By GAYLE E. RABIN
The Register

LONG BRANCH — State environmental officials say they're skeptical of predictions by the mayor and the developers of a proposed $35 million Hilton Hotel and convention center that construction can start by spring or early summer.

Although the 12-story, 400-room hotel has informal approval from the state Department of Environmental Protection, an application for a permit required for projects of 25 or more units or a building with 300 or more parking spaces has not been filed.

It's usually six to eight months from the date of filing before this type of permit — established under the Coastal Area Facilities Review Act (CAFRA) of the Division of Coastal Resources — is granted, said division spokeswoman Ruth Ehinger.

While Ehinger held a pre-application meeting last May with developers William V. Maloney Sr. and his son, William V. Maloney Jr., a meeting scheduled for Jan. 21 will only determine what is needed in the CAFRA application.

Breaking ground this spring, "doesn't seem very likely to me," Ehinger said. "It's not realistic."

Michael Gross, attorney for the Maloneys, said they will be filing the permit application as soon as possible. "What happens at the meeting on the 21st will dictate that to some extent," he said.

However, Mayor Philip D. Huhn said he will ask local legislators to help push the application forward.

"I will be calling on Assemblyman Anthony Villane (R-Monmouth), Assemblyman Joe Palaia (D-Monmouth) and Senator (S. Thomas) Gagliano (R-Monmouth) to expedite the review of the plans," Huhn said.

"I am confident that construction will begin by late spring or early summer of this year," he said.

The hotel will occupy the 8 acres of Garfield Park and 3 to 4 acres of South Broadway, Huhn said. Demolition of three vacant buildings on South Broadway began Wednesday.

In spite of this, the Maloneys must also receive site plan approval from the city Planning Board before construction starts.

A public workshop meeting between the developers and the board is scheduled for tomorrow night. However, Huhn said he expects several informal meetings between the Maloneys and board members in the next 60 to 90 days before the application is ready for a site plan hearing.

The Maloneys might be able to break ground before a CAFRA permit is issued if they apply to the Division of Coastal Resources for special permission to begin foundation work, said Kevin Broderick, a division

Little Silver couple help kids in need

By STEPHANIE GLUCKMAN
The Register

LITTLE SILVER — Teresa Theobald's foster children started calling her and her husband, Richard, "mommy" and "daddy" right away.

"One minute you don't know them and the next minute they live in your home," Mrs. Theobald said.

"It brings it to a reality as opposed to a story in the news. You can see that there are actually people, little people, with nowhere to go. I don't think Monmouth County residents realize it's right here. They tend to think it's in Newark or somewhere else."

The Parker Avenue resident said the two foster girls she and her husband have cared for are from Long Branch. "It's right there on your doorstep. You just don't know about it," she said.

Fewer and fewer people are able to take in foster children these days. As a result, there is a shortage of foster homes in New Jersey that has reached alarming proportions.

Because of the breakdown of the nuclear family (a father, a mother and children), fewer people have the time or money to care for foster children, according to Diane Cornell of the New Jersey Foster Parents Association.

Single parents who run households commonly work, and are not home to care for extra children, she said.

Even where there are two parents, it is increasingly frequent in today's society that both parents work, Cornell added.

More than half of all New Jersey mothers work outside the home, and one-fifth of all children in the state live in single-parent families, according to 1980 census data.

The foster parents association has begun a publicity drive to find at least 1,000 new foster homes. Recognizing the crisis in foster care, the state awarded the association a $79,000 grant to recruit foster parents last July.

The reality of living with a foster child crept up on the Theobalds.

"I'm not sure how my consciousness was raised," Mrs. Theobald said.

"In the evenings, my husband would be reading things in the paper to me about child abuse. More and more in the media you'd hear about children in need. Monmouth County has such a high child abuse and neglect rate. The need for foster parents is so great."

The Theobalds requested information about foster parenting, filled out forms and entered a six-week training program required by the state Division of Youth and Family Services (DYFS).

"Each week there's a different subject. They tell you about abuse and neglect and what that really means. We never knew," Mrs. Theobald said.

"It's a very negative course. DYFS tells you the truth. If you get through it and still decide you want to be a foster parent, you're prepared," she said.

"After the course is over, you never really believe anyone will come. It's like being pregnant and knowing you're pregnant, but you don't really believe a baby will come," she said.

"So when the phone rings and it's an officer from DYFS and they start to describe to you a child who is in their office at that moment, and then they say, 'Is there any way you will be interested in taking her?' if you say 'yes,' you mean in a week or so.

"And they say, 'We'll be over in 45 minutes.'"

That's the way it happened with the Theobalds.

'Sand Dollar' links fishermen to land-bound loved ones

By ANNE McGRATH

HARVEY CEDARS — Fishermen who sail out of Barnegat Light depend on God, the U.S. Coast Guard and Mary Louise Cook.

From a communications system in a corner of her nautically decorated dining room, Mrs. Cook connects sick deck hands with hospital emergency rooms, alerts crew members whose pregnant wives have gone into labor, and reassures anxious mothers that their sons are safe.

An infrequent sailor who has made most of her trips to sea to deposit the ashes of deceased family members, Mrs. Cook also calls the National Weather Service daily with reports on visibility, winds and sea conditions she gets from boaters.

Her VHF and sideband radios are on daily from about 8 a.m. until 11 p.m., except for Thursday mornings, when 66-year-old Mrs. Cook does her grocery shopping.

Like a mother who detects a child's slightest sound, she always is poised to hear, "Come in Sand Dollar" — her "handle."

"You don't listen. Your ear is tuned," Mrs. Cook explained in a recent interview. "We can have music on, TV on, a crowd of people, I just hear when somebody calls me."

In 1982, local fishermen expressed their gratitude to Mrs. Cook by throwing her a surprise party, at which she was presented with commendations from local emergency officials, the U.S. Coast Guard and the weather service.

"Although it's not official as a title of any sort, she really is a life saver to a lot of people," said Nancy Gallimore, wife of a fisherman. "Crew men that are injured — they don't call the Coast Guard, they call Sand Dollar."

"For the girlfriends and wives of fishermen who go out to sea, she's able to pass messages and just keep their spirits up."

Mrs. Gallimore said "Sand Dollar" has been known to order roses for a fisherman's beloved and get answers about mortgage payments for those left at home.

Mrs. Cook and her husband, Howard, built a summer home in Harvey Cedars in 1952 and moved there permanently from Burlington in 1968 with their two sons, Thomas and James. James was killed in a boating accident in 1979 at age 29.

They became friendly with Bill Wengel, a blind, double amputee nicknamed "Teddy Bear," who used to take messages from the boats. When he died about 16 years ago, "it was just wished on me," Mrs. Cook said.

At the time, fishermen were using CB radios for land-to-sea communication. By the early 1970s, most were using VHF radios and Mrs. Cook got her first Federal Communications Commission license to operate such equipment in 1976.

RADIO MOMMA — Mary Louise Cook, who goes by the radio handle of "Sand Dollar," sits by the communications center in her Harvey Cedars home where she chats with fisherman and deck hands to pass along information and help in emergencies. In appreciation for her help, which has been going on every day for 10 years, fishermen and their wives bought her a sideband radio to augment her VHF set.

George Bush

Miami George?

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don't be surprised if you turn on the tube some Friday night and see Vice President George Bush chasing cocaine traffickers around Florida.

"Miami Vice," NBC-TV's hit pop-cop show, is considering a cameo appearance by Washington's No. 2 man, the Los Angeles Herald Examiner reported yesterday.

Steven Holmes, assistant to Executive Producer Michael Mann, said Friday his boss was excited about the possibility of a Bush role "and told me to 'Go for it.'"

"I tried to call Bush's office over the holidays and couldn't get a hold of them," he told the newspaper. "I was going to call them again in a few days."

The idea was broached late last year by Bush's deputy press secretary, Gail Fisher, who thought it was appropriate since her boss has been heading up a drug-smuggling task force that focuses on Florida, said vice presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Coleman Young

He's still the mayor

DETROIT (AP) — Coleman

Young, the city's longest-serving mayor, has been inaugurated for a fourth term in office.

Young, 67, rang in his new term Friday with a prayer breakfast, senior citizens tea, luncheon, formal ceremony and inaugural ball.

Young, who officially took the oath of office in late December, was sworn in before 2,000 people at Ford Auditorium.

"There are some who openly flirt with the idea of disposable, obsolete, throw-away cities — who think that some can prosper while others perish," Young told 250 people at the prayer breakfast. "Well, it's not like that. The future can only be bright ... if no one is excepted."

Young, a Democrat, captured 60.9 percent of the popular vote in the Nov. 5 general election, sweeping aside political newcomer Thomas Barrow. The former state legislator was the first black elected to head the nation's sixth-largest city.

Hijacking recalled

ROME (AP) — The captain of the Achille Lauro says he has given a film producer permission to use his written recollections about the cruise ship's hijacking as a basis for a screenplay.

Gerardo De Rosa told a news conference Friday that the producer, Francesco Palagi, has the option to use the captain's writings for any film that might be produced.

Palestinian terrorists hijacked the Achille Lauro Oct. 7 during a Mediterranean cruise. An elderly, wheelchair-bound passenger, Leon Klinghoffer, of New York, was killed.

De Rosa said his writings are "psychological meditations" based on conversations he had with the hijackers, not strictly factual.

"The facts are known to everybody," De Rosa was quoted as saying by the Italian news agency ANSA. "But one doesn't know how I succeeded, in short time, to resolve the situation."

Teen shot during basketball game riot

MOUNT VERNON, N.Y. (AP) — A New Rochelle teen-ager remained in critical condition yesterday after being shot during a melee that broke out following a basketball game between two Westchester County high school teams, police and hospital officials said.

Another teen-ager was arrested in connection with the shooting, police said.

The injured teen-ager, David Washington, 18, of New Rochelle, underwent surgery and was in critical but stable condition, said Josephine Gonzalez, a spokeswoman for Jacobi Hospital in the Bronx. He suffered a single gunshot wound to the head, police said.

Travis B. Euell, 16, of 246 Lincoln Ave. in New Rochelle, surrendered to Mount Vernon authorities at police headquarters at 11:30 p.m.

Friday, according to Detective John Gabelli.

Euell was charged with second-degree attempted murder, criminal use of a firearm and criminal possession of a weapon, according to a report in yesterday's editions of Westchester-Rockland Newspapers.

Although officers on the scene would not say what led to the shooting, some spectators said it was not related to the traditional rivalry between Mount Vernon High School and New Rochelle High School, according to the newspaper.

It stemmed from an incident in a New Rochelle bar last week, the paper quoted spectators as saying. Washington was not involved in that incident, the paper said.

Police said Washington was shot in the Mount Vernon High School parking lot adjacent to the gymnasium about 5:45 p.m. Friday as an overflow crowd streamed from the school after its loss to New Rochelle 57 to 53.

Washington, who was a spectator at the basketball game, is a former New Rochelle student, police said.

Police were called to the scene after a report of a fight in the parking lot, according to Lt. Michael O'Rourke, a spokesman for the Mount Vernon Police Department.

The newspaper said police found an unruly crowd of about 100 people heading to the lot where Washington lay bleeding.

Police surrounded the parking lot and the building, located at California Road, and no one was allowed to leave for about one hour.

Mount Vernon Superintendent of Schools Dr. William Prattella said school officials from Mount Vernon and New Rochelle will meet Monday morning to determine whether the teams will meet again as scheduled Feb. 10, the paper reported.

Prattella said the group would make a recommendation on how "we'll handle this or whether there will be any future sports events between the two schools," the paper said.

Mount Vernon School Board President William Martimucci said he would decide whether to call an emergency meeting of the school board after Monday's meeting of school officials, according to the paper.

It reported that Quinton Young, a Mount Vernon School Board member, who also attended the game, called for a special meeting and suggested the games be held earlier in the day to avoid disturbances.

"It's better to me than TV," said Mrs. Cook, explaining that she conjures up mental images of the crews working at sea.

Crews on extended fishing trips from Barnegat Light, an island borough about 2 1/4 miles from Harvey Cedars, touch base with "Sand Dollar" every few days to let her know they're OK and when they expect to be back in port.

Once a fisherman called and asked her to let his wife know he had car keys in his pocket. Another one realized, after he was miles from land, that he failed to leave his paycheck behind.

Captains frequently call Mrs. Cook when their boats or equipment are broken, asking her to contact mechanics or electricians. Party boat captains have asked her to have police waiting at the dock to handle rowdy drunks they have aboard.

And sometimes she is the axis in critical situations, "patching in" captains with doctors or alerting ambulance crews to be at the dock. "I used to get nervous, but for some reason I don't any more," Mrs. Cook said. "Of course, I'm always scared down deep. You're always wondering if things are going to turn out all right."

Mrs. Cook said having her ear to so many decks sometimes presents temptations to get involved. Although she tries to avoid meddling, her quick action probably helped save a lost boater last March.

Matawan cops end lake scan, await reports

MATAWAN — Police have received no further information on the reported fall of a person through the ice on Lake Lefferts Friday.

Scuba divers had searched for a body in the Lake for nearly four hours before the search was called off. The search will only resume if officials receive news of a missing person or other related information, said Lt. Irving Nusbaum.

Nusbaum said the only incident he can recall when a person fell through ice in the lake happened 10 years ago. He said a man in his late 20s died when he fell through while skating there. The body was found three weeks later.

She recalled hearing someone aboard a boat called the Riptide seeking help from the Coast Guard in Rockaway, N.Y., after running aground. Three or four hours later, she heard the Riptide calling the guard again asking, "Where am I?"

The boater said he thought he was near Coney Island in New York, but Mrs. Cook was suspicious.

"He sounded closer and closer," she said. She turned on a directional signal on her VHF radio and could tell the boater was east to northeast of her home.

Grabbing a walkie talkie, Mrs. Cook dashed to the beach to see the Riptide drifting offshore, and she

For example, Poland, China, East Germany and the Soviet Union ban tobacco advertising and have strong anti-smoking policies, but consumption remains high. But advertising bans and warning labels in Finland, Norway and Sweden have resulted in a decline in cigarette consumption.

Some countries with weaker anti-smoking policies have seen better results, the study said. Belgium, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom allow print tobacco advertising and have only voluntary warning labels on cigarette packages. But, in part because of educational campaigns, cigarette consumption has declined by at least 20 percent in each country.

And some countries have seen smoking drop with no effort, the study said. It cited drops in consumption of 7 to 32 percent in Bolivia, Chile and Zaire over the past decade, attributing the decline to economic difficulties in those countries.

But other developing countries show sharp increases in cigarette consumption over the past 10 years — 138 percent in Egypt, 85 percent in China, 48 percent in Kenya, 45 percent in South Korea and 29 percent in Bangladesh, for example.

"The overall situation of anti-smoking efforts, then, is at best a standoff in industrial countries and a rout in developing ones," the study says. "At the current rate, Western countries will not see a major improvement in the health effects of smoking for many decades, but Eastern and developing countries will see a rapid worsening."

The study recommended that countries with low smoking rates and no domestic tobacco industry simply ban tobacco altogether. In other countries, it suggests smoking restrictions in public areas to protect non-smokers from the smoke and use of economic incentives.

Manslaughter draws 20

FREEHOLD — A 21-year-old Point Pleasant man was sentenced to 20 years in prison Friday for shooting his childhood foe to death.

Dominic Badami Jr., must serve 10 years in state prison before he is eligible for parole under the sentence imposed by Superior Court Judge Michael D. Farren. Badami admitted shooting Robert Malzer Jr., twice in Allaire State Park in March 22, 1983.

Badami has said that Malzer continually beat him up ever since the sixth grade. Badami said that he dropped out of school and joined the military because of Malzer's constant abuse. Badami said that on March 22, 1983, he met Malzer outside of a store and the two decided to go drinking in Allaire Park.

Once they reached the park however, Badami said Malzer again threatened to beat him up and steal his car.

Badami said he then took a sawed-off shot gun from under the front seat. Badami said Malzer then started at him. Badami said he panicked and shot Malzer twice.

Badami drove away leaving Malzer's bleeding body in the park.

Farren also fined Badami $2,520 payable to the state Violent Crimes Compensation Board.

Under plea bargain agreement with First Assistant Prosecutor Paul F. Chalet, Badami pleaded guilty to aggravated manslaughter last month.

For the love of the Boss

RUMSON — Off duty police officers working for Bruce Springsteen, that well-known Columbia Records employee, told a group of Greenpeace solicitors yesterday they could not enter the local celebrity's property.

But the police offered to take information about Greenpeace, an activist group trying to ban the killing and maiming of whales and other sea mammals, to Springsteen.

That afternoon, another woman with another purpose was turned away from The Boss' property. The woman carried a sign saying "I Love You Bruce" and was trying to get closer, to his Rumson mansion to express her adulation. And so it goes.

Women given 15 years

FREEHOLD — A Monmouth Park groom was sentenced to 15 years in state prison after admitting she shot and killed her boyfriend.

Lelis Fernandez of West New York, must serve five years under the sentence imposed by Superior Court Judge Benedict R. Nicolsia, before being considered for parole.

She was given credit for already having served 210 days in the county jail.

Fernandez admitted that she shot Eduardo C. Della at Monmouth Park on June 15.

Fernandez has said she had wanted to move out of the room she was sharing with Della at the park. The two argued and Ms. Fernandez shot him with a .38-caliber revolver four times in the back and once in the chest.

Fernandez pleaded guilty to aggravated manslaughter last month, under a plea bargain agreement with Assistant Prosecutor James Fagen.

Parkway deaths decline

WOODBIDGE — The Garden State Parkway recorded a 100 percent improvement in its death rate over 1984 and the lowest in its 32-year history, New Jersey Highway Authority Chairman Judith H. Stanley has announced.

The Authority operates the 173-mile Parkway and the Garden State Arts Center in Holmdel. In 1985, 20 persons died in 17 separate Parkway accidents, compared to 37 deaths and 35 fatal crashes in 1984.

The 1984 fatality rate was 0.90 deaths per 100 million miles of driving while last year that rate was halved to 0.45 deaths per 100 million miles traveled.

"It is an accomplishment that owes a lot to the great emphasis that the Parkway puts on safety," Stanley said.

The Parkway's previous lowest rate was 0.66 which occurred in both 1961 and 1981. The Highway Authority anticipates that its 1985 rate will place it near or at the top in the national safety ranking of major toll roads.

"The most impressive aspect of the decrease in the number of fatalities is that it was achieved during a year which also saw a 7 percent increase in traffic," said the Chairman. "Even though there were more vehicles traveling further on the Parkway this past year, our fatalities were still down."

Stanley attributed the lower fatality rate to the Parkway's stepped-up enforcement and safety education programs, including the special attention paid to drinking driving, the recent New Jersey seat belt law and heightened public awareness of driving safety.

She urged patrons to continue their safe driving practices, pledging that the Parkway will continue to make roadway safety a top priority in the new year.

Teen injured in wreck

SEWESBURY — An 18-year old Long Branch woman was hurt yesterday when glass got into her eyes during a two-car accident at Sycamore Avenue and Route 35, police said.

Magen McCaffery was taken to Riverview Medical center, where she was treated and released, a hospital spokeswoman said.

McCaffery was a passenger in a car being driven west on Sycamore by John Keilly, 18, of Long Branch. When Keilly came to the intersection, he made a left turn, and his car was hit on the passenger side by a car being driven east on Sycamore by Bruce Mayo, 33, of Tinton Falls, police said.

McCaffery was extricated from Keilly's car by Red Bank firefighters with the Jaws of Life, police said. She was taken to Riverview by members of the borough first aid squad, police said.

Keilly was issued a summons for not wearing a seatbelt, police said.

Patrolman Richard Johnson responded to the call.

ASBURY PARK — If 1985 left a cultural legacy to 1986, it is this: that the bad boys — and good — of rock 'n roll can make a lot of noise for a cause greater than glitz, fame or fortune.

Tomorrow night, in the tradition of Live Aid, Band Aid, and Farm Aid, New Jersey's unique delegation to the world of rock music will record the final strains of an effort to help the state's hungry.

It's called J.A.M. '86, and anyone who can convince the man at the door at the Stone Pony that he or she is a band member can sing at either the 6 p.m. session for those under age 21, or the 9 p.m. session for legal drinkers.

The choruses will be mixed with the rest of two already-recorded songs the following Monday at a New York studio, and organizers hope the songs will attract a big-name record label.

Regardless, the vice-chairman of Gov. Thomas H. Kean's Hunger Commission said JAM '86 will be successful just by raising public consciousness of a problem that afflicts an estimated one of every seven state residents.

Kathleen Dichiaro, working in conjunction with the Community Food Bank of New Jersey in Newark said that ratio increases in the state's inner cities to one in three who are hungry.

"We're not in the same category as Ethiopia, but when the state's economy is in a turnaround, it's shocking to see the number of people who have to go hungry," Dichiaro said.

The Community Food Bank is a non-profit, private agency that stores and distributes surplus food to 500 affiliates throughout the state. It is to be the beneficiary of the local effort.

"We're thrilled, very excited," said Dichiaro. "We're pleased that New Jersey artists are working hard on this."

Ed Testa, rhythm guitar player for the Cruisers, came up with the idea for J.A.M. '86 — Jersey Artists for Mankind — in April from the other "aid" concerts in 1985.

For fear the local effort would be overshadowed by those in the national spotlight, he said he waited until now to team up with other musicians and disc jockey Lee Mrowicki of the Stone Pony. "We figured everyone was kind of aided out, if you know what I mean," said Testa.

"We named it JAM '86 thinking that there would be a JAM '87, JAM '88, and right on up."

The group of New Jersey musicians and Mrowicki are also responsible for organizing a concert at the Stone Pony on Jan. 19 to benefit workers at the Freehold 3M plant, which is scheduled to close this year.

Proceeds will go to benefit efforts by Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers Union local 8-760 to convince Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. not to shut down the plant.

The immediate effort to help feed New Jersey's hungry came together in much the same way the 3M concert did, Testa said — informally.

"Lee (Mrowicki) talked to Tim Ryan (of the Tim Ryan band), and Gary Tallent (a bass player for Bruce Springsteen) came in, and the whole thing came together," he said.

Testa wrote one of the songs, called "Save Life, Save Love," and called it "more of a dancin' song," then "We've got the Love," by Joel Krauss, formerly of The Cats, and Bobby Bendiera of Southside Johnny and the Jukes.

Testa described the second song as one having a "We Are The World" kind of melody. The choruses recorded tomorrow will be for both songs, to be cut as a two-sided single.

Other musicians include Max Weinberg, of Springsteen's band, on drums; Harry Filkin of Diamonds on Guitar; Testa on guitar; Eddie Iglewski of Diamonds on bass; Kevin Kavanaugh of the Jukes on keyboards; and musicians from La Bamba and the Hubcaps, the Z Band, and the Jukes.

With all of these names, the question has to come up. Will Springsteen show?

"No comment," said Mrowicki.

"We can hold 500 people, and whoever shows up and can get in can sing," Mrowicki said. "And the phone's been ringing off the hook."

Mrowicki described the undertaking as ambitious, and noted that Shorefire Studios in Long Branch, Videomedia in Manasquan, and The Power Station Recording Studio, (the owners of which live in New Jersey) have donated time, space, and equipment.

"It's our own New Jersey way of saying we can do something," Mrowicki said.

He said the Stone Pony raised $16,000 this year to benefit the hungry in Ethiopia, and is now following Springsteen's lead by supporting local food banks.

Springsteen has donated $25,000 to the community food bank, and $10,000 to Lunchbreak, a Red Bank "soup kitchen."

"We're trying to show that the little guys can do something too," Mrowicki said.

The next step is attracting a major label to print copies of the single, and with that in mind, Videomedia, Manasquan, will make a video of Monday's performance for promotion purposes.

"We're anxious to see what happens," said Dichiaro, of the food bank.

"Everyone's real good," said Testa. "Some didn't get a chance to get in on it, and we've got some mean bands in New Jersey. This is a way to get everyone involved."

Sewer utility to be bought by township

FREEHOLD TOWNSHIP — The township is expected to close its $300,000 purchase of the Wynnewood Sewerage Utility Co. Feb. 28, Deputy Mayor James Mayor said yesterday.

The money is to be incorporated in a $2 million general improvement bond ordinance, Mayor said, adding that there is to be a first reading of the ordinance tomorrow, and a second reading and probable passage in two weeks.

Mayor Dorothy Avallone had announced the imminent purchase of the company Thursday. The purchase will save each homeowner about $100 a year in his sewerage bills, according to officials.

Wynnewood, a private utility under the jurisdiction of the Board of Public Utilities, serves more than 840 township families and businesses, they said.

Because of a rate increase granted by the BPU, along with a rate increase by the Manasquan River Regional Sewerage Authority, each Wynnewood customer Monday began paying an annual sewerage rate of $498, according to Romoe Cascaes, township clerk. The prior rate was $267, he said.

The $498 rate, he said, will be reduced to $400 when the purchase deal is closed next month, eliminating the profit margin.

Committeeman Arthur Kondrup said yesterday that the rate will be reduced again by approximately $50 if the township wins its suit in Superior Court to dissociate itself from the MRRSA. The suit was filed in November.

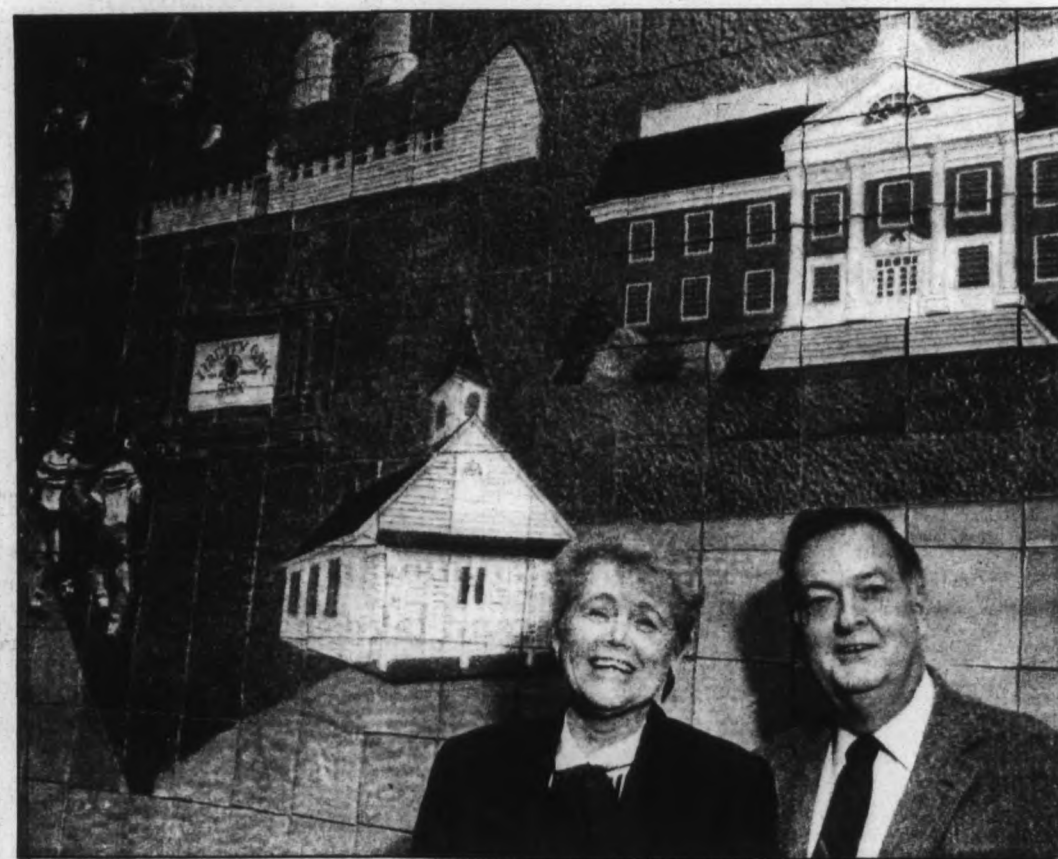

"This will mean a real savings to the Freehold Township residents who live in the Wynnewood franchise area," Avallone said, adding that the township would like to have the Ocean County Utilities Authority take over the sewer lines.

She said she and other township officials will "continue our efforts" to purchase the Freehold Sewer Co., the other private utility serving residents here.

A favorable purchase price to acquire Freehold Sewer Co., she said, would allow the township to decrease the sewerage rate "for our residents who reside in that franchise area."

Avallone said there are certain "economies of scale" which come into play, allowing the township to expand its sewer system without incurring significant additional expenses.

Plans include a 40,000-square-foot two-story, glass-fronted building with glass awnings to house the bakery and an upper level bride shop, said Joe Caputo. The bakery will be connected to a mini-mall of five or six retail shops on either side, he said.

THEN AND NOW — Mayor Dorothy Avallone and Deputy Mayor James Mayor stand before the township's artistic addition to the municipal building.

Freehold Township's history is in tile

FREEHOLD TOWNSHIP — From the first residents, the Lenni Lenape Indians to today's laboratory scientists, the township's recently-installed sculptured mural presents a visual history of people and events here, past and present.

The mural is made up of about 800 clay tiles and measures 30 feet in width, 10 feet in height. It is placed behind the dias in the central meeting room in Township Hall.

One can see Molly Pitcher helping soldiers load cannon during the Battle of Monmouth in 1778. One can see a nurse assisting an elderly man on a wheelchair in the township's health facilities.

There's the Georgia House, built about 1795 on Georgia Road, and today's Township Hall, built in 1975 on Schanck Road.

There is a farmer and a barn; soccer players in Liberty Oak Park; a horse and rider at Freehold Raceway; a Lenni Lenape Indian hut, and the AT&T building on Route 537.

The piece has different shades of colors on its subjects, with several shades of cream-colored and rosy-beige background. The subjects are placed within the perimeters of the rectangular-shape of the township. Near the middle is an almost circular small area that represents Freehold Borough, in the lightest shade of cream-color, surrounded by the township.

The mural was designed and crafted by Edward J. Byrne, a Pennsylvania artist who received national recognition for his works of stained glass, ceramics and metal. It reportedly took Byrne almost 1,000 hours to complete the work.

One of Byrne's most celebrated works is a set of four large chapel windows depicting the men who signed the Declaration of Independence. The windows are at the Freedoms Foundation in Valley Forge, Pa.

Of the mural Deputy Mayor James Mayor said, "It's stunning." An art buff, he proposed the mural three years ago. "Everybody has been very pleased with it."

The mural, he said, may only be the first major art piece of several to be placed in the township. He said he hopes that an art committee will eventually be appointed to solicit funds for the design and production of more art works that would represent the township.

The mural, which was unveiled Jan. 1, was installed around the last two weeks of December. It cost $25,500, which came from the township budget.

"It looks great," said Mayor Dorothy Avallone. "It's a lovely addition to the room. It's a little bit of everything that went on in the township. We had not seen the completed mural until the unveiling. I was very pleased. I think the artist did a marvelous job."

Of appointing an art committee, she said, "That has a lot of merit and possibilities," adding that the Township Committee will soon begin discussing it.

The township, established in 1693, measures 29.5 square-miles with a population of nearly 20,000.

To make way for the Hilton, the city's redevelopment plan called for the blighting of 14 acres in the South Broadway area. Of the 27 families in the neighborhood all but two, who moved out of state, have been relocated.

"We couldn't have done this without the extraordinary cooperation and assistance we received from our Hispanic community," Huhn said.

The Ocean Place Promenade, extending from Laird Street northward to Seaview Avenue to link the amusement pier with Seven Presidents Park, will also be key to the city's redevelopment. It will include a walkway, bikepath, kiosks, landscaping and lighting.

The $1.5 million project is being funded through the state Green Acres fund. Construction of the first of three phases — from Laird Street to Madison Avenue — will begin in the next few weeks and should finish by mid-June, Huhn said.

Murderer, 2nd con in brawl

FREEHOLD TOWNSHIP — One of two men on trial on charges of trying to escape from the county jail was injured in a fight Friday morning when the other stomped on his face.

Convicted murderer Kenneth Taylor suffered facial injuries and was treated at Freehold Area Hospital and released, according to County Sheriff William Lanzaro.

Lanzaro said the other inmate,

Manny Calero, attacked Taylor in the staging room at the county jail while they were awaiting court appearance for their alleged escape attempt. He said the attack stemmed from Calero's contention that Taylor unjustly implicated him as taking part in the alleged escape attempt with a third inmate.

Taylor is serving a 30-year minimum sentence for the 1984 murder of his wife in Manalapan.

Study suggests exercise could reduce cancer risk

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — A new examination of the benefits of exercise suggests that girls may be able to cut their risk of several forms of cancer later in life by participating in sports.

"We conclude that long-term athletic training establishes a lifestyle that somehow lowers the risk of breast cancer and cancers of the reproductive system," the study said.

The study compared women who played team sports in college with those who did not. It found that the less active women had about 2½ times as much cancer of the uterus, ovary, cervix and vagina and nearly twice as much cancer of the breast. Together, these tumors account for more than 40 percent of all female cancers.

The results suggest that women have to start exercising early in life to obtain the apparent cancer protection.

Dr. Rose E. Frisch, who directed the study, said 82 percent of the college athletes played on teams in high school or earlier. In college, they competed in such team sports as basketball, crew, field hockey, softball and tennis.

"The important point is that it's something that young people can participate in," she said. "It's moderately intense, regular exercise. It isn't on the level of marathon running."

The study, published in the December issue of the British Journal of Cancer, was based on a study of 5,398 women who graduated from 10 U.S. colleges between 1925 and 1981. The researchers said they believe their work is the first to examine links between physical activity and the risk of cancer in women.

How exercise might protect against cancer is not clear. But the researchers theorize that it influences the women's secretions of the hormone estrogen, which plays a role in the development of some female cancers.

The athletic women were leaner than the non-athletes, and lean women make less estrogen than do fatter women.

"There may be a lower risk of cancer, because these athletes may have lower levels of estrogen," said Frisch, a researcher at Harvard's School of Public Health and Center for Population Studies.

Most of the former college athletes continued to work out through life. At the time of the survey, three-quarters of the former athletes exercised regularly, compared with half of the non-athletes.

The effects of body composition and exercise on estrogen secretions have been the subject of considerable study over the last decade.

An earlier study of women runners and swimmers at Harvard found that young athletes go through sexual maturity at a later age. Every year of athletic training delays menarche — the first menstrual period — by five months.

In the latest study, the athletes had menarche a few months later and menopause a few months earlier than the non-athletes.

The variation in cancer rates could not be attributed to differences in the women's family histories of cancer or their fertility. These factors were similar for both groups.

The research was based on questionnaires distributed to graduates of Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Mount Holyoke, Radcliffe, Smith, Springfield, Vassar and Wellesley colleges and the universities of Southern California and Wisconsin.

Analysts downplay impact of experimental cold spray

By RICK GLADSTONE
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — An experimental nasal spray that may prevent the common cold is not likely to spell doom for the multimillion-dollar businesses built on remedies ranging from Contac to chicken soup, drug-industry analysts say.

They argue that any impact will be slight and far in the future because the product is costly and bothersome.

Schering-Plough Corp., one of several companies working on a spray that contains the hormone interferon, has applied to the Food and Drug Administration for permission to sell it as a prescription drug. A report Thursday in the New England Journal of Medicine claims the spray is effective.

Schering-Plough predicts it will be an affordable way to prevent colds, which affect millions of Americans who now try to alleviate their misery with conventional decongestants, analgesics, antihistamines or old home remedies.

"This is so far away," said Kent Blair, an analyst with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, a New York investment brokerage. "The company is going to have to convince the doctors that this works. Then the company is going to have to convince the public it works. Any impact is going to be minor."

Many analysts said that FDA approval is not expected for at least 18 months and patients could spend up to $100 for each treatment, including a mandatory doctor visit and prescription fees.

Others stressed the research shows the spray is only effective in healthy adults threatened by the rhinovirus, one kind of cold-causing germ, and in many cases produces the same stuffiness and runny nose of a cold.

"It won't be inexpensive, it won't be a popular remedy," said Ronald J. Stern, an analyst at First Boston Corp., a New York investment firm. "Anybody who believes otherwise has got to be crazy."

John P. Curran, an analyst at L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin, predicted the spray would have a narrow market of people who suffer chronic upper respiratory ailments.

"What it all adds up to is that it's likely to have a slow takeoff," he said. "You've got a long way to go yet. There is a lot more testing that has to be done."

Nevertheless, the spray has caught the attention of drug retailers, who sold nearly $2 billion worth of over-the-counter cold medicine in 1984, the last year for which figures are available from the National Association of Retail Drugists.

Businesses spent $1.1 billion that year in advertising for all types of health remedies, according to the industry journal Ad Age.

"If it indeed is a proven product, it would affect long-term and short-term sales of over-the-counter products," said Jerry Singer, spokesman for Rite-Aid Corp., the nation's third-largest drug chain with 1,369 stores in 20 states.

David Miller, a spokesman for the National Association of Retail Drugists, declined to speculate on the possible impact of the spray, but noted that three of the top 10 over-the-counter items sold in drug stores are cold remedies.

New lawmakers give N.J. Assembly a Republican look

By KATHLEEN BIRD

The Associated Press

TRENTON — The first Cuban-American elected to the New Jersey Legislature will be among 16 new state Assembly members taking their seats Tuesday when the 202nd Legislature convenes in Trenton.

Fifteen of the freshmen will be among 50 Republicans giving their party control of the lower house for the first time since 1971. The only new assemblyman among the 30-member Democratic minority is Piscataway Mayor Robert G. Smith of Middlesex County.

The lame-duck Assembly, which convenes for its final session tomorrow, is dominated by Democrats, who hold 44 seats. The GOP holds 36.

Control of the Senate, which was elected to a four-year term in 1983, will remain with the Democrats. The 23 Democrats and 17 Republican senators also will convene Tuesday, when Senate Majority Leader John F. Russo, D-Ocean, will be sworn in as the new Senate president. He replaces Carmen A. Orechio, D-Essex.

Among the obvious changes for the two-year session will be the elevation of Charles Hardwick, R-Union, from minority leader to Assembly speaker, and the presence of the first woman Assembly clerk.

Barbara Marrow of Lawrence Township, who lost her 15th District Assembly race in November and subsequently was named clerk by Hardwick, also is believed to be the first black to hold the political position.

Hardwick has said he has three goals: to retain the Assembly majority in 1987 and be re-elected speaker; to help the GOP take control of the Senate in 1987; and to "carry out the Kean program."

Gov. Thomas H. Kean, who won re-election Nov. 5 in a landslide that carried in the Republican Assembly, is expected to enjoy a honeymoon with the lower house.

The Republicans, mindful that Kean's popularity put some of them in office, are expected to follow the administration agenda — at least for a while.

The conservative, impeccably neat and polite Hardwick will replace Assembly Speaker Alan J. Karcher, a liberal Middlesex County Democrat with rolled-up sleeves known for his brash, brawling style of politics.

During the fall campaign, Kean campaigned against Karcher instead of his Democratic gubernatorial challenger, Essex County Executive Peter Shapiro. The governor criticized Karcher as an obstructionist and asked the voters to give him a Republican Assembly with which he could work.

Karcher has been chosen minority leader by the Democrats.

"It's much easier to throw grenades than catch them," Karcher said in a telephone interview Friday. He said he was looking forward to his new role, which has no administrative responsibilities, "after four very tough years" of running the Assembly's business.

The profile of the Assembly will change little with the shift of control to the GOP. Nine members are women — seven Republicans and two Democrats — compared to eight currently. The number of blacks will remain unchanged since none of the six black Democratic assembly members lost in November and no black Republicans were elected.

The tendency of the Assembly to be dominated by lawyers, educators and business owners will continue. The 80-member house will have 21 lawyers, three more than it does now; 15 who own businesses, six more than now; and 12 involved in education, two more than now.

As in the past, at least a dozen

Assembly members will be dual officeholders, including Lakewood Mayor Robert W. Singer, R-Ocean; Gary Stuhltrager, R-Gloucester, a Gloucester County freeholder; and John K. Rafferty, R-Mercer, Hamilton Township mayor.

Four of the new members were the first Republicans from Hudson County, a traditional Democratic stronghold, elected to the Legislature since 1910. Among them is Jose O. Arango of West New York, who left Cuba with his parents in the 1970s and is the first Cuban-American to serve in the state Legislature.

At 28, he also will be the youngest member of the Legislature.

The other Hudson County Republicans are Ronald Dario of Union City, Frank Gargiulo of North Bergen and Charles J. Catrillo of Jersey City.

Legislators and lobbyists say the GOP Assembly majority will be under pressure in the next two years to produce a record of accomplishment to convince voters in 1987 they should retain control of the lower house.

Shultz invite angers writers

NEW YORK (AP) — Without uttering a word, Secretary of State George Shultz has opened the debate at an international writers' conference on the conflict between authors and the state.

Shultz was scheduled to deliver the opening remarks today to the 48th International PEN Congress, which is convening to discuss "The Writer's Imagination and the Imagination of the State."

When Shultz speaks, "a lot of people ... are likely to walk out, slamming the door," said novelist Kurt Vonnegut, vice president of the American PEN Center.

Shultz was invited by American PEN President Norman Mailer, who extended the invitation without first consulting the organization's board of directors. Mailer later apologized to the board and the members voted narrowly to confirm the invitation. But the writers have been talking — and writing — about the decision ever since.

The issue was brought to a head by novelist E.L. Doctorow, writing in The Nation magazine, who said that American PEN has "put itself at the feet of the most ideologically right-wing administration this country has yet seen."

"I imagine the looks on the faces of the hundreds of foreign guests ... when they realize that the American PEN has put itself in the position of a bunch of obedient hacks in the writers union of an Eastern European country gathering to be patted on the head by the Minister of Culture," Doctorow wrote.

Vonnegut scoffed at Doctorow's analogy, suggesting that Shultz was not likely to encounter much obedience at the conference.

"No minister of culture in a Warsaw Pact country ever ran a risk like George Shultz is running," he said. "He's not just going to run into disagreements over our foreign policy, he's going to run into contempt."

Mailer was working on his remarks for the conference yesterday and was not available to comment on the controversy, according to Karen Kennerly, executive director of American PEN. In an interview with The New York Times, Mailer was quoted as saying, "It seems self-evident that the PEN Congress would be dignified by the presence of an American secretary of state."

Doctorow, in a telephone interview, said, "When you have a distinguished international body of writers that includes Nadine Gordimer of South Africa and Jorge Amado of Brazil and Czeslaw Milosz of Poland ... and Gunter Grass of Germany — a gathering that includes such writers carries its own dignity with it."

Doctorow said the theme of the conference — the imaginations of writers and the state — makes "the presumption that they're separate systems and they make their own history. Inherent in that idea is the notion that when the two come together, it's usually disastrous for literature."

STATE DIGEST

Fugitive ex-senator phones lawyer

NEWARK (AP) — A man identifying himself as David Friedland, the fugitive former state senator who faked his death in a scuba-diving "accident" to avoid going to prison, has asked a New Jersey attorney to represent him in case he either gets caught or returns voluntarily.

Friedland, who faces a seven-year jail term for a kickback conviction and has been indicted on new charges that he helped misappropriate $20 million from a union pension fund, called Camden County attorney John A. Yacovelle in December.

"He called me at the office and essentially wanted me to represent him," Yacovelle told The Star-Ledger of Newark on Friday. "I told him that for that to happen he obviously must be here to deal with the indictment and with his unfinished business. Right now, I have no client."

Yacovelle said he recognized Friedland's voice, adding that his has known the former Democratic state senator for 25 years.

Friedland, who served as a government informant at the time he got involved in the pension fund swindle, disappeared on Labor Day while scuba diving in the Bahamas. Three weeks later, in a taped message to another of his attorneys, Friedland said he staged his death.

Federal authorities believe Friedland, 47, is traveling in Europe and possibly other continents, with his girlfriend, Colette Golightly, a divorced mother of three.

In December, Mrs. Golightly had her 17-year-old daughter join her in Europe for a three-week Christmas reunion. The girl, who has previously been called before a grand jury investigating Friedland, returned this week.

Yacovelle said he told federal investigators about Friedland's call, adding that the fugitive did not disclose his location.

Stock fraud artist again arrested

DENVER (AP) — U.S. marshals arrested a New Jersey man wanted on a federal probation violation as he attempted to set up a stock sale at a Denver brokerage house, federal authorities said.

Authorities said Christos Netelkos, who once bilked investors out of $3.5 million in a stock fraud, was arrested Friday and was being held pending his return to New Jersey.

Netelkos was convicted in 1984 on a charge of stealing $3.5 million from investors in a stock and check conspiracy and other securities violations.

Authorities won a $11 million judgment against Netelkos in 1984.

That money was earmarked for investors whom Netelkos bilked in other fraud schemes, said U.S. Marshal Charles Dunahue.

Rutgers will train AIDS aides

PISCATAWAY (AP) — Nearly 500 New Jerseyans, mainly male homosexuals or addicts who inject drugs, have died of AIDS and just as many suffer from the disease. Yet programs that provide the afflicted with emotional, legal and logistical support are scarce, health officials said yesterday.

The situation is expected to change next month when Rutgers University and the Hyacinth Foundation, a non-profit research organization, offer a two-day course for people who want to help AIDS patients.

"New Jersey was so unprepared for it (AIDS)," said Tom Johnson, a psychiatric social worker at the Community Mental Health Center of Rutgers Medical School in Metuchen.

Johnson said that when AIDS patients first began seeking comfort at the center about a year ago, support services for victims of the deadly virus were all but non-existent in New Jersey.

"There were all these programs in New York, there was nothing here," he said.

More than 100 people are expected to participate in the training program here Feb. 1 and 2, said Dr. Margaret Nichols, executive director of the Hyacinth Foundation.

Volunteers can perform a variety of services, such as visit patients, run errands, give legal advice and serve as advocates or counselors, said Ms. Nichols.

In New Jersey, which ranks fourth in the nation among states with AIDS patients, 960 cases of the disease have been diagnosed. Of those, 51 percent have died.

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome breaks down the body's ability to fight infection and usually is fatal.

Nichols said the state's AIDS population is unique because 70 percent of the patients are intravenous drug users, while 30 percent are homosexuals. In other states, such as New York and California, the majority of the patients are homosexual men.

"The primary difference is that we are dealing with a population of people who already have a lot of problems," said Ms. Nichols. "They were down and out before they got AIDS."

The course will offer lectures on medical aspects of the disease, on how to deal with drug addicts, on death and dying and other subjects, Ms. Nichols said.

"This is not like being a candy stripper," she added. "It's pretty intense. We have to make sure they (the volunteers) are prepared to do this kind of work."

Participants will also hear from Anthony Salandra, one of about 50 volunteers already working on behalf of New Jersey AIDS sufferers.

Salandra, a hairdresser from Cliffside Park, said he began helping AIDS patients after a high school friend died of the disease last year. He contacted the Gay Men's Health Crisis Center in New York and has since been a buddy to 16 AIDS victims.

Some of them are dead now, and Salandra said it never gets easier to face death.

Kean expected to follow up pledges

By ELISSA McCRARY

The Associated Press

TRENTON — Gov. Thomas H. Kean, who won an overwhelming mandate from New Jersey voters for a second term in November, is expected to begin making good on some of his campaign promises when he delivers his annual "State-of-the-State" message to the Legislature Tuesday.

The governor's major proposals are expected to include an overhaul of the problem-plagued Division of Motor Vehicles, changes in the state's auto insurance laws and an $800 million program to clean up New Jersey's toxic waste sites.

Kean will address both houses of the Legislature in a joint meeting at the Statehouse Tuesday — the first day of the two-year legislative session.

Also on Tuesday, new members of the Assembly will be sworn in, and Republican Assemblyman Charles Hardwick will take the oath as speaker of the lower house.

Sen. John Russo will be sworn in as president of the Senate.

Republicans won a 50-30 advantage in the Assembly in the November election. Democrats remain in control of the Senate in the new session by 23-17. Members of the Senate will not be up for re-election until next year.

When Kean addresses the Legislature, he is expected to recommend changing auto insurance statutes to limit lawsuits in traffic accidents to people who are seriously injured. The governor, along with Hardwick and other Republican lawmakers, has said the so-called "verbal threshold" revision will help lower New Jersey's auto insurance rates, which are among the highest in the country.

He also is expected to propose

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEEN ON KEAN — Governor Thomas H. Kean emerged with a triumphant grin from a voting booth on election day, Nov. 5, and by the end of the day had emerged with the most lopsided election victory in state history. In his second "State of the State" address Tuesday, Kean is expected to follow through on campaign promises by proposing that the state take over the politics-ridden Division of Motor Vehicles agencies, pushing for auto insurance reforms to cut what are the highest auto rates in the country and formulating an $800 million program to clean up toxic waste dumps.

changes in the DMV that will allow the agency to provide better service to the state's more than 3.2 million motorists. Kean will call for a state takeover of the 50 private motor vehicle agencies, said an official who asked remain anonymous.

Such a takeover of DMV agencies already has been recommended by the State Commission of Investigation, which probed the state's traditional political patronage system of appointing motor vehicle agents. Continuing his campaign to clean up New Jersey's environment, Kean will propose raising $800 million to pay for a long-range plan to eliminate hazardous waste dumps. He is expected to propose several ways of financing the plan, including a bond issue or an increase in the spill fund tax, an environmental spokesman said.

In last year's "State-of-the-State" message, Kean dubbed 1985 "the year of the environment" and called for a stronger toxic-waste cleanup program and the approval of bond issues for resource recovery plants and sewage treatment facilities.

The major initiatives in last year's blueprint for the state were full funding for education and a minimum $18,500 salary for public school teachers, programs to keep New Jersey's economy growing and proposals for environmental improvements.

Kean's recommendations soon became known as the "three E's."

The Democrat-controlled Legislature refused to approve Kean's environmental bond proposals but instead passed its own version. And lawmakers approved full funding for educational programs and, after much dispute, the teacher minimum pay bill.

And legislators acted on Kean's proposal to phase out the transfer inheritance tax, which he said would help New Jersey keep its taxes low and attract new businesses and residents.

Before Kean gives details of his plan for the state, legislators will hold their traditional reorganization meetings.

The Assembly plans a reception for its members and their families in the Statehouse Annex Tuesday morning, to be followed by swearing in ceremonies at the nearby War Memorial building at noon.

Hardwick will accept the speaker's oath from his daughter, Virginia Hardwick, an attorney.

Assembly members will then go back to the Statehouse to hear Kean's speech.

The Senate is scheduled to hold its reorganization ceremony in the Senate chamber at noon, with Robert N. Wilentz, chief justice of the state Supreme Court, administering the oath of the presidency to Russo.

Senators will join members of the lower house in the Assembly chamber at 2 p.m. for the "State-of-the-State" address.

Jury selection to begin in Parkway death trial

MAYS LANDING (AP) — A murder case that started on a secluded rest stop on the Garden State Parkway and gained notoriety with charges that a Toms River businessman took out a contract on his wife's life comes to trial this week in a tiny courtroom here.

Robert O. Marshall, 45, is accused of hiring two Louisiana men to kill his wife, 42-year-old Maria Marshall. She was shot twice in the chest while sitting in the couple's car at a Parkway rest stop where her husband said he stopped to check a tire and claimed he was knocked unconscious by robbers who stole money he had won in an Atlantic City casino.

Tuesday, 150 potential jurors will be ready for questioning by attorneys and 100 more will be on standby by the end of the week, court officials said.

Jury selection is expected to take at least two weeks. The murder has been so widely publicized that a judge granted the defense motion for a change of venue from Ocean County to Atlantic County.

Court officials said prosecutors have submitted a list of 137 witnesses. Defense lawyers for Marshall and his co-defendant, Larry N. Thompson, 42, of Fairview-Alpha, La., said they plan to call 58 witnesses.

In September, Judge Manuel Greenberg issued a gag order to all attorneys, investigators and others connected to the case. The judge said they were not to discuss it with members of the news media.

Meanwhile, residents of Toms River, a community dating back to colonial times and seat of one of the fastest growing counties in the country, wait for the story to unfold in the courtroom. Several key documents in the case have been sealed.

Joe McGinniss, author of the best-selling book, "Fatal Vision," about an Army doctor convicted of murdering his wife and two small children, plans to write a book about the case and has reserved a seat in Greenberg's courtroom.

McGinniss said the case has become an obsession in Toms River.

"People won't stop talking about it," said McGinniss, who said he has received an advance from a publisher for the story.

McGinniss said residents consider the case symbolic of the negative changes in the community, located an "easy hour" drive from the casinos of Atlantic City.

Marshall denied any involvement in his wife's slaying.

"I could never hurt her that way. Absolutely not," he told a newspaper reporter.

Kean salary bill may be final legislative action

TRENTON (AP) — The New Jersey Legislature wraps up its current session tomorrow, and one of the final items to be considered is a bill that would increase the salaries of Gov. Thomas H. Kean and other key state officials.

State lawmakers will close the 201st session tomorrow, and begin the two-year 202nd convention Tuesday after Kean delivers his annual "State of the State" message.

Other events scheduled for Tuesday in Trenton include the swearing in of Assembly members elected in November's general election and a "State of the Assembly" speech by Assemblyman Charles Hardwick, R-Union — the new speaker of the lower house.

Sen. John Russo, D-Ocean, will be sworn in as president of the upper house.

In the Nov. 5 election, Republicans gained control of the Assembly for the first time in more than a decade, wiping out the 44-36 Democratic advantage and taking a 50-30 majority.

State senators next face reelection in 1987.

The Assembly is expected to consider on Monday the controversial salary measure after postponing action on it last week. The legislation, sponsored by Hardwick, would boost Kean's annual pay to $116,000 by 1989, his last year in office, from $85,000, which would make him the highest-paid governor in the country. He ranks now as the fourth-highest-paid state governor.

The bill, which Kean proposed, also would raise the annual salaries of Cabinet members from $70,000 to a maximum of $95,000 and those of 350 Superior Court judges and the five members of the Casino Control Commission to $90,000 a year by 1988.

The measure recommends a $10,000 annual increase — to $35,000 — for the part-time legislators two years from now.

Hardwick said the higher pay would attract top talent to New Jersey's most important posts.

"We're talking about positions that handle matters that affect all of New Jersey citizens. I don't think we're talking about salaries that are out of line with the responsibilities the officials handle every day," he said.

Assembly Speaker Alan Karcher, D-Middlesex, refused to put the measure to a vote last week, saying it lacked enough support from Democrats to pass.

Hardwick said some Democrats suggested he lower the salary raises to increase their chances of being approved.

Foster

Virtually all children who need homes are troubled and have special needs, if only because they are separated from their families and loved ones, according to Cornell.

But in most cases, the children's problems are more severe. Most children taken away from their "birth families" have been removed because their parents have abused them sexually or physically, have neglected them, are addicted to drugs or alcohol, are homeless, are financially unable to care for their children, cannot do so for health reasons, or because they are divorced, separated or widowed.

Cornell said most children in need of foster homes are pregnant teenagers, minority children, physically and emotionally handicapped children, adolescents or sibling groups. Sometimes, children who frequently run away are removed to foster homes.

The Theobalds started sending their two foster girls to therapy sessions as soon as they came to live with them. Therapy is paid for by the state, in addition to a food and clothing allowance of about $7.60 per day. Mrs. Theobald said she spends more on her foster children than she receives from the state.

Cornell said that the special needs of foster children have not deterred those people who have volunteered to care for them. "Foster parents are amazing," she said.

Both the Theobald's foster children have had troubled backgrounds. However, the state requires foster parents not to reveal background information on children they care for.

In their new homes, foster children are generally better cared for, and at first are happy.

But sooner or later, they want to go home — to their real homes, Mrs. Theobald said.

Early on, foster children return from visits to their real homes feeling guilty. "They like you but they don't want to like you because they don't feel they should," she said.

By definition, foster homes are temporary. The aim of foster placement agencies is to return children to their birth homes as soon as possible, according to Cornell. She said foster parents occasionally end up adopting the children they care for, but the vast majority do not.

Foster parents sometimes feel hurt when the children want to go. "A lot of people say I just couldn't let go. You could be the most wonderful everything they've ever seen. But they still want to go home. So each day you have to remind yourself why you got into it in the first place — to provide temporary care for a child in need," she said.

But children leave their foster homes with a new perspective, Mrs. Theobald said. Both the girls she has taken in have become obsessed with growing up to be good mothers, and not doing what their mothers did to them, she said.

"Both have become attached to little dolls that they keep with them all the time and show you all the time how well they're going to take care of their own children. It almost becomes an obsession with them," Mrs. Theobald said.

Mrs. Theobald noted that most abusive parents had been abused children. "But both of the girls who have lived with us have said when they grow up they will never be like that," she said.

Sometimes Mrs. Theobald fears she is doing her foster children a disservice. "She's going to tap lessons and joined Brownies. And when she goes home, it won't be there anymore."

Mrs. Theobald said she got to know her own children better by taking in the foster girls. "You get to know your own children even better because they have to do quite a bit of adjusting. They get to watch the foster children reacting to a whole different look at the world, because a foster child will usually, within a couple of weeks, start telling you what happened to them at their own homes. It's hard to imagine that a seven-year-old girl could have gone through that much."

The Theobalds have two children, ages 5 and 8. Their current foster daughter is 7, and Mrs. Theobald said she filled in an age gap between her own two children.

Although working or single parents are less likely to want foster children, agencies that place the children welcome working and single parents who are over 18 and who can provide a stable environment for foster children. Those are the only two requirements named by the foster parents association and DYFS.

However, Theobald said that DYFS is very selective. "They don't want to put the child from the frying pan into the fire," she said.

DYFS social workers visit potential foster homes to see if a child can be comfortably accommodated and observe how parents get along with their own children.

"If you're not coping with what you've already got, they don't want to add to the load," Theobald said.

Mormon leader stricken

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Ezra Taft Benson, who was ordained president of the Mormon Church two months ago, suffered a fainting spell yesterday and was admitted to LDS Hospital, a church spokesman said.

"He is in good condition, alert and smiling, and saying that he wants to go home," said spokesman Jerry Cahill.

Benson's physician, cardiologist Allen Barker, has not determined what caused the fainting spell, and ordered him to undergo tests, Cahill said. Benson, 86, was expected to remain in the coronary care unit for at least 48 hours.

Nude photo gives clue in robbery

DALLAS (AP) — A nude photograph of a woman who drugged a musician's drink robbed his home of $50,000 in valuables is the first solid clue in a series of at least 15 such "Mickey Finn" robberies, police say.

In each of the robberies, attractive, well-dressed young women have met men in north Dallas nightclubs and offered to go home with them, police said.

Once there, they slip the men a drink containing a barbiturate that leaves the victim unconscious for 10 to 12 hours. The victims awake to find their homes stripped of clothes, jewelry, cash and other goods.

In the latest case, the robbery victim gave police a photograph Friday after having film developed from the encounter with two women early Wednesday, police investigator L.A. Watkins said.

When he awoke about 10 a.m. Wednesday, he found the women had taken $50,000 worth of items, including musical instruments and equipment, jewelry and his wife's $5,000 mink coat.

The man took the photo before he downed the spiked drink, known as a "Mickey Finn," and passed out, Watkins said, adding that the women are believed to be among about a dozen who have pulled similar robberies in the Dallas-Fort Worth area in the last six months.

Buyer of ABC may use drug dogs, cameras

NEW YORK (AP) — Capital Cities-ABC Inc., the newspaper and television company, may use drug-sniffing dogs and surveillance cameras to prevent the sale and use of illegal drugs on company property, officials said yesterday.

ABC's new president, John B. Sias, said there are no plans to require all new workers to take urine tests, but he declined to rule out such a requirement in the future.

Dogs, surveillance cameras and private investigation are all possible methods of monitoring that may be used occasionally at various locations to enforce the drug policy and "keep the workplace free from illegal substances," Sias said.

"No urine testing has taken place and it is not contemplated," Sias said in a telephone interview from his Connecticut home.

Sias said a company drug policy developed over the last two years includes an educational program and counseling for employees who request it. It grew out of three separate incidents of drug use and sale on company property.

After an incident in which an individual had to be taken to a hospital, "it became clear that there was a problem with dealing," Sias said. "We had no other alternative but to respond."

The company's drug policy was developed by a committee that included Sias, Capital Cities Vice President Andrew Jackson and many employees, he said.

The issue of monitoring recently came up "to show we're not kidding and we intend to follow through with our policy," said Sias. "What's the point of having a policy if it doesn't have any teeth in it."

The Kansas City Star Co., which publishes The Kansas City Times and The Kansas City Star, was the first Capital Cities company to specifically mention, in a memo to employees from publisher James H. Hale, the possibility of using dogs to sniff for drugs.

"Some of the editorial people in Kansas City are very unhappy with this, but I expect some will be pleased the company is providing a substance-free workplace," Sias said.

Capital Cities also owns the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in Texas and several smaller newspapers, and bought ABC last March for $3.5 billion.

NEWS DIGEST

New U.S. Episcopal leader installed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Episcopal Church installed a new leader yesterday, who in his first sermon as presiding bishop, called on Christian activists to save a world "on the edge of the abyss where our very survival is uncertain."

Pealing bells and joyous trumpet salutes marked the installation of the Most Rev. Edmond Lee Browning as head of the 3 million-member denomination. With Anglican Bishops Desmond Tutu of South Africa and James Kauluma of Namibia in attendance, Browning pledged "my compassion, solidarity and witness with you and on behalf of your courageous witness against the evil of apartheid."

The 56-year-old Texan beamed at the applauding crowd in the majestic Washington Cathedral, wearing a huge lei draped over his formal vestments by a friend from Hawaii, where he has been bishop for the past nine years.

At a news conference after the three-hour service, he said he would work to affirm the ministry of women — still a contentious subject a decade after the Episcopal Church decided to ordain women. Two women, Verna Dozier and Deacon Gladys L. Hall, read scripture passages during the installation service.

Browning was elected by fellow bishops and other church officials last September for a 12-year term as presiding bishop. He is the 24th primate of the American branch of the worldwide 70 million-member Anglican Communion.

EPA Superfund probe requested

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairmen of three House committees have renewed a call for an independent investigation of allegations that government officials lied or improperly withheld documents from congressional investigations of the "Superfund" toxic-waste program.

In a Jan. 9 letter to Attorney General Edwin Meese III, the congressmen said they found a recent House Judiciary Committee report "highly persuasive with respect to possible illegal conduct of former high-level officials of the Justice Department and other administration officials."

The committee chairmen urged Meese to establish an independent counsel to investigate the allegations detailed in the report.

"We are confident that an objective review of the evidence will meet the statutory standard requiring the appointment of an independent counsel," the congressmen wrote.

"In the interest of justice and the appearance of impartiality, we urge you to take action," said the letter that was signed Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Texas, chairman of the House Committee on Government Operations, and Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Man takes wife hostage, kills self

ARLINGTON, Texas — A man who left an alcohol rehabilitation center after being served with divorce papers took his wife hostage yesterday, then shot two other employees of the convenience store at which she worked, police said.

One of the employees was killed, the other wounded.

Then, minutes after the woman ran from the store while her husband was talking with police negotiators on the telephone, the man fatally shot himself in the head, officers said.

The gunman, identified as Tom

Stephens, 40, kept police at bay more than six hours.

His estranged wife, Pat Stephens, manager of a 7-Eleven convenience store in Arlington, called her family after the incident began about noon and told them Stephens "was desperate," and she was afraid he wouldn't give up, said Arlington police spokesman Jim Willett.

Stephens had threatened his wife before, and partly blamed the couple's recent separation on one of the store clerks who was shot yesterday, said witnesses and family acquaintances.

Senator joins Viet Nam MIA search

WASHINGTON (AP) — The leader of a congressional delegation says he takes with him "the voice of the American people" when he travels to Vietnam this week to press for more answers about the fate of U.S. servicemen missing in Indochina.

Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, departs Monday leading the first official Senate delegation to Hanoi since the end of the Vietnam War. Previous congressional trips have been conducted by House members.

As chairman of the Veterans Affairs Committee, Murkowski also plans hearings on possible recent sightings of live Americans in Southeast Asia when he returns from his nine-day journey.

The senator, who counts 60,000 veterans, or more than 10 percent of Alaska's population, in his sparsely populated state, said "I am not without a reasonable doubt there could be some live Americans held in Vietnam."

Accompanying him to Vietnam, Laos and Thailand are Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., and Reps. Michael Bilirakis, R-Fla., and Bob McEwen, R-Ohio, who serve on the House Veterans' Affairs Committee.

DeConcini, whose Arizona constituents include the families of about 200 servicemen still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia, said he opposes any normalization of relations with Vietnam until MIA questions are answered to U.S. satisfaction.

Tutu: whites must share power

WASHINGTON (AP) — South African Bishop Desmond Tutu says he's "pessimistic" but "hopeful" that the problems of South Africa can be solved, but that an explosion is brewing there unless the white-ruled government extends political power to blacks.

To stave off disaster, he said Friday, "the kernel issue, which is political power" must be addressed by the white government, which he said has caused the violence in South Africa.

The 54-year-old cleric, who has urged stiff sanctions against South Africa, said he hopes pressure on private business would force change.

"I cannot predict obviously how efficacious all of this is going to be except that what I have seen to date indicates to me that the private sector is likely to say to the government, or I hope it will, 'You are a liability that we can no longer afford.'"

Tutu, who is on a three-week tour of the United States to draw attention to apartheid and raise money for a scholarship fund, said he was "pessimistic but also hopeful" about South Africa's future. His hope stems from his Christian belief rather than from the situation in his country, he said.

"Given the escalating intransigence of the government and the increasing anger and impatience of our people... this is sort of a classical situation for an explosion," the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner said.

Libyan missile downed U.S. plane?

KUWAIT (AP) — Kuwait's official KUNA news agency yesterday quoted a diplomat as saying Libyan anti-aircraft missile batteries shot down a U.S. jet fighter over the Mediterranean earlier in the week.

It did not identify the diplomat but reported he said the warplane was downed Wednesday by a Soviet-made SAM-7 missile as it flew over the Gulf of Sidra, also known as the Gulf of Sirte.

KUNA noted that a U.S. Navy spokesman in Rome had announced that a Marine F-18 Hornet was missing Wednesday after taking off from the aircraft carrier Coral Sea and was believed lost at sea off France's southern coast.

The Coral Sea had departed Naples, Italy, on Jan. 3 with about eight other vessels from the 6th Fleet and Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy claimed that America was massing warships off the Libyan coast to prepare for an attack.

Washington denied that assertion and said the task force was on a routine mission in the western Mediterranean and far off the Libyan coast.

A Pentagon spokesman, Lt. Col. Gene Sands, was asked about the Kuwaiti report and he said, "I have nothing to substantiate that."

He referred all further queries to the Navy headquarters in Washington, and Navy spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Bill Sonntag said the missing plane was on a training exercise in the vicinity of Nice, France, when it disappeared.

Terrorist alert ordered in Europe

By ADNER KATZMAN
The Associated Press

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — An Interpol warning that the renegade Abu Nidal faction has targeted Jewish and Israeli institutions in Scandinavia and the Netherlands has sent security forces onto high alert, police and government sources said yesterday.

Synagogues, historic sites and Israeli diplomatic and commercial buildings were placed under increased guard, and airports, border crossings and ports under close surveillance after the warning.

The Paris-based international police organization gave word Thursday that two commando groups directed by Abu Nidal were heading for Scandinavia this weekend, said Sven-Ake Hjalmarth, Sweden's security police chief.

Interpol said "a very reliable source" indicated the Palestinian faction was ready to strike Jewish or Israeli targets in Sweden, Denmark, Norway or the Netherlands.

"We look very seriously at this threat," said Hjalmarth, adding that the state of alert will continue for days, at least.

The United States has blamed the Abu Nidal faction, which broke from the Palestine Liberation Organization in 1974, for the Dec. 27 attacks on Israel's El Al Airline check-in counters at the Rome and Vienna airports.

Nineteen people died in the sub-machine-gun and grenade attacks, including five Americans and four terrorists, and about 120 people were wounded.

The Amsterdam daily De Volkskrant said yesterday the Interpol alert was based on a tip from an unspecified Western European intelligence service that followed a anti-Israeli terrorist group in Western Europe but lost its trail.

Interpol's warning was issued two weeks before Israeli Premier Shimon Peres is scheduled to visit the Netherlands for two days.

The Israeli Embassy in The Hague, already under heavy police protection, said there were no plans to cancel the visit as a result of the warning.

ON GUARD — Following a warning from Interpol that two terrorist attack teams were headed to Scandinavia, police in Sweden and other Scandinavian nations, as well as Holland, went on full alert to protect airports and Jewish institutions. Here a police car patrols Stockholm's Arlanda airport late Friday night.

About 10 sites in Amsterdam were put under increased police protection, said police spokesman Klaas Wiltink, one of them being the Anne Frank House, one of the nation's major tourist attractions.

Hundreds of thousands of tourists visit the house each year, where the teen-age Jewish diarist spent two years hiding from the Nazis before her discovery, deportation and death in the Bergen-Belsen death camp in 1944.

Stockholm's main synagogue was cordoned off with barricades yesterday. Police patrolled the area with dogs.

Several Jewish targets in Scandinavia, including a Copenhagen synagogue, have been hit by bombings in recent months. The explosives have been traced to Sweden, Swedish authorities said.

The Netherlands has so far been free of anti-Israeli and anti-Jewish violence, but police routinely keep likely terrorist targets under surveillance and keep a constant police presence outside high-risk embassies and consulates.

It was the third warning of imminent terrorist action in Western Europe in less than three weeks.

On Wednesday, Interpol warned of a possible terrorist strike against airports in Athens, Greece, and Frankfurt, Germany.

On Dec. 24, Dutch national police said they had been alerted to possible terrorist action in Western Europe during the Christmas holidays.

Three days later, Palestinian commandos struck Schwechat Airport in Vienna and Leonardo da Vinci Airport in Rome.

An anonymous telephone caller claimed responsibility for those attacks in the name of the Abu Nidal faction, which goes by various names including "Fatah — Revolutionary Council" and "Al-Assifa," meaning 'the storm' in Arabic.

Abu Nidal, meaning 'father of struggle' in Arabic, is the codename of the shadowy Palestinian terrorist Sabry al-Banna. He was born in Jaffa when that town was part of the British mandate state of Palestine. Jaffa is now part of Israel.

The Abu Nidal faction is violently opposed to the PLO led by Yasser Arafat because that mainstream Palestinian group and Jordan have sought a negotiated peace agreement with Israel.

Reagan takes seriously Khadafy's threats

By W. DALE NELSON
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said threats by Col. Moammar Khadafy to attack U.S. military bases in Europe are being taken seriously because the United States "should be ready for any contingency" in dealing with Libya.

During an interview with a group of European journalists, Reagan was told that the Libyan leader "has threatened to hit American bases in Europe and the people around them."

"We take those threats seriously," Reagan said, states a text of the Friday interview that the White House released Saturday.

Yet, other than an ongoing response to the threat of terrorism, a Pentagon spokesman said he knew of no special precautions being taken at overseas bases following recent threats from Khadafy.

"We've taken a number of precautions over the past year and a half at military installations" and embassies, said Lt. Col. Gene Sands. "We have certainly taken increased precautions," he said. "I am sure the Khadafy thing enters into it, but that is a larger part of the terrorism problem."

In the interview, Reagan declined to say whether the U.S. economic sanctions imposed against Libya in response to recent terrorist attacks would be followed by retaliatory force. "I can't discuss things of that kind," he said. "I just say that I think we should be ready for any contingency."

But Reagan rejected a suggestion made last week by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, that Khadafy be assassinated if he is responsible for the Dec. 27 terrorist attacks on the Rome and Vienna airports.

During interviews last week with the Cleveland Plain Dealer and a Cleveland television station Metzenbaum said: "Maybe we are at the point in the world where Mr. Khadafy has to be eliminated."

"No. I was quite surprised by that," Reagan said. "You don't join them at their level. Terrorism is response to terrorism is not the answer. It is terrorism that is the evil."

Metzenbaum had told the Plain Dealer in an interview published Thursday that he had qualms about approving assassination as an instrument of U.S. foreign policy. "Frankly, I have difficulty with my own thinking on it." But he also told the newspaper that "a singular action may be justified" in the case of Khadafy.

In an interview with talk show host Dick Feagler of WKJC-TV on Wednesday, Metzenbaum said, "Maybe we are the point in the world where Mr. Khadafy has to be eliminated."

Budget-deficit law faces long legal challenge

By JAMES H. RUBIN
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The new law that could force an end to the federal government's deficit spending by 1991 swept through Congress with overwhelming majority support.

But in a packed courtroom last week, the measure came under heavy attack on constitutional grounds and even defenders of the Gramm-Rudman Act had trouble mustering enthusiastic support for it.

Michael Davidson, a lawyer for the Senate leadership, said the law is experimental and deserves a chance. It "should not be terminated so quickly," Davidson urged a special three-judge federal panel.

Perhaps the most vigorous backing of the law came from Judge Antonin Scalia of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here who presided over more than three hours of often arcane arguments.

Scalia, who may have been playing devil's advocate, repeatedly challenged the lawyers who were attacking the measure as an abdication of congressional powers and a violation of constitutionally mandated separation of powers.

Leading the charge against the law was Alan Morrison, who heads a pro-consumer organization affiliated with Ralph Nader and who represents 12 members of Congress who filed suit against Gramm-Rudman.

Morrison asserted that a political stalemate caused by Congress' inability to make the tough choices of trimming spending prompted the Gramm-Rudman "gimmick."

He said the month-old act unlawfully delegates congressional powers to three agencies headed by appointed bureaucrats.

In effect, Congress has said, "We hereby abdicate our law-making function, turning it over to others with the fervent hope they will do the job we refuse to do," Morrison argued.

"Congress has refused to pass the very laws to do what it contends must be done — that is, balance the federal budget," he said.

But Scalia said Congress delegates authority all the time.

In this case, he continued, Congress decided to "do whatever it takes to balance the budget."

A key task under the new law falls to the comptroller general, who heads Congress' General Accounting Office.

The final word on the constitutionality of Gramm-Rudman will be with the Supreme Court.

OURS

Difficult time in Red Bank

It was distressing, to say the least, to learn that four Red Bank police officers had to resign because they used drugs.

Monmouth County Prosecutor John A. Kaye on Thursday issued a joint statement with Red Bank Police Chief George Clayton. They said they had completed an investigation into allegations of improper conduct concerning personal use of controlled dangerous substances by the officers. They concluded that "the facts do not warrant criminal prosecution, yet do indicate that continued service with the Red Bank police department might be inappropriate."

There are arguments both for and against the outcome in this case.

On the one hand, you could say it smacks of a deal, wherein the officers escape prosecution by resigning in disgrace and leaving the law enforcement field permanently. It raises questions about equal justice. An ordinary citizen would have to go through the entire legal process — at great expense — in order to be found innocent or, if not, possibly wind up in jail.

On the other hand, it can be legitimately argued that the county prosecutor and Red Bank chief took a courageous stand by choosing this form of punishment and demanding their resignations.

As Police Chief John Willis of Freehold Township observed in the wake of revelations about the Red Bank foursome, "there are a lot of departments that wouldn't address the problem."

Willis said: "If the department investigates it honestly and fairly, they'll have more respect from the public as a whole and from their own people." He also noted that police officers "are people, too... they have the same human frailties that anybody else has."

Willis makes some good points. It would be reprehensible if any police department swept this sort of illegal conduct under the rug. He's also correct when he says the public respects a police department's honest and fair investigation of its own ranks.

Other police chiefs joined him in pointing out that policemen are subject to the same kind of pressures as the rest of us. "There are people in higher places than that using drugs all over the country," noted Middletown Police Chief Joseph McCarthy.

While we in no way can condone the use of drugs by police officers, we can sympathize with what the chiefs are saying.

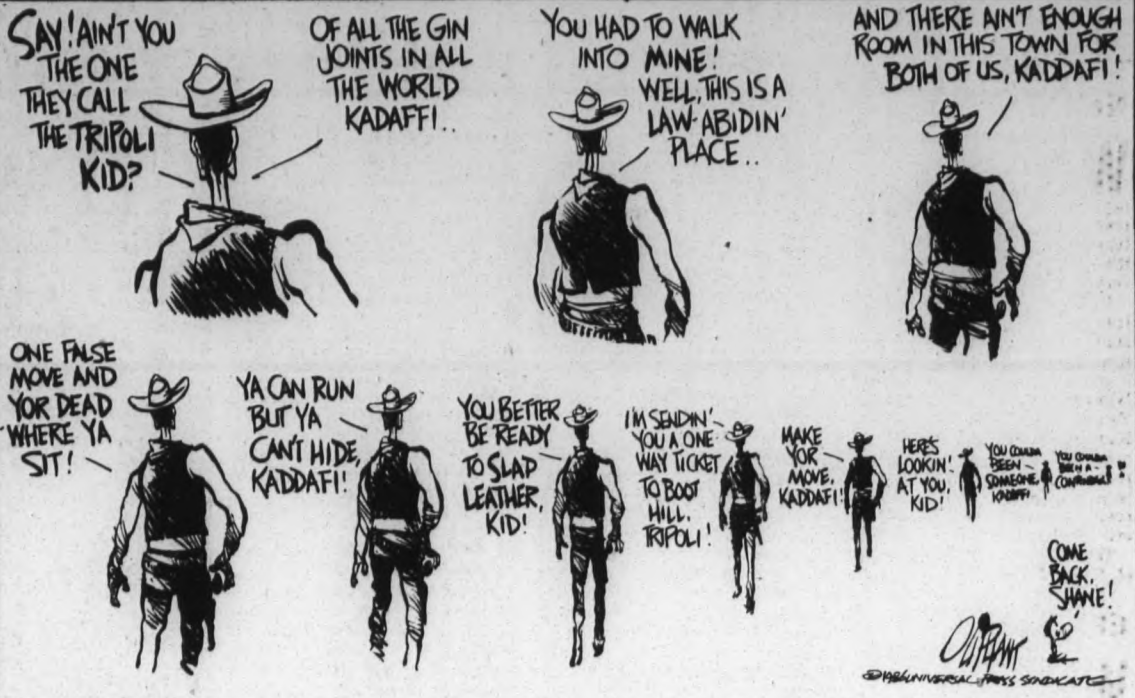

Police today are under more stress than almost any other segment of the population. They work day and night on odd shifts. They must have a great deal of training, yet work for relatively low wages. They must be cool-headed, articulate, sensitive, caring and tough; they also must know how to shoot to kill.

So, yes, we would have to agree that cops are particularly prone to social ills, that it's a problem all departments should acknowledge and guard against.

In the final analysis, being forced to resign may be the fitting punishment for these police officers who, by all accounts, had maintained a high degree of professionalism while they served on the force.

We know this experience has been very painful for every member of the Red Bank Police Department which, over the years, has earned a reputation in the community and among other law enforcement agencies for its integrity and outstanding performance.

But we hope their distress is temporary. They should know that, precisely because this was brought out in the open, the credibility of the department is still in tact. Now it's time to go back out on the beat, and continue to do what they have always done well.

The heart of a glory hound

(Mike Royko is on vacation. While he is gone, we are reprinting some of his best columns from the past 22 years. This first appeared on Sept. 20, 1966, and appears in his collection, "Like I Was Sayin'...")

My favorite modern folk hero is the fan who runs on the field during the big game. He is even more wonderful than the dog that runs on the field during the big game.

Sometimes he just lopes around the bases, sliding into home plate. Sometimes he tries to hug Mickey Mantle. Sometimes he tries to punch a referee.

The cops always drag him away and the TV announcer makes some smart crack, like: "Well, that's the end of his game, ha, ha."

But nobody ever asks these wonderful free spirits who they are or why they must do it. Last Friday, a skinny youth ran onto the field during the tense final minutes of the Bears-Rams game in Los Angeles.

While more than 50,000 fans cheered and 8 million people watched on TV, the youth sped down the field, his head held high, the wind in his face.

Then Mike Ditka stepped from the huddle and slammed him. The fans booed Ditka, but that was wrong. Ditka has been trained since high school to knock down anything that moves. The young man flew into the air. He was limp when he landed and shaky when the police led him away.

More people saw that kid knocked down than saw all of Joe Louis' fights.

When the game is forgotten, that kid will be remembered.

This is a nation of people who are always asking each other questions. Where were you till 3 a.m.? Why did you go through a red light? How will you vote in November? Did you like your mother when you were 3? What's up?

But nobody bothered to ask the young man who he was or why he did this daring thing: They just kicked him out of the stadium.

Mike Royko

Well, let it be known that Felix Carbajal, 19, of Lomita, Calif., is of Mexican ancestry and he is a laborer in a chemical factory. He was sleeping when I called, having worked the Sunday night shift. His father, who has a broad accent, said he didn't know about what his son had done.

"I didn't even know he played football," Felix Sr. said.

Felix's mother said: "I know about it. I guess it was something he felt he had to do. Wait, I'll wake him up."

"Hello?"

Felix, I'm a reporter. Why did you do it?

"Gee, you're the first one to ask me that. The neighbors don't even know I did it."

Why did you do it?

"Somebody had to. Somebody does it nearly every game. So I figured I would do it. Me and my pal, Mike. He has relatives in Chicago and he was hoping they'd see him."

What happened to Mike?

"I dunno. I guess he just sat there."

How did it feel? "At first it felt weird. I thought: 'Gee, what am I doing?' Then, when those thousands of people started cheering me, it felt pretty good."

"I was moving along pretty good. I thought I'd go all the way from one end zone to another. Those cops weren't even gaining on me."

"When I went by the Rams huddle, the players turned and looked at me and some of them smiled. I guess they were happy because they were winning."

"Just as I was getting to the Bears' huddle, one of the cops threw a nightstick. That's when I made my mistake. I turned my head to look at the nightstick and Ditka hit me with a blindside block."

Did he punch you?

"No. If he had punched me, he would have killed me. I'm only 145 pounds. He just bumped me with his shoulder in my face."

Did it hurt?

"Yes. My nose still hurts. And my head. But he didn't knock me out. Just down."

Ditka says he is sorry.

"I'm not mad at him. I guess it was something he had to do. Just like me running."

Do you regret it?

"It was a good experience."

Will you do it again?

"I don't know. I'll have to give it some thought. Would you do me a favor?"

What?

"If you write something, would you send me a copy of the paper? I'm a glory hound at heart."

Jonah Perry faces his future

State Supreme Court Justice Eve Premieringer made her way Wednesday through the formalities preliminary to winnowing out the jurors who will try the case of the People against Jonah Perry.

She began by inviting Assistant District Attorney James Kinder to state the particulars of the felony charges that she and everyone else present already knew only too agonizingly well.

Kinder set forth the People's claim that the defendant and his accomplice had attempted to rob a city police officer at Morningside Drive and 113th Street on June 12 last, "that they attacked the officer and kicked him and after the incident the officer shot at the defendant's accomplice, his brother..."

At this point, the assistant district attorney's voice suddenly faded to a muffle. His bald narrative had arrived at the point where duty compelled him to say that Edmund Perry, an Exeter graduate, had died by gunshot, and to strain hopelessly to hear Kinder say so was to infer what a sad chore the trial of Jonah Perry must be even for his prosecutors.

The regrets and attendant embarrassments of the district attorney's office do not extend to much doubt about the strength of its case. The ordeal of recitation over, Kinder took up the business of delivering to defense counsel Alton Maddox a list of potential prosecution witnesses, and handed over two pages, the topmost filled with names closely spaced.

An incalculable quotient of the names on that roster are those of neighbors in the straitened and struggling block on the Harlem side of 113th Street, where Veronica Perry raised her two sons and equipped them for escape to the great world. She had almost brought it off; if Edmund Perry were alive, he would be a freshman at Stanford now and, if Jonah Perry were free from the shadows of felony court, he would be a sophomore at Cornell.

Murray Kempton

If Jonah Perry goes to prison, he will be sent there by an official New York that very much prefers that he not. That reluctance goes beyond the mere sense that a young man who has lost a brother in one dreadful night has already been punished enough.

District attorneys are no more inclined than the rest of us to destroy a future as long as it has any visible substance; and Jonah Perry is an excellent candidate for a second chance because he actually has a life plan this side of Green Haven. With a plea to a lesser crime than the felony imputed, he could expect probation and some prospect of return to college.

Instead Jonah Perry insists on going to trial. If he is innocent, he should of course do no less. But what if he is guilty or if the weight of evidence against him is too heavy to be overcome? He runs no small risk if that happens: even though probation might remain a probability, there are few career references more disabling than a felony conviction.

Jonah Perry's prosecutors have been pushed into a job they find uniquely distasteful, and they are inclined to blame the intransigence of defense counsel Maddox, an old antagonist, for putting them to it. But their afflictions may not be Maddox' doing; he has a client whose pride cannot accept compromise, however sensible it might seem even to her son's prosecutors.

Only the highest degree of pride could have sustained Veronica Perry in carrying her two sons so close to safety. Pride of that sort can affront those around you. Veronica Perry was in court on Wednesday with the loneliness of a terrible bereavement deepened by the knowledge of how many residents of her own street had hastened to swear against Jonah and Edmund. She was still sure that her sons were better than anyone else's and her pride had no resource for proving it except the desperate hope that a jury might find them as innocent and thus as virtuous as they still were for her.

The trouble with dealing with Khadafy

WASHINGTON — During an interview not long before his death, the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat told me that Libya's Muammar Khadafy was "a certified lunatic." Sadat made threats of military action against Khadafy, but he never followed through, obviously because the perils to him and Egypt outweighed the possible benefits.

Sadat knew that Khadafy was crazy — like a fox — exploiting the Arab world's growing outrage over Egypt's establishment of diplomatic relations with Israel and of the United States' increasing role, not just as friend and protector of Israel, but as a perceived enemy of Arabs and the Palestinian people.

Sadat was assassinated before he ever launched a military challenge to Khadafy.

Now we have President Reagan assailing Khadafy as a "flaky" barbarian; imposing stringent economic sanctions against Libya... but refusing to order military attacks against Libya. Why is the president of the world's greatest military power just as reluctant to move militarily against Khadafy as Sadat was? Why won't Mr. Reagan heed the advice of William F. Buckley Jr., his conservative columnist friend, and others to "declare war against Libya"? To his credit, President Reagan looked beyond outrage over the heinous murders in the Rome and Vienna airports and noted that Moslem nations the world over, from hostile

Carl Rowan

Iran to Indonesia to pro-U.S. Kuwait, are saying that the U.S. must not attack Libya. Mr. Reagan senses that the "flaky fox" Khadafy may be goading him into military action that would soothe the spleens of a lot of Americans while driving the entire Moslem world into spasms of anti-U.S. retaliations.

Mr. Reagan, or his key advisers, have sensed that however much some Arab countries hate and fear Khadafy, they hate and fear even more the notion that Israel and/or the United States can attack with impunity Iraq, Lebanon (including devastating Beirut), Tunisia, Libya or whichever Arab country incurs their displeasure.

This understanding is what provoked Mr.

Reagan to say Thursday that the U.S. will not resort to terrorist attacks as its way of fighting terrorism — that is, that the U.S. will not strike out blindly, killing innocent people, in the hope that among the dead old men, women and children will lie some corpses that can be identified as terrorists.

Mr. Reagan's restraint also was commanded by his knowledge that a military assault on Libya would have put at risk the lives of not only some 1,500 Americans, but 15,000 Italians, 5,000 Britons, 1,500 West Germans and many other West Europeans who find jobs in Libya, as against economic hopelessness in their own countries.

Israeli forces and bombers and strafers roared across Lebanon into Beirut. The U.S. put in a contingent of Marines. Both the U.S. and Israel found disaster.

Those who are pressuring President Reagan to attempt a military solution to terrorism, whether against Libya, Syria or Iran, are engaging in irresponsible, splenetic "patriotism." They just won't face the reality that attacking this weak country, or wiping out that "lunatic," will solve nothing. Especially when the road to ultimate blame runs to the doors of the Kremlin.

Eisenhower and military spending: Was he right?

By Fred Kaplan
Boston Globe

WASHINGTON — Twenty-five years ago this Friday, Dwight Eisenhower, in his farewell address as president, warned the citizenry to beware a new force looming over American society. "In the councils of government," he said, "we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist."

Did Eisenhower have reason for worry? How powerful has this complex become over the quarter-century since he coined the phrase to describe it? How has it affected national security policy and the American society that it supposedly protects?

In the last quarter-century, the phrase "military-industrial complex" has become commonplace. However, it has also become rather vague and conspiratorial.

However, Eisenhower was specific about its meaning: It was simply the "conjunction of an immense military establishment and a large arms industry," a combination that was "new in the American experience."

Eisenhower thought this complex was necessary, given international tensions and the new technology of warfare in the mid-20th century. However, he saw that it was so huge — involved so much money, so many people, so many institutions — that it could rip the fabric of American society unless special care were taken. His concerns were several:

First, it could drive military spending to excesses, thus ravaging the economy and undermining U.S. security in the long run. He spoke of "the need to maintain balance" between the costs of defense and the requirements of growth and well-being.

He said there would be "a recurring temptation to feel that some spectacular and costly action could become the miraculous solution to all current difficulties." Yet Eisenhower felt the threat posed by the Soviet Union would be "prolonged and complex," and that to meet it successfully would require actions that could be taken "steadily, surely, and without complaint." He often chided military officers for being unconcerned about "true economy in defense."

Second, he thought the military-industrial complex could distort scientific progress. The technological revolution that created it had, owing to the large costs involved, centralized research. The "solitary inventor, tinkering in his shop" was now "overshadowed by task forces of scientists in laboratories and testing fields." A government contract becomes virtually a substitute for intellectual curiosity. The prospect of domination of the nation's scholars by federal employment, project allocations and the power of money is ever present and is gravely to be regarded.

Thus, in addition to the military-industrial complex, "we must also be alert to the... danger that public policy could itself become captive of a scientific technological elite."

Third, and most important, Eisenhower thought the complex could "endanger our liberties or democratic processes." He saw the complex as exercising a "total influence — economic, political, even spiritual — that is felt in every city, every state house, every office of the federal government." In staff meetings, he frequently warned that excessive military spending could create the conditions of "a garrison state."

Possibly the most enduring legacy of Eisenhower's farewell address was his advice: "Only an alert and knowledgeable citizenry can compel the proper meshing of the huge industrial and military machinery of defense with our peaceful methods and goals, so that security and liberty may prosper together."

Have Eisenhower's warnings come true? The military-industrial complex is certainly alive and well. However, with one significant exception, it is probably less strong today than it was when Eisenhower drew attention to its existence.

■ First, has the complex militarized or wrecked the economy?

The government certainly spends more on defense these days. In 1960, Eisenhower's last year as president, it spent $48.1 billion. Measured in 1986 dollars, taking 26 years of inflation into account, this amounts to $213 billion. This year, the military will spend $270 billion.

However, over these same 26 years, the economy as a whole has grown by far greater leaps and bounds. As a result, whereas Eisenhower's 1960 defense budget consumed 9.7 percent of the gross national product, Ronald Reagan's larger 1986 defense budget takes up 6.6 percent of GNP — a one-third reduction.

Indeed, in an era of declining productivity — and in a capitalist society where the state chooses not to own factories that produce consumer goods — military production can often spur economic growth. For example, in the third quarter of 1985 (the latest period for which figures are available), real GNP grew by $13.1 billion. Nearly one-third of that growth, $4.1 billion, was caused by defense purchases.

Obviously, there is a negative economic side to defense spending. The creation of a huge supply of goods for which there is no demand in society can cause — and, especially during the Vietnam War, has caused — inflation. There is also some evidence that the non-

Q. What do you call international bandits who threaten the lives and security of U.S. citizens to further their own gain?

A. Defense Contractors competitive nature of much defense contracting causes sluggishness, waste and economic deterioration in the industries profiting from it.

However, the balance of all these effects is not at all clear. And, in any case, defense clearly plays a smaller part in the overall economy now than it did in Eisenhower's time.

■ Second, has it distorted science?

Certainly. Talented scientists are employed by weapons labs when they could be working miracles in medicine or mass transit. Universities have spawned whole divisions

(for example, Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Lincoln Lab) that thrive on weapons contracts. A corruption of the scientist's creed — the search for truth — has been inevitable.

Today, about one-third of all money spent on research and development goes to military endeavor. About two-thirds of federal R&D dollars are granted to military projects.

However, the situation was even more severe in 1960. Then, half of all R&D money — and 80 percent of federal R&D funds — was spent on the military.

During the Eisenhower administration, even many non-military projects had to be given a military veneer to gain political acceptability. Funds for science and education were boosted only after the Russians put the Sputnik satellite into space and Congress panicked that we might be falling behind the Communists in technical prowess. A bill to fund a national highway system was passed only after a politician shrewdly called it the "National Defense Highway Act" and rationalized it as a way to speed civil-defense evacuation in the event of a Soviet nuclear attack.

An oddball explains the glee of being 110 percent right

By Douglas Piker
Orlando Sentinel

As last week loped along, none of the old reliables — the lunacy of Reaganomics, the paralysis of Congress, the heartbreak of psoriasis — sparked an urge to write. So instead of half-heartedly bashing some politico, I've been thinking about the very business of slinging opinions.

Consider this a truth-in-packaging statement by an oddball in an odd business. One of its oddities is that readers seem to want columnists who are 110 percent sure of themselves. It's hard to be so cut and dried on lots of matters.

Take the sore subject of President Reagan. In truth, I'm only 99 and 44-100ths percent sure that he's wrong about just about everything. But it's simpler and stronger to leave out the doubts and the asterisks.

This oversimplification invites dissent. Recent letters have accused me of "hostility," "pragmatic hedonism" and "anti-Semitism." Such charges go with the territory, but I plead innocent on point three. My moments of hostility and of hedonism are without regard to race, color or creed.

If this sounds a bit cheeky, it's because the mail also punctures a pundit's overblown notion that he can change hearts and minds. Letter writers express an annoying preference for their own opinions. Letters fall into two types according to the message: "You're right" or "You're wrong." After more than 100 columns, I still haven't got a single letter, card or call that said, "You changed my mind."

Ah, if only Samuel Butler had been more right when he wrote that people are eager to take their opinions from others: "The public buys its opinions as it buys its meat, or takes its milk, on the principle that it is cheaper to do this than to keep a cow."

But my basic attitude toward opinion-mongering isn't futility. I feel honored to have wangled the chance to share ideas and feelings. It's exciting to stand on a

"The public buys its opinions as it buys its meat, or takes its milk, on the principle that it is cheaper to do this than to keep a cow" soapbox and dodge tomatoes. It feels too good to be legal.

Samuel Butler

On days when my energies and convictions are at 110 percent, it's exhilarating to try by column to right a wrong or to share something more personal. At times when things aren't so in sync, it's fun to be able to ruminate on slices of life.

By the way, in the interest of full disclosure and in case a truck runs me down tomorrow, here's a handy pocket guide to life's finer and fouler things. Good: diner food, foghorns, laughter, Jay Leno, first-class mail, libraries, Woody Allen, friends, the open road. Bad: Sinatra, spokesmen, lobbyists, bigots, fashion, liars, TV preachers, broccoli, telemarketing.

There it goes again — that natural urge of a columnist to be bossy. But in truth, I like people who concoct their own opinions and take pontification with a grain of salt. Imagine two people at a dance who don't know they "can't dance." They don't need a more expert opinion from some geek in the punch line. Yet sometimes that's the upshot of commentary.

Some opinion-peddlers make it easy for people not to be mesmerized by them. I always liked Nicholas Von Hoffman's old description of what a columnist should be: "a grouchy, suspicious, nasty, introspective monk, a horrid, raggedy thing."

A little grouchiness can keep people from falling asleep. But I worry about obscuring my basic goal: to befuddle a few underdogs and offend a few fat cats.

Could a cold cure at long last be? It depends on which kind you get

By Jean Rock
Chicago Tribune

It's too soon to throw away the Kleenex and cough drops. There still will be some sore throats and runny noses in your future. But what looks like the first-ever, scientifically sound, experimentally successful way to prevent the common cold has been developed.

So raise a cup of chicken soup and drink to the death of the persistent viruses that have mocked medical science for so long, cost victims more than half a billion dollars a year in over-the-counter cold remedies and caused unmeasurable coughing-sneezing-aching-stuffy-shivery misery.

It has been one of the most frustrating battles in medicine, for several reasons. There is no single common-cold germ. Colds are caused by more than 200 distinct viruses, distinguishable as several groups. Unlike some other viruses, colds don't produce lifelong immunity. Problems in developing a cold vaccine have been insurmountable. So have efforts to find a cure.

Then scientists discovered that alpha2-interferon can prevent the development of colds caused by rhinoviruses, the largest group of cold germs, which account for 30 to 50 percent of all adult colds. And they found practical ways to produce the interferon by new recombinant DNA technology.

But when the interferon was turned into a nasal spray and tested in field trials as a general preventative for colds, it caused nasal irritation and bleeding, especially after several days of use.

So researchers — both in Australia and at the University of Virginia School of Medicine — reasoned that millions of colds are caught at home from a family member who is sick and worked out a way to use the interferon on a short-term basis to stop the colds from spreading through the family.

First, they enrolled test families — 97 in the Australian research and 60 in the Virginia group. Whenever anyone in one of the families caught cold, others were given a daily dose of nasal spray for a week. Following standard research techniques, some of the nasal spray was the interferon, some was a placebo used for comparison purposes.

Results showed that the interferon prevented almost 80 percent of the colds from spreading when they were caused by rhinoviruses. But it didn't stop other kinds of colds. Limiting the use of the spray to just a few days eliminated almost all the nasal irritation and bleeding.

Several promising leads remain to be followed, as researchers point out in the current issue of the New England Journal of Medicine. Different dosages might be even more effective. Results might be better if the family member who had the original cold was also treated with interferon. Further tests might show that interferon could also cut complications from colds such as ear infections and sinusitis and reduce aggravations of asthma and chronic bronchitis.

The Schering Corp., which produces the alpha2-interferon used in these tests under its trade name of Intron A, has filed four applications asking the Federal Drug Administration (FDA) to approve it as a treatment for four uncommon kinds of cancer, one for treating venereal warts and a sixth to prevent colds. Schering officials consider prospects good for approval in 1986 for at least some of these uses.

The protection interferon provided against colds "could have economic and public health implications," said one of the research reports with professional reticence. It ought to call for dancing in the street.

Saving condors, or, 'Shooting large birds for the hell of it'

By M.R. Montgomery
Boston Globe

They're rounding up the last California condors this week, "they" being agents of the United States Wildlife Service. It is one of those rare events, a legal extinction of a wild bird. Theoretically, it's a temporary measure to save the population until zoo-born condors can be released again into the wild — but there's a small problem.

There is no wild left. Any future birds will face the same problems, the same uncertainties, that have made it impossible for the condor to survive in California.

Several things happen to free-flying condors. People shoot them, for one thing. Some people will shoot anything large enough to make a good thud when it hits the ground, whether it's bald eagles or trumpeter swans or one of the last six California condors, which was not only still flying, but trying to breed and raise a chick. They captured that one last week, and she had a half-dozen shotgun pellets in her side.

Another cause of condor mortality is their food. They are just big vultures, and they eat dead things. Two very common ways animals die in the United States are someone shoots them or someone poisons them.

Condors have been accidentally poisoned by eating animals that were deliberately poisoned — coyotes and wild dogs. They also, more commonly, are poisoned by ingesting the bullets in carcasses — all it takes is a fragment of a lead bullet, eaten in the natural order of things, to kill a condor, or a bald eagle, or any other bird. Lead is one of the deadliest poisons ever taken out of the ground and spread around the environment.

And a blind and disinterested god called progress kills condors and other birds. They hit telephone and electrical wires and die from the impact; they perch on electrical transformers and accidentally connect the positive and negative circuits and die rather suddenly.

There were 15 wild condors in the fall of 1984 (21 had already been taken into zoos in southern California). Last summer, only six could be found. These were not wholly wild birds; some had radio transmitters attached, and all of them were encouraged to feed on "safe" carcasses left out in the same place every day. The biologists involved were trying to turn a big chunk of central California into a sort of outdoor zoo for the condors.

It clearly didn't work, and, faced with the possibility of losing the last birds before they could be put into some sanctuary, the very painful decision was made to close out, probably forever, their wild existence.

The birds may breed well in captivity. The unrelated, but simultaneously evolved, Andean condor will breed in a zoo. But what if they do succeed in raising their single chicks in some wild animal park? Where would you put the offspring, the surplus birds of some future year? In California? That state already is unsafe for living condors, and anyone who thinks it will get better is whistling through the graveyard.

Several years ago, someone had a brilliant solution to the condor problem: Catch them all, and move them to the big islands of Hawaii. There are no coyotes to poison on Hawaii and Maui and Molokai, and only a few hundred thousand people to contend with on those islands, and thus, presumably, fewer yahoos who like to shoot large birds for the hell of it.

Nothing came of it; it was too exotic a solution, and probably not politically sound. "California surrenders last wild birds to safer Hawaii" is not the headline of good politics.

The opposition to catching the last five wild condors has been ferocious. One argument pleads for leaving a few wild ones as "guide birds" to teach the zoo-born how to find food and nesting places.

This is an argument based entirely on faith, since no one knows how condors learn anything, or, considering their sad decline, whether they learn anything at all. Most birds are highly programmed creatures, and the condor's program is not suitable for life in California, from the evidence.

Underlying the opposition is an emotion-freighted reality that is difficult to face. The world of Sierra Club calendars is not wild enough. And in what passes for wilderness, there is not enough reality for the preservation of the condor, let alone the world. To take the last five into captivity is to admit defeat, to know the very day that the frontier finally closed, the evening that the sun set on the Golden West

Hawks 'coast' to title

The Register

WEST LONG BRANCH — Monmouth College used 14 points from Jarrett King and ripped off a 17-6 spurt the last eight minutes of the game to close out Utica College, 60-51, last night at Alumni Memorial Gymnasium to win the Coast Cities Classic basketball tournament.

Rutgers falls, Page 4B

The contest was played before a crowd of over 1,200, the Hawks' largest gathering of the season.

King's 14 points, and his 21 the night before in the semifinal game against St. Francis of New York, earned him the tournament's Most Valuable Player award.

Rider College used 17 points from Marshall Grier and 16 from Ed Titus to edge St. Francis in the consolation game, 81-72.

"I'm overjoyed, I'm excited, I'm very, very happy," expressed Monmouth coach Ron Kornegay. "We had a goal and one of our goals for 1986 was to win the tournament. The kids really worked hard out there tonight. They gave us 100 percent and it was just a great win for us."

For a while it didn't look like it was going to be a good game for the Hawks as Utica took a six-point lead with 14:34 left on a jumper by Eric Jeter.

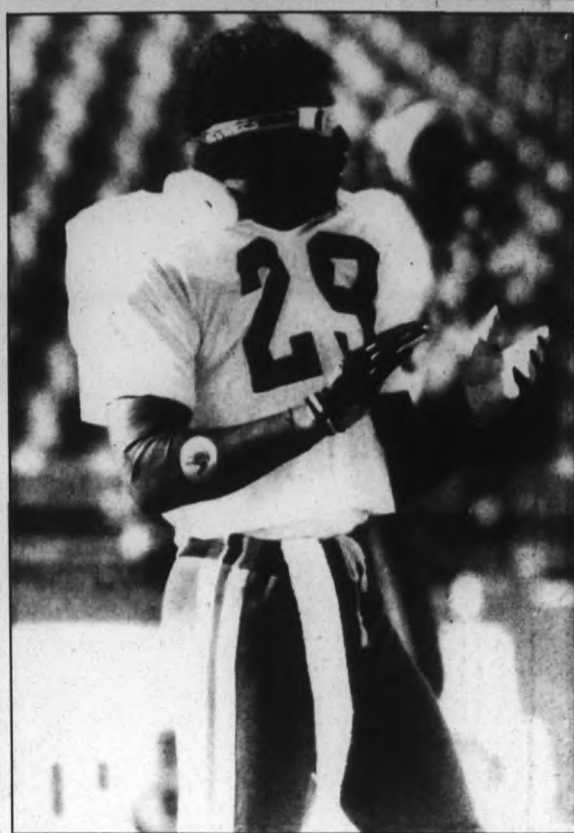

Utica's defensive scheme revolved around a 1-1-3 zone that shut off King's long-range bombs from the corners. The Pioneers also used a token 1-2-2 press to slow the action.

But Kenny Henry responded with a layup and King had a vicious dunk off a feed from Mason McBride to close the gap to two.

Daryl Mackey hit a free throw for Utica, but McBride hit two long jumpers to keep the Hawks within one, 43-42.

The Pioneers' 6-10 center, Tom Faber got two easy buckets inside before the Hawks ran off their game-winning spurt. Henry tallied five points, including a crucial three-point play, and McBride and King had four points apiece in the run.

STAYING LOOSE — Los Angeles Rams' running back Eric Dickerson keeps loose during a workout at Soldiers Field in Chicago. The Rams face the awesome Bears for the NFC title today.

Upbeat Rams step into 'deep freeze'

CHICAGO (AP) — Barely a week ago, when the Los Angeles Rams earned the right to come here, it was 70 degrees in Anaheim. With the Santa Ana winds filtering through their stadium, the wind-chill factor was 74. Almost hot enough to roast a hawk.

The Hawk is what they call the wind that screams in off Lake Michigan and swirls through Soldier Field, where the Chicago Bears snarl and revel in sub-freezing temperatures.

They won't get their wish — that the mercury sinks below zero — for today's National Conference championship game. The kickoff temperature is likely to be in the 40s, hardly worth bundling up for, but with a brisk

Red Bank's Phoenix helps upset Lakewood

By JIM HINTELMANN

LITTLE SILVER — Red Bank Regional High School's basketball coach Nick Pizzulli doesn't want to rate yesterday's 51-49 upset of Lakewood with some of the other big Buccaneer wins over the last couple of years, but he was quite pleased with the results.

"The 'C' North is the big thing for us," Pizzulli said. "We looked at this game as a state tournament contest. It adds to our record and it will help us when they do the seeding for both the state tournament and the Shore Conference playoffs."

The Bucs got a big performance from the only starting senior on the team, 6-2 Terry Phoenix, who scored 17 points including 11 of 15 from the foul line. He also grabbed 12 rebounds.

"I usually don't get fouled that much," Phoenix said, "but Lakewood has an aggressive team. We worked hard all week in practice and were confident that we could beat them."

Lakewood led, 47-44, with three minutes remaining on a jumper by freshman Tim Brown, but the Bucs came back with six straight points to go ahead to stay.

Nate Sheard started it off with two fouls shots. Mel O'Neal followed with a layup to put Red Bank in front, 48-47, and Terrell Rainey hit a short jumper with 1:20 left.

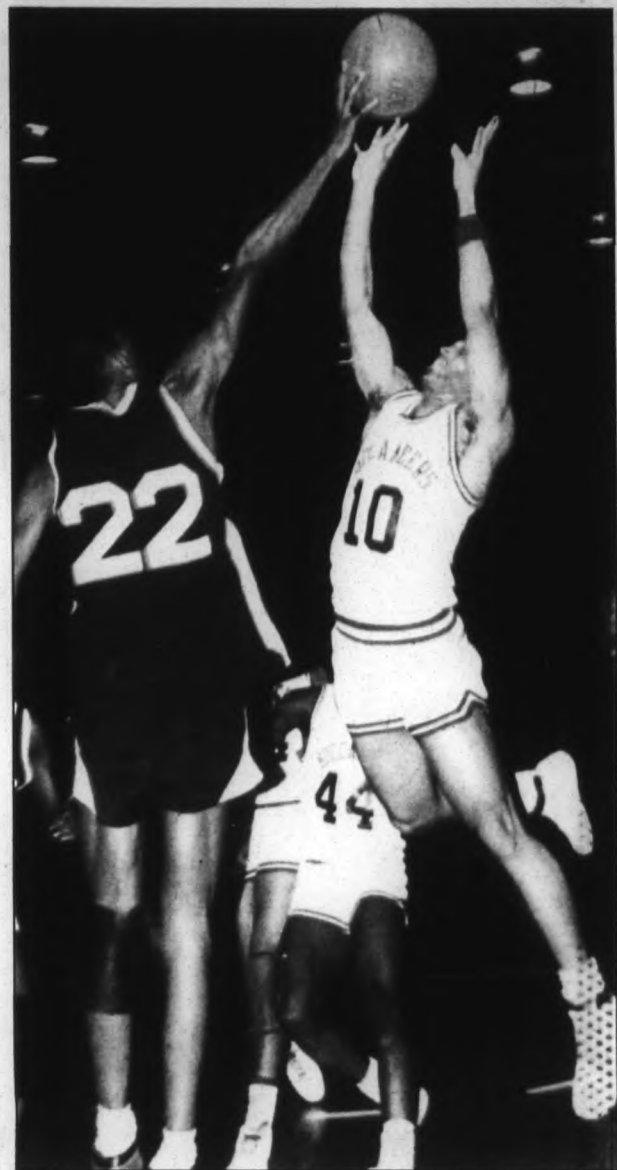

Following two missed Lakewood shots, Red Bank had a chance to put it away with 52 seconds left, but Sheard missed a one-and-one and Tim Brown banked in a short hook shot to cut the lead to 50-49 with 18 seconds to go.

"I've been holding him (Brown) back," Lakewood coach John Rice-dson said. "But now I'm going to start him. He wanted the ball in the clutch and several of my seniors didn't."

Dave Holden was fouled with 14 seconds left, but missed giving Lakewood another chance. Brown, however, turned the ball over and Red Bank's Bill Lewit was fouled with eight seconds left.

Lewit hit the first free throw to make it 51-49, but he missed the second and Walker rebounded for Lakewood.

Super Bowl-hungry New England aims to shed old image

MIAMI (AP) — The New England Patriots play the Miami Dolphins for the AFC title today with a dual task in mind — earning their first Super Bowl trip and finally shedding their long-time label as talented underachievers.

The Patriots, who would become only the third wild-card team ever to reach the National Football League's championship game and the first ever to do it with three road wins, are one of the league's longest-suffering franchises. They have 15 first-round draft picks on its roster but until their win over the New York Jets two weeks ago hadn't won a playoff game in 22 years.

They will be facing in the Dolphins one of the NFL's most consistently successful franchises seeking to return to the Super Bowl for the second straight year and third in the last four. The Dolphins are 5-0 in AFC title games; the Patriots are 0-1, a 51-10 loss to San Diego back in 1963, when it was the American Football League.

The game will be played in the Orange Bowl (4 p.m. EST, NBC) and that's another problem for New England, which hasn't won there since 1966, losing 18 straight, including a 30-27 loss four weeks ago that gave the Dolphins the AFC East title.

But these Patriots insist this is a different team since Raymond Berry took over as head coach midway through last season.

After New England beat the Jets two weeks ago, All-Pro linebacker Andre Tippett reminded his teammates not to get too excited; that the wild-card win was just the beginning of the road, not the end of it.

And when offensive tackle Brian Holloway is asked about the jinx and the Patriots' checkered history, he replies angrily:

"You don't understand! That's not a part of this team! Those were other Patriots teams! There's nothing about this team that has anything to do with that!"

Neither team reached the title game without misfortune.

Miami, playing without injured wide receiver Mark Duper, lost four of its first nine, but now has won eight straight — seven in the regular season and last week's come-from-behind playoff win over the Cleveland Browns. The streak started with

Rangers' Kunkel hopes to profit from difficulties

By JONNI FALK

MIDDLETOWN — Perhaps nobody in Monmouth County is looking forward to the new year with more hope and determination than Jeff Kunkel.

Kunkel, the Texas Rangers' future shortstop, knows he can't forget 1985. Too much happened during that year. However, he hopes he can profit from it.

The old year wasn't just a learning experience for Kunkel. It was also a living experience. His father Bill, the American League umpire, died May 4. Jeff never fully recovered from that blow. He and his father had a special relationship, one which could serve as a model for all child-parent relationships.

Then, when Jeff was recalled by the Rangers in September, he played two games before tearing up a knee. Since then, he has been rehabilitating — mentally and physically.

"The death of my father was the first time such devastation had ever hit me," Kunkel said. "It was with me for the whole season. It takes a long time to get over it. I tried to handle the pressures of baseball, plus the loss of my dad, and both things take full effort."

Because of the knee injury, there was no winter league or instructional league baseball for Kunkel this winter. Instead, he has spent considerable time at the HEAR Institute in Red Bank strengthening his knee and even more time at home with his mother Maxine.

"Being at home with mom has been a big help," he explained. "I was more worried about how she was doing at home alone after dad died than I was about my playing. When I'd speak to her, she sounded exhausted. Now I see that she's handling it a lot better, and it's making me handle it better. Mentally, I'm back; I'm ready to play."

After an All-American season at Rider College in 1983, Kunkel was the Rangers' first choice — the third player taken overall — in that year's June draft. He signed immediately and played 31 games with Burlington of the Class A Western League and 37 with Tulsa of the AA Texas

REHABILITATING — Jeff Kunkel of Leonardo, who is the property of the Texas Rangers baseball team, works to rehabilitate his injured knee at the HEAR Institute in Red Bank. Pat Dunphy, the institute's physical therapist, monitors Jeff's work.

Just what do we want from our colleges?

By now, most sports fans have heard of the suggestion that college athletes receive pay for their efforts to make good old Ramsgate ATI&X No. 1 in some, contrived rating. The ability to hold the index finger straight up seems to be more important to proponents of that idea than the ability to read and write.

The college athletic folk now have a new idea which will enable their minions to hold that index finger in the air longer. They will place before next week's National Collegiate Athletic Association Convention a proposal to allow athletes to compete for five years instead of four.

Current eligibility rules allow athletes to play for four years over a five-year period. This rule, of course, led to the deadly practice of redshirting youngsters who are not yet ready to help Ramsgate raise that index finger.

The five-year proposal, sponsored by the Big Sky Conference, would do away with redshirting but still leave in place most of the other practices which destroy an athlete's interest in academia — if he had any in the first place.

The sponsors of the five-year plan say that it could improve graduation rates. They also say there could be economic benefits because not as many scholarships would have to be awarded. Their reasoning, in itself, is a condemnation of college athletics, particularly football. Graduation rates, under the current system, would be greatly improved if the colleges simply awarded scholarships to those capable of doing college work, allowed athletes to take full schedules, and did away with programs which absorb so much time during off-seasons.

JONNI
FALK

Also, under the current rules, colleges are allowed to give a maximum of 30 scholarships a year for football but may have under scholarship no more than 95 players at one time. Football can be played with far fewer than 95. High schools do it and professional football does it. Of course, the pros don't have to worry about about players running out of eligibility. They just fret about injuries and players getting old.

Neptune tops Purple Roses

NEPTUNE — Neptune High School, an early pick to challenge Christian Brothers Academy for the Shore Conference "A" Division title, recorded only its second win of the season yesterday, a 79-43, victory over St. Rose of Belmar, in a non-conference game.

The Scarlet Fliers previously defeated the Purple Roses, 68-53, in the Holiday Jubilee.

Stephon Slappy and Andrew Goodman led the opening surge which saw Neptune assume a 23-13 lead. St. Rose managed to outscore the hosts, 14-13, in the second period, but the Scarlet Fliers manpower wilted the Roses in the second half.

Slappy led the scorers with 14 points and also had 11 rebounds. Les Jones scored 12 for Neptune while Sean Blaylock had 11 and Derrick Gaines 10.

Neptune is now 3-4. St. Rose had Chris Simmons score 17 points with Bob Barnes hitting 10.

Neptune had lost two in a row before winning Friday over Matawan Regional and yesterday over the Roses.

Gaynor leads way in win for West

HONOLULU (AP) — Doug Gaynor of Cal State-Long Beach passed for two touchdowns to lead the West to a 23-10 victory over the East in the Hula Bowl yesterday.

The West defense stopped what Coach Johnny Majors of Tennessee had predicted would be a strong offensive show for his East team.

The East was held to only 90 yards in the first three quarters, including zero yardage in the third quarter, before coming alive in the fourth. The East had Raritan gained a 17-10 edge at the end of the first period, but 'Port came back with a 19-12 second period scoring edge to tie the score at halftime, 29-all.

Raritan took a 44-43 edge entering the final frame and that set the stage for Jones' winning basket.

Wilbur Jones came back with 0:48 left to bring Keyport to within a point, but a final attempt after a missewd foul shot went for naught as a Keyport pass was broken up with four seconds to go.

Jones led all scorers with 20 points while teammate Doug Shaw chipped in with 11.

only eight first downs, compared with 25 for the West.

Gaynor was named the game's top offensive player, while Rogers Alexander of Penn State was selected as the outstanding defensive player.

The West scored first, early in the second quarter, on a 42-yard field goal by James Hamrick of Rice. The score was set up by a 54-yard pass from Mike Norseth of Kansas to Walter Murray of the University of Hawaii.

Hamrick earlier missed a 34-yard field goal attempt set.

Another key to the Hawks' domination down the stretch was Kornegay's switching defenses, alternating between a man-to-man and a variety of zone defenses that prevented Utica from getting any cohesion offensively.

The win was the fourth in a row for Monmouth (5-7) and gives them some momentum going into tomorrow's important ECAC Metro clash with a gigantic Marist University squad.

"I feel very good about going into that game right now," Kornegay said. "We are on a roll and playing very well right now which is very important going into a game against a team of that caliber. We know we've got to play well, but our kids are excited especially after a win like tonight. They (Marist) are very, very big team and I think it's going to be a another very fine college basketball game."

Tomorrow night's matchup may fall short of the Coast Cities in excitement, as all four games were highly competitive. None of the four were decided until late. Friday's two semifinals were decided by one and two points respectively.

"Well, I thought this was a great tournament," Kornegay praised.

"Every game was pressure-packed, every game was exciting, and it was a very competitive tournament. I thought there were a lot of things that that you would want to see in a Division I basketball game. I think we showed ourselves well, as well as the institution and I'm very happy."

The first half was nip and tuck with neither team being able to open a deciding edge. Utica had the biggest lead, five points, a couple times, but a dunk by Fernando Sanders of Long Branch, two jumpers by King and jump hook by Sanders highlighted a 12-6 run at the end of the half that allowed Monmouth to take a 32-31 lead into intermission.

Rider and St Francis played to a 32 all tie at the half, but Titus caught fire and the Bronchos outthrust the Terriers to come away with the win.

Julian McKelly led St. Francis with 17 points while Joe O'Neill added 13 and Theo Graham a dozen.

League that year.

His rookie figures, .287 with six homers at Burlington and .285 with five homers at Tulsa, made him look like a good bargain for the Rangers. Back and hip injuries incurred in spring training delayed his 1984 debut with Tulsa until June 15. However, he was hitting .320 with three homers when Texas called him up July 24.

He hit well at first, but then tailed off and finished at .204. His back injury also hampered his infield play, and he committed 17 errors. Had his father Bill not been put on vacation instead of working a scheduled series in Texas, it would have been the first time in major league history that a father umpired a game in which his son played.

The slump at the end of that 1984 season made it clear that Jeff needed more minor league seasoning.

That's exactly what Texas planned for him last year when it sent him to Oklahoma City of the AAA American Association after spring training.

The plan obviously went astray in the devastation of 1985.

For the first month of the season at Oklahoma City, I was the best player in the league, both offensively and defensively," Jeff recalled. "After dad died, I went through the motions. I'd go to the ballpark not wanting to see my name in the lineup. They'd give me about a week off, and I'd want to come back and play. But then the whole cycle would start over again."

Under normal circumstances Jeff would not have deserved to be recalled by Texas in September. However, the Rangers still have faith and an investment in Jeff Kunkel, and they brought him back up in September.

"They thought that bringing me back up in September would be an inspiration and a change to me," Jeff said. "The first day I just worked out. On the second day I played the last two innings. The next day I started, and that's when I got hurt."

It happened in Oakland on Sept. 11, and it was one of those typical incidents which occur when rosters are inflated, and players who don't know each other are trying to work together. A pop fly was hit over Kunkel's head, and he raced after it into the outfield. Blinded by the sun, he eventually caught the ball but felt something hit him at the same time.

He had collided with centerfielder George Wright, with whom he had not played before.

"There was a lack of communication," Kunkel admitted. "After he hit me, I flipped over and landed on my head. I thought I broke my neck instead of hurting my knee."

There was both ligament and cartilage damage to the left knee, and Kunkel underwent arthroscopic surgery by Dr. John Yocum of Sentinel Hospital, an institution also used by the Olympic teams. For once he was lucky. Nothing had to be removed. The doctor repaired the damage and sewed Kunkel up.

After that, he was in a cast for six weeks, totally immobile. He spent most of that time in St. Louis with his girlfriend Dutsi Graham, an Ozark Airlines flight attendant. He returned to California for two weeks. All that time, he tried to get as much exercise as he could on crutches. After the cast was removed, he used the crutches for one day and then threw them away.

"Dutsi has stuck with me through it all," Kunkel said. "I wouldn't have made it without such a special person at my side."

Since he threw away the crutches,

Pizzulli said. "We made a lot of mistakes in the first half, but we tried to run our offense a little more effectively in the second half. We also tightened up our zone to stop Walker."

Lakewood's Harry Brown hit a jumper to start the third quarter and give the Piners their biggest lead at 31-24.

Red Bank got its transition game going a short while later and came back with eight in a row, four by Phoenix, to go ahead, 35-32.

There were two more lead changes before Red Bank went in front for good with its six-point run late in the game.

"We have no excuses," Richardson said. "Red Bank was hungrier then we were."

O'Neal scored 12 points for the Bucs (6-1) while Walker, who had only three points in the second half, finished with 17.

The Bucs resume "C" North play Tuesday when they meet Holmdel.

Lakewood's John Brown missed a shot from inside the foul line and Marv Andrews failed on a follow-up as the game ended.

"The first free throw was a big one," Lewit said. "But the second one was just as important. I didn't concentrate as much on it."

"We didn't want to foul on their final shots," Lewit added. "Fortunately, they missed both."

The Bucs started the game with a rush by scoring the first three baskets for a quick 6-0 lead, but Walker led a Lakewood comeback that saw the Piners go ahead, 29-24, at the half. Walker had 14 points.

Red Bank tightened its defense in the second half and quickly got back in the game. "We had eight days off,"

Olajide has successful debut

ATLANTIC CITY (AP) — Canadian middleweight champion Mike Olajide made his debut in the United States yesterday and scored an important 10-round split decision triumph over Curtis Parker of Philadelphia.

Olajide, now 16-0 with 12 knockouts, utilized a six-inch reach advantage and the heart for fighting inside to outlast Parker, a durable slugger ranked No. 12 by the World Boxing Council.

Olajide, ranked No. 14 by the WBC, considered the bout a gauge of his boxing skills against U.S. opponents.

"I really felt like I had to come over here and prove myself," the 21-year-old boxer from Vancouver said. "A lot of Canadian champions have stepped across the border and failed. I didn't want a padded record."

Parker, known for applying pressure, backed Olajide up with several sharp rights to the body in the opening round as Olajide was unable to jab effectively.

The tide turned when Olajide start to use his reach to score with sharp left hooks to the body from outside. The tactic kept Parker away and enabled the Canadian to stun Parker with a left hook to the body midway through round five, leaving Parker motionless on the ropes. He then accepted a straight right to the head.

Olajide did not believe Parker was hurt and failed to pursue a knockout.

The Canadian finished strongly with chopping rights to the head in the final round and prevailed 7-3 on the scorecard of judge John Stewart and 6-3-1 according to judge Charles Spina. Judge Joe Pasquale scored it 6-3-1 for Parker.

"If they want to give it to him, that's OK," said Parker. "I thought it was even. He had me off balance. My right hand was missing him and I couldn't catch him with the combinations."

Dunphy helped him through that period, too. "Mentally, I'm back," Kunkel reported. "I'm ready to play and anxious to get back on the field and get healthy. I think 1986 is going to be my year. Even when things were going badly last year, I felt the skills were still there. Physically, I was improving, but baseball is 70 to 80 percent mental. If I'm standing out there feeling sorry about the loss of my dad, my game is out the window."

Kunkel is on the Rangers' 40-man roster and feels he has a good chance to make the final 25 which will open the season. His reasoning is simple. The Rangers have a new manager, Bobby Valentine, who has been cleaning out the older players and seems to want to go with youngsters.

However, Kunkel also knows that he has yet to play a complete season since he signed in 1983. Actually, he has played about 200 games in professional baseball. Thus, another season in Triple A is a possibility.

"I'm looking forward to one straight season without any problems," he said. "I know the big leagues is where I should be playing, but if they don't have a spot for me this year, I'll play anywhere."

Branchers top South in thriller

LONG BRANCH — Sherri Bouldin and Michelle Adams scored 20 points apiece as Long Branch (4-2) outlasted Middletown South, 46-40, in a double overtime girls basketball thriller yesterday.

Adams sent the game into the first overtime when she hit a free throw with 30 seconds left to tie the game at 36-36.

Adams opened the opened the scoring in the first overtime with a layup, but Lisa Bergo tied the game for the Eagles with a jumper to force the second overtime.

Cathy Madalone gave the Eagles a brief lead, 39-38, in the second overtime with a free throw, but Bouldin scored on a layup and Adams followed with two more baskets to put the game away.

Middletown South built up a 21-14 halftime lead, but Long Branch came back strong with a 15-5 third quarter to go up, 29-26.

The Eagles went ahead again in the fourth quarter before Adams' free throw put the game into overtime.

Madalone scored 17 points and Tonya Sneed added 12 for the Eagles which fell to 4-3.

Red Bank played Lakewood on a 17-17 par in the second period and then outscored the home team, 16-8, in the third period.

However, Lakewood, with Joanne Powell and Carol Walters leading the way, gained a 14-6 last period margin.

Powell finished with 18 points and Walters 15. Erika Wright tallied 15 for the 2-4 Buccaneers.

Asbury Park is distant second

Depth makes difference as CBA sweeps County track

By JIM HINTELMANN
The Register

LITTLE SILVER — Christian Brothers Academy won only three of the eight events in last night's Monmouth County Indoor Track championships at the Red Bank Regional field house, but as has usually been the case with the Colts, it didn't make any difference. Depth again made the difference.

The Colts scored in every event and romped to the championship with an unofficial 40 points. The total almost doubled runnerup Asbury Park which settled for second place with 23. Marlboro took third with 13 followed by Monmouth Regional with 10. Neptune was fifth with nine.

"We got some strong performances from three of our seniors," CBA coach Bob Maier said. "Rich O'Day and Jon Alexanian won in the 400 and 800 respectively and both helped us win the 1,600 meter relay. Nate Bruno was a real surprise to us. He finished second in the high jump.

"You look down the list and can see that a lot of people contributed," Maier said. "We picked up a lot of seconds, thirds and fifths and that had a lot to do with us winning.

"We got good leadership from our seniors and the underclassmen were working hard also."

O'Day won the 400-meter run in a tight race with Marlboro's Jim Orrange. Both runners were timed in 53.4, but O'Day had the edge at the tape.

The 800 was highlighted by an unusual incident.

Alexanian was leading the seeded section after three laps when the bell inadvertently rang. The 800 at Red Bank Regional is five laps, and the bell should have rung after the fourth lap.

All of the runners slowed down a bit, but Alexanian still won the race by eight yards over teammate Kevin McKenna. By slowing down, however, Alexanian's time was a slow 2:08.3 and that almost cost him the race as Long Branch's Lebron Evans won the unseeded section in the same time. Alexanian, though, was given the victory since he would have won is a faster time had the bell not rung.

CBA also won the 1,600 relay as the team of Adam Horrisberger, Alexanian, Sonny Smith and O'Day nipped Asbury Park with a time of 3:41.6. The Blue Bishops were second in 3:42.2.

Orrange was another standout in the meet. He ran away with the 55 hurdles in 7.86 and just missed catching O'Day in the 400.

The shot put also had close competition with Manalapan's Frank Conover (50-6¼) edging out Mike Citarella of Middletown South (50¼) by a half foot.

Raritan's Mike Beslanovitz scored an impressive win in the 1,600. He took the race in 4:34 to easily beat out runnerup Brian Fitzgerald of CBA who was clocked in 4:38.

Neptune's Barry Bacon was the winner in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.67 while Rollo Regan won the 3,200 meter in 10:02.14.

Asbury Park's Noel Robinson was first in the high jump with a leap of 6-2. Bruno, the son of the Asbury Park varsity basketball coach Nate Bruno, was a strong second with a height of 6-0.

The top individual performance in the meet went to Lakewood's Herb Williams who won the Ocean County 3,200 in 9:44.1, a remarkable time on the Red Bank Regional track.

‘Surprising’ Marlboro upsets tough Raritan grapplers

RARITAN — With big pins coming from Seth Grossman and George Woodford, Marlboro High School tripped Raritan, 30-26, in high school wrestling yesterday afternoon.

"We've surprised a lot of people," Marlboro coach Lou Fontanez gleefully remarked. "Now we have a big match against Middletown South on Thursday."

WRESTLING

With Raritan leading, Grossman, at 169, got a quick pin with only 56 seconds gone. Then, at 187, Woodford sealed the win by pinning his opponent in 1:59.

"So far Grossman, Woodford, Steve Rosen and Chris Barber have carried us and we have balance in the other weights, too," Fontanez said.

Rosen gained a 12-4 decision at 121 while Barber took a fall in 4:51. Rosen, Barber and Woodford all have 6-1 records while Grossman is 5-1.

Marlboro is now 3-1 on the season while Raritan is 1-1-1.

T.R. North 33, Freehold Twp. 30
FREEHOLD — "Shudda, wudda, cudda, just about sums up our season," Freehold Township wrestling coach Gunther Schmiedl agreed after his team lost to North.

And that's the way it went yesterday as Ray Higginson was winning at 107, but got caught in a headlock and was pinned at 4:47.

Another upset came at 128 when Todd Shellitto had the upper hand, but North's Andrew Sherman came back to win, 9-8.

"One bright spot was Scott Klein," Schmiedl commented. "He beat John McLaughlin, who beat him last year and again this year in the Christmas Tournament."

Klein won, 9-4.

Toms River North is 3-0 and Freehold Township, 1-2-1.

MIDDLETOWN — John Fagan remained undefeated as the Eagles notched their second win against a single loss.

Fagan is 9-0 and gained an 8-0 decision at 128 yesterday morning.

Rob Pignataro at 100 pounds and Doug Card at 148 had pins for Middletown South.

Donovan 37, RBC 29
RED BANK — The Caseys dropped their opening dual match to Monsignor Donovan, of Toms River.

The Caseys had three pins. They came from Chris Boriello at 100 pounds, Jim Jakub at 128 and John Hayes at 157.

Holmdel 36, Shore 27
WEST LONG BRANCH — Shore Regional was breezing right along until its luck ran out in the upper weights.

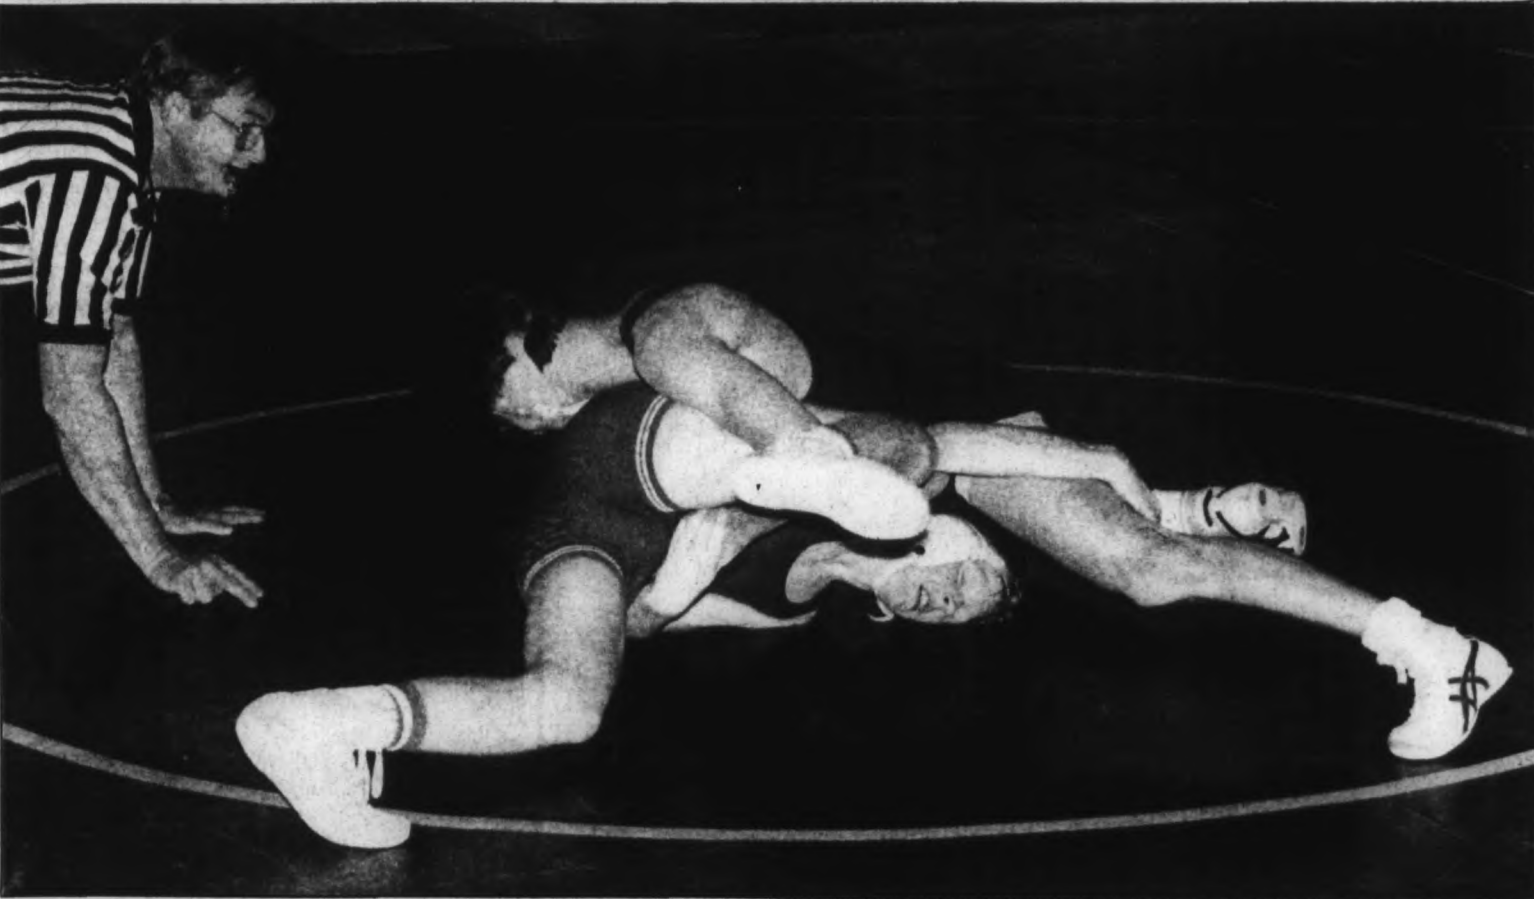

In the 157-pound division, Holmdel's Tom Serlucio won against Brian Wicklund when the latter was injured.

After that it was all Holmdel. Cameron Khavarian won by a pin and Joe Hariman and Tom Dexter won by forfeit in the next two weight classes.

Midd. North 52, Wall 30
MIDDLETOWN — Four Middletown North wrestlers remained undefeated in yesterday's win. The Lions are 3-0 and Wall 0-3.

The unbeaten matmen are James Fay at 100 pounds, Brian Copeman at 107, John Cioffi at 147 and Shawn Jackson at 187.

Lenape Valley 45, Freehold 24
FREEHOLD — A strong Lenape Valley team, undefeated in dual competition, handed Freehold its first defeat yesterday afternoon. The Colonials have won matches.

After winning the first match by forfeit, Freehold dropped the rest until the 169-pound class when Ricky Cisco had a pin in 0:56. Tom Battle followed with a 5:28 pin at 187.

Matawan Reg. 38, St. John 29
ABERDEEN — Matawan dominated the heavier weights to trim St. John in its first dual meet of the season.

Rich Marrero (134), Mario Barakat (157) and Brian Long (169) had pins for the Huskies. Matawan also won two bouts by forfeit.

Dusty Baldwin (107), Tom Casserly (128) and Tony Massa (140) got pins for St. John (0-3).

Paulsboro 55, Long Branch 6
PAULSBORO — State power Paulsboro (4-0) won all but two bouts in crushing Long Branch yesterday.

Kirk Love (100), Joe Casselli (114) and Jason Sutor (157) had pins for Paulsboro. The winners also picked up two forfeits and three technical falls.

Sam Cole scored an 11-5 decision over Dean Duca at 121 pounds and Simon Skove took an 8-2 victory over Jim Salvatore for the only Long Branch wins.

Point Boro 49, Ocean 10
OCEAN — Ted Kacandes pin and Simos Kostidakis major decision were the only bright spots for Ocean (2-1) yesterday afternoon.

Point Boro won the rest of the matches and lifted its record to 2-0.

Jacques falls in bowling

UNION CITY, Calif. (AP) — Randy Pedersen struck on his final six balls in the title match and routed top-seeded Dennis Jacques of Belford, N.J. 213-158, to capture the $150,000 AC-Delco Classic yesterday.

It was the first title on the Professional Bowlers Association Tour for Pedersen, who disposed of four opponents on his way to the $27,000 top prize.

The victory also earned Pedersen a berth in the $250,000 Firestone Tournament of Champions in April.

The Santa Maria, Calif., bowler opened the finals with a 204-182 decision over Walter Ray Williams Jr. of Stockton, Calif.

Pedersen eliminated 16-time PBA champion Wayne Webb of Indianapolis, 171-147, and stopped second seeded Rowdy Morrow of St. Louis, 224-207, to reach the title match.

Both Pedersen and Jacques, who has starred in local bowling tournaments in Monmouth County, N.J., had problems in the finale. Pedersen, who earned only $21,000 in 1985, left the 2-8-10 split twice in five frames, while Jacques struck only twice through six frames.

But Pedersen lined up in the seventh frame, when he began his string of strikes and never looked back.

"I didn't want to get too pumped up in the title game. I had to make sure that I was thinking the right thoughts," Pedersen said. "The wrong thoughts would be that this would be my first win — a trip to the Firestone (Tournament of Champions). I had to pay attention to what I was doing and what was happening in front of me."

Coffey ineligible for season

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — University of Connecticut officials said before last night's game with Boston College that sophomore guard Terry Coffey would be ineligible to play for the remainder of the season.

Citing the Buckley Amendment, which prohibits school officials from commenting about a student's academic status, Sports Information Director

Tim Tolokan gave no explanation for the loss of Coffey, who averaged 1.6 points in Connecticut's first 11 games.

The loss of Coffey, combined with a knee injury to sophomore Terence Warren, left the Huskies without their third and fourth guards for the Boston College game. Warren is also listed as doubtful for Monday night's game in Hartford against Villanova.

St. John's defeats Hoyas

NEW YORK (AP) — St. John's, which fell apart under Georgetown's relentless pressing defense in last year's NCAA championship semifinals, held its composure yesterday in beating the Hoyas 79-74.

"I'm proud because they didn't lose their composure," Coach Lou Carnesecca said after his tenth-ranked team's Big East triumph. "They made a good run at us."

Led by dominating Patrick Ewing, Georgetown beat the Redmen in three of their four meetings last year, including the Big East tournament title game.

Walter Berry, a 6-foot-8 junior, led the way for St. John's with 26 points, hitting 10 of 18 from the field, and 10 rebounds as the 13th ranked Hoyas had a Madison Square Garden winning streak broken at eight games. St. John's boosted its record to 15-2 and 3-1 in conference play, while Georgetown fell to 11-3 and 2-2.

John Thompson, Georgetown's coach, said, "Walter knows his time has come. He shoots unorthodox, but the shots go in. He's the man."

The Hoyas employed a box-and-one defense on Berry, who went into the contest averaging 24.8 points a game. "He's just tough. He took the kind of shots we would want him to take, but they go in," Thompson said.

Thompson became irritated when it was pointed out that his team had split its first four conference games.

"When is the tournament? Do you actually think we are going to lay down and die? Everybody in the league knows we're not ... We've lost before," he said.

Thompson, explaining why his team took most of its shots from the outside in the first half and did poorly, said his players had not yet reached the "comfort level" with the three big men who have replaced Ewing — Ralph Dalton, Johnathan Edwards and Grady Matene.

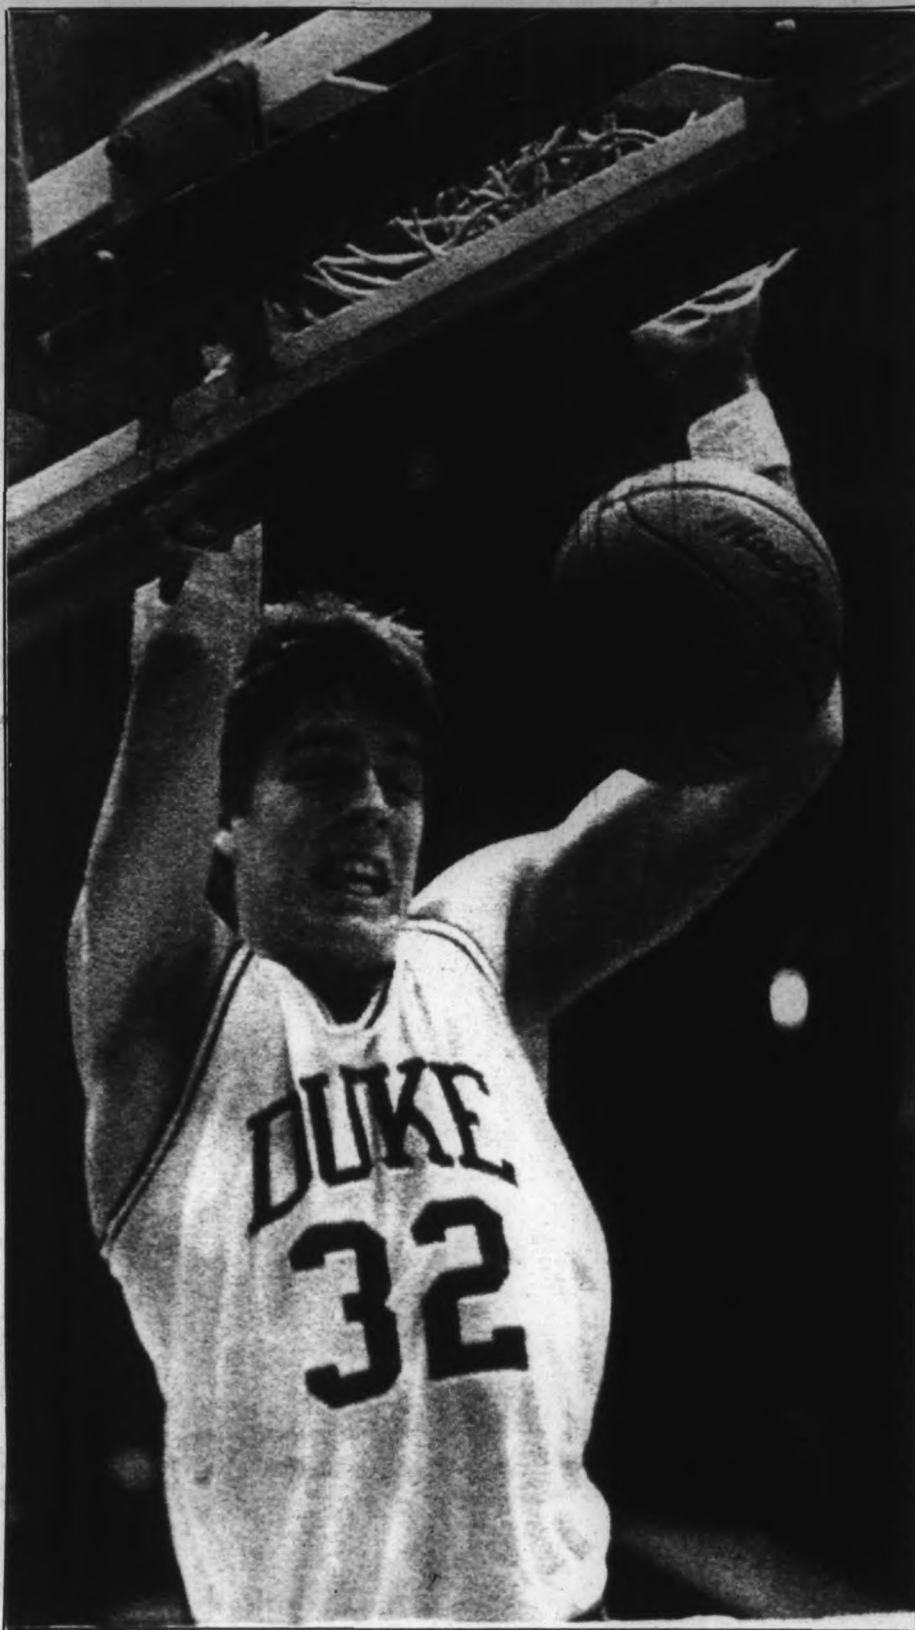

"Anything after that (Ewing) is a psychological letdown," he said.

"It felt good beating Georgetown," said Berry. "We won because we broke open their press."

Berry had help from Willie Glass, who scored 17 points, and Shelton Jones with 16.

In the opener of the Madison Square Garden doubleheader, New York University routed City College of New York 92-78.

Berry's dunk after a pass from Ron Rowan gave the Redmen their biggest lead, 68-57, with about 4:25 remaining. But the Hoyas then outscored St. John's 9-2 as Reggie Williams contributed four points to make it 70-66.

Wins MVP award

LSU's James propels East over West

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Louisiana State's Garry James ran for two touchdowns, leading the East to an 18-7 victory yesterday, and won the most valuable offensive player award in the Shrine East-West football game.

The largest crowd in the all-star game's 61-year history, 77,000, saw the nationally televised charity contest at Stanford Stadium.

The West succumbed to six turnovers, including four interceptions in the second half against Washington State quarterback Mark Rypien.

Indiana quarterback Steve Bradley opened the game by marching the East 68 yards in 13 plays for a touchdown. James capped the drive with a plunge from the one.

James led all rushers with 83 yards on 19 carries. Teammate Chuck Sanders, the first Slippery Rock player ever to play in the game, ran for 71 yards on 19 carries.

Late in the first quarter, James bobbled a pass from Bradley and West linebacker Willie Pless of Kansas intercepted the ball before it hit the ground. The West moved to the East two-yard line but was stopped when Rypien fumbled a snap.

James then made amends for his dropped pass by sprinting 15 yards for a second TD to cap an 89-yard drive by the East. Iowa's Scotty Helverson gave the East a 15-0 lead when he ran for a two-point conversion after fumbling the snap from center and taking a lateral from kicker Brendan Toibin of Richmond.

The West missed another chance to score when Alabama's 6-foot-7, 275-pound defensive tackle Jon Hand blocked a 32-yard field goal attempt by Arizona's Max Zendejas. Hand was named the game's most valuable defensive player.

The West finally scored with two seconds left in the half when Brigham Young quarterback Robbie Bosco scrambled two yards for a touchdown to cap a 74-yard drive that cut the East lead to 15-7.

The second half was packed with interceptions and fumbles.

On the first play of the second half, Bosco's pass was intercepted by Louisiana Tech's Doug Landry on the West 43. But the West failed to move the ball and, after an exchange of punts, Toibin missed a 28-yard field goal attempt.

Army safety Doug Pavlek intercepted a long pass by Rypien near the goal line and returned it 19 yards. Rypien was later intercepted again by Maryland's Donald Brown, who returned the ball 36 yards to the West 16. However, McClure then lost a fumbled snap.

East Carolina's Kevin Walker intercepted Rypien again and returned the ball 34 yards to the West 27 to set up Toibin's 21-yard field goal for an 18-7 East lead. Rypien was later intercepted a fourth time late in the game.

Alarie's 24 points leads No. 3 Duke

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — Mark Alarie scored 24 points and Johnny Dawkins added 17 as third-ranked Duke defeated North Carolina State 72-62 yesterday in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game.

Duke, which led by three points at halftime, opened up a 50-42 lead with 12:52 left on a power move inside by reserve Billy King. The Blue Devils upped their lead to 59-48 on a short jumper by Alarie with 7:26 left that finished off a 7-0 run.

N.C. State, now 9-5 overall and 1-2 in the ACC, cut the lead to five, but never could get closer as Duke ran its record to 14-0 and 3-0 — the best start ever for a Blue Devil team.

The Blue Devils, who trailed by as many as five points in the first half, rallied to grab a 25-19 lead with 6:36 left on two dunks and a layup by Alarie.

The Wolfpack, which has defeated Duke six of the last eight times they've met, cut the lead to 31-30 with 1:22 left before Jay Bilas' tap-in with eight seconds left gave Duke a 33-30 halftime lead.

Bilas added 10 points for the Blue Devils.

N.C. State was led by guard Ernie Meyers with 16 points, while backcourt mate Nate McMillan added 12. Chris Washburn and reserve Tevin Binns contributed 11 points each.

Virginia Tech 71, S. Carolina 69 COLUMBIA, S.C. — Reserve forward Phil Williams sank two free throws with three seconds remaining to lift 19th-ranked Virginia Tech over South Carolina.

The triumph lifted the Hokies to 13-2 overall, 2-0 in the conference, while the Gamecocks fell to 8-6 and 1-2.

South Carolina took charge in the first half with two six-point runs climaxed by two free throws by Linwood Moye with 9:12 left that gave South Carolina a 19-14 lead.

The Gamecocks went ahead 25-18 on a layup by a Moye, but Virginia Tech rallied late in the half as Dave Burgess converted two free throws for a 31-29 Hokie lead at the 1:13 mark of the first half.

Loyola 99, LIU 89 BALTIMORE — David Gately scored 19 points to lead Loyola College over Long Island University.

Loyola overcame a 28-point performance by Long Island's Andre Irvin to raise its record to 7-5 overall and 2-2 in the league. LIU is now 5-8 overall and 1-2 in the conference.

Kevin Carter, who grabbed 14 rebounds, scored with 2:24 remaining to put Loyola ahead 91-80. Long Island cut the lead to 92-87 with 1:35 left before Loyola iced the game with seven free throws down the stretch.

Vernon Hill scored 18 off the bench for Loyola, while Greg Jones had 18 for LIU.

Kansas 72, SMU 56 LAWRENCE, Kan. — Cedric Hunter scored eight of his 10 points in the first six minutes and 41 seconds, giving Kansas a 13-0 lead that started the ninth-ranked Jayhawks on the way to a victory over Southern Methodist.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

During that same stretch, SMU had five turnovers and missed three shots and two free throws. The Mustangs, 10-4, didn't score until Terry Williams connected on a jumper with 13:08 left in the half.

Reserve forward Archie Marshall led the Jayhawks, 14-2, with 15 points, while Ron Kellogg added 13. Kevin Lewis had 23 points and Williams 10 for Southern Methodist.

The Jayhawks extended their lead to 26-10 on Calvin Thompson's basket with 5:55 left in the half and shut down the Mustangs the rest of the way to take a 38-10 halftime advantage.

Notre Dame 70, DePaul 54 ROSEMONT, Ill. — David Rivers scored 24 points to lead 16th-ranked Notre Dame a victory over DePaul.

The sophomore guard hit consistently from outside in his first meeting with highly regarded DePaul freshman Rod Strickland.

Ken Barlow added 16 for the Irish, 9-1, as they beat the Blue Demons for the first time in seven contests.

Lycoming 69, FDU 62 MADISON — Steve Cleveland scored 22 points and Bruce Langer added 16 as Lycoming downed Fairleigh Dickinson-Madison.

Cleveland scored 12 of his points in the first half as Lycoming opened a 34-23 lead en route to its fifth victory in seven games.

Steve Shwatek had 18 points for Fairleigh Dickinson, which now is 5-5 overall and 2-3 in the league.

Ga. Tech 68, Maryland 67 ATLANTA — Mark Price drilled a 20-footer with 24 seconds remaining to give fifth-ranked Georgia Tech a victory over Maryland.

It was the 13th victory in a row for the Yellow Jackets — tying a school record — and came after Tech had squandered a 21-point first-half lead to fall behind for the only time in the game, 67-66, when Len Bias hit two free throws for the Terps with 44 seconds to play.

Maryland used a time out with 12 seconds to play to set up a final shot, but Keith Gatlin's 16-footer from the right side was short as time expired.

Tech, 14-1 overall and 3-0 in the ACC, overpowered Maryland from the start, spurting to an 11-2 lead in just over four minutes, stretching it to 23-6 after nine minutes and then taking a 33-12 advantage on a fastbreak slam by Duane Ferrell with 6:27 left in the half.

Temple downs Rutgers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Junior guard Nate Blackwell scored 17 of his game-high 19 points in the second half yesterday to help Temple to a 68-59 college basketball victory over Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers.

The Owls, 10-2 overall and 2-1 in the league, trailed 28-27 at halftime and 38-36 with 13:03 to play.

Temple then ran off 10 straight points during a 14-2 spurt with Tim Perry's layup with 7:57 remaining giving the Owls a 50-40 advantage. The teams exchanged field goals until junior forward Ed Zucker scored six straight points for Rutgers, bringing the Scarlet Knights to within 57-54 at the 3:04 mark.

But Temple converted 11 of 12 free throws down the stretch to clinch the victory, with Blackwell making 6 of 6 shots from the foul line.

The Scarlet Knights dressed only nine players due to injuries, but held Temple in the first half to 11 field goals on 32 shots.

Perry and Ed Coe each scored 13 for Temple. Zucker scored 16, while Eric Riggins, Lloyd Moore and Emory Ward added 10 apiece for Rutgers, 5-9 overall and 0-5 in conference play.

Perry led all rebounders with 13 to help the Owls to a 42-35 rebounding edge. Ward, a freshman forward, had 10 rebounds for Rutgers.

Monmouth's Wilson hits outstanding

WEST LONG BRANCH — Linda Wilson played her finest game of the season yesterday afternoon, leading her Monmouth College girls team to a resounding 79-51 decision against Marist College in the Cosmopolitan Conference.

Wilson scored 16 points, had nine steals, three blocked shots and 11 rebounds.

It was Monmouth's seventh win against four setbacks while Marist's record is 3-9.

Coach Mickey McGlade's team broke fast and was on top, 22-9, after the first seven minutes. Wilson enjoyed a hot hand as she scored 12 of the first 22 points.

Monmouth maintained its advantage and led at the half, 35-23.

In the second half, Michelle Allen took over the scoring and tossed in 15 of her game high 19 points.

Valerie Wilmer's 17 points paced Marist. Jackie Pharr scored 12.

Monmouth had three other players in double figures besides Allen and Wilson. Susan Shea scored 14 points, Sandy Clayton 13 and Ellen Brennan 12. Monmouth scored 30 field goals and clicked on 19 foul shots. Marist was held to 20 baskets and had 11-14 free throws.

NCAA expects to pace drug-testing program

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — An expensive drug-testing program that would penalize players for using drugs and coaches for doing nothing about it is expected to sail through the NCAA convention this week.

Just one year after abandoning their first effort at a drug program, delegates will vote on a measure that establishes a list of banned street drugs as well as performance-enhancing substances.

Testing will be done at football bowl games and NCAA championships, with an automatic 90-day period of ineligibility for players who test positive. A second offense would mean an automatic one-year suspension from athletics.

Another key provision calls for possible penalties against coaches or any other school employee who had knowledge of a player's drug use without reporting it. They could be subject to suspension without pay or termination.

The cost of the entire program for one year is expected to be around $600,000.

A drug-testing plan was expected to win approval at the 1985 NCAA convention, but was withdrawn when it came under fire from almost every quarter.

"The testing pertains only to postseason championships and bowl games. There was some confusion last time on whether it would pertain to regular-season games," said Jack Davis of Oregon State, NCAA president. "It also includes street drugs, which it did not include last time."

"We're all in favor of drug-testing, but that was just poorly drawn legislation," said Wayne Duke, commissioner of the Big Ten Conference.

"The first crack out of the box was not sufficient at all," Davis agreed. "The first measure said something to the effect that those who know — or should have known — of drug usage are subject to the provisions of the article. That was stricken. It bothered a lot of people who might have been in a position to know."

"We changed it to say those who know of drug usage and do not follow procedures would be subject to disciplinary action. I think that will help."

The list of banned drugs includes bulk-building anabolic steroids, which figured in recent episodes at Vanderbilt and other schools. Street drugs include cocaine, heroin and, with qualifications, marijuana.

"It's possible that a person could be exposed to marijuana smoke in a confined area, such as a car, and test positive for it later," Davis said. "For that reason, a first-time marijuana offender will receive a warning only. A penalty will be applied for a repeat positive test."

In what may come be a surprise to many people, alcohol is banned in only one competition — rifle.

"It's a potential performance-enhancer for most rifle competitions because in proper amounts it can reduce muscle tremor, making it easier to hold the rifle on target," said Davis.

Players will be able to gain exemptions for banned drugs if a doctor says he needs it for medical purposes.

"When an MD feels he must prescribe a drug that's on the list, then there would be an exception provided for the student-athlete who tests positive," Davis said. "That's something else that wasn't clear in the first measure."

Peete scores record-breaking MONY golf victory

CARLSBAD, Calif. (AP) - Calvin Peete, who came to La Costa seeking to redeem himself, kicked off the 1986 PGA Tour with a front-running, record-breaking, six-stroke victory yesterday in MONY Tournament of Champions.

Peete, the tour's most prolific winner in the last four years, acquired his 11th triumph of his late-starting career with a closing round of 68 and a 267 total.

"I wanted to redeem myself," said Peete, who was disqualified and later fined after taking an undetermined number of strokes, several on a moving ball, on the fifth hole of the first round of this event a year ago.

"An unfortunate situation," Peete said. "I wanted to give the fans four rounds of golf this year."

He gave them the best four rounds since the old tournament, which brings together only the winners of PGA Tour titles, came to the La Costa Country Club from Las Vegas in 1969.

He gave them rounds of 68, 67, 64 and 68. That added up to a 21-under-par total, breaking the tournament scoring record of 268 set by Jerry Barber in Las Vegas in 1960. It's six strokes better than the La Costa scoring record set by Frank Beard in 1971.

Peete, 43, now the winner of 10 titles since the start of the 1982 season — the best record on the American tour — led or shared the lead all the way.

He led by three shots over Mark O'Meara starting the final round — by eight over the rest of the pack — and never gave them a chance. After five holes of play in bright, warm sunshine, his leading margin was five strokes and he took it from there.

"He just didn't make any mistakes; never opened the door a crack," said O'Meara, the only man with any hope of overtaking Peete.

And those hopes vanished when Peete birdied three of four holes starting on the 10th.

The victory was worth $90,000 to Peete, who once was a peddler to migrant workers and who did not join the pro golf circuit until he was 32.

O'Meara, who encountered some putting difficulties, had a hard-won 71 over the final 18 holes and took second alone at 273. He collected $57,000.

No one else really got in the title chase. Towering Phil Blackmar was third at 69-277.

Scott Verplank, 21, winner of the Western Open last year and the first amateur to play in the 34-year history of this tournament matched par 72 and tied for fourth at 279. Also at that figure were Danny Edwards, who had a 71, and Masters champion Bernhard Langer of West Germany, with a closing 70.

Sandy Lyle of Scotland, the British Open champion, matched par 72 and had a 285 total. U.S. Open titleholder Andy North was 74-287. And PGA champ Hubert Green finished last in the field of 31 at 78-308. Defending titleholder Tom Kite slipped to a 75 and finished at 283.

In the separate but concurrent tournament from 1985 winners from the Seniors Tour, 54-year-old Miller Barber scored a five-stroke victory over Arnold Palmer.

Barber led throughout the final round and wasn't really threatened. He collected $30,000 after a closing round of par 72 and a 282 total.

It was the 19th victory on the Seniors Tour and the 30th of his career, but "anytime you win, it's something new," Barber said.

Palmer was second at 72-287, with Lee Elder next at 72-288.

Flyers thump Devils

EAST RUTHERFORD (AP) — Tim Kerr and Mark Howe scored goals 11 seconds apart in the first period to give Philadelphia the lead for good and the Flyers routed the New Jersey Devils 8-4 in a National Hockey League game yesterday.

NHL

Kerr converted his own rebound past Devils goalie Glenn Resch with 5:44 left in the period to give Philadelphia a 2-1 lead. It was his 36th goal of the season and 23rd on a power play, both tops in the league this season.

Howe, who also assisted on three goals, then intercepted a pass by Devils defenseman Dave Lewis and poked a 10-foot shot past Resch for his 13th goal of the season and a two-goal Flyers' lead just 11 seconds later.

Philadelphia, which has won eight of its last 10 games, blew the game open in the second period, scoring five times. Rich Tocchet started the outburst 1:40 into the period, beating Resch from point-blank range, and Peter Zedel made it 5-1 just 59 seconds later with a goal on a 20-foot slapshot.

Brian Propp extended the margin to 6-1 at 12:19 with his second power-play goal of the game and 28th of the season.

Bruins 8, Jets 4
BOSTON — Keith Crowder and Rick Middleton scored two goals each and Barry Pederson earned four assists, leading the Boston Bruins to victory over the Winnipeg Jets.

Gord Kluzak, Geoff Courtinall, Mike O'Connell and Nevin Markwart also scored for Boston as the Bruins improved their home record to 14-2-4.

Boston took a 1-0 lead in the first period as Ken Linseman, returning after a five-game absence because of a stress fracture in his hand, set up Crowder for the veteran wing's 17th goal of the season.

The Jets tied the score on a power play goal by Dale Hawerchuk, his 29th, in the opening minute of the second period, but the Bruins quickly regained command en route to just their second victory in the last six starts.

Islanders 8, Red Wings 2
UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Bryan Trottier scored the 400th goal of his National Hockey League career and John Tonelli his 200th as the New York Islanders thrashed the Detroit Red Wings.

With the Islanders leading 4-0, Trottier got his landmark goal at 15:38 of the second period. He took a centering pass from Mike Bossy, skated in all alone on Detroit goalie Mark LaForest, deked to his left and deposited the puck into the short side of the net for his 20th goal of the season.

Tonelli's goal, his 14th of the season, came at 19:03 of the first period when he rebounded a shot by Pat Flatley to make it 2-0. Stefan Persson also assisted.

Both also assisted on New York's first goal, the third of the season by Randy Boyd, at 3:51 of the opening period.

The Islanders got four goals in the second period, two by Greg Gilbert, who made it 3-0 on a power play at 4:23 and 6-0 with his fifth goal of the season at 16:12. Finnish rookie Mikko Makela got his seventh goal at 14:07 and added his eighth at 18:41 of the final period.

Bossy got his 29th goal at 15:36 of the final period.

Sabres 3, Penguins 3
PITTSBURGH — Bob Halkidis scored his first NHL goal with 7:56 remaining in the third period to give the Buffalo Sabres a 3-3 tie with the Pittsburgh Penguins.

Buffalo trailed 3-1 entering the third period before Ric Seiling scored his ninth of the year at 7:21, putting his own rebound past goalie Gilles Meloche.

Trail Blazers hang on to thwart Knicks, 109-106

NEW YORK (AP) — Jerome Kersey scored 12 of his 16 points in the fourth quarter last night as the Portland Trail Blazers survived a 40-12 New York spree to defeat the Knicks 109-106 in an NBA game.

The Trail Blazers, playing without injured center Sam Bowie, trailed 83-75 after New York led by as many as 15 points in the third period. Kersey got the first four points of an 8-0 run that tied the score at 83 with 9:57 left in the game.

There were 11 lead changes in a 4½-minute span until Kersey's free throw put Portland ahead for good at 107-106 with 41 seconds left. Nineteen seconds earlier, Kersey's layup had tied the score for the last time.

Kiki Vandeweghe, who led Portland with 27 points, scored 12 in a span of 5:57 of the second period as the Trail Blazers broke away from a 35-35 tie by outscoring the Knicks 19-6.

Rory Sparrow scored the last four points of the first half to make it 54-45 at halftime, and those four points were the first of the 40-12 run. Patrick Ewing, who led all scorers with 29 points, and Pat Cummings scored 13 points each as the Knicks turned the nine-point halftime deficit into an 81-66 New York lead with 2:43 left in the third quarter. A 9-2 Portland run narrowed the gap to 83-75 after three quarters and set up the fourth-quarter fireworks.

Trent Tucker had 12 of his 22 points for the Knicks in the final 12 minutes.

76ers 102, Pistons 101
PONTIAC, Mich. — Charles Barkley scored 26 points and Julius Erving added 24 to lead the Philadelphia 76ers to victory over the Detroit Pistons.

Barkley, after rebounding a missed free throw by rookie Terry Moss, was fouled and made two free throws that gave the 76ers a 102-98 lead with 57 seconds to play.

A lay-in by Isiah Thomas cut the 76ers' lead to two points, 102-100, five seconds later and a Thomas free throw brought the Pistons to within one, 102-101, with 25 seconds to play.

The Pistons had a chance to take the lead, but Kelly Tripucka, who led Detroit with 21 points, missed a jump shot from the left wing with four seconds to play.

The victory was the 12th in the last 13 games for the 76ers, who are 24-13 overall. Detroit, which has lost 12 of its last 14 games, is 16-21.

Maurice Cheeks scored 20 points and Moses Malone added 18 for Philadelphia.

Earl Cureton, a former 76er, tied his season-high with 18 points for Detroit.

The Pistons led 79-78 entering the fourth quarter and outscored Philadelphia 8-2 in the first 2:19 of the period. The Sixers, however, ran off an 11-3 spurt, taking a 91-90 lead on Erving's layup with 6:05 left in the game. Neither team led by more than four points the rest of the game.

Cavs 105, Kings 101

RICHFIELD, Ohio — John Bagley scored 10 of his 12 points in the last 4½ minutes and World B. Free led all scorers with 24 points as the Cleveland Cavaliers defeated the Sacramento Kings.

Cleveland led 77-75 entering the final quarter and 91-88 when Bagley began his spurt, which helped the Cavaliers raise their record to 16-21.

Six points by Bagley helped Cleveland to a 99-96 lead with 1:16 remaining, but the Kings tied the score at 99 on a three-point play by Mark Olberding with one minute to go.

Free put Cleveland ahead 101-99 just 12 seconds later with a pair of foul shots, and Bagley made it 103-99 with 35 seconds left when he stole the ball from Mike Woodson and converted a layup.

Reggie Theus brought Sacramento to within two points with four seconds to play with a driving layup, but Bagley clinched the victory with two foul shots one second later.

Lendl employs powerful serve to befuddle Connors in AT&T

ATLANTA (AP) — A powerful serve carried top-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia to a 6-2, 6-3 victory over Jimmy Connors in the men's singles final of the $500,000 AT&T Challenge Tennis Tournament yesterday.

Lendl had 13 aces and 10 other service winners in the match, which earned him $150,000. He never lost a service game and broke Connors' serve twice in each set.

Connors, seeded fourth in the tourney, won his share of the long rallies but was unable to keep Lendl's service in play often enough.

Lendl, 26, got his first break in the fifth game of the first set on two forehand winners and a pair of unforced errors by Connors. That put Lendl up 3-2.

Connors, 33, made three unforced errors in losing his service in the set's seventh game.

The seventh game of the second set also proved decisive.

Connors fought back from 15-40 to deuce, but then hit a forehand and a backhand into the net to go down 4-3.

In his next service game, Connors saved two match points but hit a pair of forehands out to end the match.

"I was very happy with the way I served today.

It's the first time I felt 100 percent all week," Lendl said.

"I felt so good and so loose I had trouble concentrating for a while. But I didn't let him get back at my serve and find little openings," he said. "My game is getting there. My footwork is much better. Now the consistency is what I have to show."

"He was just booming his serves in there, which was difficult"

Jimmy Connors
AT&T runnerup

Connors said Lendl was hard to beat, but that he felt good about his effort anyway.

"He was just booming his serves in there, which was difficult. I wanted to make him hit five or six shots instead of four, but I wasn't able to do that today," Connors said.

"I can play better, but for the first week of the year I felt I played pretty good tennis. If I can start like this and I improve, you never know what will happen," he said.

RETURN — Ivan Lendl was too much for Jimmy Connors yesterday in the finals of the AT&T Championships in Atlanta, Ga. Lendl used a powerful serve to down Connors.

Haines, Bauch spawn gym dynasty at Middletown South

By JACK RAFTER
The Register

MIDDLETOWN — There is a paradox that exists in interscholastic gymnastics in New Jersey. Girls gymnastics is growing stronger each year. Boys gymnastics is struggling to stay alive.

But not at Middletown High School South where a qualified staff and a group of dedicated kids are making sure that the program succeeds.

It's more than just success. It is domination ... particularly last year when the team went undefeated, took the sectionals, and then won the overall state championship.

Middletown South has just climbed the mountain.

Yet, despite its climb, Coach Kevin Haines keeps himself out of the picture as much as possible. "It was the kids. It was for the kids. They did it all," he said.

All well and good, but when the facts are revealed, Middletown South has two of the most qualified boys gymnastics teachers in the state. Both have proven themselves to be qualified competitors. And in gymnastics, you had better know before you teach.

Haines has been at the school for the past eight years, where he has taught physical education and coached both track and gymnastics. He is an instructor at Thompson Junior High.

He graduated from Sayreville High School and Trenton State, where he earned his B.S. and masters. He was known as a tough competitor in his school days.

Now he thinks back 20 years ago when there were nearly 20 shore schools touting a boys' teams. "Now, there are seven shore schools with boys gymnastics teams. I would imagine that one of the major reasons why the number has dwindled is the absence of qualified gymnastics instructors.

"Coupled with the lack of instructors is the fact that there are so many people who are 'suit crazy' and you just can't have someone at a sport such as gymnastics without knowing what he's doing."

It isn't difficult to take the chemistry or science teacher and ask that person to coach the golf or tennis team. Not that the team will be necessarily good or bad, but it is unlikely that worry over injury would be the prime concern. That same teacher may end up being the finest coach in the system. The same teacher who makes a technical mistake instructing a gymnast may be looking at a lawsuit. It is no secret that school systems are obliged to, "Open up the job for insiders first." While that system of choice is only fair, what with the teacher-coach relationship being so important, the fact remains that one does not choose anyone but a highly-qualified person to coach gymnastics.

Haines is qualified.

"The new state laws says it isn't necessary to have an organized coach in the school system. If a boy can get a certificate from his local gymnastics club instructor, he can qualify for competition by simply going into invitational or sectional competition. Sometimes, that's the only way a kid can get into competition, since his school doesn't have a regular gymnastics team. No school wants to gamble allowing a kid into gymnastics competition without a document that establishes that he is under careful supervision."

Faced with the difficulty of finding competition, one which is often worse than finding too much competition, Haines and his kids have taken on and beaten everyone. With 14 excellent athletes, Middletown South breezed through the season unblemished. The Eagles flew to a 32-0 record last year, including their meets with local schools and invitational competition. In the state finals, South went against 12 teams and came out with the top score. They also won the Devil Classic at Hunterdon Classic, an invitational meet. The Eagles also won the Shore Conference crown. They were Central Jersey champs and Overall All-Groups winners with a score of 139.95, which was a school, conference and state all-time high score for a boys team.

Haines gives a lot of credit to his assistant coach, Fred Bauch. "Fred is a highly skilled person. He was the 1972 collegiate ring champion.

"I was a state champion in the pole vault (track) and it helps your upper body strength and coordination," Haines added.

"Bauch has been in both national and international competition. Much of our success is a result of his fine work," Haines said.

Middletown South succeeded as a result of some truly gifted young athletes, but Haines credits two in particular. "Marc Feingold, a sophomore, broke five school records in the floors with an 8.9, the side horse in 8.8, the still rings in 8.5, and the bars in 8.3, and the All-Around in 49.4, bringing him to first in the state.

"The other boy was Mitch Hall. Hall is a junior and was a great vaulter with a 9.1, good enough to win that event in the state competition. Chris Camtos was our still ring specialist, having scored 7.75, good enough to rank him first team all-state.

"Both Mitch and Marc made first team all state," Haines said.

Of the group of 14, only two are graduating. "Mike and John Monsko are side horse specialists and they did marvelous work. We lose only 1.5 as a team score through graduation," Haines said.

Haines encourages his kids to compete. "Many are already in gymnastics school in their spare time. Several are wrestlers, and in fact, two were district champions. I'm proud of Doug Card and John Fagan who are both excellent middleweight wrestlers," Haines said. "Marc Feingold is the number one diver on our swimming team. I like to see them continue to stay sharp."

Haines is optimistic about the future of gymnastics at Middletown South. "I'm sorry to say that some schools will take the easy way out. They'll send one or two kids to the states with the certificate by some instructor. What a shame ... such a great sport."

The five-year plan may benefit those average athletes who have no chance to become professionals. It could give them a fifth year for graduate work. However, the blue-chippers probably would not like it. They have been told since Pop Warner days that eventually they will play in the National Football League (or the National Basketball Association), and they can't wait to get there. College is only an opportunity for them to advertise their skills.

Perhaps the delegates to the NCAA Convention should spend more time studying the programs at the military academies. Both Air Force and Army won bowl games this year, and Air Force finished in the top 10.

The very nature of those schools demands quality students first. The athletic venture is secondary. The cadets and midshipmen face rigorous academic schedules which limit practice time in all sports.

They, not Oklahoma, Nebraska and others of their ilk, epitomize the student-athlete. The academies even have physical limitations which make their teams invariably smaller than most Division I schools.

Air Force and Army — and Navy, too, in recent years — won because they were well-coached, played with an enthusiasm lacking at many bigger schools, and combined brains with physical prowess. The players at the academies are dedicated to their future careers, and they are just as dedicated to the games they are playing.

To them, intercollegiate sports are truly a recreational activity. To other schools, those same sports are a business and a sop to rich alumni.

There is such a thing as getting on with life — leaving behind the games of youth and doing what we were put on earth to do. If college athletes are awarded a fifth year of eligibility, life may be forgotten for another year.

There is no rule that says any college student has to graduate in four years. The athletes share that same privilege. The degree is there for them if they want it even if it takes them 10 years to get it.

Unfortunately, in too many cases, the athlete was not brought to college for a degree. He was brought in as an entertainer and fund raiser.

Too often, he is as guilty as the system. He uses the college as the college uses him.

Perhaps they do deserve each other.

week with gloves and wet-suit arms (barefoot place-kicker Mike Lansford wore a wet-suit boot), and brought along mittens, face hoods, foot warmers and thermal underwear.

The Bears are supposed to have the big edge over LA in cold weather. In one sense, they do. The Rams have never been here this late in the National Football League season. Certainly not when it's been this cold and the Bears have been this hot.

Since the former Cleveland Rams moved to the sunny climes of Southern California in 1946, they have returned 28 times to this windy city. They have won just nine of those games — and only three of them as late as the first week in December.

But as the game approached, Rams linebacker Mel Owens sniffed at this cold-weather business, especially at the way some of the Bears said they hoped it would be 10-below when the Rams trotted into the field.

"For them to say they're used to it — hey, they're in Atlanta!" he said. Indeed, the Bears trained in Suwanee, Ga., leaving behind what Duper's return, when he caught eight passes for 217 yards and the winning touchdown against the Jets.

New England, meanwhile, began 2-3, then won nine of 11 regular season games and the two playoff contests. Those two losses were in overtime to the Jets and by three at the Orange Bowl to the Dolphins.

Last week's playoff win was the toughest of all. Trailing 21-3 midway through the third quarter, the Dolphins had to rally for three late touchdowns to win 24-21 in a game in which they allowed the 8-8 Browns to rush for 251 yards.

That concerns them against the Patriots, whose Craig James became the first player to run for more than 100 yards against the Los Angeles Raiders this year when he picked up 104 in New England's 27-20 upset. Cleveland was particularly successful running left and that's where New England runs best behind Holloway, a second-team All-Pro who has made the Pro Bowl three of his five NFL seasons and guard John Hannah, considered one of the best offensive linemen in the history of the NFL.

But Miami held the Patriots to 122 yards in their last meeting and the defensive players think they can do it again.

"It's really an easy game to stop the run — it's controlling the line of scrimmage," says Miami defensive end Doug Betters. "You can't get knocked off the ball. Any time you get knocked two yards off the ball turned out to be a brisk yet pleasant few days in Chicago.

Eric Dickerson, the Rams' super runner, best summed up the weather and the Bears' supposed advantage. "They're people," he said. "They're not real bears."

Which is why this game, with a trip two weeks hence to either the Rams' second Super Bowl or the Bears' first, against either the Miami Dolphins or the New England Patriots, will be decided by the combination of talent and luck.

The Rams come by way of Hollywood. Yet it is the Bears, out of the City of Broad Shoulders, who have become the media darlings.

Dickerson, indeed, is a wonder to watch, his fluidity and speed and refusal to submit to tacklers. But, oh, here's The Refrigerator! William Perry, the Bears' voluminous defensive lineman, sometime running back and exceedingly wide receiver, woke up pro football this year the way tiny Eddie Gaedel tickled baseball a generation ago.

The Rams may have nicknames. Name one.

Now consider the Bears: Fridge, of course, Sweetness. Danimal. Mongo. The Black 'n' Bruise Brothers.

Consider the quarterbacks — Jim

McMahon, the head-banded, sunglassed leader of the pack in Chicago, and Dieter Brock, a veritable nonentity who spent the previous 11 years playing in the Canadian Football League. They were 2-3 in passing in the NFC this year and miles apart in public awareness.

As pivotal as quarterbacks usually are, the outcome of the game likely will hinge on two of the game's great running backs, Dickerson and Walter Payton. Between them, they virtually own the NFL record book.

Dickerson holds the all-time single-season, rookie season and playoff game rushing records, the last of those the 248 yards last weekend against the Dallas Cowboys. Payton, Sweetness himself, is the all-time leading rusher and holds the record for most yards in a game.

"The big difference between Dickerson and Payton," the Bears' star said, referring to himself in the third person, "is that he has to do against the Bear defense and I don't."

The Rams' defense was a respectable fifth in the league. The Bears' defense was the best. But while most observers were hailing the Bears' 21-0 shutout of the New York Giants last Sunday as a defensive gem, they were generally concentrating on Dickerson's performance and overlooking the LA defense. It shut out the Cowboys for the first time in their 36 playoff appearances.

"This is the finest defense I've seen," Dallas quarterback Danny White said after that game. "I've played against the Bears ... and the Rams are the best."

To which Otis Wilson, one of Chicago's outspoken band of linebackers, responded, "We ARE the No. 1 defense. When we say it, it's the truth. It's a fact. When they say it, it's just building up their confidence."

Defending champions fall in net doubles

LONDON (AP) - Two-time champions Heinz Gunthardt of Switzerland and Balazs Taroczy of Hungary blasted defending champions Ken Flach and Robert Seguso of the United States in four sets yesterday to reach the final of the World Doubles Tennis Championships for the fourth time in five years.

Winners in 1982 and 1983 and reigning Wimbledon doubles champions, Gunthardt, 26, and Taroczy, 31, avenged last year's final defeat by winning 7-5, 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (7-3) in 2½ hours.

In today's final on the Supreme surface at the Royal Albert Hall they will meet the No. 2 seeds, Australian Open champions Paul Annacone of the United States and Christo Van Rensburg of South Africa.

The 22-year-old Annacone and Van Rensburg, 23, crushed "wild-card" entries John Lloyd of Britain and American Peter Fleming 6-1, 6-2, 6-2 in the other semifinal of the $200,000 event.

County Queens finals today

Monmouth Masters Tournament will be televised

The Monmouth County Masters Bowling Tournament will be televised for the first time.

Entries for this showcase event are still being accepted up to next Sunday Jan. 19. Middletown Lanes has introduced many firsts to Monmouth County bowling and it is perhaps only fitting that the first television coverage of a major local event be added to that list.

There has been a strong feeling by some that the defending champion John Paris, already seeded into the finals, is unbeatable on his home lanes and thereby don't even have the courage to challenge him.

As far as Paris is concerned, fewer challenges make for a favorable situation. There are a number of challengers Paris would rather not see on the lanes and would welcome them to take a pass on this one.

On the other side of this issue is the number of opposite opinions recently expressed. Several feel that Paris is going to get knocked into the losers bracket early and that he will die there.

Whatever unfolds, Storer Cable will cover the action to be shown the following week on Channel 8.

Luke Forrest

This county has a large number of talented bowlers who could make the TV finals provided they have enough faith in their own ability to enter. If the lanes are properly dressed for tournament play, the challenge will rest more upon the ability of the bowler. When that happens the pressure on Paris will be that much greater. But Paris has been in pressure situations before so he knows what it is like. He, too, has had some heart-breaking shots that failed to carry. That is part of the game. A number of entrants this year have no fear of challenging Paris on his so-called home lanes and look forward to being the one to take the Masters title.

This year's winner has a reserved entry in the national ABC Masters in Las Vegas scheduled for May 6-10. The national event has a $43,000 plus first place prize and will be televised live if the current arrangements are finalized.

The qualifying rounds for the Masters are to be on Sunday, Feb. 2, with the second qualifying round on Saturday, Feb. 8. From this group the top 15 by total pinfall will advance to the finals Feb. 9, along with defending champion Paris.

If anyone who has not yet filed an entry and is unable to find one at any of the local bowling establishments a call to 291-2309 will secure a spot in one of the county's most spectacular bowling events.

For any male bowler who likes to bowl with the best, where drama builds to an exciting climax, this is it! If you have never tried it before then the experience is bound to take a smart bowler a step further to becoming a little wiser. Those that are good enough to meet this challenge will be there.

QUEENS FINALS are scheduled to get underway at 1 p.m. today at Shore Lanes. Yesterday two qualifying rounds reduced a field of 96 entrants to the top eight who will advance to the double elimination finals this afternoon.

As of this writing we were unable to verify the top eight finalists swinging into head-to-head match play competition today. We will cover this classic of all women's county bowling events with the complete results and special highlights.

Tournament manager Irene Byorick and her knowledgeable committee have made this tournament one of the best run women's bowling events in the county. It draws a good representation of the best bowlers in our area.

THE ROSE MARASCO tournament is still drawing entries. This is an annual event for women who can put together a four-player team. This event encourages the so-called mediocre bowler, regardless of average, to receive the benefit of a 100 percent handicap. What other tournament opens the door to the majority of women legklers?

The prize list is greater than the local association tournament for women's team event.

The tournament will be held at Harmony Bowl on the Saturdays of Feb. 1, and 8. Entries close next Sunday, so if you are not already on a team get to work on it this week.

Tournament manager Betty Wollentin is a good point of contact at 787-5008 if a team reservation is needed. A call to Harmony Lanes 671-2100 will also do the trick if anyone has difficulty in getting an entry form.

Remember, that 100 percent handicap is for the majority of women bowlers. Not everyone can be a winner, but this tournament gives everyone her best chance to be one. You don't have to be a super bowler, just have one of those good series that beats your mediocre average and you will fit into that prize list somewhere, even if you don't take the tournament title. Give it a try.

LAST CALL for entry into the New Jersey State Masters Tournament scheduled to start at Mid-State Bowl on Old Bridge Turnpike, East Brunswick this coming Saturday.

Entries will be accepted all this week. The format will require each entrant to bowl an 8-game block across the house. The top 15 by total pinfall will advance to the finals along with defending champion O.J. Olchasky. The winners-losers double elimination bracket system will be used. The finals will conclude Sunday, Jan. 19, with the winner being able to fill a reserved spot in the national ABC Masters in Las Vegas May 6-10, with all expenses covered.

Entry forms have been distributed throughout the state. A quick call to (201) 291-2309 will secure a reservation with the tournament manager. Other points of contact for single or group reservations can be made with Dan Whitehurst 238-3372 or 828-0515, Chuck Pezzano 279-3384, Steve Emanuele 892-7313, and Tony Lakawicz 796-2888.

The opening qualifying round starts at 10 a.m. Jan. 18.

Frenchman captures marathon

MIAMI (AP) — Frenchman Bernard Bobes held off Gian Paolo Messina of Italy by less than a minute yesterday as foreign runners dominated the Orange Bowl Marathon.

The women's winner was Shirley Silsby of Cotuit, Mass.

Bobes, of the French town of Antony, ran the 26-mile, 385-yard course in 2 hours, 21 minutes and 26 seconds. Messina finished in 2:22:14. Helio Alves Aguiar of Sao Paulo, Brazil, was third.

Silsby, 28, was timed in 2:53:18, 90 seconds ahead of second-place women's finisher Sarah Tabbutt of Berkley, Calif.

Butler sprints to new record

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — James Butler sprinted to an American record of 32.91 seconds in the 300-meter dash yesterday at the Florida All-Comers Meet at the University of Florida.

Butler, competing unattached, beat the former record of 33.17 set by Elliott Quow of Rutgers.

FINAL APPEARANCE — The 76th edition of the New York National Boat Show is playing its final Coliseum performance. The show, which ends Jan. 19, has more than 600 sail and power boats, along with thousands of accessories. The world-famous Coliseum will officially close its doors early this year. In 1987, the show will appear in the new Jacob K. Javits Convention Center.

Officials ponder possible bass moratorium

According to state law, the 1986 striped bass season will open on March 1 with a five-fish limit and a 24-inch minimum size, but according to Bruce L. Freeman, marine fisheries administrator, we won't have a season if the federal government enacts a moratorium in this state. And he says that may very well happen.

The Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission wants all of the seaboard states to fall into line to save the 1982 year class of Chesapeake Bay striped bass which will start becoming mature this spring to continue through 1987, by which time 95 percent of them would be mature and 33 inches long.

According to state fisheries biologist Bruce Halgren, the only strippers on the spawning grounds are the 1982 fish, and it is imperative that they be saved to spawn at least once for the fishery to survive.

"We've got to do more than we have been doing," said Freeman. "It certainly looks as if the Studds bill will be re-enacted this spring and the Chafee bill is even stronger. If neither is enacted there will be no federal threat, but I don't think that will happen."

At a public hearing on the striped bass issues given by the Marine Fisheries Council in Toms River last month the fishermen were offered options of adopting a 33-inch limit prior to March 1, or adopt a 30-inch length minimum before March, 1986, and increase to a 33-inch limit prior to March, 1987.

Neither option was accepted, but according to

Henry Schaefer

Freeman there has been a great deal of discussion since. He has been in touch with Joe Melillo, president of the Jersey Coast Anglers Association, regarding an additional meeting or meetings on the issues.

"I think fishermen should seriously consider a 33-inch limit," said Halgren. "At least they would be able to fish, but they won't under a moratorium."

'Knights of the Roadway' dangerous, not chivalrous

By JIM MATEJA
Chicago Tribune

The Insurance Institute for Highway Safety conducted a study of truck safety and published its findings in a booklet titled "Big Trucks." After reading a few pages, you'll probably want to detour off the expressways and head back to the side streets and the relative safety of playing dodge 'em with cabs and buses.

"Knights of the Roadway" used to refer to the men motorists relied on to stop, offer aid, and accept no more than a thank you for their efforts. Today, it seems, the truck driver's last thought is stopping, especially when a car is foolish enough to venture onto the same roadway or, worse yet, into the same lane.

The institute reports: "Nearly 4,500 people die each year in crashes involving tractor-trailer rigs. All too often, these big trucks barrel down the highways with inadequate brakes, bald tires and drivers that are tired and/or not necessarily qualified."

The study also found that: —In fatal crashes involving trucks and passenger cars, the car occupant was 35 times more likely to be killed than the trucker.

—From 55 mph, most cars stop in 140 to 150 feet. But a loaded rig takes 250 to 300 feet to stop, and an empty one 400 to 500 feet, because the brakes aren't adjusted for the load or lack of one.

—Truck drivers routinely obtain licenses in several states in order to spread out their traffic convictions. According to a National Transportation Safety Board investigation of drivers of large trucks who were involved in crashes, 44 held 63 licenses, had 98 suspensions, were involved in 104 previous crashes and had 456 traffic convictions.

—Only 15 percent of truck drivers involved in accidents have any formal commercial driver education, and 19 states don't issue special licenses to handle big trucks, meaning drivers with a general commercial license can drive an 18-wheeler.

Happy motoring.
SECOND-CLASS SALESMEN
You'd think by now car salesmen would know better. But, according to a survey conducted by J.D. Power & Associates, women still are treated as second-class citizens when shopping for a car.

Power, the Westlake, Calif., marketing research firm that specializes in the auto industry, surveyed 1,500 women to learn what type of treatment they received when shopping for a car.

Power found that most women believe it's more difficult for them to purchase a vehicle than it is for a man, that "dealership sales personnel are less likely to take them seriously, underestimate their vehicle knowledge and are patronizing in their treatment."

Women said the typical salesman often directs his sales pitch to the woman's male companion or simply ignores the woman shopper. However, the survey data revealed, "Women influenced the purchase decision in 81 percent of all new-vehicle-buying households." In money terms, that's about $39 billion annually.

WOMEN CALLERS
A woman called to say the salesman admitted making a $65 error when filling out the bill of sale on her new car. But he refused to subtract the $65 — even though he had a $350 "saver package" built into the price that included high-profit rustproofing, exterior lusterizer and fabric treatment.

Another woman called to say the salesman bumped up the price on the car she wanted by $250 because it arrived from the factory already rustproofed. Oddly, the car carried a sticker of a name-brand franchise rustproofing outfit.

Another woman called to complain that she wanted to buy a Dodge Aries with power windows, but the salesman told her power windows weren't offered and she'd have to move up to a higher priced Dodge 600 to get them. Well, this time the salesman was right. No power windows or power seats in an '86 Aries.

AND A MAN
Sometimes callers leave out a few details. Take the man who phoned to complain that he bought a 1986 Chevrolet Cavalier wagon on Dec. 12, when the factory was supposed to be offering a discount 8.5 percent financing rate.

Before he could complete the sentence, we stopped him.

"OK, you paid 8.5 percent, and now the rate is 7.9 percent, and you want to know how to get 7.9 percent, right?"

"No," he replied. "After I got home, I looked at the papers, and instead of 8.5 percent, my rate was 23.9 percent." But, he added, rather than pay the dealership 23.9 percent, he contacted a bank and arranged for a 12 percent loan to purchase the car.

After the Chevy zone office volunteered to look into this one, the caller phoned back. It seems he actually bought the car in November, almost a month earlier than he thought, when there was no 8.5 or 7.9 percent financing.

Before signing any papers, double-check the little line that tells you what financing rate you are paying. To that dealership getting 23.9 percent financing when banks are quoting 12 percent: Happy motoring.

NOTES

—American Motors Corp.'s longer-wheelbase utility vehicle, which will succeed the Jeep CJ series, will be called Wrangler. Tentative plans call for Wrangler to go on sale in late spring.

—Pontiac said the minicar it will import from Daewoo of South Korea for the 1988 model year will be called LeMans, a name last used in 1982 on Pontiac's midsize car line before it changed to the 6000 designation.

Purchase of Cessna postponed

By NUNZIO LUPO
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

WICHITA, Kan. — General Dynamics Corp. has halted indefinitely its acquisition of Cessna Aircraft Co., saying it didn't want to endanger Cessna's chances of obtaining new military contracts.

The Navy suspended General Dynamics on Dec. 3 from receiving new government contracts because the defense giant was facing a federal indictment accusing it of conspiring to submit fraudulent bills on an anti-aircraft gun it was building.

The purchase of Cessna was to have been final on Wednesday, but Cessna Chairman Russ Meyer said General Dynamics wanted to postpone it. He said the company wasn't backing out on the $683 million deal to buy Cessna.

General Dynamics has bought 18.9 million shares, or 95 percent, of Cessna's outstanding common stock for $30 a share. All that remains is for General Dynamics to declare the companies officially merged.

"It was their understanding that if they closed the Cessna merger today Cessna would also be under that (suspension), and we didn't know if that would be one day or one week," Meyer said.

A Navy spokeswoman confirmed that the Pentagon would continue to consider Cessna and General Dynamics as separate until the merger was consummated.

Meyer said he expected the delay to be a "short-term thing. The hope is that this will be resolved in the next several weeks."

Several defense companies were suspended in 1985 for relatively brief periods of time. General Dynamics was suspended from receiving new military contracts last year from May 21 to Aug. 13. When the ban was lifted, the company received $1 billion in defense work.

Meyer said the company's chief concern was that a Cessna proposal to build or refurbish jet trainers for the Air Force would be affected by the ban if the companies merged. Cessna has estimated that winning the jet trainer contract would generate work in Wichita for 500 to 800 people.

Mercury breaks mold of automobile design

By JOHN HICKS
Orlando Sentinel

Automobile design shoots on toward the 21st century, with grace, elegance — and some way-out shapes guaranteed to spark debate. The Mercury Sable and Ford Taurus, for example, are sure-fire conversation starters. Among the new crop of streamlined, futuristic cars, they are daring mold-breakers.

The Sable, moving into a spot in the Mercury lineup being vacated by the dated Marquis model, is a wind-resistant exercise in styling and, outfitted with a V-6 engine option, a performer in keeping with its image. This judgment is based on a test drive in a $14,160 Sable GS.

Absolutely white with a predominantly dark-blue interior, the test car seemed to have leaped fully realized from the drawing board. That is, it didn't appear to have suffered at the hands of a committee; consequently, it could function as art as well as transportation.

And Sable is artful, swooping upward from an aerodynamically flush front "laser lightbar grille" and terminating in "wraparound" rear glass and trimmed-off trunk. "European" is the word that automatically springs to mind these days, but "universal" might be the better description, implying as it does that there is a cosmic common sense at work here, decreeing that cars ought to be shaped by the elements in which they operate. Voila, Sable — a car that works in partnership with, rather than against, the wind.

OK, with its low nose and rounded body, Sable looks great; but is it going to run with its potential rivals — the Audi, the Mercedes, the BMW? Well, we're talking about a car with a $10,700 base price against cars that cost far, far more than that. The test Sable seemed solid — no rattles, no plastic chattering, no obnoxious mechanical racket — and it carried three-year power-train and five-year corrosion-protection warranties. These factors weigh in Sable's favor, but the road to auto longevity and renown is a long and difficult one. For the time being, though, Sable is headed in the right direction.

Heading up the test car was the three-liter V-6 engine, which with its four-speed, automatic-overdrive transmission, represented an additional $611 well spent. This electronically fuel-injected engine puts out 140 horsepower and 160 pounds-foot of torque without benefit of such esoteric go-faster gear as a turbo-charger or intercooler. It started easily, ran fine with only a few miles of break-in and was a quick accelerator in the Interstate chariot races. It stalled a couple of times, but time and adjustment likely would cure that problem.

Handling was quite respectable for a 2,932-pound, four-door sedan designed to haul up to six passengers. The fully independent suspension, with coil springs, gas-pressurized shocks and front stabilizer bar, partnered well with power-assisted rack-and-pinion steering and Firestone Supreme radial tires.

While it is the exterior that stops traffic, Sable's interior is equally worthy of notice.

Among many clever fillips, its most striking, perhaps, is an oval instrument panel that manages to make even its fake-woodgrain trim look good.

The test car also boasted optional electronic instruments ($305), including a digital speedometer, a 7,000-rpm bar-graph tachometer and a digital fuel computer that gives readings for instant miles per gallon, average mpg and miles to empty.

As a loaded model, the test Sable GS had goodies galore.

Among them: extended-range fuel tank ($46), electric door locks ($257) and windows ($282), air conditioner ($762), tilt steering wheel ($115) with leather wrapping ($59), digital clock ($78), speed control ($176), rear-window defroster ($145), tinted glass ($115) and "twin-comfort seats" ($195).

Streamlined cars are not new. They have popped up from time to time over the years, but more often as oddities than as viable products. In the 1980s, however, they appear to be here to stay. Fuel efficiency, handling and sophisticated manufacturing technology have teamed to make aerodynamic cars attractive in more ways than one.

Someday, the Mercury Sable may be remembered as a pioneer; for now, it's ahead of its time.

Eastern Airlines seeks support for pay cuts

By DAVID LYONS
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

MIAMI — The top two executives at Eastern Airlines, in the aftermath of a consultant's report that urges a temporary shutdown of the airline to win labor concessions, rejected that advice this week and appealed for public support to help force the unions to accept pay cuts.

In an interview, Eastern Chairman Frank Borman said he does not intend to follow the report's recommendations, adding that "management's position is that the program we have offered is sufficient." Management's program involves asking for major new compensation concessions by Eastern's 40,000 employees that would reduce pay by 20 percent and require additional work by employees.

Borman and Eastern president Joseph Leonard spoke at a luncheon sponsored by Knight-Ridder Newspapers attended by 40 community leaders.

Borman dismissed a proposal by machinists union leader Charles Bryan that Eastern employees should buy more stock, take control of the company and oust top management.

"That doesn't address the problem," Borman said, adding that labor has failed to deal with the pressures applied on older airlines by post-deregulation upstarts.

"The board of directors has lost its credibility with the employees, who simply do not believe the company can — or even needs to — take draconian measures required to keep Eastern economically viable in today's competitive world."

Avmark Inc.
consultant for Eastern

"Their only approach is to get rid of management," he said.

This week's public disclosure of the consultant's report, compiled by Avmark Inc. of Arlington, Va., infuriated Eastern's labor leaders and prompted them to accuse management of trying to set the stage for a bankruptcy filing Borman denied the charge.

"That was a report commissioned by the executive committee of the board of directors," Borman said. "As far as I know there was no one in management that had anything to do with it."

The report charges that Eastern's labor leaders have been intransigent, and that it is naive to assume that trading union representation on the board for temporary concessions will fix the airline's problems.

The report is scheduled to be reviewed by Eastern's board of directors on Tuesday.

Under a worst-case scenario, the report said, "Eastern requires cost reductions of $650 million to $700 million simply to break even, and close to $1 billion for a five percent operating (profit) margin before taxes."

It goes on to recommend an 11-point course of action that includes shutting down the airline and possibly seeking Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection from creditors to extract concessions from the unions.

"The board of directors has lost its credibility with the employees, who simply do not believe the company can — or even needs to — take draconian measures required to keep Eastern economically viable in today's competitive world," the report said. "The major task the company faces is regaining this credibility."

Borman, though, contradicted that finding, saying that he and Leonard found a favorable employee response to the company's program of cutting wages and benefits on a recent 15-day tour of Eastern's system.

"I don't think we've got a problem dealing with the trenches," he said.

He also made a pitch for the leaders' backing in Eastern's war of words with its flight attendants, machinists and pilots unions.

"We're asking for 100 percent of your support," said Leonard. "We need you and I think you need us."

In another development, Eastern said it was notified by the National Mediation Board that a mediator has been assigned to contract talks with its 4,200 pilots.

"Mediator Robert Brown will be at ALPA headquarters in Coral Gables (Fla.) to commence mediation Monday," said Eastern spokesman Jerry Cosley.

Eastern has been heavily lobbying the board to speed up contract talks with the pilots and attendants so it can meet a Feb. 28 deadline set by its lenders to win cheaper labor agreements with all three unions.

Neither Borman nor Leonard had an answer for what would happen if they couldn't win a new deal with the machinists, whose contract is not amendable until the end of next year.

Asked what will happen if the talks fail, Borman said, "We'll get it done in time."

Retailers report modest gains

By TERESA BLOSSOM
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Troy, Mich.-based K mart Corp. reported record sales for December on Thursday, but gains by it and the nation's other leading retailers for their most important retail sales month were modest compared to a year ago.

K mart, the nation's second-largest retailer, said sales rose 5.7 percent to an all-time high of $3.59 billion for the five-week period ending Jan. 1, compared with $3.39 billion during the comparable five-week period a year ago.

Comparable sales — those at K mart stores open for at least one year — continued their downward slide, falling 0.3 percent from last year's level. However, the decrease was hailed as a positive sign by K mart officials because it was not as steep as drops posted since May, the month the retailer last reported a gain in comparable store sales.

"Comparable store sales were relatively strong," said Robert Brewer, senior vice president of finance. "Overall, substantial sales were generated by markdowns last year, but that resulted in lower profit margins. This year, there were promotions, but they were planned promotions."

"From that respect, it was a better sales comparison and the strongest we've had in the past seven months," Brewer said.

K mart trimmed its inventory for the five-week period — which included most of the Christmas shopping season when retailers make as much as 50 percent of their sales and profit — by 10 percent over its comparable 1984 inventory level, Brewer said.

In 1984, retailers overstocked merchandise in anticipation of a strong Christmas sales season but were forced to make heavy markdowns in prices when it became obvious customers weren't spending heavily.

Although retailers fared better this Christmas, "there was no real buying enthusiasm on the part of the consumer," said Monroe Greenstein, a retail analyst with Bear, Stearns & Co. in New York. "Business was satisfactory, but not strong. Part of the lack of strength in sales, just part of it, was due to the fact that we had six fewer shopping days."

Bernard Fauber, K mart chairman, said: "Given the shorter holiday selling season and the soft economy this year, we are pleased with the sales results for December 1985."

K mart's revamped apparel merchandise, which includes a line of fashion designed by actress Jaclyn Smith, rose 9 percent.

Defectors paint picture of bungling CIA

By GEORGE GEDDA

WASHINGTON — One person who defected to the United States from the Soviet Union became so disillusioned with his treatment by the CIA that death, at one point, seemed preferable to his new life.

Another, also embittered by life with the CIA, on several occasions was at the brink of leaving the United States and trying a new life, again, this time in South America.

A Romanian had this to say of his experiences: "The CIA makes zombies of defectors. It destroys their self-esteem and sense of security."

Interviews with a dozen experts, including defectors, former CIA officials, State Department officials and a senator knowledgeable about the way this country treats defectors indicate a pattern of complaints about CIA insensitivity in its dealings with defectors.

The CIA role is coming under fresh scrutiny in the aftermath of the dramatic decision by Vitaly Yurchenko, a former high KGB officer who defected in August, to return to the Soviet Union after three unhappy months in CIA custody.

Yurchenko's decision came as a surprise to almost everyone except those who are familiar with the psychology of defectors and the CIA's treatment of them.

Vitaly Yurchenko

All agree that few experiences in life can be more traumatic than defecting from one's homeland to an adversary country. A defector, after all, has little in common with an immigrant, or anyone else except another defector. He is in a special category because he is, in effect, a deserter who willfully decides to aid a country hostile to his homeland, providing it with secret information.

Donald Jameson, who dealt with many Soviet defectors during a 22-year CIA career which ended in 1973, said it is "inevitable" for defectors eventually to want to return to their country regardless of how professionally the CIA treats them.

"There is guilt for the suffering the defection has caused the people back home," Jameson said.

He said Russian defectors are haunted by the knowledge that their close relatives are subject to loss of their housing, jobs, bank accounts and educational opportunities.

Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., said, "There is an outrageous loneliness that hits these people."

A top State Department official, speaking privately, said the average defector has "torturous psychological problems" because of doubts as to whether he did the right thing.

But these and other experts said the typical defector's problems are compounded by indelicate CIA handling, a subject that has received little public attention because virtually all defectors, dependent on CIA income, refuse to discuss it publicly.

Two exceptions are Vladimir Sakharov, a Soviet diplomat and part-time KGB agent who defected in Kuwait in 1971, and Nicolae Horodincea, a Romanian intelligence agent who defected in Washington in 1980. Both spoke about their treatment.

One of the most trying periods for a defector occurs when he is turned over to CIA "resettlement" people after spending his first three months with agency debriefers.

Jameson said that resettlement is known irreverently around the agency as "disposal."

Horodincea, 39, said that shortly after his defection, the CIA promised him a job, a house, life insurance, lifetime coverage of all medical expenses and paid educations for himself, his wife and his son.

By the time he was turned over to the custody of the resettlement officers, Horodincea said, the promises were forgotten.

"The fact is that they make all these promises but there is nothing to make them keep them," Horodincea said. "When you ask about the promises, you are told, 'you talked to the wrong people.'"

Feeling betrayed and depressed, unable to provide medical care for his sick wife because he had no medical insurance, Horodincea turned up at the Romanian Embassy in February 1981, a year after defecting, and said he wanted to return home with his family.

It was an act of desperation, for Horodincea knew he would face, at a minimum, an extended prison term. But Romania, despite its reputation as one of Eastern Europe's most repressive police states, seemed preferable to his existence with the CIA.

However, shortly before his scheduled departure, Horodincea was dissuaded during a brief, climactic trans-Atlantic telephone call. His mother begged him not to return because of the dangers she felt were awaiting him. At that point, Romanian telephone monitors cut off the communication. His wife and 3-year-old son went back to Romania but Horodincea stayed behind.

He angered the CIA in the spring of 1981 when he went public with his story, and his $1,207-a-month stipend was cut off. A magna cum laude graduate of a Romanian law school, Horodincea now repairs typewriters in the Washington area under an assumed name given him by the CIA.

Sakharov, 40, is still rankled at what he said were 10 wasted years spent awaiting CIA help in finding a suitable career.

Despite assurances shortly after his 1971 defection that he would be permitted to pursue a career in his specialty, Soviet and Middle Eastern affairs, the CIA enrolled him in a motel management school in Hollywood, Calif.

"Motels don't exist in the Soviet Union. And hotel people there are considered at the same level as strawberry pickers. But my protests were useless," Sakharov said.

Lacking alternatives, he enrolled at the school but it went bankrupt after three months. Feeling adrift and overwhelmed by a sense of hopelessness, Sakharov recalled, "I felt like I wanted to drop dead. I tried drink but that didn't work."

With CIA help, Sakharov got a master's degree and a doctorate at the University of Southern California but more bitter disappointments followed. He said the CIA found a job for him with a private firm in North Carolina but that the offer was withdrawn without explanation. Subsequently, despite his impressive academic credentials, the CIA suggested he find a job selling shoes or cars or clothes.

Dismissing his CIA case officers as a "mean bunch," Sakharov dropped his CIA name, restored his Russian identity and resolved to do things his way.

His meetings at the time with the CIA resettlement people often "turned into screaming matches."

In what he saw as a clumsy CIA bid to retain control over him through intimidation, he said a case officer told him at one point, "Sixteen KGB agents have just landed in New York and we're sure they are going to wipe you out."

Since striking out on his own three years ago, Sakharov's career has blossomed. He is now writing a book, lectures frequently, does consulting work and has been a visiting scholar at Stanford University.

Like other defectors disillusioned with the CIA, Sakharov has been helped by American friends. During a bleak period a decade ago, he befriended a USC professor who helped him emotionally, morally and financially.

Another stabilizing influence has been his American wife and son, now 8. This past fall, he coached his son's soccer team.

His memories of the CIA, if not forgotten, now seem less relevant than they once did.

At various times following their defection, Horodincea and Sakharov found themselves nearly destitute, a problem common to other defectors.

One source, insisting on anonymity, said a Soviet defector was so outraged a few years ago by the CIA's refusal to grant him a permanent income that he almost fled to South America, expressing a preference for life under a military dictatorship there.

That defector's financial problems have since been resolved but another East bloc envoy who fled to the United States during the early part of the Reagan administration is chronically short of money.

He refuses to discuss his case for the record because he fears the authorities in his former homeland will use his comments to mount a propaganda campaign against him and the CIA.

The CIA, in keeping with tradition, does not comment on defectors. But representative Patti Volz said many defectors have made the transition to life in America with minimal difficulty with the agency's assistance.

One such case appears to be Viktor Belenko, a Soviet pilot who defected by flying his MiG-25 jet to Japan in 1976. An account of Belenko's experience was written by John Barron in the book "MiG Pilot" which, according to Jameson, is highly authoritative.

Barron wrote that several well-trained Russian speakers were Belenko's principal contacts during the early period of his defection, all of whom showed

Book focusing on Jews in society stirs controversy

By LEONARD W. BOASBERG

In "Pete 'n' Tillie," a comic film of some years back, the character played by Walter Matthau was asked why he always called himself a Jew although he was three-quarters Lutheran.

"I'm a social climber," he replied.

There is wise social commentary in that crack. Charles Silberman contends in a recently published book that has sparked intense arguments — and revealed a paradox — among Jews in the United States, as well as in Israel.

The book, published by Summit, is titled "A Certain People: American Jews and Their Lives Today."

In it, Silberman, a 60-year-old journalist and author, has thechutzpah to proclaim the good news that Jews have made it in American society, and made it far out of proportion to their numbers.

Within his lifetime, Silberman notes, the doors of advancement had been closed to American Jews in corporations, in corporate law, in academia, in the media, in social life, in politics — and many Jews changed their names to avoid being identified as Jews. But today, he declares, the doors are wide open, and Jews, the perennial outsiders, have come inside.

"Along with other once-despised and discriminated-against ethnic and religious groups, American Jews have taken their place in the mainstream of American life, and a number of them have been accepted as part of the so-called Establishment," he writes.

Silberman contends further that "for all the talk about intermarriage and assimilation, Judaism is not about to disappear in the United States" and that — contrary to the belief of most American Jews — anti-Semitism "is no longer a significant factor in American life."

The paradox is that, to many of Silberman's co-religionists, the good news is — or may be — bad news. They worry, as Silberman writes, "that things may be too good — that the very freedom and openness of American society may pose a mortal threat to the survival of American Judaism."

Several religious leaders confirmed during interviews that yes, they are worried.

In the view of Rabbi Pinchas Stolper, executive vice president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations, Silberman "is lulling a community to sleep with facts and figures that don't stack up to reality and to experience."

"His view of that which constitutes Jewish observance is so watered down that he is satisfied with the very minimum manifestations of Jewish involvement," Stolper said.

Rabbi Ivan Caine, rabbi of the Society Hill Synagogue in Philadelphia, agreed. He said he found "very few people who are actively involved in spiritual Jewish endeavor."

Jewish men and women, he added, "are not meeting each other, they're not marrying each other ... and Jews are not reproducing themselves when they do marry. Statistically, we are heading toward self-annihilation."

Well, Jews have always differed on what constitutes Jewish observance, even on what a Jew is, Silberman told a recent visitor to his Upper East Side apartment in New York. He insisted that — with all respect to the views of others — the data he has collected justify his optimism about the future of American Judaism.

"What is remarkable is not how many Jews are lost to intermarriage, but how many remain, or are added," he said.

True, about one in three American Jews now marries a non-Jew. But, he said, when the husband or wife converts to Judaism, the family is more likely to be observant — more likely to go to synagogue, light Sabbath candles, give the children a formal Jewish education — than when both partners are Jewish. And even when conversion does not occur, he said, the couple chooses as often as not to practice Judaism.

"The essence of my argument," he said, "is that the consequences are not preordained, that whether those children are Jews or not will depend in large measure on how Jews individually and collectively respond to the phenomenon."

It took Silberman six years to research and write "A Certain People" — or 60 years, depending on how you count. Born in Des Moines, Iowa, in 1925, he grew up in New York City, entered Columbia University at 16 and served in the Navy during World War II. He graduated from Columbia after the war, did graduate work in economics there and then went into journalism, spending 18 years with Fortune magazine.

In 1964, his first book appeared — a highly praised study of race relations titled "Crisis in Black and White." That was followed, six years later, by "Crisis in the Classroom" and, in 1978, by "Criminal Violence, Criminal Justice." Both were also well-received.

Silberman had grown up without the hang-ups of many American Jews of his generation, he said. "My parents were second-generation, college-educated Orthodox Jews. I did not have immigrant parents to rebel against, or parents with accents, or lower-class, working-class parents."

Instead, his was "a poverty-stricken middle-class family." His father, he recalled, might have been unemployed much of the time during the Great Depression of the 1930s, but he was always secure in his Jewishness.

In many ways, Silberman said, "A Certain People" was the hardest book he ever wrote. One problem involved finding the right level of discussion — "what's self-evident to one group, the Jews, sounds mysterious to non-Jews." Another problem was "that I did not have the emotional distance that I've had with everything else I've written. It was infinitely harder to get that critical distance which you need in order to edit your own writing."

Some of his friends, he said, pleaded with him not to write about certain subjects — the increasingly important role that Jews play in the mass media, for example, or Jewish wealth (23 percent of the people on the 1984 Forbes list of the 400 wealthiest Americans were of Jewish origin).

"Those were not painful dilemmas," Silberman said. "I felt we were secure enough to withstand non-Jews knowing about Jewish success."

As for the criticism that he is too optimistic about anti-Semitism, Silberman responded that the facts justify optimism on that score, too: "I'm not saying that anti-Semitism is not a matter of concern. I argue that it no longer plays a significant role in American or Jewish life. ... It no longer affects any of the significant choices that Jews make. It doesn't affect where you live, it doesn't affect where you go to college, it doesn't affect what profession or occupation you enter. It affected all of these when I was growing up."

Attitudes have changed dramatically over the last generation, he said. "Survey data are clear. In 1940, 63 percent of Americans (according to a public-opinion survey) said the Jews as a group had objectionable traits. In 1981, 8 percent thought Jews had undesirable characteristics; 81 percent thought Jews had desirable characteristics."

Further evidence, he said, can be seen in the relative lack of success of recent attempts by right-wing hate groups to win support for their contention that Jews are responsible for the economic agonies of Midwestern farmers.

"They have had some impact, but in a sense surprisingly little," he said. "This is a case of Dr. Johnson's dog that walks on two legs; what's remarkable is not how badly he does it but that he does it at all. The crucial point, it seems to me, is that in contrast to theories, the attempts to persuade farmers that Jews are to blame for their troubles are unanimously condemned by the entire power structure, or whatever you want to call it. Religious leadership, Protestant and Catholic, political leadership, have all condemned, attacked, mobilized to fight them."

The one exception to the good news about anti-Semitism that Silberman discussed in his book is its increase, he says, among younger blacks and those with higher education, "with black leaders the most anti-Semitic of all" — exactly contrary to the trend among white Americans.

"I think the most important single factor in the exacerbation of black anti-Semitism is the Third World politics and rhetoric, but I see this as more of a problem for blacks than for Jews," he said. "I think it is highly self-destructive to the black community ..., a dangerous diversion of black energies."

He specifically dismissed the virulent anti-Semitism of Nation of Islam Minister Louis Farrakhan as a threat to Jews. In Silberman's view, Farrakhan "is far more of a threat" to black politicians such as Philadelphia Mayor W. Wilson Goode and Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, whose "success is living refutation of his basic argument," and "to blacks in general, to the whole process of black upward mobility."

In "A Certain People," Silberman also takes issue with the contention of such "neo-conservatives" as Irving Kristol and Lucy Dawidowicz that American Jews have lost touch with current political reality in maintaining their traditional allegiance to political liberalism and the Democratic Party.

Responding to that point, Ruth R. Wisse wrote in a savage review in Commentary: "Jewish self-interest may dictate a rather different strategy." She accused Silberman of "speaking above all as a liberal, determined to make the script fit the message he wants to deliver."

raise money for the Count Basie Theatre in Red Bank, and the group plans to get the center back in full swing very soon. Libby just returned from her hometown of Greensboro, North Carolina, and brought her sister Sallee Kelly back with her. Sallee proved to be an invaluable assistant. The brunch's silent auction, chaired by Miriam Cooper of Rumson, will feature jewelry from A.H. Fisher in Red Bank, clothes, facials, elegant dinners from local restaurants and specialty baskets. Barbara Gorlin and Claire Nightengale, Rumson, are the co-chairs for decorations. Alicia Rowe, Rumson, is making sure the background music is perfect and Libby is the general chairperson. Others helping Libby were Fran Kaye, Long Branch she's invitation chairperson; Mary Donnelly, Loch Arbor; Florence Hunt, Fair Haven; and Lorna O'Hara, Marylou LaComb, Barbara Parr and Barbara Campo, all Rumson. Barbara Campo's chairperson of the M.C.A.C. Associates. Bastion, Rumson's newest ladies boutique, will be showing off its wares at the brunch. Sounds like a wonderful benefit. Be sure and bring your sweetheart!

In trying to find out more about Bastion, we discovered it is owned by Patty and Gary Rosenblum of New York City. Patty grew up in Belmar and thought Rumson would be an ideal location for very trendy, with-it clothing. Since their August opening, the Rosenblums are now the newest members of the fashion show circuit, and their sales have been terrific. They unveiled their spring and cruisewear designs at a Junior League Sustainers luncheon held at Rumson Country Club Tuesday. Heavy cotton long straight skirts with oversized sweaters in shades of melon, green and white are what's new this year. Patty used as models Sandy Davis from Fair Haven; Monta Howard and Taphy Harcsar from Rumson; and Ellie Luhrs of Locust. Patty also says pure linen separates in shades of white and beige should be included in spring wardrobes. Some of the women at the Country Club munching and watching were Peggy Nelson and B.J. Thompson, Fair Haven; Jan Ward, Dottie Cornwell, Red Bank; Barbara Burling from Rumson and Happy Hitchcock, Middletown.

Defectors

sensitivity in preparing him for the difficult transition to an alien culture.

By defecting in a top-of-the-line Soviet jet fighter, Belenko had made an inestimable contribution to U.S. intelligence, and his hosts responded, according to Barron, by establishing an irrevocable trust that would provide him with a generous income for the rest of his life. But Barron's account also dramatizes the difficulty even the best-treated defectors have in making the adjustment to life in America.

Many Americans assume that East bloc defectors assimilate easily into the American mainstream, seldom giving a second thought as to the wisdom of their decision to abandon life under Communism.

Belenko's experience, as well as that of many others, suggests that assumption is profoundly mistaken.

Belenko was indeed dazzled by almost everything about America — its abundance, its freedom, its doctors. At the outset, when he went to a supermarket in a small Virginia town and saw the mountains of food, he was so astonished that he thought it was a CIA showcase set up exclusively for foreign visitors.

For all that, during one traumatic period, Belenko stopped just short of rejecting America and returning to the Soviet Union.

For a time, the extravagant luxuries of America made it seem to Belenko like an alien planet where he could never be a normal inhabitant, Barron wrote.

"Primordial impulses seized and held and pushed him, and he could not resist them," Barron related. "He wanted to feel the mud of the streets, smell the stink in which he had grown up, be among the desolate cold huts, hear Russian, be in the land of his birth, his people, his ancestors."

In California, he decided to redefect, and he began a cross-country drive to the Soviet Embassy in Washington. It wasn't until he was two hours away from his destination that he recognized that redefection was folly. Instead of the embassy, according to Barron, Belenko went to the home of a CIA case officer in Virginia.

Jameson said that nowadays, Belenko, no longer plagued by doubts, "is happily married and his life is spiritually and financially rewarding." He works in the aerospace industry.

Jameson said the Belenko example is a model of how the CIA should treat defectors. The CIA seemed to have come a long way toward redeeming itself from the period, in the early 1960s, when it kept former KGB agent Yuri Nosenko incommunicado for more than two years on the suspicion that he was a Soviet plant, rather than a defector.

In the CIA's defense, Jameson said Nosenko's detention was not ordered by the CIA but by then-Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy.

Like other experts, Jameson is mystified by the CIA's handling of Yurchenko.

In the Yurchenko case, "the central role of a figure of authority, confidence and friendship does not appear to have been occupied," Jameson said.

Few analysts accept Yurchenko's explanation that he was kidnapped and then drugged and tortured by the CIA during three "horrible months" before escaping to the Soviet Embassy on Nov. 2.

The consensus is that Yurchenko was the victim of CIA mishandling — no Russian speakers were assigned to him, he claimed — and also suffered from the same kind of yearnings for the motherland that brought Belenko to the brink of redefection years earlier.

Recalling his own experiences with the CIA, Horodincea said, "I am absolutely 100 percent sympathetic with Yurchenko."

But if defectors find the CIA unreasonable, they sometimes make unreasonable demands on the CIA, too. According to one expert, who asked not to be identified, a Russian defector married an old generation Russian immigrant several years ago, and after the union turned out to be a disaster, "the defector wrote back to his case officer demanding that he arrange a divorce and also to recover the money she had absconded with."

Another defector, filled with a sense of self-importance, felt he was entitled to an audience with the president and to an invitation to address a joint session of Congress, according to the source.

Jameson pointed out that defectors sometimes face cultural biases in their adopted land.

"All Americans are sons and daughters of ancestors who immigrated and there is a common attitude that 'By God, my father or grandfather had it tough so why should defectors have it any easier,'" he said.

There is a consensus, however, that the CIA could do more than it has to ease the transition of defectors to normal lives.

Wallop, a senator who has taken a special interest in the subject, said the CIA has made a mistake in relegating defector resettlement duty to "a dead-end career assignment."

Another expert said, "At the CIA, taking care of defectors is about the worst job you can get." Officers assigned to such duties lack training, are rotated frequently and their foreign language skills often are limited, he said.

This expert, as well as Wallop, said that resettlement should be yielded by the CIA to the FBI. A Soviet defector, Yelena Metrikhina, said recently that her experience indicates FBI agents have shown far greater sensitivity to the needs of defectors than CIA officers.

Fetal alcohol syndrome

Grants will provide county with educator for mothers

RED BANK — More pregnant women and infants will live healthier lives thanks to the allocation of two grants for a Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (F.A.S.) educator in Monmouth County.

The grants from the Jersey Chapter of the March of Dimes and the Citizens Advisory Committee on Alcoholism of Monmouth County were issued in response to a proposal from the Monmouth County Coalition of Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies, a group of consumers and health professionals dedicated to improving the health of pregnant women and their newborn children in Monmouth County.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome refers to a group of diagnosable birth defects that may occur when a woman drinks during pregnancy.

"It is the third leading cause of birth defects, and it is totally preventable," said Josephine Messer, R.N., M.S., the new educator. "The more information we can get out to the public, the better."

Messer's plans include developing a specific curriculum on F.A.S. to present to junior high and high school students and health educators throughout Monmouth County.

She was previously employed as an assistant professor in the Nursing School of Monmouth College, West Long Branch.

Prior to that she was a project director for the Monmouth County Health Department.

Messer will work out of the offices of the National Council on Alcoholism (NCA) of Monmouth County at 90 Monmouth Street here.

"We are pleased to have Ms. Messer here," said Barry Johnson, Executive Director of NCA of Monmouth, "and we invite the educators in Monmouth County to contact her at 741-5200 for more information about the program."

When the Coalition for Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies incorporated a year ago, the FAS Task Force of Monmouth County joined it as an umbrella organization.

Although the goals of the FAS Task Force are more particular, they do parallel the objectives of the coalition.

These objectives include promoting public awareness of health risks for pregnant women and resources for their use, and advocating with the courts and state officials on the issues affecting maternal and infant health.

Use good common sense — have foot pain checked by your physician

By LESTER L. COLEMAN, M.D.

My husband is not a hypochondriac but he does have a lot of pain. He refuses to go to a doctor. Lately his feet have been hurting badly and they swell up. Can you tell me what this could be caused by? Now he is really worried. — Mrs. P.R., Rhode Island

Dear Mrs. R.:
I gather that your husband's present state of worry has not helped him overcome his resistance to doctors. Perhaps if I were to list a few of the possibilities that might account for the swelling of his feet, he might see the light and recognize how foolhardy his delay is.

1. Circulatory disturbances of the heart
2. Arteriosclerosis
3. Hormone imbalance
4. Dietary and vitamin deficiency
5. Allergies
6. Liver disease
7. Varicose veins
8. Kidney disease
9. Water and electrolyte imbalance

And these are only a few of the possibilities.

So varied are the causes of swelling of the feet that each listing might have 10 additional sub-listings. Any one of these that you might choose would be wrong and further delay seeking a proper diagnosis and treatment.

As you can see, unreasonable stubbornness is not listed — although it can be a major cause of chronic illness caused by neglect.

It is sad when people live in fear and spend their lives as psychological cripples. For fear is a crippling disease.

I hope your husband can be brought to the mature realization that modern methods of diagnosis and treatment are readily available to him.

I have heard the term cardiac decompensation. It was used by a doctor who described my father's condition. I don't really understand it. — Miss R.F.T., Wisconsin

Dear Miss T.:
Many medical terms have special meanings for physicians and confusing meanings for patients and their families.

This term really means heart failure, or the inability of the heart to carry on its normal healthy activity.

Suppose an ordinary pump was pushing 5 gallons of water every minute through a small pipe. If the pump system went out of order but still worked, it might push out only 2 gallons of water instead of the 5 every minute. The pump could then be described as being inadequate, or decompensated.

Similarly, if the heart muscle becomes weakened and overburdened by unusual strain, it, too, can become unable to pump the blood into the distant areas of the body. The heart still functions but not well.

We all remember the prettiest

Everyone remembers the prettiest girl in their class. I know I remember Ginger Angel (not her real name). She had porcelain skin, hair that curled on rainy days and pom-pom hands.

Whenever and wherever a phone rang, it was for her and she was eternally dredging up a chain that held a class ring the size of a flea collar.

Now I read where a club has been formed in California for people like Ginger who consider being born beautiful a curse and a problem. They say they feel insecure about their appearance and their self-worth. They have felt the pains of discrimination of being good looking by a public that doesn't consider beautiful people overly bright. They can't trust people who say they love them for themselves, and they're tired of being thought of as aloof and cold when they are just disturbingly beautiful.

Give me a second here. I'm trying to relate. I could have sworn Ginger was having a good time all those years. I guess I didn't know how miserable she was, going out weekend after weekend desperately hoping to kiss a prince who would turn into a toad. (Heaven knows she kissed enough of them.)

It's not that I'm insensitive to people's feelings, it's just that their problems didn't seem as major as those of, say, an unattractive person. We all carried our stigmas and stereotypes with us. Sure, being queen suggested your bust size was larger than your IQ, but if you were editor of the school paper, everyone assumed you had bad breath and the light hurt your weak eyes. There's a difference here.

Disturbingly beautiful people say they spend a lot of Saturday nights at home because everyone feels they already have dates or they're too intimidated to ask. With unattractive people, no one cares.

DBP sit around wondering if they are being invited out because they're beautiful or if someone really cares for them as a person. With unattractive people, we wonder if they asked us out because they lost an election bet.

The criterion for joining this group of put-upon beauties is admittedly subjective. Who can define beautiful? As one member said, "There were a couple of people who came to the meeting whom I didn't think were that attractive, but they decided to leave before things got underway."

A few years ago I went to a class reunion, and sure enough there was Ginger still surrounded by a group of males. I felt pretty good about myself. I had written seven books, a column read by an estimated 31 million and was a regular on national television. Ginger came over to me and said, "So what are you doing now? Did you finally get married?"

I do have empathy for the Gingers of the world. They are much maligned and are discriminated against because of their looks. I found myself using one-syllable words with her, and when I left I vowed that I would stage a telethon for this poor unfortunate. If Joan Rivers can help me co-host it, Ginger will never complain again.

Skin patch may help smokers quit

Nicotine absorbed through the skin under a plastic patch may help smokers "kick the habit" by lowering their craving for cigarettes, reported a team of scientists from the Veterans Administration Medical Center and the University of California, Los Angeles.

Writing in the October issue of Clinical Pharmacology and Therapeutics, Jed E. Rose, Ph.D., Joseph E. Herskovic, Ph.D., Yvonne Trilling, BA, and Murray E. Jarvik, MD, Ph.D., said the 10 smokers they studied reported significantly lower cigarette craving when wearing the nicotine skin patch than when wearing an inactive placebo patch. The scientists added that the nicotine patch (more scientifically termed "transdermal nicotine") doesn't seem to cause the side effects many people suffer when chewing nicotine gum.

The tobacco withdrawal syndrome (irritability, anxiety, trouble concentrating, and cigarette craving) has kept many smokers "lighting up" even though they may sincerely want to quit. Because nicotine, the active component of cigarette smoke, seems to at least partly alleviate the syndrome, scientists have been looking for ways of delivering nicotine to smokers who are learning to live cigarette free.

Nicotine gum was developed as a smoking cessation aid, and it has helped many people. But not everyone can use it. In some people, the nicotine gum causes unpleasant side effects, including nausea, heartburn, hiccups, dental problems, sore jaw, and bad taste. The California scientists believe that transdermal nicotine is mixed in a liquid base and applied to the forearm under a two-inch square patch. The investigators have found that saliva nicotine levels increase significantly in about 30 minutes after patch application. Smokers tested with the patch reported a lower craving for cigarettes during a 90-minute abstinence period. And later, when they were allowed to use any of several smoke mixtures that delivered various nicotine levels, they chose to smoke lower nicotine mixtures when wearing the nicotine skin patch than when wearing a placebo patch.

The smoking study was supported by the Veterans Administration and the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

Ex-husband should follow kid's progress

By DR. JOAN ABRAMS

Dear Dr. Abrams:

I am a single parent. From time to time, I have read complaints in your column from women who felt their former husbands were interfering when they went to school to find out how their kids were doing. My story is just the opposite. My ex never goes to school, either to find out how our sons are getting along or to see any of the plays or other things that they are in. Because of this they feel he is not interested in them and they don't want to go with him on Sundays when he has visitation rights. That leaves it to me to try to convince them to go. I'm angry, too, because I am forced to take full responsibility for them and to tell them to forgive him. How can I get this man to recognize his duty?

Mrs. X.B.

Dear Mrs. X.B.:

It is unfortunate that your former husband doesn't recognize that his responsibility to monitor his children's progress in school did not end when your marriage terminated. Yet, from what you say, I believe he is interested in the boys because he does see them regularly. Tell him that it is very important to the children for him to go to school occasionally. Try to make a deal whereby he will go at least twice a year.

Have the boys really invited him to school events or have they just told him that they were taking place? Next time, ask them to write a special invitation to him. Send your own note along or phone him to reinforce their message.

It is regrettable that your youngsters are mixing their father's visitation rights with his not coming to school. I suspect that your anger is somehow communicated to them and gives them support in resisting seeing their father on Sundays. They may even think they are pleasing you by trying not to see him. You must keep the two areas separate. Encourage them to see their father on Sundays and encourage him to look on school attendance as a privilege which you are pleased to offer him. If all that doesn't work, continue to resist temptations to speak against him to his sons. It's difficult, but he is still their parent and you will do them harm if you talk against him.

Dear Dr. Abrams:

I have just received a notice from my child's school saying that the psychologist and learning consultant would like to give her some tests for possible classification as a learning-disabled child. I know that she has difficulties but I do not want her classified because I have seen the way people talk about children in Special Ed and I don't want to be stigmatized. The school is now threatening to take legal action to have her tested. Do I have any defense?

Mr. V.D.

Dear Mr. V.D.:

In order for the school to test your child without your consent, they will have to go through a legal procedure which you can resist at each step. However, it seems to me in your child's best interest for you to allow the testing to take place. You will find out information about her that you do not know at this time and that can help you to help her to do better in school.

Testing does not mean automatically that she is eligible for a Special Education class. It may be that she will test out of such a program. However, remember that Special Education programs have been established to help children, not to punish them. Youngsters who are in Special Education are young people who have been unable to manage in the mainstream of the school. Special classes with their very small number of pupils and a specially trained teacher afford children an opportunity to succeed with schoolwork and to become productive adults. By resisting even exploring the idea of Special Ed for your child, you may be depriving her of the opportunity that she needs in order to succeed.

If the school system goes ahead with its plan and succeeds in placing her despite your objections, your child will be in the unenviable position of having her father and her school pulling in opposite directions. This will serve no constructive purpose. Rethink your attitude. Let the school provide the services for her that she needs, beginning with testing.

Dr. Abrams is superintendent of schools in the Red Bank School District. Her column, offering advice for and about school-age children, appears each Sunday in The Register's Lifestyle section.

Why send a child to nursery school?

By ARA L. NUGENT

Many people today are saying that children who attend nursery school are ahead in their learning time table. This infers that sending a child to nursery school is preparation for the next year of a child's life. If one followed this precept, it would be logical to assume that three-year-old classes prepared for four-year-old classes and that four-year-old classes prepared children for kindergarten and so forth throughout the grades.

To think this way is to miss the reality of each growing age that has its own body-related learning to do and which is a special year in and of itself. Being one year old is the perfect time to act like a one-year-old, just as being two years of age is the perfect time to be two and not be preparing to act three.

We make a serious mistake when we attempt to accelerate children's growth, for each stage takes a unique amount of time to accomplish just as each pregnancy took its own time to accomplish. Enjoying being the age that you are is the best preparation for the next age, not trying to get one leg up on more advanced development.

Children who attend nursery school do so to be immersed in a culture that is educationally sound for the age group and that allows social, emotional, physical and cognitive growth to be nurtured in a carefully prepared environment with a staff knowledgeable about child development who have an understanding and love of little children. Each age group is allowed to be the age that it is and little thought should be given to prepping for the next age. The next age will be a year unto itself and will arrive when the time is right for it to do so.

Nursery school provides many opportunities for children to learn people skills of sharing, standing for ones own rights, taking turns and expressing wants in a socially acceptable manner. All of this in addition to cognitive learning which takes place side by side with each other. Practice of this sort gives nursery school children experience in group living that can be used in following years and for life. However, it is not designed to hurry up development and make one ready for kindergarten.

Research shows that little children construct their own knowledge and nursery school with its rich environment provides many opportunities that would be difficult to emulate at home. However, it is not a place where early reading and math skills are taught to accelerate learning for first grade or kindergarten that follows. At the same time that formal lessons in math and reading are being avoided, nursery schools are doing a great job helping children understand concepts that lead to later understanding of subject matter. All of this delivered in a concrete child-centered format appropriate to the age of the particular child. This is the purpose of nursery school.

The child who does not attend nursery school can do equally as well when school entrance arrives if he has had a normal amount of social interaction with other children and life experiences that help him construct these same concepts. Nursery school is a fine experience and one that I heartily endorse, however, it is not a prep school for kindergarten.

Ara Nugent is an educational consultant and director of Learning Associates in Fair Haven. Her column, offering advice on parenting and raising children, appears each Sunday in The Register's Lifestyle section.

The hazards of smoking 'pot'

By NORMAN H. EDELMAN, M.D.

Most of us are aware of the deleterious effects of tobacco smoke on the lungs. With increased awareness of tobacco's harmful effects, moves to ban cigarette smoking in public places and campaigns to persuade smokers to kick the habit, another less prevalent form of smoking has become lost in the shuffle.

I refer to marijuana smoking.

We now have reason to believe that smoking marijuana daily for five years or more produces the same changes in lung tissue seen in people who have been smoking cigarettes for 10 to 15 years. An estimated two-and-a-half million adolescents smoke the drug daily. The lung tissue changes in regular users of the drug are the same as in people who develop chronic bronchitis, emphysema and lung cancer. Clearly, marijuana is not the harmless recreational drug as was once thought.

Research reviewed by the American Lung Association concludes that marijuana smoke contains even more respiratory irritants than tobacco smoke.

Further, the ingredient responsible for producing the "high," delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), is a fat-soluble substance that is absorbed and stored in such high fat organs as the lungs, liver, brain and reproductive organs. Worse yet, five to seven days after smoking marijuana, half of the THC may still be in the body; it can take as long as a month for THC to leave entirely. This means that the chemical lingers in the body, possibly causing additional harm.

In addition to the specific carcinogens and THC, marijuana cigarettes have 12 times the "tar" and can generate 10 to 20 times the carbon monoxide as tobacco cigarettes. The very method of smoking marijuana — deep inhalation and holding the smoke longer than with tobacco cigarettes — means the delicate lung tissue receives even more exposure to these chemicals.

Smoking marijuana also interferes with the functions of the cardiovascular, nervous and reproductive systems.

News from Monmouth Medical Center

VOLUME 1, NUMBER 1

JANUARY 1986

Two members of the Community Outreach Team visit with a client in her home.

MMC Expands Geriatric Services in 1986

Continuing its commitment to the elderly, Monmouth Medical Center will increase its geriatric services in 1986. Dr. William S. Vaun, who heads the Anna Alexander Greenwall Geriatric Program, says, "We are broadening our range of individualized services and medical care for geriatric patients, to help meet the needs of the growing population of retired people in the Monmouth-Ocean county area."

At MMC, the medical and nursing staffs and other health professionals involved in geriatric care apply a specialized team approach that is designed to help elderly patients to remain functionally independent as long as possible, and generally improve the quality of their lives.

"We put the emphasis on personal care by specially-trained professionals," says Dr. Vaun.

The Geriatric Assessment Service is a prime example of the MMC team approach. During the in-depth functional assessment, the patient and family meet with a team of geriatric specialists who conduct a detailed evaluation, and coordinate a long-term care program with the patient's primary care physician.

On a day-to-day basis, the MMC Emergency Department is staffed by a full-time geriatric team nurse. "We have found that many elderly patients access the health care system through the Emergency Department," says Joan Wills, administrative coordinator of Ambulatory Services. "That's why we have someone there who is specifically trained and qualified to address the special needs of elderly people quickly and effectively."

The MMC Community Outreach Team personalizes geriatric care by visiting hundreds of the elderly at home each year, in cooperation with community agencies and family physicians. For the former MMC patient, the Outreach service acts in cooperation with the physician to monitor post-treatment progress and provide the personal contact so important to recovery.

Dr. Vaun also announced that MMC will launch a comprehensive medical/social day care service early in 1986. Individual inquiries regarding admission to the program can be made, beginning in mid-February, by calling Gayle at 870-5205.

Alzheimer's Assessment Service

Monmouth Medical Center has initiated an Alzheimer's Assessment Service which offers comprehensive evaluation of the patient and assistance to the family. For more information, call Gayle at 870-5205.

Wider Ocean Avenue Clears the Way to MMC

With completion of the new four-lane Ocean Avenue, the route to Monmouth Medical Center is faster and more direct than ever before. It's less than 10 minutes from the Sea Bright bridge. The approach route from the northern part of Monmouth County no longer requires a time-consuming drive on side streets.

Powerful Linear Accelerator Provides Radiation Therapy to Shore Area Patients

For cancer patients who require radiation therapy, MMC is equipped with one of the most powerful linear accelerators in New Jersey.

Dr. Erwin Tepper, head of the Department of Therapeutic Radiology in which the linear accelerator is located, noted that, "Patients who have often traveled to centers in Newark, New York or Philadelphia can receive the same high-energy radiation therapy conveniently close to home." For additional information about the MMC linear accelerator and related treatment programs, call Gayle at 870-5205.

Should woman tell fiancée she has herpes?

Dear Ann Landers: I just read in your column some more "good news" for people with genital herpes. Now we can be sued if we give it to someone. Wonderful!

It's been three years since I contracted the virus. I have had to adjust to the problem, manage as a single parent and make a success of my life as a career woman. I have also had to listen to a lot of crummy herpes jokes from people who don't know I have it. If one more idiot makes a crack about "the gift that keeps giving" I may throw up.

Because I wanted to be honest, I told two men who loved me enough to talk about marriage that I have a manageable case of herpes. Both exited discreetly from my life with the lamest excuses you can imagine. I am now engaged to a wonderful man and you can be sure I have no intention of telling him. (Lucky for me my outbreaks are not severe and they occur only once every seven or eight months.)

I've asked myself what I would do if the roles were reversed and the answer is, "I'd go on loving him." If he gave me herpes I would not love him less than if he gave me chicken pox.

I don't promise to take your advice but would YOU tell him if you were in my place? — Twice Ditched In D.C.

Dear D.C.: I would tell him the truth, with a physician present.

He would be much less upset when a doctor explained that abstaining from sex during an outbreak allows for an almost normal life with virtually no chance for infection.

If you say nothing and he finds out later that you kept it from him, he might never forgive you.

Dear Ann Landers: I received a phone call from our church pastor. He was to preside at a wedding that evening and had just been notified by the bride that her organist canceled. He asked me to fill in and said he explained to the bride that an honorarium would be expected. (I had never met the woman or her family.)

My husband and I canceled our plans for the day. The pastor ran the music by our house and I spent an hour working on it. That evening I went early to the church. My husband stayed home to watch our small children.

The church was packed. I didn't have but a few minutes to work on one number that she wanted played on an electric keyboard. I went looking for the bride and we worked out the music while she put on her veil and retouched her makeup. I didn't know a single person in the church with the exception of the pastor.

If I say so myself, the music was beautiful. The problem: To date I have not received one word of thanks, much less financial compensation, for my efforts. I want to send the bride a bill. What do you think? — Mad In Delaware

Dear Mad: Since the pastor assured you that you would be paid for your services, he should send her a bill.

Cancer education service

ALLENHURST—The Monmouth Unit of the American Cancer Society offers a broad spectrum of services in addition to its yearly Great American Smokeout and Residential Crusade activities.

Educational programs are available to associations or groups in support of early detection and prevention efforts. "Cancer in the '80's" outlines the latest information about cancer. It discusses warning signals and stresses good health checkups.

"Breast Self-Examination," through the use of a lecture, film and demonstration on a model, provides a method of monthly self-examination.

"Colo-Rectal Cancer" is a program which describes the warning signs, risks and protective measures to be taken. Colo-rectal cancer is the number one cancer risk in New Jersey.

"Quit Smoking" and "FreshStart" are programs which provide information on the dangers of smoking and the benefits of quitting.

"Gaining Seniority" is a program for older adults offering specific cancer information.

Programs are available for youth and for health professionals. Programs are geared to the needs of each group.

Information on obtaining a program on cancer, contact the American Cancer Society, Monmouth Unit, 125 Corlies Ave., Allenhurst, 07711.

FIBRE TRIM

A Safe Aid To Weight Loss!
From Schering

- #1 Diet product in Europe & Canada • Contains no drugs
- Proven success in 14 countries.

What is Fibre Trim?

Fibre Trim is an all-natural product, specially developed for weight loss. Through a unique process, concentrated dietary fiber from grain and citrus fruits is compressed into easy-to-take Fibre Tabs™. Fibre Trim contains no added sugars or starches, no artificial color or flavor, and no chemical preservatives. It's sodium-free and caffeine-free. And there's only one calorie per Fibre Tab. Fibre Trim contains no drugs of any kind, so you don't have to worry about drug-related side effects commonly associated with many other weight loss products.

How Fibre Trim Helps You Lose Weight and Keep It Off

Fibre Trim helps you improve your eating patterns. Its concentrated fiber lets you enjoy the good foods you like, while feeling satisfied with smaller portions. And because Fibre Trim makes you feel satisfied longer, it takes the edge off hunger, helping you reduce between-meal snacking. Fibre Trim is your partner, a helper that makes it easier to stay with your weight loss program because it keeps you satisfied. Fibre Trim works naturally, so it works gradually. People who lose weight gradually tend to keep it off. And for assistance in maintaining your ideal weight, Fibre Trim can help. Because it's safe and natural, you can take it as long as you like.

Fibre Trim's 4 Steps to Slimness

1. Think Thin-Eat Smart! Think before you eat. The U.S. Dietary Guidelines recommend that Americans eat less sugar, fat, cholesterol, and sodium, and MORE FIBER to avoid overweight. So, eat smaller portions, consume fewer high calorie drinks, and increase your fiber intake.
2. Be More Active-Get More Exercise! This doesn't mean you have to train for a marathon. Any activity, whether walking, running, swimming or cycling, is good for you, makes you feel good and promotes weight control. Be more active and watch the results!
3. Be Good to Yourself-Use Fibre Trim Every Day! Make Fibre Trim a part of your healthier lifestyle. Take Fibre Trim to ensure a well-balanced, fiber-rich diet, and feel good knowing you're doing something good for yourself.
4. Keep Your Chin Up and Watch Your Weight Go Down! Don't give up, don't stop! Keep at it and remember gradual weight loss is healthy weight loss.

Oscar hype

Studios spend millions on promos

By KIRK KONEYCUTT

Los Angeles Daily News

LOS ANGELES — In the cool of January, the campaign has heated up. The campaign to win an Oscar, that is.

Some major studios will spend up to $1 million in pursuit of Academy Awards. That doesn't count money spent by actors, talent agencies and independent companies.

The money goes for screenings, elaborate ads in the trade press and mailings of books, records, notices and other promotional items. All this is designed to call particular movies or performances to the attention of the 4,223 voting members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. With 222 feature-length films eligible for Oscar consideration, promotion is vital.

The campaign began in November and revved up during the Christmas movie blitz. The race pauses when balloting closes Jan. 24, then resumes when the Oscar nominations are announced Feb. 5.

The money is spent not just for prestige.

"An Oscar nomination is very important," said Warner Brothers spokesman Rob Friedman. "It can rejuvenate a movie that's out. People will say, 'Oh gee, I didn't realize that was such a good picture.'" A best-picture Oscar, by some reckoning, can sometimes mean an extra $15 million at the box office.

Campaign strategies run the gamut from pitches to the media from publicists for friendly coverage on their clients, to the placement of ads on premium pages in the trade publication Daily Variety.

Items get planted in columns in trade papers. Oscar-contending actors are suddenly available for major magazine articles, such as the December cover story in American Film on Whoopi Goldberg ("The Color Purple").

While some studios launch their campaigns early, Paramount waited until Jan. 3 to publish its screening schedule, operating on the theory that, as one insider put it, "less is more." Paramount and Orion have released "Witness" and "The Purple Rose of Cairo," to create a higher visibility for those films, which opened early in 1985.

Nearly all studios send soundtrack albums to members of the Academy's music branch. Several years ago, 20th Century Fox and Universal offered buffet suppers to Academy members who attended their studio screenings. Complaints to the Academy brought the practice to a stop.

Small players in the game must work doubly hard not to get lost in the big-bucks hype. Menahem Golan, chairman of the board of Cannon Films, estimates that Cannon will spend "in the area of $100,000 to $200,000" to promote "Runaway Train," "Fool for Love" and Nastassja Kinski in "Maria's Lovers."

"We can't spend as much as the majors do, so we must work in different ways without spending a fortune," Golan said. "Francis Coppola is hosting a party in New York to introduce Andrei Konchalovsky (director of "Runaway Train") and to present his films for Academy members. Shirley MacLaine is doing the same thing in this town. That's not as expensive as ads. And every director or writer who has his own screening room can take prints of the films home to look at."

When Embassy Film Associates failed to campaign for the critically acclaimed "Emerald Forest," its producer-director, John Boorman, arranged for Academy voters to get free use of videotapes of the film at seven branches of the Wherehouse music-video chain.

For Bud Yorkin, who is personally financing and distributing his film "Twice in a Lifetime," the Oscar campaign "is probably more important to us than other pictures. It's a matter of survival. I've got enough trophies on my mantle place. I'm looking for publicity."

The film, currently in 181 theaters, will go to 600 on Jan. 24. A nomination in any major category will boost his film's box-office chances. "I can't buy the TV ads and spend money (for advertising) like the majors," he said.

Lili Ungar at the public relations firm of Pickwick-Maslansky-Koenigsberg is handling the Oscar campaigns for clients Eric Stoltz ("Mask"), Jeff Daniels ("The Purple Rose of Cairo") and Lori Singer ("Trouble in Mind").

"The only thing you can do," she said, "is call the studios to have more screenings, get as much publicity as you can and take ads."

Yet Debra Winger was nominated for best actress for "Terms of Endearment" in 1983 despite her refusal to launch a personal campaign. She apparently won the nomination on the strength of Paramount's efforts on the film's behalf.

In 1980, Edouard Molinaro received a surprising nomination as best director for the French farce "La Cage aux Folles" without a single ad being placed for him. However, there was an extensive campaign for the film itself.

But too much money can cause a backlash. Academy members with long memories can recall 1960 and the sledgehammer campaign of actor Chill Wills.

Other award organizers fail to agree

By NICK LYMAN

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

The Oscar ballots went out in the mail to the 4,000-plus — or is it 4,000-odd? — members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. This officially inaugurates the 1986 Oscar season, 10 glorious weeks of hype, excess and self-congratulation that had already begun unofficially with the annual array of groveling "for your consideration" advertisements in the Hollywood trade papers.

In a little over three weeks — on Wednesday, Feb. 5 — the nominations will be announced at the academy's Samuel Goldwyn Theater in Beverly Hills. Six weeks after that — on Monday, March 24 — the awards will be presented amid the usual hoopla at Los Angeles' Dorothy Chandler Pavilion.

The four major organizations that dispense year-end movie awards each came up with a different choice for best film. The New York Film Critics Circle picked John Huston's gangster comedy, "Prizzi's Honor." The Los Angeles Film Critics Association chose Terry Gilliam's dour sci-fi fantasy, "Brazil." The National Board of Review picked Steven Spielberg's rural tear-jerker, "The Color Purple." And the National Society of Film Critics chose Akira Kurosawa's samurai epic, "Ran."

For the record, here are the awards given so far this season: Best movie of 1985, National Society of Film Critics, "Ran" (Akira Kurosawa); New York Film Critics Circle, "Prizzi's Honor" (John Huston); L.A. Film Critics Association, "Brazil" (Terry Gilliam); National Board of Review, "The Color Purple" (Steven Spielberg).

Best actor, National Society of Film Critics and New York Film Critics Circle, Jack Nicholson ("Prizzi's Honor"); L.A. Film Critics Association, William Hurt ("Kiss of the Spider Woman"); National Board of Review, a tie between Hurt and Raul Julia ("Spider Woman").

Best actress, National Society of Film Critics, Vanessa Redgrave ("Wetherby"); New York Film Critics Circle, Norma Aleandro ("The Official Story"); L.A. Film Critics Association, Meryl Streep ("Out of Africa"); National Board of Review, Whoopi Goldberg ("The Color Purple").

Best supporting actor, National Society of Film Critics, John Gielgud (for "Plenty" and "The Shooting Party"); National Board of Review, Gielgud (for "Plenty" alone); New York Film Critics Circle and L.A. Film Critics Association, Klaus Maria Brandauer ("Out of Africa").

Best supporting actress, National Society of Film Critics, New York Film Critics Circle, L.A. Film Critics Association and National Board of Review, Anjelica Huston ("Prizzi's Honor").

'Newhart's' maid keeps show going

By CLIFFORD TERRY

Chicago Tribune

Stephanie Vanderkellen, the state of Vermont's own material girl and ego-in-residence at Norwich's Stratford Inn (est. 1774), has been called everything from "a thoughtless, selfish child" to "a high-bred brat." And that comes from her boyfriend.

It is claimed that the Carly Simon song, "You're So Vain," was inspired by Warren Beatty, but watchers of the Monday night CBS sitcom "Newhart," know better.

Played by Julia Duffy — herself a mere middle-class child from Minnesota — Stephanie is the spoiled rich girl-turned-maid who works for Dick Loudon (Bob Newhart), the New England innkeeper and host of the local TV talk show, "Vermont Today." She is also the girlfriend of equally-egotistical Michael Harris (Peter Scolar), the producer of that show who comes up with such guest ideas as a man who does "hand-shadows of vice presidents."

Not that Michael would ever call Stephanie a name to her face. (She discovered the epithets by breaking into his diary.) What he usually calls her is "Cupcake" — prompting Loudon one night to explain that she was upstairs "blow-drying her frosting."

Petulant and pouty, Stephanie herself says things like, "Oh, poo," and, when asked to water her friend's plants when he's out of town, moans, "This is turning into a nightmare."

She also does things like throw her slipper with fatal accuracy at hermit thrushes that wake her up in the morning. "Why can't wildlife sleep in?" she recently asked in all self-centered seriousness. (Told by George, the Tom Poston caretaker-character, that killing song birds is against the law, she casually dialed the wildlife commission and purred: "I was having a discussion with one of my girlfriends about things like hair-streaking, leg-waxing and song birds. I was telling her it wasn't that big a deal to kill a song bird ... Oh, it is? ... Well, I can't believe you enforce a silly law like that and allow people who paint bullfighters on velvet to go scot-free.")

This is the third season Duffy has played the part — a replacement for the first-year character, Stephanie's cousin Leslie (Jennifer Holmes), a pretentious Dartmouth student who took off for England to continue her education — and, in a phone interview, the actress makes it quite clear her own background is considerably different, even though, when she was 12, her family did move to an affluent suburb of Minneapolis.

"We probably lived in what were the slums of Edina — which seems pretty funny. My mother was a widow — she remarried when I was 17 — and raised four girls by herself, working as a secretary and later in real estate. I really had a financially difficult childhood — the opposite of Stephanie's. Everyone I knew was richer than me; they seemed to live incredible lives, going on skiing vacations and all."

"I wanted to be an actress very badly, but I didn't have any desire to be a comedienne. I was never the classroom cutup or anything. I was very serious about a dramatic acting career. I was in awe of stage actresses, especially Julie Harris; I thought 'The Member of the Wedding' was just wonderful. I didn't watch old comedies then. Now, I'm a real Marx Brothers fan, but as a kid, I thought they were stupid."

"Even today, I think doing comedy is just an outgrowth of my being an actress. I mean, I'm not the kind of person who is 'on' all the time. Unlike standup comics, I don't have the need to make people laugh, unless I'm playing a funny part. Offstage, I couldn't care less."

After attending the University of Minnesota for a year, Duffy went off in the early '70s to New York and the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, followed up by work in regional theater, commercials and soap operas. It was on the now-defunct "Love of Life," in fact, where she met Jerry Lacey, who became her husband. "I played a little drug pusher. I was a real bad girl. He played a heart-throb, matinee-idol type. I also played a bad teen-ager on 'The Doctors.' She constantly broke up marriages and had a brain tumor and went blind and killed her stepfather."

Like Julie Harris, as her career progressed, Duffy seemed to be the eternal ingenue. "I was one much longer than is natural, because I've always looked so young." (Asked her present age, though, she demurs. "Just tell them I'm 26.")

"Playing young girls who are supposed to look pretty and have nice little lives can become kind of unfulfilling, but I began to realize that there could also be something very funny about that. So my playing Stephanie was kind of a gradual process. "I think she's a complex, paradoxical character. She's very arrogant, and yet very vulnerable. She's sophisticated, and yet she's incredibly naive, because she's been living in an ivory tower. There's so little that she really knows. The ways in which she's sophisticated are kind of useless, really, if you live in the real world."

Duffy concedes there's a fine line between displaying Stephanie's spoiled nature and making her totally obnoxious. "It's difficult because the writers and I have to agree on where to draw that line. If an episode is about Stephanie, you can go much further because there will be something redeeming that will happen. In a show where I'm lighter — where she just sort of comes in and complains and goes out — then I'll be much more careful about what I say because I don't want to leave just that one impression."

Artists' guild offers reception

ISLAND HEIGHTS — The Ocean County Artists' Guild, Ocean and Chestnut avenues, plan an opening reception today from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. for its first awards show, its annual faculty show and a winter show by members.

The awards show features award-winning paintings by members of the guild. The awards are from all over the country and honor the artists who have gone into the competitive world successfully.

The faculty show consists of works by Beverly Golembeski, Seaside Park; Pauline Mickle, Point Pleasant; and Frank Rappa, Toms River. They are instructors at the guild in watercolor, pen and ink and oil and acrylic painting.

The Ocean County Artists' Guild is in an historic landmark building in Island Heights. It dates back to the 1890s.

Bahrs Restaurant loves Monmouth County and Little Silver, N.J.

Bahrs Restaurant, with its tradition of great food and waterfront dining, salutes Little Silver, N.J., another beautiful and historic town in Monmouth County.

Little Silver was named and settled in 1667 by Joseph and Peter Parker. The Parkers were comrades of Captain John Slocum who won the land of Shrewsbury Township, including Little Silver, in a wrestling match against Vow-a-vagon of the Navesink Lenni-Lenapi Indians.

Little Silver was a popular summer resort in Victorian days and incorporated as an independent borough in 1923.

Bahrs Restaurant thanks the residents of Little Silver for their continued patronage. This week, 25% of your dinner food purchase is on us.

Identify yourself as a resident of Little Silver, and Bahrs Restaurant will deduct 25% from your dinner food bill.

Good any time, 3 p.m. till closing, January 13-17.

"Along Together" is a comedy about the non-empty nest of the '80s. George Butler, played by Jack Walsh, Freehold, and his wife Helene, played by Cat Larson, Sea Girt, star in the production. The director is Vincent Borelli. Susan Shapiro, Elberon, also stars.

AUDITIONS

ST. ROSE PLAYERS — The St. Rose Community Players

BOOKED AT LIBRARY — Jazz singer Carol Fredette and her trio perform at a free concert 3 p.m. next Sunday at the eastern branch of the Monmouth County Library, Shrewsbury. In addition to pop standards, the ensemble's repertoire includes Brazilian music and pop-rock. The concert is open to the public. Tickets are not required.

plan open auditions for "Bus Stop" by William Inge at 8 p.m. today at St. Rose of Lima School Gym, South Street, Freehold. Cast requirements are for three females in their teens to 40s, and five males ranging from their 20s to 50s. The shows are in March.

WOMEN'S CONSORT — The Women's Consort of the Monmouth Conservatory of Music plans auditions for new members at 11 a.m. Jan. 17 at studios in the Monmouth Arts Center, 99 Monmouth St., Red Bank. Reading music and the ability to hold one of three or four parts is required. The 16-member group plans performances for two organizations in the spring, and plans to participate in a production of Puccini's opera "Suor Angelica" at Brookdale Community College, Lincroft, in May. Felix Moizer is the conductor.

GARDEN STATE — The Garden State Singers plans auditions for male voices Jan. 16, between 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. at the Monmouth Arts Center, Red Bank. Rehearsals, under the direction of Elizabeth Hellwig of Middletown, are Thursday evenings in preparation for a spring concert on April 25 at St. George's Church, Rumson. Prospective members must be able to read music and should come prepared to sing a solo selection. For further information and an audition appointment, contact Irene Tsakaris, 35 Ocean Ave., Monmouth Beach.

MONMOUTH COLLEGE — Guggenheim Theater at Monmouth College, West Long Branch, is presenting an original play, "Canossa," in the spring. A cast call in the Guggenheim Theater, Cedar Avenue, West Long Branch, is Wednesday between 1 p.m. and 8 p.m.

RED BANK BALLET — The Red Bank Ballet will be auditioning advanced dancers for the spring season. Upcoming performances include pieces set to the music of Gershwin, Springsteen, Gottshalk, and an original ballet based on unicorns that is funded by a grant from the Monmouth County Arts Council. Dancers should be of advanced level technique in ballet or jazz. The audition is Jan. 25 at 3 p.m. Interested dancers should contact the ballet, 16 Monmouth St., Red Bank, prior to the audition to make an appointment.

MUSICAL THEATER

'BLACK NATIVITY' — Crossroads Theater Company is presenting Langston Hughes' "Black Nativity" through Feb. 2. Writer's anger leads to TV script about gun laws

By JERRY BUCK

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Jeffrey Bloom got so angry after the so-called "Big Boy Murders" in Los Angeles in 1980 that he sat down and wrote a movie script in which everyone is allowed to carry a gun for protection.

"I was trying in the script, maybe without knowing it, to work out my anger," said Bloom. "I sometimes do that to work out my outrage. I put myself in the position of the lead character and said, 'What would I do if I lost all my family?'"

Bloom originally wrote "The Right of the People" as a feature film, but it was turned down and sat on his shelf for several years. "Then a few months ago an ABC executive remembered reading it and asked me if it was still available," he said.

The movie, starring Michael Ontkean and Billy Dee Williams, will be broadcast Monday night by ABC. ABC's Broadcast Standards and Practices had Bloom revise his original script to allow the anti-gun proponents a larger say in the film; Bloom feels the changes do not hurt the integrity of the film.

"Their concerns were that the piece not be one-sided and that there should be less dogma," Bloom said.

The opening of the movie is reminiscent of an actual robbery-murder case in Los Angeles just over five years ago. Ontkean plays a district attorney whose wife and daughter are killed when gunmen invade a coffee shop and spray it with automatic weapon fire.

Bloom, a gun owner himself, said, "There is a separation between the right to carry a gun and the right to own a gun. This film is not against the right to own guns. There is one exception: inherent in that right is that we not abuse it. Like all our freedoms, we do tend to abuse them."

You've heard it all now: Boy George will appear with Mr. T

By RON MILLER

Knight-Ridder Newspapers

CENTURY CITY, Calif. — Boy George was fashionably late for his press conference — like 25 minutes or so — but the extra time he obviously spent in front of his dressing-room mirror was well worth the wait.

He flounced into the room in an ankle-length black dress adorned with a stunning assortment of jewelry, including table forks and miniatures of the Mona Lisa. His shoes had inch-thick elevator soles modeled after those of a TV favorite, Herman Munster. His lipstick was bright crimson, his hair dyed black and swept up into spiky peaks.

In other words, he looked like Stan Laurel in drag after seeing a ghost.

Without a doubt, he will be the most stylish-looking guy to ever wear a dress on an episode of "The

A-Team."

Yes, you read that right. Boy George, the sexually ambiguous lead singer of England's Culture Club pop-rock group, really is going to join the cast of NBC's all-macho "A-Team" for an episode to be broadcast Feb. 11.

I even double-checked with NBC. No mistake was made. They actually intended to hire Boy George, not Phyllis George or Susan George or even Gorgeous George.

In the show, Boy George and Culture Club are booked into a redneck nightclub where the fans are expecting to see somebody named Cowboy George instead. Trouble ensues and the A-Team must come to the rescue.

"I'm not doing a lot of talking in the show," George told reporters after another grueling day on the set. "The script was written in American, so there had to be a lot of changes. It was written in pidgin English, things like 'hello, luv' and 'awright, mate.' Nobody talks like that in England."

Still, George said he has enjoyed his 10 days with the macho men of "The A-Team," as crazy as that may sound.

"The first day I was terrified because I didn't know what it would be like," he said. "But they've been very nice to me."

So nice, in fact, that the ever popular Mr. T even showed up during the press conference to make sure nobody was mistreating his new pal.

"I like him becuz he tell it like it is," Mr. T explained. "He his own person, you know?"

It is clearly a mutual admiration society. When I asked Boy George to rate the "A-Team" members on their machismo, he pronounced Mr. T the leader in that department.

"He's very sweet," said George. "And he has the right attitude. He doesn't give a s-t about anybody."

It's also obvious Boy George and Mr. T have something in common:

They both wear lots of jewelry. George, a nice English boy who used to dress up like a girl behind closed doors, finally began to wear earrings and other such adornments in public when he launched his singing career. Mr. T began to wear gold chains, earrings and great gobs of grotesque jewelry as soon as he hit the financial gravy train.

Boy George thinks there are lots of fellows out there who would like to dress up like he does when nobody's looking. Likewise, Mr. T says there are lots of closet jewelry wearers out there who wish they could wrap themselves in gold chains like he does.

"A lot of people have gold in their closets and they afraid to wear it," he said. "They go home, put on two or three chains and run around pretending they me."

One supposes NBC wanted Boy George for "The A-Team" to help the sagging series regain some momentum. It has slipped to No. 2 on Tuesday nights, behind ABC's soaring "Who's the Boss?" and "Growing Pains."

West Virginia governor encounters hard times

By MARTHA BRYSON HOEDEL
The Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Gov. Arch Moore, whose first two terms coincided with one of the most prosperous periods in West Virginia's history, is presiding these days over a state with the nation's highest jobless rate.

Since last January, when Moore started an unprecedented third term after eight years out of office, West Virginia has reeled from one disaster to another: a poison gas leak that hospitalized 135, once-in-a-century flooding that devastated 29 counties, and a violent prison riot.

At the same time, Moore, a popular Republican who has demonstrated a knack for political survival in a heavily Democratic state, has had to cope with some severe political problems.

Public debate has been loud and long over multimillion-dollar state contracts given to the coal operator who heads his energy department. Most recently, Moore was found to have sidestepped the established agency for choosing a bond underwriting firm, steering the state's business to one that contributed heavily to his 1984 gubernatorial campaign.

Through the first year of this term, Moore has tried repeatedly to blame the state's problems on his predecessor, Democratic Sen. Jay Rockefeller, whose tenure Moore labeled as "the greatest economic disaster" ever to hit West Virginia. Moore even blamed Rockefeller for a New Year's Day inmate uprising at the state penitentiary at Moundsville in which 16 hostages were seized, prompting an editorial in The Washington Post headlined "Political Cheap Shots at a Riot."

Moore said three brutal murders of prison informers stemmed from a "snitch system" put into place by Rockefeller following a mass escape in 1979. However, Moore's office had no comment when asked why he hadn't changed the policy in the 12 months since his inauguration.

"Of all the warped and self-serving analyses uttered by politicians after prison riots, none sinks quite to the level of (Moore's) remarks," the newspaper said.

Moore spent the worst part of the riots at his Florida vacation home and was accused by Rockefeller of "hiding" during the crisis. But he went to Moundsville just in time for television to show him escorting the last hostages out of the prison.

Moore has survived apparent political disaster before, almost always without ill effect.

During his first term, for example, Moore and an aide were tried on federal extortion charges and found innocent. Subsequently, Moore's liquor commissioner was found guilty of eight racketeering charges.

Other state politicians have always been reluctant to challenge Moore, who keeps a tight grip on state patronage and an even tighter rein on the state budget.

In common with one Democratic legislator who jokes privately about "our Teflon-coated governor," most refuse to criticize him publicly for fear that their districts and pet programs will be cut off.

Computers increase in schools

By JAMES ROWLEY
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A million computers in America's elementary and secondary school classrooms were used by 15 million students last year, according to a report presented Friday to the National Governors' Association.

Preliminary results of the survey indicate the number of computers in the nation's schools quadrupled since 1983, when a similar study was conducted.

The latest survey of 2,300 public and private schools was conducted by Henry J. Becker of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

"A majority of U.S. elementary schools have five or more computers and there are more than 7,500 elementary schools with 15 or more computers," said Becker's report, prepared for the governor's Task Force on Educational Technologies.

"The computer is a competent drill master, but it is a terrible teacher."

Marc S. Tucker
Carnegie Forum director

A similar growth in computer use in high schools was found in the survey, which was based questionnaires completed by 7,000 teachers and 1,700 telephone interviews.

"In 1983, most American secondary schools had fewer than a handful of microcomputers; today, half of U.S. secondary schools — 16,500 secondary schools in all — have 15 or more computers," the report said.

Results of the 1985 survey were presented at a hearing headed by New Hampshire's Republican Gov. John H. Sununu, who said most school districts in his state own computers.

"I think you're going to find them in almost every area in the next few years, not only in New Hampshire but across the country," Sununu said.

The task force is trying to gather information about the "applications of technology in the classroom," he said.

"Most of what we have been shown has to do with computers and a little with telecommunications," Sununu said.

Experts who testified at Friday's hearing agreed that in-service training of teachers on how to use computers was important to the success of any high-tech learning program.

"If only we could give each teacher a computer to take home and play with and use," said Linda Roberts, a senior analyst for the congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

Marc S. Tucker, executive director of the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy, said computers should be used as a tool rather than as an instructional device to teach subject matter. Schools should invest in software for word processing, graphics and other functional uses rather than for teaching subject matter, he said.

"The computer is a competent drill master, but it is a terrible teacher," Tucker said.

Computer software for delivering instructional material "costs $50 or more, can be used only in conjunction with a machine that costs $1,000 or more, can usually be used by only one student at a time and typically serves only to supplement a course that still requires a text, workbook and all the other instructional paraphernalia that was purchased before the computer," he said.

Becker said his survey showed that a majority of teachers still consider teaching computer programming and computer literacy the primary function of the devices.

Carrier of the Month

Andy McOrmond

Andy McOrmond of Oceanport is an outgoing, enthusiastic and reliable carrier - and that's why he's been chosen as The Register's Carrier of the Month.

Andy, 12, is a 7th grade student at Maple Place School. He is a manager for the school's basketball team. He enjoys surfing and playing football with his friends. Andy plans on attending college and would like to play professional football.

Andy is also a long-distance runner, often running to raise money for charity and organizations such as the Oceanport Lions, the Red Bank Blood Bank and the American Cancer Society.

Andy puts most of his earnings from his paper route into a savings account. He recently bought himself a 10-speed bicycle and a radio.

Andy likes the people he meets on his route. He says that being a Register carrier "is a great way to earn extra money and to meet new people!"

Congratulations

Andy, on a fine job!
