new austerity program, it is going to create 10,000 new businesses in the next few months and invest $2.8 billion in nationalized industries. He gave no details.

"The state, I confirm, will not stop helping enterprises that innovate, enterprises that hire and enterprises that export," Mauroy said as he asked the National Assembly for a vote of confidence on the austerity program announced March 25.

Watt decision heading for 'rocky' road

States protest big rigs rule

WASHINGTON — Many eastern states vowed yesterday to fight a new federal highway rule opening thousands of miles of two-lane highways to double-trailer trucks they denounced as unsafe off the Interstates.

Though federal officials pleaded for tolerance, at least seven states — Vermont, Connecticut, Virginia, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York and South Carolina — said their highway patrols still would ticket the big trucks off the Interstate system.

The double trailers have long been allowed in the West, but were restricted to Interstate highways before President Reagan signed legislation requiring uniform truck sizes in all states. Congress delegated to the Federal Highway Administration the authority to decide which non-Interstate highways built with federal aid should be opened to the larger trucks.

The measure was part of a package of legislation Congress passed before Christmas, including a 5-cent increase in the gasoline tax.

John Lennon memorial clears

NEW YORK — The Landmarks Preservation Commission on yesterday approved plans for landscaping a section of Central Park in memory of John Lennon.

The site, near 72nd Street and Central Park West, will have sunken paths, new shrubbery and a mosaic with the word "Imagine" spelled out in tiles to commemorate the Lennon hit song of the same name.

The former Beatle was slain Dec. 8, 1980, outside his apartment building, which is just across the street from the site.

The work will be paid for by a $500,000 gift from Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono, said Parks Commissioner Henry Stern.

Reagan to keep civil rights panel

WASHINGTON — President Reagan proposed on yesterday extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission by 20 years and giving future members fixed terms instead of serving at the pleasure of the president.

The proposal, if approved by Congress, would keep the panel in business through the year 2003. Since its creation in 1957, the commission has been extended at various times for terms ranging from one to five years.

The commission is an independent, bipartisan group that investigates discrimination or denial of equal protection of the law because of race, color, religion, sex, age, handicap or national origin.

$10,000 sent to quake victims

WASHINGTON — The American Red Cross announced yesterday that it is sending $10,000 to the Colombian Red Cross for earthquake relief in the city of Popayan.

Officials said in a statement that the money is being forwarded through the Swiss-based League of Red Cross Societies.

Popayan was hit by a devastating earthquake last week in which more than 260 people were killed.

EPA paring may impede states' work

By The Associated Press

State environmental officials say they are happy to enforce national environmental laws, but not if the Reagan administration slashes money to pay for inspectors and prosecutors.

Moreover, officials say the states will continue to rely on the federal Environmental Protection Agency for basic research and national standards dealing with pollution that drifts across state lines.

Some states have been enforcing certain pollution regulations since before President Reagan took office in 1981. Last year, the president presented his "new federalism" proposal that calls for state and local governments to assume many federal activities.

An Associated Press survey of state government officials, industry spokesmen and environmentalists found the states largely happy to enforce pollution laws — and anxious that Washington provide the necessary tools.

"EPA's closest office is in Atlanta," said Charles Chisolm, director of the Mississippi Bureau of Pollution Control. "We have 125 people here in the state ... Our enforcement is much quicker than the federal government's."

Said Sandra Gardebring, executive director of the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency: "In terms of direct enforcement and permitting activities, yes, the states are the appropriate level. I think it's absolutely necessary, however, that there be a strong federal program to provide some backup."

The president has repeatedly proposed substantial cuts in EPA grants, saying the states can be more efficient in policing the environment. While some EPA money has been eliminated, Congress has, thus far, refused to cut enforcement funds. A Congressional Research Service study said Reagan's proposed $231.4 million in grants would be a 38 percent cut in fiscal 1984 from 1981 levels.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Secretary James Watt has struck a sour note with some White House aides by banning rock groups such as the Beach Boys from the capital's annual Fourth of July celebration.

"There are a lot of us who think they (the Beach Boys) are a national institution," said Michael K. Deaver, the White House deputy chief of staff and close adviser to the president. "Anybody that thinks that the Beach Boys are hard rock must think Mantovani plays jazz."

Some White House aides, speaking on condition they not be named, said they wouldn't be surprised if Watt reversed his decision. "That's what some people are hoping," said one official. "I think it's fairly widespread."

As for President Reagan's opinion of the Beach Boys, Deaver said, "I wouldn't be a bit surprised if he is a fan." The Beach Boys, known since the 1960s for their "surfing sound," have had hits such as "Good Vibrations" and "California Girls."

Deaver emphasized he was not making a big issue out of Watt's decision and said he had no power to overturn it. Asked if he would discuss the matter with Reagan, Deaver said, "Sure."

In a decision made public yesterday, Watt expressed concern that rock music was attracting "the wrong element" — drinking and drug-taking youths — to the annual celebration on the Washington Mall.

Instead, Watt arranged for "patriotic, family-based entertainment" by the U.S. Army Blues Band and Wayne Newton, the king of Las Vegas casinos.

Watt, as Interior secretary, controls the National Park Service, which runs the celebrations on the Mall.

The Beach Boys performed at the annual fireworks display in 1980 and 1981, and the Grass Roots performed last year. Hundreds of thousands of people attended the celebrations.

Deaver said: "My wife and children went to that concert (by the Beach Boys) and loved it."

But Watt complained the concerts were "hard rock," and said he decided to change their tenor because of "high drug use, high alcoholism, broken bottles, some injured people, some fights."

Authorities say 52 adults were arrested during last year's celebration for offenses ranging from disorderly conduct to assault.

ROUNDING UP REFUGEES — Seventy Haitian refugees jam a wooden sailboat after it was towed to the Coast Guard station in Islamorada, Fla., yesterday. Although all of the Haitians appeared healthy and well fed, like the man right, they claimed to have been at sea for 27 days. The group was the second in three days to reach the states.

Crew readies for space walk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Two astronauts are primed and eager today to take a dual space walk into Challenger's open cargo bay — the first Americans in nearly a decade to challenge the boundless, hostile arena outside their spaceship.

Mission specialists Story Musgrave and Donald Peterson were to slip into the 60-foot-long cargo bay in late afternoon, clad in cumbersome $2 million space suits that provide life-giving oxygen and protect them from meteorites, radiation and extremes of heat and cold.

Commander Paul Weitz and pilot Karol Bobko were to monitor from Challenger's cabin during the 3½ hours the space strollers were to work outside, testing the suits and the tools and techniques for future satellite service and repair missions.

At White Sands, N.M., meanwhile, engineers firmed up plans to correct the orbit of the huge communications satellite that went astray after being ejected from the shuttle on Monday. They said they would start firing the craft's jet thrusters on Sunday to move it into its intended high orbit over a period of several days.

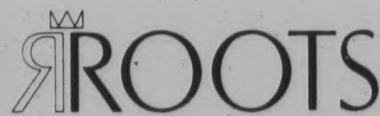

To prepare for their excursion, Musgrave and Peterson thoroughly checked their suits in the ship's depressurized airlock on yesterday, doing everything short of leaving the spacecraft.

Efforts to fund high tech training hit

THE STATE

Handicap funding to stay same

TRENTON — State education officials tentatively decided yesterday to continue a much-criticized formula for funding special schools for the handicapped, despite a promise made last summer to have a new formula in place for the 1983-84 school year.

The decision drew protests from about 200 angry parents and administrators of the special schools who marched outside the State Library as the Board of Education met inside. The protestors claimed that state funds are inadequate and that some schools may be forced to close.

Education Commissioner Saul Cooperman said he had hoped to have a revised formula ready by now, but the funding question is complex and further study is needed. He said he plans to propose a new formula for the 1984-85 school year.

By state law, local schools must provide adequate education for all students, regardless of their mental or physical handicaps. Schools usually provide special programs for these students, but the most difficult cases frequently are referred to private schools.

Of the 92,000 handicapped students in New Jersey, 7,700 are referred to private schools, according to S. David Brandt, president of the state Board of Education.

Those 139 private schools are paid about $55 million tuition by the state, and they also solicit private contributions. Parents are not charged tuition.

Male revue draws controversy

PITMAN — Women looking for a night out in this southern New Jersey borough next week can choose a male strip show or a ham dinner in a battle between the Broadway Theater and local churches.

Clayton "Duffy" Platt, who owns the theater, says he doesn't mind the competition from the churchmen who are offering the dinner to lure women from the burlesque show.

In fact, Platt announced next week's dinner to an audience of several hundred squealing women who had come to see one of his shows Tuesday. But he said they also could come to the theater for "Ladies Night Out."

The shows have provoked demonstrations by community and church leaders, prompted a proposal to overhaul local anti-pornography laws and raised many eyebrows around this community of 9,400 people.

Fred Jenner, a member of the Pitman United Methodist Church, said the men from his congregation will start providing the ham dinners Monday to coincide with the next scheduled all-male revue.

Eaglet birth sparks new hope

TRENTON — An eaglet produced by New Jersey's only known pair of wild bald eagles has been hatched in a Maryland laboratory and another is on the way, state wildlife officials have announced.

The eaglet hatched Monday came from one of two eggs taken from a nest in Cumberland County last month, said JoAnn Frier, a state wildlife official. The second egg is expected to hatch within the week, she added.

She said the eaglet was hatched at the Patuxent Wildlife Research Station in Laurel, Md.

The wildlife experts hope the hatching is a sign that New Jersey's once-flourishing eagle population may be restored in the hardwood forests near the Delaware Bay.

behal of the breathalyzer in the case before Horan.

Deputy Attorney General George Ciszak intervened for the municipal prosecutor on behalf of the state, but was unsuccessful in defending the state's use of the machine.

"The question is whether the decision is binding due to the attorney general's defense of it," Moore said. "The fundamental fairness is that you (the state) lost badly, so throw (the breathalyzer) out."

Ciszak said he will confer with his office to decide if the Horan decision will be appealed to a higher court. Ciszak, who declined lengthy comment on the ruling, said if the state appeals the decision, it will probably be heard in Superior Court.

If the state does not appeal, Moore said, the five attorneys may file a class action suit against the state to have the breathalyzer thrown out. The suit, he said, could eventually overturn many of the 60,000 convictions and cost the state millions of dollars in refunded attorneys' fees and punitive damages.

In his decision, Horan reviewed the evidence and the testimony presented by 17 witnesses over the course of 27 court days.

Horan noted that Kenneth Newbauer, a breathalyzer-testing expert for the State Police, testified that he alerted the state that the machines might be faulty last April, but that the Attorney General's Office sanctioned the use of the machines in the state Administrative Code last July.

Horan said further testimony indicated that Smith & Wesson, the manufacturer of the 900 and 900A model breathalyzers used in the state, issued an advisory on the occasional inaccuracy of the breathalyzer, but the state ignored the tests prescribed to ensure proper working condition.

"What is totally unexplained is that the attorney general and the state police continued to use the machines," Horan said. Moore and Smith alleged that the state attempted to "cover up" the fallibility of the machine and termed the attorney general's inaction on the advisory as "Breathalyzer-gate."

"The motivation of the attorney general is a serious part of the case," Smith said. "His obligation is to represent everyone in the state and see that justice is done, not to get convictions."

Horan also noted that Herbert Belin, a Smith & Wesson project manager, who testified in similar cases in Rhode Island and Minnesota, did not respond to subpoenas requested by Moore. Rhode Island has voided the use of the machine and a Minnesota decision is pending, Horan said.

"It is a curious sight when a supplier of a product that has been purchased for thousands and thousands of dollars fails to appear when he could have every right to defend his product," Horan said.

Horan said on-site testing of the Smith & Wesson 900 and 900A models at the Monmouth Beach Coast Guard Station proved the machine to be susceptible to both walkie-talkie and police radio interference, which he said would give an inflated reading of alcohol in a person's bloodstream.

Holden said the news of Horan's ruling should institute "a flurry" of appeals of drunk driving cases across the state. The decision, he said, should be used as a valid legal precedent in all courts.

"I don't see how any judges can turn their backs on it," Holden said.

CBS trial jury told story about discovery of body

By RUTH LANDA

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman killed with three CBS technicians at a West Side garage last spring was found dead the next day in a Lower Manhattan alley by a dog walker who testified yesterday he first thought the body was "a bum sleeping."

But Manuel Infante said that when he looked closer at the body lying in Franklin Alley around 5:30 a.m. last April 13, he saw the victim — later identified as Margaret Barbera — was not wearing "the clothes of a poor woman" although her stockings were ripped.

"I touched the body with my finger and realized it was dead," said Infante, an impressionist painter and late-night bartender who said he saw the body after his German Shepherd's attention appeared drawn by something in the alley.

Testifying at the Supreme Court trial of Donald Nash of Keansburg, N.J., who is accused of killing Barbera and the three CBS men last April 12, Infante also said that several months after he found the body, police took samples of his dog's hair.

Prosecutor Gregory Waples has said dog hairs found on Barbera's body matched hairs discovered in the van Nash was driving when he was arrested in Kentucky a week after the slayings.

The 38-year-old Queens woman was allegedly abducted in that van after the shootings at the Pier 92 parking lot, and then dumped in the alley, which is located between Broadway and Church Street, and White and Franklin streets in Manhattan's Tribeca section.

Agency feud tickles Mafia

WASHINGTON — The Mafia dons must be chuckling with satisfaction. A jealous feud between two federal agencies over bureaucratic turf threatens to jeopardize the government's battle against labor racketeering. Here's the story:

The Justice Department is determinedly trying to keep the Labor Department's special agents from being given the law-enforcement powers FBI agents have. These include the right to carry firearms, make arrests and execute warrants.

Justice Department officials don't want to give the impression that they're engaged in an unseemly jurisdictional struggle. So they're arguing, essentially, that things have been working out fine. If the Labor Department crime fighters get in situations where they need guns and arrest authority, they say, all they have to do is call the FBI for help.

My associate Indy Badwar has learned, meanwhile, that the General Accounting Office will recommend to Congress that Labor's agents be given full law-enforcement powers. But Justice is balking.

"Proposals to expand the Labor Department's existing criminal investigative responsibilities," a recent Justice Department memo states, "may jeopardize the primary principles which we think have contributed significantly to the successful investigation and prosecution of criminal elements in the (labor) fields."

To this ringing defense of "primary principles" the memo adds: "The FBI is already performing covert investigations with considerable success."

Senate investigators disagree. "These are specialized investigations," said a staffer on the Labor and Human Resources Committee. "Frankly, we're not happy with what the FBI has done in this field... They average less than seven investigations a year. They do not consider this a high-priority item. They have too much else to do."

An internal memo from the Labor Department inspector general's office to the committee cites some specific examples of this:

— A major sting operation in Detroit was aborted last August because Labor couldn't protect its undercover agents and the FBI had refused to participate.

— In New York and Cleveland, Labor agents referred at least four cases to the FBI because they lacked the necessary law-enforcement powers. The FBI has sat on the cases.

— In Cleveland, several potential witnesses refused to cooperate with Labor investigators because they could not offer the informants protection.

— Last January, Labor agents had to call off an investigation because they couldn't get the FBI to provide protection for a meeting between an undercover informant and a targeted suspect.

The Justice Department's dog-in-the-manger attitude toward Labor's investigators is surprising in light of a recent confidential survey it conducted of its 13 organized-crime strike forces. Strike force leaders were asked to evaluate the effectiveness of the Labor Department's agents in union racketeering work. The responses were overwhelmingly positive.

"The respondents were of the general opinion that the (Labor) agents... were performing their investigations promptly and effectively," a Justice Department memo noted, adding: "Some responses commented favorably on the increased motivation... and the presence of competition as an incentive to the FBI in labor cases."

The G-men in the street may welcome the friendly competition provided by the Labor Department's knowledgeable agents; their bosses behind the desks in Washington obviously don't.

Having a party with science

The biggest problem President Reagan faces in developing a "Star Wars" defense against nuclear weapons is finding the right thinking American scientists to work on it. In this administration a scientist not only has to have impeccable professional credentials, but he also has to be screened to make sure he or she has the same conservative ideology as the party.

For example, 50 scientists were removed from advisory boards of the EPA when their terms expired, because they were considered "politically unreliable" by Reagan loyalists.

Since the "Star Wars" concept will require a lot more brains to perfect the system, it may be very difficult to find enough pro-Reagan scientists to get the program off the ground.

I can just imagine the hustle and bustle now going on in the White House.

"Sir, here's the list of eminent scientists that could be contacted for our crash nuclear umbrella program."

"Any good people?"

"They're tops in their field. Professor Heinz Hemlock is a genius when it comes to laser beam research. He's just turned an enemy guidance system into oatmeal in his lab."

"Great. Let's sign him up."

"There is only one catch. He's against prayers in school."

"He doesn't sound like a team player. Who else have you got?"

"Dr. Anne Marie Sten. She has done extraordinary work in ultraviolet-infrared-telescopic locators. The space people say she's the best in the field."

ART BUCHWALD

"And she's a woman. That should help us with the female vote in '84. Bring her in for an interview."

"There's a problem, sir. Our security check revealed she voted for Jimmy Carter."

"Maybe she was duped."

"She's also on the Planned Parenthood Board at MIT."

"Forget her."

"I have a Nobel Prize winner in astrophysics who is working on spontaneous combustion of hydrogen and fluorine at the Livermore National Laboratory."

"What's wrong with him?"

"He signed a petition last month for a nuclear freeze."

"Dammit, can't we find any American scientists who aren't bleeding heart activists?"

"Edward Teller?"

"He's already on the team. In fact he's the leader of the team. Read me out some other names."

"Professor Nino Bertolini, wrote the definitive paper on gamma rays — but unacceptable to Senator Jesse Helms because he's a member of Common Cause... Dr. Albert Ruben, subatomic particle beam guru... ardent supporter of handgun control and against death penalty... Dr. Sarah Tilton, microwave physicist at University of Chicago... son works for Tip O'Neil."

"That's enough! There isn't one person you've mentioned so far that could pass muster with the Republican National Committee. But we have to have some scientists for our 'Star Wars' program."

"I think I have one here at the bottom of the list. Professor Dalton Calhoun the Third. He teaches physical astronomy at the Oral Roberts University in Tulsa. He wrote a book knocking down the big bang theory of the creation of the earth, and proved scientifically it came about just as it says in the Bible. Jerry Falwell recommends him very highly."

"Find out when he can start."

Remember the public

One day after the month-long commuter train strike was settled and the trains were rolling again, a dissident faction of the United Transportation Union threatened another strike.

Tuesday's threat by UTU's Conrail East division to shut down the trains "until the rails rust" if NJ Transit doesn't knuckle to its demands is an outrageous display of a "the-public-be-damned" attitude.

The UTU's Conrail East division, which numbers 150 members, says it doesn't like the contract ratified by a 268-158 vote of the UTU's Conrail North division, the local that had stopped the trains when its members walked out March 1. That contract, shaped after long negotiations, has "economic inadequacies" the members of his local can't live with, Charles P. Jones, general chairman of UTU's Conrail East division has asserted.

From where we sit, the terms of the settlement seem reasonable and fair. It would be impossible for NJ Transit to operate the commuter lines under the work rules it inherited when it took over their operation — work rules that favored featherbedding and had become expensive anachronisms even before the trains stopped hauling freight long distances and began carrying commuters short distances instead. More important, the majority of the striking trainmen and conductors found the settlement acceptable enough so that they voted to go back to work. And it would be the height of illogic to expect that NJ Transit could offer trainmen and conductors in one of the union's locals higher wages or different work rules than in the agreement it just hammered out with another local.

Sort of makes you suspect that economics isn't the relevant issue, doesn't it? Well, it just so happens that Jones' local is involved in an internecine dispute with the UTU's Conrail North division over the question of seniority. That internal union squabble was a major obstacle in the negotiations to end the strike. That was bad enough. It would be untenable for a vital public service to be derailed because of a power struggle between union leaders.

Enough is enough. The public interest lies in keeping the trains rolling, in preventing another strike. On Tuesday, President Reagan effectively prevented a Long Island Railroad strike by issuing an order for a 120-day cooling off period. New York Gov. Mario Cuomo has asked for presidential intervention in the Metro-North strike, now in its fourth week. New Jersey should profit from that example, and not allow its mass transit system to be held hostage in a union battle.

Save the farm

The latest profile of agricultural Monmouth County, drawn by the county Planning Board, depicts a conflict between growth and growing that we had best be working at resolving.

The report shows Monmouth County in fifth place among the state's 21 counties in farming income. It says that the last decade saw a sharp rise in the growing of soybeans — now Monmouth's leading crop — and strawberries. But it also shows that while the rate at which Monmouth County farmland was converted to non-agricultural uses has slowed considerably since the 1950s and 1960s, the loss continues to be significant.

At last count, farms occupied more than 72,000 acres of land in the county, 24 percent of Monmouth's land area. But some 1,200 acres of prime farmland are being lost to development every year. And the pressure for development is increasing: farmland sold for potential housing development brings more than double the price of farmland sold for agricultural use.

The report says that the "typical" Monmouth farmer is 53 years old, a relatively high age. The county planners interpret that as indicating that the price of farmland and the expense of owning and operating a farm are making farming prohibitive for young people.

Agriculture is important to the economy of the county and the state. And the preservation of farmland is important for all families, not just farm families. The closer to market, the fresher the produce we eat, the better it tastes, and the lower in cost.

The crop land we have left is precious. Preserving it, and keeping farming economically viable are issues in which we all have a stake.

By PATRICK BRESLIN

TRENTON (AP) — The Kean administration, frustrated that its automobile insurance reform plan has not been passed by the Legislature, has begun wielding a big stick to prod legislators to enact the plan quickly.

Gov. Thomas H. Kean warned Monday that insurance rates on every private automobile in New Jersey will rise by $19 or $33 per year, depending on the type of insurance, if his program is not enacted by June 1.

Kean didn't have to say the obvious — that this is an election year, and he'll blame the Democrat-controlled Legislature for the rate increase as he campaigns statewide to elect fellow Republicans to the Legislature.

A $19 or $33 increase was granted this week by Insurance Commissioner Joseph F. Murphy in response to insurance industry figures show-

TODAY IN HISTORY

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, April 7, the 97th day of 1983. There are 268 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 7, 1927, the first successful long-distance television transmission took place with the sending of an image of Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover from Washington to New York.

On this date:

In 1778, the first planned permanent settlement in Ohio — Marietta — was founded.

In 1934, Mahatma Gandhi suspended his civil disobedience campaign in India.

In 1953, Swedish diplomat Dag Hammarskjöld was elected Secretary-General of the United Nations.

STATE HOUSE SCENE

ing continuous losses. But Kean and Murphy said that if the Legislature reforms insurance law to help companies contain their costs, the increase may not be needed.

Assemblyman Michael Aduabato, chairman of the committee considering Kean's bill, calls it "blackmail," and he says, "I am not going to allow them to steamroll this thing."

But Kean's new tactic and the upcoming elections are expected to intensify an already spicy debate sparked by accusations of lying, distortion of statistics and "special interest" favoritism.

Can the web of accusations, countercharges and confusing financial statistics be straightened out by June 1? Can it be done before the November election?

Aduabato thinks not. He said his Banking and Insurance Committee will take a long time studying the situation, and he does not predict when a bill will be released.

On the other hand, Assembly Speaker Alan J. Karcher, who outranks Aduabato, says June 1 is a "reasonable" deadline.

"We've studied this insurance reform to death," said Assembly Minority Leader Dean A. Gallo, who is sponsoring Kean's bill.

A lot of crust?

Shrewsbury

To the Editor:
I understand that the Reagan administration is discussing the possibility of "asking" children to contribute to the cost of maintaining elderly parents in nursing homes.

While having such discussions, may I suggest that they include the possibility of the president and his family contributing to the transportation and security costs of the president and his entourage to and from California every few days? Also, it might be a good idea if the president were to shoulder the cost of entertaining his Hollywood friends under the guise of entertaining the Queen of England.

Meshinks that today's Washington upper crust is made up of a lot of crumbs held together by taxpayer dough.

Howard urges campaign to promote safe driving

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government should pump $45 million a year into a television advertising campaign promoting safe driving, Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., proposed yesterday.

The money would come from the nickel-a-gallon increase in the federal gas tax, which took effect Friday.

Howard, chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, made the remarks in a speech he delivered to the National Safety Council in Denver yesterday.

Howard proposed that the government set aside 0.5 percent of gas tax revenues, or about $45 million of the $9.9 billion now collected annually.

According to the traffic safety administration, there were 6.4 million accidents in the country in 1981 involving 16 million people and 10.7 million vehicles.

Those accidents resulted in 49,268 deaths and 3.5 million injuries.

Lotteries

TRENTON — The winning number drawn Wednesday in New Jersey's Pick-It Lottery was 256. A straight bet pays $188, box pays $31 and pairs pay $18.50.

The Pick-4 number was 9945. A straight bet pays $8,635 and there was no box.

He noted that many at the bipartisan gathering might like to see him dislocated from his job.

"We as a nation owe an obligation as well as a helping hand to those who pay the price of economic readjustment," the president said in the prepared part of his speech. "Government — federal, state and local — should provide support for job training and re-employment assistance."

As the president was speaking, several hundred protesters stormed one entrance to the hotel, hoping to confront him. They were kept back by city police, some with dogs.

No arrests were reported, although two policemen carried a woman from the crowd and put her in a patrol van.

Reagan was taken inside the hotel through an underground parking area, cheating the crowd who screamed, "Reagan is a coward!"

Anger and skepticism were evident in the computer classroom as well as on the street outside the conference hotel.

At Control Data, several of the students, most of whom had lost jobs in the steel mills, asked Reagan if they were wasting their time retraining for jobs that might not exist by the time they finish their training in several months.

A man who identified himself as Ron Bricker approached Reagan after the president's brief remarks, handed him a resume and said, "I've been looking for a job for a year and can't find one."

Reagan took the resume and shook the man's hand, telling a corporate executive afterward that Bricker was "typical of the kind of person we want to help."

Cosby plugs N.J.

"Bill Cosby is used as a salesman because people believe him," said Kean who added that the comedian agreed to promote the state for a minimum fee of $900.

In the ads, Cosby doesn't joke about the state. Instead, he tells a story about how he is going on a vacation in New Jersey.

During a news conference, the firm unveiled several television ads which featured numerous still photographs of the state's seashore resorts, mountains, rivers and historic sites.

The television ads will be placed on stations in New York, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, and in smaller cities including Albany, Schenectady, Binghamton and Troy in New York and Lancaster, Johnstown, Scranton and Wilkes Barre in Pennsylvania, said Ronald Vrba, executive vice president for Bozell & Jacobs.

Vrba said most of the media blitz is designed for markets within 400 miles of New Jersey. But he said print ads will be placed in national magazines and Canadian newspapers.

Commerce Commissioner Borden Putnam said the campaign is crucial to the state's tourism industry, which he said generates about $5 billion in annual revenues and more than 200,000 jobs.

Putnam said the campaign will use up virtually all of the state's promotional funds for the current fiscal year which ends June 30.

The Kean administration wants to spend at least $1.6 million next year and the governor said more money should be made available if the current campaign proves successful.

"I like what's been done so far," Kean said.

A breakdown of the campaign's expenditures includes $15,100 for television; $152,100 for radio; $138,500 for newspapers; and $52,600 for magazines. In addition, there is a listed expenditure of $291,700 for production expenses.

AWAY FROM MOST OF IT — EPA official Richard Griffiths stands by the OHMSETT facility in Leonardo, a unique testing facility used for gauging oil clean-up devices.

EPA scandals

tics, although our budget is affected each year," Griffiths said. But funding from the EPA, he said, has remained "about constant since 1979."

In fact, Griffiths said his only involvement with the Washington fiasco has been "reading the papers ... and seeing more memos that relate to that" — and partaking in "a lot of good gossip."

The OHMSETT facility, Griffiths explained, is still performing the testing and monitoring of equipment used to clean up oil spills that it was designed for when built in 1974. At the time of its installation, the test tank, with its capacity to mime ocean wave and beach conditions, was the only facility of its kind in the world. It has since been duplicated by the Japanese.

Griffiths pointed to the millions of gallons of oil that are spilled onto U.S. surface waters every year and said cleanup technology is improving to meet the steadily increasing spillage.

When the collection of such data began in 1975, he said, there were over 10,000 oil spills that deposited 14.4 million gallons of oil on U.S. surface waters. Last year, 8,600 spills left 17.5 million gallons of oil on those waters.

"There were fewer spills, but they're bigger spills," Griffiths said.

Although the technology for cleaning up spills on protected waterways has improved, Griffiths said, problems remain in methods for cleaning up spills occurring in rough waters at sea and in Arctic conditions.

And while the Reagan administration has come under fire from critics for weakening or wiping out clean air and water regulations, Griffiths said OHMSETT is preparing to build a test tank for experimenting with cleanup methods for soil contamination.

The concrete tank is expected to address the growing need for effective and safe cleanup methods for the escalating problem of hazardous materials, such as the dioxin incident that prompted the purchase of Times Beach, Mo., by the federal government.

The new facility to be built on the Earle Colts Neck facility, Griffiths said, will test methods of washing soil in place by experimenting with different chemicals that, when combined with water, would cleanse the soil. In the field, the flushing method would be implemented with a string of wells used to catch the used water.

The soil test tank, he said, will allow experimentation with situations "we can't address in a chemistry lab on a small scale." The tank is being funded with $375,000 from the "superfund," he said, and "we have 84 truckloads of dirt sitting in a pile" at Earle Colts Neck, waiting for its construction.

Meanwhile, he said, studies looking for a "cheaper way" to remove soluble hazardous materials from water are underway. Carbon filtration and creating precipitating reactions by adding chemicals to the contaminated water are two such methods under study.

Griffiths compared the eventful past few months in his agency to the controversy leading up to the resignation of Alexander Haig and to the Bert Lance scandal during the presidency of Jimmy Carter.

The long road from Washington to Leonardo is lengthened by the bureaucratic course followed by the EPA chain of command.

In his sporadic trips to the capital, Griffiths added, the highest official he has dealt with was "half a dozen steps down from Burford."

"Research and Development is not a political-type thing," Griffiths said. "I'm quite glad to be removed from all that. I like being a scientist and an engineer."

State DOT spokesman Thomas Flynn contended that New Jersey's actions do not violate the federal law, which specifically mentions only interstate highways and empowers federal officials to determine which remaining highways will be opened to bigger trucks.

In fact, he said, Kean signed legislation yesterday to bring New Jersey into compliance with the size limits on roads where the state will follow the federal rules.

"When (Congress) voted for this legislation, they never intended for the U.S. Transportation Department to go as far as it did," said Flynn. "It's the governor's feeling that (the federal government) overstepped its bounds, and he said, 'We're simply not going to do it.'"

The governor and Sheridan also said that the state ban would leave room to allow some of the rigs to operate off the major highways.

Sheridan explained that each trucking firm would have to apply for specific routes and times to operate the trucks. He said the state could veto a proposal and that regulations would be "very strict."

Debbie Lawler, a state DOT spokeswoman, said most of the state highways designated by federal officials are simply unable to handle twin trailers up to 28½ feet long each, or double bottom trucks 102 inches wide.

"Some of the federally designated roads have significant safety problems," said Lawler. "Many of the roads are two lanes and have uncontrolled access and some couldn't carry the wider trucks on their best days. There are also roadways that are structurally deteriorating, and allowing wider and longer trucks will cause significant damage to them."

The state wants the bigger trucks allowed only on divided four-lane highways with controlled access, she said.

Two-lane highways without controlled access are too dangerous because vehicles can enter the road from a parking lot or side streets, the state DOT contends.

Trucking industry officials, however, responded enthusiastically to the new federal regulations and denied the larger rigs would create safety problems or traffic congestion.

"We put two twin rigs on the road at one minute past midnight," said Steve Elzey, vice president of Seigle's Express of South

Kearny, a trucking company that hauls consumer goods throughout the Northeast.

Still, Russell Roemmele, spokesman for the 1,300-member New Jersey Motor Truck Association, said not to expect a sudden increase in larger trucks since few Eastern companies own such rigs.

Roemmele also argued that opponents of the new truck rules are overreacting when they criticize "monster trucks."

"Double trailers are used for long hauls from one terminal to another, not for deliveries to Johnny's Bike Shop. You're not going to see these rigs on Main Street, as some people fear," said Roemmele. "These trucks are as safe as anything, but it's an emotional issue. People only see trucks as the vehicles that tailgated them this morning."

Manalapan man seeks 12th district seat

MANALAPAN — Township Committeeman George P. Spodak said he is "confident of the support of the county Democratic party" in his bid for a seat in the 12th assembly district in November.

"I hope to get the party's endorsement on the 25th (of April)," Spodak said last night.

Spodak seeks to gain one of the assembly seats currently held by Republicans John O. Bennett III and Marie S. Muhler.

"Marie and John will know they've been in an election," he said. "I'll give them a fight." Spodak, a committeeman for the last eight years, has served twice as township mayor and three times as deputy mayor. He said he feels he will better represent his constituents because of his career in municipal government and his Republican opponents' lack of service on municipal governing bodies.

He expects transportation and the environment to be the main issues of the campaign.

The 12th district encompasses Manalapan, Marlboro, Freehold, Freehold Township, Englishtown, Colts Neck, Howell, Farmingdale, Upper Freehold Township, Allentown, Roosevelt, Holmdel, Millstone, Tinton Falls, Eatontown, West Long Branch, Red Bank, Little Silver, Shrewsbury, Shrewsbury Township, Fair Haven and Rumson.

Although Spodak's political career has been centered in western Monmouth, he has "name recognition county-wide" — better name recognition throughout the county than Bennett, he said.

He seeks the assembly seat, because Bennett and Muhler are "not doing the job — especially Marie — and she's interested in running for office," he said.

But "you don't run against somebody, you run for an office," Spodak added.

Spodak said he does not know who the other Democratic assembly candidate will be, nor does he know who will oppose state Sen. S. Thomas Gagliano, R-Monmouth, for Gagliano's seat in November.

That announcement will be made on April 25, he added.

Spodak, a graduate of Thomas Edison College in Trenton, has served on the township Planning Board and as Township Committee liaison to the Western Monmouth Utilities Authority and to the Manalapan-Englishtown Board of Education.

He has also served on the Western Monmouth Transportation Board, which since has evolved into the Central New Jersey Transportation Board.

By trade, Spodak has been in the wholesale meat business for the last 18 years.

He resides on Crown Court with his wife, Isabella, and their three children. — ROB REINALDA

Tax hike for Shrewsbury Township

By SUSAN HOOPER

SHREWSBURY TOWNSHIP — The municipal tax rate will increase by 15 percent under the $255,000 1983 municipal budget adopted by the Township Committee last night.

The 1983 municipal tax rate is $3.09 per $100 of assessed valuation, up 42 cents from the 1982 rate of $2.67 per $100.

Total general appropriations for 1983 come to $254,878, a $22,947 increase over the 1982 total of $231,931.

Borough Auditor Joseph X. Seaman attributed the appropriations increase primarily to the township's use of $10,000 less in surplus revenues this year and a $10,799 increase in fees paid to the Northeast Monmouth Regional Sewerage Authority.

Shrewsbury Township residents live in rental apartments or resident-owned apartments, and consequently there are only five primary municipal taxpayers in the township — the Alfred Vail Association, whose residents own their apartments; the Shrewsbury Township Urban Renewal Corp., a rental complex owned by Peter Schubert; the Hideaway liquor store and deli; New Jersey Bell, which has an office there; and a bank which owns a parcel of land in the township.

The borough also budgeted an additional $5,000 for the salary of a code enforcement officer. The committee introduced an ordinance creating the position last night.

The amount to be raised by taxes in 1983 is $160,851, an increase of $24,691 over the $136,160 raised by taxes in 1982.

The 1982 budget used $35,000 worth of the municipality's surplus funds, whereas $25,000 of surplus is called for in the 1983 budget.

As of Dec. 31, 1982, the township's surplus balance was $60,222.07. Use of the anticipated $25,000 in the 1983 budget will leave the township with a surplus balance of $35,222.07.

Debt service costs decreased from the 1982 budget, from $20,134 to $17,040, a drop of $3,094.

The budget was under the 5 percent state-imposed "cap" ceiling on increases over the previous year's budget.

The amount of appropriations subject to the 5 percent cap in the 1982 budget was $156,103. By law the township was able to increase appropriations subject to the cap by 5 percent, or $7,805, which would have resulted in a 1983 general appropriations figure within the cap of $163,908.

The actual $157,924 general appropriations figure was $5,974 less than the allowable amount under the cap law.

Committee member John Fertig attributed the township's ability to keep costs down this year in part to a spirit of volunteerism among the residents.

For example, he said, when volunteers painted the township building last winter, the total costs for the job — including painting offices, the meeting room and the gym — came to $268 — "for paint, beer, pizza, the whole works."

In addition, Nadeau said, during the February snowstorm, of the seven men running the township's snow-clearing equipment, "only one was getting paid."

Fertig, Nadeau, committee member Thomas Smith, and other residents all took turns operating the equipment to keep the municipality's three streets and sidewalks clear of snow.

"That's the way it goes and that's the way we want it to go," Fertig said.

Asbury Park will appeal ruling on boardwalk sale

By ANDREW SHEEHAN

ASBURY PARK — The City Council voted last night to appeal last month's Monmouth County Superior Court decision forbidding it to sell the city's waterfront properties to a private entrepreneur for redevelopment.

The council authorized City Attorney Norman H. Mesnikoff to appeal the decision of Superior Court Judge Patrick J. McGann Jr., who squelched the sale of the mile-long strip of land between Ocean Avenue and the boardwalk to Neptune contractor Henry V. Vaccaro, the sole bidder on the property.

"With all due respect to the court, it is the city's position that on the issue the judge decided, the judge was wrong," Mesnikoff said. "The city has the right to sell that land."

In February, the city offered bidders the opportunity to bid on the properties, provided they present a detailed plan of redevelopment for the waterfront.

The city retained the right to accept or reject all bids on the basis of bid price and the attractiveness of the plans presented.

McGann ruled that the city would have to be more specific in the specifications for development and draw up its own development plan for the highest bidder to implement.

But Mesnikoff said the council should be permitted to award the land to whomever presents the best plan for redevelopment.

"The council still has to act reasonably, and to say that the council could act arbitrarily or capriciously in that respect is wrong," Mesnikoff said.

McGann ruled on suits filed by Oceanview Associates and Robert J. Oberst, Colts Neck, who bid on the properties last year; Loch Harbour Associates, another potential bidder, and David Murnick, the owner of the Monroe Towers, a high rise apartment building on the waterfront.

Mesnikoff said McGann failed to rule on the objections posed by Oceanview and Loch Harbour that certain qualifications required of bidders by the city were illegal.

In addition, Mesnikoff said McGann did not rule on Murnick's objection that the property was donated to the city in 1903 by James Bradley, the city's founder, expressly for public use and access.

Mesnikoff said an appeals court could possibly remand the case to McGann to rule on these other issues.

He said that under optimal conditions the city could have a decision on the sale of the boardwalk in six months.

"It all depends on what the appellate division does," he said.

Mesnikoff said he was so "upset" by the McGann decision that he offered to handle the appeal free of charge for the city.

Auto shop gets OK in Shrewsbury

By KATHLEEN STANLEY

SHREWSBURY — The Zoning Board of Adjustment last night voted to allow construction of a foreign car service center at the intersection of Newman Springs Road and Shrewsbury Avenue, on the site where an Italian restaurant burned down several years ago.

The board unanimously approved a variance allowing Mario Lomedico of Eatontown to build his repair business in a retail business area.

In addition, the board granted preliminary and final site plan approval for the 1,950 square foot colonial building.

The proposal met with an objection from a neighboring businessman. "I want to hold the code. I want to turn it (his property) into office buildings in two years," the unidentified objector said.

Members of the board said they saw no reason why the repair shop should not be built in the area, given the type of businesses already located in the area, including a Mobile gas station and an Aameco transmission center.

"The application is consistent with the uses in the vicinity," commented board member Harry Ticehurst, pointing to the other service stations near the Newman Springs Road intersection. "I think it is something the town will benefit from."

The proposed structure, designed by architect Joseph R. Peters of Rumson, will house four garages, a small office and a parts store.

The building is to be constructed of concrete block with a stucco and brick front, according to Peters.

Monmouth College to host program for gifted

WEST LONG BRANCH — Monmouth College is finalizing, and expects to announce by April 20, selection of 100 students from throughout the state who will receive scholarships to the initial session of the Governor's School for Gifted High School Students, to be held on its campus July 2 to 30.

The Monmouth College school, which will focus on global studies, is the first of three such schools announced last fall by Gov. Thomas Kean. In 1984, Drew University and Trenton State College will open similar schools specializing in science and art, respectively.

Candidates for the Monmouth College school have been nominated by their local schools and school districts through the office of the county superintendent of schools in each of the state's 21 counties.

To be eligible, students must have attained their junior year in high school, have achieved a B average or better in all subjects, have ranked in the 90th percentile or better in a nationally standardized test, and have submitted an essay explaining their reasons for wishing to attend the school.

Drawn from both New Jersey's private and public schools, the student body will represent a fairly even distribution as to sex, geographic location and ethnic background, according to a college spokeswoman.

All students will live on the College campus in Spruce Hall in the residence complex during the four weeks the school is in session.

Sharing the dormitory area with them will be members of the school faculty and staff. All will take their meals together, and participate in the recreational activities, lectures, excursions and other special programs planned beyond the daily schedule of classes, the spokeswoman said.

Dr. Cheryl Keen and Dr. James Keen, a husband and wife who are specialists in innovative educational programs, have been appointed academic directors of the school, charged with overall planning of the program.

The Keens, who both hold doctorates from Harvard Graduate School of Education, have developed a curriculum which emphasizes the interdependence of contemporary nations, the college official reported.

Irv Balton, the College's director of program services, is the school's administrator.

Council to join beer fight

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS — The Borough Council is expected to pass a measure flagging the state legislature's proposal to allow unlicensed restaurants to serve beer and wine, according to a consensus at last night's meeting. Mayor Everett C. Curry read a letter from the Political Action Committee of the New Jersey Licensed Beverage Association, which represents liquor stores, taverns and other businesses licensed to serve alcohol.

The letter, written by the association's PAC chairman, William Jerlat of Edison, and the group's president, Gerald Bertekap of Fords, outlined a six-point opposition to the legislation authored by state Sen. John F. Russo, D-Ocean. "Under such a law," Curry explained, "I think it would open us up to a situation we would rather not have."

"I wouldn't like to see a Ronald McDonald beer mug," Councilman Robert T. Abrams. "You can brown bag it now and I think this would open up Pandora's box." There are currently 10 "C" licenses issued to establishments for on-site consumption of alcohol in the borough.

"I don't think we need anymore," Councilman Edgar C. Braun Jr. opined.

Will oppose additional primary

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS — While New Jersey's Presidential Primary may be overshadowed by larger state contests, the Borough Council will probably side with the county clerk that the cost is too steep to pay for the event.

During its work session last night, council members agreed with Monmouth County Clerk Jane G. Clayton that the cost of the additional primary for the presidential sweepstakes — to be paid by municipalities — was too much to ask.

Clayton, in her letter to the borough, explained that all 21 of the county clerks have gone on record opposing the legislation. She also noted that the additional cost to be borne by the local government would wreck havoc with the state-imposed cap law which restricts budget growth.

The standard cost for an election for a town the size of Atlantic Highlands runs about $2,000.

West Keypoint School up for sale

KEYPORT — The Board of Education has put the West Keypoint School on the market. By a vote of 5-2, the board voted last night to accept offers for the sale of the school building. The board set a $25,000 minimum on bids. The vote comes despite the request by Mayor Richard Bergen and the Borough Council for the board to donate the school to the borough for use as municipal offices, according to Business Administrator Dominic J. Acerra. To date, the board has yet to agree on a sale price for the elementary school, located on Washington Street.

Initially, board member M. Elaine Aumack motioned to put the school out to bid for $25,000 with member Jane M. Jones seconding. Board members Howard Ruth and Robert P. Schneider voted against the resolution and Charles E. Dittmars, board president, abstained. In explaining his vote against the sale, Ruth asked: "What if we don't get any bidders for $25,000? We'll be stuck with a building."

Nuthouse plan hearing set

ABERDEEN — The Zoning Board of Adjustment last night accepted the site plan for a proposed expansion of Jo-Ann's Nuthouse on Line Road, and announced that there will be a public hearing on the plan April 27.

The plan has been met with opposition from residents who live near the 193,040 square foot-lot. At a February 23 meeting, several residents claimed increased truck traffic brought on by the expansion would aggravate the current traffic congestion problems at the intersection of Blair and Line Roads.

Jack Grummet, chairman of the board of Jo-Ann's Nuthouse has assured the objectors that truck traffic in the area will be decreased because the expansion will allow trucks to be loaded on the site, rather than in the roadway.

'Hangout' request considered

MATAWAN — The Borough Recreation Committee has appointed a subcommittee to discuss a local group's request for a legal "hangout" in the borough, but at least one subcommittee member said he was less than enthusiastic about the idea. "Would you want your kids hanging around doing nothing?" committee member Joseph Bucco asked. "I can't believe they don't have anything better to do than sit around." Bucco said the subcommittee will meet with representatives of the 30-member group and police officials Monday. "We're all going to get together to see what can be done."

Church addition plans OK'd

MARLBORO — Despite protests from an irate neighbor, the Robertsville Bible Church was given the go-ahead last night from the Township Planning Board to build a 60-by-40 foot church addition.

Plans for the multi-purpose addition also include the clearing of trees on the side of the property for recreational space. Once the trees are removed, the church plans to set up a 200-foot berm, plant 14 Canadian Hemlock trees, and put up a 6-foot stockade fence to act as a barrier between the church property and some homes on Sherbrooke Lane.

Spy House meeting sought

MIDDLETOWN — The Township Committee wants to meet with the management of the Shoal Harbor Museum — the Spy House — to finally settle the lease of the 300-year-old historic site. But committee members, especially Mayor Paul Linder, have expressed concern over which of two organizations — the Preservationists, Inc. or the newly-formed Shoal Harbor Museum Corporation — should be the lessee of the property.

Township Attorney Peter Barton met recently with a local lawyer and former ownership attorney Patrick Healy, who is representing the museum in the matter. Barton said he left the meeting unsure of which organization Healy is representing during the talks.

Intimately involved with both organizations is Gertrude Neidinger, the long-time curator of the Port Monmouth museum. The Preservationists group, Neidinger said, was formed to raise money for the museum after it dissolved its relationship with the Middletown Historical Society.

6 women indicted for welfare fraud

FREEHOLD — Six women, including a Long Branch resident accused of illegally obtaining more than $43,000, have been indicted by county grand juries this week for welfare fraud.

None of the incidents are related, but all six women are accused of bilking the county Board of Social Services by obtaining public assistance while concealing employment or failing to disclose other income.

Delores Kyles Richardson, 41, of Joline Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for receiving $43,907 between Oct. 1971 and Aug. 1979 by falsely "holding herself out to be poor and needy," her indictment says.

During this time, the indictment says, Richardson received — and concealed — Social Security income.

Richardson is also charged with theft by deception for allegedly obtaining additional assistance of more than $500 between Sept. 1979 and Oct. 1981 while failing to report other income, the indictment says.

Annette Overstreet, 21, of Chelton Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with theft by deception. An indictment accuses her of not reporting unemployment insurance benefits while she collected more than $500 in assistance, between Aug. 1981 and last June.

Emma Powell, also known as Emma Jackson, 32, of First Street, Freehold, is charged with theft by deception for allegedly failing to report wages and unemployment insurance income while receiving more than $500 in assistance between Oct. 1980 and last June.

Shirley Fuller, 40, of Woodrow Wilson Homes, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses. She received $2,647 in assistance over a 13-month period ending in April 1979 while she was employed, the indictment says.

Paulette Washington, 38, of Delaware Avenue, Cliffwood, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for allegedly receiving unemployment benefits while collecting $1,373 in assistance between Feb. 1979 and Sept. 1979. Washington is also charged with theft by deception for allegedly receiving $2,544 in assistance while failing to report income and unemployment benefits between Sept. 1979 and Dec. 1981.

Loretta Foster, 47, of Seventh Avenue, Asbury Park, is charged with obtaining $596 under false pretenses in the summer of 1979. She is also charged with theft by deception for receiving more than $500 between Sept. 1979 and Feb. 1980 while she collected wages and unemployment benefits.

Washington's indictment was handed up yesterday, the others on Tuesday.

Man sues over mechanical bull

FREEHOLD — After being tossed from the saddle of a mechanical bull, a Neptune Township man is trying to corral an Asbury Park tavern in court. Thomas Hansen says the In The Saddle tavern didn't warn him of the machine's dangers and should be responsible for the injuries he received, the would-be urban cowboy charges in a suit docketed in Superior Court yesterday.

The mechanical animal, which is supposed to buck and gyrate like a real bull, threw Hansen from its saddle when he was inside the bar on July 8, 1981, the suit says. Hansen received "many permanent and diverse injuries" and had to take time off from work to recuperate, the suit says, adding that Hansen will lose time from work in the future, too.

The suit seeks financial compensation for injuries and damages.

Trio held in wine theft

TINTON FALLS — An adult male and two juveniles have been arrested and charged by the borough's Police Department with stealing two cases of wine from a delivery truck at Silver Liquors on Shrewsbury Avenue, police said.

Rufus Monroe Jr., 37, of 92 Peach Street was arrested and released pending a Municipal Court hearing April 12, police said. They added that the two juveniles were charged and released to the custody of relatives.

One of the juveniles was also arrested for control of a dangerous substance, police said. They did not reveal the nature of the substance.

Monroe and the two juveniles were apprehended by Lt. William Seufert who was making a motor vehicle stop, police said. Seufert was assisted by Sgt. Louis Vitale and Patrolman Thomas Richardson, police said.

Pair held in purse snatch

LONG BRANCH — Police have arrested a Fort Monmouth soldier and another man for snatching the purse of an elderly woman and knocking her down in the process. Police yesterday arrested Tyrone Williams, 20, of Ellis Avenue, for performing the robbery of an unidentified woman on West End Avenue on March 28th.

Police last week arrested Eddie Hall, 21, of First Avenue, Atlantic Highlands, who is stationed at Fort Monmouth as a soldier. Police said Hall drove a getaway car from the scene of the crime. Police said the woman received bruises but did not require hospitalization.

Amendment may revive zoning controversy

By DAN BREEN

MIDDLETOWN — With 21 hours of Howco-Bamm Hollow hearings barely a memory, another set of public hearings on a township Master Plan amendment may revive a controversy.

The Planning Board last night decided to hold hearings on a proposal to amend the Master Plan and change the zoning of the controversial Beekman-Gullick tract from its current office-research designation to a residential one.

The outcome of the hearings might be different from the rejection faced by Howco since four of five Township Committee members, who must vote to implement any zone change to comply with a Master Plan amendment, have already voiced support for rezoning.

The board and committee, however, disagree on what to classify the property, located on a large triangular piece of land formed with Holland Road, Red Hill Road, and the Holmdel border.

Developer Dominic G. Martelli of Shrewsbury has proposed to build a planned adult community — PAC — on the 250-acre tract, a notion now supported by Mayor Paul Linder and Committeemen James F. Maher Jr., Richard V. Kelly and Joseph McGrath.

The Planning Board, in discussing the proposal, came out against the PAC plan, but in making a decision on the matter, determined that the property's office-research zoning in the Master Plan was not suitable for roughly the same reason — nature of the property and the vicinity.

Instead, during the hearings the board will consider which low-density residential zone it would like to see include the property — an R-90 designation with two-acre tracts or an R-45 notation with one-acre tracts.

The board last night instructed Township Planner Richard Cramer to draft a proposed amendment to the plan, copies of which will be sent to the county Planning Board and neighboring municipalities for comment.

The county Planning Board has gone on record as being opposed to the Martelli proposal for the Beekman-Gullick tract and would like to see as much of the property and its open space preserved as possible.

Township Committeeman Robert B. Waller, who is also a Planning Board member, is opposed to the PAC plan and would like to see the property zoned as R-45. "That would fit in better with the surrounding property," Waller, who lives on Red Hill Road, said.

The committee, however, currently is considering an ordinance which would create a PAC zone on the property. Shrewsbury lawyer Ronald S. Gasiorowski, who represents Martelli, recently agreed to reduce the density of units on the property.

After introducing the ordinance, the committee will send it to the Planning Board for review and hold at least one public hearing on the matter.

In related business, the board voted 6-2 to approve the resolution rejecting Howco's request to amend the Master Plan to include the Bamm Hollow Country Club as a site for a corporate office park.

The action finalizes its vote last month at the end of the seventh hearing on the matter.

Walker seeks seat in 13th district

MATAWAN — Last night it was Jacqueline Walker's turn to officially announce her candidacy for the Democratic nomination to run for the open 13th district Assembly seat in the Bayshore.

The Matawan resident held a party for approximately 100 enthusiastic supporters to announce that she will seek the endorsement of a district-wide Democratic mini-convention, tentatively scheduled for April 25.

Walker, who is the party's municipal chairman in Matawan, is considered the front-runner for the nomination to replace Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, on the Democratic ticket.

The Middletown Democrat is giving up his Assembly seat to challenge incumbent Sen. John P. Gallagher, R-Monmouth and Middlesex, for the Bayshore Senate seat.

Van Wagner will head a ticket that will also include Assemblyman William E. Flynn, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, who will be seeking his sixth two-year term.

Tinton Falls adopts '83 budget

TINTON FALLS — The Borough Council has adopted a $3,520,776.27 1983 municipal budget which will increase the municipal tax rate by 3 cents, bringing it to 89 cents per $100 of assessed valuation.

The budget, a 6 percent increase over the 1982 municipal budget, falls within the state-mandated limit on annual budgetary increases. It was adopted Tuesday night at the council meeting.

Spending increases have been attributed by borough officials to jumps in social security costs, pension benefits, and utility rates.

The council budgeted $39,045 to be used as downpayment on capital improvements. The borough plans to put the money toward acquiring a new fire truck and some additional equipment, as well as beginning some road repairs.

Borough officials have said that 1983 tax dollars will total $1,576,984.27, compared to $1,462,430 in 1982.

Car repair shop gets OK

The site will have 19 parking spaces, 10 feet by 18 feet, according to the proposal. The board waived a borough ordinance calling for parking spaces to be at least 10 feet by 20 feet.

"The cars obviously now are down-scaled and 10 feet by 18 feet is becoming the norm, rather than 10 feet by 20 feet," added William Collopy, vice chairman.

The board members ruled that the building will upgrade the existing lot, which is presently vacant, and that the design of the structure will "be consistent with the colonial heritage of Shrewsbury."

Two teachers chosen to study abroad

RED BANK — Two area teachers will be in England for 6 weeks this summer to study with scholars from all over the world as part of the British Universities Summer School Program.

The Monmouth County Branch of the English Speaking Union, a worldwide organization, awarded the scholarships to Trudy Wolfe and Ed Stanley after considering many applicants.

Stanley, the 1981 Monmouth County teacher of the year, is facilitator of the Instructional Computer Program and teacher of the gifted and talented at the Red Bank Middle School.

Wolfe is the teacher in charge of programs for the gifted and talented at the Ocean Township Intermediate School.

Scholarship winners for summer study in Britain are eligible to study at any one of four universities: Oxford, London, Bristol or Stratford-On-Avon in Birmingham.

The summer school program has been offered annually since 1948. Its aim is to provide courses of high enough academic caliber and sufficient duration to enable students to undertake serious study. The courses are designed for graduate study. The schools are all international and an important feature is the opportunity to live and study with fellow students of similar interests from many countries.

Both Wolfe and Stanley have elected to study "English Literature and Culture Since 1900" at the University of London.

SCIENCE MAGIC — Richard Garrett and Carol Le, sixth grade students at Tinton Falls Elementary School, admire the props used by Kevin Gormley for his presentation of "The Body Magic Show."

School show blends science, magic

TINTON FALLS — Tinton Falls students saw that science is like magic when Kevin Gormley's "The Body Magic Show" was presented recently.

Gormley came from New York City to give his presentation about the scientific goings on inside the body (in cells, digestion, germs, etc.) as well as outside the body, in the increasingly technological world in which we live.

The presentation was sponsored by the Tinton Falls PTA.

The program is developed to help children see science and its tools as fun, exciting and participatory, according to Gormley. "I create an atmosphere that is playful and exploring, one that is conducive to forming a curious and creative mind — the kind of mind that is necessary to enjoy the challenges of tomorrow," he said.

The presentation included magic tricks, slides, film footage and tape recordings.

Both teachers and students participated in the presentation, playing germs, antibodies and penicillin in a fight for good health.

The programs were well received by the students, commented Kathleen Merrigan, a 6th grade teacher. One student, Christopher Waltak, popped into her classroom after the presentation and announced, "I've come to compliment you on your germ acting."

She replied, "I make a mean germ. You wouldn't want me in your body."

Students to re-create era tonight

WEST LONG BRANCH — Students at Monmouth College will reenact a bygone era with costumes, dialogue, music and dance in Pollack Auditorium tonight and tomorrow night.

"La Belle Epoque," the period of international transition between 1880 and the start of World War II, is the theme of the college "docu-drama," which will be staged by two classes of history students and the school's Performing Arts Ensemble.

Gertrude Stein, Friedrich Neitsche, Emma Goldman, Kaiser Wilhelm II and Guillaume Appolinaire are among the approximately 25 historical celebrities to be portrayed the college stage.

The celebration will begin at 8 p.m. and will be free to students.

Students heading for England

They are scheduled to see "Children of a Lesser God," "Pirates of Penzance," and "Business of Murder."

The group will also take side trips to Stratford, Oxford, Windsor Castle, Haton Court, Salisbury and Winchester.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Thursday, April 7
Born today, you are first and foremost aware of your own possibilities. You know precisely how far you can go before reaching the ends of your talent or time — and you know when you have sold yourself short by not going far enough! You have a broad streak of sentimentality to your nature and will have to take care not to confuse sentiment with truth when attempting to judge people and their actions. Other people's troubles concern you every bit as much as your own, a fact which may upset you greatly. You need to learn to judge your own needs and desires more objectively. As it is, you often set yourself goals which in the long run do not fit in with what is going on around you — though they may suit very well what you wish were going on!
FRIDAY, APRIL 8
ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You do nothing to gain a solution to your difficulties if you simply sit and wait. Get a move on!
TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You will meet a rather frightening challenge very well if you simply keep your wits about you.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Ask a "fresh eye" to take a look at your situation on the employment scene. Something new has arisen!
CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A failure of nerve could cause you to suddenly lose out on what earlier appeared to be a sure thing.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Redirect your energy toward home-front projects. You can complete one and begin another before day's end.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An Aries native insures your success today — if you give him enough time and information to do so.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If you overdo today, whether physically or mentally, you will act detrimentally to present concerns.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Self-deception is your worst enemy today. Be ready to move quickly and accurately at a moment's notice.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Plan your day from beginning to end. To leave even an hour unscheduled could lead to difficulties.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your recent decisions appear to have helped others immensely. Now take time out to help yourself!
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — A misfortune occurring early in the day may lead quite quickly — and surprisingly — to a good consequence.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Family happiness is essential to family well-being. Concern yourself with ambitions of the young.

BRIDGE ADVICE

By Alfred Sheinwold
In today's hand a tournament expert takes the second spade and tries the diamond finesse, playing for every trick that isn't nailed down. East wins and returns a spade. Declarer must later try the club finesse, whereupon West wins and defeats the contract with two more spades. The rubber bridge expert sees that he has a problem only if both finesses fail and if West has five spades. Even then South makes the game if he develops the right suit first.
Since West is dangerous only if he gets in after he has set up his spades, South must give West the king of clubs early rather than late.
REJECTS FINESSE
Since there is no convenient way to get to dummy for an immediate club finesse, South leads the ace and another club after taking the king of spades. West wins and leads a third spade to the ace, but when South eventually loses the diamond finesse East is out of spades. South takes the heart return and wins three diamonds, three clubs, two spades and a heart.
DAILY QUESTION
Partner opens with one heart, and the next player passes. You hold: ♠ J 9 7 5 3 ♠ K 7 5 ♦ 8 6 4 ♣ K 5
What do you say?
ANSWER: Bid two hearts. You have seven high-card points and one point for the doubleton, enough for one voluntary response but not enough for two. Your first duty with so weak a hand is to show support for partner's major suit rather than to bid a suit of your own.

ANN LANDERS

'Author unknown' identifies self

Dear Readers: I don't ordinarily let you in on my personal correspondence, but this is different. It arrived in yesterday's mailbag:

Dear Eppie: If that little essay by "author unknown" goes up on any refrigerators or bulletin boards (the one that goes like this: "I loved you enough to ask where you were going, with whom and what time you'd be home. I loved you enough to be silent and let you discover that your new best friend was a creep," etc.), I hope it will have my name on it because it's mine. How soon they forget!!

Love, Erma Bombeck

Dear Erma: Some people may forget, but an awful lot of people remember. I have been bombarded with letters from readers telling me that the "unknown author" quoted in a Glenview (Ill.) church bulletin is the well-known columnist, Erma Bombeck. I shall set the record straight at the earliest possible moment.

Fondest — Eppie

Dear Ann Landers: I hope to see this letter in the paper, but I doubt that you will print it. It's too controversial. I'll be on the lookout, nevertheless.

I passed a lie detector test given by Smith Securities of Dallas. I am not bragging, but I lied throughout the test so skillfully that I beat the machine from beginning to end.

I have been on drugs for a long time and sold them as well. I have also committed two robberies. I did not answer truthfully when asked these questions, and I lied when asked if I had ever sought professional counseling.

This is how I did it: When I responded to the questions, I kept my cool and pretended they were being directed to someone else. In other words, I refused to become emotionally involved. The results of those tests concluded that I was innocent.

If I was able to figure out that technique, surely others have. Why, then, are these tests considered proof of anything? Obviously I cannot sign my name. — Strictly Anonymous in Texas

Dear Tex.: Since the laws on lie detector tests vary from state to state, I shall not get into the legal aspects. I will say, however, that some individuals who have flunked the test were found later to be innocent, and people like you who passed were found guilty. Obviously the tests are thought to have some value or they would not be used at all. Thanks for your story. And, may I suggest that you not push your luck?

CONFIDENTIAL to Speaking from Experience in Ottawa: When you get a little more experience you will speak a great deal less. I hope it happens soon. Your mouth has already gotten you into a heap of trouble. Wise up.

How much do you know about pot, cocaine, LSD, speed, PCP, uppers and downers, glue and heroin? Are all these drugs dangerous? Get Ann Landers' all-new booklet, "The Lowdown on Dope." For each booklet ordered, send $2 plus a long, self-addressed envelope (37 cents postage) to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Ill. 60611.

AT WIT'S END

Record broken

By ERMA BOMBECK

Man has finally revealed his divine plan for life here on earth.

For six days of every week he will toil, putting together three football leagues with seasons running from the first of September through the last of August.

And on the seventh day, he will watch!

With the creation of the United States Football League, he has only one more league to go before the plan is complete.

I ask you, ladies, where were we when the new league was put together? We slept! I cannot remember when anything went together so fast. One minute, I remember old whatshisname sitting in front of the Super Bowl lamenting he had only one bowl to go before he was homeless, and the next thing you know 12 teams in three divisions calling themselves the United States Football League trotted out onto the field where they are going to play until the middle of July.

I can't believe it. Everything takes time. Creation of the Earth: seven days; man on the moon: 200 years; full term of a baby on a soap opera: three weeks; creation of a football league: 15 minutes.

What I'm saying, ladies, is we've been had.

We've sat idly by and watched the sports week grow from Friday nights to Mondays, and the season extend from fall through midsummer.

If they can jam in another league at the start of the baseball season, then baseball will have to retaliate by putting in another league in the two weeks between NFL and the basketball season. Basketball spills over into the golf classics now, so they'll stick in another league that will wedge between the golf opens and the National Hockey League, which takes away the week and a half between tennis at Wimbledon and the Indy 500.

I don't like to think where that leaves Bowling for Dollars.

In my heart I know that out there somewhere in this country, even as I write, is a group of men in a smoke-filled room putting together another football league to fill the 27-day gap that would make the season continuous throughout the year. No one will know anyone on the teams, but no one will care.

After all, how can you reason with someone who will love the Green Bay Packers in November as he loves the Arizona Wranglers in July?

Redheads aim to better image

By PAULA LYNN PARKS
Columbia News Service

NEW YORK — Redheads International says redheads are hot, but several of New York City's top modeling advertising agencies don't agree.

A club for carrot-topped citizens, Redheads International, was established last year by Stephen Douglas, a redhead in Laguna Hills, Calif., to "promote positive redhead identity and increase the number of attractive role models for redheads." Lucille Ball and Ann-Margret are not enough, he said.

To encourage red pride, his organization sponsored a Miss Redhead Southern California beauty contest last fall. The club has regular social events — but Douglas is also shrewdly branching out into using his list of what he says are 10,000 members. He is trademarking hair and skin products geared to the needs of redheads.

Also, inspired by what he says is a number of requests for red-haired models coming in, Douglas plans to start the first redhead modeling agency. One of those requests was from Playboy magazine, which decided to shoot a redhead pictorial slated to appear later this year.

"Redheads have been overlooked as sex symbols," said Jim Larson from Playboy's photo department in Chicago.

But, if advertising-agency and modeling-agency spokespersons are to be believed, Playboy and Redheads International are wasting their time.

Susan Branagan, head of the women's division of Zoli models, said that most make-up companies don't request redheads because of their tendency to freckle, which on camera could be mistaken for skin blemishes. They are also not usually used in commercials that require a tan, such as bathing-suit ones, because their fair skin tends to burn, she said.

Zoli, which has nine red-haired models, an unusually large number, also said it has not seen an increase in the number of requests.

Eileen Ford, owner of Ford modeling agency, said that in the 36 years she's been in the business, redheads have been "a dead market and will always be a dead market."

Getting more irritated, she added, "How can you even discuss it? The market doesn't exist!"

Douglas responds: "We'll show Mrs. Ford."

Although advertising agencies here said they have not seen a marked interest in redheads, redheads seem to be represented in agencies in the same, if not higher, percentages as they exist in the general population — 2 percent.

"I can't recall an occasion when there was a specific request for redheads," said Creamer Advertising Agency's casting director, Diana Deane. If the creative department specified hair type, she said, it was usually for a blonde.

But, "if she is beautiful, it doesn't matter what color her hair is," said Maureen Javett, secretary to the president of Wilhemina modeling agency.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Doughnuts simply made

DEAR HELOISE:
I've got a great idea for using canned biscuits! Make doughnuts!

Just poke a hole through the middle with your finger and stretch them out. They rise when they are cooked. Place them in a pan of hot oil and fry until lightly browned on both sides. Shake them in a bag of powdered sugar until well-coated. For extra flavor you can add cinnamon to the sugar.

They're great! And my husband's favorite. — Angela F. Furtick

TIDY SEAT
Dear Heloise: My car still has the one-piece front seat with smooth upholstery. My purse, books and packages would go flying every time I stopped.

Here's what I did. I bought a small carton about 9 by 14 inches, 3 inches deep. (You could cut your own.) I placed it alongside me, punched a hole in the back end, put a cord through, looped the cord over the back of the seat and fastened it. Now the neat carton holds all manner of things, especially my purse and slippery books, also the seat belts when not in use.

There's still plenty of room for a passenger. If you need to remove it, just toss it over the seat temporarily.

No more retrieving things from the floor. — Katie

LETTER OF LAUGHTER
Dear Heloise: When I taught first grade we were talking about one of the students having a new baby at her house.

I asked the rest of the students if anyone had a new baby at their homes.

One little wide-eyed boy piped up, "When my daddy gets paid we are going to buy one." — Margaret Hamrock

KITCHEN COVERS
Dear Heloise: When storing long-handled wooden utensils, spatulas, etc. in a caddy or decorated can, I cover the whole thing with a clear plastic bag.

They can be seen but also stay clean as I don't use every one, every day. I also keep small clear plastic bags over the salt and pepper shakers, sugar dispenser and pint bottle of vegetable oil that are near the stove.

Keeps grease or dust off them. — Dawn Robbins

RECYCLING PANTS
Dear Heloise: When my daughter's pants get too short but otherwise fit her, I make knickers out of them.

I use the excess material that I cut off to make a band around her leg, or else I just make a casing and insert some elastic to fit. The easiest way to figure out where to cut them off is to have her put the pants on and then tie a piece of elastic at the bottom of her knee and blouse the material.

My daughter is happy because she is in style and I'm happy because it sure helps the clothes budget! I love your column. Keep up the good work! — Vicki Steyn

PLANT CARE
Dear Heloise: This hint is very beneficial to my plants, as it keeps the house dust off types that shouldn't be sprayed.

I use my hair blow dryer set on cool and low setting. Hold it 12 inches or more away from the leaves. This blows the dust right off and you don't have the problem of water spots on your African Violets, Dusty Miller or Purple Passion. — Shirr C. Keithan

EASY ACCESSORIES
Dear Heloise: Here's a good hint ... I'm one of those who throws away those string belts that come with some blouses and dresses.

Now I use every one of them. I macrame a design like a flower, bee, butterfly etc., attach a pin to it and it becomes a lapel pin to match the outfit.

I've gotten more compliments on this. It's very attractive. — Mary Lou Durham Recycling is the name of the game today. If you have a good idea tell Heloise and she'll tell her readers how they can get the most out of things. Write Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She can't answer individual letters, but will use the best in her column whenever possible.

YOUR HEALTH

Infants are quite hardy

By LESTER L. COLEMAN, M.D.

Our first baby arrived home about two weeks ago. All of a sudden our house looked like a typical TV setting for an operating room. My wife behaves as if everything must be sterilized. All day long the house is being scrubbed, boiled and disinfected. How old must an infant be before we treat him like a human being and start having some joy? — Mr. W.W.R., Mich.

Dear Mr. R.:
Be patient. Infants are frightening human beings to fathers and mothers who have not had a chance to adjust to the "barometric emotional pressures" that come along with a newborn infant.

They look so tender and fragile. But don't be misled. They are hardy human beings and are much more resilient than you think.

This is a good time to start enjoying your infant. They are a source of great fun even at this young age. With observation you will find that each day becomes a world of enchantment.

Don't be distressed by the compulsive, and almost obsessive, attitudes about germ-free milk, nipples, bottles and cooking utensils. Certainly cleanliness is important, but must not be overwhelming.

There is a distinct difference between cleanliness and surrounding a child with operating room sterility. Soon you will find out how well infants and young children flourish without all this anxiety about sterilization.

Your doctor is encyclopedic in his knowledge about the needs of a newborn infant. Follow his directions and the directions that are explicit in so many of the books that are now available about newborn infants.

Would you say that fatigue is a sign of illness? My husband gets so tired at the end of the day that I get scared. — Mrs. S.R., Va.

Dear Mrs. R.:
Fatigue is one of the most common complaints brought to the attention of doctors. Fatigue in itself is a symptom, not an illness. It is too easy, and often false, to dismiss fatigue as a symptom of boredom or general weariness or suggest that it is psychological in origin.

This may be true, but I believe that persistent fatigue is important enough to deserve active investigation.

The fatigue that comes at the end of a day's work is understandable. The capacity of the body to recoup energy with rest is an astounding protective body mechanism.

A man's fatigue after a day of hard work is based upon the expenditure of muscular energy.

However, unexplained fatigue, or protracted fatigue which is not alleviated by rest, must be tracked down. Physical examination and studies of the blood for anemia should be done to find out what the origin of your husband's fatigue is.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of this newspaper.

Women's Network sets meeting

SHREWSBURY — Women's issues in Monmouth County and the State of New Jersey will be the topic of the Tuesday, April 12 meeting of the Monmouth County Women's Network. The speaker, Doris Kulman, is editorial page editor of The Daily Register. The session will take place at 7:30 p.m. in the Register building, Route 35.

The Network, formed by members of women's groups throughout the county, provides a focus for women's issues and problems. Task forces are formed as needed to work toward specific goals, such as the elimination of advertising which exploits women and the need for a county-level women's commission.

Prospective members and interested individuals are invited to attend the meeting.

Displaced homemakers offered courses on finding employment

LINCROFT — Courses to train displaced homemakers for employment will start this month at Brookdale Community College's Long Branch and Freehold Learning Centers.

A displaced homemaker is a person who has lived at home for many years, not working and dependent upon another person's income, and who has lost that income. A majority of displaced homemakers are separated, divorced or widowed women, but classes are being started for men as well.

The classes — which are free — are intended to help these unemployed or underemployed people choose, find, get and keep jobs. The program includes instruction in the job search, interviewing skills, and career educational and personal counseling.

The coordinator of the displaced homemaker project, Elsa Vicens, Freehold, spoke of past programs. "Group members," she said, "have been supportive of each other. They have exchanged phone numbers and kept in touch long after classes ended."

Classes for women run for 12 sessions. At the Long Branch Learning Center, they will meet from 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Mondays and Wednesdays, April 11 through May 18. At Freehold, they will meet from 9:30 a.m. to noon, Tuesdays and Thursdays, April 12 through May 19. Men's classes run for 10 sessions, and will meet Mondays and Tuesdays, 1 to 3 p.m., starting April 11 at Long Branch and April 12 at Freehold.

Interested persons may register by calling Elsa Vicens at either the Long Branch or Freehold Learning Center.

Teacher learns from avalanche

By JENNIFER KERR

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Anna Conrad, buried for five days in an avalanche one year ago, has returned to the ski slopes even though she lost part of a leg and foot, and says the accident taught her "don't give up."

"There's a lot of sadness involved and it's kind of scary, thinking that it's been as long as a year and it's only been a year," she said of the avalanche that killed seven people, including her boyfriend.

Conrad, 23, has a special artificial "sports leg" and skied this winter at Mammoth Mountain, near Yosemite National Park.

Lately, much of her time has been devoted to working as a high-school student teacher, instructing in biology.

"I've always wanted to teach students so they might get a little more excited about what goes on around them," said Conrad.

Since the avalanche, "I try as hard as I can to do everything as well as I can. I tell (my students), 'Don't give up on things easily.'"

Two avalanches roared down the slopes of the Alpine Meadows ski resort in the Sierra Nevada last March 31, covering a ski patrol building, damaging the main lodge and burying resort employees and visitors.

Conrad, a ski lift operator who was cross-country skiing that day because the lifts were closed, was inside the three-story ski patrol building and got trapped in an air pocket formed by debris.

She was found five days later, her feet badly frostbitten. She later lost her right leg below the knee and part of her left foot.

"People died who were very close to me," she said. "It's hard to look back and say they're not here any more."

She hasn't been back to Alpine Meadows, which she is suing, but plans to return next week for a national handicapped ski race.

"My feeling is I want to be active. I've always been active and I don't want to change my life style any more than I absolutely have to. Skiing is something I can do and it's exciting, exhilarating and thrilling."

She said her skiing has steadily improved and she can now race down advanced slopes. Before the disaster, Conrad was an expert.

"I'd like to have something good come out of this. I'd like to help other disabled people have confidence and not have fear in doing some things," she said.

Conrad worked at the resort last winter after finishing her biology degree at the University of California-Davis. She graduated last June and began student teaching last fall. She taught at a Davis junior high school the first half of the year and has been at Sacramento High School since Feb. 1.

"She is an inspiration, really," said Fred Vanderwold, her supervising teacher and a skier who followed the avalanche story last year. "She's just a nice, good person, a dedicated person. She's special, but I don't think she's any more special than she would have been anyway."

Conrad, who grew up in Glendora in Los Angeles County, says she's looking for a teaching job for September.

"I think she will probably find a job," said Vanderwold. "She does a good job. Her handicap is not holding her back."

Conrad sometimes uses crutches but said she's having no problems with the artificial left leg. However, the partially amputated right foot has nerve damage that might be permanent. She cannot tell when she's hurting it and it gets easily blistered.

She said she's not scared of skiing, but has "some fear of being up in an area with a bad storm. And I have had to ski in some storms this winter."

The artichoke: more than merely elegant

An air of mystery has always surrounded the artichoke, perhaps because of its family connections (it's a member of the thistle family) or because of its reputation for elegance.

There's an old saying that a good cook could "make a thistle palatable." That's easy with the artichoke; for a delicacy, it's extremely versatile.

The flavor is subtle, sweet and slightly nutty. It can be boiled, steamed, stuffed, marinated or fried. And however you prepare it, be ready for a taste treat.

Sophisticated? Yes, but down to earth, too. The artichoke is full of vitamins and minerals, and especially high in fiber and low in calories.

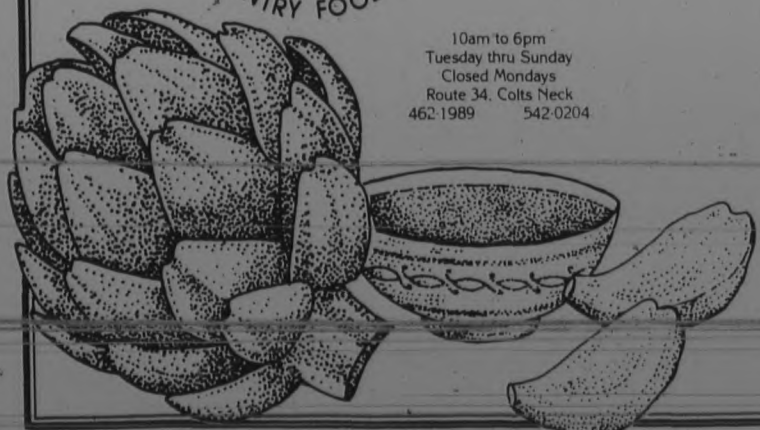

At Delicious Orchards, we now have a choice selection of the finest artichokes, so it's the perfect time to enjoy this succulent delight.

Dating service helps the disabled establish a social life

By MARY MacVEAN

MOUNT LEBANON, Pa. (AP) — Richard Crosby says being blind makes it hard to get dates. He can't drive. He has fewer opportunities to meet women and people often refuse to see beyond his handicap.

So Crosby, 26, joined Specialized Dating, believed to be the first dating service catering to people with physical handicaps.

"I just figured that service addressed the issue, and none of the others did," Crosby said. "I hope it will bring disabled people and able-bodied people together."

Disabled people are often reluctant to date and when they do try, the results can be disappointing, said Al Condeluci, adult program director at the United Cerebral Palsy Center in Pittsburgh.

"A gal on our staff went to one of the dating services and they turned her down," Condeluci said. "They felt she would have had a hard time getting dates because of her disability. The real message is, 'No one's going to want to date you, so we really don't want to serve you.'"

Some people have criticized Specialized Dating for contributing to society's segregation of handicapped people.

"The entire disability movement has been one of integration," Condeluci said. "This goes against that grain."

But he praised the attempt to offer the handicapped a social life, citing a 1980 study in the Pittsburgh area in which physically disabled people said their greatest need is socialization.

"It's not our thing to set people apart," said Karen Staver, who with Cynthia Van Horne established Specialized Dating. "It's our thing to get these people out of their houses and into the bars and restaurants and theaters where you really don't see anybody handicapped."

Staver, who is not disabled, and Van Horne, who has a mild case of cerebral palsy, have been friends since they went to suburban Bethel Park High School.

"You just look around you and you know problems exist," said Van Horne, who gets around with two wooden canes.

"I've run across problems a couple of times," she conceded. "Even me, as well off as I am. And I figured, what about people in wheelchairs, what do they go through?"

"The opportunity to meet people is considerably curtailed when one isn't mobile," said Enny Seabrook, who specializes in sexuality and the disabled for the Family Planning Council in Pittsburgh. "The other issue is the stigma put on physically disabled people as if they were not sexual."

"You take rejection just so many times then you just don't put yourself in that position any more," Staver said.

And women, in particular, face difficulties in the emotionally trying world of dating.

"Some women, especially, who are handicapped and never learned to be real aggressive are still very backward about calling up a man," Staver said.

The big problem, she says, is mobility. Handicapped people have to check out beforehand whether a place is accessible.

While Specialized Dating has received more inquiries from women than men, its membership is 60 percent male.

Specialized Dating was started in January, and more than 200 people joined before the first membership list was distributed on Feb. 28. For $30, a member receives three monthly lists of people of the opposite sex.

Van Horne and Staver prepare short profiles of each member, culled from a questionnaire asking about occupations, interests and expectations of a date. The profile also includes a physical description and the handicap. Members must be at least 21 years of age.

People without physical disabilities are welcome to join, but the women decided they were not prepared to take responsibility for people with mental disabilities.

Neither woman has run a business before. Staver works for a trucking company. Van Horne is a receptionist at the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in Pittsburgh, and hopes to make Specialized Dating a full-time venture.

"There's nothing more ideal for a person with a handicap than establishing your own business," Staver said. "You don't have to worry about being discriminated against."

"And I could hire disabled people to work for me," Van Horne added.

They acknowledge the venture is financially risky, but Van Horne said, "We figured that there was probably a need for this and decided to try it. It turns out there is a need."

Specialized Dating has received some cash donations and several mothers of handicapped people have volunteered to help with paperwork, the women said. In addition, a psychologist has offered free advice if the women are uncertain whether a prospective member has a mental handicap.

Gang members learn how to get off streets

PICO RIVERA, Calif. (AP) — A polka dot miniskirt and oversized black shoes were among the fashions donned by unlikely models — female gang members hoping to leave behind their often jobless street life.

The fashion show attracted about 65 teen-age girls, many of them members of Hispanic gangs, who listened to tips on applying makeup, dressing for interviews and finding information about entry-level work in data processing and hospital service.

"They (Los Angeles County) asked me to put on a softball league and I said no," said Carmen Ybarra, 24, a former gang member who set up the project through the Los Angeles County Youth Gang Services project. "They won't benefit from that. They'll go home and their kids'll still be hungry and they won't have a job."

The seminar was geared to combat the "tough" gang image which often offends employers, Ybarra said.

A public park building in this Los Angeles suburb was decked out with pink paper garlands and balloons. A professional make-up man touched up eyes and lips while girls traded jeans for dresses.

"I'm going to wear a miniskirt?" asked Yvette Hinojos, 17. "I don't know how they talked me into it!" A small audience applauded as she modeled a polka dot dress, parading in the only matching black pumps available — three sizes too large.

The seminar was geared to help the teens improve their image, Ybarra said.

"Some of these girls are proud of being cholas (female Hispanic gang members)," Ybarra said, but added that inside they want to get out of the gang life. "You stick a label on yourself and then you can't change it."

The counselor said she herself has changed her style.

and old friends sometimes don't recognize her in her tailored suits and subdued makeup.

"If I can do it, they can do it," she said.

Deidre Curtis, 17, modeling a gauzy gown, said her drug counselor told her about the seminar.

"Maybe it's a start for me. I don't know," she said. "That's what we're here for — to show that there's more than getting high or whatever."

Participants received a comb and mirror, an emery board, a small sewing kit and a notebook entitled "Live Today and Dream of Tomorrow."

"A lot of the girls told me they started throwing away their drugs," Ybarra said the morning after the seminar. "They said, 'You know what? You're right... I gotta grow up. I gotta get my act together.' If we could reach at least 10 out of 65, it was worth it."

Bucs top Falcons, despite blast

Eric Williams, right, of Monmouth Regional High School gets the glad hand from his Falcon teammates after he unloaded a second-inning, two-run home run against Red Bank Regional yesterday. Williams' blast, which tied the game, cleared the left field fence and the football grandstands beyond the baseball field. The ball carried at least 380 feet on the fly. Red Bank came back to win the Shore Conference "B" Division North game, 9-2. For story, see page C2.

Isles open Stanley quest with three power plays

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — The revitalization of a sputtering power play — punctuated by the opportunism of Bryan Trottier — was the key element last night as the New York Islanders began their quest for a fourth consecutive Stanley Cup with a 5-2 victory over the Washington Capitals.

Trottier scored two of his team's three power play goals to help the Islanders subdue the Capitals, who were making their National Hockey League playoff debut.

"It's funny," said Trottier, who was coming off his worst regular season in six years. "You could control the puck for two minutes on the power play and it doesn't go in and people say there's something wrong with it. But if you keep it in for ten seconds and score, people say you have a great power play."

"You have to watch closely to see whether it's really working. All the other stuff is baloney."

Both of Trottier's power play goals came on rebounds, a perfect example of his opportunism.

"The key to keeping it working is to move the puck and get those opportunities," said Trottier.

Also playing a key role on the power play was Stefan Persson, who had two assists.

"I haven't been too good on the power play this year," said the Swedish defenseman. "But the playoffs are different. We've had the same guys on it for three years and we scored on 40 percent of them in the playoffs. That's why we're winning." The Capitals noticed the same thing. "Special teams play a major part in the Stanley Cups," said goalie Pat Rig-gin. "We've had good success killing penalties this year, but we weren't always up against a Bryan Trottier and a Mike Bossy."

Yanks lose again

SEATTLE (AP) — Todd Cruz hit two home runs in a game for the first time in his major league career, driving in four runs, and left-hander Matt Young pitched seven strong innings to win his major league debut as the Seattle Mariners beat the New York Yankees, 6-2 last night.

The Mariners, who shaded the Yankees 5-4 in Tuesday night's opener, scored three runs in the second inning and chased Yankee starter Bob Shirley with a run in the third. It gave the Mariners a 22-12 record against the Yankees in the Kingdome's seven-year history.

Cruz drilled a two-run homer to cap Seattle's three-run second inning and led off the fourth with another homer off Jay Howell. He singled home the Mariners' final run in the eighth following Pat Putnam's pop-fly double.

Although the Yankees nipped the 24-year-old Young for 10 hits in his seven innings, they failed to score until Dave Winfield hit a two-run homer in the seventh following a single by Roy Smalley. It was Winfield's second home run in as many games.

Seattle got its first run in the second inning on singles by Richie Zisk and Dave Henderson and a fielding error by New York center fielder Jerry Mumphrey on Henderson's hit. Cruz hit his first home run out later.

The Mariners made it 4-0 in the third inning on a double by Manny Castillo and a single by Zisk that knocked out Shirley.

Relievers Ed VandeBerg and Mike Stanton completed the game for the Mariners, with Stanton striking out pinch hitter Oscar Gamble and Willie Randolph to end the eighth with two runners on base. The Yankees wound up with 13 hits but left 12 men on base.

Masters special to tour golfers

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Jack Nicklaus still remembers the first time he rode down Magnolia Lane at Augusta National.

And, nothing has changed since. "I had butterflies in my stomach," Nicklaus said yesterday on the eve of the 47th Masters golf tournament.

"Twenty-five years later I still get that same feeling."

"This place always has been special."

Nicklaus, the only five-time champion in Masters history, was in the international field of 82 that began the chase today for the first major championship of the golfing season.

With no clear-cut favorite emerging from this year's first 13 events, Nicklaus was given as good a chance as any.

"I sort of feel like I'm going to play fairly well," he said. "I never seem to know. At least I'm not coming in saying I'm playing terrible."

"I feel like I've made the preparation and my game is good enough to reasonably expect to play well."

The first round over the rolling hills of the 6,905-yard, par 72 Augusta National layout was set for a 9 a.m. EST start under a threat of rainy weather.

The forecast called for a 40 percent chance of showers and thundershowers. Hord W. Hardin, tournament chairman, said if today's round were washed out, an attempt would be made to play 36 holes tomorrow.

BESIDES HIS five titles, the 43-year-old Nicklaus has a dozen other top ten finishes in his previous 24 Masters appearances.

The list of potential winners is a long one that also includes Tom Watson, a two-time champion who has not been playing well, and defending champion Craig Stadler, who says he has regained his confidence after discovering a flaw in his putting grip at the Greater Greensboro Open last week.

"I like my chances," Stadler said yesterday. "There's something about it (Augusta National) that makes me concentrate."

Johnny Miller, who has a trio of second place finishes in this event, is playing well, having captured the Honda-Inverrary Classic last month.

Ben Crenshaw who has won $58,000 this season to surpass the $54,000 he earned for 1982, is looking for his first victory in three years.

Lanny Wadkins, another of the long hitters the Augusta layout seems to favor, won at Greensboro last week. There's also Gil Morgan, the only two-time winner on the tour this season.

Tom Kite is still seeking his first major title, but he historically does well in the Masters, putting together seven finishes in the top ten in the last eight years.

Raymond Floyd, who captured the 1976 Masters by dominating the par five holes, is another threat along with Hal Sutton, winner of the Tournament Players Championship two weeks ago.

The only two foreign champions are back again, but neither South African Gary Player nor Spain's Seve Ballesteros has been mentioned among the top contenders.

Player, who has won three times, has just recently resumed play after being sidelined for 34 days with an ailing back.

Greg Norman of Australia and Tommy Nakajima, leading money winner in Japan a year ago, are considered the top threats from the foreign contingent.

The sentimental favorites would have to be Arnold Palmer and Sam Snead.

Nets blast Pacers

EAST RUTHERFORD (AP) — Center Darryl Dawkins scored a season-high 25 points to lead the New Jersey Nets to a 121-110 National Basketball Association victory over the Indiana Pacers last night.

Dawkins, who converted 11 of 16 field goals, had six dunks. His previous high this season was 24 points against Kansas City Nov. 30.

Buck Williams scored 19 points and had nine rebounds, while Albert King had 17 points and 11 assists as New Jersey broke a two-game losing streak to boost its record to 47-29.

Rookie forward Clark Kellogg had 30 points and 18 rebounds to lead the Pacers, who dropped their fourth straight and fell to 19-57.

The Pacers took a 61-53 lead on Kellogg's basket at the start of the third quarter. But the Nets scored seven straight points to ignite a 21-8 spurt that propelled them to a 74-69 lead. Dawkins had seven points and King six in the burst.

The Pacers scored the next six points, but Darwin Cook scored six points and backup center Mike Gminski four in a 10-4 tear as New Jersey took an 84-79 lead into the fourth quarter.

The Nets put the game out of reach early in the fourth, going ahead 99-89 with an 11-4 burst triggered by Michael Ray Richardson's eight points. Richardson had 12 of his 16 points in the final period and finished with six steals.

Cook had 13 of his 17 points in the second half.

Billy Knight scored 20 points and center Herb Williams added 19 for Indiana.

TINTON FALLS — Red Bank Regional's Nick Pizzulli, who coached the Buc basketball team to a 31-0 record, is starting the baseball season the same way as head baseball coach.

Red Bank opened its season by defeating Monmouth Regional, 9-2, in Shore Conference "B" Division North action yesterday.

The Bucs scored in the first when Jim Long singled and Mike Mazzacco slammed a long home run over the left field fence. The ball landed about 380 feet away on the track which surrounds the football field.

Dowling hurls no-hitter for Ocean

HOLMDEL — Kathy Dowling hurred a no-hitter yesterday as Ocean Township High School dumped St. John Vianney, 9-0, in girls Shore Conference "B" North softball action.

Dowling, a junior righthander, struck out six and walked eight.

"She looked good today," Spartan coach Art Wankmuller said. "She had a few too many walks, but she was tough when she had to be. And the kids didn't make any errors."

No errors, and one sparkling defensive play. That came in the bottom of the sixth inning when Lancer Judy Campion led off with what seemed to be a solid hit to right. But Toni Sharp charged the ball and threw to sister Casey as first to nip Campion and preserve the no-hitter.

R.B. Catholic 20, Long Branch 2

RED BANK — Jenny Heilig had a field day at the expense of Long Branch pitchers yesterday as she knocked in nine runs with a homer, triple and single in leading Red Bank Catholic to the rout.

Heilig had a two-run single in the first inning when RBC got four runs and she keyed a 14-run second inning with a grand slam homer and a bases-loaded triple.

Winning pitcher Diane Sheehan allowed two hits, fanned three and walked three.

Rumson-F.H. Reg. 9, Shore Reg. 7

WEST LONG BRANCH — Mary Karlo's two-run triple highlighted a four run Rumson uprising in the fourth inning that carried the Bulldogs over Shore Regional.

Jill Morgan went 3-4 at the plate as Rumson upped its record to 2-0 overall and 1-0 in the conference. Mary Jane Darby notched her second win.

Laura Jelley was the loser for the Blue Devils (1-1, 0-1).

Freehold 26, Asbury Park 3

ASBURY PARK — Mary Jo Czekaj belted a double, triple and home run and knocked in six runs to power Freehold.

Iverson picked up the win, while Sherri Ramsey took the loss.

Hawks turn back Kean by 8-5

WEST LONG BRANCH — Monmouth College, helped by five Kean errors, score an 8-5 baseball victory yesterday.

Monmouth went up 3-1 in the second inning, but Kean came back and tied it in the third. The Hawks went up for good with a run in the fourth when Chris Rogers walked, stole second, took third when the Kean catcher threw the ball into centerfield and scored on Dan Borgo's single.

Kean's Mike Murray opened the sixth inning with a solo home run.

Long Branch smothers top contender Facons

TINTON FALLS — Long Branch High School's boys track team, winners of three straight Shore Conference "B" North championships, went a long way to making it four in a row yesterday by smothering one of its top "B" North rivals, Monmouth Regional, 86-45, yesterday. The victory also was the 100th dual meet triumph for head coach Jim McCaskill.

BOYS TRACK

The Branchers used a balanced effort by winning 11 of 14 events to win it and McCaskill was happy afterwards. "I was a little nervous before the meet because we have a lot of young kids and Monmouth is tough," Mc-

Caskill said. "But the kids ran well. Ray LeBron winning the discus was a nice surprise and Franklin James ran a nice race in the 100 meters."

James was the Branchers' top performer winning the 100 (11.2), 400 (52.0) and the long jump (21-7).

McCaskill also singled out the Dean-Neil brothers, Anthony, Mark and Andrew. "Anthony winning the intermediate hurdles was important," McCaskill said. "He beat (Tim) McGee who had won it last year."

Anthony won in 57.1 while brother Mark took first in the 800 (2:04.6).

"The team is well-balanced this year," McCaskill said. "And we have a lot of juniors."

Monmouth got a good effort from Darren Kelley who won the 200 in 23.3 and was second in the 100. Steve Mahns won the high jump at 5-10 and Lance Golden won the shot (41-4 1/2) for other Monmouth first places.

In other "B" North meets Red Bank Catholic trimmed Red Bank Regional, 83-47 and Rumson-Fair Haven belted Shore, 95-35, with Ken Hidu tripling in the 1,600, 3,200 and the javelin.

Neptune rolled to a surprisingly easy 75-56 "A"

North triumph over Manalapan with Dave Hightower's 14.9 clocking the top effort. Erik Bernstein's 204-E was the highlight of Middletown South's 74-57 win over Marlboro while Matawan routed Raritan 91-40, with Buddy Scott (1,600), Ed H. Hendricks (1,600), and Derek Wiley (high hurdles and long jump) doubling for the winners.

Asbury Park Park opened up defense of its "B" South championship by routing Central, 86-46, with freshman Noel Robinson tripling in the 110 hurdles (16.2), high jump (5-10) and javelin (143-10).

Freehold defeated Howell, 85-45, in another "B" South meet with Bryan Groh tripling in the hurdles and javelin.

Ed Harris won the sprints and 400, and Bill Setick won the hurdles and high jump to lead Holmdel to a 78-53 "C" Division win over Lacey while Mater Dei beat Pinelands, 70-2-60-1/2 with Wayne Grover winning the 110 hurdles, high jump and long jump.

Sandy Hook stands out in birder's view

By WILLIAM F. SANDFORD

Variety of habitat makes for variety of wildlife. That's why Sandy Hook, with its ocean and river fronts and diverse vegetation, is the most productive bird-finding site, acre for acre, in Monmouth County.

OUTDOOR WORLD

On Monday of last week, 10 birders based at the Hook did their annual early-spring bird count and found 70 species on the peninsula and its adjacent waters.

That, despite some inclement weather, was above average for the count. Although the variety was there, numbers weren't. Mike Fahay, the fisheries biologist who compiles the count, reports. Many of the species were represented by single birds, a lot of the others by just a few, he says.

One exception to that was the large flock of 300 to 400 cedar waxwings that has been seen there all winter.

The report echoes what birders in other areas of the county and the state have been saying since last fall: there has been a general scarcity of birds.

Like most of the so-called Big Day bird counts of May, the Sandy Hook project is in fact only a species count. Numbers are not recorded. As always — come what may weather-wise — the hunt was conducted on the first Monday after March 25.

The weather was mostly unsettled, clear to partly cloudy and calm in the early morning and thus fine for scanning bay and ocean for a little while, but then raining, off and on, through the rest of the day.

Two species, both of which we might expect to find in Hook waters but which had eluded the observers in previous counts, were added to the aggregate list this year: common loon and gannet.

More interesting are a couple of early migrants that had been recorded on this count just once before — great egret and glossy ibis. Other species tallied this year for the only second time included black scoter, greater yellowlegs, rusty blackbird and swamp sparrow.

There's one more species on that relative-rarities list that may surprise inland birders. The blue jay on this year's list had been found on only one previous count.

At the other end of the scale I find 24 "regulars," species that have been recorded in all 10 of the count years. They are: horned grebe, brant, mallard, black duck, greater scaup, bufflehead, northern harrier (marsh hawk), kestrel, killdeer, great black-backed and herring gulls, rock and mourning doves, flicker, fish and common crow, robin, starling, common grackle, red-winged blackbird, cowbird, house finch, junco and song sparrow.

and one each of sharp-shinned, red-tailed and red-shouldered hawks. The turkey vulture was missed, although the hawkwatch had spotted a black vulture, a much more rare species locally, on March 21.

The annual scores range from a low of 42 species, in 1976, to a high of 76 in 1980. The aggregate list for the 10-year project now stands at 117 species.

THE FIGURES ARE now in and they show that March was — as if we didn't know it — wet and, despite the chilly ending that came on just as spring came in, abnormally warm.

Weather observer Paul Croft recorded the month's average temperature at his Fair Haven station at 43.4 degrees, which is 3.4 degrees warmer than normal. We hit a high of 68 on the 15th and a low of 26 on the 28th.

March precipitation of 8.76 inches was about two inches less than New York City's, which set an all-time record there, but was about twice the month's normal, 4.39 inches, and made it the third wettest March in the local records.

Last month was the fifth consecutive month of above-normal temperatures. Its 660 degree days were 122 less than the month's norm. Degree days for the season as of month's end totaled 4,042. That's 468 below normal for the period, which means we should have saved 10.37 percent in heating fuel consumption thus far.

Seven species have been almost as dependable, showing themselves for all but one of the counts. They are: common goldeneye, oldsquaw, woodcock, mockingbird, myrtle warbler, house sparrow and meadowlark.

One of this year's "misses" was the osprey, a bird that nests on the peninsula and has returned from the South in time to make the count in seven of its years. We now learn that the ospreys, which had been reported from three other areas of the county previously, had returned to Sandy Hook as of last weekend.

Biologists conducting an ongoing "hawkwatch" on the federal park property were among this year's observers, but the count day was not a good one for a raptor flight, Mr. Fahay notes. Still, seven species of hawks were found, including three merlins (they had wintered there) and three Cooper's hawks.

There were two harriers, many kestrels,

Mediators push efforts to resolve transit dispute

NEWARK (AP) — State mediators met with officials of NJ Transit yesterday as they continued efforts to resolve a labor dispute between the state-run agency and a dissident union faction.

A spokesman for NJ Transit said Deputy Executive Director Martin Robbins met with mediator John Tesaro and was also to meet with mediator Charles Serrano.

The spokesman, Jim Weinstein, said he did not know whether the mediators also met with representatives of the Conrail East division of the United Transportation Union, whose members on Tuesday rejected a contract settlement that ended a 34-day strike by another union division.

"I think the mediators are trying to get a sense of where both parties are, and whether there's room for any give," said Weinstein.

Serrano said earlier in the week that he would hold separate meetings with both sides before calling them together for face-to-face bargaining.

Neither mediator could be reached for comment Wednesday. The supervisor of the state mediation board office here, Georgette Nappi, said she did not know where the meetings were taking place.

UTU Conrail East general chairman Charles P. Jones has threatened to call the 150 NJ Transit conductors and trainmen he represents out on strike if negotiations fail to produce an acceptable contract. He has set no deadline.

Jones' membership voted to reject a 30-month contract accepted Saturday by the UTU's Conrail North division, which represents 475 NJ Transit conductors and trainmen.

That acceptance ended a strike that began March 1 when Conrail North workers walked off their jobs in a dispute over pay and working hours. The state's nine commuter rail lines, serving 70,000 daily commuters, resumed operation Monday.

The contract, retroactive to Jan. 1, calls for a nearly 17 percent pay increase through June 30, 1985. But changes in work rules and other factors will reduce workers' average annual salaries by about $5,000 from what they earned before NJ Transit took over the lines from Conrail Jan. 1.

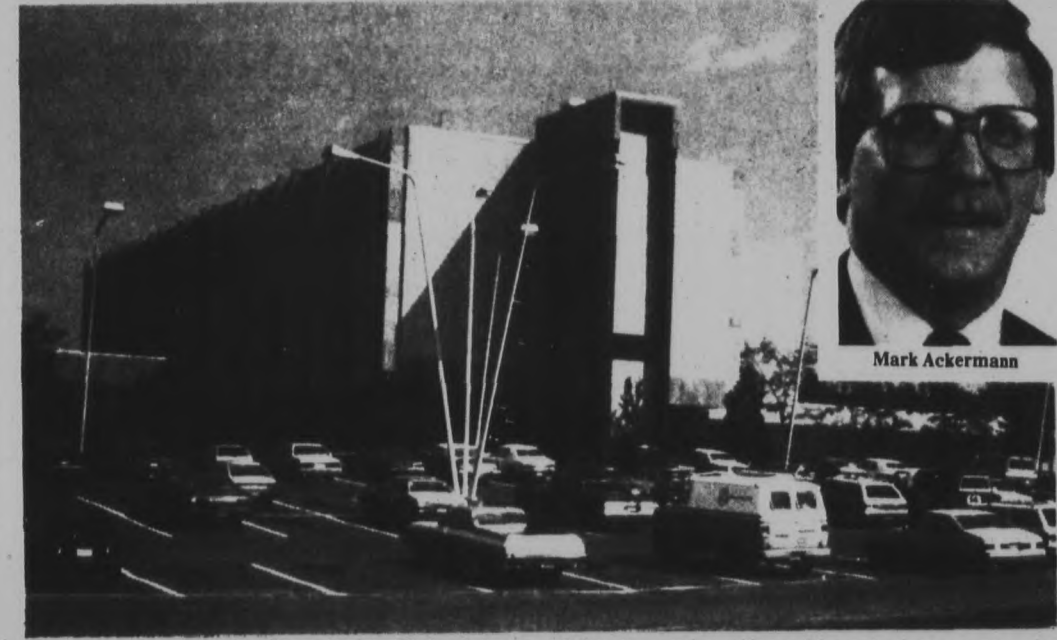

Conductors' average salaries under the contract will fall from $36,000 to $31,000, while trainmen's annual wages will drop from $34,000 to $28,000.

Bayshore Community Hospital in Holmdel, one of five in county affected by reimbursement plan

Area hospitals to fight plan to cut U.S., N.J. payments

By RAY GERMANN

The New Jersey Hospitals Association plans to take "legal steps" to prevent state and federal agencies from disallowing reimbursements to hospitals for mobile intensive care units, association spokesman Joseph Slavin said yesterday.

Local hospital officials said the current funding shortage jeopardizes the implementation of such units currently planned in all five Monmouth County hospitals.

Mark Ackermann, community relations director of Bayshore Community Hospital, Holmdel, said the mobile units are staffed by paramedics and nurses who can administer drugs on the scene, and who are in constant radio communication with doctors at the base hospital. He said their function is to stabilize an emergency patient on the scene.

"The unit handles trauma situations, and has saved a lot of lives in hospitals where it is now used I am sure," he said.

Patients are then transported to the hospital by local first aid squads.

No Monmouth County hospitals currently use the MICUs, he said. "And only Community Memorial Hospital (Lakehurst) in Ocean County has them now."

Joan Wills, administrative coordinator of ambulatory care units at Monmouth Medical Center, Long Branch said the situation is causing "a significant problem" in the center's planning of MICU units there.

She said the center has already invested $4,550 in a trainee program for MICUs, "and hospitals all over the state have made large investments in training and equipment."

Red Bank's Riverview Hospital is paying for the education of 7 MICU trainees at Ocean County Community College, according to Charles Oliver, director of community relations.

There are 39 MICUs statewide, with another 19 in the planning stage. Slavin said the units respond to approximately 35,000 calls each year.

James Janeski, executive director of Monmouth-Ocean Hospital Shared Services Association, said, "the effect on the whole community will be a real loss of service. It has been documented that this program saves lives, and that is a worthwhile endeavor."

Federal Medicare officials announced last month that the program — which costs $13.2 million a year — will no longer provide reimbursement for the service, Slavin said.

Officials ruled that the units do not qualify for either inpatient or outpatient service.

According to Janeski, the state Rate Setting Commission last week mandated that hospitals can no longer receive reimbursements from "third party payers" (such as Medicare, Medicaid, Blue Cross Blue Shield and other insurance companies) for MICU service.

The commission ruled it would be unfair for non-Medicare patients to pay for the service because Medicare will no longer reimburse hospitals for the units.

"We just want to put a hold on this whole thing until we can discuss a solution with the involved parties," Slavin said. He said the association plans meet with the federal Health Care Financing Agency in Washington D.C. next week.

Slavin would not comment on what specific legal action was planned to prevent the funding cut. "Our lawyers have assembled the necessary paperwork, and a suit will be filed Friday or Monday."

He said "the picture is still unclear, but it appears as if the hospitals are going to have to pay for the service. In that case I'm afraid a lot of them just won't be able to afford it."

Wills said, "I'm sure the program will continue in one way or another, but we may not be able to have it here (Monmouth Medical Center). There is a serious funding problem."

Janeski said other states pay for the units on a reimbursement for services basis. He said when payment is channeled through a fee for each service supplied by the units, rather than for the units themselves, the actual amount paid tends to be greater.

"A lot of people seem to think that they are saving money by eliminating reimbursements for the units," he said. "In fact some states pay more for what we are already getting."

On the local level, Janeski said the shared services association will "take legal and political action to have the reimbursements reinstated" if it becomes necessary.

in production from old wells, the energy secretary said.

"The conclusion is straight-forward," Hodel said. "We need to produce as much (old) low-cost gas as possible in order to bring to the American consumer the price benefit from these supplies."

"Additional supplies of low-cost gas will be available only if there are adequate incentives to produce it," he said. "Decontrol provides that incentive."

Hodel testified that the administration's projected savings to consumers under gas decontrol were based on petroleum prices of between $31 and $33 a barrel.

He added, however, that the savings could rise higher if gas producers are forced to compete against oil selling for $25 a barrel — the level forecast by both Hodel and C.M. Butler III, chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Administration: Natural gas price savings

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel said yesterday that the administration proposal to decontrol natural gas prices could save money for consumers through 1990 and beyond.

He told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee that this prospect has been raised by new gas reserve estimates provided by the industry.

Hodel told the panel last month that gas prices under the Reagan plan initially would be 20 cents to 40 cents cheaper per 1,000 cubic feet than under the control act the administration wants to repeal.

In that testimony, he said he expected the price difference to disappear within a year or two of enactment of the Reagan plan, which would let free market forces establish prices.

A key to Hodel's estimate is the ending of price controls on so-called old gas discovered before April 1977. Hodel maintains that, freed of restraints, old gas wells would be more active and would help lower prices for all gas.

Yesterday, he said industry studies received since last month estimate that the United States has reserves of old gas ranging from 2½ trillion cubic feet to 11 trillion cubic feet.

Hodel said a reserve of 5 trillion cubic feet would keep prices lower than under current law until 1990. Reserves twice that size would maintain the price difference through 1995, he added.

"Decontrol of old gas will maximize the production of lower cost gas over the short and long terms," he testified.

"Our analysis of natural gas markets and of the effects of our proposed natural gas legislation indicates that we can expect results for natural gas prices similar to those that occurred for (decontrolled) oil prices," Hodel said.

Following the oil decontrol process in 1980 and 1981, there was a sharp jump

Casino union chief, 2 others indicted for embezzlement

NEWARK (AP) — The president of the largest Atlantic City casino union was indicted with two other men on a federal conspiracy charge of embezzling nearly $31,000 from the union, U.S. Attorney W. Hunt Dumont announced here Wednesday.

Frank Gerace, 43, of Margate was charged with conspiring in 1979 with two officials of a Cumberland County construction company to embezzle $30,817 from the building fund of Local 54 of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union, Dumont said.

"The union membership has a right to have officials who are not stealing from the union," Dumont said. He added that the investigation began in February 1981 and was continuing.

"It comes as a total shock to me," said attorney Bernard Katz, the lawyer for Local 54.

"As far as I'm personally concerned, as counsel for the union, it's wholly unrepresentable. It's simply not Frank Gerace. Gerace is not the type of person who does that sort of thing," Katz said.

A federal grand jury in Camden handed up the indictment which charged Gerace with embezzlement and conspiracy.

Gerace, who was elected president of Local 54 in 1978, could be sentenced to a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison, a $20,000 fine and disqualification from holding union office for five years if convicted, Dumont said.

Robert LoCicero, 39, of Landisville and Donald Martinelli, 38, of Margate were each charged with conspiracy, embezzlement and perjury, Dumont said. Toro Construction Co.

of Landisville was indicted on charges of conspiracy and embezzlement.

LoCicero, the president of Toro, and Martinelli, the vice president, each faces a maximum sentence of 15 years in prison and a $30,000 fine and the company faces a $10,000 fine if convicted, Dumont said.

Gerace has an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached for comment. His attorney, Ronald Kidd of Philadelphia, was out of the country, said a secretary of his law firm.

A receptionist at Toro said that there would be no comment.

Dumont alleged that the embezzlement was accomplished by inflating the cost of the renovation of Local 54's new union hall on North Texas Avenue in Atlantic City.

Gerace allegedly authorized payment of $175,000 out of the union's building fund to Toro, but that the construction work, which began in March 1979, actually cost $144,000, Dumont said.

Dumont said that the money was distributed among the three defendants and an unindicted co-conspirator, former union secretary-treasurer Robert Lumio, who died in June 1981.

The indictment also charged that as part of the conspiracy Toro employees performed work worth about $17,400 at Gerace's and Lumio's homes during the summer of 1979.

Gerace had about $2,400 worth of renovations done to his home, described by authorities as a luxurious colonial brick house, Dumont said.

Lumio had about $15,000 worth of renovations done to his apartment on North George Avenue in Atlantic City, Dumont said.

FRANK GERACE

The perjury charge against LoCicero is in connection with his testimony to the grand jury about his efforts to collect $15,000 from Lumio for the work Toro performed at Lumio's apartment, Dumont said.

Martinelli was charged with perjury for denying to the grand jury about the preparations on construction change orders, which were allegedly used to inflate the cost of the work on the union hall, Dumont said.

Local 54, which represents about 10,000 casino hotel employees, has been the subject of intensive scrutiny by the New Jersey Casino Control Commission and Congress.

The union, which represented workers in Atlantic City before the nine casinos opened, has been fighting to be licensed to represent the workers.

But the state Division of Gaming Enforcement claims reputed underworld boss Nicodemus "Little Nicky" Scarfo holds an influence over Gerace. The commission in September ordered the ouster of Gerace from the powerful labor union in return for the license.

No-frills housing on the increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Houses built in the United States last year were smaller and plainer than those constructed in 1981, continuing a three-year trend toward "no-frills" housing, a government report indicated yesterday.

Last year's new houses had fewer total square feet, fewer bathrooms and bedrooms, fewer basements and garages.

In addition, buyers of new homes were more likely to do without fireplaces. But they also were more likely to demand air conditioning, the only amenity that has consistently gone against the trend toward cutbacks in recent years.

The report from the Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development said the 631,000 new homes built last year — a recessionary figure well below the 819,000 of 1981 — averaged 1,710 square feet in size. That was down from 1,720 in 1981, 1,740 in 1980 and 1,760 in 1979.

Spokesmen for builders have said house sizes and amenities could increase again with the national economy recovering, home loan rates falling and house sales rising rapidly.

But they also say sociological factors — the shrinking size of the average family, for example — may well mean the long-term trend will still be toward relatively small houses.

On the other hand, the report said the trend in multi-family buildings — 374,000 units in apartments and condominiums last year — was in just the opposite direction.

The size of such units rose to an average of 990 square feet from 980 in 1981, the fourth yearly increase in a row, it said. In comparison with 1981, proportionately more units had air conditioning and two bathrooms or more, but fewer had two bedrooms or more.

About 39 percent of the multi-family units were for sale rather than for rent, an increase from the 37 percent of 1981 and another continuation of a trend of several years, the report said.

Details of the report on single-family houses indicated these changes in the past year and since 1978:

—66 percent had air conditioning in 1982 compared with 65 percent in 1981 and 58 percent in 1978.

—78 percent had one and one-half bathrooms or more, down from 80 percent in 1981 and 84 percent in 1978.

—76 percent had three bedrooms or more, down from 80 percent in 1981 and 88 percent in 1978.

—54 percent had fireplaces, down from 55 percent in 1981 and 64 percent in 1978.

—31 percent had full or partial basements, down from 31 percent and 42 percent.

—27 percent had no garage, up from 25 percent in 1981 and 18 percent in 1978.

In addition, the report said, 40 percent of the new houses relied on gas heat, down from 41 percent in 1981 but up from 37 percent in 1978. Electric heat stayed at 50 percent, down from 52 percent in 1978. Oil heat, at 3 percent, was up from 2 percent in 1981 but well down from 8 percent in 1978.

In exterior wall materials, brick was the principal covering for 32 percent of the houses, up from 29 percent in 1981 and 30 percent in 1978. Wood or wood products stayed steady at 44 percent, up from 40 percent in 1978.

Report 30 million Americans live in poverty

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Americans living in poverty topped 30 million in 1981, the highest level in 15 years, the Census Bureau reported yesterday.

The recession and rising consumer prices were blamed by the bureau for the addition of 2.2 million people to the poverty rolls that year. That growth brought to 31.8 million the number of poor Americans, the report said.

The largest number of Americans below the poverty level was 33 million in 1965. Poverty last topped 30 million in 1966, when 30.4 million were listed as poor.

The government sets the poverty level according to size of family. It is adjusted annually for inflation. For 1981 it was set at $9,287 for a family of four.

The new figures were included in a study titled "Characteristics of the Population Below the Poverty Level: 1981." It is a more detailed version of a report issued last summer. Other findings included:

—There were 21.1 million whites below the poverty level, up from 19.7 million the year before.

—Black poverty rose from 8.6 million to 9.1 million. For Hispanics, the 3.7 million below the poverty level represented nearly the same level as in 1980.

—About half of all families below the poverty level were maintained by a woman with no husband present.

Consumer Advocate aims at mail

By SYLVIA PORTER

INCENTIVE: You're so completely irritated with the mail service you're getting — and the costs of "overnight couriers" offered as alternatives — that you'll do almost anything to improve the situation.

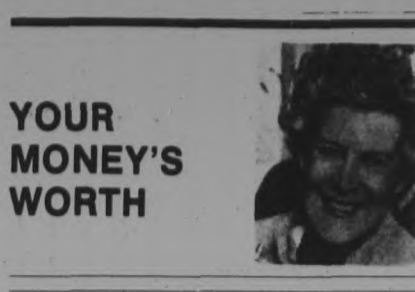

YOUR HOPE: The Consumer Advocate will respond to your complaint, try to eliminate the causes of your repeated problems. That is his job and the function of his staff. When complaints about "unsticky" stamps became overwhelming, for instance, the Consumer Advocate's office did persuade the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to use pre-gummed paper when printing stamps.

ANOTHER STEP: Ask your letter carrier or local postmaster for a four-part complaint form that you can complete and mail, postage free. Someone should contact you soon thereafter and help you work out the problem. Meanwhile, your complaint will be computerized and analyzed.

About 30,000 people write to the Consumer Advocate each year; another half-million to one million complain via the form system. As of today, gripes about late-arriving Express Mail are soaring.

This past winter, I was dependent on delivery of first-class mail more than ever before — and I'm convinced first-class mail takes the slowest, most convoluted route possible between points. The Postal Service defines three subgroups:

Overnight delivery, which is basically for mail with a given city, state or locally designated area; second-day delivery for mail traveling 600 miles or less, and three-day delivery for mail going beyond 600 miles.

When gathering facts for this report, I learned for the first time that three-day delivery was "standard" for my first-class mail. Defined that way, the Postal Service says performance standards for the three groups, which are measured quarterly, are 90 percent or better.

But what if you can't wait three days for your mail? Overnight "letter" services are offered by several companies; the U.S. Post Office has its own Express Mail; United Parcel Service (UPS) offers faster nationwide service than Parcel Post can dream of. Here are the highlights for overnight letters only:

1) Express Mail handles packages weighing up to 70 pounds. A parcel weighing up to two pounds costs $9.35; sent to the recipient's post office for pick up, the two-pound piece costs $5.85. If you mail your package in a specially marked Express Mail carton, correct postage affixed, and before the deadline emblazoned on the box, you are promised next-day delivery, seven days a week.

2) Priority Mail is a Postal Service first-class service for packages that weigh more than 12 ounces. Delivery is in two to three days, rarely four. Cost depends on a formula, but will still be less than Express Mail.

3) Federal Express offers the Overnight Letter, which holds up to 10 pages and weighs up to two ounces. Cost: $12.50. The Courier-Pak costs $23.50 for up to two pounds. Delivery by 10:30 a.m., guaranteed for most destinations; for others, by noon. Saturday delivery costs an extra $10. Insured up to $100.

4) Emery Worldwide sends a letter up to four ounces overnight for $11; up to two pounds, for $22; Saturdays, add $15. Insured up to $10 per pound.

5) Purolator Courier stocks an overnight letter container (the Puroletter) that holds up to two ounces for $8.75. Up to $10 insurance. Delivery by noon.

6) Airborne sends an overnight letter up to five ounces for $19; cuts costs to $10 each for two or more shipments per day. Delivery before noon.

This is merely a sampling. But it stresses the expenses we have been forced to accept by the post office's performance.

Friday, the massive post office at 34th Street and Eighth Avenue, New York City, mailed a packet to me at my office a few blocks uptown. It arrived the following Wednesday — late. First class! What an ill-timed delay!

A — In the current interest rate environment, common stocks offer an attractive alternative to money market funds for a goal of high current income, enhanced by the promise of dividend growth in years ahead to keep pace with inflation. Although high yielding stocks are usually unexciting as market performers, they appeal as interest rate-sensitive issues for potential appreciation in the period immediately ahead, if interest rates decline further. # Two Rivers Opera stages musical saga of the sea

WEST LONG BRANCH — The turbulent ocean, driven by a keening wind, pounds against the beach. The wailing cry of gulls sounds above the voices of the fishermen who peer anxiously at the breakers and sullen sky.

This is a stormy day at the Jersey shore. This is the music of "Peter Grimes." The stirring English opera, which will be presented by the Two Rivers Opera as part of the Monmouth College: In Concert series on April 15 and 16, is the story of people whose destinies are shaped by the sea. Curtain is 8:30 p.m. both days in Pollak Auditorium.

"Peter Grimes," who will be portrayed by Stephen Oosting, is not the usual operatic romantic hero. Oosting, who studied the part under the guidance of Peter Pears, the famous British opera singer for whom the role was originally written, considers it one of opera's most exciting tenor roles.

"Grimes is a starkly realistic character," he explains, "with human faults and failures. This part gives the tenor a chance to do something besides swoon with love for the heroine. He even gets to sing a mad scene — something usually reserved for sopranos."

But composer Benjamin Britten's intensely melodic music isn't all somber. There's comedy as well, and plenty of lighter moments in the coastal fishing village where the action takes place.

"Jersey Shore audiences will relate to the people in this story," Oosting believes. "There's even a particularly tuneful chorus number about beach erosion, and the problems and hardships of earning a living from the sea."

The Pollak Auditorium at Monmouth College is, in his opinion, exactly the sort of theater that Britten had in mind for "Peter Grimes."

"He wrote it," explains Oosting, "for the immediacy of a smaller opera house, to intensify the drama for the audiences."

Drama is an integral part of Oosting's repertoire. His solo recording of "Oedipus Rex" will be released here and in Europe, and he was soloist with the New York Philharmonic on an RCA recording of Beethoven's "Choral Fantasy." As a Britten specialist, he considers "Peter Grimes" some of the composer's finest music. "It's full of beautiful harmonies and earthy, folk-style melodies, which audiences remember. But above all, it reflects the sound and feeling of the sea. In this work," he explains, "the sea is a constant presence — battering the shore, and the lives of the people who live beside it."

Among these people is Grimes' beloved, Ellen, sung by soprano Janine Faller. A graduate of Ohio's Baldwin Wallace College, with a master's degree from the Eastman School of Music, she is a prize winner of the National Federation of Music Clubs. In the part of Grimes' fiancée, she represents the hope of stability in the fisherman's stormy life.

But not all the townspeople are as faithful and virtuous. Kate Nesbitt of Brooklyn sings the earthy role of Auntie, the outwardly respectable innkeeper. Her two "nieces," whose nocturnal activities supplement her income, are played by Madeline Celeberti of East Brunswick and Janice Weitzel of Toms River.

Michael Liskiewicz of Hazlet, in a dual role, portrays the apothecary who provides addictive sleeping potions to the spiteful, meddlesome widow, sung by Patsy Kregar of New Brunswick. Grimes' arch enemy, the lawyer Swallow, is sung by J.M. Giglio of Somerset. Peter Goldsmith of Freehold portrays the hypocritical preacher, who drinks secretly and pinches the naughty "nieces" when no one is looking.

Liskiewicz also appears as Captain Balstrode, Grimes' mentor, whose sudden about-face leads to tragedy.

William Lundy of Red Bank sings the part of the rector, who cannot decide if murder was committed, and Sgt. I.C. Will Rogers of Eatontown is the town constable, who shares his perplexity.

The show is produced by Peter Goldsmith. Norman Hart of Bradley Beach is the conductor and musical and stage director.

OPERA DRAMA — Michael Liskiewicz of Hazlet rehearses the fainting scene from Benjamin Britten's opera "Peter Grimes" with Patsy Kregar of New Brunswick. The opera is being staged by Two Rivers Opera April 15 and 16 in Pollak Auditorium at Monmouth College, West Long Branch.

Sets and lighting design are by Neil Prince of the Monmouth College theater staff, and Thea Weaver of Eatontown is the costume supervisor.

Tickets may be obtained through the college or by contacting the Monmouth Arts Center, Red Bank.

'Can't Take It With You' succeeds again

By JACK O'BRIAN

NEW YORK — If there ever was a case of popular demand it's the revival of "You Can't Take It With You" at the Plymouth Theater. It's had a flock of revivals since it opened in 1936 when it ran 837 times and closed with a Pulitzer Prize in its gently iconoclastic pocket. George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart knew they'd written a hit but never dreamed they'd fashioned so durable a classic comedy as now redecorates Bdw. with its lunatic decency and romanticism plus a happy ending.

elder iconoclast of this hilariously fabricated family; certainly it's a fabricated play: Kaufman & Hart sat down and fabricated it, to our lasting laughter. In an unspectacular role, Robards seems the only stage actor extant with the rich, steady, deep, satisfying impact of our longplay stage-screen hero Spencer Tracy. His timing is delicious, his personality quietly, solidly charming and persuasive.

James Coco has a smaller part than his earned stardom elsewhere suggests but he triumphs here in a masterful team-playing.

VOICE OF BROADWAY

That makes "You Can't Take It With You" old-fashioned. But George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart hardly were pruders — ask Mary Astor about George S. and anybody about Moss Hart; their warm, sentimental impudence was promptly honored by their 1937 Pulitzer and now historically by the comedy's cheerful durability in the constant frequency of its revivals all over the American and English-speaking stages. Old-fashioned indeed; there's not a sordid situation in its three (old-fashioned) acts; it's not the product of contemporary switchblade dramaturgy nor the dreary truncated vocabularies of instant-playwrights who toil not over language nor spin beauty, comedy and witty fun.

The durability of "You Can't Take It With You" may just be its very decency. Situations alter cases and certainly everything larrupped lightly in this Kaufman-Hart hilarity has changed in assorted degree: politics over 47 years has adjusted, downward; bureaucratic chaos remains valid as a comic target; tax evasion is a popular civic sin no less deplorable because the national sport no longer is baseball, football, basketball, hockey nor soccer but tax evasion. There's an ever-normal popular risibility in wise, humorous if now gentler jokes about avoiding tax collectors, and taxes themselves. The audience howled at Gandpa Sycamore's sturdy innocence refusing to pay taxes for 35 years out of simple naivete that he doesn't appreciate what's done with them.

The upended logic of comic tax-shrugging strikes happy audiences at the Plymouth as merely justified abstinence. Deep-studied analyses of the semi-circular logic in the play's jokes would waste a little time; meanwhile the traditional spirit of offended taxpayers jumps at the chance to laugh and leaves witless logic to lint-picking spoilsports: of course logic would erase the points of the wit and humors of the Kaufman-Hart dialogue but its very logic-reversal's point is the happy temporary dismissal of logic.

Logic isn't the root of all laughter, surprise is; and this entire Sycamore nuclear family's ensemble avoidance is the placidly more pertinent point. We may laugh out of wishful frustration at the Sycamores' successful venial civic sins not because we wish to flout our own taxable obligations but because the fictional tax-fantasies strike us as admirably amusing. Anyone finding this tasty old chestnut objectionable should go have his funnybone tested for witless stupidity.

Jason Robards is absolutely delightful as the philosophic

Cops felt breathalyzer test was a necessary tool

FRANCIS X. MOORE

By JO ASTRID GLADING
KEYPORT — Only seconds after the decision was announced, news of Municipal Court Judge Ronald Horan's ruling on breathalyzers had already spread to the patrolmen in police headquarters downstairs.

"I'm going through the same procedure with a breathalyzer until a Superior Court tells me otherwise," said one patrolman, who is a licensed operator of the machines.

His partner said he investigated one of the 60 cases that were represented in the breathalyzer case, and Francis X. Moore, one of the successful attorneys in the case, is representing the defendant.

In that case, he said, the readings were .29, .33, and .28 — on a scale in which .10 is considered intoxicated.

"This guy had no business being on the road, and he has a prior drunk driving conviction," the patrolman said. That case will now go to court without the breathalyzer data, and the patrolman said he is uncertain if the evidence he has will hold up in court.

"Both fatalities I've covered were due to drunk drivers," said the first officer. With the breathalyzer inadmissible, he said, it will be more difficult to prosecute such drivers.

Other scientific options, such as a blood and urine test for drivers suspected of being drunk, would be cumbersome and "gestapo like," both officers agreed.

The first officer noted wryly, however, that "half the time when we arrest drunk drivers, there's plenty of blood at the scene, because it's usually an accident."

Horan last night ruled the breathalyzer to be erratic and therefore inadmissible evidence in his courts, which include Sea Bright, Keansburg, Highlands, and Keyport.

The response by officers in the other municipalities affected by the decision was similar to that of the Keyport patrolmen: simply that a necessary enforcement tool had been taken away from them.

"He threw them both out? Oh, Jesus Christ," said Highlands Patrolman Edward Chambers when he heard of the decision to disallow both models under scrutiny in the lengthy hearing.

But quickly gaining his composure, Chambers said that while the inadmissibility of the breathalyzer is "going to make it a little bit harder ... the breathalyzer is not the only means of prosecuting a drunk driving case."

The lack of it, he said, is "going to make the officers doing the arrest act a little more efficiently."

Officers will be forced to "make keener observations" of the suspects they stop, perform more complete manual dexterity tests, and keep more complete reports on drunk driving incidents, he said.

But Chambers said he also is banking on an appeal in Superior Court, and would "bet my year's paycheck" that an appeal will be heard.

Despite the decision, he said that in his two years as an operator of the devices, "I've never seen a breathalyzer malfunction the way the attorneys said it did.... I sat here one day, had the machine warmed up and stuck a walkie-talkie antenna right in the machine, and it didn't even effect it."

"I'm disappointed it was thrown out," he admitted.

While most municipal police departments have only one or two licensed breathalyzer operators, Keansburg has 17, Sgt. Joseph Auer said last night. "We arrest quite a few drunk drivers."

Auer agreed that the decision will have a negative impact on prosecution against drunk drivers because it helps a case "anytime you can use a scientific instrument to corroborate your observations."

But recent changes in the Keansburg department's procedure for investigating drunk driving cases, he said, should compensate for the lack of the breathalyzer. Observations and solid testimony by the officers, combined with the use of video cameras, he said, provide strong evidence for the prosecution.

But he also admitted he has "never seen a radio interfere with (a breathalyzer)."

Of the impacted municipalities, Sea

Bright may feel it most. In the past, the borough has hosted a task force of State Police to help nab drunk drivers traveling on Route 36, to and from the borough's ubiquitous taverns.

With only observation and reflex tests, Patrolman Chris Sommers said, "nine times out of 10 it gets thrown out (of court)." The breathalyzer is the clincher.

But despite the loss of their key enforcement tool, "we'll still have to pull them over and just take our chances in court."

"But we'll still keep pulling them over," he promised.

All the officers interviewed shared two fears — that the case will open the door for drunk driving appeals by those convicted with breathalyzers, and that the incidence of drunk drivers and the accidents they cause will increase dramatically.

"I saw a bumper sticker on a car once that said, 'I survived Route 36,'" Chambers recalled.

But he said he believes that in recent months, with state police increasing their patrols, stiffer penalties for drunk drivers and an increased public awareness of the gruesome fatality statistics for drunk driving accidents, "there are not that many up here. And there are not that many speeders."

"Now that they know the breathalyzer is no good in court, I think we're going to see an increase in the accidents along Route 36. It's going to be harder for the cops to prove it now," Campbell said.

The Keyport officer agreed, and recalled the fatal accident he handled less than two years ago when a young couple was killed by a drunk driver who ran a stop sign.

In that case, the driver pleaded guilty to both drunk driving and death by auto. His breathalyzer readings were only .12 and .10.

"I can still hear the screaming in the hospital when Sharon Beveridge died. I can still hear it, and every time I do I get chills. And she died because of a drunk driver."

Prospects bright for restoration of area beaches

By BARBARA KATELL

SEA BRIGHT — Prospects for eventual restoration of the beaches in Monmouth Beach and this borough seemed brighter this week as the result of an agreement reached between the Army Corps of Engineers and the state Department of Environmental Protection.

Under the agreement announced by Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., last week, the state will give the Army Corps $100,000 to conduct a new study of the five-mile shoreline between North Long Branch and Sandy Hook.

Assemblyman Anthony M. Villane Jr., R-Monmouth, explained that the DEP hopes the study will convince the Army Corps that its plans to save the sea wall and restore the beaches can be modified so they mesh with state proposals.

Villane said DEP Commissioner Robert Hughey decided to offer the Army Corps the money to conduct the review after the federal agency expressed reluctance to spend its own money.

The state would receive 50 percent federal funding for actual sea wall reconstruction and beach work if it and the Army Corps can come up with a mutually acceptable plan. Without federal approval, the entire cost would have to be funded by the state and the two boroughs.

Villane warned that federal funding would not be possible unless Sea Bright and Monmouth Beach are willing to provide access and use of their beaches by the general public. The Sea Bright Borough Council rejected a plan designed to meet those federal access standards by a 3-2 vote Monday night.

Villane said that actual construction of the groins and rebuilding of the sea wall will depend on whether he can advance his proposed $70 million shore protection bond proposal.

He said he will meet again Friday with the state Capital Budgeting and Planning Commission, whose approval is necessary before the state Legislature will consider a vote to place the bond issue on the November ballot.

The Army Corps first came up with a program of beach restoration for the area in 1958 and modified it in 1976. The federal plan would entail building approximately 18 groins along the five-mile coastline.

The state, however, adopted a Shore Protection Master Plan in 1980 based on a study by its consulting engineers, Dames and Moore. That plan calls for a much more modest approach to the beach erosion problem. It would call for construction of two feeder beaches to provide sand for the two boroughs and for a small number of low-lying groins over which waves could wash and deposit sand close to shore.

According to Kathleen Rippere, environmental chairman for the county League of Women Voters, the Army Corps review will also evaluate a state study of an existing groin between Sea Bright and Sandy Hook. It is hoped the state study of how currents move around the groin and what is causing the sand to erode will give the Army Corps and the DEP guidelines for how further construction should be handled.

Sea Bright has also asked the Army Corps to examine the sea wall at low tide when all of it is exposed to determine how best to shore it up. Currently, the state has let a contract for emergency repairs to an area of the wall where there are two gaping holes caused by the Feb. 11 storm.

Rippere and Villane agreed that the state plan seems the best approach to a long-time solution to beach erosion along the coastline. Rippere acknowledged that in the past the LWV and local environmentalists favored replenishing the beach without any construction of groins.

"We have learned a lot in the last couple of years," Rippere said. "In the case of a situation such as the one in Sea Bright, it has become apparent you can't save the wall just by putting sand in front of it. It just gets washed out again and the wall gets battered. You have to put in groins."

"We are pleased that the Army Corps and DEP have been working with the state Fish and Game people to come up with a solution satisfactory to everyone. No one is proposing any wild designs anymore. I think everyone is pretty much in agreement that some groins are needed and they should be low. The new study, which should be completed in July is simply to bring the Army Corps and state plans together — to mesh them."

But Rippere pointed out that the DEP currently doesn't have any money for its share of the construction.

"Whether the project can be funded is very iffy all around," she warned.

Villane acknowledged that the Capital Budgeting and Planning Commission is reluctant to approve any further state bonding proposals at this time. Recently, the state was warned that it has increased its bonded indebtedness so much in the past few years that any further borrowing would jeopardize the state's high bond rating.

The Monmouth assemblyman, however, plans to point out to the state commission that the $70 million shore protection bond is the only bond issue being proposed that would return income to the state.

He pointed out that restoration of the beaches in Sea Bright and Monmouth Beach would increase tourism in the area, which in turn would bring in greater sales tax income to the state.

Summer Festival will feature N.J.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Much to the surprise of some residents of this town, the star of this summer's Festival of American Folklore on the National Mall will be — New Jersey.

The selection means that for two weeks this summer, musicians, artists and craftsmen from the Garden State will be in the spotlight in an annual outdoor festival that usually attracts 1 million to 2 million people.

"I've always wanted to do states that people would wonder about," said Diana Parker, associate director of the festival, which is entering its 17th year. "People think, 'Folklore in New Jersey?' But New Jersey has a lot of ethnic groups and a lot of occupational groups."

Although New Jersey's selection satisfied the Smithsonian Institution and National Park Service — which sponsor the event — it left others reaching for the gibes often targeted at the state.

In Tuesday's editions of The Washington Post, for example, the writer of an unsigned article on the festival commented, "It could be the highest honor ever accorded New Jersey."

Jokes aside, about nine researchers have fanned out across the state in recent days, interviewing residents and studying local culture.

"They determine what they want to be considered, music, dance, craft traditions, occupational traditions," Ms. Parker said.

"Right now, we don't know who or what we'll have for New Jersey."

When it does take its final form, the event will occur under tents and on stages set up on the Mall from June 23 to 27 and June 30 to July 4. Events will be held each day from 11 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., and some evening concerts will be staged. All are free.

New Jersey was picked after a selection process that began last spring. Officials from the Folklife program contacted the New Jersey Washington office, where the staff expressed interest and aroused the attention of the state's congressional delegation and the governor's office. At one point, a letter signed by every member of the state's delegation was sent to the Smithsonian, urging that New Jersey be selected.

"We were doing Oklahoma last year so we were inclined to do something in the eastern half of the country," Ms. Parker said. "We try to balance."

Expressing interest in New Jersey's selection was the director of the Office of Folklife Programs, Ralph Rinzier, who is from Passaic, N.J.

"But that had nothing to do with it," Rinzier said of his background. "A group of people at the Smithsonian make the decision."

Sharing the limelight with New Jersey at this year's festival will be exhibits from another part of the globe said to have contributed to the world's culture — France.

Price's Pit cleanup near

PLEASANTVILLE (AP) — Federal officials said yesterday they have narrowed to two the number of cleanup proposals for Price's Pit Landfill, a hazardous waste dump threatening Atlantic City's water supply with contaminants.

Costs range to $13.1 million in initial investments and just under $1 million a year to maintain a system to clean groundwater already contaminated by chemicals seeping from the pit, officials said.

Both plans would relocate 10 drinking water wells used by Atlantic City from an area southeast of the 26-acre gravel pit where suspected cancer-causing chemicals such as benzene and dichloroethane were dumped between 1969 and 1976.

Both plans include provisions for moving two wells that already have been closed.

After public hearings during the week of May 2, officials will decide which plan to implement, said James Marshall, a spokesman in the Environmental Protection Agency's regional office in New York.

"Both plans are roughly equivalent in terms of their benefits. They're both going to protect that Atlantic City water supply and protect other neighborhood water supplies," Marshall said.

A $13.1 million plan provides for two pumping systems to remove and clean water from the contaminated area of an underground aquifer. The plan includes building an underground "slurry wall" of a non-porous clay material as an insurance measure against the flow of contaminated groundwater, said Marsall.

Marshall said experts hope pumping water from that area would eventually draw the widespread plume of toxins into a small area near the pit, where it could be contained.

The plan is expected to cost about $947,000 to maintain, he said.

A second plan would cost an estimated $7.5 million initially and approximately $927,000 a year for upkeep, officials said. It does not include a slurry wall, and would use only one pumping system for cleaning, said Marshall.

About 90 percent of the funding will be available from the $1.6 billion federal superfund bill. The rest of the money will come from the New Jersey Spill Compensation Fund, Marshall said.

Annual operating costs for the plans are the responsibility of the state, he said.

Marshall said contaminants pumped from the ground could be treated either by an Atlantic County sewage treatment facility, or in a small on-site plant, which would have to be built.

He said work on the project would be done in stages. "The relocation of the wells will happen first ... in late summer or early fall."

Marshall said the plan is one of the nation's first in which contaminated groundwater is being pumped out of an aquifer for cleaning.

Research on groundwater showed the supplies beneath the Price's Pit could be cleaned up in 10 to 20 years.

PAC plan revives Middletown rezoning debate

By DAN BREEN

MIDDLETOWN — With 21 hours of hard-fought Howco-Bamm Hollow hearings barely a memory, another set of public hearings on a township Master Plan amendment soon may provide more controversy.

The Planning Board last night decided to hold hearings on a proposal to amend the Master Plan and change the zoning of the controversial Beekman-Gullick tract from its current office-research designation to a residential one.

The outcome of the hearings might be different from the rejection faced by Howco since four of five Township Committee members, who must vote to implement any zone change to comply with a Master Plan amendment, have already voiced support for rezoning.

The board and committee, however, disagree on what to classify the property, located on a large triangular piece of land formed with Holland Road, Red Hill Road, and the Holmdel border.

Developer Dominic G. Martelli of Shrewsbury has proposed to build a planned adult community — PAC — on the 250-acre tract, a notion now supported by Mayor Paul Linder and Committee members James F. Maher Jr., Richard V. Kelly and Joseph McGrath.

The Planning Board, in discussing the proposal, came out against the PAC plan, but in making a decision on the matter, determined that the property's office-research zoning in the Master Plan was not suitable for roughly the same reason — nature of the property and the vicinity.

Instead, during the hearings, the board will consider which low-density residential zone it would like to see include the property — an R-90 designation with two-acre tracts or an R-45 notation with one-acre tracts.

The board last night instructed Township Planner Richard Cramer to draft a proposed amendment to the plan, copies of which will be sent to the county Planning Board and neighboring municipalities for comment.

The county Planning Board has gone on record as being opposed to the Martelli proposal for the Beekman-Gullick tract and would like to see as much of the property and its open space preserved as possible.

Township Committeeman Robert B. Waller, who is also a Planning Board member, is opposed to the PAC plan and would like to see the property zoned as R-45. "That would fit in better with the surrounding property," Waller, who lives on Red Hill Road, said.

The committee, however, currently is considering an ordinance which would create a PAC zone on the property. Shrewsbury lawyer Ronald S. Gasiorowski, who represents Martelli, recently agreed to reduce the density of units on the property.

After introducing the ordinance, the committee will send it to the Planning Board for review and hold at least one public hearing on the matter.

In related business, the board voted 6-2 to approve the resolution rejecting Howco's request to amend the Master Plan to include the Bamm Hollow Country Club as a site for a corporate office park.

The action finalizes its vote last month at the end of the seventh hearing on the matter.

Making beautiful music

The All Shore Band, comprised of outstanding high school musicians from Monmouth County, recently gave its annual concert at Red Bank Regional High School, Lincroft. Michael Heap, above, musical director at Freehold High School, rehearsed the orchestra, which included flutists pictured above, as well as fellow brass and strings. Also on hand was Dr. Peter Demos of Westfield State College, who was the guest conductor. All the practice paid off — the concert was an evening to remember.

Museum lease stirs township

MIDDLETOWN — The Township Committee wants to meet with the management of the Shoal Harbor Museum — the Spy House — to finally settle the lease of the 300-year-old historic site.

But committee members, especially Mayor Paul Linder, have expressed concern over which of two organizations connected with the museum — the Preservationists, Inc. or the newly-formed Shoal Harbor Museum Corporation — should be the lessee of the property.

Township Attorney Peter Carton met recently with a local lawyer and former township attorney Patrick Healy, who is representing the museum in the matter, but Carton said he left the meeting unsure of which organization Healy is representing during the talks.

Intimately involved with both organizations is Gertrude Neidlinger, the long-time curator of the Port Monmouth museum.

The Preservationists group, Neidlinger said, was formed to raise money for the museum after it dissolved its relationship with the Middletown Historical Society.

But the group was never meant to actually control the museum nor take part in its management, Neidlinger said, something which has caused the recent confusion in the lease negotiations.

That confusion, Neidlinger said, led to the formation of the museum corporation in the past few months. Though it is awaiting a state charter, the corporation has 17 trustees and is in the midst of developing its bylaws, the curator said.

The Preservationists only assist her in her work, Neidlinger said, adding "any decision I make as curator, I make as curator — they don't run the show."

The two organizations will interact in the future only to discuss fund-raising and developing a budget for the museum, Neidlinger added.

Linder said the committee a few years ago appointed a member of the Preservationists — John O'Brien — to the township's Historic Preservation Commission as representative for the Spy House.

The mayor suggested that a member of the museum corporation represent the landmark on the commission.

Committeeman Joseph McGrath said no matter which organization meets with the committee to discuss the lease, Neidlinger should be present since she actually runs the museum.

The committee and Neidlinger have sparred for two years over the lease. One major obstacle was the committee's insistence that the curator turn over a list of items contained in the museum.

Linder said during a committee meeting that such a list had been received and apparently that ended the dispute, though Neidlinger said she sent in a list for insurance purposes.

Neidlinger said she and Healy have discussed the most recently developed lease and find it "to be fair," but added the township wants a five-year lease with an option to renew. She said she originally hoped for a longer term, such as 40 years.

However, the curator said she is still concerned whether the township will take action to improve the structure.

The committee recently authorized the historic architect who supervised the original restoration of the structure to return and check out Neidlinger's report of leaks on the bay side of the building.

Neidlinger said the complaints are "nothing new to them, since I recently found a letter I wrote to the committee in 1975 that spoke of tremendous leaks on the east end of the house."

In another matter involving the museum, Neidlinger said she was optimistic that she would eventually regain roughly $900 in funds for the museum she claims the Historical Society has withheld for more than seven years.

Last month Neidlinger sent a package of documents to the Township Committee requesting they investigate what happened to the money, which she said she's been trying to get since quitting the Historical Society in 1975.

The committee sent Neidlinger's package to the society. Society President Philip Goldstein said after meeting with the society's board that they would not turn over any funds nor their books.

Democrats throw Assembly hats in ring

Spodak announces bid for 12th district seat

By ROB REINALDA

MANALAPAN — Township Committeeman George P. Spodak said he is "confident of the support of the county Democratic party" in his bid for a seat in the 12th assembly district in November.

"I hope to get the party's endorsement on the 25th (of April)," Spodak said last night.

The county Democrats plan to hold a mini-convention on that date to choose their candidates for the state legislature and for county-wide offices.

Spodak is considered by most party professionals to be an "almost certain" choice for one of the two assembly nominations.

Spodak seeks to gain one of the assembly seats currently held by Republicans John O. Bennett III and Marie S. Muhler.

"Marie and John will know they've been in an election," he said. "I'll give them a fight."

Spodak, a committeeman for the last eight years, has served twice as township mayor and three times as deputy mayor. He said he feels he will better represent his constituents because of his career in municipal government and his Republican opponents' lack of service on municipal governing bodies.

He expects transportation and the environment to be the main issues of the campaign.

The 12th district embodies Holmdel, Manalapan, Marlboro, Freehold, Freehold Township, Englishtown, Colts Neck, Howell, Farmingdale, Upper Freehold Township, Allentown, Roosevelt, Millstone, Tinton Falls, Eatontown, West Long Branch, Red Bank, Little Silver, Shrewsbury, Shrewsbury Township, Fair Haven and Rumson.

Although Spodak's political career has been centered in western Monmouth, he has "name recognition county-wide" — better name recognition throughout the county than Bennett, he said.

He seeks the assembly seat, because Bennett and Muhler are "not doing the job — especially Marie — all she's interested in is running for office," he said.

But "you don't run against somebody, you run for an office," Spodak added.

Spodak said he does not know who the other Democratic assembly candidate will be, nor does he know who will oppose state Sen. S. Thomas Gagliano, R-Monmouth, for Gagliano's seat in November.

That announcement will be made on April 25, he added.

Spodak, a graduate of Thomas Edison College in Trenton, has served on the township Planning Board and as

GEORGE P. SPODAK

Township Committee liaison to the Western Monmouth Utilities Authority and Manalapan-Englishtown Board of Education.

He also is a former member of the then Western Monmouth Transportation Board, which since has evolved into the Central New Jersey Transportation Board.

By trade, Spodak has been in the wholesale meat business for the last 18 years.

He resides on Crown Court with his wife, Isabella, and their three children.

Bayshore candidates to seek endorsement

By BARBARA KATELL, State House Correspondent

MATAWAN — Last night it was Jacqueline Walker's turn to officially announce her candidacy for the Democratic nomination to run for the open Assembly seat in the Bayshore.

The Matawan resident held a party for approximately 100 enthusiastic supporters to announce that she will seek the endorsement of a district-wide Democratic mini-convention, tentatively scheduled for April 25.

Walker, who is the party's municipal chairman in Matawan, is considered the front-runner for the nomination to replace Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, on the Democratic ticket.

The Middletown Democrat is giving up his Assembly seat to challenge incumbent Sen. John P. Gallagher, R-Monmouth and Middlesex, for the Bayshore Senate seat.

Van Wagner will head a ticket that will also include Assemblyman William E. Flynn, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, who will be seeking his sixth two-year term.

Walker's festive announcement party was attended mostly by her fellow Democrats from the borough. But Keansburg Municipal Chairman Louis LoBello was there to offer his support.

as were Marvin Olinsky of Holmdel, president of the Bayshore Democratic Club, and Eileen Thornton, president of the New Jersey Women's Political Caucus.

Olinsky noted Walker has long been active in the Democratic party and that she has an "impressive list of credentials."

He pointed out in addition to being Matawan's municipal leader, Walker is vice president of the Bayshore Democratic Club, secretary of the Women's Democratic Club of Monmouth County, and a member of the New Jersey Federation of Democratic Women and on an advisory committee to the state Democratic Committee.

Olinsky said she also is a past president of the Monmouth County Women's Political Caucus, past president of Monmouth County National Organization of Women, a former board member of the Matawan League of Women Voters, campaign manager for several local, county and state Democrats, an alternate delegate to the 1980 Democratic National Convention.

In addition to being past president of the Matawan Zoning Board, Walker, during her long teaching career, was a representative in the Edison Teachers Association. She was also on the coadjunct faculty at Rutgers University.

Atlantic Highlands to flag beer, wine license

By W.L. HAACKER

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS — The Borough Council is expected to pass a measure flagging the state legislature's proposal to allow unlicensed restaurants to serve beer and wine, according to a consensus at last night's meeting.

Mayor Everett C. Curry read a letter from the Political Action Committee of the New Jersey Licensed Beverage Association, which represents liquor stores, taverns and other businesses licensed to serve alcohol.

The letter, written by the association's PAC chairman, William Jerlat of Edison, and the group's president, Gerald Bertekap of Fords, outlined a six-point opposition to the legislation authored by state Sen. John F. Russo, D-Ocean.

"I think it would open us up to a situation we would rather not have," Curry said.

"I wouldn't like to see a Ronald McDonald beer mug," Councilman Robert T. Abrams. "You can brown bag it now and I think this would open up Pandora's box."

There are currently 10 "C" licenses issued to establishments for on-site consumption of alcohol in the borough.

"I don't think we need anymore," Councilman Edgar C. Braun Jr. said. "It's not going to help the state (out of its budget problems)."

Braun said the idea behind the state raising the drinking age to 21 was to prevent teenagers from drinking, and this bill would make it easier for teenagers to get alcohol.

The bill, which has the support of Gov. Thomas H. Kean, would allow small restaurants to serve alcohol by paying a $500 fee.

However, as the letter from the state beverage association noted, this would deprive "home rule" to local governments, which must approve liquor licenses by ordinance.

According to the beverage association, already hard hit by the rise in the drinking age, the current senate and the companion assembly bills also ignore the present state limitation law that establishes one "C" license for bars for every 3,000 population and one "D" license for package good stores, limited to one for 7,500 people in a community.

"Without a doubt, these permits will open thousands of outlets that are frequented by the young teen population — pizza parlors, sub shops and eventually all types of fast food restaurants," the letter read.

"With state cutbacks," it continued, "the ABC (Alcohol Beverage Control) Department already feels that they do not have sufficient enforcement personnel. How could they possibly handle thousands of additional outlets? The $500 permit fee will in no way provide ample revenue to the state and municipality to increase the needed enforcement."

"We are quite sure that the parents of your teenage residents will rest much easier without the thought of their children being able to purchase a beer with a hamburger," the letter concluded.

Harbor Commission asks for $20,000

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS — The Borough Council is expected to approve the Harbor Commission's $20,000 expenditure, which includes $3,600 for a security gate.

The Harbor Commission meeting preceded the council work session, at which bids for $11,772 worth of oak and greenheart pilings, $3,000 for new windows for the Yacht Club and the gate costs were debated.

Under the ordinance which established the Harbor Commission, the commission cannot spend its own funds without permission from the council.

The system is needed, according to Harbor Commission Chairman Florence M. Black, to provide a checks and balance system on the amount of money collected for launching pleasure boats from the harbor ramp.

AROUND THE COUNTY

West Keyport School up for sale

KEYPORT — The Board of Education has put the West Keyport School on the market. By a vote of 5-2, the board voted last night to accept offers for the sale of the school building. The board set a $25,000 minimum on bids. The vote comes despite the request by Mayor Richard Bergen and the Borough Council for the board to donate the school to the borough for use as municipal offices, according to Business Administrator Dominic J. Acerra. To date, the board has yet to agree on a sale price for the elementary school, located on Washington Street.

Initially, board member M. Elaine Aumack motioned to put the school out to bid for $25,000 with member Jane M. Jones seconding. Board members Howard Ruth and Robert P. Schneider voted against the resolution and Charles E. Dittmars, board president, abstained. In explaining his vote against the sale, Ruth asked: "What if we don't get any bidders for $25,000? We'll be stuck with a building."

'Hangout' request considered

MATAWAN — The Borough Recreation Committee has appointed a subcommittee to discuss a local group's request for a legal "hangout" in the borough, but at least one subcommittee member said he was less than enthusiastic about the idea. "Would you want your kids hanging around doing nothing?" committee member Joseph Bucco asked. "I can't believe they don't have anything better to do than sit around." Bucco said the subcommittee will meet with representatives of the 30-member group and police officials Monday. "We're all going to get together to see what can be done."

Three young adults appeared before the Borough Council Tuesday to ask for a location where they can park their vehicles and talk "without worrying about being kicked out." Mike Kelleher, 19, of 219 Ravine Dr. said most of the people in the group are former members of "Mudmen Trucking" a four-wheel-drive vehicle club. Bucco said the committee cannot change town ordinances restricting hours in borough recreational parks. "That is out of our jurisdiction," he said. "I really don't know what the solution is, but we'll try to come up with something."

Boardwalk ruling appeal set

ASBURY PARK — The City Council voted last night to appeal last month's Monmouth County Superior Court decision forbidding it to sell the city's waterfront properties to a private entrepreneur for redevelopment. The council authorized City Attorney Norman H. Mesnikoff to appeal the decision of Superior Court Judge Patrick J. McGann Jr. who voided the city's right to sell the mile-long strip of land between Ocean Avenue and the boardwalk to Neptune Contractor Henry V. Vaccaro, the sole bidder on the property.

"With all due respect to the court, it is the city's position that on the issue the judge decided the judge was wrong," Mesnikoff said. "The city has the right to sell that land."

Church addition plans OK'd

MARLBORO — Despite protests from an irate neighbor, the Robertsville Bible Church was given the go-ahead last night from the Township Planning Board to build a 60-by-40 foot church addition.

Plans for the multi-purpose addition also include the clearing of trees on the side of the property for recreational space. Once the trees are removed, the church plans to set up a 200-foot berm, plant 14 Canadian Hemlock trees, and put up a 6-foot stockade fence to act as a barrier between the church property and some homes on Sherbrooke Lane.

However, Gail Baron, a Sherbrooke Lane resident whose backyard tree line will be eliminated by the plan, opposed the church's proposal.

Baron told the board that when she met with Mayor Saul Hornik in January about the church plans, the mayor assured her that the trees in her backyard would not be affected.

"The mayor told me, that night, 'Don't worry, Gail, all the trees will be cut up way way up from your property to the right. The tree line parallel to my property was not going to be touched. That is why I went home happy that night,'" Baron said.

POLICE BEAT

Man sues over mechanical bull

FREEHOLD — After being tossed from the saddle of a mechanical bull, a Neptune Township man is trying to corral an Asbury Park tavern in court. Thomas Hansen says the In The Saddle tavern didn't warn him of the machine's dangers and should be responsible for the injuries he received, the would-be urban cowboy charges in a suit docketed in Superior Court yesterday.

The mechanical animal, which is supposed to buck and gyrate like a real bull, threw Hansen from its saddle when he was inside the bar on July 8, 1981, the suit says. Hansen received "many permanent and diverse injuries" and had to take time off from work to recuperate, the suit says, adding that Hansen will lose time from work in the future, too.

The suit seeks financial compensation for injuries and damages.

Trio held in wine theft

TINTON FALLS — An adult male and two juveniles have been arrested and charged by the borough's Police Department with stealing two cases of wine from a delivery truck at Silver Liquors on Shrewsbury Avenue, police said.

Rufus Monroe Jr., 37, of 92 Peach Street was arrested and released pending a Municipal Court hearing April 12, police said. They added that the two juveniles were charged and released to the custody of relatives.

One of the juveniles was also arrested for control of a dangerous substance, police said. They did not reveal the nature of the substance.

Monroe and the two juveniles were apprehended by Lt. William Seufert who was making a motor vehicle stop, police said. Seufert was assisted by Sgt. Louis Vitale and Patrolman Thomas Richardson, police said.

Pair held in purse snatch

LONG BRANCH — Police have arrested a Fort Monmouth soldier and another man for snatching the purse of an elderly woman and knocking her down in the process. Police yesterday arrested Tyrone Williams, 20, of Ellis Avenue, for performing the robbery of an unidentified woman on West End Avenue on March 28th.

Police last week arrested Eddie Hall, 21, of First Avenue, Atlantic Highlands, who is stationed at Fort Monmouth as a soldier. Police said Hall drove a getaway car from the scene of the crime. Police said the woman received bruises but did not require hospitalization.

6 women indicted for welfare fraud

FREEHOLD — Six women, including a Long Branch resident accused of illegally obtaining more than $43,000, have been indicted by county grand juries this week for welfare fraud.

None of the incidents are related, but all six women are accused of bilking the county Board of Social Services by obtaining public assistance while concealing employment or failing to disclose other income.

Delores Kyles Richardson, 41, of Joline Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for receiving $43,907 between Oct. 1971 and Aug. 1979 by falsely "holding herself out to be poor and needy," her indictment says.

During this time, the indictment says, Richardson received — and concealed — Social Security income.

Richardson is also charged with theft by deception for allegedly obtaining additional assistance of more than $500 between Sept. 1979 and Oct. 1981 while failing to report other income, the indictment says.

Annette Overstreet, 21, of Chelton Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with theft by deception. An indictment accuses her of not reporting unemployment insurance benefits while she collected more than $500 in assistance, between Aug. 1981 and last June.

Emma Powell, also known as Emma Jackson, 32, of First Street, Freehold, is charged with theft by deception for allegedly failing to report wages and unemployment insurance income while receiving more than $500 in assistance between Oct. 1980 and last June.

Shirley Fuller, 40, of Woodrow Wilson Homes, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses. She received $2,647 in assistance over a 13-month period ending in April 1979 while she was employed, the indictment says.

Paulette Washington, 38, of Delaware Avenue, Cliffwood, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for allegedly receiving unemployment benefits while collecting $1,373 in assistance between Feb. 1979 and Sept. 1979.

Washington is also charged with theft by deception for allegedly receiving $2,544 in assistance while failing to report income and unemployment benefits between Sept. 1979 and Dec. 1981.

Loretta Foster, 47, of Seventh Avenue, Asbury Park, is charged with obtaining $596 under false pretenses in the summer of 1979. She is also charged with theft by deception for receiving more than $500 between Sept. 1979 and Feb. 1980 while she collected wages and unemployment benefits.

Washington's indictment was handed up yesterday, the others on Tuesday.

Bell Labs chemical storage gives Holmdel board pause

HOLMDEL — A storage building to house dangerous chemicals and pesticides might be too hot for the Township Planning Board to handle, according to remarks made Tuesday at a public hearing on the proposal.

Edward J. Moran, a spokesman for Bell Laboratories, outlined the company's proposal to construct the 61-foot by 75-foot one-story storage structure, which would be erected near the company's service building on the southern part of the property.

The building would house chemicals such as hydrogen and acetone, both explosives, and hydrochloric acid used in experiments as well as pesticides used for maintenance.

Steven Eagles, a safety coordinator for the company, said some of the materials were toxic and, under cross-examination by planning board members, outlined safety precautions that were being incorporated into the building.

He said the structure was patterned after standards set for "high hazard sites" as established by the Building Officials Conference of America.

He said the building would have sprinkler systems, ceiling panels designed to release the force of an explosion, as well as receptacles built into the floors to collect spilled chemicals. Eagles said the building would provide a safer means of storing chemicals that are currently held in a building where about 5,000 employees work.

Under questioning from board Chairman Frank L. Codella, Eagles said he didn't believe environmental damage would occur in the event of an explosion, but explained the real danger would be to employees inside the building.

According to Codella, the board requested further environmental data from the company and said the board would debate the proposal during its workshop on April 19, with a final decision at the May or June meeting.

Township Fire Chief Ronald Pontrelli said he was aware of the chemicals stored on the company's grounds but explained he was concerned what would happen if all of those substances were kept under one roof.

He said "a great mushroom ball of fire" would be produced if they exploded.

The fire chief asked to be included in the discussion since he would have to know if the department had sufficient equipment to handle a fire at the site.

Democrats throw hats in ring

Currently, Walker is an employee of the state Board of Education, where she heads the Office of Equal Access. But she said that if she is nominated to run for the Assembly, she will give up her state job "probably before the campaign gets serious in September," in order to campaign full time.

"I believe you need to fight for every single vote."

"I would have no legal conflict, if I kept my job," Walker said. "But I would want to be a full-time legislator. When I do something, I do it completely."

Walker, whose husband is a member of the Matawan Borough Council, said she is "confident I have the kind of support to get the nomination and get elected." She noted that Van Wagner and Flynn have remained impartial in the battle shaping up to join them on the ticket.

And Walker said she thinks they are taking the right approach.

"Rich and Bill would be happy with any of the candidates," Walker said. And she predicted that once the nominating process is over, the chosen candidates will sit down together and draw up a cohesive campaign strategy.

While Walker is considered the front-runner for the nomination, several other strong candidates also have officially declared their interest. They include Keyport Mayor Richard Bergen; Hazlet Township Committeeman Henry Pekarosky; and Allan J. MacDonald of Middletown, a former county freeholder and township mayor who has announced his interest in both the Assembly or the Board of Freeholders.

Former Freeholder Thomas J. Lynch and Democratic Municipal Chairman Vincent Jennings are two other Middletown residents known to be interested in the Assembly seat but they have not made any official announcement of their candidacies.

FORMAL FEAST — Members of the food and nutrition class at Thompson Junior High surround a sumptuous feast recently prepared and served to faculty members.

Thompson Junior High class serves lunch, buffet style

MIDDLETOWN — The freshman foods and nutrition class at Thompson Junior High recently hosted and served a buffet luncheon to the faculty and administrators.

According to teacher Margaret Di Naples, the classroom was transformed into a dining room, with tables accented by seasonal decorations and place mats. Three photography students took pictures of the event which was also recorded on video tape.

"The buffet was replete with ziti, lasagna and meat balls, a colorful fresh vegetable bar, a fresh fruit compote with orange sherbet and punch with raspberry topping," said Di Naples.

Also on the menu was choice of dessert, including strawberry cheese cake, baked Alaska, blueberry, cherry or apple pie, and Russian tea cookies.

Harbor Commission funding

She said that improper monitoring systems led to an inaccurate accounting of money received. The current cost is $9 and nearly 12,000 pleasure crafts are launched each year from the ramp.

She said no accurate estimates of lost revenue could be provided but said the problem is serious enough to warrant the installation of the gates.

As explained by Fred Baxter, a principal of Baxter Associates of Holmdel, under the system the number of cars and boats entering the facility would be counted and then compared to the fees collected.

Council is expected to approve the expenditures at next week's regular session.

Political prisoners topic at BCC

MIDDLETOWN — "Political Prisoners ... and Amnesty International" will be the topic at 8 p.m. Thursday, April 21, at Brookdale Community College, Lincroft.

The film "Prisoner of Conscience" will be shown by Bill Williams, a member of Amnesty International, who also will discuss ways in which his organization works to correct human rights violations around the world.

The program is co-sponsored by the college and the Monmouth-Ocean chapter of Amnesty International.

"Founded in 1961, the group provides practical help to 'prisoners of conscience' — people imprisoned anywhere because of their origin, race, religion or political beliefs.

The organization, which won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977, "adopts" many of these prisoners and works actively for their release, and to end the use of torture and cruel or degrading treatment.

Members of the local chapter participate in the international organization's Urgent Action Appeal, which concentrates on a prisoner who has "disappeared" or is thought to be tortured.

Meetings are held at 1 p.m. the fourth Sunday of each month in the First Unitarian Church, Lincroft.

Additional information about the program can be obtained through Community Services at Brookdale.

Legal 'hangouts' mulled in Matawan

By RAY GERMANN

MATAWAN — The Borough Recreation Committee has appointed a subcommittee to discuss a local group's request for a legal "hangout" in the borough, but at least one subcommittee member said he was less than enthusiastic about the idea.

to do than sit around."

Bucco said the subcommittee will meet with representatives of the 30-member group and police officials Monday.

"We're all going to get together to see what can be done," he said.

Three young adults appeared before the Borough Council Tuesday to ask for a location where they can park their vehicles and talk "without worrying about being kicked out."

Mike Kelleher, 19, of 219 Ravine

Drive, said most of the people in the group are former members of "Mudmen Trucking," a four-wheel-drive vehicle club.

Bucco said the committee cannot change municipal ordinances restricting hours in borough recreational parks.

"That is out of our jurisdiction," he said. "I really don't know what the solution is, but we'll try to come up with something."

Tracy Goodhart, 19, of Washington

Avenue, said at Tuesday's meeting: "We don't drink in public, and we don't cause any trouble; all we want is a place we can meet."

Greg Uhrig, 23, of 33 Union St., suggested the borough designate a parking lot in the area as a meeting place. Uhrig said he has been a member of the Matawan Fire Department for six years.

Bucco said, "We've been all through this before. Maybe it's healthy to hang around doing nothing, and maybe it isn't, but we are not going to ignore the situation."

He said the committee does not want to "set any precedents" by providing the group with a place to assemble in town.

"The next thing you know, we could have all kinds of people coming in, and asking for the same thing."

Although the group members said they do not advocate drinking in public, Bucco said, "you have to realize that (no drinking) is kind of a hard thing to expect. These things happen sometimes."

On Tuesday, Councilman James Shea said the borough has had frequent problems with disorderly juveniles near Gravelly Brook Park on Route 79.

"There has been a lot of broken glass and other damage there, and we want to be sure to guard against things like that," he said. "But I'm sure something can be done."

Welfare bilking charged

FREEHOLD — Six women, including a Long Branch resident accused of illegally obtaining more than $43,000, have been indicted by county grand juries this week for welfare fraud.

None of the incidents are related, but all six women are accused of bilking the county Board of Social Services by obtaining public assistance while concealing employment or failing to disclose other income.

Delores Kyles Richardson, 41, of Joline Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for receiving $43,907 between October 1971 and August 1979 by falsely "holding herself out to be poor and needy," her indictment says.

During this time, the indictment says, Richardson received — and concealed — Social Security income.

Richardson also is charged with theft by deception for allegedly obtaining additional assistance of more than $500 between September 1979 and October 1981 while failing to report other income, the indictment says.

Annette Overstreet, 21, of Chelton Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with theft by deception. An indictment accuses her of not reporting unemployment insurance benefits while she collected more than $500 in assistance between August 1981 and last June.

Emma Powell, also known as Emma Jackson, 32, of First Street, Freehold, is charged with theft by deception for allegedly failing to report wages and unemployment insurance income while receiving more than $500 in assistance between October 1980 and last June.

Shirley Fuller, 40, of Woodrow Wilson Homes, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses. She received $2,647 in assistance over a 13-month period ending in April 1979 while she was employed, the indictment says.

Paulette Washington, 38, of Delaware Avenue, Cliffwood, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for allegedly receiving unemployment benefits while collecting $1,373 in assistance between February 1979 and September 1979.

Washington also is charged with theft by deception for allegedly receiving $2,544 in assistance while failing to report income and unemployment benefits between September 1979 and December 1981.

Loretta Foster, 47, of Seventh Avenue, Asbury Park, is charged with obtaining $596 under false pretenses in the summer of 1979. She also is charged with theft by deception for receiving more than $500 between September 1979 and February 1980 while she collected wages and unemployment benefits.

65 YEARS LATER — While her husband sleeps downstairs, Josie Queren entertains visitors Betty Klatt, center, and Keansburg Councilwoman Eileen Lloyd from her Riverview Hospital bed.

A 65 (year) love affair; R-e-s-p-e-c-t is the key

By JO ASTRID GLADING

RED BANK — It was a love story that began 65 years ago — and one that played on yesterday despite the hospitalization last week of both members of the cast.

Frank Queren celebrated his 97th birthday yesterday in the hospital bed he has occupied since last Tuesday. But his wife, Josie, 89, moved in the next day only around the corner and up the stairs, after falling and breaking her hip.

Both born in New York City, Josie and Frank Queren have traveled a long way from their wedding 65 years ago at Judson Memorial Church in Greenwich Village to the Keansburg home they have lived in for nearly four decades.

Actually, it hasn't been that far. There were the frequent weekend trips from the Battery to Keansburg on the Keansburg Boat. There were a few trips to Bermuda. There are the memories of Keansburg as a resort with white sand beaches, crystal clear water and wooden sidewalks.

But otherwise, the childless couple has spent the last 65 years tending to family members, tending to work and a vintage Oldsmobile with a mere 8,000 miles on it. And, of course, tending to the evening cocktail hour — "Frank likes his Scotch and I, well, I drink orange juice and gin," she says with a mischievous smile.

And then there are the 65 years of tending to a marriage.

Since their dual hospitalization, Keansburg Councilwoman and frequent visitor Eileen Lloyd said each visitor is greeted by one and sent to check on the other.

"He's worrying about her and she's worrying about him," Registered Nurse Hyla Saladino said. "And their neighbors have really done all the care," she added, noting that nearly all of Forest Avenue has been by to visit.

And yesterday, for Frank Queren's 97th birthday, hospital personnel helped Josie Queren out of her wheelchair so she could deliver a card and a hug to her husband. Hospital personnel reportedly were moved to tears by the festivities.

"Each year was happier than the previous one," Josie Queren recalled.

"Well, we've been very close," she said of her 65 years with Fred.

The secret to a combined value of 186 years of health, their doctor says, is moderation and "leading an exemplary life."

The secret to 65 years of collaboration, Josie said, is kindness, love, and caring "every day" combined with uninterrupted "respect for each other."

Keypoint board places school on the market

By SUSAN MORGAN

KEYPORT — The Board of Education has put the West Keypoint School on the market.

By a vote of 5-2, the board voted last night to accept offers for the sale of the school building. The board set a $25,000 minimum on bids.

The vote comes despite the request by Mayor Richard Bergen and the Borough Council for the board to donate the school to the borough for use as municipal offices, according to Business Administrator Dominic J. Acerra. To date, the board has yet to agree on a sale price for the elementary school, located on Washington Street.

Initially, board member M. Elaine Aumack motioned to put the school out to bid for $25,000 with member Jane M. Jones seconding. Board members Howard Ruth and Robert P. Schneider voted against the resolution and Charles E. Ditmars, board president, abstained.

In explaining his vote against the sale, Ruth asked: "What if we don't get any bidders for $25,000? We'll be stuck with a building."

In response, Aumack explained why she made the motion. "We make up the school budget. Every dime we spend has to be accounted for. We need money for improvements in the high school. We should not just give the building away (to the borough)."

The borough has expressed interest in the building, but, according to Jones, it would need extensive renovations.

Acerra explained that Aumack's original resolution did not pass because a five-member majority is needed to carry it. Two of the nine board members were absent last night.

RICHARD BERGEN

A second resolution, proposed by Schneider and seconded by Ruth, would have donated the building to the municipality in lieu of legal and other fees owed by the board to the borough. However, that motion also was defeated. Ditmars again abstained and only Schneider and Ruth supported that motion.

School Superintendent Douglas W. Fredericks finally commented, "We could make different resolutions all night. Let's resolve this matter tonight."

Responding to Fredericks' comments, board member Roy Cadoo motioned to vote again on the original resolution and this time, with Ditmars voting in favor rather than abstaining, the resolution garnered the five votes needed for approval.

Walker officially announces run for Assembly seat

By BARBARA KATELL State House Correspondent

MATAWAN — Last night it was the turn of Jacqueline Walker of Matawan to officially announce her candidacy for the Democratic nomination to run for the open Assembly seat in the Bayshore.

Walker held a party for approximately 100 enthusiastic supporters to announce that she will seek the endorsement of a district-wide Democratic mini-convention, tentatively scheduled for April 25.

Walker, who is the party's municipal chairman in Matawan, is considered the front-runner for the nomination to replace Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, on the Democratic ticket.

The Middletown Democrat is giving up his Assembly seat to challenge incumbent Sen. John P. Gallagher, R-Monmouth and Middlesex, for the Bayshore Senate seat.

Van Wagner will head a ticket that will also include Assemblyman William E. Flynn, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, who will be seeking his sixth two-year term.

Walker's festive announcement party was attended mostly by her fellow Democrats from the borough. But Keansburg Municipal Chairman Louis LoBello was there to offer his support, as were Marvin Olinsky of Holmdel, president of the Bayshore Democratic Club, and Eileen Thornton, president of the New Jersey Women's Political Caucus.

Olinsky noted Walker has long been active in the Democratic party and that she has an "impressive list of credentials."

He pointed out in addition to being Matawan's municipal leader, Walker is vice president of the Bayshore Democratic Club, secretary of the Women's Democratic Club of Monmouth County, and a member of the New Jersey Federation of Democratic Women and on an advisory committee to the state Democratic Committee.

Olinsky said she also is a past president of the Monmouth County Women's Political Caucus, past president of Monmouth County National Organization of Women, a former board member of the Matawan League of Women Voters, campaign manager for several local, county and state Democrats, an alternate delegate to the 1980 Democratic National Convention.

In addition to being past president of the Matawan Zoning Board, Walker, during her long teaching career, was a representative in the Edison Teachers Association. She was also on the coadjunct faculty at Rutgers University.

Currently, Walker is an employee of the state Board of Education, where she heads the Office of Equal Access. But she said that if she is nominated to run for the Assembly, she will give up her state job "probably before the campaign gets serious in September," in order to campaign full time.

"I believe you need to fight for every single vote."

"I would have no legal conflict, if I kept my job," Walker said. "But I would want to be a full-time legislator. When I do something, I do it completely."

Walker, whose husband is a member of the Matawan Borough Council, said she is "confident I have the kind of support to get the nomination and get elected." She noted that Van Wagner and Flynn have remained impartial in the battle shaping up to join them on the ticket.

While Walker is considered the front-runner for the nomination, several other strong candidates also have officially declared their interest. They include Keypoint Mayor Richard Bergen; Hazlet Township Committeeman Henry Pekarsky; and Allan J. MacDonald of Middletown, a former county freeholder and township mayor who has announced his interest in both the Assembly or the Board of Freeholders.

Hazlet scouts helping the handicapped

HAZLET — Senior and Cadette Girl Scouts in the township are assisting the Monmouth County Office of the Handicapped in preparing a countywide "Access Guide" for the handicapped.

The service project, being done in conjunction with the V.I.S.T.A. (Volunteers in Service to America) Program, includes surveying the physical layouts of all the public buildings and parking facilities in the township, and measuring doorways, curbs, and counters for easy accessibility.

Teresa Klinsky, Catherine Klinsky, and Deborah Smith, of Girl Scout Senior Troop 106, are using this project as part of the requirements towards earning their Gold Award, the highest award in Girl Scouting.

Monica Ross, Christine Sweeney, Karen Shedlock of Troop 106 and Darci Voigt and Renee Taff of Cadette Troop 194 are completing the surveys joined by adults John Jaskowiak of Hazlet and Jean Horalla of Keypoint. Pauline Voigt is coordinating the project in Hazlet.

Spodak says he's confident of Democratic support

By ROB REINALDA

MANALAPAN — Township Committeeman George P. Spodak said he is "confident of the support of the county Democratic party" in his bid for a seat in the 12th Assembly District in November.

"I hope to get the party's endorsement on the 25th (of April)," Spodak said last night.

Spodak seeks to gain one of the Assembly seats currently held by Republicans John O. Bennett III and Marie S. Muhler. "Marie and John will know they've been in an election," he said. "I'll give them a fight."

Spodak, a committeeman for the last eight years, has served twice as township mayor and three times as deputy mayor. He said he feels he will better represent his constituents because of his career in municipal government and his Republican opponents' lack of service on municipal governing bodies.

He expects transportation and the environment to be the main issues of the campaign.

The 12th district embodies Manalapan, Marlboro, Freehold, Freehold Township, Englishtown, Colts Neck, Howell, Farmingdale, Upper Freehold Township, Allentown, Roosevelt, Holmdel, Millstone, Tinton Falls, Eatontown, West Long Branch, Red Bank, Little Silver, Shrewsbury, Shrewsbury Township, Fair Haven and Rumson.

Although Spodak's political career has been centered in western Monmouth, he has "name recognition countywide" — better name recognition throughout the county than Bennett, he said.

He seeks the Assembly seat, because Bennett and Muhler are "not doing the job — especially Marie — all she's interested in is running for office," he said.

But "you don't run against somebody, you run for an office," Spodak added.

Spodak said he does not know who the other Democratic Assembly candidate will be, nor does he know who will oppose state Sen. S. Thomas Gagliano, R-Monmouth, for Gagliano's seat in November.

That announcement will be made on April 25, he added. Spodak, a graduate of Thomas Edison College in Trenton, has served on the township Planning Board and as Township Committee liaison to the Western Monmouth Utilities Authority and Manalapan-Englishtown Board of Education.

He also is a former member of the then Western Monmouth Transportation Board, which since has evolved into the Central New Jersey Transportation Board.

By trade, Spodak has been in the wholesale meat business for the last 18 years.

He resides on Crown Court with his wife, Isabella, and their three children.

PAC plan revives Middletown rezoning debate

By DAN BREEN

MIDDLETOWN — With 21 hours of hard-fought Howco-Bamm Hollow hearings barely a memory, another set of public hearings on a township Master Plan amendment soon may provide more controversy.

The Planning Board last night decided to hold hearings on a proposal to amend the Master Plan and change the zoning of the controversial Beekman-Gullick tract from its current office-research designation to a residential one.

The outcome of the hearings might be different from the rejection faced by Howco since four of five Township Committee members, who must vote to implement any zone change to comply with a Master Plan amendment, have already voiced support for rezoning

The board and committee, however, disagree on what to classify the property, located on a large triangular piece of land formed with Holland Road, Red Hill Road, and the Holmdel border.

Developer Dominic G. Martelli of Shrewsbury has proposed to build a planned adult community — PAC — on the 250-acre tract, a notion now supported by Mayor Paul Linder and Committeemen James F. Maher Jr., Richard V. Kelly and Joseph McGrath.

The Planning Board, in discussing the proposal, came out against the PAC plan, but in making a decision on the matter, determined that the property's office-research zoning in the Master Plan was not suitable for roughly the same reason — nature of the property and the vicinity.

Instead, during the hearings the board will consider which low-density residential zone it would like to see include the property — an R-90 designation with two-acre tracts or an R-45 notation with one-acre tracts.

The board last night instructed Township Planner Richard Cramer to draft a proposed amendment to the plan, copies of which will be sent to the county Planning Board and neighboring municipalities for comment.

The county Planning Board has gone on record as being opposed to the Martelli proposal for the Beekman-Gullick tract and would like to see as much of the property and its open space preserved as possible.

Township Committeeman Robert B. Waller, who is also a Planning Board member, is opposed to the PAC plan and would like to see the property zoned as R-45. "That would fit in better with the surrounding property," Waller, who lives on Red Hill Road, said.

The committee, however, currently is considering an ordinance which would create a PAC zone on the property. Shrewsbury lawyer Ronald S. Gasiorowski, who represents Martelli, recently agreed to reduce the density of units on the property.

After introducing the ordinance, the committee will send it to the Planning Board for review and hold at least one public hearing on the matter.

In related business, the board voted 6-2 to approve the resolution rejecting Howco's request to amend the Master Plan to include the Bamm Hollow Country Club as a site for a corporate office park.

The action finalizes its vote last month at the end of the seventh hearing on the matter.

Hot topic in Holmdel

HOLMDEL — A storage building, which would house dangerous chemicals and pesticides, might be too hot for the Township Planning Board to handle, according to remarks made at a public hearing on the proposal held Tuesday night.

Edward J. Moran, a spokesman for Bell Laboratories, outlined the companies proposal to construct a 61-foot by 75-foot one-story structure, which would be erected near the company's service building on the southern part of the property.

The building would house chemicals such as hydrogen, acetone and hydrochloric acid used in experiments as well as pesticides used for maintenance.

corporated into the building.

He said the structure was patterned after standards set for "high hazard sites" as established by the Building Officials Conference of America.

He said the building would have sprinkler systems, ceiling panels designed to release the force of an explosion as well as receptacles built into the floors to collect spilled chemicals.

Eagles said the building would provide a safer means of storing chemicals that are currently stored in a building where about 5,000 employees work.

Under questioning from board Chairman Frank L. Codella, Eagles said he didn't believe environmental damage would occur in the event of an explosion, but explained the real danger would be to employees inside the building.

Nuthouse hearing scheduled

ABERDEEN — The Zoning Board of Adjustment last night accepted the site plan for a proposed expansion of Jo-Ann's Nuthouse on Line Road, and announced that there will be a public hearing on the plan April 27.

The plan has been met with opposition from residents who live near the 193,040 square foot lot.

At a Feb. 23 meeting, several residents claimed increased truck traffic brought on by the expansion would aggravate the current traffic congestion problems at the intersection of Blair and Line Roads.

Jack Grummet, chairman of the board of Jo-Ann's Nuthouse, has assured the objectors that truck traffic in the area will be decreased because the expansion will allow trucks to be loaded on the site, rather than in the roadway.

The plan calls for a 13,180 square foot building expansion, two additional unloading bays for supply trucks, and 38 additional parking spaces.

The board refused to hear any new testimony on the plan until its next regular meeting.

Asbury Park to appeal ruling

ASBURY PARK — The City Council voted last night to appeal last month's Monmouth County Superior Court decision forbidding it to sell the city's waterfront properties to a private entrepreneur for redevelopment.

The council authorized City Attorney Norman H. Mesnikoff to appeal the decision of Superior Court Judge Patrick J. McGann Jr., who squelched the sale of the mile-long strip of land between Ocean Avenue and the boardwalk to Neptune contractor Henry V. Vaccaro, the sole bidder on the property.

"With all due respect to the court, it is the city's position that on the issue the judge decided, the judge was wrong," Mesnikoff said. "The city has the right to sell that land."

In February, the city offered bidders the opportunity to bid on the properties provided they present a detailed plan of redevelopment for the waterfront.

The city retained the right to accept or reject all bids on the basis of bid price and the attractiveness of the plans presented.

McGann ruled that the city would have to be more specific in the specifications for development and draw up its own development plan for the highest bidder to implement.

College to host gifted program

WEST LONG BRANCH — Monmouth College is finalizing, and expects to announce by April 20, selection of 100 students from throughout the state who will receive scholarships to the initial session of the Governor's School for Gifted High School Students, to be held on its campus July 2 to 30.

The Monmouth College school, which will focus on global studies, is the first of three such schools announced last fall by Gov. Thomas Kean. In 1984, Drew University and Trenton State College will open similar schools specializing in science and art, respectively.

Candidates for the Monmouth College school have been nominated by their local schools and school districts through the office of the county superintendent of schools in each of the state's 21 counties.

To be eligible, students must have attained their junior year in high school, have achieved a B average or better in all subjects, have ranked in the 90th percentile or better in a nationally standardized test, and have submitted an essay explaining their reasons for wishing to attend the school.

Spy House meeting sought

MIDDLETOWN — The Township Committee wants to meet with the management of the Shoal Harbor Museum — the Spy House — to finally settle the lease of the 300-year-old historic site. But committee members, especially Mayor Paul Linder, have expressed concern over which of two organizations connected with the museum — the Preservationists, Inc. or the newly-formed Shoal Harbor Museum Corporation — should be the lessee of the property.

Township Attorney Peter Carton met recently with a local lawyer and former township attorney Patrick Healy, who is representing the museum in the matter, but Carton said he left the meeting unsure of which organization Healy is representing during the talks.

Intimately involved with both organizations is Gertrude Neidinger, the long-time curator of the Port Monmouth museum. The Preservationists group, Neidinger said, was formed to raise money for the museum after it dissolved its relationship with the Middletown Historical Society.

Council to join beer fight

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS — The Borough Council is expected to pass a measure flagging the state legislature's proposal to allow unlicensed restaurants to serve beer and wine, according to a consensus at last night's meeting. Mayor Everett C. Curry read a letter from the Municipal Action Committee of the New Jersey Licensed Beverage Association, which represents liquor stores, taverns and other businesses licensed to serve alcohol.

The letter, written by the association's PAC chairman, William Jerlat of Edison, and the group's president, Gerald Bertekap of Fords, outlined a six-point opposition to the legislation authored by state Sen. John F. Russo, D-Ocean. "Under such a law," Curry explained, "I think it would open us up to a situation we would rather not have."

"I wouldn't like to see a Ronald McDonald beer mug," Councilman Robert T. Abrams. "You can brown bag it now and I think this would open up Pandora's box." There are currently 10 "C" licenses issued to establishments for on-site consumption of alcohol in the borough.

"I don't think we need anymore," Councilman Edgar C. Braun Jr. opined.

Car repair shop planned

SHREWSBURY — Area residents at the corner of New-man Springs Road and Shrewsbury Avenue looking for a piece of pizza may soon find a repair shop ready to fix their Ferrari instead. Members of the Zoning Board of Adjustment last night passed a resolution permitting Mario LoMedico to build a foreign car service center at the intersection. The site was once the home of a small Italian restaurant which burned down several years ago. The board unanimously approved a variance allowing LoMedico to build his repair business in a retail business area with a B-1 zoning.

Will oppose additional primary

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS — While New Jersey's Presidential Primary may be overshadowed by larger state contests, the Borough Council will probably side with the county clerk that the cost is too steep to pay for the event.

During its worksession last night, council members agreed with Monmouth County Clerk Jane G. Clayton that the cost of the additional primary for the presidential sweepstakes — to be paid by municipalities — was too much to ask.

Clayton, in her letter to the borough, explained that all 21 of the county clerks have gone on record opposing the legislation. She also noted that the additional cost to be borne by the local government would wreck havoc with the state-imposed cap law which restricts budget growth.

The standard cost for an election for a town the size of Atlantic Highlands runs about $2,000.

Eatontown chamber seeks renewal

EATONTOWN — The Greater Eatontown Chamber of Commerce is once again searching for ways to solve what it has found to be a difficult problem — the deterioration of aged buildings in the downtown business district.

Joseph Jennings, chamber president, said last night that many of the buildings are over 100 years old, falling apart, and in need of substantial repair. These conditions make for a safety hazard as well as an unattractive business district, he said.

He challenged the Borough Council at its monthly workshop meeting to help the chamber devise a solution.

Man sues over mechanical bull

FREEHOLD — After being tossed from the saddle of a mechanical bull, a Neptune Township man is trying to corral an Asbury Park tavern in court. Thomas Hansen says the In The Saddle tavern didn't warn him of the machine's dangers and should be responsible for the injuries he received, the would-be urban cowboy charges in a suit docketed in Superior Court yesterday.

The mechanical animal, which is supposed to buck and gyrate like a real bull, threw Hansen from its saddle when he was inside the bar on July 8, 1981, the suit says. Hansen received "many permanent and diverse injuries" and had to take time off from work to recuperate, the suit says, adding that Hansen will lose time from work in the future, too.

The suit seeks financial compensation for injuries and damages.

Trio held in wine theft

TINTON FALLS — An adult male and two juveniles have been arrested and charged by the borough's Police Department with stealing two cases of wine from a delivery truck at Silver Liquors on Shrewsbury Avenue, police said.

Rufus Monroe Jr., 37, of 92 Peach Street was arrested and released pending a Municipal Court hearing April 12, police said. They added that the two juveniles were charged and released to the custody of relatives.

Pair held in purse snatch

LONG BRANCH — Police have arrested a Fort Monmouth soldier and another man for snatching the purse of an elderly woman and knocking her down in the process. Police yesterday arrested Tyrone Williams, 20, of Ellis Avenue, for performing the robbery of an unidentified woman on West End Avenue on March 28th.

Police last week arrested Eddie Hall, 21, of First Avenue, Atlantic Highlands, who is stationed at Fort Monmouth as a soldier. Police said Hall drove a getaway car from the scene of the crime. Police said the woman received bruises but did not require hospitalization.

Board approves church addition plans

By TERRY MOORE

MARLBORO — Despite protests from an irate neighbor, the Robertsville Bible Church was given the go-ahead last night from the Township Planning Board to build a 60-by-40 foot church addition.

Plans for the multi-purpose addition also include the clearing of trees on the side of the property for recreational space. Once the trees are removed, the church plans to set up a 200-foot berm, plant 14 Canadian Hemlock trees, and put up a 6-foot stockade fence to act as a barrier between the church property and some homes on Sherbrooke Lane.

However, Gail Baron, a Sherbrooke Lane resident whose backyard tree line will be eliminated by the plan, opposed the church's proposal.

Baron told the board that when she met with Mayor Saul Hornik in January about the church plans, the mayor assured her that the trees in her backyard would not be affected.

"The mayor told me, that night, 'Don't worry, Gail, all the trees will be cut up way way up from your property to the right.' The tree line parallel to my property was not going to be touched. That is why I went home happy that night," Baron said.

Baron is annoyed because "a lot o times" children play on the church property until 11 p.m. in the spring, creating plenty of unnecessary noise.

"I don't think any more trees should be cut down behind my property because it's only bringing my property closer and closer to that recreational area," Baron said to the board.

Les Lamberson, an Englishtown member of the Church Road church, said that more than 100 children use the church property for recreational use. Lamberson said the children have picnics on the land and play kickball and soccer on the property. However, Lamberson said the children have been using the front yard space for sports.

Mario G. Palmieri, engineer of the church plans, said that "presently, the children use the front of the property (facing Church Road) which is constantly a hazard."

Lamberson said the children use any available space they can to play on.

"You must have some minimum amount of open space," Palmieri noted.

Only eight to 10 trees of considerable size are being cut down behind Baron's property, Palmieri said after the meeting.

In answer to Baron's complaints about noise in the neighborhood, Hornik said the church's proposal to put up the berm, trees, and fence should improve the problem.

One board member said that the noise will be decreased by 20-30 percent by the barrier.

"The berm is somewhat building an acoustical barrier," said Richard Stern, of 8 Sherbrooke Lane. "You're (the church) actually going to improve the condition. I hope this plan is approved."

The church proposal was approved unanimously, 6-0.

Palmieri, president of the Palmieri Engineering Co. in Marlboro, cannot give a construction date of the project. However, the project "will be an improvement," he said.

Making beautiful music

The All Shore Band, comprised of outstanding high school musicians from Monmouth County, recently gave their annual concert at Red Bank Regional High School, Little Silver. Michael Heap, above, musical director at Freehold High School, rehearsed the orchestra which included flute and bassoon players. All the practice paid off — the concert was an evening to remember.

Chamber recognizes 'good apples'

Mike Sullivan, president of the Western Monmouth Chamber of Commerce, has announced the recipients of the Chamber's 1983 Good Apple Awards.

The awards, instituted by the Chamber in 1981 to recognize outstanding commitments to the economic development of the region, were given to Six Flags Great Adventure and Freehold Beautiful Inc.

In further explaining the awards and this year's designations, Sullivan stressed that "economic development does not begin and end with financial investment. Real development occurs when there is the additional commitment to community enrichment. That's what makes the economies livable, improves the quality of life."

An awards committee has been working during the year to collect nominations and made final determinations of Great Adventure and Freehold Beautiful because, as committee chairman, Bill Mehr noted, "No other businesses or organizations have been as active and effective as these two. The impact of Great Adventure and Freehold Beautiful is measurable and we will continue to benefit from the activities of both."

The positive economic impact of Six Flags Great Adventure upon our region is unquestionable and easily supported by financial demographics. The park provides approximately 5,500 jobs annually, has effectively reduced local tax rates, significantly reduced teenage unemployment, and produced the inevitable ripple effect upon other industry locally to make it basic to our economic health.

Beyond economics, Great Adventure endorses and implements community service programs, supports many local charities and contributes to Freehold Area Hospital, Boy Scouts, Deborah, Bricktown Hospital, Paul Kimball Hospital, National Multiple Sclerosis Society, and many area First Aid Squads.

The park donates admission tickets for fund-raising events and has most recently launched the "Great Adventure Scholarship" and the "Great Adventure Good Neighbor" program.

"Beautification is Good Economics," according to Freehold Beautiful's president, Bob Coutts.

Freehold Beautiful is a volunteer, non-profit organization that has functioned as a catalyst, stimulating action programs and involving many diverse talents and resources available through the Freeholds. The major purpose of the organization is to spur beautification, restoration and renewal.

Specific activities of Freehold Beautiful include: Development of a new landscaping plan for Freehold's Carnegie Library (project undertaken by Rotary Club); placement of planters in town and in front of local churches with plantings in spring, summer, and fall; design and re-dedication of Gere Park; (contributions by Four Seasons Nursery); coordination of a special Rutgers University, Cook College survey and study of Downtown Freehold.

Since its inception in 1981, Freehold Beautiful has been composed of a very small group of volunteers who have not only affected numerous beautification projects but also a change in the basic outlook of residents and officials toward the great potential for the Freeholds.

The Awards will be presented at the Chamber's Annual Meeting and luncheon on April 20, American Hotel.

Spodak will make bid for 12th district seat

MANALAPAN — Township Committeeman George P. Spodak said he is "confident of the support of the county Democratic party" in his bid for a seat in the 12th assembly district in November.

"I hope to get the party's endorsement on the 25th (of April)," Spodak

Spodak seeks to gain one of the assembly seats currently held by Republicans John O. Bennett III and Marie S. Muhler.

"Marie and John will know they've been in an election," he said. "I'll give them a fight."

Spodak, a committeeman for the last eight years, has served twice as township mayor and three times as deputy mayor. He said he feels he will better represent his constituents because of his career in municipal government and his Republican opponents' lack of service on municipal governing bodies.

He expects transportation and the environment to be the main issues of the campaign.

The 12th district embodies Manalapan, Marlboro, Freehold, Freehold Township, Englishtown, Colts Neck, Howell, Farmingdale, Upper Freehold Township, Allentown, Roosevelt, Holmdel, Millstone, Tinton Falls, Eatontown, West Long Branch, Red Bank, Little Silver, Shrewsbury, Shrewsbury Township, Fair Haven and Rumson.

Although Spodak's political career has been centered in western Monmouth, he has "name recognition county-wide" — better name recognition throughout the county than Bennett, he said.

He seeks the assembly seat, because Bennett and Muhler are "not doing the job — especially Marie — all she's interested in is running for office," he said.

But "you don't run against somebody, you run for an office," Spodak added.

Spodak said he does not know who the other Democratic assembly candidate will be, nor does he know who will oppose state Sen. S. Thomas Gagliano, R-Monmouth, for Gagliano's seat in November.

That announcement will be made on April 25, he added.

Spodak, a graduate of Thomas Edison College in Trenton, has served on the township Planning Board and as Township Committee liaison to the Western Monmouth Utilities Authority and Manalapan-Englishtown Board of Education.

He also is a former member of the Western Monmouth Transportation Board, which since has evolved into the Central New Jersey Transportation Board.

By trade, Spodak has been in the wholesale meat business for the last 18 years.

He resides on Crown Court with his wife, Isabella, and their three children. — ROB REINALDA

Assembly hats thrown in ring

By BARBARA KATELL
State House Correspondent

MATAWAN — Last night it was the turn of Jacqueline Walker of Matawan to officially announce her candidacy for the Democratic nomination to run for the open Assembly seat in the Bayshore.

Walker held a party for approximately 100 enthusiastic supporters to announce that she will seek the endorsement of a district-wide Democratic mini-convention, tentatively scheduled for April 25.

Walker, who is the party's municipal chairman in Matawan, is considered the front-runner for the nomination to replace Assemblyman Richard Van Wagner, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, on the Democratic ticket.

The Middletown Democrat is giving up his Assembly seat to challenge incumbent Sen. John P. Gallagher, R-Monmouth and Middlesex, for the Bayshore Senate seat.

Van Wagner will head a ticket that will also include Assemblyman William E. Flynn, D-Monmouth and Middlesex, who will be seeking his sixth two-year term.

Walker's festive announcement party was attended mostly by her fellow Democrats from the borough. But Keansburg Municipal Chairman Louis LoBello was there to offer his support, as were Marvin Olinsky of Holmdel, president of the Bayshore Democratic Club, and Eileen Thornton, president of the New Jersey Women's Political Caucus.

Welfare bilking charged

FREEHOLD — Six women, including a Long Branch resident accused of illegally obtaining more than $43,000, have been indicted by county grand juries this week for welfare fraud.

None of the incidents are related, but all six women are accused of bilking the county Board of Social Services by obtaining public assistance while concealing employment or failing to disclose other income.

Dolores Kyles Richardson, 41, of Joline Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for receiving $43,907 between Oct. 1971 and Aug. 1979 by falsely "holding herself out to be poor and needy," her indictment says.

During this time, the indictment says, Richardson received — and concealed — Social Security income.

Richardson is also charged with theft by deception for allegedly obtaining additional assistance of more than $500 between Sept. 1979 and Oct. 1981 while failing to report other income, the indictment says.

Annette Overstreet, 21, of Chelton Avenue, Long Branch, is charged with theft by deception. An indictment accuses her of not reporting unemployment insurance benefits while she collected more than $500 in assistance between Aug. 1981 and last June.

Emma Powell, also known as Emma Jackson, 32, of First Street, Freehold, is charged with theft by deception for allegedly failing to report wages and unemployment insurance income while receiving more than $500 in assistance between Oct. 1980 and last June.

Shirley Fuller, 40, of Woodrow Wilson Homes, Long Branch, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses. She received $2,647 in assistance over a 13-month period ending in April 1979 while she was employed, the indictment says.

Paulette Washington, 38, of Delaware Avenue, Cliffwood, is charged with obtaining money under false pretenses for allegedly receiving unemployment benefits while collecting $1,375 in assistance between Feb. 1979 and Sept. 1979.

Washington is also charged with theft by deception for allegedly receiving $2,544 in assistance while failing to report income and unemployment benefits between Sept. 1979 and Dec. 1981.

FREEHOLD— Karen Roberts, an advanced biology senior at Freehold High School, has been chosen to present her science research paper at the 21st Monmouth Junior Science Symposium at Monmouth College, West Long Branch, on April 21-22.

Roberts is one of eight New York area students chosen to attend the event to present their research work. The program is sponsored by the college and the U.S. Army at Fort Monmouth, Eatontown.

The title of Roberts' paper is "An In vitro Method for the Production and Screening of Tumor and Histo-Compatibility of pectic Monoclonal Antibodies." The result of this research could be the manufacture of anti-tumor antibodies that will locate and attack tumor cells, according to the literature.

Roberts did her research at the University of Iowa where she attended the Summer Science Institute, a summer program supported by the National Science Foundation which selects outstanding junior and senior students to work with science mentors. Her work was praised by the research staff.

Eric Stutzke, science department supervisor at Freehold High School, is very encouraged by the success of the students enrolled in the school's science program.

In last year's competition, the high school placed first in cumulative scores in biology, chemistry, and physics in Monmouth County at the Jerome Bentley State Science Day at Monmouth College.

Junior Brian Hou placed in the top 15 students in the state in biology. In 1981, Ryan Moats placed in the top 15 in chemistry. In 1978 Michael Jushchuk claimed this distinction in biology.

Stutzke emphasized that top students can be thanked for these successful science programs in high schools. "They have to have the desire, drive and determination to know more, and to grow," he said.

Board approves water main addition

MARLBORO — The Township Planning Board last night voted to permit the Marlboro Township Municipal Utilities Authority to add a 670-foot water main to the existing water line on Church Road.

The estimated cost of the project, which will be funded by MTMUA, is between $20,000 and $25,000, MTMUA Attorney Peter Wersinger said last night.

"There's an existing gap in the water distribution system in the Whittier Oaks area," Wersinger said after the meeting. The bidding process for the project will be acted upon next month, he added.

In other business, the board granted former Mayor Morton Salkind a time extension for the site plan approval of the development of a 15-acre commercial land plot off Route 9.

The property, which Salkind said "is diagonally across from the new Pathmark Shopping Center," is north of Route 520 and west of Route 9.

Salkind said he intends to build a full-service restaurant on the tract this year, along with hotel and banking facilities in a commercial-type center.

Salkind said the restaurant he plans to build is "very needed" in the township. With many new industries moving into the area, "it's my expectation that the Route 9 corridor will grow rapidly," he added.

Salkind said he requested more time for site plan approval because of a sewer moratorium.

Lieberman will not run for seat

MANALAPAN — In response to a prediction by an opposing party member, Republican municipal Chairman Walter Lieberman last night said, "I am not a candidate" for Township Committee.

Lieberman, an unsuccessful candidate for the five-member committee last November, said there definitely will be a Republican slate for the two committee seats. He would not reveal, however, who will fill that slate, which will be pitted against Democratic incumbent Richard Sharkey and newcomer David Kaiserman.

That announcement will be made at the party's regular meeting April 18 at 8:30 p.m., at the Knight's of Columbus Hall in Englishtown. County Freeholder Frank A. Self will be the featured speaker that evening.

Marlboro board denies raises for 3 school staff members

MARLBORO — Two vice principals and a music teacher will not receive contracted raises next year, apparently because the Board of Education is citing them with "inefficiency or other good cause."

The vice principals, Alan Sitek and Stephen Shifrinson, work at the middle school, while John Rupp is a music teacher at Central school.

The board voted unanimously last night not to grant the raises, saying the action was "permissible pursuant to the provisions" of a state statute.

But the original text of the resolution contained a paragraph that was deleted on the recommendation of the board's attorney.

The printed resolution noted that "the contract between the Teachers Association, the Administrators Association and the Board of Education permit the withholding of increments for inefficiency or other good cause."

There was no discussion on the resolution among board members or from any of the 70 residents and teachers who were present at the board's regular meeting.

The candidates will vie for Sharkey's seat and that of Committeewoman Sandra Silber. Silber, a Democrat, reportedly plans to seek reelection but has not yet officially announced her candidacy.

Middletown committee seeks to settle Spy House lease

By DAN BREEN

MIDDLETOWN — The Township Committee wants to meet with the management of the Shoal Harbor Museum — the Spy House — to finally settle the lease of the 300-year-old historic site. But committee members, especially Mayor Paul Linder, have expressed concern over which of two organizations connected with the museum — the Preservationists, Inc. or the newly formed Shoal Harbor Museum Corporation — should be the lessee of the property.

Township Attorney Peter Carton met recently with a local lawyer and former township attorney Patrick Healy, who is representing the museum in the matter, but Carton said he left the meeting unsure of which organization Healy is representing during the talks.

Intimately involved with both organizations is Gertrude Neidinger, the long-time curator of the Port Monmouth museum.

The Preservationists group, Neidinger said, was formed to raise money for the museum after it dissolved its relationship with the Middletown Historical Society.

But the group was never meant to actually control the museum nor take part in its management, Neidinger said, something which has caused the recent confusion in the lease negotiations.

That confusion, Neidinger said, led to the formation of the museum corporation in the past few months. Though it is awaiting a state charter, the corporation has 17 trustees and is in the midst of developing its bylaws, the curator said.

The Preservationists only assist her in her work, Neidinger said, adding "any decision I make as curator, I make as curator — they don't run the show."

The two organizations will interact in the future only to discuss fund-raising and developing a budget for the museum, Neidinger added.

Linder said the committee a few years ago appointed a member of the Preservationists — John O'Brien — to the township's Historic Preservation Commission as representative for the Spy House.

The mayor suggested that the museum corporation represent the landmark on the commission. Committeeman Joseph McGrath said no matter which organization meets with the committee to discuss the lease, Neidinger should be present since she actually runs the museum.

The committee and Neidinger have sparred for two years over the lease. One major obstacle was the committee's insistence that the curator turn over a list of items contained in the museum.

Linder said during a committee meeting that such a list had been received and apparently that ended the dispute, though Neidinger said she sent in a list for insurance purposes.

Neidinger said she and Healy have discussed the most recently developed lease and find it "to be fair," but added the township wants a five-year lease with an option to renew. She said she originally hoped for a longer term, such as 40 years.

However, the curator said she is still concerned whether the township will take action to improve the structure.

The committee recently authorized the historic architect who supervised the original restoration of the structure to return and check out Neidinger's report of leaks on the bay side of the building.

Neidinger said the complaints are "nothing new to them, since I recently found a letter I wrote to the committee in 1975 that spoke of tremendous leaks on the east end of the house."

In another matter involving the museum, Neidinger said she was optimistic that she would eventually regain roughly $900 in funds for the museum she claims the Historical Society has withheld for more than seven years.

Last month Neidinger sent a package of documents to the Township Committee requesting they investigate what happened to the money, which she said she's been trying to get since quitting the Historical Society in 1975.

The committee sent Neidinger's package to the Society President Philip Goldstein said after meeting with the society's board that they would not turn over any funds nor their books.

Neidinger had threatened to bring the matter to the county prosecutor for investigation, and Goldstein said she would have to do that to resolve the matter.

The curator would only say she was optimistic and that the statute of limitations on such funding has not run out.

Teens injured in car accident

MARLBORO — An accident in which a 17-year-old driver lost control of his car on Ticetown Road yesterday afternoon left a 14-year-old township youth in critical condition in the intensive care unit at Bayshore Community Hospital, Holmdel.

The hospital would not release any details of the condition of Robert Farr of Ticetown Road, who was a passenger in the car driven by Kenneth J. Hickey of 257 Brookside Ave., Laurence Harbor.

Hickey is listed in stable condition in the hospital's pediatric ward, the hospital spokeswoman said.

According to police, Hickey's car was eastbound on Ticetown Road when it went out of control, spinning around once and striking a tree with the driver's side. Police said Hickey was trapped inside the car until he was freed by police.

No summons has been issued, pending further investigation by Patrolman Robert Volker, traffic safety officer.

Qualifying horse shows set

FREEHOLD — The Monmouth County 4-H Association will present the first of three qualifying horse shows on April 24 at the East Freehold Park Showgrounds, Kosloski Road, at 8:30 a.m.

The show is for Western and English 4-H riders. Classes to be judged include pleasure pony, pleasure horse and equitation. English riders have hunter, model and driving classes. Western riders have model, driving, barrel racing, pole bending and reining and riding. Both groups must enter the grooming and showmanship class.

Winners of the events accumulate points. The riders with the most points at the conclusion of the shows go on to state competition in August in Jamesburg.

Audrey Bostwick will judge the English riders; Dee DeGran will judge the Western riders.

There are 11 4-H riding clubs in Monmouth County. Each club is required to help with the management of one of the qualifying shows.

The second show will take place on May 22 at Tall Oaks Farm, Howell. The final show will take place on June 26 at East Freehold Park.

4-H members wishing to enter the competition should register by April 15 with Judy Poulos.
