Tinton Falls kids feel for homeless

By HOPE GREEN

TINTON FALLS — Most kids in Lorraine Eberhard's class couldn't believe there are people who sleep in the streets and live out of shopping bags.

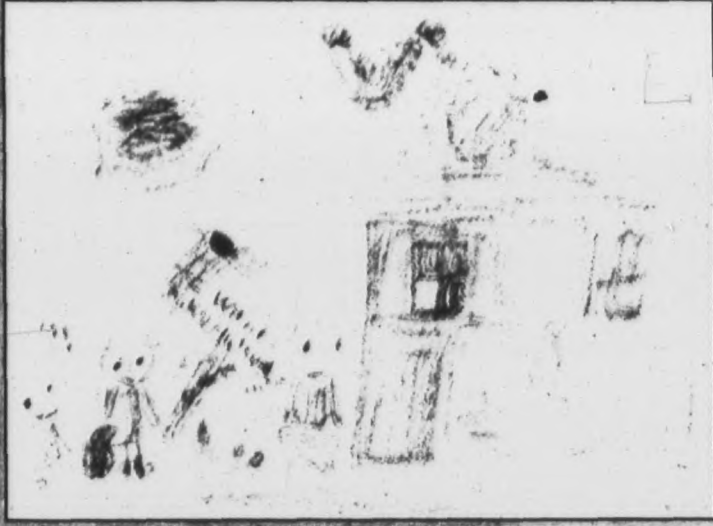

Once they started learning about the nation's homeless problem last week, though, they set to work thinking up solutions.

As part of a social studies lesson, the 23 second-grade students at the Mahala F. Atchinson School have put their feelings into words and pictures. Their crayon drawings depict a sunny world where signs welcome vagrants into well-kept homes surrounded by flower gardens.

Other artwork portrays city scenes where sad-faced vagabonds lay before gray concrete buildings.

"If I could help the homeless, I would give them some of our family's old clothes that don't fit us," reads the poster underneath a drawing by Manisha Phadke, 7. "I would like to give them some of the things we don't need."

Mom reports finding glass in baby food

By ELISSA MCCRARY

TRENTON — A jar of applesauce baby food which reportedly contained shivers of glass will be analyzed by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, but the state has not ordered any brand of baby food off supermarket shelves, officials said yesterday.

The state Health Department has investigated 10 complaints of "foreign objects" in containers of baby food, but the reports were not substantiated by laboratory tests, said department spokeswoman Leigh Cook.

On Monday night, a North Brunswick grocery store removed all jars of Stage One Beech-Nut baby food from its shelves after an Edison woman said she bought a container of applesauce with pieces of glass in it.

Edison police said they turned the jar over to the town's Board of Health.

Jay Elliot, the board's senior sanitary inspector, said he contacted the state Health Department and the FDA in Washington, D.C.

"The FDA is going to pick up the jar and do an analysis of the contents," said Elliot.

Bible school seeks building funds

By TED LOUD

HOWELL — For the past 14 years, the Monmouth Bible Institute has worked to fulfill its mission of "changing the hearts of the people," by providing Christian religious training for men and women from all over the state.

But the physical quarters where the institute is based — a simple, functional structure on West Farms Road in a rural area of the township — have become too cramped to keep up with a growing interest in the religious school's programs.

Now, in an effort to let the school live up to its president's dream of becoming a "full-fledged educational institution," the institute is planning to build a new home to keep pace with a growing student body.

Plans for a proposed $400,000 structure, to be located on the same property as the current facility, will be unveiled at a benefit event next month. The two-phase construction project, to include classrooms, office space, an auditorium and other facilities, is expected to take two years, with additional building foreseen in future years.

Because of the insufficient facilities, the past three years have seen freshman classes at the institute cut in half by drop-outs, according to the Rev. Albert Clayton of Lakewood, president of the institute. There were 55 students in the freshman class at the beginning of the current school year; that number has been reduced to about 30, Clayton said.

"The facility itself is the major problem," Clayton said. "When the school started, the founders had no idea the growth would be so great."

There are currently about 200 students enrolled at the school, and Clayton said that the drop-out rate is not a problem once the students get past their first year.

The non-denominational institution takes in students, from teen-agers to people in their 30s, from many parts of the state, but most hail from Monmouth. See BIBLE, Page 6A

Francis mentally unfit

NEWARK (AP) — Singer Connie Francis, who is hospitalized in a psychiatric clinic, has been put under the care of a longtime family friend after being found unable to manage her affairs. Superior Court Judge Murray G. Simon appointed accountant Anthony Crincoli legal guardian for Miss Francis, who was transferred to the Carrier Foundation in Belle Mead from the Miami Mental Health Center Feb. 12.

Court papers described her condition as "manic-depressive psychosis." Miss Francis, 47, was hospitalized in January after a disturbance at the Grand Bay Hotel in Miami's Coconut Grove section, authorities said.

A judge in Dade County, Fla. later declared the singer incompetent to manage her affairs. A similar hearing was required in New Jersey after Miss Francis moved to the state last month. Her parents live in Florham Park.

Miss Francis, who had several best-selling records and appeared in the film "Where The Boys Are" during the 1960s, has been battling depression since a series of personal tragedies, including being raped in 1974 and the 1984 slaying of her brother.

The singer was arrested last December in Atlanta after kicking a police officer who had escorted her from an airliner in a dispute about smoking regulations, authorities said.

Rockin' hall of famers

Lyricist Mitchell Parish, 85, who penned the words to Hoagy Carmichael's "Stardust," received the Johnny Mercer Award and composer Jule Styne, 80, best known for "Funny Girl" and "Gypsy," was given the Board of Directors Award.

Older juice from Seuss

NEW YORK (AP) — Dr. Seuss, whose Grinch and other characters are beloved by children, has turned his attention to a new group of readers — former children.

The result, published to coincide with the author's 82nd birthday Sunday, is "You're Only Old Once," the first adult book in almost 50 years by Theodore Seuss Geisel, whose pen name is Dr. Seuss.

But is it really an adult book?

The outgrowth of Geisel's trips to the hospital for heart problems and other ailments, "You're Only Old Once" tells the woeful tale of an elderly patient's trip to a typically Seuss-like hospital, the "Golden Years Clinic on Century Square for Spleen Readjustment and Muffler Repair."

The book adheres to the usual Dr. Seuss format, with whimsical illustrations and a cast of characters that would fit nicely in "The Cat in the Hat" or "Yertle the Turtle."

Wagner plans legacy

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Actor Robert Wagner is planning to produce a film on the life of Samantha Smith, the 13-year-old who played one of his two daughters in ABC's "Lime Street" series before she died in a plane crash last summer.

"It's in the preliminary stages and nothing has been done as yet," Lucille Maross of Rogers & Cowan, the firm that handles Wagner's publicity, said Monday.

She said Wagner intends to meet with Soviet officials to discuss plans for the two-hour movie, which will portray Samantha's 1983 tour of the Soviet Union as a young peace advocate and her emergence as an international celebrity.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — About 2,200 senior citizens turned out in this Gulf Coast retirement haven to applaud Claude Pepper, 85, dean of the U.S. House of Representatives and champion of the nation's elderly people.

Pickers confront drivers

MIDDLETOWN — When a small group of picketers refused to allow cement trucks to enter a construction site on Route 35 yesterday, the truck drivers had their company, Ralph Clayton & Sons, Lakewood, call police.

But by the time police arrived, the picketers had worked out an agreement with the drivers, and allowed them through.

Police said they merely told the picketers not to interfere with the construction job in the future.

For the last several days, about 14 AFL-CIO workers have been picketing the site to protest the use of non-union labor.

Walter C. Hurley Construction Co., of Neptune, is working on a planned four-story office complex on Route 35 just north of Pine Street.

The union members claimed Hurley was depriving them of jobs by offering non-union workers substandard pay and working conditions that union members would not put up with.

No officials from Hurley have been available to comment this week or last.

Buildings fund proposed

LONG BRANCH — State Sen. Frank Pallone Jr., D-Monmouth, has introduced legislation to fund a "Main Street, New Jersey" downtown revitalization and restoration program.

It is open to all municipalities and emphasizes a commercial area's existing historic sites, Pallone said.

"Many of us are not even aware of the historic significance of buildings in our downtown areas," he said. "For example, the post offices in both Long Branch and Asbury Park were recently designated as historic landmarks by the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP)."

"This program seeks to use the techniques of historic preservation to foster downtown revitalization," he said.

"Main Street, New Jersey" would provide service and training to communities in design, renovation, marketing, real estate and finance, Pallone said.

In addition, a $1,000 matching grant would be available for facade renderings of the downtown commercial storefronts, he added.

Pallone said the program is currently supported by the Office of New Jersey Heritage and the DEP's Green Acres Office.

Matawan promotes 2 cops

MATAWAN — The Borough Council promoted last night two police patrolmen to sergeant, William Dietrich and Joseph Reid. Their promotions become effective April 1.

The two men were selected following the police committee's interviews with 10 of the department's 11 eligible patrolmen. The committee — comprised of Councilman Robert Simons, Harry LeQuier and Councilwoman Beatrice Duffy — spent five hours interviewing candidates Feb. 22, Simons said.

Within the next few weeks, the borough will be accepting applications for patrolmen to replace Dietrich and Reid.

NEWARK — The Bob Baxter Scholarship Foundation is accepting applications for a 1986 scholarship of $1,000 to a high school senior or undergraduate in a college, university or photographic school to study to become a press photographer.

The scholarship is named for Baxter of Union Township, a quadriplegic who died May 14, 1982, at the U.S. Veterans' Medical Center, East Orange, after an illness of nearly 11 years.

He suggested that a scholarship foundation be formed in order to promote the study of news photography. The foundation is believed to be the only one of its kind in the nation. Money for the foundation is raised through gifts by friends and interested people.

Applicants must be residents of New Jersey and they must be enrolled in a recognized college, university or photographic school.

The applications may be obtained from Jean-Rae Turner, c/o New Jersey Newsphotos Inc., Airport International Plaza, U.S. Route 1, Newark 07114. In addition to filling out the applications and submitting letters or recommendations, applicants are required to submit a portfolio of a cross-section of their work. Deadline for the 1986 scholarship is April 30. The award will be announced in May.

'Seas' program set

SEA BRIGHT — The environmental coalition Clean Ocean Action will present a program called "Save Our Seas" at the Count Basie Theatre, 99 Monmouth St., Red Bank, on March 23.

The internationally famed Cousteau Society will give a presentation designed especially for the Jersey shore titled "Population Effects on World Oceans."

Herb Segars, a local diver and professional underwater photographer, will also present "Underwater New Jersey — A Diver's Perspective," a visual documentation of the fish kill that occurred off Manasquan this past summer.

Segars' documentation of this event was recorded by the National Marine Fisheries Service at Sandy Hook.

"Save Our Seas" will be held from 4 to 6 p.m. Advance tickets may be purchased for $10 at the theater box office or by calling 571-9582. COA's annual Champagne Reception ($25 includes the program) will be held immediately afterward. Call 741-1526 for more information.

Kids receive benefits of PTA funds

By KEVIN FRECHETTE
The Register

KEANSBURG — Ever wonder what the local Parent-Teacher's Association does with all the money it raises selling candy, spices and houseplants?

"Everybody does," according to Enid Catena, president of the Keansburg PTA.

"People are always asking me 'Why do you have these fund-raisers? What are you doing with all this money?'" Catena said in a telephone interview last night.

So far this year, the PTA has used its $2,500 budget to hire a drug and alcohol counselor, sponsor college scholarships and buy eyeglasses for needy children in their district.

"Every bit of the money we make goes back to the children," Catena said.

At its Tuesday night meeting, the PTA's 12-member executive board voted to allocate an additional $500 to its Emergency Fund — a fund set up many years ago to help provide for the "immediate needs" of underprivileged students in the district, Catena said.

"We receive calls from teachers and school nurses who may see a child walking around without a winter coat, so we'll use that money to buy that kid a coat. We don't turn anyone away," Catena said.

Since last September, approximately $1,000 in emergency fund money has been used to buy students everything from winter coats to eyeglasses to minor dental work, according to Mary Winters, fund chairwoman.

The donations are kept confidential and no child is offered financial help without the prior consent of his or her parents, Winters said. The fund does not cover long-term medical and dental needs, she added.

Other funds from the PTA's budget go toward setting up two $500 college scholarships for high school students and a $300 college scholarship for a student pursuing a career in the field of special education, Catena said.

PTA funds also are used to hire Jeffery L. Thaxton, a Pennsylvania-based drug and alcohol counselor who gives a day-long lecture to borough students on the dangers of substance abuse, said executive board member Judy Ferraro.

The PTA also provides T-shirts and hats to students involved in the borough's Special Olympics and Olympics of the Mind programs.

Any remaining funds are put back into the school system, Catena said, in the form of "gifts" to each of the district's three schools.

Last year's surplus went to purchase a video-cassette recorder, camera and television for the Port Monmouth Road School, library furniture for the Frances Place School, and the funding of educational programs at the borough's high school, Catena said.

"Everything we make is given right back to the students," she said. "That's why we're here. To help the kids."

County makes Bamm Hollow offer

By STEPHANIE GLUCKMAN
The Register

FREEHOLD — The county took another step in its continuing effort to acquire the Bamm Hollow Country Club for a public golf course when it made a formal offer to buy the club yesterday.

In legal papers delivered to three developers who own rights to the land, the county gave the developers 14 days to accept an $8.2 million offer for the 276-acre golf course, according to developer Frank DiMisa.

The offer is about half the $16.3 million the developers paid for the rights two months ago. But DiMisa said the papers warned that the county will issue a notice of its intent to acquire the land by condemnation if the offer is not accepted within 14 days.

If the developers reject the offer, a long condemnation battle in Superior Court will ensue, with the court setting a price for the land based on an independent appraisal.

DiMisa's partner Harry Kantor said last month that the county's $8.2 million appropriation for Bamm Hollow was "ridiculous" and would not be accepted. But DiMisa said yesterday he did not know for sure that he and his partners will reject the offer. He said he wanted to review the county appraisal before deciding. If the offer is rejected, the basis of the developers' court case will be to challenge the appraisal, he said.

He and his partners are not the only ones who are skeptical of the appraisal. Middletown developer William Montanaro, who sold the Bamm Hollow development rights to Kantor, DiMisa and Victor Losquadro last month, said the appraisal was done by a company that has been in litigation with him for 1 1/2 years.

Montanaro claimed that the company, John D. Lazarus Inc. of Wanamassa, sued him in August 1984, and was in litigation with him during the fall of 1985, when the appraisal was made.

"How can a firm that's in litigation with me really give a valid appraisal of anything?" Montanaro asked. "That's the same as saying, 'I'm suing you but I'm going to be fair and tell you how much to sell your house for.'"

But county officials say they have no reason to believe the appraisal is inaccurate. Deputy Freeholder Director Thomas Powers said yesterday he had not heard of the litigation between Montanaro and Lazarus. He claimed that any such litigation would not make a difference. "I don't see why something like this should be brought up, except that they're trying to get more money out of it," he said.

Matawan OKs rail resolution

By CAMILLE THOMAS
The Register

MATAWAN — Despite objections raised by a half-dozen residents, the Borough Council last night passed a resolution supporting New Jersey Transit's $3 million electrification project.

The project would electrify the North Jersey Coast Line from Matawan to Red Bank to Long Branch, said New Jersey Transit Electrification Project Director Robert Keith.

"We bowed to the inevitable," said Councilman Robert V. Simons to the residents who had expressed opposition to the project over fears it would decrease their property values and pose a safety hazard.

The borough does not have money to fight the project since it is in the best interest of the public, according to the state Board of Public Utilities, Simons said.

Both the Red Bank Borough and Aberdeen Township councils have passed similar resolutions, which also will be forwarded to the BPU, said Richard Cohen, general attorney for Jersey Central Power & Light.

To implement the electrification project, JCP&L must supply 230,000 volts from its Freneau power substation to the NJ Transit power substation in Aberdeen, Cohen said.

To supply the power, JCP&L must install a series of tubular steel poles ranging in height from 120 feet to 155 feet along the railroad right of way. The poles stand at an average height of 135 feet and would be situated along the railroad right of way of the existing Freehold branch, which is no longer in service, Keith said.

Irwin Forman, a real estate appraiser retained by JCP&L, told the audience that he did not think owners of properties adjacent to the poles would be adversely affected.

He cited one example where an Old Bridge resident purchased a lot specifically to be near a tower, since JCP&L would be required to have a large buffer of open space to maintain. The buffer would mean a larger back yard for the resident, Forman said.

However, Center Avenue resident Andy Bulinsky argued that people willing to have such a structure in their back yards are not the typical real estate consumers.

"It's going to take me six months longer to sell my house with this in my back yard," he said.

When another resident suggested that JCP&L install underground cables, Cohen told the group project costs would increase 15 times to about $45 million, which would have to be paid by taxpayers.

"This is the only reasonable and realistic route to connect the two points," Cohen said.

Although Councilman Ralph Evans, a licensed real estate agent, said he opposed the project because he believes it will decrease property values in the borough, he voted in favor of the resolution following a closed session discussion of the matter.

"We can't afford to fight something we are ultimately going to lose," Evans said.

Bacteria count up in water

SHREWSBURY — Monmouth Consolidated Water Company warned its customers recently that levels of a certain type of bacteria in drinking water distributed by the company were more than 12 times higher than normal.

However, the company cautioned that the organisms, called coliform bacteria, do not constitute a health hazard. Rather, coliform bacteria are indicators of possible contamination from other sources.

Monmouth Consolidated serves more than 68,000 customers in 23 county municipalities.

Company spokeswoman Rae Tortia said yesterday that the company continually checks its water supplies, and has found no other harmful bacteria.

In an announcement dated Feb. 17, the company told customers the level of coliform bacteria was 12.6 colonies per 100 milliliters. Tortia added that the average coliform level for February was 7.7 colonies.

Special education aid sought

TINTON FALLS — Special education teachers at Monmouth Regional High School are seeking $50,000 in state aid for a work-study program to help handicapped students find jobs.
 School Superintendent Frank Volpe told the Board of Education last night that $20,000 of the requested funds would go toward finding at least four employers in the area who are willing to hire handicapped youngsters receiving vocational training. Volpe said that several employers in the Industrial Way West business complex have said they are willing to hire qualified students.
 The funds, if granted, would pay travel costs and part of the salary of a teacher whose duties would include finding businesses willing to hire the youngsters while they are still in school.
 According to the proposal that was submitted to the state Department of Education, the school would also train students in specific job skills required by participating employers and monitor their progress on the job.
 The remaining $30,000 would support Project HELP, now in its second year.
 The program helps youngsters identify suitable jobs for which they can qualify and teaches them how to handle themselves in job interviews. Teachers will also try to obtain appropriate employment for at least half of the participating students by the end of the next school year.

Fair Haven baseball darkened

FAIR HAVEN — A request from Fair Haven Baseball, Inc. to install lights at a Little League field has been withdrawn, the organization's new president said last night.
 Richard Buckalew, appointed president two weeks ago, said he and other executives in the group decided the borough's fears about safety and the effects on surrounding neighborhoods were valid concerns.
 "The borough brought up a lot of questions we couldn't answer," Buckalew said.
 Moreover, money to pay for the project remained at issue, he said.
 Former President Al Mills had wanted to install high-wattage lights on 50-foot tall poles, along with dugouts, an electric scoreboard, an announcer's booth and a refreshment stand at the north baseball diamond at Fair Haven Fields, Ridge Road.

Development pollution, traffic worry Holmdel

By LISA BUTLER
 Register Correspondent

HOLMDEL — The township planning board expressed concern last night over possible water pollution and traffic hazards that the proposed Bearidge Estates could have on the area.
 The Bearidge Estates plan calls for 250 patio homes to be built on 62.75 acres on Laurel Avenue. The plan also includes a four-acre, man-made pond.
 The discussion stemmed from a letter from Township Engineer Edward Broberg that asked more than twenty questions of the developer, Henry West, Holmdel.
 Board members questioned whether the storm drainage that will empty directly into the pond would have a detrimental effect on the aquatic life. The drainage will include rainwater, as well as runoff from the units, lawns and all paved surfaces. Township

Clerk, John Wadington, asked if the salinity of the pond would be raised.
 Kenneth Paul, an environmental consultant for the developer, replied that their studies show that the development will have 'very little' impact on the pond because only seven acres out of the 62 acres would be paved. Paul also said that, although the salinity of the pond would be temporarily increased, it would gradually recede to former levels.
 The board also voiced concerns about the entrance and exit drive-ways on Laurel Avenue. They feared that residents on the far side of the development would drive their cars to the pool and tennis courts recreation area by way of Laurel Avenue because no internal access road is planned. That would present a vehicular safety hazard, the board said.
 Gregory Ploussas, engineer for the developer, said he would be ready to address the board's concerns in three weeks.

Two charged with forgery

LONG BRANCH — Police yesterday arrested two people in connection with forgery and possession of stolen property.
 At 2:30 p.m. Patrick Galasso, 28, of Long Branch, was charged with forgery, possession of stolen checks from the Monmouth Rubber Corp. and with cashing a $132 check at a store on Broadway, police said.
 Mark Harris, 34, of 84 Grant

Court, was charged with burglary and theft at the Monmouth Rubber Corp. and possession of a hypodermic needle, police said.
 Galasso was released, police said. Harris is being held in the Long Branch Jail on an undetermined amount of bail.
 Detective Sgt. Louis Napolitano and Detective Ralph DeFillipo Sr. investigated.

Police nab window smashers

LONG BRANCH — Police Sunday arrested two people in connection with smashing out car windows.
 Sgt. William Richards and Patrolman Charles Condore charged Christopher G. Crawley, 21, of 123 Morgan Ave., South Amboy, and Kirk Edward Pattison, 21, of 215 Locust St., Union Beach, with burglary and theft.

 Both were released on $2,500 bail, police said.
 Detective John Gaughran investigated.

2 charged with possession

LONG BRANCH — Police Saturday arrested two people in connection with possession of about $1,400 worth of stolen property.
 At 9:55 a.m., Julio Ortiz, 27, of 400 Ocean Ave., and Veda Garofalo, 33, of the same address, were charged with possession of stolen property, police said.
 Items police found in their apartment included a Sony color television, an Emerson turntable and speakers and a fur coat.
 Garofalo was released on a summons.

Ortiz is being held in the Monmouth County Jail, Freehold, on $25,000 bail raised from $10,000 due to additional charges filed by the county prosecutor's office, a jail spokesman said.
 Sgt. Patrick Caron, Patrolman Mario Fragale, Patrolman Paul Seitz and Detective John Gaughran of the Long Branch Police assisted Monmouth Beach Police Chief Richard Keller, Captain Joseph Masica and Patrolmen Patrick McConville and William Petrone in the arrests.

Long Branch plans street fair

By GAYLE E. RABIN
The Register

LONG BRANCH — The First Long Branch Street Fair will be held by the city and the Greater Long Branch Chamber of Commerce on May 17 and 18.

Organizers hope to line Broadway between Third Avenue and Memorial Parkway with 100 booths for ethnic foods, quality artisan crafts and games. Clowns, magicians and mimes will also perform. Organizers hope the street fair will become an annual event.

"Churches, schools and various organizations have sponsored their own fairs, festivals and carnivals in the past, but here we have a new opportunity for everyone to join together in one super fair," said Mayor Philip D. Huhn.

"This truly shows that there is new spirit in the city of Long Branch," he added.

The Long Branch Patrolman's Benevolent Association and its auxiliary are considering operating the Bozo Dunk, which will feature Dunk-A-Cop and other local notables.

The Happy Days String Band and the Long Branch Middle School Chorus will perform on Saturday, May 17. The Red Bank Middle School Steel Drum Band and the Long Branch High School Dance Band have also been asked to participate.

In addition, the city is trying to get an Elizabethan minstrel troupe to join in.

The winning entry in a school poster competition will advertise the fair. Children throughout the system will be asked to submit posters depicting their ideas of a street fair.

"There's no age group or grade level classification so that the poster envisioned by a 10-year-old could be more appropriate than that of a 10th grader," said Mary DeSantis, festival assistant and aide to Huhn.

Al Barrett, owner of Kid's World and Big Al's, is serving as festival chairman, while Stan Cain of Cain Advertising Art Direction will be chairman for the poster competition.

Chamber Publicity Chairman Mike Schwartzstein said he is also considering publishing a tour guide exclusively for the Long Branch area and setting up a tourist information booth on the oceanfront this summer.

The state Division of Travel and Tourism has not yet approved a grant which would subsidize these efforts.

For information about reserving a booth, entertaining, appearing in the dunking booth or working on a street fair committee, call DeSantis at City Hall at 222-7000, ext. 274, or Joanne Vida at the Chamber of Commerce at 222-0400.

Inn to be 'reborn'

After several months of planning, the Old Mill Inn of Spring Lake Heights will begin reconstruction March 22. The restaurant was destroyed by a fire in August of last year. Above is a drawing of how the restored building will look. A late summer or early fall opening is scheduled.

Red Bank may cut teacher

RED BANK — Faced with more than $18,000 in state aid cuts, the Red Bank Borough Board of Education will eliminate a staff position rather than make further program reductions if the cuts are implemented on July 1.

The position targeted for elimination was discussed in a closed session following last night's workshop meeting and will be announced at the board's regular meeting March 18.

The tentative 1986-87 budget, adopted by the board in January, is based on full funding by the state and is expected to increase the school tax rate by 8 cents, said Lorraine Hartnett, school business administrator.

If the district fails to receive full funding from the state, Hartnett said further expenditures will be cut from the budget and that a "staff change has been identified which should solve the problem adequately."

The administrator refused to specify whether the position to be eliminated will be teaching or administrative, but the salary level indicates teaching.

Amendment to help liquor store

TINTON FALLS — An amendment to an ordinance approved last night will help a liquor store chain obtain a license for a branch in a new shopping center.

By a unanimous vote, the Borough Council amended an ordinance that would not allow a liquor store to be located within less than 1,000 feet of a restaurant that serves alcoholic beverages.

The amended ordinance still requires a 1,000-foot distance between any two liquor retail outlets or any two establishments where alcoholic beverages are consumed. However, liquor licenses may now be granted for a retail store and any commercial liquor-serving establishment situated at least 500 feet apart.

Last month, the Buy-Rite Liquors Inc. chain had asked the borough if it could locate a store in a shopping center to be constructed at the corner of Green Grove Road and Asbury Avenue. Simultaneously, The Pub restaurant on Asbury Avenue wanted to relocate at the same shopping center.

Under its old wording, the liquor license ordinance would have prevented the co-existence of the two businesses.

Borough Clerk Ellen Branin said last night a transfer of a liquor license from a vacant store elsewhere in town.

Shrewsbury mayor to seek third term

By LIZ SHEEHAN
Register Correspondent

SHREWSBURY — Dorothy Blair Manson, who in 1979 became the first woman mayor in borough history, said yesterday that she will seek a third term.

Manson, a council member for five years before becoming mayor, said she decided to run for another four-year term because she found that "the end of your term comes before the end of all the projects you've gotten involved with."

She called the restoration of borough hall and the completion of a 16-acre park, designated as the Mayor Dorothy Manson Park, the two projects that she holds as high priorities.

Last month, a representative of an architectural firm commissioned by the borough to determine what needed to be done to restore the 140-year-old building, which is listed in the National Register of Historical Sites, told the council that renovations would cost more than $100,000.

The park, which has 2 acres on Broad Street south of Borough Hall and extends westward behind the building, will have a section devoted to passive recreation on Sycamore Avenue, a nature trail, a jogging course and a fitness trail, Manson said.

She said the fitness trail will be co-sponsored by Riverview Medical Center, Red Bank, and will cost $6,000. Manson said she expects to sign a voucher for $3,000 for the borough's share of the equipment on March 10.

Borough Attorney Martin Barger, who heads the Republican organization here, said yesterday that Councilman Dr. Carl Gardiner and William Specht, chairman of the Planning Board, will run on the ticket with Manson for three-year council positions. Gardiner has been on the council since 1981. Richard Rehm will not seek reelection to the all-Republican council, Barger said.

Manson said recently that she was glad that the mayor runs for the post here and is not picked from among the council members after each election, as happens in some towns.

"It takes a year to learn the job," she said. A person could be "just learning it and someone else is mayor," were the mayor not elected by the voters, she said.

Manson said she spends one day a week at borough hall to be available to residents.

According to Manson, the greatest change she has seen in the borough since becoming mayor has been the growth of businesses and residences and the increase in traffic.

Manson and her husband, Robert, have lived here for 40 years. "One of my children has moved back to Shrewsbury," she said, "So many young people who have grown up here, have bought homes here."

Ocean police charge man with burglaries

OCEAN — A 34-year-old Asbury Park man was charged Monday with committing seven burglaries at four apartment complexes here over a two-month period, according to police.

James R. Benjamin, 135 Sewall Ave., is being held in the Monmouth County Jail, Freehold, on $7,500 bail, police said.

Benjamin is charged with possession of stolen jewelry and checks; possession of a burglary tool; seven counts of burglary and eleven counts of theft, police said.

Also charged with possession of stolen jewelry were James' brother, John R. Benjamin, 36, and Phyllis Jones, 33. All three lived at the same Asbury Park address, police said.

The three were arrested by Asbury Park police after they attempted to sell stolen goods, police said.

Jewelry valued at $3,000 was recovered through the investigation, police said.

The burglaries occurred at the Twin Brook, West Park Manor, and Middlebrook at Monmouth apartment complexes during January and February, police said.

The investigation into the burglaries is being continued by Ocean Township police, a police spokesman said.

LITTLE SILVER — Members of the Little Silver Tennis Club will get the opportunity to go for a swim this summer.

Allan Sockol, representing the club, made an informal presentation to the Planning Board last night of plans to erect a temporary swimming pool. The 27-foot above-ground pool will be 4 feet deep. Sockol admitted that it would be an eyesore but only for part of the summer.

Sockol said many club members have requested a pool and the temporary one will be used for 60 days in July and August to see how members respond. If it is well received, then Sockol said the club would consider a permanent pool.

Hazlet soccer complex in trouble with DEP

By DAN JACOBSON
The Register

HAZLET — The state Department of Environmental Protection has indicated it will not approve the rules governing Hazlet's soccer complex on Green Acres Drive.

The soccer complex was built with state Green Acres funds, which allows the DEP to review the rules.

In a letter to Township Administrator Robert Weigand, Green

Acres compliance officer David R. Smith labeled "exorbitant and also discriminatory in nature" the $5,000 maintenance fee Hazlet charges permit holders for the complex under the rules.

Smith also said the rules improperly restrict the number of non-residents on teams that hold permits to use the facility. Different rates for non-residents are permissible, Smith said.

In addition, Smith said the concession building on the premises can only be operated after the award of a competitive bid. He stated that money from a concession stand contract must be used by the township to maintain the complex.

Smith said the DEP would allow Hazlet to charge for maintenance costs those holding permits to use the soccer complex.

The conclusion of Smith's letter generated controversy at last night's Township Committee meeting, which was attended by some 80 residents supporting the Hazlet Traveling Soccer Club.

The club, which does not have a permit to use the facility, has claimed it was discriminated against by the township in the longer in effect. Township Committeeman John Bradshaw suggested the recreation committee negotiate with the soccer club to develop a schedule for use of the complex. Bradshaw and Committeeman Martin Marino serve on the recreation committee.

However, Giunco pressed Bradshaw for a specific time for when the recreation committee would meet with the club.

"We'll start calling (recreation committee members) tomorrow to arrange for a meeting as soon as possible," Bradshaw said.

In other matters, the Hazlet Associates Limited Partnership, which owns the Sheraton on Route 35, said it opposes an application to develop a suite hotel next to its property.

The group has received approval to add 80 rooms to the 120-room Sheraton, said Giunco, who also represents the hotel's owners.

Another hotel would "create a flood" of rooms, Giunco said. There is a "strong possibility" that the Sheraton addition will not be built if the suite hotel is approved, Giunco said.

Trial

after a "stunned" Bongiovanni discovered his wife having sex with Roller on a picnic table, Bongiovanni said.

The 33-year-old Howell man spoke yesterday from the witness stand before Superior Court Judge James A. Kennedy in the second day of Roller's trial on aggravated assault and weapons charges.

To fend off a rush by Roller during the struggle, Bongiovanni kicked the half-naked man in the groin; Roller lunged at him, and Bongiovanni held Roller in a headlock, Bongiovanni said.

Bongiovanni said he didn't know that Roller had a knife. And he didn't know until later that he had been stabbed.

But never, as the defense contends may have caused the stab wound, did he and Roller fall to the ground during the struggle in the backyard of the Arlyn Drive home belonging to Ann Marie Bongiovanni's parents.

Under direct questioning by Assistant Prosecutor William R. Guidry, Bongiovanni recounted the Memorial Day 1985 stabbing near the picnic table where he surprised Roller having sex with his then-wife, Ann Marie.

While on an errand the night of May 27, Bongiovanni said he decid to walk past the house and talk with his wife about their failing marriage.

The two were no longer living together, and attempts to visit her in March and April found Roller at their Farmingdale apartment, and once resulted in his wife's refusing to let him in, he said.

The two have since been divorced, for, as defense attorney John R. Ford noted on cross-examination, extreme cruelty by Bongiovanni to his wife.

Near midnight on May 27, Bongiovanni said he approached the 44 Arlyn Drive home and noticed Roller's red Camaro parked in front. While walking up the driveway, he said he heard a "cough or a groan" from behind the garage.

He said he walked around the garage, into the backyard.

"What did you see, then?" asked Guidry.

"I saw my wife having sex," said Bongiovanni. "I saw my wife and Roller having sexual intercourse on the picnic table."

Bongiovanni said he turned to leave.

"Then I saw what looked like a piece of a broom handle, and I hit him twice, once on the left side of the head and then on his shoulder," Bongiovanni said.

After being hit, Roller "got up and fell off the picnic table," Bongiovanni said.

While his wife screamed at Bongiovanni, Roller went inside the house, about 10 to 15 feet from the picnic table, said Bongiovanni.

"I heard the screen door kicked or banged, and I saw him inside the door," Bongiovanni said. "We stared at each other, and then he came charging out."

Bongiovanni characterized the charge as a "fast walk." Mrs. Bongiovanni was still over by the picnic table, Bongiovanni said.

"He was coming straight at me, and I kicked him in the groin to stop him," Bongiovanni said. "He doubled over and lunged at me, and he hit me in the stomach with his head."

Roller, as Mrs. Bongiovanni, was naked from the waist down, he said. Bongiovanni put Roller in a headlock.

"He was struggling, and trying to break out," said Bongiovanni. "I felt a couple of punches." Specifically, he recalled one blow on the right side of his back, just below the shoulder blade.

"But I didn't know then that I had been stabbed," he said. Bongiovanni said he didn't know Roller had a knife at all.

"We were locked for less than a minute," Bongiovanni said. "I never lost my footing, and never fell on the ground — no one ever fell to the ground."

Once Roller broke the headlock, he and Bongiovanni stared at each other for a few seconds, and then Bongiovanni walked away. Roller was still standing there as Bongiovanni left, he said.

His wife was yelling to someone inside the house to call the police,

Bongiovanni said.

About 100 yards from the house, Bongiovanni said he thought he felt perspiration on his chest, but when he rubbed the area, he saw blood. He continued to his parents' house, where, after blacking out for a few seconds, he asked his parents to call the first aid squad.

It was not until he was transported to Brick Memorial Hospital that he realized he'd been stabbed, Bongiovanni said.

On cross-examination, Ford asked, "You were going there to get her back? And you weren't going to beat her?"

"No, sir," Bongiovanni replied. "And now you're telling us that after you found them having sex, you were going to just leave?" Ford asked.

"I was stunned," Bongiovanni said.

I'd make friends with them."

The homeless hadn't been part of Eberhardt's lesson plan, the teacher said, but the topic came up in an impromptu discussion.

"The kids are so innocent," Eberhardt said. "It really shocked them that people lived like this."

Today, Eberhardt said, she will take the lesson one step further by having the students bring in shopping bags and decide what they would carry for survival if they had no place to live.

Eberhardt said she assigned last week's projects as a creative writing exercise, as well as to prompt more thinking on the subject.

The children's ideas for helping the homeless reflect solutions already tried in the adult world, such as foster homes and charity food handouts. One boy even said he'd provide a sort of work incentive for his homeless friends: "I want to let poor people in our house and give them $25.25 and clothes so they would start working for people and get money to buy shelter," wrote 8-year-old Charles Deitz.

In their travels, some kids had already come across real-life illustrations of the people they are learning about now. One child expressed a mixture of fear and sympathy at what she had seen.

"Three times a year when I go to New York City, I see a lot of homeless people," wrote Andreena J. Anthony, 8. "I wish I could help them. I don't talk to them because if I did I would lose my mother and I would become a homeless person, too."

and Ocean counties, Clayton said. Students and faculty are drawn from several sects, including Baptists, Methodists and Pentacostals.

Faculty at the institute donate their services, prompting Clayton to call the school a "labor of love." Students pay a $30 tuition fee, and have to buy their own books, but Clayton said most of the school's revenues come from donations.

In addition to stemming the number of drop-outs, the new facility is also seen as a way to help the school attain the vital accreditation of the American Association of Bible Colleges.

While the thrust of the school is religious training, instructor Owen Alston of Lakehurst said the benefits extend to the entire community.

"We've gotten to the point where the church is the only place people feel safe," Alston said. "We have to go right to the hearts of the people, and then the communities will change."

School officials are hoping for a good turnout at a $50-a-plate fund-raising dinner at the institute on April 19, where drawings of the new facility will be presented. While some help may come from private foundations, Clayton noted that many foundations do not support religious organizations.

Remaining donations come from area churches, some of which have permanent line items in their budgets for the school, and individual contributions from students and faculty. Alston noted that the school would prefer not to have to go into debt by borrowing money from a bank, but he would not rule out the possibility altogether.

The school was founded in 1972 by members of the Deacons' Union of Monmouth County, an umbrella group for Baptist clergymen and lay people in Monmouth and surrounding counties.

Colts Neck farm trial ends

FREEHOLD — Testimony concluded yesterday in a civil trial in which a group of Colts Neck farmers claim a zoning change adopted by that township will devalue their land.

But a decision on the suit — filed by nearly 30 landowners, most of them farmers — is probably a month away.

Superior Court Judge Michael D. Farren told attorneys Richard T. O'Connor, representing the property owners, and Robert W. O'Hagan, Colts Neck township attorney, to provide him with written summations based strictly on evidence introduced over the course of a seven-day trial including testimony by a dozen expert witnesses.

Citing the "exhaustive" opening statements offered by the attorneys when the trial began Feb. 20, Farren asked for written briefs that would "key in" to findings and conclusions based on exhibits and testimony. The township's summation will be due next Wednesday, and O'Connor must submit his by March 21, with a decision by Farren expected by early April.

The landowners have brought suit against the September 1984 zoning change the township said would preserve agriculture and help it comply with the Mount Laurel II ruling, requiring growth areas to zone for a "fair share" of low and moderate-income housing.

The landowners claim the change, which decreases the permitted housing density on agricultural land, devalues their land by as much as $5,000 per acre.

In yesterday's proceedings, O'Hagan called on a planner, a real estate appraiser and Township Administrator George Handzo.

Handzo said the township has traditionally encouraged agriculture, and said the fact that there is no municipal tax rate in Colts Neck has been a boon to farmers. While he acknowledged that crop farming is on the decline in Colts Neck, Handzo said the township has worked to preserve tracts for open space, some agricultural uses and for smaller "farmettes."

Real estate appraiser Kenneth L. Walker Jr. of Shrewsbury, who conducted a February 1985 study on the zoning change's effects on property values, said land sale values showed a decline averaging about 13 percent in the four months following the adoption of the amendment. But he said the amount of land sales did not show change after September 1984.

N.J. Network under fire

Probes sought into political meddling

By NICHOLAS G. KATSARELAS
Associated Press

TRENTON — A Senate committee chairman said yesterday he will ask two separate commissions to investigate charges that a legislator used threats to try to get his girlfriend a job at the New Jersey Network, and that employees have "make-work" jobs at the station.

Sen. Gerald Stockman, D-Mercer, chairman of the Senate Legislative Oversight Committee, said the commissions will "fully investigate" accusations leveled by Hendrix Niemann, former executive director of the state-operated television network.

Niemann testified at the third public hearing held by the committee, which is examining the management and operations of the network and looking into whether it is subject to excessive influence by politicians and whether the state should continue to fund it.

What the panel heard yesterday was a list of allegations submitted by Niemann, who said that from the time he was hired in August 1983 until his resignation in January, his tenure was rife with incidents where legislators and the administration of Gov. Thomas H. Kean tried to interfere with the content and operations of the news program.

But testimony by the day's only other witness, Public Broadcasting Authority Chairman Stephen Aduabato, was markedly different than that of Niemann. The 15-member authority oversees the operations of the non-profit network.

Aduabato denied or said he had no knowledge of allegations offered by Niemann, including claims that:

■ When Niemann took over the reins of the network, he discovered two people had "make-work" or "seldom-show" jobs created by Aduabato.

■ Niemann was forced by Aduabato to hire a third employee for a "make-work" or "seldom-show" job.

■ Aduabato told Niemann to "bury" a memo from the attorney general's office that one of those employees was "involved in a potential conflict of interest situation."

Niemann also said:

■ He was told by Gregory Stevens, the former chief of staff for Kean, that the administration didn't like one of the network's reporters, Michael Aron, and that it would be "extremely pleased ... if he departed the premises."

■ A pay raise unanimously voted for him by the authority in December 1984 was vetoed by the administration.

■ He resigned after learning the Kean administration wanted him fired because of what the administration considered the network's "unfair, biased" coverage of the November gubernatorial election.

He was also asked by the committee about accusations he has made in the past that a Democratic legislator tried to force him to put his girlfriend on the network's payroll. She was never hired.

Niemann refused to divulge the name of the lawmaker and said he would only do so if asked by the committee. The committee, led by Sen. S. Thomas Gagliano, R-Monmouth, said it would be improper for it to demand the name, but would not prevent Niemann from releasing it.

Niemann steadfastly refused to identify the legislator as well as those employees in "make-work" jobs.

Stockman said the committee will ask the Joint Legislative Commission on Ethical Standards to examine the issue involving the legislator and his girlfriend, while the Executive Commission on Ethical Standards will investigate the "make-work" jobs.

IN TRENTON — Hendrix Niemann, above as he testifies before a Senate panel yesterday, Stephen Aduabato, chairman of the broadcasting agency, gestures as he testifies.

Both Niemann and Aduabato said they would speak freely with the commissions.

Niemann read a 17-page statement detailing his tenure at the station, incidents of political interference and proposed changes.

"The pervasive influence of politics is everywhere you look," he said. "The only responsible course of action is to eliminate, to the extent possible, the opportunities for political harassment."

Asked by Stockman why he resigned, Niemann replied, "Didn't have the votes." Aduabato said the authority voted unanimously to oust Niemann.

Aduabato denied that Niemann was forced out because of the Kean administration's dissatisfaction with his performance. He said instead that Niemann interpreted all contacts and conversations with politicians as political interference.

"I felt his purpose there had been served and I felt he had a confusion as to what was a political threat or political suggestion," said Aduabato.

As an example of what he called political interference, Niemann cited several examples of legislators, including Stockman, calling to complain about news content or programming.

But Aduabato said Niemann "definitely" overreacted to such incidents, and called him a "political innocent."

Niemann suggested that the state relinquish its licenses to the four network stations in the state, and that they be transferred to an independent, non-profit corporation, in order to make it more autonomous and independent of the administration and Legislature.

He also suggested that the state continue funding the station, that the number of Cabinet members on the board be reduced from five to three, that the number of gubernatorial appointees be reduced from 10 to three and that six board members be elected independently.

Aduabato agreed that the number of Cabinet members should be reduced.

Stockman said the committee will conduct a fourth hearing, and will issue a report on whether legislative changes should be made in the structure, funding and operations of the network.

Newark scientists seek computer-fed detente with Soviet

By FRANK BAJAK
Associated Press

NEWARK — U.S. and Soviet scientists are waiting for approval of a computer link between the superpowers that would sidestep barriers such as distance and bureaucracy and make joint research easier, the project's creator said yesterday.

"The Russians seem to think it would be a good way for people who are working together to communicate on a regular basis," said Murray Turoff, a computer scientist at New Jersey Institute of Technology. "There's no other communications technology that does that today."

Turoff said a dozen U.S. and Soviet scientists from different fields began "talking" to each other through their computers last summer.

The informal setup "led the Russians and some U.S. people to realize this would be a way to not only carry on exchanges, but joint research," said Turoff. "That's a new idea, as if you were working in the same building."

In December, academic delegations from the United States and the Soviet Union agreed to exchange research on communications technology and how it affects society.

Last month, the two sides tentatively agreed to specific projects, including the computer link between NJIT and a Moscow institute.

The link is awaiting final approval by the Soviet Academy of Sciences and Turoff said it looks good.

"We expect that the research will be going forward soon," said Wesley Fisher, a spokesman for the American Council of Learned Societies which arranges academic exchanges between the United States and the Soviet Bloc.

The computer link is "a pioneering effort," said George Gerbner, who headed a U.S. delegation to Moscow last month to set up the communications technology exchange.

"What we're dealing with is a research and cultural exchange agreement that is much broader than the idea of computer networking," said Gerbner, who is dean of communications at the University of Pennsylvania.

The communications agreement would enable scientists to work together on projects in television programming, comparative media studies and the impact of television on children, officials said.

Turoff said he hoped the computer link between NJIT's Electronic Information Exchange System, EIES, and the Soviet Institute for Automated Systems would later be expanded to include other fields of research in the Humanities and Social Sciences.

"We detected among many of the Russian scientists quite a bit of enthusiasm for being able to engage in this kind of communication on a day-to-day basis," he said. Turoff noted that it is a very difficult, time-consuming process for Soviet academics to get permission to travel.

"I think also the Russians might consider this a little safer way to let their scientists communicate with Western counterparts," he added.

The U.S. Department of Commerce initially had reservations about the exchange, fearing that it might give the Soviets access to sensitive information, Turoff said. The department agreed last summer to permit Soviet access to EIES after it was assured that the system did not contain such information.

EIES was founded 11 years ago with a National Science Foundation grant and now has about 2,000 users, mostly professionals in industry and academia who can send each other message, edit documents together or participate in conferences.

The U.S.-Soviet computer link would allow a data exchange through a Finland-based telecommunications network to which the Soviets already have access, said Turoff.

State raps firm for fouling air over New York

By ELISSA McCRARY
Associated Press

TRENTON — The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection yesterday fined U.S. Metals Refining Co. $215,300 for violations of state air pollution standards since the firm resumed operations earlier this month, Environmental Commissioner Richard T. Dewling announced.

The administrative order issued by the DEP cites the Carteret-based company for a variety of offenses detected during investigations from Feb. 6 to March 1, Dewling said.

The violations include chemical particle emissions; operating without continuous monitoring and recording of oxygen, carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and benzene levels; and failure to notify the DEP immediately of chemical releases.

Also yesterday, New York City Mayor Edward Koch charged that the company is a "major polluter" and that the firm is polluting the air over Staten Island.

Koch said that a court order which closed the plant should have never been lifted and that a 1983 U.S. Environmental Protection Agency study showed the refinery to be among the heaviest emitters of dioxin tested in the country.

Gene Deutsch, company vice president, rejected late yesterday some of the violations cited by the DEP.

"We have been in basic compliance," he said.

Deutsch said he and other company officials would have to review the charges before deciding whether to appeal the fine.

The plant recovers metals such as copper, silver, gold and platinum from waste wire and electrical scrap by burning away plastic coatings on the materials in a furnace, said Donald Deieso, director of the DEP's Division of Environmental Quality.

Gases from the furnaces are emitted from the firm's smokestacks, he said.

The firm resumed operations on Feb. 6 after shutting down operations for five months while it collected tons of scrap materials, according to Deieso.

In 1983, the state of New York accused U.S. Metals of polluting the air and filed a lawsuit against the firm. The case is currently being heard in federal court in Newark.

Last week, New York officials asked the presiding judge to order the company to cease operations but the request was denied.

Deieso said the DEP's administrative order requires U.S. Metals to pay the fine within 20 days or request a hearing on the issue.

He said the order also requires the company to meet a number of terms within a stipulated period of time.

Deieso said the firm was ordered to submit to the DEP within five days inventory and operational information on its refining and smelting operations, including its anticipated closure date.

Within 10 days, the company must submit an analysis of its past, current and future staffing levels, said Deieso, to ensure that there are adequately trained personnel to properly operate the equipment.

U.S. Metals must hire within five days an independent lead consultant, approved by the DEP, who will prepare a work plan under which the company can achieve compliance with New Jersey's State Implementation Plan for lead.

The work plan and time schedule for its implementation must be turned in to the DEP within 15 days, Deieso said.

Also, a second independent consultant will be hired by U.S. Metals within five days who will conduct stack emissions testing for 10 materials, including lead, hydrocarbons, benzene, carbon monoxide and dioxin.

And the DEP has ordered the company to install four additional high-volume air samplers, whose filters will be analyzed for lead, arsenic, cadmium, chromium, nickel and dioxins, Deieso said.

"We are taking this administrative action to bring the company into compliance with our air pollution control code and their permit conditions. If they fail to comply with the order or cannot demonstrate their compliance, we will take whatever action is necessary to enforce New Jersey's air pollution control laws and protect public health, welfare and the environment," Deieso said.

State seeks trial date in Lamonaco killing

By KATHLEEN BIRD
Associated Press

TRENTON — New Jersey prosecutors said they will ask a judge to set a date for the murder trial of Richard C. Williams and Thomas W. Manning following their conviction yesterday in New York on conspiracy and bombing convictions.

Williams and Manning have been charged in the 1981 killing of Philip Lamonaco, a highly decorated New Jersey state police trooper.

New Jersey officials will file a request with Superior Court Judge Michael R. Imbriani to set a trial date in the Lamonaco case, said Thomas Cannon, a spokesman for Attorney General W. Cary Edwards.

"The state has been ready to proceed for years," Cannon said.

Williams, 38, of Beverly, Mass., and Manning, 39, of Boston, were among six political radicals convicted by a federal court jury of conspiracy and at least two bombings each in a partial verdict yesterday.

Williams was captured in the Cleveland area Nov. 4, 1984 with four of the federal co-defendants who have been tied by authorities to a string of bombings, bank robberies and shootings in several states.

Williams was scheduled to go on trial last April in the Lamonaco case.

But after Manning was captured at a Norfolk, Va., hideout on April 24, 1985, New Jersey prosecutors asked Imbriani to postpone Williams' trial until Manning could be extradited to New Jersey.

The judge consolidated the cases against the two suspects.

Manning fought extradition but was ordered to go to New Jersey.

However, the federal government sought to try him in New York in the bombing case before New Jersey prosecutors could go ahead with the murder trial.

Lamonaco, 32, died in a shootout after stopping a car on an isolated stretch of Interstate 80 in Knowlton Township, Warren County. The trooper was wearing a bulletproof vest but one of eight shots fired at him hit and killed him.

His slaying sparked New Jersey's largest manhunt since the 1932 kidnapping of the son of famed aviator Charles A. Lindbergh.

Wedding fees given for drug probes

HACKENSACK (AP) — When the Bergen County prosecutor asked municipalities to contribute to his dwindling "drug buy fund," he got some money from an unexpected source: wedding ceremonies.

"We don't have the money to spare, but I always donate my fees for performing marriages to charity," River Edge Mayor Edward Raffo said yesterday. "This year I'll give it to the narcotics task force."

Raffo said he gets $25 per wedding and has donated $50 so far to the fund with which the Bergen County Narcotics Task Force buys drugs for undercover operations.

The mayor said he performs about 20 marriages a year, which translates into a $500 donation — just enough to buy a quarter ounce of cocaine or 10 ounces of marijuana.

The Narcotics Task Force finances its "drug buy fund" solely through donations, said Prosecutor Larry McClure. Last year, it spent $34,000 buying drugs, but only got $24,000 in contributions.

The group had to dip into a reserve of $74,000 to make up the difference, McClure said.

The prosecutor said he was concerned that dwindling resources would hamper the work of the task force.

Boy charged in fatal house fire

TRENTON (AP) — A 13-year-old boy has been charged in connection with a fire that swept through a row house, killing a 10-month-old baby, authorities said yesterday.

Police said the youth set fire to gasoline spilled on a bedroom floor. The blaze, reported at 12:20 p.m. Monday, spread through the six-room brick row house and left nine people homeless.

Deputy Police Chief Frank

Brady said the youth "wanted to save the baby but the fire got so intense so quick that he just got up and ran out."

The baby's mother, 15-year-old Sheila Jones, was attending classes at Trenton Central High School when the fire broke out.

The boy whose name is being withheld because of his age was charged with juvenile delinquency. If treated as an adult, the charges would have been murder and aggravated arson.

Teen driver of death car was drunk

WEST MILFORD (AP) — The 18-year-old driver of a car who died in a crash Jan. 19 that killed three other teenagers was legally drunk at the time, and a bartender has been charged with selling them alcohol, police said.

An investigation found that driver Michael Sobota had bought alcoholic drinks at a tavern at about 8 p.m. the night of the fiery crash, police said Monday.

Blood analyses showed that two of his companions had also been drinking, police said.

Richard D. Straub, 29, was charged with liquor law violations for allegedly selling the alcohol to Sobota on the night of the crash, but police did not say how much or what kind of beverage was sold.

Nor did they say how much alcohol was in the victims' blood streams.

Police said they plan to lodge administrative charges against the Bearfort Lodge bar and grill with the state Board of Alcoholic Beverage Control, which could lead to revocation or suspension of the establishment's liquor license.

In early police reports, the crash was blamed on dangerous road conditions created by a dense fog. The car ran off the road shortly before midnight, hit a tree and burst into flames.

Three 17-year-olds, Kim Achillo, Thomas Bostock and Dana Guerra, also died in the crash. They and Sobota, seniors at West Milford High School, were returning from a movie.

Since 1980, more than a dozen West Milford High School students have died in traffic accidents, many attributed to drunken driving.

James Paretti, the school's senior-class president, said news about the involvement of alcohol in the accident probably won't matter much to students who were close to the victims.

"I don't know at this point if it makes much of a difference," said Paretti. "I don't think anyone is going to remember them as anything but good people."

PATH train kills NJ Transit worker

HARRISON (AP) — An NJ Transit maintenance worker was killed yesterday when his car collided with a commuter train after a crossing gate was mistakenly opened, investigators said.

The collision left two train passengers injured and tied up morning rush hour traffic for an hour.

When Anthony DePiano, 58, first arrived at the crossing shortly before 9 a.m., the gate was closed, officials said. After he had stopped, the gate opened, either manually or from another location, said Harrison Police Chief Louis Saporito.

"We don't know why the gate was opened, but apparently he thought the way was clear and pulled onto the track," Saporito said.

DePiano's car was hit broadside by the first car of the seven-car PATH train. When the train finally came to a stop, the vehicle burst into flames, damaging the train, said Mildred Schneider, a spokeswoman for the Port Authority of New York and

New Jersey.

The passengers aboard the train, which was headed from Newark to the World Trade Center, were taken by bus to the Journal Square Station in Jersey City, said Ms. Schneider.

Two women passengers suffered minor injuries. They were treated and released from West Hudson Hospital in Kearny, said hospital spokeswoman Tina Murio. Their names were not released.

Train traffic on the Port Authority Trans-Hudson line stopped until 9:30 a.m. when PATH opened the westbound track for traffic in both directions.

DePiano, acting general foreman at NJ Transit, was leaving the yard when the collision occurred.

NJ Transit and Port Authority officials said they did not know what types of signals regulated the crossing. They also said they were unaware of reports that the gate was open at the time of the collision.

Cop arrested on 25 burglary charges

WILLINGBORO (AP) — A 12-year veteran of the Willingboro police force has been suspended without pay after his arrest in connection with a string of commercial burglaries committed since last August.

Police Lt. Kenneth Robbins, 41, of Delanco, was arrested on Sunday in the office of Willingboro Police Chief Robert Rossell. He was charged with malfeasance in office and is free on his own recognizance.

Robbins had been observed by members of Willingboro Police Department's Tactical Unit backing his patrol car into a closed garage door at the Willingboro Auto Parts store on Rancocas Road.

Burlington County Prosecutor Stephen G. Raymond said during a news conference Monday that "there are numerous charges that will be filed against Lt. Robbins ... for in excess of 25 burglaries."

Raymond said Robbins has taken between $2,500 and $3,500 during the break-ins. Robbins has an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached for comment.

Rossell said that Robbins, the midnight shift duty supervisor, directed other officers away from commercial establishments he chose to burglarize.

As shift commander, Robbins had control over the deployment of four or five patrol cars and officers and could monitor the actions of the independent Tactical Unit, Rossell said.

The incidents occurred while Robbins was on duty during the 9 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift, he said.

The Tactical Unit was established Dec. 1 to investigate residential burglaries in the township's Buckingham and Pennyacker parks.

Robbins was hired in 1973 as a special officer and became a regular patrolman in 1974. He was promoted to lieutenant in July 1982.

Jury ponders Marshall fate

By CYNTHIA ROBERTS
Associated Press

MAYS LANDING (AP) — Jury deliberations began yesterday in the trial of a Toms River businessman accused of having his wife murdered so he could continue a love affair and collect $1.5 million in life insurance.

Judge Manuel Greenberg spoke with the jury of seven men and five women for 40 minutes before they entered deliberations at 10:40 a.m.

"It has been said a trial is a search for the truth," Greenberg said. "... Let your verdict declare the truth."

Businessman Robert O. Marshall has been tried along with the accused triggerman, Larry N. Thompson, but Greenberg told the jurors that they must consider evidence in each case separately.

Both men are charged with murder and conspiracy and could face the death penalty, if convicted.

Marshall's wife, Maria, was shot to death on Sept. 7, 1984.

Prosecutor Kevin Kelly has accused Marshall of procuring a gunman to murder his wife at a secluded picnic area on the Garden State Parkway.

The key witness against

JURY'S OUT — Robert O. Marshall, accused of hiring his wife's killer, holds up his wedding ring during his Cape May trial as he explained why he hadn't buried his wife's ashes following her murder Sept. 7, 1984. Yesterday, a jury began deliberating the fate of both Marshall, a Toms River insurance man, and a man from Louisiana accused of actually pulling the trigger.

Marshall and Thompson was Billy Wayne McKinnon, 43, of Greenwood, La., who testified under a plea bargain in return for promise of a lenient sentence.

McKinnon testified that Marshall asked him to murder his wife. He said he gave a .45-caliber automatic pistol to Thompson, 42, of Fairview-Alpha, La., and drove him to the murder site.

Marshall, 46, has said he sought out an investigator from Louisiana to discover what his wife had done with several thousand dollars from their joint bank account.

Alibi witnesses said Thompson was in Louisiana at the time of the murder and his defense attorney, Francis Hartman, told the jury McKinnon "has an enormous motive for lying" to the authorities.

Marshall's attorney, Glenn A. Zeitz, hammered away at inconsistencies in McKinnon's testimony and portrayed him as an expellee who manipulated the criminal justice system to save himself.

Kelly has alleged Marshall wanted his wife dead so he could continue an extramarital affair, which ended two weeks after Maria Marshall's death. The prosecutor also said Marshall wanted to collect $1.5 million in life insurance, most of which was purchased in the seven months before the murder.

The judge several times on Monday reminded the jury that Marshall has waived any right to the $600,000 in insurance already paid to his three sons.

In his final argument Monday, Kelly said Marshall deserved "a place in hell" for having his sons testify in his defense.

Marshall's younger sons, John, 15, and Christopher, 19, were in tears when the prosecutor showed the jury a picture of their mother's body.

13 honored to celebrate Women's Week in state

TRENTON (AP) — The state will pay tribute to 13 women, including actress Meryl Streep and state Senator Wynona Lipman, D-Essex, as part of a celebration marking Women's History Week, officials said yesterday.

"The history of women, like the history of minorities in America, has occurred with little acknowledgement of its depth and importance," said Community Affairs Commissioner Leonard S. Coleman Jr. "Celebrations such as Women's History Week and Black History Month, honor efforts spanning centuries of American history and encourage present-day Americans to take pride in and to carry on their heritage."

The 13 were to be presented with a pin inscribed with the words "Women's History" at a reception last night at the Trenton State College student center.

Along with Coleman, officials who were scheduled to participate in the ceremony included Secretary of State Jane Burgio, Treasurer Feather O'Connor and Banking Commissioner Mary Little Parelle.

The women to be honored besides Ms. Streep were: Judy Blume, Princeton, a writer and pioneer in the enhancement of young women in children's book; Mary Ellen Capek, Princeton, a long-time advocate of women in higher education; Janette Colon-Jorge, Newark, vice president of the Newark Teachers' Union and an activist for women in the AFL-CIO; Rachel Davis DuBois, Woodstown, an educator who has promoted interracial understanding; and Ruby Grace, New-

Also, Hilda Hidalgo, Newark, of the School of Social Work at Rutgers Newark campus and an advocate for women in the field of social work; Alma Hill, Trenton, founder and executive director of Looking into the Future Together, an advocate for single mothers and teen parents; Ming Hsu, Westfield, director of the Division of International Trade in the state Department of Commerce; state Sen. who has promoted legislation on women's rights; Verna McCutcheon, Browns Mills, state president of the Daughters of the Elks; Mary Roebing, Trenton, chairwoman emerita of the National State Bank; and Ruth Cheney Streeter, Morristown, former director of the Marine Corps Women's Reserve.

Views On Dental Health

WILL BABY HAVE HEALTHY TEETH?

What can an expectant mother do to make sure her baby will grow up to have healthy teeth? There are two things that will make all the difference in the world.

One is the child's genetic makeup, the genes he or she inherits from both parents. They will help determine the size, shape, texture, and other qualities of a child's teeth. There's nothing a parent can do to control this. It just happens.

But there is something an expectant mother can do to give baby a good dental start. She can do whatever possible to protect her health.

She should eat a well-balanced diet, as recommended by her physician. And she should avoid infection, including tooth decay and gum disease. Any infection can have unhealthy consequences for mother and child. A dental checkup and treatment will help eliminate any source of infection caused by decayed teeth or gum disease.

Once baby's bottom is slapped and the crying starts, you should start planning for that first visit to the dentist at about age three. That's when all 20 of the primary teeth should have erupted and your dentist can evaluate progress or problems.

Of wealth and waste

By Chris Conway
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

Bedminster, land of the Forbes, Dillons and Keans confronts a most plebeian dilemma: toxic wastes

BEDMINSTER — The rich may be different, but when it comes to toxic wastes, they may as well be anybody.

At least that's how it seems here in the heart of New Jersey's exclusive horse and hunt country in Somerset County, which state officials are considering as a place to store millions of tons of hazardous wastes.

"I have a wonderful cleaning lady who's been with me for 25 years, and she said just this morning, 'With all the open space in this state, I can't believe they chose this area.' And I told her, 'I guess they think this is open space,'" said Betty Merck, widow of a former vice president of Merck & Co. Inc.

Merck's 100-acre estate, The Fields, is not directly affected, nor is the 440-acre farm of her neighbor, former automaker John De-

Lorean. But the state has selected about 535 nearby acres — some of New Jersey's most exclusive and high-priced real estate — as one of four possible locations for storing toxic wastes in above-ground vaults.

That means that several prominent and wealthy people, including John Kean, a cousin of Gov. Tom Kean, may have to pick up their estates and move.

"The reaction," said state Sen. John Ewing, R-Somerset, last week, "has been typical of most places. We need it, but we don't want it in our back yard."

At this point, of course, Bedminster is only one of four locations that New Jersey's Hazardous Waste Facilities Siting Commission has suggested as a possible site for the storage facility. Another is East Greenwich Township in Gloucester County. The other two are Maurice River Township in Cumberland County and Hillsborough Township in Somerset County.

As proposed, the waste-storage facility each year would receive about 110,000 tons of industrial wastes, as well as some of the wastes unearthed from New Jersey's 97 Superfund sites and other hazardous-waste dumps.

The commission is not expected to narrow its selection to a single site until summer. But in Bedminster, the plan has caused a stir.

The John Kean family could lose about 400 acres under the plan.

"I guess they think this is open space."

Betty Merck
Bedminster resident, to her maid

About 20 acres owned by Malcolm S. Forbes Jr. near his rambling colonial mansion, Southdown, might also be lost. Forbes is president and deputy editor in chief of Forbes magazine.

In addition, the state might have to acquire White Oaks, a 106-acre estate and horse farm owned by industrialist J. William Scher, as well as the home of Margaret Franciso, the Bedminster administrator.

Bedminster and its rural, rolling surroundings have long been home to some of New Jersey's richest rich. Last year's Forbes magazine list of the nation's 400 wealthiest citizens named three area residents, including Malcolm S. Forbes Sr., editor in chief of the magazine.

The others, said the magazine, were retired investment banker C. Douglas Dillon, and Jane Engelhard, an heir to the Engelhard Minerals and Chemicals fortune.

The magazine put Dillon's wealth at $150 million and Engelhard's at $365 million. It offered estimates by other publications, ranging from $200 million to $400 million, of Malcolm Forbes Sr.'s fortune.

Observed Mayor Robert Lloyd last week: "Our selection definitely seems to bear out the fact that this was not a politically oriented decision."

So what's Bedminster to do? "We have to assume that none of the communities are going to want one of these, so our approach is not going to be one of hysteria. We're going to look at the area and study it and deal with it on a matter-of-fact basis," said Lloyd, owner of the Lloyd Metal Working Fluids Corp.

The mayor did note, however, that if environmental studies were required to battle the waste-storage facility, "we have the resources for that kind of need. The fact that we have some wealthier folks in this area is certainly a helpful factor."

Though commission members expect a court battle to ensue no matter which of the four communities is selected, New Jersey law gives the panel the authority to acquire property through eminent domain and to supersede local planning and zoning ordinances.

If Bedminster is selected, John Kean's family appears to have the most to lose in land and memories.

As many as 400 acres of Kean-owned land might be acquired for the site, including John Kean's white colonial home, his barn, tennis courts and rolling pastures, known collectively as Mill River Farm.

Also included is the rambling mansion called Lindenfield, where John Kean spent part of his youth. The house is about a half-mile up the road from Mill River Farm and sits back among the trees along the North Branch of the Raritan River.

The Bedminster site, like the others, was selected by the commission through aerial photographs and satellite data, based on a variety of factors such as population density and access to transportation routes. No on-site inspections have yet been done. The Bedminster site lies close to the intersections of Routes 78 and 287.

Kean, the president of National Utilities and Industries Corp., was skiing in Utah last week and could not be reached for comment. But his 31-year-old daughter, Lita Haack, said that her father was "very upset" that his home of 30 years could end up as a home for hazardous wastes.

Although John Kean has a cousin sitting in the governor's office, Haack said her father was "going to fight his own battle and not involve the governor. Dad thinks this is his own fight."

Added Haack: "Everybody around here has tried to purchase land around them so we don't have condominium complexes coming in. They've tried to protect the land so their children could experience nature and the outdoors, and it's really upsetting for this to happen."

Princeton teatotalers get social

PRINCETON (AP) — Trying to fill a void in campus entertainment created when many states, including New Jersey, raised their drinking age, a tea company prepared to kick off a national campaign to introduce students to tea breaks and tea dances.

"We think it'll catch on," said Catherine Kiel, a spokeswoman for a tea company that co-sponsored a three-hour tea party at Princeton University last night.

"The teas are popular here and we are interested in promoting non-alcoholic beverages," said Pat Naylor, coordinator of the student center where the tea break will be held, starting at 9 p.m. It has been billed as "not just an ordinary tea party."

The 17-member Princeton University Jazz Ensemble will perform "where the tea is flowing and the horns are blowing," published ads said.

During the tea break, students will get free tea, mugs, sample tea bags and brochures explaining the history of tea.

Last year, a group of coffee companies sponsored a coffee-drinking promotional event and last fall, a non-alcoholic beer was the featured drink, Ms. Naylor said.

Princeton University's pub used to be the center of weekday social activities, but students had to look elsewhere for entertainment when New Jersey raised the drinking age to 21 on Jan. 1, 1983.

The student center cafe is open every day from 5 p.m. to midnight and serves coffee, tea, juices, pastry, fruit and yogurt.

During the 1970s, when the state's drinking age was 18, most college students could drink legally. In 1980, it was raised from 18 to 19.

The tea company, R. Twining & Co. Ltd., which markets 21 blends in 90 countries, hopes to sign up another college to host a tea dance, said Ms. Kiel.

"With the recent rise in drinking ages, universities such as Princeton are looking at student activities where liquor is not the central focus," said Samuel H.G. Twining, a director of the firm based in Andover, England.

ON YOUR FEET

TOENAIL CONDITIONS

Painful ingrown toenails are the most common nail complaint. Any nail can be affected, however it most often occurs on the big toe. Improper cutting, short or narrow shoes, direct trauma or a curved nail may cause the edge to cut into the skin. If the skin is broken, bacteria can enter and a painful infected ingrown nail may result. Cutting a "V" in the nail or digging at the side will not cure the problem. Prompt professional treatment by removing the offending portion of nail will insure complete recovery.

Many skin conditions may affect the nails and fungus is no exception. Fungus toenails may lift away from the nail bed or become white and very thickened, making them almost impossible to cut. Large thick nails may also be the result of injury — stubbing the toes or dropping an object on them.

Prompt diagnosis and meticulous care by a professional can keep these nails thin and painless so that your comfort may be assured.

Military malpractice

It's inconceivable that a Navy surgeon would be convicted in connection with the deaths of three patients who underwent heart surgery at Bethesda Naval Hospital in Washington.

Here's a well-known medical center where American presidents, including Ronald Reagan, have been treated. And here's a physician who arrived at Bethesda three years ago with less than glowing credentials. Had anyone inquired, they would have learned, for example, that this man — who is sightless in one eye — previously had been stripped of his privileges at Monmouth Medical Center in Long Branch. He later was dismissed from a private surgical practice in Pittsburgh.

Nonetheless, Commander Donal M. Billig, former chief of heart surgery at Bethesda, has been convicted on two counts of involuntary manslaughter and one count of negligent homicide. He was sentenced to four years in prison, though he could be out on parole after serving 16 months. He will be dismissed from the military after all appeals are exhausted.

What is so disturbing about this case — even beyond the surgeon's gross incompetence — is the apparent inability of both the Navy and the medical profession to prevent manslaughter and homicide in the first place. Someone had to see there was a pattern of negligence and death in a relatively short period of time. Why was he permitted to continue?

Billig, who arrived at Bethesda in early 1983, was found guilty of manslaughter in the deaths of a retired lieutenant colonel and a gunners mate. In one case, he actually mistook a vein for an artery, was unable to repair a hole he had placed in the heart and, then, over-manipulated the heart. The patient died of massive bleeding after surgery. In the second case, he improperly sewed veins in a heart bypass operation, and the patient died five days after surgery. In the third case, involving a retired major, the government charged there were even more surgical errors. In all, there are more than $75 million in malpractice claims against the Navy.

The time has come when the medical profession no longer can protect its own. Rather, physicians must pursue aggressively any and all reports of possible dereliction and expose — not hide — the evidence. The doctors — to say nothing of potential victims — would benefit in the long run. Not only would the effort pay off in terms of restored public confidence and an improved image, but it should also begin to curb the number of malpractice suits that are driving up physicians' insurance costs — which, in turn, are passed on to patients.

Meanwhile, the military must reassess standards of medical care provided to the hundreds of thousands of Americans who have served their country. It's inexcusable that a man of Billig's caliber — and we use the word advisedly — would head the operating room at the nation's premier military hospital.

Somewhere, somehow, American values and priorities have gotten terribly distorted. Now there must be a radical change orchestrated from the top — in the military and private medical circles as well.

Get patching again

It's early, but the pothole season is already upon us.

The annual outbreak of highway pox is here. Warmish weather and rain, rain, rain have given the axle-breaking season an early start.

The state Department of Transportation had to close two of the four southbound lanes in the northern section of Route 1 and 9 during a recent rush hour so road crews could patch the car-swallowing craters there. But that's not the only stretch of road where potholes are sprouting like mushrooms after a rain. Take a ride — in any direction — and there they are: Cracks, crevices, cavities and caves big enough to lose a subcompact in.

Last year the DOT used 35,000 tons of asphalt to fill potholes. We'd say it's time to order up another 35,000 tons or so — and get patching again.

NASA: Illusion shattered

It's understandable that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration had achieved heroic stature for millions of Americans.

NASA was a success story in the grandest of U.S. traditions. It was about ingenuity, courage, blazing new frontiers and reaffirming this country's ability to do some things better than any other nation in the world.

Space exploration seemed such a noble gesture. Dedication, courageous professionals charting new courses for all of humankind. NASA didn't have the faceless image of most government agencies. Flesh-and-blood space pioneers risked their lives, became celebrities, and gave the nation a renewed sense of pride.

But much of that good feeling has disappeared with revelations about the Challenger explosion. NASA is being exposed as just another bureaucracy, more concerned about schedules and cost effectiveness than safety.

The real issues surrounding the explosion that destroyed Challenger and killed seven people aren't solid rocket boosters, O-ring sealers or the temperature at time of liftoff.

It's not even a matter of whether engineers from Morton Thiokol Inc., the booster manufacturer, warned NASA about the hazards of a launch at temperatures below 40 degrees.

It's about scheduling 15 flights for 1986 and refusing to reduce that number when weather delayed the first two launches of a year. It's about NASA's fear that delays might cause funding cuts or fewer commercial payloads. It's about cutting procedural corners, neglecting human concerns and exhibiting the same type of insensitivity that mars many other government agencies.

Maybe it's not reasonable to expect a society that botches the manufacture of automobiles, toasters and dishwashers to develop a fail-safe space program. Maybe the Challenger tragedy was a reminder of human fallibility.

But the presidential commission investigating the explosion is saying the decision to launch "may have been flawed," and people responsible for the decision have been removed from any phase of the investigation.

NASA's outside safety board — formed after the 1967 Apollo capsule fire killed three people — says it repeatedly warned officials about the potential hazards of rushing shuttle missions.

For many of us, the sorry news about NASA is another illusion shattered.

VIEWPOINT

It all started with Theodore Roosevelt

By SYLVIA MILLENKY

Twenty-five years ago, a charismatic 43-year-old John F. Kennedy faced the nation in the first live televised presidential press conference. With poise, grace and wit, he captured the attention and affection of the nation. A star was born. The press conference would never be the same.

The medium demands the president be well prepared with data on current concerns and able to think on his feet. If he flounders and flubs, he fails to project the image of a man in control. If he hasn't done his homework, the press can give him a rough time.

The conference is a public relations opportunity. Often, there is more showmanship than substance. A president can and does ignore difficult questions, and may, instead, make prepared speeches to garner support for his programs.

Reporters vie for his attention, for the chance to be viewed in action and to pose provocative questions. But the "boss" decides whom to recognize. We see the same journalists rising time and again, hear the same few voices addressing the chief executive. He knows well which reporters are more kindly disposed to his views, which will be tough adversaries.

He sidesteps touchy issues by avoiding confrontation with reporters likely to bring up those subjects. He may recognize only half a dozen among the hundred or more journalists present.

Theodore Roosevelt is considered the father of this 20th century phenomenon. He summoned reporters to the White House for occasional briefings to rally public support for his programs.

President Taft did not follow in Roosevelt's footsteps. He echoed John Adams' view of the press, that "mankind cannot now be governed without it, nor at present with it."

Woodrow Wilson reintroduced the custom in 1913, and all succeeding presidents have continued the tradition. He met with the press regularly with considerable exchange of views.

Harding, Coolidge and Hoover required reporters to submit questions in advance. That practice was equivalent to giving students prior knowledge of test questions with opportunity to prepare correct answers. One might assume these men were aware of their own limitations.

Franklin D. Roosevelt held frequent informal news sessions with reporters grouped around his desk. Much that passed between them was off the record. He insisted sensitive material was not to be relayed to editors, and there were to be no direct quotes. But in addition to the press conference format, Roosevelt, a gifted orator, communicated directly with the nation in his numerous "fireside chats" on radio.

These informal talks may have had greater impact than current press conferences.

By the end of World War II, the capital press corps had grown tremendously. Truman was subjected to an army of reporters in a more structured situation.

Television filming put an end to off-the-record comment. No longer could a president say, "I'm not sure. Let me check with the Secretary of..."

Eisenhower permitted television filming for later viewing but rejected live appearances. Press secretary James Haggerty feared his boss' occasional digressions from the topic under discussion would be an embarrassment. At one conference a reporter asked President Eisenhower if he could recall "just one major idea" initiated by Vice President Nixon. The president replied, "If you give me a week, I might think of one. I don't remember."

Franklin Roosevelt averaged the most press conferences; Nixon and Reagan the fewest.

Via television, public perception of a president is based more on personality and ability to project his desired image, than on his stand on critical issues. We appear to accept the medium as the message.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Hate groups lie about Holocaust

To The Editor:

This is an open letter to all Jewish former and active military servicemen and servicewomen in the Western Monmouth County area:

There is a consistent myth spread by local and national Communist, neo-Nazi and other subversive, un-American hate groups that European Jews did nothing to fight the Nazis in World War II.

To celebrate the liberation of the infamous Auschwitz death camp of the Nazi regime, Colonel Mieczyslaw Puzanski, Polish Army, now known as Maurice Shainberg, Manalapan, a liberator of Auschwitz, and author of "Breaking from the K.G.B.," will be honored by Post 359 (Greater Freehold Area), Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A. at their regular March meeting.

Shainberg's eye-witness account of the Auschwitz horrors will remind us and the world that the satanic Nazi's Holocaust victims included over six million innocent civilian Christians; for all practical purposes the complete elimination of the entire Black population of Europe; plus the almost six million Jews. Together they were tortured and slaughtered by the pagan Nazis in their many death camps in Europe.

At this time when we especially remember the inhuman torture and murder in the death camps of over three million infants and very young children let us all pray: "Never Again." The price of liberty and freedom here in the United States is still "eternal vigilance" against subversive un-American anti-Jewish and other hate-mongering organizations constantly trying to destroy the American Republic.

Couple can't live in home area

To the Editor:

My wife and I are young professionals now residing in Shrewsbury. We are Little Silver natives who grew up with the hope of someday living in our quaint little area. We are one of the few lucky young couples who could afford to buy a house and enjoy raising a family in what once, to us, was considered a prime location.

However, within the past five years, our small town has changed drastically. It seems that every undeveloped piece of land has been built upon. The local traffic has become unbearable...not to mention the utter chaos that occurs at rush hour! Commercial business has been built haphazardly with little regard for our town's uniformity and aesthetic value of our community. Our small-town feeling is gone and as a result, much to our regret, we too will soon be leaving.

Real estate has increased 20 percent in the past year and we can't afford to buy a bigger home for our growing needs. Taxes continue to escalate and I don't understand where it all goes. New Jersey car insurance premiums are the highest in the nation and with no relief in sight. We don't mind paying the extra money to live in our dream small town. However, we're finding that our "small town" ideals don't exist anymore.

We'll miss our dear friends and family, but, it is time to face the facts and move on to a less developed area. Our daughter, Katie, will miss the ocean and endless hours of playing in the sand like her mother and father once did. Of course our dog, Champ, will miss the freedom to run the shoreline and take an occasional swim. However, the pollution has overcome that enjoyment and freedom.

So goodbye "big town". We hope you find a better solution to attract and retain the young families you so desperately need. Thanks for our childhood memories. They will be dearly missed by all of us.

Your neighbors,

Rullman house should be saved

To The Editor:

The Rullman House at 58 West Front Street, Red Bank, may be demolished at any moment. A Borough of Red Bank permit will let Mr. Theodore Sourlis, new owner of the property, level it to the ground. He can include it in any plans he makes about the adjoining apartment complex which he also owns.

The Rullman House has been part of Red Bank's riverfront since the 1830's. The handsome Greek Revival style building is the only example of its type still standing in Red Bank. Its destruction would be a tragic loss to our community and to memories of the Rullmans.

The late Margaret E. Rullman was one of Red Bank's best-known and beloved citizens. She had a lifelong interest in historic preservation as well as a lifelong influence on everyone fortunate enough to know her. Many of Red Bank's leading citizens — including Bill Wilkoff and Brub Hance — were members, half a century ago, of the Barefoot Yacht Club and were a group of her son's friends who sailed from the Rullman property on the river.

The late Walter A. Rullman, Margaret's husband, was one of Monmouth county's best-known doctors. His offices were at the Rullman House. He helped found Riverview Hospital (now Medical Center) where he served as Chief Surgeon and Chief of Staff.

Over 25 years ago, in the summer of 1960, public outrage helped save the Rullman House from the ravages of "Urban Renewal". All of us who want to prevent demolition of the Rullman House now should raise such a hue and cry that the mayor and council and Mr. Sourlis will find a way to have it preserved on its present site. We must make our feelings and convictions known. We have to try! Letters to newspapers will help publicize this issue.

COMMENTARY

No real names Reagan finds daughter Patti's book 'interesting'

WASHINGTON — In his first public comment on his daughter Patti's "autobiographical novel," President Reagan told us a few days ago that it's "interesting fiction." He said it with an actor's barely detectable emphasis on the word "fiction."

There's no doubt whatever that the novel, "Home Front," is being enthusiastically portrayed as autobiographical by the publisher, Crown. The breathless tribute on the book's dust jacket says: "Patti Davis, the actress-daughter of Ronald and Nancy Reagan, has written a surprising, moving and candidly autobiographical novel about growing up in the public eye ..."

There's also no doubt that the novel bears a resemblance to the life of the 33-year-old Ms. Davis, who uses her mother's maiden name in her acting career.

The novel at least spares the First Family the use of real names. The heroinarrator is Beth Canfield, rebellious daughter of Robert, who is elected California governor and then president, and Harriet, described on the book jacket as "a strong-willed woman fiercely loyal to her husband's dream: the presidency."

Robert Canfield's background sounds familiar, too: Because of his "hardy good looks and persuasive voice," he is hired as spokesman/huckster for "National Motors." In time, "men in important positions saw that my father's homespun likability could sell a great deal more than the latest model station wagon," Patti — er, Beth tells the reader.

Generally, the novel isn't unkind to the fictional parents, though there are some unflattering descriptions of the Canfields' parent-child relationship.

Someone identified as a Reagan family friend was quoted in People magazine as saying: "Of course there's bound to be some hurt. Would you want to see all your warts in public, exposed by somebody in your family?"

But when we asked the president his opinion of the book, his response betrayed neither irritation nor bitterness: "Well, I will just say it very simply. I thought it was interesting fiction. And as to any effort of anyone to portray it as autobiographical, I will cite that line that appears at the bottom or at the end of every movie: 'Any relationship or resemblance to persons living or dead is purely coincidental.'"

The president's four children have always tended to go their own ways, but Patti, the older of his second marriage's two children, put the greatest distance between herself and her parents a decade ago. During her father's unsuccessful race for the presidency in 1976, Patti was living with a pop guitarist and avoided most press interviews.

But when she did speak out, it was often to express views that were poles apart from her father's. She demonstrated against the Vietnam War and nuclear energy, and supported the right of a woman to have an abortion, the recreational use of marijuana and cohabitation before marriage.

In her own autobiography, Nancy Reagan barely mentions her daughter or the estrangement. But when someone once asked the first lady about Patti's politics, she replied in exasperation: "Who would want a clone for a child?"

Patti hopes to star as Beth in a TV version of her book. Would a retired politician named Ronald Reagan play Robert Canfield? Years ago, Patti told a reporter, "I always had this fantasy that I could do a film with him someday."

BULGARIAN CONNECTION: Bulgaria, which was at least a temporary home for the conspirators who tried to assassinate the pope, also provided refuge for the terrorist leader responsible for the murder of Leon Klinghoffer. Abu Abbas, the so-called brains behind the botched hijacking of the Achille Lauro last year, was aboard the Egyptian airliner forced down at a Sicilian airfield by U.S. Navy interceptors. For reasons of their own, Italian officials let Abbas board a plane for Yugoslavia. Our intelligence sources say Abbas went from there to Bulgaria, where he stayed for a time before moving on to places unknown.

HART TAKES HEART: Even before he starts rattling the can seriously, Sen. Gary Hart is building up a substantial campaign chest in his bid for the Democratic presidential nomination. Predictably, the big money has come from New York, California and his home state of Colorado. But Hart is pleasantly surprised by the size of contributions from Florida, averaging more than $150, compared with an average of one-third of that from other states. Washington, D.C., also rates high per individual because of its free-spending lobbyists, but every campaigner gets that treatment.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The incredible spectacle of massed, unarmed Filipinos turning back tanks was heartwarming, to be sure. But we hope it doesn't inspire imitators in Moscow, Managua, Pretoria or other capitals where freedom is in short supply. For all his faults, Ferdinand Marcos was not a mass murderer. The hard-eyed leaders of other oppressive regimes have already demonstrated through the years that they have fewer compunctions than Marcos did. The lesson they learned from the Philippine phenomenon was probably just to keep the media out and turn the machine guns loose.

Cory Aquino's path to power was a widow's walk

BOSTON — In December, a soft-spoken woman named Corazon Aquino said to an American reporter, "What on earth do I know about being president?" Two months later, the same woman was president.

The weeks in between were remarkable ones that filled the pages of our political album with powerful images. A crowd of Filipinos forming a human barrier against tanks. A still life of an uneaten bowl of caviar left on the dining-room table by a fleeing ruler. A wide-angle shot of Americans expressing relief that for once we were on the side of the good guys. But most remarkable was the portrait, seen in time-lapse photographs, of the woman in the yellow dress becoming a leader.

In the weeks ahead, some may trace a line from her childhood to her presidency. A teacher in Philadelphia points to the good omens in her good grades. College friends in New York read prophecies into the yearbook captions. But the reality is that Cory Aquino's path to power was a widow's walk, not entirely unlike the one that other women have taken.

Until the death of her husband, Cory Aquino's highest political post had been that of courier to her husband's prison cell and hostess to his inner circle of allies. If she had aspired to office at all, it was to the office of first lady.

It was only when the man she had stood behind was murdered that she was forced into the spotlight. She inherited the family business.

This most reluctant candidate — "I am not a politician" — took on Ferdinand Marcos in order to carry on her husband's work. Inevitably, she made that work her own. At the beginning of the campaign she was a symbol of her husband's martyrdom. At the end she was a symbol of her own bravery. She began as Mrs. Benigno Aquino and ended as "Cory, Cor-yl."

I don't pretend to know whether Cory Aquino will be as successful in office as she was in the pursuit of it. If it is one leap from symbol to leader, it is another from leader to ruler. But I do not find myself as dubious of her chances as many others.

Cory Aquino was hardly installed in office and Ferdinand Marcos had hardly landed in Hawaii before the first doubters began. It was one thing to be popular, they said, quite another to be strong. The questions asked in Washington corridors and on television talk shows came in elaborate and familiar code words. Is she tough enough? Can she handle it? Can a former housewife rule 50-million people?

Home economics may not be the preferred background for a political education. But listening to these doubters I thought of a time, not that long ago, when a simple man named Lech Walesa became a leader of his people. When people wondered about his potential, did anyone say, "But he's just an electrician?"

More recently, when Indira Gandhi was killed, her son Rajiv, a candidate as apolitical, as inexperienced, as reluctant as Cory Aquino was catapulted into her place. How often did the correspondents ask Rajiv whether an airline pilot could be a prime minister? Is a pilot or an electrician better qualified for leadership than a homemaker and a mother of five?

Maybe I have seen too many women who have taken that widow's walk into a whole other life. Maybe I have seen something familiar in Cory Aquino's transition, the way hard-earned self-confidence can replace self-doubt.

At some point, in this short and intense initiation, Cory Aquino stopped comparing her qualifications to those of some mythical "president" and started comparing them to the competition. (What on earth did she know about being president? What did Marcos know?) At some point, she started to feel the strength that comes from building one small win into another and larger victory.

The Aquino government is in its infancy and the jostling for power has just begun. But I don't believe that Cory Aquino will end up as a figurehead in a yellow dress brought out for state occasions.

What are the odds against her success as president? In December, some of the oddsmakers bet that Cory Aquino wouldn't even live through the election. In January, they bet she'd lose handsily. In February, they bet that Marcos would successfully steal the election. Yet this "widow" steered her people on a safe course between defeat and civil war. This "housewife" beat Ferdinand Marcos. The odds are evening up.

Things may be looking up on the public school front

WASHINGTON — Over the past 20 or 30 years, many of the nation's public school systems have received sharp criticism from parents, special commissions and the press. Many of them have richly deserved it. The time has arrived to say a few words of praise. Things are looking up on the school front.

William Bennett, U.S. secretary of education, released some encouraging figures two weeks ago. Over the past three years, senior high school students in 35 states have improved their scores on standard tests of scholastic aptitude and performance. Thirty-nine states have improved their records on dropouts.

Much of the credit for this remarkable turnaround probably is owed to the National Commission on Excellence in Education. This capital city is famed for the unread reports of study commissions. Most such reports are ponderous affairs, tediously written, filled with indigestible statistics. The national commission's report of April 1983 was different. It was short, superbly written and stunning in its impact.

"Our nation is at risk," the commission said. "The educational foundations of our society are presently being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity that threatens our very future as a nation and a people."

The commission spelled out the dimensions of this risk. American students perform miserably in international competitions. About 13 percent of all 17-year-olds in the United States are functionally illiterate. Average test scores of scholastic achievement in 1982 were lower than scores in 1966. The number of exceptionally high scores was falling. The declines were especially disturbing in areas of science.

Having defined the problem, the commission made 32 recommendations toward solving it. Local school boards were urged to consider a longer school day and a longer school year. We should get back to basics and eliminate snap courses on the educational smorgasbord. Students should be assigned more homework. Beginning teachers should be required to meet high educational standards. Teacher salaries should be increased, in order to attract talented people, but salaries should be geared to "an effective evaluation system."

The commission's report had a galvanic effect. Governors and legislatures went to work. Some of the good results are now evident.

Bennett reported that 31 states now have requirements that new teachers take certification examinations. Thirty-one states "have developed or are initiating performance-based pay and other benefits for teachers." Between 1981 and 1985, average teacher salaries increased from $17,360 to $23,582. Per pupil expenditures have risen everywhere. In all but five states (Colorado, Hawaii, Minnesota, New York and Tennessee) the pupil-teacher ratio has declined.

The figures are encouraging, but on close examination they provide little cause for jubilation. During the 1984-85 school year, 11 states reported average teacher salaries of less than $20,000. Nine states were spending less than $2,500 per pupil. In Louisiana, 43.3 percent of ninth-graders never make it to graduation. The dropout rate is 37.9 percent in Alabama, 37.8 percent in New York and Florida.

Bennett's data suggest that money alone will not cure our educational problems. The District of Columbia ranks second (behind Alaska) in teacher salaries; it ranks third in per pupil expenditures; it averages only 15.2 pupils per teacher. Yet the district's 44.8 percent dropout rate is the worst in the nation. Among the states administering the Scholastic Aptitude Test, the district's public school scores are the poorest.

It is imperative, or so it seems to me, that we do not let the steam leak out of the movement toward educational reform. Few of the states have adopted the commission's recommendation for a longer school day and a longer school year. Academic requirements for high school graduation have been tightened, but few states still insist on serious study of a foreign language. Much remains to be done, but Bennett's data show that much is being done. For this modest good news, a round of applause.

United States loses control of its borders, immigration

The Los Angeles public schools are so overcrowded as a result of legal and illegal immigration that the school board is unhappily switching to a year-round schedule, with children assigned to attend class at staggered times.

El Paso (Texas) County is protesting to the federal government about $7.5 million in unreimbursed costs for hospital care it provided for illegal aliens.

Every year, about 18,000 babies are born in Los Angeles County hospitals to mothers who are illegally in this country. Each infant is automatically a U.S. citizen and eligible for welfare benefits.

The swelling flood of illegal immigrants — fed by growing economic problems in Mexico and fighting in Central America — ought to hurry Congress into finishing work on the long-stalled immigration bill. Don't bet on it.

Like most of us, many members of Congress have trouble sorting out personal baggage full of sentiment, myths, idealism, historical half-truths, economic statistics and wishful thinking. All of us cherish the country that legal immigrants built, and we're reluctant to bolt the golden door, even to illegal entrants. It's understandable that Congress would hold hearings, argue and accomplish nothing.

But inaction is only going to make immigration problems worse. The number of illegal aliens in this country is estimated at 8.5 million to 11 million and is probably growing by at least 500,000 a year.

The United States is rapidly losing control of its borders — and its ability to define who is and who isn't entitled to the benefits of citizenship. Ethnicity has become such an important part of the political process that it interferes with legislating sensible immigration policy. And the burden on taxpayers is growing measurably.

Studies suggest that young undocumented workers don't add to the nation's welfare costs and do pay Social Security and income taxes. But an increasing number of illegal aliens don't hold jobs and are demanding social services — especially school and health care — often with the help of civil rights groups. The Supreme Court has ruled that school districts must provide free public education for illegal aliens.

Illegal immigration costs American taxpayers about $25 billion a year, according to one estimate. The financial burden falls unevenly on states and cities where the biggest concentrations of undocumented people live.

Undocumented workers do take jobs American citizens can and would do, insists Colorado Gov. Richard D. Lamm in his new book, "The Immigration Time Bomb," written with Gary Imhoff.

In every occupation where illegal aliens are found, a majority of the jobs are held by U.S. citizens, Lamm says. The influx of illegals has made unemployment worse, raised welfare spending and lowered the country's standard of living.

It is obvious that the United States cannot provide shelter for all the millions of people who would like to live here. We cannot ease the economic problems of Mexico or other Third World countries by taking in their jobless and desperate. We can't solve our unemployment problems, reduce the number of our poor or cut our welfare cases in the face of accelerating illegal immigration.

The Senate last September passed an immigration-control bill for the third time in four years. Among other provisions, it would penalize employers for hiring illegal aliens, in hopes of drying up the jobs that lure so many undocumented workers. It would add to the enforcement funds of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. And it would provide amnesty, social services and legal status to millions of illegal aliens in this country before Jan. 1, 1990.

The House is expected to do more work on its version of an immigration bill this month. The longer it stalls, the more difficult it will be to work out an effective measure.

Dear Mr. Commissioner

Boca Raton, Fla.
March 5, 1986
To Mr. Peter Ueberroth, Commissioner of Baseball, New York, N.Y.

Carl T. Rowan

Dear Mr. Commissioner: There is a touch of tragedy in the fact that I read of your crackdown on illicit drug users and peddlers in baseball while in South Florida, trying to determine whether the U.S. has lost the war against drug abuse — or what steps might yet be taken to wipe out this curse. I applauded at the initial TV news announcement that you had suspended 11 drug-using players, some of them superstars ... and then I heard that the "suspensions" were not really suspensions.

I thought you were saying that there is absolutely no place in the Great American Pastime for cocaine junkies, or pushers of marijuana, heroin, morphine, PCP and other destructive controlled substances. I hoped you were saying to millions of youngsters, "Hit the drug trail and it will lead you to a lot of places, most of them prisons, hospitals, cemeteries, but it will never lead you to a World Series."

I realized, quickly and unhappily, that you really were saying: "Get caught pushing and using drugs, and I'm going to sock it to you. Instead of making a million bucks a year, I'll only let you have $900,000; and you'll have to undergo drug tests, then go out and tell kids what a bad boy you've been."

I know the pressures to sing to Keith Hernandez, Dale Berra, Dave Parker, Joaquin Andujar and others that old pre-drug-era lyric, "Just One More Chance." I know that you don't want to be lynched by the owners, coaches and fans of the teams that count on the likes of Lonnie Smith, Enos Cabell and Jeff Leonard. But I suggest that you ask yourself again whether your punishment of these "role models" is sufficient to free baseball (and football, basketball, television, the movies and Wall Street) of an affliction that makes the United States more bedeviled by illicit drug abuse than any country on earth.

I write you from South Florida, where baseball spring training is in full swing. Just prior to reading of your "crackdown" I read an editorial in the Boca Raton News saying that "one of five high school students (in Palm Beach County) tried cocaine before graduating by the end of 1985. By the end of this year 10 percent of the high school students will be regular users."

I ask you, Mr. Ueberroth, whether you think the "punishment" that you have meted out to these millionaire baseball superstars is sufficient to convince high school kids that drug abuse does not pay?

The history of drug abuse suggests that a terrible rate of recidivism exists, and that whether your "random drug tests" work or not, a lot of the players getting second and third chances are going to be devoured by "The Lady," cocaine, or by other mind-bending and destructive drugs.

The objective must not be the "fairness" of "second chances" for those already hopelessly hooked, but a ruthlessly unbending message to kids like those in high school here that when they say yes to cocaine or heroin, they have said no to baseball.

Would you think again about whether your punishments deter or encourage teenagers, gladiators, cheerleaders, school band members, to experiment with drugs that eventually will devour them?

Life imitates 'Dynasty' Battle for Johnson fortune straps son

By SAMUEL MAULL
Associated Press

NEW YORK — J. Seward Johnson Jr. said yesterday that the battle over his late father's $600 million fortune has cost him so much in legal fees that he has had to trim his lifestyle considerably.

"Don't misunderstand me," Johnson said. "We're still well off. But when you have to cut back your lifestyle by 50 percent, you feel it."

Johnson said he had to lay off 35 people who worked in his artists' studio in Hamilton. And he said he sold the family boat and made other economies because of the financial drain caused by legal fees.

Johnson spoke as he stretched his legs in a hallway of Manhattan Surrogate Court during a break in the bitter jury trial over the estate of his father, son of a founder of the Johnson & Johnson pharmaceutical empire.

The elder Johnson, who died of prostate cancer May 23, 1983, at age 87, left most of his money and property to his third wife, Barbara Piasecka Johnson, 49, a Polish emigre and former chambermaid in his household.

In his last will, signed April 14, 1983, he ignored his four daughters and two sons with the exception of his namesake, to whom he left $1 million and a house on Cape Cod. The son said this was one signal that the will was fraudulent.

The children are trying to break the will. They charge that Mrs.

Johnson was a gold digger and a money-hungry shrew who terrorized their father into leaving her his fortune.

Mrs. Johnson says her late husband made his children rich during his lifetime by establishing huge trusts for them in 1944. The trusts, if left intact, would now be worth $110 million.

"We immediately knew the will was a fraud for two reasons," Johnson said. "First, Harbor Branch wasn't in it. This was my father's love. It was like you had an only child that you loved and that child wasn't in the will."

Harbor Branch was the oceanographic research institute founded by the elder Johnson because of his love for the sea. He was a world-class sailor.

"And two, he left me a million dollars and the Massachusetts house and left the others (his siblings) nothing," Johnson went on. "My father never did something for one and not for the others. He always wanted to keep everything fair."

Johnson said the six children contested the will, at first, to protect Harbor Branch and their father's other charities.

One of Johnson's sisters, Diana Johnson Firestone, eased up beside him and kissed him on the ear in the corridor. Johnson said he and his siblings had never been especially close, "but this thing has brought us together."

He said none of the six children speak to their stepmother.

Johnson was asked what he thought an equitable trial result would be. "What could be fair and equitable about a fraud?" he asked. "I feel there's fraud. In his last years, in the vulnerability of age, my father was taken advantage of."

Johnson said the prenuptial agreements his father signed with his third wife showed the "perspective" the elder Johnson had on the relationship with Barbara Johnson. The agreements gave Mrs. Johnson as much as $10 million. "He was buying himself some fun," Johnson said.

Johnson also said that Mrs. Johnson moved her husband to Florida from New Jersey after he learned he had prostate cancer and mentioned that estate taxes were lower in Florida.

He said that when the contest over the will started, he did not feel the widow should get nothing, but now, "I don't see where she deserves anything."

He also said he feels Nina Zagat, the lawyer who helped Johnson draft many of his wills, "should be disbarred and she and Basia should be removed as executors of the will." Basia is Mrs. Johnson's nickname.

"I am enormously angry with her," Johnson said, "and she with me."

Mrs. Johnson refused to comment on Johnson's remarks. She said she wants to try the case in the courtroom, not in the news media. But she did ask, "Is it a shame in America for someone to be a maid and work hard?"

The question referred to repeated mentions of her former job as a maid in the Johnson home. But she denied that she is embarrassed to have been a maid.

Insurance

John Coughlin, administrator for Holmdel Township and another speaker at the meeting, said he doubts any "meaningful" changes will be made soon without extreme municipal pressure on state lawmakers.

Grubb said a survey conducted by the New Jersey League of Municipalities, to which about half the state's communities responded, found that 47 percent of those towns and cities were not covered for catastrophic damages. Further, said Grubb, many New Jersey counties are without excess liability insurance, although Monmouth County is not among them.

A catastrophic claim of more than $500,000 can have a "devastating impact" on municipal budgets and bond ratings, he said, but spiraling costs have kept many towns and cities out of the excess liability market.

Despite rapidly escalating costs, insurers sometimes insist on covering less. For example, carriers are refusing to insure communities against such new problems as asbestosis, pollution and sexual abuse.

Yet while insurance carriers blame municipalities for incurring huge liability settlements, the fact is that claims settled statewide don't approach nearly the amount in premiums most cities and towns pay for conventional insurance, Grubb said.

On average, insurance settlements for New Jersey municipalities don't exceed $1.5 million annually, Grubb said. But excess liability insurance for the average New Jersey municipality would cost about $42 million a year.

New Jersey towns and cities "have gotten a bad rap," said Grubb. Insurers claim municipalities are a bad risk because "they hire child abusers, they poison the water, their policemen beat up the people they arrest."

The truth is, he said, that the crisis is fueled by economic factors beyond the control of the insurance industry.

The real cause of the crisis is "a general sense of panic and fear" in the insurance industry. The panic, he said, was caused when international insurance investors pulled out of American markets last year upon realizing the value of their investments had badly eroded. The atmosphere Grubb described is "much like the stock market crash of 1929 — there's a lot of the same psychology at work here."

The momentum of this "panic" has sustained the insurance crisis that now makes it impossible for many municipalities to cover themselves against catastrophic loss.

There are, however, alternatives. Grubb advocates that municipalities join municipal insurance pools — "a mechanism to spread costs" that's based not "on fears of insurance underwriters" but on the actual claim experience of any New Jersey town or city.

In Bergen County, 39 communities have joined a joint insurance fund whereby costs are assessed on the basis of need and claim history, he said. By joining together, smaller communities can afford higher deductibles and better coverage by virtue of the strength of the pool.

This, however, may not be a "panacea" for Monmouth County. Last year, the lity reserve in the Bergen County pool was at about $11 million, said Grubb. This year, the fund has dwindled to about $850,000, he said.

Coughlin, Holmdel administrator, said that his township is one of seven which formed a Bayshore area joint risk pool. However, because no insurance carrier will write an excess liability policy to cover the towns, the insurance pool exists in name alone.

Like Grubb, Coughlin said he believes the insurance market will rebound at some point, but "I think we're going to have a lot of trouble getting any meaningful changes through."

Grubb heavily promoted a three-pronged state legislative package which calls for reform of the terms under which municipalities can be sued for damages; puts a cap on the amount of liability judgments; and allows municipalities to join an excess liability fund.

Roy Garrabrant, the county's insurance consultant, said that currently Monmouth County has excess liability coverage, but whether it can be maintained at the same level and at the same cost after May 1 will not be known till then.

The county, he said, is looking into several risk options, including insurance pools. Another option, joining the Bayshore insurance pool, thus providing the needed excess coverage, is under consideration, he said.

Narozanick, organizer of the meeting, said that nearly all of Monmouth County's 53 municipalities were represented by elected or appointed officials who attended.

Fire kills elderly couple

BERKELEY TOWNSHIP (AP) — A husband and wife, who were found dead in their home yesterday, were overcome by fumes from a fire that apparently put itself out, police said.

Dorothea W. Gashlin, 76, and her husband, 77-year-old William, were found in the kitchen-dining room area, said Patrolman John Berry of the Berkeley Township Police.

"It appears, at this time, that an auxiliary heater in the front bedroom caught fire and both parties were overcome by smoke and fumes," Berry said.

He said the fire started from a kerosene or electric heater in the bedroom late Sunday or early Monday. The blaze burnt through the floor and into a crawl space before "it put itself out somehow," Berry said.

Authorities were dispatched to the home in Berkeley Township's Bayville section at 10:26 a.m. after receiving a call from the Gashlins' son, who had not heard from his parents in several days, Berry said. He said the son's name or residence was not immediately available.

Authorities are investigating the fire, which appears to be accidental, he said. Autopsies will be performed on the victims this week.

Glass

He said he could not see anything but applesauce in the jar but had not emptied it to look for glass.

"It's of a consistency that makes it impossible to see any slivers that could be in it without dumping it out, and I don't want to ruin the sample," Elliot said.

Jodi Fregoni of Edison told police she noticed small pieces of glass in the applesauce when she was heating it for her 1-year-old daughter, Cindy.

Cook said inspectors are looking into 10 complaints, including a report from North Bergen in Hudson County about a quarter-inch "foreign object" in a jar of Gerber baby food.

Cook said the department would examine 85 samples of Gerber's vegetable beef dinner but added that the samples had not been received by mid-afternoon yesterday.

None of the reports of contaminated baby food was backed up by laboratory analyses, she said.

"We have found crystallized sugar in one, grains of uncooked rice in another and so far, we haven't found anything that resembles glass or any dangerous materials," said Cook.

Glass has been reported found in jars of Gerber baby food in 22 states. And a New York man said he found glass in a jar of Beech-Nut Stage Two oatmeal with applesauce and bananas.

Officials with Beech-Nut Nutrition Corp. in Fort Washington, Pa., said the company is trying to find out the lot number of the jar and that it planned to X-ray other jars from the lot that are held at the plant.

The FDA has urged consumers to empty the contents of baby food jars into dishes and inspect them before feeding their children.

U.S. disavows PLO attacks statement

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — The director of Arabian Peninsula affairs for the State Department has described some of the armed assaults against Israel by the Palestine Liberation Organization as "legitimate actions of resistance."

Gordon S. Brown, in a televised broadcast Monday to the Gulf region, said the acts were part of the 40-year Arab-Israeli conflict and different from assaults by Palestinians against innocent civilians in third countries.

Brown told the AP the questioners had tried thrice "to get me to define terrorism. The third time I stated it wrong. I am prepared to say I made a mistake and let it lie at that."

Michael Austrian, a State Department spokesman, said the remarks "did not represent U.S. government policy."

Brown was interviewed on Worldnet, a program sponsored by the U.S. Information Agency. In response yesterday to a reporter's inquiry, Brown called the incident "a tempest in a teapot."

"I was caught off-guard by a question that I mishandled," he told The Associated Press. "It was an effort to say that as long as there is a state of war, violence exists in the area."

Yossi Gal, a spokesman for the Israeli Embassy, said his government had complained about Brown's remarks to the State Department and asked for an explanation.

The PLO is sworn to the destruction of Israel as a Jewish state. Most countries, however, deal with Yasser Arafat's organization.

The United States has barred recognition of the PLO until it accepts Israel's right to exist and foreswears terrorism.

Brown was questioned for 40 minutes via satellite by two reporters from Dubai about falling world oil prices and the U.S. stance toward terrorism.

"We are agnostic as to the price of oil," he said. "Whatever the price there is, we will learn to live with it." On terrorism, he said framing a definition was difficult because there was "a considerable difference" between groups such as the one headed by Palestinian Abu Nidal and "freedom fighters" like the Contra rebels in Nicaragua and the insurgents in Angola led by Jonas Savimbi.

Brown said Nidal's group operates outside "battle zones," attacking civilians in third countries and hijacking commercial passenger planes and ships. The Contras and Savimbi rebels, he said, "are not conducting what we call acts of terrorism" and are fighting on Nicaraguan and Angolan soil.

Asked about Israeli bombings of Beirut, which Jerusalem has said were designed to wipe out Palestinian guerrilla bases in and near the Lebanese capital, Brown said "it's terrorism to the same degree that Katyusha rockets (fired on towns in northern Israel) are. There is a state of war"

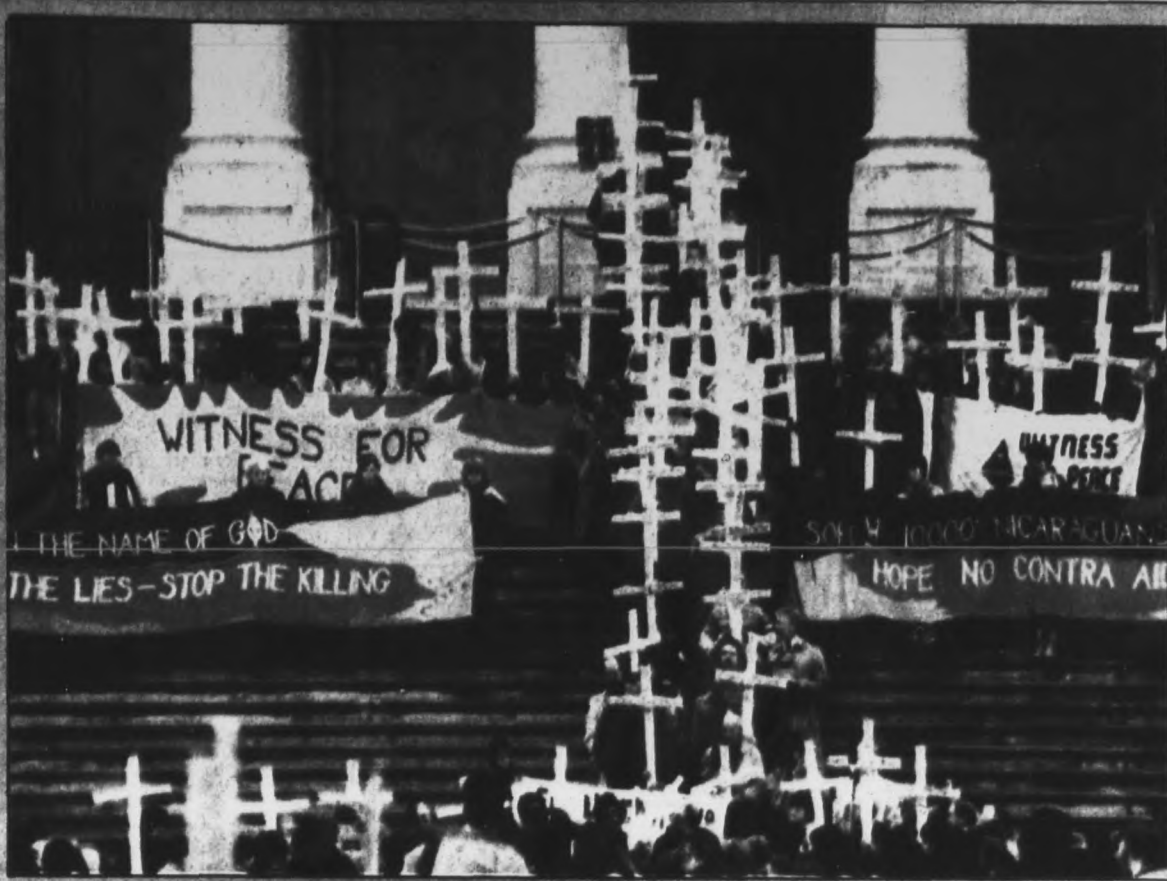

The State Department official said the attacks were "regrettable" and also "part and parcel of the continuing state of hostilities" between the Arabs and Israel.

Brown then went on to say, under questioning, "I don't want to get into a long discussion of the meaning of terrorism. Some PLO actions I would expect would fall within our definition of legitimate actions of resistance within occupied territories. Others clearly ... would not."

He cited as an example of the latter the attack by Palestinian gunmen on Israeli athletes at the 1972 Summer Olympic Games in Munich, West Germany. Eleven Israelis were killed. Brown said they were "innocent people in third countries."

"Our policy was as it has been stated on numerous occasions. We are not breaking new ground," said Austrian, the State Department spokesman.

The spokesman said the policy of not dealing with the PLO was based on "the cycle of violence which has unfortunately characterized the Middle East for so long and hinders efforts to achieve a peaceful settlement."

CROSS DEMONSTRATORS — A group of religious leaders from 12 denominations across the country form on the Capitol steps yesterday a human cross commemorating those who have died in Nicaraguan fighting. The clerics joined hundreds from the religious community in accusing the Reagan administration of what they said was preferring terrorism to the pursuit of peace.

Clerics join Contra protest

WASHINGTON — Hundreds of religious protesters, including nearly two-dozen bishops of major denominations, formed a human cross on the Capitol steps yesterday, memorializing Nicaraguans who died and accusing the Reagan administration of lies in support of terrorism and killing.

"In the name of God, stop the lies, stop the killing," the group said in a written plea read by Roman Catholic Bishop Thomas Gumbleton of Detroit.

The group's declaration, signed by about 200 church leaders and Jewish rabbis, formally declared opposition to President Reagan's plans to send $100 million in new aid to rebels fighting Nicaragua's Sandinista government.

Episcopal Bishop Paul Moore of New York said the group was "representing literally millions of people — Protestant, Catholic and Jewish people of good will throughout this country who have not yet been heard" on the subject.

The statement was not formally endorsed by the denominations' national bodies, but both Gumbleton and Moore said it was consistent with U.S. Catholic and Episcopal leaders' stands.

In the statement, the group accused the administration of ignoring worthy Sandinista peace initiatives — seeming to prefer "the financing of terrorism to the pursuit of peace" — and of covering up credible reports of systematic human rights atrocities by rebels backed by the U.S. government.

"Exaggeration, misinformation and outright falsehood form the heart of the Reagan administration's case against Nicaragua," the statement said. And Moore and other speakers said their own personal visits had convinced them the Sandinistas were a duly elected, popularly supported government.

As for the rebels, the group said flatly, "The Contras are not freedom fighters" as Reagan characterizes them.

"The government's distortion campaign is to prepare the American people for further U.S. military action in Nicaragua," they said. "We call upon the U.S. government to cease its promotion of fear and hatred and to cease its funding of the Contra war against Nicaragua."

After a news conference nearby, the protesters marched to the Capitol where about 100 of them formed a human cross on the east steps. They carried big white crosses with the names of Nicaraguans they said had been killed since last summer.

South African kids face 8 years for soda theft

By JAMES F. SMITH
Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Some of the 11 children were so small they could barely see over the railing from the prisoner's dock as they faced the court yesterday.

It was another routine appearance for a few of the thousands of black children charged with public violence in South Africa's 18-month-old anti-apartheid turmoil. This time, the youngest suspect was eight, two were 10, four more were 11 and one was 12. The others were 16, 18 and 20.

The charge was taking soft drinks lying on the ground after older youths looted a delivery truck. The maximum sentence is eight years.

"You drop a ton of sweets (candy) in the street. White children would also pick it up. It was like throwing ... ($5) bills on the street. Who wouldn't pick them up?" said lawyer Omar Peer in the corridor of the Johannesburg Regional Court after the appearance.

It was the third appearance for the children since their arrest on Dec. 4. The case was again postponed for another month, until April 4.

Peer complained, "There is no concern for the children. They are sitting between adults accused of murder and rape. What do you expect these children to grow up to be?"

Under South African law, children under 16 accused of crimes may not be identified, nor may their parents. But because their cases are "unrelated," they are heard in adult court rather than juvenile court.

South African authorities have said that young children were involved in breaking the law in township unrest, and that they law-breakers had to be dealt with under the provisions of existing laws.

The mother of the 8-year-old said her son wakes up at night sometimes, and "he screams, 'No, it's not me!'"

She says her son was released the day after his arrest and told her police had beaten the youths with rubber whips, had put rocks in their hands, and asked, "How far can you throw it?"

She added: "They gave them nothing to eat."

Of the 7,777 people arrested under state-of-emergency powers up to last month, 2,106 were children below 16, according to government figures. President P.W. Botha said yesterday the emergency will probably be lifted Friday, ending such detentions.

In 1985, according to official figures, 201 of the 763 people killed by police were under 16.

But during the emergency, the nation's security forces have often used other existing laws to arrest children and adults. Botha also said existing laws will be reviewed in case they should be strengthened to contain the unrest.

The Detainees' Parents Support Committee, a monitoring group, estimates that 25,000 people were arrested in 1985 alone for such charges, most often "public violence." No figures are available on how many of them are under 16.

The 11 children in court yesterday on public violence charges were from Alexandra, the rundown black ghetto set among northern Johannesburg's posh white suburbs.

In February, after months of relatively minor incidents like the soft drinks affair, Alexandra exploded in violence. At least 23 blacks were killed in four days, most of them shot by police.

A father said police arrested one child while he was drinking a soft drink from the truckload, and then forced the boy to go with them to the homes of others who had taken soft drinks.

The raid occurred at 2 a.m., the children were taken to nearby Wynberg police station and released that morning, the man said.

"They (the authorities) are going to produce another Northern Ireland — if they haven't already," said John Dugard, a human rights lawyer who heads the Center for Applied Legal Studies at the University of the Witwatersrand.

Audrey Coleman, a leader of the detainees' parents group, said the 11 Alexandra youths could be thankful they were free in their parents' custody. She said one 15-year-old who was denied bail ended up in a psychiatric hospital after five months in detention. Another 8-year-old in Middelburg, east of Johannesburg, was refused bail on a charge of "intimidation" until human rights groups raised a fuss, she said.

NO LOVE IN THE AIR — Veterinarian Terry Blasdel with Marsabit, left, and Samburu, the two white rhinoceroses owned by the Houston Zoo. The two rhinos have been unable to reproduce. Blasdel says, the horns of the dilemma for the male rhino, Samburu, are twofold: He needs competition to get him stimulated and the female "is bigger than he is and intimidates him."

HOUSTON — The Houston Zoo wants to spend $57,600 to find out why Samburu, a rare Southern white rhinoceros, has failed for 15 years to impregnate his mate, Marsabit.

The City Council was expected to decide yesterday whether to approve the study of the rhinos' mating habits. The zoo would apply for a $25,000 grant from the U.S. Institute of Museum Services and seek $32,600 in private donations.

The study, which could take up to two years to complete, also would investigate developing a method of artificial insemination and establishing a central stud farm in Houston for the beasts, said veterinarian Terry Blasdel, a reproductive physiologist and zoo research curator.

Samburu and Marsabit — one of 25 pair of white rhinos in captivity in the United States — were captured in 1966 in Africa and brought to the Houston Zoo five years later.

But Marsabit is 18 years old and her biological clock is winding down.

"White rhinos have lived until their 50s, but they are reproductive only until their mid 20s," Blasdel said.

"More than 50 percent of the white rhinos in the U.S. are between 10 and 20," she said. "We're dealing with an aging population. Time is running out."

Federal tax amnesty not favored

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tax amnesty, the latest pain-free deficit-cutting idea under consideration in Congress, would be viewed as a special break for cheats and probably would not be nearly as successful as it has been in some states, IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. said yesterday.

"Whatever concerns I have expressed (in the past) are still the same," Egger told a House Ways and Means subcommittee, adding that the Reagan administration's decision will originate in the Treasury Department, not at the Internal Revenue Service.

The Treasury Department is considering the possibility of granting amnesty because many members of Congress view it as one way to reduce the budget deficit without imposing new taxes. But in November 1984, the department flatly rejected amnesty.

Such an approach, the department said, "would further undermine taxpayer morale by sending a clear signal to the American public concerning non-compliance and tax fraud: 'Don't bother to pay now. We may forget you owe anything. Even if you have to pay tax, we won't charge interest.'"

"Amnesties can only reinforce the growing impression that the tax system is unfair and encourages taxpayer non-compliance," the department added.

Despite such concerns, several members of Congress are sponsoring bills that would require the government to forgo criminal and civil penalties against tax cheats who, during a six-month period, paid their past-due taxes. The money — variously estimated at between $6 billion and $20 billion a year — would be used to reduce the deficit.

Military may ban cigarette sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is considering a ban on the sale of cigarettes in military commissaries for health reasons, his chief spokesman said yesterday.

Spokesman Robert Sims said Weinberger had come under intense pressure from Congress "on both sides of this issue" and had not indicated when he would make a final decision. But another high-ranking official, who declined to be identified, said it was imminent.

Pentagon sources disclosed last week that two of Weinberger's top assistants had recommended a flat ban on commissary — or grocery store — sales of cigarettes rather than just an end to the price discount that members of the service enjoy.

The Senate approved an end to price discounts last year, but the move was blocked by several influential House members from tobacco states.

Dr. William Mayer, the assistant defense secretary for health affairs, and Chapman Cox, the assistant secretary for manpower issues, have been pressing the issue in view of studies showing that more than half of all military personnel smoke.

Sims, asked about the matter at a briefing, said Weinberger would soon approve the start of a health promotion effort within the Defense Department that would include an anti-smoking campaign.

"But on the narrow issue of whether (cigarettes) will be sold in commissaries or not, he hasn't made a decision," the spokesman added.

Scientists to study Arctic pollution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists from five nations are heading north to study air pollution over the North Pole, a haze discovered a few years ago that some meteorologists think could affect climate worldwide.

Smoke, haze and other pollutants from Europe, the Soviet Union, and probably North America, are swept north into the Arctic in winter, accumulating until a significant layer is visible in March and April, according to meteorologists.

A 1983 study found pollution to be unexpectedly thick, said Russell C. Schnell of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, also a participant in the new probe.

Those studies, using specially equipped aircraft, found the layer covering an area nearly as large as North America and extending as high as 18,000 feet.

According to computer models, the layer of haze in the Arctic begins to build up in late December, peaks in March and April and then dissipates.

During its existence, it can cause a warming of the air by absorbing radiation from the sun and by preventing reflected rays from Earth from escaping back into space, scientists believe.

Scientists are not sure what impact this warming might have, but early tests indicate the haze absorbs a substantial part of incoming solar energy at this time of year.

Nurse locked in ship's cabin

KNIGHT-RIDDER NEWS SERVICE

MIAMI — A New Jersey nurse who complained about a doctor's treatment of sick patients aboard a cruise ship was locked in her cabin and held under guard by crew members Saturday, sparking a protest from angry passengers who demanded proof that she was safe.

Passengers attending a final night cabaret show aboard the Paquet French Cruises ship Rhapsody Saturday night said they witnessed an unscheduled performance when Gail Hutter, 22, of Cherry Hill, a registered nurse from the University of Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia, escaped from her cabin and began screaming in the passageway that the ship's crew was holding her hostage.

"The captain and five security officers are pinning this girl against the banister of the staircase," said Bill Pressman, a passenger from New York who was in the lounge when the struggle began. "The captain has got her by her clothing, screaming, 'You'll do as I say.' She screamed something out about (the ship's doctor) giving false injections to passengers."

At least 30 outraged passengers who saw the struggle gathered in a ship's lounge and selected Sanford Cohen, a Miami physician, to intercede with the captain to make sure Hutter was safe.

After three days and nights in her cabin and at least 10 hours under guard by two crewmen, Hutter was released when the ship docked at the port Sunday morning. "I was afraid I wasn't going to be able to get off the ship," she said as she waited at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport for a plane to take her home.

Gunnar Deike, inventory control supervisor for Paquet at Port Everglades, said the captain, whose name he would not provide, declined to comment on the affair. Deike declined to contact any other Paquet officials. No other company officials were available for comment Sunday.

Cuts would hurt Star Wars: official

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cutting the "Star Wars" budget will have "a major, major impact on" President Reagan's program to develop a high-tech anti-missile defense against Soviet nuclear weapons, a Pentagon official told Congress yesterday.

Air Force Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, head of the program known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, testified as the administration launched efforts to protect the program it has designated one of its highest defense priorities.

Budget cuts ordered by Congress last year "have had a harmful effect" on SDI, Abrahamson told the House

Armed Services research and development subcommittee.

Asked what another cut of $1 billion this year would mean, he answered, "That would have a major, major impact with our ability to go forward."

He promised to supply details later about what parts of the wide-ranging research effort would be affected.

The administration wants $4.8 billion for the program in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, an increase of slightly more than $2 billion from the current amount. Last year, Reagan asked for $3.8 billion for the current year, but Congress reduced it to $2.75 billion.

Shultz:

U.S. should support Contras

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz told a House panel yesterday the United States has a moral duty to supply aid to Nicaraguan rebels trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

In an appearance before a House Appropriations subcommittee, Shultz painted the situation in Central America in stark and simple terms, calling the Contras "the good guys," and the Sandinistas "the bad guys" and "a very undesirable cancer in the area."

He said the administration believes it has a moral imperative to "support those people ... willing to fight for freedom and independence."

Although the administration's request for $100 million in aid to the Contras is its immediate priority, Shultz' appearance before the subcommittee was mostly to lobby for the administration's overall foreign aid budget.

The panel chairman, Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., told Shultz that Congress will not approve President Reagan's request for a $15.5 billion foreign aid budget and directed him "back to the drawing board."

Obey said the proposal for fiscal 1987 is 16.2 percent above actual foreign aid spending for fiscal 1986.

The proposed military aid package to the Contras is already intensely controversial and Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia yesterday named a group of 11 senators, headed by Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., to help form a Democratic policy on the issue.

In the House, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. called on the administration to reopen negotiations aimed at producing a peaceful

MORAL DUTY — In House testimony, Secretary of State George Shultz claimed yesterday the United States has a moral obligation to support the Contra rebels fighting to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. President Reagan has requested $100 million in military aid to help those whom Shultz described as the good guys, seeking to oust the bad.

solution to the problems rather than rely on "military firepower."

In response to questions from the appropriations subcommittee, Shultz acknowledged that the administration has had problems delivering to the Contras $27 million in so-called non-lethal logistical aid already approved by Congress.

He said all of the money now has been committed and that initial problems in sending the assistance through such countries as Costa Rica and Honduras have been resolved.

However, Shultz acknowledged that only $10 million of the assistance actually has been delivered so far.

Obey asked how the administration can justify asking for $100 million in direct military aid when it has had difficulty delivering a far smaller amount of non-lethal assistance.

Shultz said there should be little future difficulty in providing the aid. He blamed past problems on the fact that Congress insisted the past assistance be provided openly, rather than secretly.

Obey said he has serious doubts as to whether the administration's aid program for the Contras will achieve its goal of destabilizing the Sandinista government.

Instead, he said the result is likely to put the United States on "the slippery slope" of direct military involvement.

"It will be enough to keep a bloody civil war going, but will it be enough to produce change?" Obey asked. "The question is not whether the bad people are doing bad things but whether your policies will do something about it."

Unions must account for fee use

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court yesterday required strict accounting of contributions non-union public employees must make to unions under so-called agency shop contracts.

The justices unanimously ruled that a Chicago teachers union and city officials violated the rights of non-members in the way they handled the funds they were required to contribute, which amounted to 95 percent of the monthly dues paid by union members.

In another ruling, the court voted, 5-4, to limit lawsuits by prison inmates injured by guards during disturbances.

The court threw out a suit by an injured Oregon state prison inmate who claimed he was a peacemaker. The court said he was not the victim of "cruel and unusual punishment" when shot by a guard.

In the Chicago teachers case, the justices said unions must explain in advance where the contributions of non-members are to be spent and must assure there is a prompt, impartial process for settling disputes over the amount of payroll deductions.

Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the court, said the procedure in Chicago was "inadequate because it failed to minimize the risk that non-union employees' contributions might be used for impermissible purposes, because it failed to provide adequate justification for the advance reduction of dues and because it failed to offer a reasonably prompt decision by an impartial decision maker."

He said it is not enough that paycheck deductions for non-union members be based on a good-faith estimate of how much money is used for collective bargaining and how much for ideological or political lobbying activities.

Tax reform waits on budget deal

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Seeking to build pressure for an early budget compromise, 50 senators yesterday signed a blunt letter to President Reagan, saying tax overhaul legislation should be set aside "until a firm, definite budget agreement has been reached between Congress and the White House."

The latest evidence of flagging interest in the tax bill — which the president has called his top domestic legislative priority — came a day before the Senate Budget Committee was scheduled to begin drafting a budget for fiscal 1987, which begins Oct. 1.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., the Budget Committee chairman, said that meeting a $144 billion deficit target required by a new balanced budget law will require $12 billion to $20 billion in new revenues as well as domestic spending cuts and less military spending than the administration is requesting.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., who initiated the letter to Reagan, denied that the effort was aimed at either derailing the tax overhaul effort or putting senators on record as favoring a tax increase to shrink the budget deficit. Instead, he said, the letter reflected the Senate's primary concern this year.

"The budget, indeed, is the most important thing that we can do for the American economy, the most important thing that we can do for all American people," Boschwitz said.

Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., another signer, said, "These 50 senators and many other senators believe the most important challenge facing this country to be budget deficits and reaching the Gramm-Rudman budget deficit-reduction goal in a fair and a rational fashion."

Boschwitz said that 30 to 35 other senators who did not sign the letter nonetheless support its message.

"Mr. President, we feel that you must join with the Senate and House leadership to develop a consensus on the fiscal year 1987 budget resolution," it said.

Principal's poison plot laid on 3 girl students

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Three junior high school girls who had been called to the assistant principal's office on a disciplinary matter tried to poison him by lacing his coffee with a fatal dose of iodine, authorities said.

Battle Creek Junior High School Assistant Principal Bradley Manor said yesterday he drank the coffee, but spat it out when he felt "a burning sensation."

A petition filed against the 14-year-old girls accused them of second-degree assault and adultery — both delinquent acts comparable to adult felony offenses — in the Friday incident.

The poisoning "wasn't a prank," said Capt. Larry Winger, head of the police juvenile unit.

"They had talked earlier in the day about poisoning the assistant principal. It was a premeditated thing," Winger said. "One of the girls was quoted as saying, 'I like the idea of killing.' She said that as they were planning it earlier in the day."

Two of the three girls admitted the assault charge when they appeared Monday before Juvenile Court Referee Donna Trethewey, said David Norrgard, another court referee. He said the adultery charge against the two was dismissed at that time.

The third girl denied both charges and was being held in the juvenile detention center pending trial, which will be within 30 days, Norrgard said. The other two were being held at a temporary shelter, he said.

The three had been called to Manor's office to discuss a disciplinary matter. Manor left his office at one point, leaving behind his coffee cup.

One of the girls had brought the iodine from home and was using it to treat an infection from a pierced ear, Winger said.

"They had one of them act as a lookout while they poured it in," Winger said. "One of the other kids threw the bottle out of the window. When he came back and took a sip of coffee, he immediately spat it out and then called us."

Authorities called St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center and were told the amount of iodine that was used could have been fatal. "An ounce to two ounces, to our understanding, can be fatal," Winger said.

"There was a burning sensation," said Manor, 47. "I swallowed so little that I did not become ill. But I did go to the doctor, did have a blood-test. I'm fine, as far as I know."

Manor, who has been with the St. Paul school district for 20 years but is in his first year at Battle Creek, declined to comment further until a full report has been made to the school district.

The girls have been suspended, said Principal Ben Zachary. Any action on expulsion would have to come from the school district's administration, he said.

Panel claims evidence of Marcos corruption

By MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — The government of Corazon Aquino said yesterday it has new evidence that ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos and his family and friends may have plundered up to $10 billion of the nation's wealth.

Former Sen. Jovito Salonga told a news conference documents found at the presidential palace after Marcos hurriedly abandoned it Feb. 25 link Marcos to purported illegal purchases of property in United States.

Salonga is chairman of a five-member commission Mrs. Aquino created last week to recover "all ill-gotten wealth" that the Marcos family and its associates allegedly accumulated and secreted under dummy names during Marcos' 20-year rule.

Asked how much money was involved, Salonga replied, "maybe $5 billion to $10 billion." He did not elaborate.

The estimate was the largest yet. The 1985 national budget of the financially strapped Philippines was $3.3 billion.

The nation's foreign debt is $26 billion and, according to the Marcos government, the average per capita income of the 55.5 million Filipinos last year was $136.

Rep Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., told a news conference at Manila airport yesterday he believes the U.S. government "ought to be doing everything we can to facilitate the recovery of these assets" because they were "stolen and swindled from the pocket of the Filipino people."

Lawyers for the new government obtained a court injunction in New York on Sunday barring sale of five New York properties allegedly owned or controlled by Marcos.

Man saw Palme's killer flee

By KENNETH JAUTZ

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Authorities said yesterday that a cab driver saw Olof Palme's assassin leap into a car and speed away with at least one accomplice seconds before police arrived at the scene of the murder.

They offered a reward of $70,000 in hopes of tempting an accomplice to betray the man who shot the 59-year-old prime minister in the back Friday night on a well-lit street in downtown Stockholm.

"There was at least one person in the (getaway) car," Stockholm Police Chief Sune Sandstrom told The Associated Press. He said police arrived seconds after the assassin's car raced away on the snow-covered street.

A witness to the shooting said earlier that he chased Palme's killer on foot, but lost him.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer told a news conference about the taxi driver's report. He said the cabbie noted only part of the license number, and police would not describe the vehicle.

"I hope there are people sheltering or who have sheltered this man who are willing to turn him in," Holmer said in announcing the reward.

The commissioner rejected growing public criticism of the way police have handled the investigation.

Critics say Stockholm authorities were too slow in sealing off the murder site and escape routes, and in deploying police patrols. They also said police did not provide enough protection for the prime minister, but Palme often dismissed his bodyguards and had done so earlier Friday.

Palme and his wife, Lisbet, were walking home from a movie premiere when the assassin attacked.

"We did (all that) one could possibly expect of us," Holmer said.

Sandstrom said, "We have some ideas we are working on," but would not elaborate.

Holmer told the conference investigators had received 4,000 tips about the case and questioned 600 people.

Libya calls for attacks on U.S.

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — The legislature of Col. Moammar Khadafy's Libya has called for formation of suicide squads to attack U.S. and Israeli interests and has threatened those countries' embassies, the official JANA news agency said yesterday.

JANA said the legislature, called the General People's Congress, approved the resolutions Monday night as it ended a seven-day annual session.

The agency said the congress also urged Arabs to impose an economic boycott against the United States to retaliate for the U.S. cutoff of commercial ties with Libya.

The General People's Congress follows the wishes of Khadafy, who has no official title but has ruled Libya since a 1969 coup.

In a related development, the 50-member Organization of African Unity yesterday condemned what it called "provocations, threats and acts of intimidation" by the United States against Libya.

The resolution, approved by member countries' ministers at a meeting in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, was submitted by the Libyan delegation. It said that by staging naval exercises close to Libyan waters, freezing Libyan assets in U.S. banks and other measures "of an economic and commercial nature," the United States had threatened the "sovereignty and security of an OAU and U.N. member state ... (and) the peace and security of the region and the world."

Assassination common in Mideast

JERUSALEM (AP) — Assassination has become a common tactic during more than half a century of turmoil in the Middle East and many of the targets have been peace-makers, from kings to village headmen.

The latest victim was Zafer al-Masri, newly appointed mayor of Nablus on the Israeli-occupied West Bank, who was shot dead Sunday while walking to the city hall.

Al-Masri's murder was a blow to the plans of Prime Minister Shimon Peres to give West Bank Palestinians more autonomy and encourage moderate local leadership that could negotiate peace in association with Jordan.

Two radical Syrian-backed Palestinian groups claimed responsibility for the killing, which prompted at least three other Palestinians to withdraw as candidates for mayor of other West Bank cities now run by Israeli army officers.

Israeli analysts said the murder of the pro-Jordanian mayor also was a message to King Hussein, following his break with the Palestine Liberation Organization, that he cannot negotiate on his own with Israel.

Hussein worked with Yasser Arafat for a year on a joint approach to peace negotiations with Israel, but accused the PLO of bad faith on Feb. 19 and ended the relationship.

The Jerusalem Post said al-Masri was the 24th Palestinian killed by other Arabs in the West Bank and Gaza Strip since Israel captured the territories in the 1967 Middle East war.

Group calls for end to apartheid

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International launched a campaign today for an end to torture, imprisonment on racial and political grounds, and other alleged abuses in South Africa.

In an open letter to President P.W. Botha, the London-based human rights organization called on South Africa to investigate killings of government critics, curb police powers of arbitrary arrest and detention without trial, and immediately abolish the "pass laws" restricting movement of blacks.

The letter, from Amnesty's Secretary-General Thomas Hammarberg, listed 10 steps he said "must be taken urgently"

by the white-minority government, including:

—To establish an independent judicial inquiry into allegations that government critics had disappeared, been attacked or killed by organs of the state, acting either independently or under orders.

—To investigate all police killings of civilians "to establish whether they constituted extrajudicial executions," and to bring police officers to trial for such killings.

—Immediate abolition of the pass laws, one of the most hated symbols of apartheid, or racial separation, in South Africa, and "all legislation which leads to imprisonment on the basis of race."

Mexico seeks aid to pay debts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico will seek about $6 billion from international financial organizations to meet foreign debt payments this year, the same amount it expects to lose in 1986 because of falling oil prices, the Treasury Department announced.

At the same time, the government will try to offset falling oil earnings by promoting non-petroleum exports and seeking reductions in interest rates on Mexico's $96.4 billion foreign debt, the department said in a statement Monday.

The announcements followed a trip to Washington last week by Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog to present Mexico's debt dilemma directly to creditors. No details of his meetings were released during the trip.

Silva Herzog and central bank chief Miguel Mancera also delivered personally the sentiments of President Miguel de la Madrid. The president said in a speech Feb. 21 that creditors must be prepared to share with Mexico the hardships of paying off the developing world's second biggest foreign debt.

The $6 billion in new money, to be sought chiefly from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, is needed to meet payments this year of $10 billion in interest and $2.5 billion on the debt principal.

Officials hope any package negotiated with those organizations will lead to "a new package" of payment terms with other creditors, the department said.

Soviets likely to shake up committee

MOSCOW (AP) — The 27th Communist Party Congress began to wind up its economic business yesterday in preparation for what is expected to be the biggest shakeup ever in the powerful Central Committee.

Kremlin spokesman Leonid M. Zamyatin said last night that the committee would be named this afternoon.

Composition of the committee's top bodies, the Politburo and the Secretariat, will be announced tomorrow during the closing speech, expected to be delivered by General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Zamyatin also said the new membership of the Central Committee would be made public tomorrow. Western diplomats and Soviet sources, who demanded anonymity, estimate as many as 50 percent of the 319 members elected at the last congress in 1981 could be changed.

As with most top party gatherings, the congress' final days have been preceded by rumors of changes in the ruling elite, headed by the 11 full members of the Politburo.

Such rumors cannot be confirmed reliably and often prove false, suggesting they may have been sparked by groups seeking to discredit or promote one or another member of the nation's top executive body.

China vows to lick postal offenses

PEKING (AP) — China has promised a crackdown on wrongdoing by postal workers, offenses which include theft of parcels, opening of private letters, stamp forgery and speculation, the official English-language China Daily said yesterday.

Last year 1,600 postal workers were found guilty of offenses, the paper quoted Zhu Gaofeng, deputy Minister of Posts and Telecommunications, as saying.

Zhu said the state also plans to increase investment in the postal transportation system, to ease delays. He said mail volume is expected to reach 41.2 billion pieces by 1990, a 38 percent increase over 1985.

Stamp sales increased 90 percent between 1980 and 1985, with 4.1 billion stamps sold last year, the report said.

It said China has 5 million stamp collectors among its 1.046 billion people.

Botha to lift state of emergency

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — President P.W. Botha announced that the 195-day-old state of emergency imposed to fight anti-apartheid turmoil in South Africa probably would be lifted on Friday.

His announcement yesterday was praised by the United States and was given a cautious welcome from some South African liberals. But it provoked expressions of concern from the largest anti-apartheid grouping, the United Democratic Front, that the emergency would be supplanted by repressive legislation.

Botha also made a new offer of statehood for Namibia, proosing an Aug. 1 target date for starting moves toward the territory's independence. He made it conditional on a withdrawal of Cuban troops from neighboring Angola.

Police reported two blacks were killed by security officers. They said police shotgun fire killed a man in the western Transvaal province and a youth died of injuries suffered when police quelled riot in Potchefstroom, southwest of Johannesburg.

They also reported that two whites were seriously hurt when their car was stoned in the south of the country.

Botha made his announcements to a packed parliamentary chamber in the country's legislative capital.

He claimed the level of violence had dropped sufficiently to enable him to issue a proclamation, "most probably this coming Friday," to lift the state of emergency.

But critics of the system of racial segregation that keeps power in the hands of South Africa's white minority said they could not readily explain the timing of Botha's announcement. They insisted that the level of violence had not dropped.

The emergency, imposed July 21 on 30 urban and rural districts and subsequently lifted from seven, gives police and troops sweeping powers to use guns against rioters and detain suspects indefinitely without trial. It has been widely condemned abroad, and its removal is a primary demand of anti-apartheid activists.

Violence spreads in West Bank town

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — Violence spread in the occupied territories yesterday, two days after an Israeli-appointed mayor was murdered, but Prime Minister Shimon Peres vowed to continue easing control over West Bank cities.

Israeli troops fired on a group of young Palestinians in the market place at Nablus, whose mayor was assassinated Sunday, wounding a 22-year-old in the leg, military sources reported. They said the Palestinians had refused to stop for questioning and some began throwing stones.

The marketplace is near the spot where Mayor Zafer al-Masri was shot Sunday while walking to the city hall in Nablus, 30 miles north of Jerusalem.

In occupied Gaza, Palestinian youths threw a smoke grenade at an Israeli army jeep patrolling the market of Gaza City, causing no casualties, and soldiers erected roadblocks, the military sources said.

Soldiers fired on demonstrators throwing stones Monday at a refugee camp near Nablus, killing a Palestinian man and wounding his son. At least 50,000 mourners, equivalent to more than half the city's population, filled the streets during al-Masri's funeral later in the day.

Peres said in a speech to army officers that he intended to pursue his policy of looser control over cities in the West Bank of the Jordan River, despite growing domestic criticism.

"We must not despair of our proposal for devolution of authority in Judea and Samaria," he said, using the biblical names for the area Israel captured from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war.

"We do not want to ruin the Arabs' lives. They are trying to describe us as conquerors. This is not true and we have no interest in being so," Peres said, according to a report given by the prime minister's aides.

Peres said Israel would continue an initiative for direct dialogue with Jordanians and Palestinians.

One objective of the new policy is to build a moderate Palestinian leadership in the West Bank that can negotiate peace with Israel in association with Jordan.

King Hussein worked with Yasser Arafat for a year on a joint approach to peace negotiations with Israel, but accused the Palestine Liberation Organization of bad faith and ended the relationship Feb. 19.

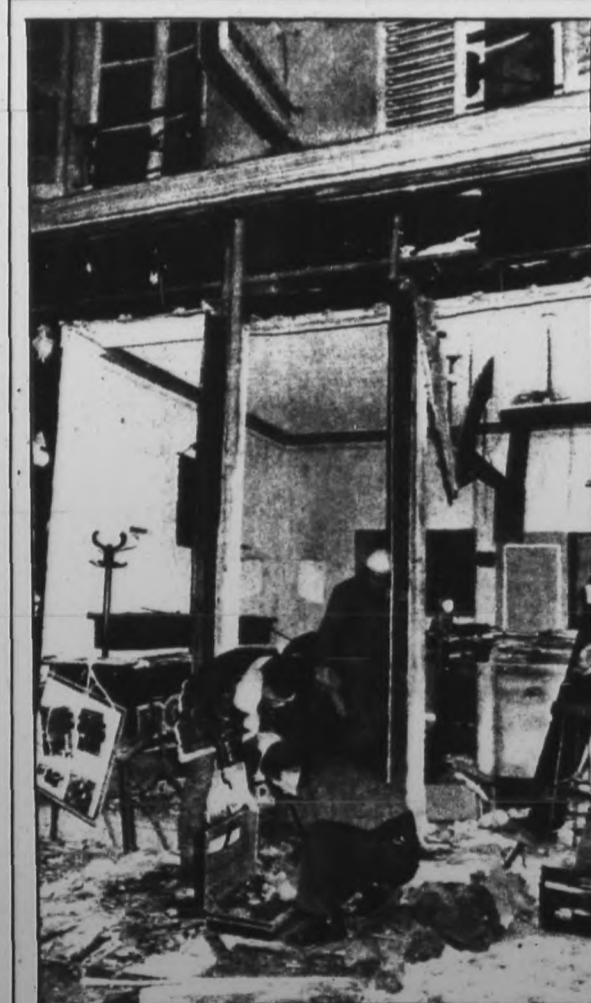

Al-Masri's murder, which had taken as a warning against cooperating with Israel, frightened three Palestinian moderates into withdrawing their candidacies for other West Bank mayoral posts.

Latest to withdraw was Jmil Tarifi, 38, a prominent attorney in the West Bank city just north of Jerusalem. Walid Hamed and Nadim Zaro withdrew earlier.

Tarifi accused Peres of trying to circumvent PLO influence among the 1.4 million Palestinians in the disputed territories by imposing self-rule. "Nobody can jump over the PLO," he said.

Israel radio said al-Masri's deputy, Hafez Tukan, had not yet decided whether to take over as mayor of Nablus.

The pro-Syrian Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Abu Nidal Palestinian splinter faction claimed responsibility for the killing, calling al-Masri a traitor.

Federal tax amnesty not favored

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tax amnesty, the latest pain-free deficit-cutting idea under consideration in Congress, would be viewed as a special break for cheats and probably would not be nearly as successful as it has been in some states, IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. said yesterday.

"Whatever concerns I have expressed (in the past) are still the same," Egger told a House Ways and Means subcommittee, adding that the Reagan administration's decision will originate in the Treasury Department, not at the Internal Revenue Service.

The Treasury Department is considering the possibility of granting amnesty because many members of Congress view it as one way to reduce the budget deficit without imposing new taxes. But in November 1984, the department flatly rejected amnesty.

Such an approach, the department said, "would further undermine taxpayer morale by sending a clear signal to the American public concerning non-compliance and tax fraud: 'Don't bother to pay now. We may forget you owe anything. Even if you have to pay tax, we won't charge interest.'"

"Amnesties can only reinforce the growing impression that the tax system is unfair and encourages taxpayer non-compliance," the department added.

Despite such concerns, several members of Congress are sponsoring bills that would require the government to forgo criminal and civil penalties against tax cheats who, during a six-month period, paid their past-due taxes. The money — variously estimated at between $6 billion and $20 billion a year — would be used to reduce the deficit.

Military may ban cigarette sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is considering a ban on the sale of cigarettes in military commissaries for health reasons, his chief spokesman said yesterday.

Spokesman Robert Sims said Weinberger had come under intense pressure from Congress "on both sides of this issue" and had not indicated when he would make a final decision. But another high-ranking official, who declined to be identified, said it was imminent.

Pentagon sources disclosed last week that two of Weinberger's top assistants had recommended a flat ban on commissary — or grocery store — sales of cigarettes rather than just an end to the price discount that members of the service enjoy.

The Senate approved an end to price discounts last year, but the move was blocked by several influential House members from tobacco states.

Dr. William Mayer, the assistant defense secretary for health affairs, and Chapman Cox, the assistant secretary for manpower issues, have been pressing the issue in view of studies showing that more than half of all military personnel smoke.

Sims, asked about the matter at a briefing, said Weinberger would soon approve the start of a health promotion effort within the Defense Department that would include an anti-smoking campaign.

"But on the narrow issue of whether (cigarettes) will be sold in commissaries or not, he hasn't made a decision," the spokesman added.

Scientists to study Arctic pollution

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists from five nations are heading north to study air pollution over the North Pole, a haze discovered a few years ago that some meteorologists think could affect climate worldwide.

Smoke, haze and other pollutants from Europe, the Soviet Union, and probably North America, are swept north into the Arctic in winter, accumulating until a significant layer is visible in March and April, according to meteorologists.

A 1983 study found pollution to be unexpectedly thick, said Russell C. Schnell of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, also a participant in the new probe.

Those studies, using specially equipped aircraft, found the layer covering an area nearly as large as North America and extending as high as 18,000 feet.

According to computer models, the layer of haze in the Arctic begins to build up in late December, peaks in March and April and then dissipates.

During its existence, it can cause a warming of the air by absorbing radiation from the sun and by preventing reflected rays from Earth from escaping back into space, scientists believe.

Scientists are not sure what impact this warming might have, but early tests indicate the haze absorbs a substantial part of incoming solar energy at this time of year.

Nurse locked in ship's cabin

KNIGHT-RIDDER NEWS SERVICE

MIAMI — A New Jersey nurse who complained about a doctor's treatment of sick patients aboard a cruise ship was locked in her cabin and held under guard by crew members Saturday, sparking a protest from angry passengers who demanded proof that she was safe.

Passengers attending a final night cabaret show aboard the Paquet French Cruises ship Rhapsody Saturday night said they witnessed an unscheduled performance when Gail Hutter, 22, of Cherry Hill, a registered nurse from the University of Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia, escaped from her cabin and began screaming in the passageway that the ship's crew was holding her hostage.

"The captain and five security officers are pinning this girl against the banister of the staircase," said Bill Pressman, a passenger from New York who was in the lounge when the struggle began. "The captain has got her by her clothing, screaming, 'You'll do as I say.' She screamed something out about (the ship's doctor) giving false injections to passengers."

At least 30 outraged passengers who saw the struggle gathered in a ship's lounge and selected Sanford Cohen, a Miami physician, to intercede with the captain to make sure Hutter was safe.

After three days and nights in her cabin and at least 10 hours under guard by two crewmen, Hutter was released when the ship docked at the port Sunday morning. "I was afraid I wasn't going to be able to get off the ship," she said as she waited at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport for a plane to take her home.

Gunnar Deike, inventory control supervisor for Paquet at Port Everglades, said the captain, whose name he would not provide, declined to comment on the affair. Deike declined to contact any other Paquet officials. No other company officials were available for comment Sunday.

Cuts would hurt Star Wars: official

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cutting the "Star Wars" budget will have "a major, major impact on" President Reagan's program to develop a high-tech anti-missile defense against Soviet nuclear weapons, a Pentagon official told Congress yesterday.

Air Force Lt. Gen. James Abrahamson, head of the program known formally as the Strategic Defense Initiative, testified as the administration launched efforts to protect the program it has designated one of its highest defense priorities.

Budget cuts ordered by Congress last year "have had a harmful effect" on SDI, Abrahamson told the House

Armed Services research and development subcommittee.

Asked what another cut of $1 billion this year would mean, he answered, "That would have a major, major impact with our ability to go forward."

He promised to supply details later about what parts of the wide-ranging research effort would be affected.

The administration wants $4.8 billion for the program in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1, an increase of slightly more than $2 billion from the current amount. Last year, Reagan asked for $3.8 billion for the current year, but Congress reduced it to $2.75 billion.

Shultz:

U.S. should support Contras

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz told a House panel yesterday the United States has a moral duty to supply aid to Nicaraguan rebels trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

In an appearance before a House Appropriations subcommittee, Shultz painted the situation in Central America in stark and simple terms, calling the Contras "the good guys," and the Sandinistas "the bad guys" and "a very undesirable cancer in the area."

He said the administration believes it has a moral imperative to "support those people... willing to fight for freedom and independence."

Although the administration's request for $100 million in aid to the Contras is its immediate priority, Shultz' appearance before the subcommittee was mostly to lobby for the administration's overall foreign aid budget.

The panel chairman, Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., told Shultz that Congress will not approve President Reagan's request for a $15.5 billion foreign aid budget and directed him "back to the drawing board."

Obey said the proposal for fiscal 1987 is 16.2 percent above actual foreign aid spending for fiscal 1986.

The proposed military aid package to the Contras is already intensely controversial and Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia yesterday named a group of 11 senators, headed by Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., to help form a Democratic policy on the issue.

In the House, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. called on the administration to reopen negotiations aimed at producing a peaceful solution to the problems rather than rely on "military firepower."

MORAL DUTY — In House testimony, Secretary of State George Shultz claimed yesterday the United States has a moral obligation to support the Contra rebels fighting to overthrow the Sandinista government of Nicaragua. President Reagan has requested $100 million in military aid to help those whom Shultz described as the good guys, seeking to oust the bad.

In response to questions from the appropriations subcommittee, Shultz acknowledged that the administration has had problems delivering to the Contras $27 million in so-called non-lethal logistical aid already approved by Congress.

He said all of the money now has been committed and that initial problems in sending the assistance through such countries as Costa Rica and Honduras have been resolved.

"The question is not whether the bad people are doing bad things but whether your policies will do something about it."

However, Shultz acknowledged that only $10 million of the assistance actually has been delivered so far.

Obey asked how the administration can justify asking for $100 million in direct military aid when it has had difficulty delivering a far smaller amount of non-lethal assistance.

Shultz said there should be little future difficulty in providing the aid. He blamed past problems on the fact that Congress insisted the past assistance be provided openly, rather than secretly.

Obey said he has serious doubts as to whether the administration's aid program for the Contras will achieve its goal of destabilizing the Sandinista government.

Instead, he said the result is likely to put the United States on "the slippery slope" of direct military involvement.

"It will be enough to keep a bloody civil war going, but will it be enough to produce change?" Obey asked. "The question is not whether the bad people are doing bad things but whether your policies will do something about it."

Unions must account for fee use

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court yesterday required strict accounting of contributions non-union public employees must make to unions under so-called agency shop contracts.

The justices unanimously ruled that a Chicago teachers union and city officials violated the rights of non-members in the way they handled the funds they were required to contribute, which amounted to 95 percent of the monthly dues paid by union members.

In another ruling, the court voted, 5-4, to limit lawsuits by prison inmates injured by guards during disturbances.

The court threw out a suit by an injured Oregon state prison inmate who claimed he was a peacemaker. The court said he was not the victim of "cruel and unusual punishment" when shot by a guard.

In the Chicago teachers case, the justices said unions must explain in advance where the contributions of non-members are to be spent and must assure there is a prompt, impartial process for settling disputes over the amount of payroll deductions.

Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the court, said the procedure in Chicago was "inadequate because it failed to minimize the risk that non-union employees' contributions might be used for impermissible purposes, because it failed to provide adequate justification for the advance reduction of dues and because it failed to offer a reasonably prompt decision by an impartial decision maker."

He said it is not enough that paycheck deductions for non-union members be based on a good-faith estimate of how much money is used for collective bargaining and how much for ideological or political lobbying activities.

Tax reform waits on budget deal

By CLIFF HAAS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Seeking to build pressure for an early budget compromise, 50 senators yesterday signed a blunt letter to President Reagan, saying tax overhaul legislation should be set aside "until a firm, definite budget agreement has been reached between Congress and the White House."

The latest evidence of flagging interest in the tax bill — which the president has called his top domestic legislative priority — came a day before the Senate Budget Committee was scheduled to begin drafting a budget for fiscal 1987, which begins Oct. 1.

Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., the Budget Committee chairman, said that meeting a $144 billion deficit target required by a new balanced budget law will require $12 billion to $20 billion in new revenues as well as domestic spending cuts and less military spending than the administration is requesting.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., who initiated the letter to Reagan, denied that the effort was aimed at either derailing the tax overhaul effort or putting senators on record as favoring a tax increase to shrink the budget deficit. Instead, he said, the letter reflected the Senate's primary concern this year.

"The budget, indeed, is the most important thing that we can do for the American economy, the most important thing that we can do for all American people," Boschwitz said.

Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., another signer, said, "These 50 senators and many other senators believe the most important challenge facing this country to be budget deficits and reaching the Gramm-Rudman budget deficit-reduction goal in a fair and a rational fashion."

Boschwitz said that 30 to 35 other senators who did not sign the letter nonetheless support its message.

"Mr. President, we feel that you must join with the Senate and House leadership to develop a consensus on the fiscal year 1987 budget resolution," it said.

Principal's poison plot laid on 3 girl students

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Three junior high school girls who had been called to the assistant principal's office on a disciplinary matter tried to poison him by lacing his coffee with a fatal dose of iodine, authorities said.

Battle Creek Junior High School Assistant Principal Bradley Manor said yesterday he drank the coffee, but spat it out when he felt "a burning sensation."

A petition filed against the 14-year-old girls accused them of second-degree assault and adultery — both delinquent acts comparable to adult felony offenses — in the Friday incident.

The poisoning "wasn't a prank," said Capt. Larry Winger, head of the police juvenile unit.

"They had talked earlier in the day about poisoning the assistant principal. It was a premeditated thing," Winger said. "One of the girls was quoted as saying, 'I like the idea of killing.' She said that as they were planning it earlier in the day."

Two of the three girls admitted the assault charge when they appeared Monday before Juvenile Court Referee Donna Trethewey, said David Norrgard, another court referee. He said the adultery charge against the two was dismissed at that time.

The third girl denied both charges and was being held in the juvenile detention center pending trial, which will be within 30 days, Norrgard said. The other two were being held at a temporary shelter, he said. The three had been called to Manor's office to discuss a disciplinary matter. Manor left his office at one point, leaving behind his coffee cup.

One of the girls had brought the iodine from home and was using it to treat an infection from a pierced ear, Winger said.

"They had one of them act as a lookout while they poured it in," Winger said. "One of the other kids threw the bottle out of the window. When he came back and took a sip of coffee, he immediately spat it out and then called us."

Authorities called St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center and were told the amount of iodine that was used could have been fatal. "An ounce to two ounces, to our understanding, can be fatal," Winger said.

"There was a burning sensation," said Manor, 47. "I swallowed so little that I did not become ill. But I did go to the doctor, did have a blood-test. I'm fine, as far as I know."

Manor, who has been with the St. Paul school district for 20 years but is in his first year at Battle Creek, declined to comment further until a full report has been made to the school district.

The girls have been suspended, said Principal Ben Zachary. Any action on expulsion would have to come from the school district's administration, he said.

Panel claims evidence of Marcos corruption

By MIGUEL C. SUAREZ
Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines — The government of Corazon Aquino said yesterday it has new evidence that ousted President Ferdinand E. Marcos and his family and friends may have plundered up to $10 billion of the nation's wealth.

Former Sen. Jovito Salonga told a news conference documents found at the presidential palace after Marcos hurriedly abandoned it Feb. 25 link Marcos to purported illegal purchases of property in United States.

Salonga is chairman of a five-member commission Mrs. Aquino created last week to recover "all ill-gotten wealth" that the Marcos family and its associates allegedly accumulated and secreted under dummy names during Marcos' 20-year rule.

Asked how much money was involved, Salonga replied, "maybe $5 billion to $10 billion." He did not elaborate.

The estimate was the largest yet. The 1985 national budget of the financially strapped Philippines was $3.3 billion.

The nation's foreign debt is $26 billion and, according to the Marcos government, the average per capita income of the 55.5 million Filipinos last year was $136.

Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., told a news conference at Manila airport yesterday he believes the U.S. government "ought to be doing everything we can to facilitate the recovery of these assets" because they were "stolen and swindled from the pockets of the Filipino people."

Lawyers for the new government obtained a court injunction in New York on Sunday barring sale of five New York properties allegedly owned or controlled by Marcos.

Man saw Palme's killer flee

By KENNETH JAULTZ
Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Authorities said yesterday that a cab driver saw Olof Palme's assassin leap into a car and speed away with at least one accomplice seconds before police arrived at the scene of the murder.

They offered a reward of $70,000 in hopes of tempting an accomplice to betray the man who shot the 59-year-old prime minister in the back Friday night on a well-lit street in downtown Stockholm.

"There was at least one person in the (getaway) car," Stockholm Police Chief Sune Sandstrom told The Associated Press. He said police arrived seconds after the assassin's car raced away on the snow-covered street.

A witness to the shooting said earlier that he chased Palme's killer on foot, but lost him.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer told a news conference about the taxi driver's report. He said the cabbie noted only part of the license number, and police would not describe the vehicle.

"I hope there are people sheltering or who have sheltered this man who are willing to turn him in," Holmer said in announcing the reward.

The commissioner rejected growing public criticism of the way police have handled the investigation.

Critics say Stockholm authorities were too slow in sealing off the murder site and escape routes, and in deploying police patrols. They also said police did not provide enough protection for the prime minister, but Palme often dismissed his bodyguards and had done so earlier Friday.

Palme and his wife, Lisbet, were walking home from a movie premiere when the assassin attacked.

"We did (all that) one could possible expect of us," Holmer said.

Sandstrom said, "We have some ideas we are working on," but would not elaborate.

Holmer told the conference investigators had received 4,000 tips about the case and questioned 600 people.

Botha to lift state of emergency

By ANDREW TORCHIA
Associated Press

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — President P.W. Botha announced that the 195-day-old state of emergency imposed to fight anti-apartheid turmoil in South Africa probably would be lifted on Friday.

His announcement yesterday was praised by the United States and was given a cautious welcome from some South African liberals. But it provoked expressions of concern from the largest anti-apartheid grouping, the United Democratic Front, that the emergency would be supplanted by repressive legislation.

Botha also made a new offer of statehood for Namibia, proposing an Aug. 1 target date for starting moves toward the territory's independence. He made it conditional on a withdrawal of Cuban troops from neighboring Angola.

Police reported two blacks were killed by security officers. They said police shot a man in the western Transvaal province and a youth died of injuries suffered when police quelled a riot in Potchefstroom, southwest of Johannesburg.

They also reported that two whites were seriously hurt when their car was stoned in the south of the country.

Botha made his announcements to a packed parliamentary chamber in the country's legislative capital.

He claimed the level of violence had dropped sufficiently to enable him to issue a proclamation, "most probably this coming Friday," to lift the state of emergency.

But critics of the system of racial segregation that keeps power in the hands of South Africa's white minority said they could not readily explain the timing of Botha's announcement. They insisted that the level of violence had not dropped.

The emergency, imposed July 21 on 30 urban and rural districts and subsequently lifted from seven, gives police and troops sweeping powers to use guns against rioters and detain suspects indefinitely without trial. It has been widely condemned abroad, and its removal is a primary demand of anti-apartheid activists.

Violence spreads in West Bank town

By ALLYN FISHER
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — Violence spread in the occupied territories yesterday, two days after an Israeli-appointed mayor was murdered, but Prime Minister Shimon Peres vowed to continue easing control over West Bank cities.

Israeli troops fired on a group of young Palestinians in the market place at Nablus, whose mayor was assassinated Sunday, wounding a 22-year-old in the leg, military sources reported. They said the Palestinians had refused to stop for questioning and some began throwing stones.

The marketplace is near the spot where Mayor Zafer al-Masri was shot Sunday while walking to the city hall in Nablus, 30 miles north of Jerusalem.

In occupied Gaza, Palestinian youths threw a smoke grenade at an Israeli army jeep patrolling the market of Gaza City, causing no casualties, and soldiers erected roadblocks, the military sources said.

Soldiers fired on demonstrators throwing stones Monday at a refugee camp near Nablus, killing a Palestinian man and wounding his son. At least 50,000 mourners, equivalent to more than half the city's population, filled the streets during al-Masri's funeral later in the day.

Peres said in a speech to army officers that he intended to pursue his policy of looser control over cities in the West Bank of the Jordan River, despite growing domestic criticism.

"We must not despair of our proposal for devolution of authority in Judea and Samaria," he said, using the biblical names for the area Israel captured from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war.

"We do not want to run the Arabs' lives. They are trying to describe us as conquerors. This is not true and we have no interest in being so," Peres said, according to a report given by the prime minister's aides.

Peres said Israel would "continue an initiative for direct dialogue with Jordanians and Palestinians."

One objective of the new policy is to build a moderate Palestinian leadership in the West Bank that can negotiate peace with Israel in association with Jordan.

King Hussein worked with Yasser Arafat for a year on a joint approach to peace negotiations with Israel, but accused the Palestine Liberation Organization of bad faith and ended the relationship Feb. 19.

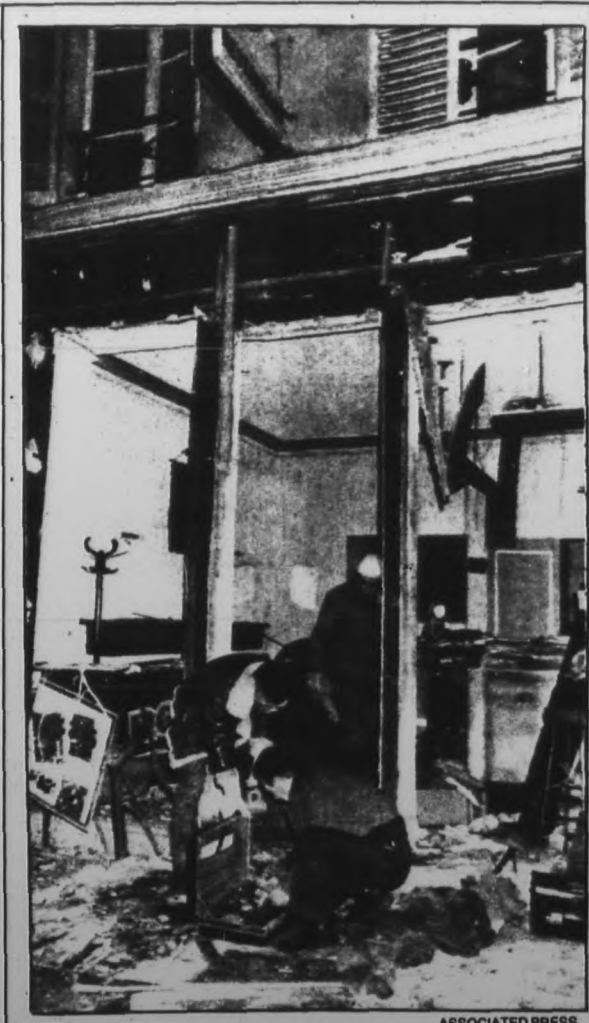

Al-Masri's murder, which had taken as a warning against cooperating with Israel, frightened three Palestinian moderates into withdrawing their candidacies for other West Bank mayoral posts.

Latest to withdraw was Jamil Tarifi, 38, a prominent attorney in the West Bank city just north of Jerusalem. Walid Hamed and Nadim Zaro withdrew earlier.

Tarifi accused Peres of trying to circumvent PLO influence among the 1.4 million Palestinians in the disputed territories by imposing self-rule. "Nobody can jump over the PLO," he said.

Israel radio said al-Masri's deputy, Hafez Tukan, had not yet decided whether to take over as mayor of Nablus.

The pro-Syrian Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and the Abu Nidal Palestinian splinter faction claimed responsibility for the killing, calling al-Masri a traitor.

Libya calls for attacks on U.S.

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — The legislature of Col. Moammar Khadafy's Libya has called for formation of suicide squads to attack U.S. and Israeli interests and has threatened those countries' embassies, the official JANA news agency said yesterday.

JANA said the legislature, called the General People's Congress, approved the resolutions Monday night as it ended a seven-day annual session.

The agency said the congress also urged Arabs to impose an economic boycott against the United States to retaliate for the U.S. cutoff of commercial ties with Libya.

The General People's Congress follows the wishes of Khadafy, who has no official title but has ruled Libya since a 1969 coup. In a related development, the 50-member Organization of African Unity yesterday condemned what it called "provocations, threats and acts of intimidation" by the United States against Libya.

The resolution, approved by member countries' ministers at a meeting in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, was submitted by the Libyan delegation. It said that by staging naval exercises close to Libyan waters, freezing Libyan assets in U.S. banks and other measures "of an economic and commercial nature," the United States had threatened the "sovereignty and security of an OAU and U.N. member state... (and) the peace and security of the region and the world."

Assassination common in Mideast

JERUSALEM (AP) — Assassination has become a common tactic during more than half a century of turmoil in the Middle East and many of the targets have been peace-makers, from kings to village headmen.

The latest victim was Zafer al-Masri, newly appointed mayor of Nablus on the Israeli-occupied West Bank, who was shot dead Sunday while walking to the city hall.

Al-Masri's murder was a blow to the plans of Prime Minister Shimon Peres to give West Bank Palestinians more autonomy and encourage moderate local leadership that could negotiate peace in association with Jordan.

Two radical Syrian-backed Palestinian groups claimed responsibility for the killing, which prompted at least three other Palestinians to withdraw as candidates for mayor of other West Bank cities now run by Israeli army officers.

Israeli analysts said the murder of the pro-Jordanian mayor also was a message to King Hussein, following his break with the Palestine Liberation Organization, that he cannot negotiate on his own with Israel.

Hussein worked with Yasser Arafat for a year on a joint approach to peace negotiations with Israel, but accused the PLO of bad faith on Feb. 19 and ended the relationship.

The Jerusalem Post said al-Masri was the 24th Palestinian killed by other Arabs in the West Bank and Gaza Strip since Israel captured the territories in the 1967 Middle East war.

Group calls for end to apartheid

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International launched a campaign today for an end to torture, imprisonment on racial and political grounds, and other alleged abuses in South Africa.

In an open letter to President P.W. Botha, the London-based human rights organization called on South Africa to investigate killings of government critics, curb police powers of arbitrary arrest and detention without trial, and immediately abolish the "pass laws" restricting movement of blacks.

The letter, from Amnesty's Secretary-General Thomas Hammarberg, listed 10 steps he said "must be taken urgently"

by the white-minority government, including:

— To establish an independent judicial inquiry into allegations that government critics had disappeared, been attacked or killed by organs of the state, acting either independently or under orders.

— To investigate all police killings of civilians "to establish whether they constituted extrajudicial executions," and to bring police officers to trial for such killings.

— Immediate abolition of the pass laws, one of the most hated symbols of apartheid, or racial separation, in South Africa, and "all legislation which leads to imprisonment on the basis of race."

Mexico seeks aid to pay debts

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico will seek about $6 billion from international financial organizations to meet foreign debt payments this year, the same amount it expects to lose in 1986 because of falling oil prices, the Treasury Department announced.

At the same time, the government will try to offset falling oil earnings by promoting non-petroleum exports and seeking reductions in interest rates on Mexico's $96.4 billion foreign debt, the department said in a statement Monday.

The announcements followed a trip to Washington last week by Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog to present Mexico's debt dilemma directly to creditors. No details of his meetings were released during the trip. Silva Herzog and central bank chief Miguel Mancera also delivered personally the sentiments of President Miguel de la Madrid. The president said in a speech Feb. 21 that creditors must be prepared to share with Mexico the hardships of paying off the developing world's second biggest foreign debt.

The $6 billion in new money, to be sought chiefly from the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, is needed to meet payments this year of $10 billion in interest and $2.5 billion on the debt principal.

Officials hope any package negotiated with those organizations will lead to "a new package" of payment terms with other creditors, the department said.

Soviets likely to shake up committee

MOSCOW (AP) — The 27th Communist Party Congress began to wind up its economic business yesterday in preparation for what is expected to be the biggest shakeup ever in the powerful Central Committee.

Kremlin spokesman Leonid M. Zamyatin said last night that the committee would be named this afternoon.

Composition of the committee's top bodies, the Politburo and the Secretariat, will be announced tomorrow during the closing speech, expected to be delivered by General Secretary Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Zamyatin also said the new membership of the Central Committee would be made public tomorrow. Western diplomats and Soviet sources, who demanded anonymity, estimate as many as 50 percent of the 319 members elected at the last congress in 1981 could be changed.

As with most top party gatherings, the congress' final days have been preceded by rumors of changes in the ruling elite, headed by the 11 full members of the Politburo.

Such rumors cannot be confirmed reliably and often prove false, suggesting they may have been sparked by groups seeking to discredit or promote one or another member of the nation's top executive body.

China vows to lick postal offenses

PEKING (AP) — China has promised a crackdown on wrongdoing by postal workers, offenses which include theft of parcels, opening of private letters, stamp forgery and speculation, the official English-language China Daily said yesterday.

Last year 1,600 postal workers were found guilty of offenses, the paper quoted Zhu Gaofeng, deputy Minister of Posts and Telecommunications, as saying.

Zhu said the state also plans to increase investment in the postal transportation system, to ease delays. He said mail volume is expected to reach 41.2 billion pieces by 1990, a 38 percent increase over 1985.

Stamp sales increased 90 percent between 1980 and 1985, with 4.1 billion stamps sold last year, the report said.

It said China has 5 million stamp collectors among its 1.046 billion people.

SAD FAREWELL — Sue Massey, whose letter pointing out the family farm crisis was read during the FarmAid concert last year, eats a recent meal with her children. The Massey's farm was sold at auction yesterday.

FarmAid family loses farm

By DAVE DISHNEAU
Associated Press

DODGEVILLE, Wis. — A woman whose plight illustrated the farm crisis for millions of viewers of the FarmAid concert telecast last fall sobbed on her husband's shoulder as their 310-acre farm was sold yesterday at a foreclosure auction.

Sue Massey, 29, said the biggest losers were the couple's five small children, who stood beside their parents during the five-minute auction on the steps of the Iowa County Sheriff's office.

"The farm was not just their playground, it was their future," she said. "That land could have put all five of them through college."

Raphael Peterson, a feed supplier who bought the farm for $45,000, and who said the Masseys had owed him about $65,000, said he would consider making a deal to allow the family to stay on the land.

But Mrs. Massey said remaining on the farm might be too painful.

"When you go through something like this it scars you," she said. "All our hopes and dreams were there."

She said the experience had taught the family the importance of communicating with each other during hard times.

"You've got to talk about it," she said. "If you hold it inside it will eat you up."

Kenneth Massey, 34, said keeping the family together mattered more than losing the farm, which had been in his family more than 80 years.

"I've been so low, it's been terrible," he said through choked sobs. "I just want to say to all the farmers who have considered suicide: you've got to make it. You've got to stay with your family."

Massey works as a farm laborer at a state agriculture experiment station in Arlington. Mrs. Massey is a part-time secretary at a veterinarian's office.

She said she didn't know where the family would go to live, possibly with their parents.

"Hopefully, we'll have some well-deserved weeks of healing," she said. "This is a sad ending, but it's also a beginning."

During the concert, a member of the band Alabama read Mrs. Massey's letter about her family's struggle while photos of the Massey family were flashed on a giant video screen behind the band.

She said the family received about 150 letters after the telecast, many of them filled with encouraging words from other families who had lost their farms and some containing money.

Mrs. Massey said she and her husband, Kenneth, sent back the roughly $2,000 they had received and asked the donors to give the money to FarmAid instead.

"We thought in some way we'd be contacted, but we've never heard a thing from them," Mrs. Massey said of FarmAid.

A man who answered a toll-free FarmAid telephone number said he could take a pledge, but didn't have a telephone number for contacting FarmAid officials.

Mrs. Massey said she and her husband decided it would be best to bring their five children, ages 18 months to 10 years, to the auction.

"Someone said send them to school like it's any other day, but it's not like any other day," she said. "We need to go so we can relate to something emotionally as being the end."

The auction of the Masseys' 325-acre farm was needed to pay debts accrued by Bett-Or Eggs Inc., a corporation owned by the family. The corporation owes more than $65,000 to feed suppliers and has defaulted on a real estate loan.

Mrs. Massey said the troubles began in 1976, when the family had to buy $19,000 worth of chicken feed after a summer drought.

"Like dominoes falling, other prices went up, the bills came in, egg prices went down and taxes just increased," she said.

Book reveals anti-Semitic efforts at Yale

By BRENT LAYMON
Associated Press

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Buried in Yale University's archives is a folder marked "The Jewish Problem," filled with the papers of a past Yale president concerned with keeping down the number of Jews attending the Ivy League school.

These and other records document anti-Semitism at Yale in the first half of this century, according to Dan A. Oren, author of the newly published book "Joining The Club: A History of Jews and Yale."

Yale adopted an informal quota in the 1920s to keep the number of Jewish students at 10 percent, Oren said; before then few Jews had applied. The college had no Jews as full professors until 1946 — 20 years after Harvard — although its graduate school had Jewish professors before then.

"None of this was done publicly," said Oren, a 1979 Yale graduate and now a resident in psychiatry at the Yale School of Medicine. "As far as overt anti-Semitism, it was really very polite. I mean, Yale students were very much gentlemen. You didn't go around calling people names."

Oren agreed that anti-Semitism plagued other Ivy League schools in the years before World War II. But he says it hung on longer at Yale.

Oren, who grew up in a conservative Jewish family, said he encountered no anti-Semitism while a student. He stumbled onto Yale's "Jewish problem" while a sophomore when he saw a brief reference in a history book about Jews being excluded from campus clubs and fraternities during the 1920s and 1930s.

He interviewed scores of Yale alumni and combed the university archives, where he found documents like the board of admission's annual report for 1944-45.

"The Jewish problem ... continues to call for the utmost care and tact" the board warned. "The proportion of Jews among the candidates ... for admission ... has somewhat increased and remains too large for comfort."

Oren found the folder labeled "The Jewish Problem" among the personal papers of James R. Angell, Yale president from 1921 to 1927.

Eugene Rostow, a 1933 Yale graduate and former dean of the Yale Law School, insists anti-Semitism was no worse at Yale than anywhere else.

"I knew there were problems of anti-Semitism here and there, as there were elsewhere in American society, but I was given a very warm welcome indeed and had a wonderful time," Rostow said.

But Oren says Rostow was exceptional, and that he was shocked by his discoveries and by the bitterness he heard from some graduates.

Other Jews from that era, he said, had experiences similar to those of well-known political columnist Max Lerner, a member of Yale class of 1923.

Lerner remembers "being kept out of everything. Not in any formal way, but in the way we were treated."

Jacob R. Marcus, director of the Cincinnati-based American Jewish Archives, suggests that Jews presented an unwelcome challenge at places like Yale.

"The student body resented the Jews because they worked very hard and set high standards," he said. "The older generation resented them because they were going to become rivals."

Oren said anti-Semitism began to diminish after World War II, partly in reaction against Nazism. Yale began easing its quotas on Jews in 1948, but it was not until the class of 1966 that all religious restrictions were dropped.

RFK police report won't erase doubts

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Doubts about whether Sirhan Sirhan acted alone when he killed Sen. Robert F. Kennedy in 1968 will remain, despite release of a summary of secret police files on the assassination, says a former Kennedy aide who was injured by a stray bullet in the shooting.

The Los Angeles Police Commission was scheduled to release the report yesterday.

Paul Schrade, the former Kennedy aide who has pressed for public access to data gathered by the Los Angeles Police Department, said he doubted the summary would provide new information. And he maintained that scholars and the public should be able to examine the actual evidence gathered by investigators, not just the department's summary.

"There are just too many questions that have been raised in this case for any reasonable person to have any confidence in those conclusions," Schrade said.

At a hearing last month, commission members denied they were unduly delaying the release of some 50,000 pages of information. The summary is about 1,500 pages long.

Kennedy was gunned down June

5, 1968, in the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles, where he had been celebrating his victory in the California presidential primary. Sirhan was convicted of the murder in 1969 and remains in prison.

Schrade, who was hospitalized for 10 days after being wounded in the head in the shooting, repeated his contention yesterday that the files contain a statement from an FBI investigator indicating there may have been a second gunman at the hotel. The agent said two bullets unaccounted for by investigators were found lodged in a doorjamb, according to Schrade.

Providing information to historians is as important as shedding light on possible conspiracy theories, he said.

"This is the only assassination case of note in the last 30 years where (authorities) have not produced the files," he said. "The Martin Luther King files are in the public arena, the John F. Kennedy files are in the public arena ..."

Schrade was among those pressing the commission for release of the documents at a hearing last July 30.

Others who have sought release of the files include Frank Mankiewicz, who was Kennedy's press secretary; Henry Gwiazda, archivist at the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library; and historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr.

Administration calls drop minor next to other gauges

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government's main gauge of future economic activity plunged a sharp 0.6 percent in January, the first decline in nine months, the Commerce Department said yesterday.

The steep plunge was not likely to raise fears of an impending recession, however, because a variety of other business barometers are pointing to stronger growth in the months ahead.

Indeed, White House spokesman Larry Speakes discounted the significance of the decline, saying, "The Reagan recovery continues at a healthy pace."

"The American economy remains the model for Western economies," Speakes said in a prepared statement that cited rising stock prices, declining mortgage interest rates and the recent drop in unemployment as evidence of economic health.

Commerce analysts attributed virtually all of the decline to a huge swing in factory orders between December and January.

In December, a big rise in orders for commercial aircraft helped push the index up by 1.5 percent. But a weakness in orders the next month accounted for 95 percent of the decline in the January index, the department said.

Private analysts cautioned that not too much should be read into the January index, since it did not reflect one of the key positive events occurring at the present time — a huge fall in oil prices.

Oil prices, which are not directly reflected in the index, have dropped below $13 per barrel on the spot market in recent weeks, down from $25 per barrel in December.

This sharp decline has sent a number of economists scurrying to boost their forecasts for growth this year. These analysts believe the fall in oil prices will lower the oil bill that consumers and businesses must pay, allowing them to spend more on other items and thus boost economic activity.

Lower oil prices will also help to hold down inflation and has already contributed to interest rate declines, two positive factors for economic growth.

David Wyss, an economist at Data Resources Inc., said his private forecasting firm was now forecasting the economy would expand at a healthy 3.25 percent rate through the first nine months of 1986. Just two months ago, the firm was forecasting growth at an anemic 2 percent rate this year.

Last year, the economy grew a sluggish 2.3 percent, the slowest pace since the 1982 recession.

The Data Resources forecast would represent a substantial rebound from that rate, but the Reagan administration is calling for even stronger growth this year of 4 percent.

The January changes left the leading index at 173.0 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

The sharp 0.6 percent January decline was the first drop since a 0.7 percent fall last April. In the last 13 months, the index has risen all but two months, giving many analysts hope that 1986 economic activity will be substantially above last year's.

The biggest negative factor pulling the index down in January was a weakness in factory orders for plant and equipment, the category that contains the commercial aircraft orders.

In all, five of the 11 indicators showed negative readings in January. The other four were a drop in growth in business and consumer credit, a decline in net business formation, slower growth in the money supply and a

United cuts prime rate

ELIZABETH — United Counties Trust Company lowered its prime commercial lending rate from 9.5 to 9 percent, effective March 3, but it remains unclear whether other bankers will follow their lead.

The prime rate, set by each bank individually, is the rate banks offer to preferred commercial borrowers.

Donald Nowicki, United Counties senior vice president, said yesterday the bank cut their rate "to be consistent with other interest rates" and because he felt interest rates would continue to fall.

Other bankers and the state Department of Banking, however, were cautious about saying that other banks would follow United Counties' lead.

"We adjust our rate according to the market and have no immediate plans to change it," said Hank Wallhauser, spokesman for First Fidelity Bank in Newark. First Fidelity is the largest bank in the state in terms of deposits and assets.

James Hartmann, director of marketing for Midlantic Bank, the second largest bank in the state, said he "couldn't say whether the bank would change its prime ... that is something the chief lending officer and bank president review everyday."

Small Korean autos having a big impact

By EDWARD MILLER
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT — Auto executive J. Michael Losh sensed something strange when he first set foot in a South Korean car plant, and then he spotted it.

Accustomed to American workers in jeans and T-shirts, he watched Koreans toil on the assembly line while bundled to the neck in heavy winter coats.

"They don't heat the plants," he said. "It makes for a brisk work environment."

Losh tells the story with a smile, but not a laugh. No one in Detroit is laughing at the quickly rising Korean car industry these days, least of all Losh.

As head of General Motors Corp.'s Pontiac division, he is coordinating the importation early next year of a subcompact South Korean car that GM will call the Pontiac LeMans.

GM will import the cars from Daewoo, one of three industrial conglomerates that make everything from umbrellas and tennis shoes to computers and super-tankers — and now cars.

Daewoo and the other two companies, Hyundai and Kia, have a common goal: the lucrative U.S. market, where their tiny, low-priced cars can slip comfortably beneath the cheaper offerings of Detroit and even the Japanese — without quotas.

"You see all the evidence there of a nation of people that want to be an important part of the scene," said Chrysler Corp. President Harold Sperlich. "... They're working very hard at it, like the Japanese did."

South Korea's competitiveness derives from its labor costs. Its autoworkers are paid about $2 an hour including benefits, according to a University of Michigan estimate, and they commonly work 60-hour weeks. The United Auto Workers union claims some Korean autoworkers are paid wages as low as 64 cents an hour.

That severely undercuts even the Japanese total labor costs of about $12 an hour. Detroit's Big Three pay an average $13.46 an hour in wages and $24 when benefits are included in total costs.

The first U.S. sales of South Korean cars were registered officially yesterday by Hyundai (pronounced Hewn DYE) Motor Co. Ltd., which this month introduced the front-wheel drive subcompact Hyundai Excel at a base price of $4,995.

Hyundai plans to sell 100,000 cars in the United States this year from its plant in Ulsan, South Korea, or about 1 percent of all cars sold here. The company makes a bigger, compact car that it also could sell here someday, and it hasn't ruled out building even larger, upscale cars.

Shuttle tragedy linked to flawed decision process

By JOHN CUNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — If there was a flaw in NASA's decision-making process in launching the ill-fated Shuttle Challenger, then a great many corporations are similarly flawed, according to an authority on business practices.

American business, says Prof. Eugene Jennings, has long been "befuddled and bewitched" by difficulties similar to those that may have led to the destruction of the Shuttle Challenger on Jan. 28.

William Rogers, chairman of the presidential commission investigating the disaster, has expressed concern that key National Aeronautics and Space Administration executives didn't know about dissent among engineers regarding the decision to launch Challenger.

Among these difficulties, said Jennings, is a failure to prevent hierarchy from interfering with the gathering and processing of intelligence, and an inability to assign the proper weight to technical expertise.

He believes the publicity attending the shuttle disaster educated Americans to the vulnerability not only of NASA, but of American business and other institutions.

Already, he said, some corporations are re-examining their decision-making processes after being shocked into the realization that similar disasters could threaten their very existence.

To understand the process, said Jennings, professor of management and leadership at Michigan State University and adviser to corporate chiefs and public officials, one must distinguish between problems and conditions.

"Every organization must cope with conditions vigorously and endlessly, because they'll never go away entirely."

Eugene Jennings
University of Michigan

The distinction is this: A problem, such as pneumonia, lends itself to a solution. Good management doesn't let problems linger; it solves them. NASA has solved millions of problems.

A condition, such as mortality, is something you can only seek to cope with. NASA was dealing with conditions, and whether it dealt with them properly is now the subject of an official inquiry.

"Every organization must cope with conditions vigorously and endlessly, because they'll never go away entirely," the professor states. He lists four common conditions that are relevant to the Challenger disaster.

1. The interference by hierarchy with the flow of information.

Among other things, managerial intelligence is obtaining information for early identification of problems. Failure in this area can lead to crises, in which decisions must be made without proper lead time.

The function of hierarchy, which is an ascending degree of See LESSONS Page 9B

GM plans to import 80,000 cars annually beginning next year from Daewoo Motor Co. Ltd., which is 50 percent owned by GM. They will leave the factory bearing the Le Mans name, resurrected from a 1970s Pontiac hot rod.

Ford Motor Co., meanwhile, plans to import cars beginning next year from Kia Industrial Co., a South Korean manufacturer partly owned by Mazda Motor Corp. of Japan. Ford owns 25 percent of Mazda. The Ford Festiva will be smaller than the Hyundai and Daewoo offerings and will compete in a growing classification known as minicars.

Chrysler Corp. is at work on a parts manufacturing deal with Samsung Group of South Korea, but Samsung has yet to be granted government permission to build cars, Chrysler said.

Blue chip selloff sinks Dow what people expected,” he said.

In the early going, bond prices surged and interest rates on an array of maturities tumbled in response to the government's latest evaluation of economic prospects.

Several issues that have been mentioned as possible takeover candidates were among the most heavily traded stocks. Western Airlines, leading the actives, closed up 1 1/2 at 11 1/2.

At the close, advancing issues on the New York Stock Exchange outnumbered decliners by 971 to 713 and 388 issues were unchanged. The NYSE composite index of all its listed common stocks fell 0.34 to 129.75.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials fell 1.35 to 246.98, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was off 1.04 at 224.38.

Unfortunately, says Jennings, hierarchy tends to determine not just work flow but information flow too. Information fails to ascend because hierarchy is too high and complex.

“It is extremely difficult when you have a successful program to believe in the worst-case scenario,” says Jennings.

These developments will make the South Koreans a force in the U.S. market seemingly overnight. That, and their willingness to begin with low sticker price cars, has brought comparisons with the Japanese companies of a generation ago.

“They're up to date and they have Japanese technology. They're not going to be slouches in the market,” said Harvey Heimbach, auto industry analyst at Merrill Lynch in New York.

2. The proper weighting of technical expertise in the decision-making matrix.

Too often, says Jennings, technical expertise is heavily weighted in the early stages of a program. But with success it is downgraded. The void is filled, unchallenged, by politics, finance and other variables.

3. Typically, engineers have analytical minds, and such minds require data for judgment.

In an analysis-intensive culture, a premium is placed upon precise, logical action. There is little room for intuition. By inclination and environment, engineers do not take strong positions without supporting databases.

Purse money is stumbling block

Say track closing may be averted

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD (AP) — Harness horsemen and the operators of the Meadowlands racetrack resumed contract negotiations last night with one horseman saying a possible closing of the track can be averted.

The two sides, seeking to end a four-month contract dispute, entered the bargaining session at 2:30 p.m. after both sides had huddled separately in the morning.

They negotiated until 8:45 p.m., when they recessed the talks until 1 p.m. today without saying if progress had been made.

Members of the Standardbred Owners and Breeders Association had earlier failed to comply with a request by New Jersey Racing Commission Chairmen Stuart O. Goldsmith and boycotted the entry box for the second straight day.

Goldsmith had stepped into the dispute late Monday night when track officials were on the verge of closing the facility after failing to reach a contract agreement. He ordered the Meadowlands to remain open and asked horsemen to enter horses for races later this week.

The Meadowlands, which is licensed by the state, had to comply with the order, but horsemen were not obligated to follow the request and only 18 horses were entered for Friday's 10-race card.

Goldsmith would not come to the telephone to comment Tuesday and Bruce H. Garland, the acting executive director of the commission, said he would have no comment while the talks were in progress.

Meadowlands spokeswoman Carol

Hodes said Tuesday night's card would be run.

Robert Mulcahy, executive director of the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, the operators of the track, was not available for comment.

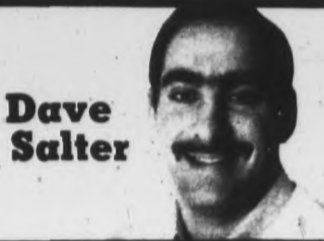

However, Ronald Dancer, the vice president of the New Jersey chapter of the SBOA, felt confident before the talks started.

"I think we can settle this," he said. The track and the association have been without a contract for four months. An tentative agreement was reached in January, but the horsemen rejected it.

The horsemen also rejected a proposal that their bargaining group brought to them at 9 p.m. Monday, prompting Meadowlands officials to prepare a statement announcing that the track would be closed indefinitely.

But Goldsmith prevented that action. The major stumbling block has been purse money. The track currently keeps approximately 10 percent of each night's on-track handle, with the horsemen getting 5 percent for purses.

The SBOA wants to increase the purses by an amount equivalent to 1 percent of the handle.

Baseball: Just can't get into it

Oh how I hate the start of the baseball season. Can't get into it. America's favorite pastime. Bah, humbug. The thought just about makes me nauseous.

While spring training really excites most and gives fans an exhilarating feeling, I'd rather be watching my catcus grow.

Baseball hasn't been exciting for me since the 70's. Quite frankly, performances the last six years have left much to be desired. Sure we have had records by Pete Rose and Rod Carew and all those aging hurlers who seem to be reaching the 300-win plateau with more proficiency than ever. Those are the only ones I can remember because they are the most recent. But as far as teams go, nothing can stir the baseball fan in me as much as the baseball of the 70's did.

The reason I hold the current marathon season in such disdain is that I was spoiled growing up. I mean REALLY spoiled.

We're talking classics. The "Big Red Machine" with Pete Rose, Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan, Dave Concepcion, Tony Perez.

We're talking Oakland Athletics with Reggie Jackson, Sal Bando, Joe Rudi, Catfish Hunter, Ken Holtzman, Vida Blue, and, who could forget Rollie Fingers with his handle-bar mustache.

How about the Baltimore Orioles with Brooks Robinson, Frank Robinson, Boog Powell, a young Ken Singleton, a juvenile-looking Jim Palmer and Mike Cuellar? How about catcher Elrod Hendricks?

Then there are the Dodgers with Ron Cey, Bill Russell, Steve Garvey, Davey Lopes, Jim Wynn (the Toy Cannon), the great reliever Mike Marshall.

The Pirates with the late, great Roberto Clemente, Willie Stargell, Bob Robertson, Manny Sanguillen, Dave Giusti, Bruce Kison.

Later on we get into the great Yankee teams with Jackson, Thurman Munson, Sparky Lyle, Catfish, a young Ron Guidry, Goose Gosage, my Mom's favorite Chris Chambliss and Graig Nettles.

All of that added up to some great confrontations?

There was the Red Sox and the Reds in 1975 when Carlton Fisk used every ounce of body English to convince the ball to stay on the right side of the foul pole in the 12th inning of Game Six.

How about that Red Sox team? Fisk, Luis Tiant, George Scott, youngsters Freddie Lynn and Jim Rice, and oldsters Rico Petrocelli and Bernie Carbo.

How about the Pirates and the Orioles in 1971 when newly-wed Bruce Kison won the last game of the Series and then had to rush off to his honeymoon.

And, unfortunately I have to bring this up, those amazing Mets, I mean Mets in 1969 and 1973. The Mets are the epitome of nausea.

Cleon Jones, Bud Harrelson, Tom Seaver, Jon Matlack, Ed Kranepool, Gerry Grove and the effervescent, Tug McGraw.

Not since the good old days of my childhood has baseball been as much fun to follow and watch. I remember trading baseball cards. Man, there were some that you just couldn't part with. A Hank Aaron card, or a Pete Rose rookie card. Tom Seaver was another hot one.

Now, the first thing that comes to mind when I think of baseball is drug testing, salary arbitration, strikes and the long, long season.

The season could be cut to 100 games, then get into the playoffs and World Series and it could be done by August, instead of interrupting my football

Randolph, Guidry are co-captains

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Veteran pitcher Ron Guidry and second baseman Willie Randolph were named co-captains of the New York Yankees at their spring training camp in Fort Lauderdale, yesterday.

The move marks the first time that two Yankees have shared the captain's job and they are the seventh and eight players in the club's history to hold the position.

The others to be named captain were Everett Scott, Roger Peckinpaugh, Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Thurman Munson and Graig Nettles, who served until March 30, 1984, when he was traded to the San Diego Padres.

"This is a welcome addition to the club," said Woody Woodward, the Yankees' vice president for baseball administration. "They certainly deserve the honor. They are senior members of the club and have been through winning seasons with the Yankees. Both are proven winners, proven All-Stars and first-class citizens."

Randolph joined the team in 1976, the first year the Yankees won a pennant since 1964. The team went on to win the World Series in 1977 and 1978. He has been the regular second baseman ever since.

Guidry, who first came up in 1975 and almost decided to quit baseball, had his best season in 1978 when he won 26 games and lost only 3. He won the Cy Young Award that year.

Gehrig was the best-remembered Yankee captain. After his retirement in 1939, there were no Yankee captains for 40 years until Munson

Connell lifts Freehold Township

By FIG JANKOWSKI
The Register

FREEHOLD — Ronald Reagan said it first, but John Connell proved its accuracy.

Freehold Township's Connell led the way with 32 points as the Patriots defeated Wall, 67-58, in last night's Central Jersey Group III playoff game. Time and time again, Connell produced the needed play, leaving Wall fans to mutter the famous Reagan line, "there he goes again."

Connell went to work in the second quarter with 12 of the Patriots' 18 points. Freehold Township grabbed the lead at 22-21 with just over three minutes remaining in the second and never again trailed.

"He's been our leading scorer and rebounder," Patriot coach Dave Warner said of Connell. "When he shoots well, we're in the game. But, when he doesn't, we have to do some other things to win."

Connell capped off a Patriot fast break with a layup and point guard Mike Dermer added two free throws in a late second period flurry, and Freehold Township appeared to be in command at the break.

However, Wall broke fast in the third period, closing the gap to 30-28 on Ed Scott's 15-footer and two foul shots. The teams traded baskets, and Connell showed up again with a long jump shot, putting the margin back to four points. Brian Gilbert added a turnaround jumper for Freehold Township and the closest Wall could come the rest of the night was five points.

The Patriots turned to their four-corners offense in the final period and continued to exploit the slower Wall defense with crisp passing, headed by Dermer and fellow guard Ken Cowie.

"Dermer is an excellent point guard, one of the best pure point guards around," Warner said. "He does a great job for us. As a matter of fact, four of our starting five played point guard at one time. When you have four guys like that, that really helps you move the ball."

Manalapan bombs Neptune

By JIM HINTELMANN
The Register

ENGLISHTOWN — Manalapan's Ken Curtis turned what had been a tight game into a romp in the final minutes with five straight baskets as the Braves raced past Neptune, 65-50, in the opening round of the NJSIAA Central Jersey Group IV basketball tournament.

"Curtis has been a clutch player for us all year," Manalapan coach Dennis Simpson said. "He inspired the rest of the team. He shoots with confidence." "We were pumped up for Neptune because we got destroyed by them (83-37) the last time," said Curtis, a 6-2 senior. "We were more patient on offense this time and passed the ball around better."

The Braves will next play top-seeded East Brunswick Friday night at East Brunswick. Game time is 8 p.m.

Although ending up a 15-point Manalapan margin, the game was actually up for grabs until the final 2:20 of play. There were nine ties in the second half, the last at 44-44 before Curtis hit the first of his five straight baskets to put the Braves in front to stay.

Neptune still trailed only 54-50 on Gary Blaylock's jumper with 2:20 to go, but that basket was to be the last one of the game for the Scarlet Fliers. The Braves scored the final 11 points.

Curtis score on a pair of drives, Pete Dunleavy put in a layup, Curtis and Brian Timmes both dropped in two foul shots, and Jeff Rosenberg hit a free throw to end the scoring.

"We played more aggressively tonight than we did the last time we played Neptune," Simpson said. "We're basically a senior club and we went into the game with a lot of confidence."

"I'd like to give credit to Mark Pfaaf, last year's coach," Simpson said. "He merged this team together."

The two clubs played on even terms in the first half. Manalapan had the biggest lead at 10-4, but Neptune came back and went in front, 28-26, at the half on Len Jones' rebound shot.

The clubs played evenly most of the second half with ties at 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, and 44 before Manalapan went ahead for good.

"The defense broke down and we weren't getting the rebounds," Neptune coach Larry Hennessy said. "But we have a young team with only two seniors playing. Our freshmen team is unbeaten."

Curtis finished with 18 points but the Braves (13-8) had balanced scoring with Anthony Mormile scoring 16, Jeff Rosenberg 15 and Pete Dunleavy 10. Derrick Gaines had 13 and Stephon Slappy 12 for Neptune (13-10).

Mater Dei steamrolls

By JACK OAKLEY
The Register

NEW MONMOUTH — Seven Seraphs took the floor for the last time last night.

Before the game Mater Dei coach Kevin Attridge didn't want to present his usual rose to each of his departing seniors before the crowd in the gym so he decided to do it in the team room before the game.

"So you know what happened?" Attridge asked, "I had a room full of crying girls. I said to myself, 'nice strategy, Kevin,' but it worked out all right."

It worked out all right for the Seraphs as they inundated Moorestown Friends, 89-29, to advance to the semi final round of South Jersey Parochial "B."

The Seraphs will take the floor at Lakewood High School on Saturday at 12:30 against Bishop Eustace.

Eustace defeated Gloucester Catholic, 46-44, in overtime last night.

Gloucester Catholic had been an old Mater Dei nemesis, having beaten it seven times. Mater Dei's lone win came in 1980 when the Seraphs won the state championship.

Eustace and Gloucester had split the regular season games. Eustace now has a 17-8 record.

Eustace was led to its win last night by Kim Kelly's 15 points while Keli James added 12. The Eustace attack is run by diminutive guards, Carla DiBenedetto and Jane Ward.

Mater Dei will take a 22-3 record with it against Bishop Eustace after its romp last night.

From the start of the game it was no contest as Mater Dei reeled off 26 straight points before Cheryl Smith scored for Friends with 10 seconds left in the period.

Ellen Donohue displayed her quickness with seven steals in the period and she wound up with five baskets for her most productive period of the season.

"Ellen has had to play quite a few different positions the last two years and has had to sacrifice her scoring. She showed just how much she means to us in that first period," Attridge said of his departing guard.

High-scoring Shonda Becker, who has made a verbal commitment to Assumption College, dominated the backboards and came up with six rebounds in the first period and three assists. She also had eight points.

Attridge began using his substitutes before the end of the first period, but even that couldn't stem the tide of points.

The Seraphs outscored Friends, 20-14, in the second period and led, 46-16, at half-time.

Mater Dei exhibited one weakness in the third period — foul shooting. They converted three of nine attempts, but tallied 10 times from the floor to lead, 69-23, going into the final frame. Mater Dei had a 20-6 scoring margin over that eight minute span.

Sue Marcotte paced the scoring for Mater Dei with five field goals and 9-11 at the foul line for 19 points. Becker finished with 17, Donohue 14 and Heidi Eberhard 13.

THE REGISTER/ED BRETT

ALL ALONE — Mater Dei's Ellen Donohue has an easy chance at the bucket as Moorestown Friends' Amy Weeks trails during last night's South Jersey Parochial "B" tournament game at Mater Dei.

Amy Weeks was the only player to hit double figures for the 9-9 Moorestown team. She had 11.

Moorestown, with one field goal in the first period, came back to score six in the second period including a 20-foot shot at the buzzer by Beth Weiner to "close" the gap to 30 points. Friends scored three times from the floor in each of the last two periods and was three-for-eight at the foul line during the game.

Overall, Mater Dei clicked 36 times from the floor, but also upset Attridge.

"The girls just can't seem to be able to finish off that play with any consistency," he lamented.

South is beaten in CJ Group IV

OLD BRIDGE — Middletown South High School rebounded from an 11-point deficit in the fourth period, but Cathy Madalone's 30-footer at the buzzer fell short as did the Eagles' hopes in the Central Jersey Group IV girls basketball playoffs last night.

Fourth-seeded Madison Central held on for a 45-44 win and will host Neptune (19-4), a 69-49 winner over Marlboro last night.

Down by 11, the Eagles went to a full-court press and caused enough turnovers to get back into the ballgame.

Central had a chance to ice the game with five seconds left, but missed the front end of a one-and-one opportunity. South, however, could only manage the last-second heave by Madalone.

Another downfall for South (10-14) was its free throw shooting. The Eagles connected on just four of 15 attempts, including zero for eight in the first half.

Madalone led South with 18 points and Jessica Bergman added 12. Tanya Sneed had a dozen rebounds.

Lynn Ford led Madison Central (19-5) with 14 points while Debbie MacLellen added 10.

Neptune eliminates Marlboro, 69-49

NEPTUNE — Neptune had a trio of players in double figures and used a pressing defense to eliminate Marlboro from the Central Jersey Group IV girls basketball playoffs, 69-49, last night.

The Scarlet Fliers' balanced scoring attack was led by Lisa Jones with 20 points followed by Joyce Bell with 16 and Annie Blaney with 14.

The win was the third time this season the Fliers have beaten Marlboro.

Neptune (19-4) will travel to Madison Central Thursday night. Madison Central eliminated Middletown South last night.

Junior Mary Szura led Marlboro (10-13) with 22 points while Mary Yezer added a dozen.

North press ruins 'Ridge'

By DAVE SALTER
The Register

MIDDLETOWN — Middletown North pressed and pressed and pressed until Cedar Ridge had enough and made its way back up Route 287 after the Lions advanced in the Central Jersey Group IV girls state basketball playoffs with a 57-40 win last night.

Cedar Ridge (12-10) may have still been seeing visions of White and Orange jerseys coming at them on their bus ride home and in their sleep as Nina Rozzo and Karen Bruen spearheaded a swarming Lion defense that forced numerous turnovers that led to easy scores.

"I'm new to North, but I know it's been a while since North has played in the state playoffs," first-year coach Ed Jones said. "It was a good ballgame for us and this was one of the goals we set at the beginning of the year ... to make it to the states."

"We've pressed all season and it has worked well for us," Jones continued. "Luckily we have a lot of good athletes who allow us to play that style of game and it has been a key for a number of our wins this season. It was a typical game for us, except that we never score 50 points."

Part of the reason for North's high score was the balanced attack.

"Another key was the balanced attack," Jones explained. "We like it when other teams play us man-to-man because we play against it everyday in practice."

North jumped out to a quick 6-0 lead but the visitors came right back on two straight jumpers by Tracy Robinson. North then went on a 10-0 run to end the quarter up 16-8. Donna Marotta, Bruen, Rozzo, Karen Ketterer and Mary McCann all had buckets in the spurt.

A jumper by Rozzo upped North's lead to 18-6, and Bruen, Marotta and Ketterer all added baskets before Cedar Ridge came back.

"I'm new to North, but I know it's been a while since North has been in the state playoffs."

Ed Jones
Middletown North girls basketball coach

Aileen Smith scored on an offensive rebound and Suzanne Karagits hit a free throw to pull Cedar Ridge back to 25-17 and Karen Rulli hit three free throws after a jumper by Cheryl Guerrero to cut North's advantage to 28-20 at intermission.

Any hopes of a Cedar Ridge comeback were quickly dashed after Nell Anderson's jumper cut the deficit to 28-22. Bruen scored the next eight points for North and 10 of the next 12 as the Lions went on a 12-2 spurt.

Rozzo added two free throws, Bruen one and Laura Bottone two as North increased its lead to 47-28 after three.

"I was hoping that it would be this way," Jones said in reference to his team's dominance throughout. "They (Cedar Ridge) are a very young team and they don't have any seniors. I don't think their county (Middlesex) is as strong as ours is."

Three Marotta buckets in the final period sealed the win for the Lions, who have the misfortune of traveling to Trenton Central Friday to tangle with the top-seeded Cyclones.

"Hey, we beat Neptune, we beat Holmdel ..." Jones said optimistically. "We're the underdog, but we're very happy to be there."

Bruen led the way for North with 20 points while Rozzo and Marotta had 10 apiece. Bruen also had 10 rebounds as did McCann while Ketterer added seven assists.

Robinson led Cedar Ridge with 13 points while Karagits added a dozen.

Rumson is beaten by Bishops' Brooks

ASBURY PARK — Darlyn Brooks scored 27 points to lead Asbury Park to a 76-59 win over Rumson-Fair Haven Regional in the first round of the Central Jersey, Group II Girls Basketball Tournament yesterday.

Brooks scored eight of her total in the first period as the Blue Bishops raced to a 26-10 lead. Ramona Brook had six of her 11 in that same quarter.

There were 45 fouls called in the game, and Brooks was 11 of 15 from the free throw line. Dorcas El had 13 points and nine rebounds for the Bishops, and Michelle Bailey added 13 points.

Both Bailey and Brooks had eight rebounds.

The Blue Bishops played pressure defense throughout, and Brooks alone had nine forced turnovers. The Bulldogs tried a zone but had little success preventing penetration by the Bishops.

Asbury Park will next play at Holmdel Friday. Holmdel won the first meeting between the two teams.

Mary Beth Tukis was high for Rumson-Fair Haven with 19 points. Cathy Anderson and Lorna O'Hara each contributed 13.

Navy garners CAA crown

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — Except for the usual problem at the free throw line, Navy's basketball team did just about what it wanted against George Mason last night.

Getting 26 points from David Robinson and 24 from Vernon Butler, No. 18 Navy never trailed and won the Colonial Athletic Association title with a 72-61 victory over the Patriots.

The triumph puts the Midshipmen, who have won 13 straight and 20 out their last 21, into the NCAA tournament for the second straight year.

"We're just about where we want to be at this time," said Robinson. "We got a good team effort, and that's what we're going to need to advance in the NCAA's."

Robinson said the Midshipmen expected a physical game. They got it, as Mason was whistled for a tournament-record 37 fouls.

"They were really banging me inside, but the referees called a close game, which helped us," noted Robinson, the CAA player of the year.

Navy made only 24 of 41 free throws against the Patriots and converted just 63 of 114 from the line in the tournament.

"That's one thing we really have to work on," said Robinson, who made 10 of 18 free throws Tuesday. "I should know, I'm the main culprit."

Mason Coach Joe Harrington admitted that his team was outmanned by the taller Midshipmen. "I don't think we could have beaten them tonight if we had the Army, Air Force and Marines," Harrington said.

In beating Mason for the third time this season, Navy improved its record to 27-4, setting a school record for victories in one year.

The Patriots, who got 17 points from Kenny Sanders and 14 from Ricky Wilson, had a seven-game winning streak broken and fell to 19-11.

Robinson, the tournament's most valuable player, scored five points as Navy went on an 11-4 run early in the second half to increase a 3-point lead to 53-43 with 10:41 remaining.

During the spree, Butler and Patriot center Mike Dufrene became involved in a shoving match with 14:22 to play, and although both benches emptied, no punches were thrown and no fouls were called.

Mason cut the margin to 57-53 with six minutes left, but could get no closer, as Robinson scored 4 points in a 7-0 Navy run that made it 64-53 with 3:52 left.

Bradley 65, Ill. St. 64
TULSA, Okla. — Hersey Hawkins made a layup with five seconds remaining and No. 9 Bradley extended its winning streak to 22 games by escaping a 65-64 victory over Illinois State in the Missouri Valley Conference basketball tournament.

The victory advanced Bradley, 31-1, to tonight's final against the winner of the Drake-Tulsa semi-final game, which was to be played later Tuesday night. The tournament champion receives an automatic bid to NCAA tournament.

Hawkins' basket gave Bradley, with the best record among Division I schools, its only lead of the game. The Braves trailed 64-58 with 3:38 left, but rallied by holding Illinois State scoreless the rest of the way.

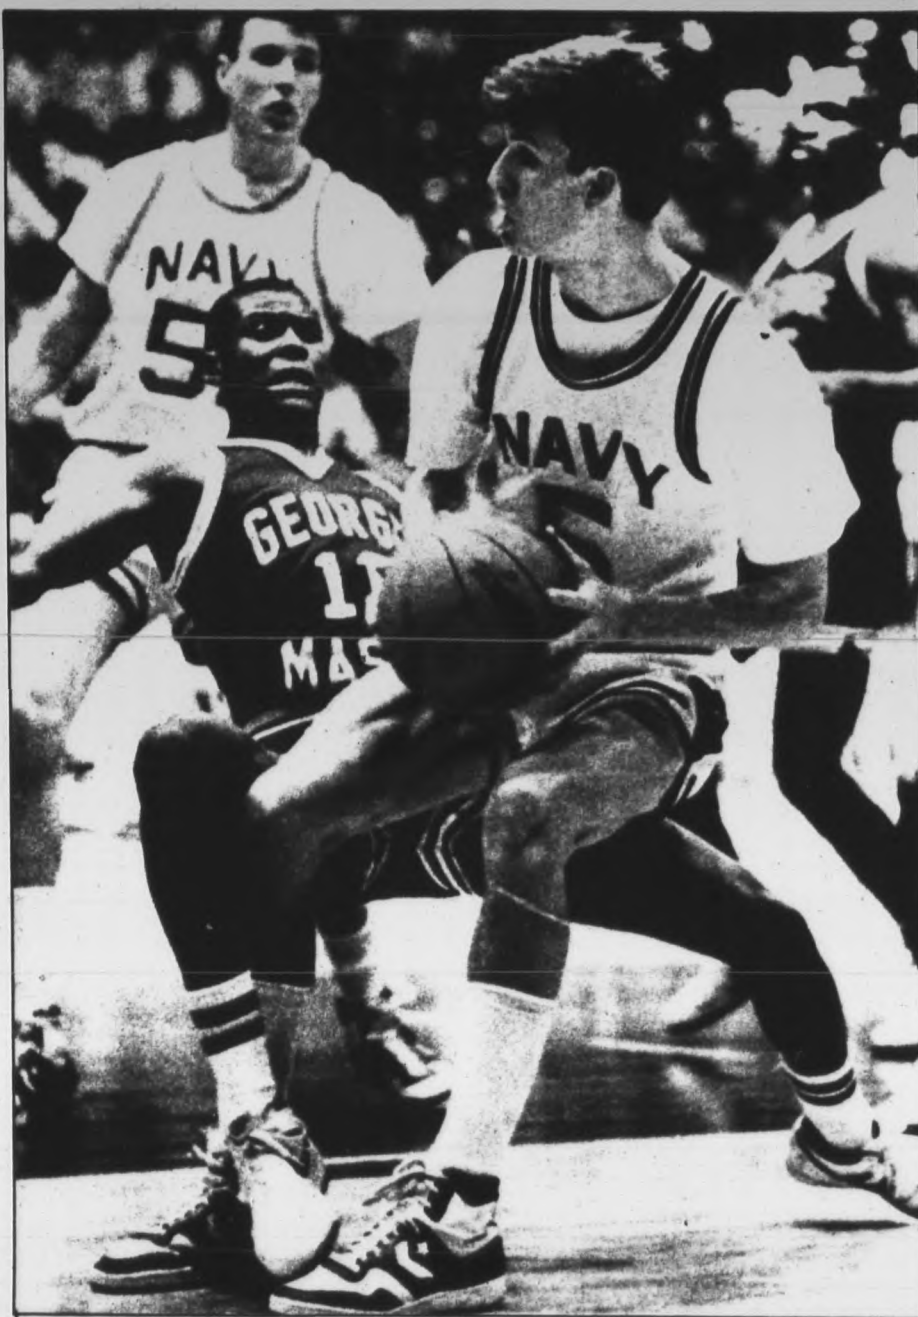

A dunk by 6-foot-8 center Mike Williams, who had 22 points, brought Bradley to within 64-63 with 1:16 left. Illinois State could not convert on its next trip down the floor and Bradley had its opportunity to win after taking a timeout with 20 seconds left.

After Hawkins' layup, Illinois State was unable to get off a shot before the buzzer. Illinois State finished its season at 15-14.

The Redbirds held the lead from the outset, going ahead 28-16 late in the half and holding a 34-25 advantage at intermission. Bradley shot 31 percent from the field in the first half.

Illinois State still led 42-31 with 16:18 left when Bradley began to chip away at the lead as it improved to 64 percent shooting.

Bradley last lost to Clemson on Dec. 28 and has the longest winning streak in Division I. The victory over Illinois State was Bradley's 13th triumph by four points or less.

Big 8: K. State forfeits

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Big Eight Interpretations Committee ruled yesterday that Kansas State must forfeit its four conference victories for using Norris Coleman, the 24-year-old freshman who has been declared ineligible.

A statement issued by the conference said "those games in which Kansas State basketball player Norris Coleman participated shall be forfeited for the purpose of the men's post-season tournament seeding." Kansas State had beaten Colorado twice and Oklahoma State and Nebraska once.

A Big Eight spokesman, Tim Allen, said yesterday that Kansas State officials have informed the league they were appealing the ruling. He also said K-State officials were in the process of gathering information to appeal the NCAA's ruling last week that made Coleman ineligible.

The committee's action followed the Feb. 27 decision of the NCAA Administrative Committee which said Coleman was ineligible to play for the Wildcats since he did not have a 2.00 grade point following his graduation from high school in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1979.

In games not involving the Kansas State forfeits, Missouri and Oklahoma tied for fourth with 8-6 records in the regular season. By virtue of tournament procedures, a drawing was held for the fourth slot which went to Missouri.

As announced yesterday by the Big Eight office, the seedings for the first round Friday of the Big Eight's post-season tournament in Kansas City are No. 4 Missouri vs. No. 5 Oklahoma at 12:10 p.m. CST; No. 1 Kansas vs. No. 8 Kansas State at 2:10 p.m.; No. 2 Iowa State vs. No. 7 Colorado at 6:10 p.m.; and No. 3 Nebraska vs. No. 6 Oklahoma State at 8:10 p.m.

The Interpretations Committee is made up of Big Eight Commissioner Carl James and the chairman and vice chairman of the conference. This year Gerald Lage of Oklahoma State is the chairman and William Baughn of Colorado is the vice chairman.

St. Joseph's aims at national title

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD (AP) — St. Joseph's is going to the NCAA tournament and Maurice Martin is already thinking about a national title.

St. Joseph's captured the Atlantic 10 Conference tournament on Monday night with a 72-64 victory over West Virginia as a physically doubtful Martin led the way with a 22 point performance.

"How far can we go?" Martin said. "All the way to the championship game, and we can win it."

Fairfield Coach Mitch Buonaguro is also thinking about an NCAA title after the Stags earned a berth in the postseason tournament with a 67-64 victory over Holy Cross in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title game Monday night.

Both games were played at the Brendan Byrne Arena, marking the first time an arena has hosted two conference title games on the same night.

The top-seeded Hawks chances of earning the conference's automatic bid to the tournament appeared slim Sunday as Martin underwent treatment to overcome back spasms that limited him to just six minutes of action in the conference semifinals against Duquesne.

The conference player of the year was still stiff on Monday morning, but his back loosened up during the day and he knew he would be ready to play by 5 p.m.

"I knew Mo would want to play, but I was ready not to let him play," said St. Joseph's Coach Jim Boyle whose team earned its first NCAA bid in four years. "Not until the medical consensus was 100 percent go, well almost, 90 percent."

Martin didn't start, but the senior guard entered the game two minutes later and never left.

"If I had a gun I would have shot him," said West Virginia Coach Gale Catlett after his team fell to 22-10. "He was shooting everything and it was going in."

The second-seeded Mountaineers still feel they have a shot at an at-large bid to the NCAA tournament despite the loss.

"We played hard, but it wasn't good enough," said senior forward Renardo Brown. "I think we will get an NCAA bid because we won 22 games against some very good competition."

"How far can we go? All the way to the national title."

Maurice Martin
St. Joseph's player

A tournament bid was at most an outside thought at Fairfield when the season began with Buonaguro as its new head coach, fresh from an NCAA championship as assistant under Rollie Massimino at Villanova.

The Stags had finished last in the MAAC the year before with an 11-18 mark. However, they turned things around, posted a 13-1 mark to win the conference regular-season title and then overcame Holy Cross and scoring machine Jim McCaffrey to earn its first NCAA bid.

"It reminded me of the national championship," said Buonaguro. "But this was my own team. It was a little more rewarding knowing I was the guy who had done it."

Actually, conference player of the year Tony George was the main man for the 24-6 Stags against Holy Cross. He scored 27 points, including 18 in the second half, when top-seeded Fairfield led by as many as 17 points.

McCaffrey, who was 0-for-9 in the first half, then got hot, scoring 24 of his 25 points, but it was not enough. The sixth-seeded Crusaders just made it close near the end as they fell to 12-18.

"The first half was a nightmare," said McCaffrey, who scored 89 points in the three postseason games and was named the most valuable player in the tournament. "Anytime you dig yourself that big a hole it's tough to come back."

"I'm ecstatic," said Stags forward Pat Yerina, who scored 16 points. "Last year at this time we had nothing to look forward to, now we have everything."

The NCAA will extend its tournament bids on Sunday, and Fairfield and St. Joseph's will find out where they are playing in the tournament.

Streaking Caps turn back Devils, 4-2

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Alan Haworth and Mike Gartner, two of three Washington players who reached the 30-goal level this season, scored in the second period to put the Capitals ahead as Washington defeated the New Jersey Devils 4-2 in an NHL game last night.

The victory was the fifth in row for the Capitals and their sixth straight over New Jersey after losing the opening game of the season series to the Devils.

Haworth, reaching the 30-goal plateau for the first time, scored on a rebound to put the Caps ahead 2-1 1:28 into the second period. Gartner added his 32nd goal on a power play at 19:21 when goalie Alain Chevrier was screened on his shot from the right wing.

Craig Laughlin extended Washington's lead to 4-1 on a rebound shot at 2:08 of the third period before Greg Adams scored on a power play at 4:48 to become the first 30-goal scorer in the four-year history of the New Jersey franchise.

New Jersey, seeking a franchise-record 10th road victory, took a 1-0 lead at 6:49 in the first period. Kirk Muller picked off an attempted rink-length pass by goalie Pete Peeters and scored before Peeters had time to retreat to the net. Scott Stevens tied it for the Caps at 8:56.

Peeters turned aside 23 shots while running his home record to 10-2. Since the franchise previously in Colorado and Kansas City moved to New Jersey, the Devils have a 3-21-4 record against Washington. The Devils are 0-13-1 here.

Blues 6, Nordiques 3

QUEBEC — Mark Hunter scored twice and goaltender Greg Millen turned aside 30 shots to lead the St. Louis Blues to a triumph over the slumping Quebec Nordiques.

The victory moved the Blues into second place in the Norris Division with 68 points, one point ahead of Minnesota and six behind first-place Chicago.

The Nordiques, who now have lost seven of their last eight games, scored the game's first goal but the Blues replied with four of their own goals before the Nordiques got their second of the night.

Richard Sevigny was in net for all the Blues goals. He was replaced in the third period by Clint Malarchuk, who stopped all five shots he faced.

Rob Ramage, Rick Meagher, Dave Barr and Kevin Lavallee also scored for St. Louis.

Michel Goulet, Paul Gillis and Anton Stastny were Quebec's scorers.

Islanders 6, Canadiens 3

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Pat LaFontaine, returning to the lineup after a 15-game absence because of a shoulder injury, recorded a goal and an assist as the New York Islanders defeated the Montreal Canadiens.

The Islanders' penalty-killing unit also played a big part in their victory over the Adams Division leaders, killing four disadvantages against the NHL's top-ranked power play.

LaFontaine's 23rd goal of the season at 4:35 of the second period tied the game 1-1 before the Islanders center assisted on the tiebreaking goal by Brent Sutter with 44 seconds to go in the session. The Islanders never trailed thereafter in winning their first game in three meetings with the Canadiens this season.

Chris Nilan scored twice for Montreal, his first goal coming on a 30-foot shot at 2:34 of the first period.

Sabres 6, Flyers 4

PHILADELPHIA — Adam Creighton scored the winning goal just 30 seconds after Philadelphia rallied to tie the game in the third period and Mike Foligno and Doug Smith each scored twice as the Buffalo Sabres skated to a victory over the slumping Flyers.

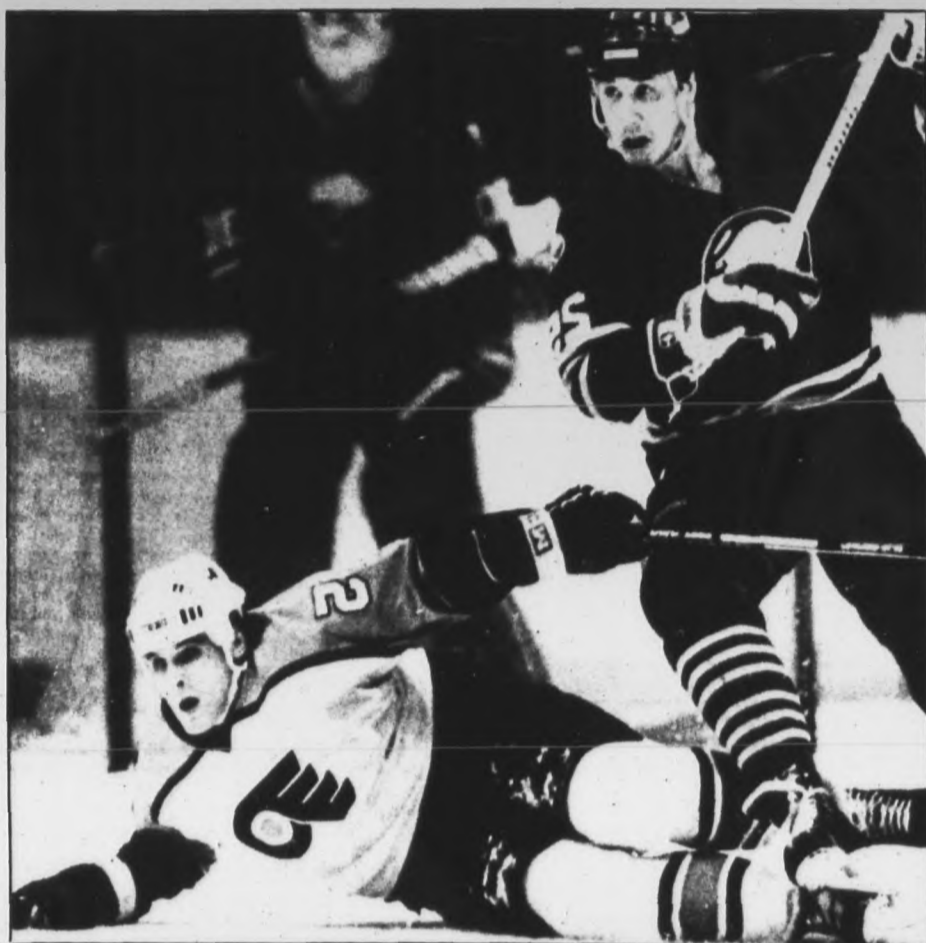

Philadelphia has lost four straight games and seen its first-place lead in the Patrick Division shrink to one point over Washington.

The Flyers struggled back from a 4-0 deficit to tie the game on Ilkka Sinisalo's second goal of the night at 4:20 of the third period. But Creighton fired a shot from the top of the right faceoff circle that beat goalie Darren Jensen through the pads.

Smith opened the scoring at 9:58 of the first period on a wrist shot from the right faceoff circle. Dave Andreychuk gave the Sabres a 2-0 lead six minutes later by catching goalie Bob Froese out of position.

Buffalo, playing a man short, made it 3-0 when Smith skated into the Philadelphia zone and fired home a 35-foot wrist shot at 3:15 of the second period. The Sabres scored their fourth goal on a pass redirected by Foligno 20 seconds later after Jensen replaced Froese in goal.

Doug Crossman put Philadelphia on the scoreboard, taking a pass from Sinisalo to blast an 18-foot slapshot past goalie Tom Barrasso at 9:21. Pelle Eklund found Barrasso out of position for a goal with only one second left in the period.

Thomas, Tripucka make it tough on Nets

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — If the Detroit Pistons felt any effect from seeing their club-record 10-game winning streak snapped last Sunday, they didn't show it.

"We just wanted to make sure we were ready to play," said Kelly Tripucka, who scored 13 of his 25 points in the decisive third quarter last night to lead the Pistons to a 120-103 NBA victory over the New Jersey Nets.

"We just thought, 'OK, we lost, so what?' We just got back to playing," Tripucka said.

Tripucka keyed a third-quarter burst that saw the Pistons break open a close game and roll to their 11th victory in 12 games. It also gave Detroit a team-record 15th straight home triumph.

Isiah Thomas led both teams with 28 points. The Nets help the Pistons by shooting 41 percent from the field in the contest.

"It easy for us to say we shot poorly," said Nets guard Otis Birdsong, "but the reason we lost is because we had too many breakdowns defensively."

New Jersey trailed by just six points at halftime, but Thomas scored six points and Tripucka four in the first 1:36 of the third quarter to extend the lead to 63-47. The Pistons continued to increase the margin, which reached 23 points with 1:10 remaining, before settling for an 89-71 lead.

The Pistons, buoyed by a 68 percent to 30 percent first-quarter shooting edge and a combined 26 points from Thomas and Tripucka, opened a 36-20 lead early in the second quarter and looked like they would finish the Nets early.

But New Jersey rallied, outscoring Detroit 21-13 over the next eight minutes to trim the margin to 49-41 with 2:36 left until halftime. Another late burst reduced the margin to 53-47 at intermission. Birdsong keyed the second-quarter spurt, tossing in nine points.

New Jersey was led by Mike Gminski's 20 points. Birdsong and Buck Williams added 19 and 17 points, respectively. Vinnie Johnson added 18 points and Bill Laimbeer had 21 rebounds for Detroit.

Knicks 119, Bullets 83
NEW YORK — Louis Orr and Gerald Wilkins had eight points each as New York outscored

Washington 31-17 in the third quarter, and the Knicks coasted to only their second NBA victory in 13 games, a decision over the Bullets.

The Knicks, who led only 55-50 at halftime, held Washington to 33 points in the second half, and it was their big third quarter that turned the game into a rout.

Patrick Ewing led the Knicks with 18 points, although he and the other Knicks starters did not play for the last 15 minutes. Wilkins and Darrell Walker added 16 points each and Orr 14.

Darren Daye led all scorers with 22 points for the Bullets, while Kevin McKenna added 14.

New York hit 15 of its first 20 shots in the game, but needed a 12-1 streak to lead 30-24 in the first minute of the second quarter. The Bullets stayed close by not giving the Knicks a free throw in the first period.

Ten second-quarter points by Ewing helped New York open a 10-point lead, but Daye sparked a 13-4 streak with nine points in a space of three minutes as Washington cut the deficit to 51-50.

Hawks 128, 76ers 121

ATLANTA — Dominique Wilkins scored 32 points and Doc Rivers had a team-record 21 assists to lead Atlanta to a victory over the Philadelphia 76ers, the Hawks' sixth victory in seven games.

Randy Wittman scored six points of his 24 points during an 8-2 run as the Hawks moved to a 113-97 lead with 5:31 left in the game.

The Hawks led 30-28 after one quarter, and went on a 11-4 surge at the start of the second period with Lorenzo Charles scoring four points. Atlanta led 64-54 at halftime.

In the third quarter the Hawks extended their lead to 87-68 with runs of 9-2 and 8-2 and led 98-83 after three periods.

Baskets by Charles Barkley, Terry Catledge and Maurice Cheeks brought the 76ers within 105-95 with 7:44 to play.

Wilkins made a basket and a free throw and Wittman scored a basket as the Hawks moved to a 120-107 lead with 1:13 to play. Barkley made two three-point goals and Perry Moss had one in the final minute for Philadelphia.

The 76ers were led by Moses Malone's 35 points while Barkley had 16 rebounds.

Kevin Willis added 20 for the Hawks.

Celtics 106, Bulls 94
CHICAGO — Kevin McHale scored 23 points and Robert Parish had 18 as the Boston Celtics topped the Chicago Bulls.

Parish and McHale helped Boston outscore the Bulls 29-16 in the third quarter. Bill Walton's six fourth-quarter points gave the Celtics a commanding 99-80 lead with 6:02 remaining.

Chicago's Charles Oakley led the Bulls with 22 points, while Boston's Larry Bird had just 15 points, well below his 25.3 points per game average.

The Bulls suffered a blow when forward Orlando Woolridge failed to report and instead flew to New York to see his agent, Larry Fleisher. The Bulls fined Woolridge, who had missed 10 of the last 12 games with an injured right wrist, one-$2nd of his reported $300,000 annual salary, or about $3,660.

After the Bulls grabbed an early 56-52 third quarter edge on a pair of Oakley baskets, the Celtics, led by a 14-point spree by Parish and seven by McHale, took a commanding 81-68 lead with one quarter remaining.

The Bulls, trailing 43-30 midway in the first half, scored 12 straight points and managed to hold the Celtics to a 52-52 half-time tie.

Reggie still commands attention

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Reggie Jackson's status with the California Angels may be blurred this spring, but he remains a focal point of attention. Although he apparently has lost his job in right field and will be used as the designated hitter, and although he hasn't signed his contract, Jackson's still the player who draws the most attention from fans, writers and photographers at the club's spring training complex here.

Angels management says Jackson's signing his 1986 contract, for $1 million-plus, is merely a formality since there's already a verbal agreement.

But he said: "There are some things about my future that I want to talk to them about. Let's be honest, no decision is going to be made without Jackie (wife of Angels owner Gene Autry). I met with them not long ago for four hours, and she did all the talking."

"Sure I want to play right field," said Jackson, who will turn 40 on May 18. "And I'm not happy about them taking my job away from me without even talking to me about it."

"But I'm 40 years old. I hit 27 home runs last year, but there is no guarantee about this year. If you know me, though, you know better than to count me out. If you're going to bet against me, you'd better hedge some of those bets ..."

"Right now, all I want to do is show them that I'm working hard. The only one I have to impress is that man over there," Jackson said, looking toward Manager Gene Mauch. "It won't be up to the (the Autrys), it will be up to him."

Mauch, who has indicated that George Hendrick will be the regular right fielder, said: "His (Jackson's) chances of playing right field are very, very remote. Last year, I knew he could do it. This year, I don't know if he can. It's all up to Reggie."

Jackson, who has hit 530 home runs in his 18-year career, remains one of the hardest workers in camp. He goes through a long routine of exercises, lifts weights and — according to the club's trainers — does 1,200 situps a day.

"God blessed him with a lot of ability," said Reggie Montgomery, a young outfielder with the Angels. "But he is one of the hardest-working individuals I've ever seen."

Simmons sees end nearing

CHANDLER, Ariz. (AP) — Ted Simmons, the switch-hitting catcher who rose to stardom with the National League's St. Louis Cardinals then helped Milwaukee to its only American League pennant in 1982, is in the twilight of his career, and knows it.

"It would surprise me if I'm with this team next year," the 36-year-old Simmons said this week at the Brewers' spring training camp. "The young kids they've got coming up, my salary being what it is, I think they'll buy me out."

"I've pretty much programmed it in my mind I won't be playing in Milwaukee next year," said Simmons, who is beginning his sixth season with the Brewers.

That probably won't disappoint too many Milwaukee fans who have watched the Brewers sink to the depths of the AL East. Last season, the Brewers finished sixth in the seven-team division.

They've been hard on Simmons, especially since he signed a three-year $1 million contract a year after the 1983 season. The Brewers have the option of signing Simmons for another $1 million in 1987, or they can buy out his contract for $50,000.

"The problem he has had, he was so good in the National League," said Sal Bando, a former Brewer teammate and now a special assistant to General Manager Harry Dalton. "He had been a superstar in the National League. People expected that over here."

"He's never had that kind of year over here, even though he's had some good years," Bando added. "Even his good years haven't been enough. The fans have expected more."

When Simmons was traded to Milwaukee at age 31 after 11 seasons in St. Louis, his NL batting average was .298 and he had hit more home runs than any switch-hitter in NL history — 172. After last season's .273 batting average and 12 home runs, his AL totals are .266 and 66 home runs.

"It would surprise me if I'm with this club next year."

Ted Simmons

Simmons, a native of the Detroit area, understands the frustrations of fans in a factory town like Milwaukee, saying, "I'm as blue-collar as the day is long."

"I don't harbor unhappiness with the fans of Milwaukee," Simmons said. "Most of the things I do to contribute, they'll never see."

"I have never in my life been full of grace or done my job in a flamboyant way," he continued. "I've just done my job."

"I don't hit them with sonic booms," he added. "They expect that, and they're conditioned to expect that from high-salaried players."

But Manager George Bamberger has no complaints, calling Simmons "first class."

"I didn't really know what to expect when I came back here last year," Bamberger said. "I didn't really know him. Ted Simmons did everything I can ask a ballplayer to do," from catching to being the designated hitter.

"The guy hit .270—something for us last year," Bamberger continued. "He drove in runs. He had a good year. He played first base for me, caught, DH-ed, even played third base a few times. Never once complained."

Balestrat upsets fifth seeded Lindqvist

WEST WINDSOR (AP) — Veteran Dianne Fromholtz Balestrat upset fifth-seeded Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden 7-5, 6-4 in the second round of the $150,000 U.S. Women's Indoor Tennis Championships yesterday.

Lindqvist, who dropped last year's final to Hana Mandlikova, hit forehand shots over the baseline for service breaks in the final game of each set. Balestrat, a 29-year-old Australian, became the first player to reach the quarterfinals.

"My volleying went pretty well and I was especially pleased following my last tournament."

Pam Shriver
Tennis professional

In first-round matches, Pam Shriver, Helena Sukova and Kathy

Jordan, all seeded, scored straight-set victories.

Shriver, the No. 3 seed, did not have her first serve under control, but a strong net game still carried her to an easy 6-2, 6-1 triumph over Marcella Mesker of The Netherlands in just 45 minutes.

"My volleying went pretty well and I was especially pleased following my last tournament match," said Shriver, who was upset by Kate Gompert in the first round of the International Players Championships last month.

Sukova, seeded fourth, got rolling after losing her serve in the opening game against Eva Pfaff of West Germany. The 6-foot-2 Czech then won 10 straight games on her way to a 6-1, 6-1 victory.

"I worked hard to break right back in the second game," said Sukova, who allowed just five points on her next six service games.

The eighth-seeded Jordan, who conquered Mandlikova and Martina Navratilova in Oakland, Calif. last week, beat Carina Karlsson of Sweden, 6-1, 7-5, having to rally from a 2-5 deficit in the second set.

Jordan's sharp volleys overcame some service lapses. She committed nine doublefaults.

In other first-round matches, Sylvia Hanika of West Germany outlasted Pascale Paradis of France 6-4, 7-6 (7-5), and Elise Burgin eliminated Mary Lou Piatek 6-2, 7-5, by winning the last three games and 12 of the final 17 points.

U.S. Opens Cup play in Ecuador

By BOB GREENE
AP Tennis Writer

With a new captain and without John McEnroe, the United States will begin its 1986 Davis Cup play Friday in Ecuador on a dreaded clay surface.

"It's going to be tough, no matter what happened years ago," said Brad Gilbert, who will make his Davis Cup debut in the three-day, first-round World Group competition.

The last time the two countries met on the slow, red clay courts in Guayaquil, Ecuador, was in 1967, when Arthur Ashe lost two singles matches and Clark Graebner and Marty Riessen lost in doubles. Every U.S. loss in the past five years has come on clay, as the Americans haven't won the Cup since 1982.

In the Davis Cup competition, only the 16 countries in the World Group actually compete for the prestigious international tennis trophy. Besides the United States at Ecuador, other first-round matchups will have defending champion Sweden at Denmark, West Germany at Mexico, Australia at New Zealand, Spain at Great Britain, the Soviet Union at Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia at India and Paraguay at Italy.

Besides the World Group, second-round matches will be played this weekend in the American and African zones, while first-round matches will be played in the Eastern Zone.

In the American Zone, Canada is at Chile, Brasil plays Commonwealth Caribbean at Jamaica, Uruguay is at Argentina and Peru is at Colombia. The Peru-Colombia tie will be contested Thursday through Saturday, the others will be played Friday through Sunday.

In the African Zone, Libya is at Zimbabwe, Kenya at Morocco and Nigeria at Senegal, all beginning on Friday, while the Ivory Coast will be at Algeria Wednesday through Friday. The African Zone winners advance to the European Zone first round, which begin play May 9-11.

The Eastern Zone matchups will have Chinese Taipei at Singapore, Hong Kong at Malaysia, Bangladesh at Thailand, the Philippines at Indonesia, and Sri Lanka at Pakistan.

Gilbert, ranked 10th in the world on the Hewlett-Packard-ATP computer, will probably play singles for the U.S. as Tom Gorman makes his debut as captain of the American squad. Three of Gorman's other players — Aaron Krickstein and doubles specialists Ken Flach and Robert Seguso — have one year of Cup experience, while Jimmy Arias has played only one Davis Cup match.

Wimbledon champion Boris Becker, ranked sixth in the world, Michael Westphal, Andreas Maurer and Hans Schwaier will lead West Germany against a young Mexico squad composed of Leonardo Lavalle, Francisco Maciel, Fernando Perez Pascal and Jorge Lozano.

If the favorites win, the World Cup quarterfinal pairings July 18-20 will pit West Germany against the United States, Aus-

Becker to defend

LONDON (AP) — Boris Becker will return to London in June to defend his title at the $237,400 pre-Wimbledon grass court event at Queens Club, organizers announced yesterday.

The 18-year-old West German is one of four top ten players to confirm their entry to the important June 9-15 event, which competitors use to hone up their grass court game in time for Wimbledon a week later.

Last year, Becker arrived at Queens ranked No. 35 in the world. He was seeded No. 11 and did not have a single Grand Prix tournament success to his name.

He won the event and 28 days later made history by becoming the youngest and first unseeded player to win the men's singles title at Wimbledon.

Now ranked sixth in the world, Becker will be seeded to meet Sweden's Stefan Edberg, the world's No. 5 player, in the final at Queens. Anders Jarryd of Sweden (No. 9) and American Brad Gilbert (No. 10) are seeded to reach the semifinals.

Others in the entry list include Americans Paul Annacone, Kevin Curren and Tim Mayotte. The winner will receive $32,000.

Doubles champions Ken Flach and Robert Seguso will be defending their title.

Coetzee kayoed

WEMBLEY, England, — Britain's Frank Bruno knocked out Gerrie Coetzee just 1:50 into the first round and set up a possible fight for the World Boxing Association heavyweight title.

Bruno knocked down the 30-year-old South African twice in the opening round. The second time, Bruno unleashed a hard right that left Coetzee, the former WBA champion, spread-eagled through the ropes. At that point, Canadian referee Guy Jutras stopped the scheduled 12-round bout at the Wembley Arena.

The fight was an elimination bout for Tim Witherspoon's WBA title. A British promoter already has booked Wembley's 100,000-seat soccer stadium for a potential showdown with the American champion in June.

Witherspoon faces a drugs probe and could be stripped of the title because traces of marijuana were found in his bloodstream after he took the title from countryman Tony Tubbs in January. A hearing on Witherspoon's situation will be held Friday in Philadelphia.

Castner dies

ST. PAUL — Paul Castner, who played football under Knute Rockne and founded Notre Dame's hockey program, died Monday of complications from cancer. He was 89.

Rockne offered Castner a scholarship sight unseen after getting a recommendation over the telephone. Castner never had played high school football but went to South Bend, Ind., with a reputation as a fine all-around athlete and a spectacular drop-kicker.

"He was probably the greatest drop-kicker in Notre Dame history — maybe at anyplace ever," said Notre Dame sports information director Roger Valdiserri. "He could drop-kick 45 yards."

In addition to his kicking chores, Castner played fullback and returned kicks at Notre Dame from 1920-22 but injuries cut short his football career. The year after he was graduated, the rest of the Notre Dame backfield became known as The Four Horsemen.

He became very close to Rockne, who called Castner one of his

Jets hire coach

WINNIPEG, Manitoba — The Winnipeg Jets named General Manager John Ferguson as coach of the National Hockey League team replacing Barry Long.

Jets spokesman Ralph Carter said Long had been appointed assistant to the general manager and would remain with the organization.

Ferguson's move behind the bench had been widely anticipated.

The Jets were fourth overall in the 21-team NHL last season, but have struggled this year and now lag in 19th place overall, having lost eight of their last nine games.

Ferguson said he had not decided whether he would remain coach for the rest of the season.

McLain finds trouble in federal penitentiary

ATLANTA (AP) — Denny McLain, a two-time Cy Young Award winner serving a 23-year prison term, was ordered yesterday to spend 15 days in isolation for having unauthorized documents, according to a lawyer representing inmates at the federal penitentiary.

Prison officials acted against McLain two days after The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution reported that prison officials had ordered pornographic videotapes and $700 worth of football tapes.

Warden Jack Hanberry canceled the order and said he would take disciplinary action against any employee who knew the nature of the pornographic tapes.

Leshaw was not allowed to attend the disciplinary meeting. He quoted a statement McLain read at the meeting as saying, "Someone ... fraudulently orders tapes and I become the scapegoat for this administration. The warden is embarrassed, but don't take it out on me."

McLain was accused of having file folders, an accounting book, purchase orders, a budget for the prison kitchen, a list of equipment and instructions on filing a lawsuit, according to Leshaw. Leshaw called it "a bunch of junk," much of which was found at a desk used by many inmates.

McLain's statement said inmates and officers have told him of kickbacks and inmates performing personal work for prison staff members.

He said he has been told of "new parts, working parts in motors, still sealed in original boxes, all shipped out of here as either garbage or scrap."

Prison spokesman William Noonan said the allegations will be investigated if McLain makes them through official channels.

McLain was convicted of extortion, drug dealing and racketeering.

He won 31 games as a pitcher for the 1968 world champion Detroit Tigers. He won the Cy Young Award in 1968 and 1969.

The other thing that ruined baseball is expansion. Seattle, Toronto. Who needs them?

Ugh! It just makes me sick thinking about all this stuff. Writing about it is even more painful. But I had to get it out of my system. Where have all the real baseball players and teams gone? If you find them, tell me.

I'll probably be in the garden staking the tomato plants.

Lazarus, who entered the game mid-way through the first quarter and immediately made his presence known around the basket. Lazarus eventually fouled out, but not before collecting nine points and some bruised Wall bodies.

"He's an explosive-type player," Warner noted of Lazarus. "He started all last year. Now, I like him to see the game first, then I tell him what to do."

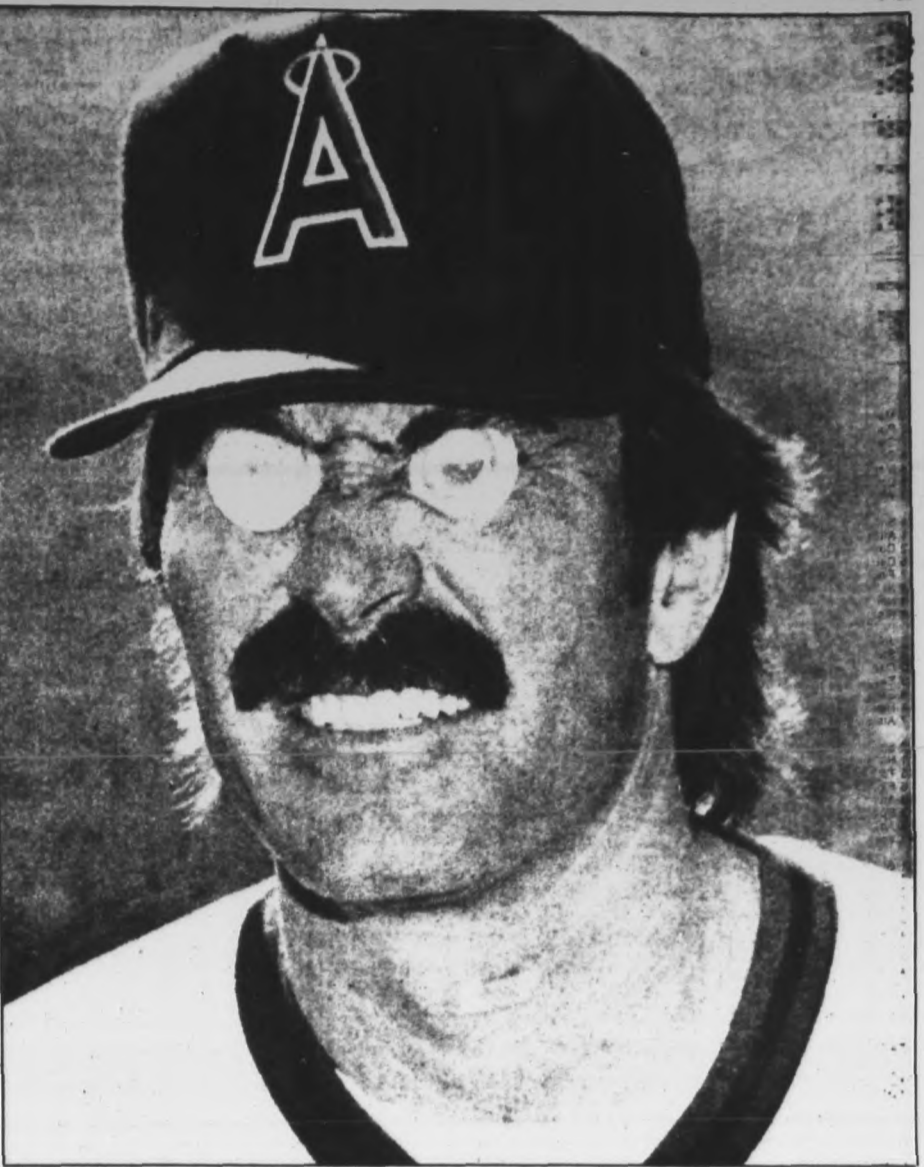

Wall made some fourth quarter noise, cutting the gap to 56-51 with just over three minutes remaining. However, Connell canned a layup, and Cowie sealed things up with a three-point play off a steal. The teams traded baskets the rest of the way.

Dermer had 10 points for the Patriots, and Cowie added eight. Scott led the way for Wall with 19 points, Tom Gifford added 13 and Mike DeSarno posted 12.

Friday at 7:30, the Patriots will travel to Bridgewater to meet Raritan West, top-seeded in Group III and holding a 23-1 mark. Warner knows the task will be difficult, to say the least.

"They're not gigantic, but they have two real good guards," the coach said of Raritan West. "But, every team has been bigger than us this year. We'll have to break their press to be successful."

Scrap the salt and butter, and potatoes get slimmer

And you thought potatoes were fattening.

Sure, when you smother them with gobs of fattening butter and mow them down with a huge steak, potatoes can put some inches on your waistline. But it doesn't have to be that way.

When used properly, potatoes can be a low-calorie, high vitamin answer for today's health nut. Just avoid that salt and butter.

Although we all need salt in our bodies to keep body fluids in balance and to regulate the nervous system, most of us consume 20 times more sodium than is necessary for good health.

To avoid health risks linked to excess sodium, try to cut as much sodium from the diet as possible, by relying on foods which naturally contain enough sodium for your needs.

For example, the potato is a good low-sodium food because it's especially nourishing and goes well with a great variety of herbs, spices and low-sodium seasonings. One medium potato has only 12 milligrams of sodium. It delivers protein, iron, phosphorus, thiamine, niacin and 50 percent of the vitamin C needed daily by the average adult.

To add full rich flavor to potatoes and reduce salt, create a balanced mixture of lemon, herbs and hot pepper sauce (a low-sodium condiment) and use it as the basis for a delectable side dish as in lemon-baked potatoes. The nutritional analysis of this recipe shows what a healthy accompaniment potatoes can be for poultry, fish, meat or meatless entrees while fully satisfying the palate without added salt and avoiding fattening butter.

Onion and garlic are also great flavor enhancers. They are teamed up with summer savory and snow peas in savory potato skillet, a low-sodium vegetable dish that has the added benefit of no cholesterol.

Once you've tried these low-sodium specialties, variations are a snap. Mushrooms, scallions and shallots pack a flavor punch, and oregano, curry, sesame seeds, thyme and tarragon enhance potatoes well.

Gradually cutting down on sodium in cooking by introducing such pleasing reduced-sodium alternatives is a good way to retrain the body not to "crave" salty foods. It only takes a few weeks for the body not to miss salt and it's a change that comes with a heightened enjoyment of the natural flavors of foods.

The following recipes were taken from the All-American Potato Cookbook. Although some of them are for desserts, remember to go lightly on them, or the pounds you are working off with exercise will reappear rapidly.

LEMON-BAKED POTATOES

- 1/2 cup unsalted margarine, melted
- 3 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 1/4 teaspoons minced garlic
- 1/4 teaspoon dried dill
- 1/4 teaspoon grated lemon peel
- 1/4 teaspoon hot pepper sauce

3 large potatoes

Taters for two

Spuds come in handy serving sizes

Being part of a twosome is one of life's joys — except when it comes to cooking. Most cookbook recipes and prepared foods are designed to serve four or more, leaving the "twos" with leftovers, spoiled food and meal-time monotony.

With a little planning, cooking for two needn't be a bore. Small households are wise to buy foods in the most versatile form. Potatoes are one of the most versatile foods around — great for breakfast, lunch, dinner and even snacks. For example, a baked potato can be eaten as is, or used to make potato salad, hashbrowns, an omelette or potato "skins."

Whenever possible, buy staple food items — meat, produce and bread — in one or two serving portions. Potatoes are a good choice because each is a single, nutritious serving.

In fact, new studies show that one medium-size potato (½ pound) provides 50 percent of the U.S. RDA of Vitamin C, 10 percent of niacin, and 8 percent of thiamin and iron, with only 110 calories.

A special supper "pour deux" stars potatoes Lorraine — a tasty quiche variation featuring potatoes, bacon, onion and Swiss cheese. Add a crisp green salad dressed in a light vinaigrette and a loaf of crusty French bread and you've got a quick and delicious meal just for the two of you.

POTATOES LORRAINE

- 4 slices bacon, cooked crisp, drained
- 2 eggs, beaten
- ¼ cup unseasoned bread crumbs
- ¼ teaspoon pepper

- 2 medium potatoes (about ½ pound), unpeeled, grated
- 1 cup chopped onion
- 1 cup shredded Swiss cheese (about 4 ounces)

Paprika

Crumble bacon and set aside. In large bowl combine eggs, bread crumbs, and pepper. Mix thoroughly. Stir in potatoes and onion. Pour into buttered shallow 3-cup baking dish or two individual 1½-cup baking dishes. Top with bacon and cheese.

Dust with paprika. Bake in 350 degree oven about 20 to 30 minutes until lightly browned. Makes 2 main dish servings.

Studies on wine stir up conflict

By CHARLES B. RUBINSTEIN

An event highlighting the impact of wine on health and its role in the American lifestyle occurred in Washington, D.C., on Monday of last week. The program was titled, "A Symposium on Wine, Health and Society."

A panel of physicians and researchers reviewed the latest work on wine's healthful attributes, and the role it plays in American life. The symposium was hosted by the Winegrowers of California and administered by the Wine Institute.

The Winetaster

Speakers in the morning session addressed the subjects of wine's role in increased and enhanced longevity, wine service in hospital and geriatric care, how wine supports good nutrition and healthy lifestyles, the differences between alcoholic beverages, and the effectiveness of higher taxes on alcoholic beverages as a deterrent to alcohol abuse. The afternoon program was devoted to presentations by federal agency administrators whose jurisdiction includes alcohol and health issues.

In the opening talk of the morning session, Kenneth Pelletier, assistant clinical professor for the departments of medicine and psychiatry at the University of California, San Francisco, discussed evidence that moderate wine consumption can play an important role in health. He cited studies that showed moderate alcohol consumption can aid in reducing coronary heart disease and total overall incidence of other diseases. Pelletier stated it can also decrease risk factors that lead to excessive and abusive drinking. And he warned that high-risk groups such as children of alcoholics, teen-agers, pregnant women and alcoholics should be discouraged from any alcohol consumption.

Robert Kastenbaum, the director of Arizona State University's adult development and aging program, reported the not-too-surprising result that wine service in hospital and geriatric facilities helps meet the demand for quality services requested by patients. Kastenbaum cited a 1985 survey that showed that most hospitals in the top 65 U.S. metropolitan areas offer wine on their menus, and an additional 15 percent will soon offer it. He also reported that when wine is served in geriatric homes, a consistent pattern of benefits for clients emerge.

David N. Whitten, a lecturer in physiology and the chief of the emergency department at Kaiser Permanente Medical Center, reported on a worldwide scientific literature search that distinguishes the effects of wine, beer and distilled spirits. He cited results showing distilled spirits cause higher peak blood alcohol levels even when diluted to the same concentration as wine and beer.

The effects of distilled spirits on one hand, and wine on the other, is a subject of great controversy. The two industries involved in their production and distribution have lined up experts and have commissioned studies.

The distilled spirits industry cites studies that show that the effect of alcohol is the same whether consumed as wine or spirits. The wine industry cites studies showing that alcohol in wine does not have the same impairment effect. Both sides are continuing to fire salvos of data.

Whitten's talk is sure to be used as ammunition in the war.

Dale Heien, an associate professor of agricultural economic at the University of California, Davis, presented data that refuted the pro tax argument that raising alcoholic beverage taxes, as part of a larger control issues agenda, is a useful mechanism to reduce alcohol problems.

On this issue, the distilled spirits, wine and beer industries find themselves in rare agreement.

Wine expert Charles Rubinstein's column appears every Wednesday in The Register.

Cash refund grows popular with consumers

By MARTIN SLOANE

I keep a running count on the mail I receive from readers who say nice things about manufacturers' refund offers, and the offer that won their greatest approval in 1985 was "Cash on the Line," which has appeared on more than 60 million packages of Kellogg's Corn Flakes and Frosted Mini-Wheats.

Cash on the Line was a winner for several reasons, foremost of which was its high cash value. It offered smart shoppers a cash refund of as much as $12 for sending in their proofs of purchase (not coupons, but cash that could be spent on anything).

The offer, printed across the entire back of the cereal box, shows 16 different food and household products arranged in rows like a bingo card. Earnings are progressive, which means that the more rows for which you send proofs of purchase, the more money you receive. One row gets you $1.50 and filling the four rows both horizontally and vertically earns you the full $12.

Super Market Shopper

The promotion was the creation of Peter Palmer and Doug Lauder of Brainwaves Associates of Charleston, S.C., who first offered it in Canada several years ago. In 1984, they brought Cash on the Line to the United States, with the support of Kellogg's.

Refund requests poured in, and by the time the expiration date rolled around, more than 465,000 consumers had participated.

What surprised Palmer and Lauder and the participating manufacturers was that 83 percent of the people had sent in all the proofs required for the full $12 refund. This meant that a great many people tried products they had not previously used, which is one of the most important objectives, from the manufacturers' point of view.

Not only is Cash on the Line a high-value offer, but it also returns a very significant percentage of money that a consumer must lay out to purchase the products. To get the full $12, Lauder estimates that a shopper might spend between $35 and $38 at normal retail prices.

Smart shoppers who have purchased most of the items on sale and using cents-off coupons often tell of bringing their cost at the checkout counter down to less than $25.

Cash on the Line has also been popular with consumers because, of the 16 products included in the 1985-86 promotion, only one (Clairol) requires a cash-register tape as part of the proof of purchase.

Many readers were also pleased that this offer had no limit. You can send for it as often as you want to, as long as you follow the instructions. "When people purchase these products, they deserve to get the refund," said Lauder.

Ariliss Benham, Kellogg's consumer consultant, recounts stories of consumers lining up in supermarkets waiting for the delivery of the last product needed to get their full $12.

"It paid for a class trip at a school in Wyoming," says Benham. "Occasionally, we receive calls from people who do not use a product to ask if they can make a substitution. I tell them that the last few products needed for the full $12 are costing them almost nothing, so why not contribute them to the needy."

If you would like to participate, there still may be time, because the Cash on the Line expiration date is June 30, 1986, but you should act quickly since the specially marked Kellogg's boxes are fast disappearing from the shelves, and the mail-in form on the box is required.

Cash on the Line has been so successful that it is coming off the packages. Next time out, it will appear in the form of a Sunday newspaper insert distributed in 40 million newspapers on Sept. 7 of this year. It will be the biggest and best yet, with 20 brands and refund values of up to $16. Once again, there is no limit to the number of times you can send in.

I can hardly wait.

Think of ground beef as clay, and you are the sculptor

The word "hamburger" usually conjures up puffy buns, ketchup and french fries ... and a hefty calorie count!

But, in fact, ground meat can be the calorie watcher's safest bet at the meat counter. Because you can specify the fat content of the ground meat you buy, you can make the least fattening choices — not only the trimmest beef, but also ground meat made from naturally lean choices like veal and turkey.

Lower-calorie ground meat can be the start of creative main courses. Try these, for example:

VEAL CUTLETBURGER

2 teaspoons olive oil, divided
1 pound fat-trimmed ground veal
1 egg, beaten (or equivalent no-cholesterol egg substitute)

Barbara Gibbons

Grated peel of one lemon
¼ teaspoon grated nutmeg
Salt (or onion salt), pepper, to taste
6 tablespoons Italian-seasoned bread crumbs
Spray a large non-stick griddle or skillet with cooking spray and add 1 teaspoon of the olive oil. Combine remaining ingredients, except bread crumbs, and mix lightly.
Sprinkle half the bread crumbs on a shallow plate. Shape one-quarter of meat mixture into a flat "cutlet" and press into the crumbs, lightly coating both sides. Place "cutlet" on griddle, and make 3 more with remaining meat mixture and bread crumbs.

Brown over moderate heat. Add remaining teaspoon of oil and turn "cutlets" to brown other side evenly. Cook about 2 to 3 minutes per side. Makes 4 servings, 235 calories each with egg; 10 calories less per serving with egg substitute.

POOR MAN'S VEAL PARMIGIANA: Follow preceding recipe. Top each serving with one-half cup oregano-seasoned tomato sauce and a thin (half-ounce) slice of part-skim mozzarella cheese. Additional calories, 75.

PAPRIKA VEALBURGERS
1 pound fat-trimmed ground veal
½ cup plain low-fat yogurt
2 tablespoons Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon dried onion flakes
1 tablespoon paprika
Garlic salt, pepper, to taste
2 cups sliced mushrooms
Combine ingredients, except mushrooms. Shape into 4 "cutlets." Arrange on a baking tray, in a single layer; surround with mushrooms. Bake in preheated 475-degree oven without turning, 8 to 10 minutes each side. Makes 4 servings, 200 calories each.

no fat added, over moderate heat. When underside is brown, break meat into bite-size chunks and turn to brown evenly. When browned, remove meat from skillet and set aside. Drain and discard any fat.
Add remaining ingredients to skillet, except rice and hamburger, heat to boiling. Lower heat, cover and simmer 5 minutes. Stir in rice and simmer 15 minutes more; stir occasionally. Add hamburger chunks. Cover and simmer just until heated through. Makes 6 meal-size servings, 280 calories each.

ADVICE

Heloise

Avoid clogging

DEAR HELOISE:

I lost a hint you gave in your column once for cleaning kitchen sink drains. I would appreciate it so much if you would reprint it. — Grace Werblow

I would be happy to but, remember, this process is for simply keeping a sink clean and free-flowing — not to unstop it once it is completely clogged. Call a professional plumber in the latter case. However, since prevention is always worth a pound of cure, every week pour one cup of baking soda into the drain, followed by one cup of vinegar.

As the soda and vinegar foam, flush the drain with very hot water. In between times if you have a disposal, be sure to run plenty of water down the drain when it is in use so as to lessen the chances of stopping up the drain. — Heloise

Ready-to-use garlic

Dear Heloise: I love to use garlic in cooking but hate to fuss with it every time I need a clove or two.

Solution: Peel a whole bulb or two, store in a small jar and cover the garlic with oil. I prefer olive oil but any salad oil will do. Store it in the refrigerator and then, when needed, the garlic is ready.

A plus is that garlic-flavored oil is ready to use in salads or whatever. When the oil is used, be sure to replace it so the cloves are well covered at all times. — V.G.

Quick and easy

Dear Heloise: To cut whole mushrooms quickly without waste, use a wire egg slicer — the kind for hard-boiled eggs.

This gives each mushroom slice a clean edge which is not too thick. — Janice Marek

Money saver

Dear Heloise: As my budget won't stretch for everything I need, I try to make do whenever I can...

So, instead of buying recipe cards, I save all the plastic inserts that come packaged with bacon.

I wash the plastic, dry it completely, then store in a zipper top plastic bag.

These "cards" can be cut to fit most any size recipe box. — Mrs. Ella Terrell

Coffee making

Dear Heloise: Here is how I solved the problem of the collapsing coffee filter.

Wet the filter before putting it in the coffee basket. It will cling to the sides of the basket with no drooping. I can now use any brand of filter without any problems. — Ann Cisney

Your hint does help solve one of life's little problems. Thanks for dropping in to our column. — Heloise

No waste

Dear Heloise: Have you ever tried to empty the last bit of cream of tartar, cinnamon or whatever out of its small can? It's almost impossible.

I just take a piece of wax paper, then tap the last smidgen out of the can onto the paper. Crease the paper to form a V, then add the spice to the newly opened can. Nothing is wasted. — D.R.W.

Freezer tip

Dear Heloise: After defrosting any type freezer, use a vegetable non-stick spray to thoroughly spray the interior walls.

It is absolutely amazing how fast the ice will fall away next defrosting time. — Thelma Mappes

Homemade fingerprint

Dear Heloise: Use freezer paper for a work surface when you work with your finger-paints. Apply liquid starch from the bottle to the paper and add powdered tempera colors and mix well.

You can experiment with other colorings such as food color or liquid tempera. — Louise

College student hint

Dear Heloise: I thought the following "hint" might be useful for mothers of college students.

I was worried about my son ruining his clothes as he had to do his own laundry.

I used a "marking" pen and, in large numbers on the clothes tabs at the back, I wrote the following: All the whites, I numbered 1, all the light colored I numbered 2, all the darks were numbered 3. I told him, don't mix the numbers. Wash the same numbers together. I also told him any articles he questioned that were very soiled, to launder them alone but to always read the care label. — Dorothy Owens Sales

Coffee filters

Dear Heloise: After a few years of trying to find an easy way to remove a single coffee filter from the package, I came up with a solution.

I used a straight pin which works perfectly. I keep a pin handy by the coffee maker. — Mrs. Ada Wagowick

Pen for baby

Dear Heloise: We are non-smokers, so when our baby arrived my husband was at a loss about what to hand out instead of cigars. A friend suggested giving out ballpoint pens printed with "It's a girl" or "It's a boy."

She said she read it in one of your columns and I just wanted to let you know it's still a wonderful way for non-smokers to share their great day. — Jenny

They also make great keepsakes! Congratulations! — Heloise

Send your favorite hint to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, Texas 78216. She can't answer your letter personally but she will print the greatest hints received in her column.

Dr. Joyce Brothers

Keep on talking

Dear Dr. Brothers: My husband says he isn't cheating, but I'm sure he's lying. He tells me I'm being suspicious, but how could there be as many wrong phone calls as I've been getting lately? There were so many I decided to have our phone changed. My husband says he's working too hard to have an affair. I wish I could put my mind at rest. — A.M.

Dear A.M.: Poor sex at home is the prime reason most men give for extramarital affairs. Incompatibility and lack of understanding ranked in first and second places as reasons for women cheating.

Only you and your husband can know the quality of your life.

If it isn't good, why not focus on trying to improve it and also trying to improve the overall quality of your relationship? This would be more productive than to simply become obsessed with frustration and worry about your husband's interest in other women.

Usually, men who are cheating on their wives leave a number of clues, which often indicates these men actually want to be caught. Strange phone calls where the spouse suddenly hangs up when the wife walks in the room is a rather obvious clue.

The phone calls you describe could indicate your husband is having an affair, or perhaps another woman would like to have a relationship and your husband isn't cooperating. You may get a better clue about this now that you've had your number changed.

If the lines of communication between you and your husband are in good order, if you share your feelings, your worries, your hopes for the future, chances are you'll be able to repair problem areas before it's too late.

Dear Dr. Brothers: I'm concerned because my husband and I have only been married a little over a year and I feel our marriage is running downhill. It's nothing major. We're not involved with anyone else, but it's like all the glow has gone. Honestly, it's a bit dull and I didn't anticipate this. — P.B.

Dear P.B.: You're going through a period where the honeymoon is over and many couples start looking at each other shortly after the first year with the realization that they're not as perfect as they thought they were.

They're disappointed, disillusioned and they begin to wonder whether they made the right decision. As family counselor Dr. Laura J. Singer-Magdoff and many others have pointed out, the first year of marriage is a time for adjustment, for learning the totally different ways of another person. If couples can accept this, it will help marriage to grow and survive.

Often, young couples come into marriages with unrealistic, romantic expectations. Eventually, these are bound to crumble the glitter and glamour wears off and what is left may seem "a bit dull." When this happens, however, it's up to you and your spouse to bring some creativity and imagination to your union.

Try breaking your old patterns. If you've always done something one way, try doing it in another. Add spice and variety to your life. If it's dull, make your relationship more stimulating. It's up to you.

Ann Landers

Should she wed?

Dear Ann Landers: I am a 30-year-old female who has multiple sclerosis. I live alone and am very independent.

I am in love with a nice-looking man. He has had a drinking problem and the reputation of being a partyer.

I've known "Larry" six months and he wants to marry me. He has slowed down a lot in his drinking and says he will taper off after we are married. I am a churchgoer. He is not. He has promised to take me to church every Sunday.

Is it possible for a man to really love a woman in a wheelchair? I can walk a little and making love isn't a problem. It would break my heart to marry him and have something go wrong.

Larry says he wants to take care of me, but I am — Unsure in Fla.

Dear Unsure: If the man has a drinking problem, you might wind up taking care of HIM. The question is not whether a man can really love a woman in a wheelchair (many do), it's what kind of a marriage you would have with a boozier who likes to party. I suggest that you give him a year's trial and see how he behaves. Then decide.

Dear Ann Landers: When educators advise parents to read to their children, they assume all parents can read! Unfortunately, this is not true. It is estimated that approximately 25 million people in this country are functionally illiterate.

These folks are genuinely interested in their children's education because they realize how their own opportunities have been limited by their inability to read. They want something better for the next generation.

Local literacy councils, adult education programs, libraries and churches in many states are involved in literacy programs. If any of your readers know of someone who needs instruction or would like to volunteer to help teach these folks, they can call the Contact Center, 1-800-228-8813 (in Nebraska, 1-800-228-3225) for a referral to a local program. — Joyce Bertman, Coordinator, Literacy Program, Literacy Council of Northern Virginia

Dear J: Your council is very much on the ball. I received many letters informing me of the work you do. All suggested the hotline.

I hope my readers who have need for this service will hop to it. People who cannot read miss so much in life. Many are on welfare because they can't fill out employment forms and are ashamed to admit it. They are handicapped throughout life because they are unable to follow written directions. Please, if you know anyone like this, do them the biggest favor in the world and get them to call this number.

Dear Ann Landers: "Been Around in Bakersfield" suggests that single women check a potential lover's underwear to find out if the man is married. She said married men wear boxer shorts and single men wear bikinis.

No wonder "Been Around" has been around. It is difficult to imagine circumstances under which you get to check a man's underwear without becoming acquainted with the contents. Sign me — An Old Boxer in Charlottesville

Dear Old Boxer: Your premise is hard to argue with. I won't try.

How to — and how much? Find out with Ann Landers' new booklet, "How, What, and When to Tell Your Child About Sex." For your copy send 50 cents along with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Ann Landers, P.O. Box 11995, Chicago, Illinois 60611.

Record companies rethink strategy

By JONATHAN TAYLOR
Los Angeles Daily News

LOS ANGELES — In the wake of a report last week by the "NBC Nightly News" and a federal grand jury investigation into charges of "payola" and ties to organized crime in the record industry, Capitol-EMI Records and MCA Records have sharply reduced the controversial use of independent promoters.

Motown Records reportedly is planning to follow suit, although a company spokesman refused to respond to the report Monday.

Independent promoters are hired by record companies to get songs played on radio stations. Estimates show that record companies spend up to $80 million a year for independent promotion, with up to $150,000 spent to promote one record.

For years, unconfirmed reports have circulated throughout the music industry alleging that some independent promoters have ties to organized crime and use cash, drugs and other forms of payola to convince radio programmers to play records or at least list them on weekly charts.

Capitol-EMI — parent company of Capitol, EMI-America, Manhattan and Blue Note records — has suspended altogether the use of independent promoters, while MCA cut back significantly their use of the promoters.

In a prepared statement, Capitol-EMI president and chairman Bhaskar Menon said, "Although we have no evidence to support the NBC allegations, the necessary and responsible corporate conduct must be to reassure ourselves that our company does not contribute unwittingly to any problems that may exist."

The issue gained prominence last week when the "NBC Nightly News" broadcast an investigative report bringing the payola charges to light. Among other things, the NBC report cited unnamed industry sources who claimed that record companies pay independent promoters "essentially to do the dirty work of the industry."

The NBC reports came at the same time that a federal grand jury in New York intensified its investigation into the payola and other corruption charges. The grand jury subpoenaed the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) for all documents relating to the practice of independent promoters in the music industry for a hearing tomorrow.

Although the association is cooperating with the subpoena, it is also sharply refuting the allegations. Several hours before receiving the subpoena, the RIAA issued a statement that said, in part:

"We have no knowledge that any firm or individual with whom our companies do business is engaged in any illegal activities, contrary to reports in recent television network broadcasts. If law enforcement agencies were to inform us that such individuals or firms are engaged in any illegal activities, we will take immediate and decisive corrective action."

"Until such time, we find it unjustified and distressing that the recording industry is so indiscriminately maligned by insidious innuendo."

Most record companies, including CBS Records — the industry's largest — are standing behind the recording association's statement.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS HAS OWN GAME

Atlantic Highlands — Move aside "Monopoly." Leave us alone "Life." There's a new game in town "The Game of Atlantic Highlands." Yes, it's true. There is a new board game stirring our fair town. The board game resembles one used for Monopoly except properties aren't Marvin Gardens or Boardwalk but the names of Atlantic Highlands businesses and industries. And the money involved is more than Monopoly originators ever dreamed of using. The game is simple enough for anyone to learn in five minutes, there will only be room for 37 businesses. Any business wishing to insure its inclusion in the board may contact Pat Stoll 291-4479 or Sally Brittingham 291-3345.

FROZEN WATERFALL — Tourists appear to be standing on the icy brink of a frozen waterfall at Niagara Falls last weekend. Actually, they're behind a protective railing at Observation Point, where freezing temperatures and a blowing mist from the adjacent Horseshoe Falls formed this icy sculpture.

Your Horoscope

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5
Born today, you are a strong-willed, confident individual, one who continually makes his way in the world at a good, strong pace and with a minimum of fuss. In fact, you tend to get your way even when you do not push for it, and your seemingly reserved, even indifferent manner can often lull many an adversary into a false sense of security — at which point you invariably get the upper hand. You have a great many talents, and any one of these may indeed be enough to propel you to the pinnacle of success.

You are a home lover, and you derive a great deal of your energy and inspiration from your family. Close, intimate relationships will always be of great importance to you, though a happy marriage may seem to be an elusive ideal you must pursue for some time before you are satisfied in that regard.

Also born on this date are Frank Morris, novelist; Judd Hirsch, actor.

To see what is in store for you tomorrow, find your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

THURSDAY, MARCH 6
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Your search for the ideal today will be a long one. Your patience — as well as your tolerance — will surely be tested.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Concentrate on your own activities today. Avoid prying into the affairs of others. Maintain a low profile.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) —

Though you may not arrive at any long-term solutions today, you will surely learn much about yourself through exploration.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Proceed with caution in all affairs that involve emotional response today. Avoid irrational thought or behavior.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Sacrifice on your part may not be the answer for a friend in need. Sit down, talk it out. Explore all possibilities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 23) — Your search for the missing piece may be in vain today — though you can still arrive at the solution to the puzzle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 23) — Seek a new creative outlet today in order to remedy dissatisfaction, restlessness. Impulsive action may pay off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) — Time is on your side today — but it will not wait for you. Use it wisely, economically.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Luck plays large role today — though what you do with it will make the difference between success and failure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You would be wise to share your ideas with one whose assistance might pay off — but do not reveal all your secrets!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Protective instincts may be aroused today as a result of unexplained turn of events early in the morning.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Friend's comments may get you thinking today about your use of your own abilities. Are you holding yourself back?

Bridge Advice

"It was my own fault that I bid a grand slam off the king of trumps," Dr. C.P. Chang concedes, "but 50 years as a radiologist have taught me that X-ray eyes sometimes solve a problem."

Playing today's hand in a Shanghai tournament, Dr. Chang thought of finessing through East for the king of trumps but saw a chance to find out if East really had the king.

Dr. Chang took both high hearts, cashed the ace of clubs, ruffed a club in dummy and led dummy's queen of hearts.

FOOLISH FEAR
Fearing that South planned to discard a loser, East ruffed. South overruffed, ruffed another club and led the jack of hearts. East ruffed again, and Dr. Chang overruffed.

Dr. Chang reasoned that if East had the king of trumps, he would know the real problem and would not waste his trumps to stop a discard that South couldn't possibly need.

If East didn't have the king of trumps, only one play would work. Dr. Chang therefore led the ace of trumps and had no further problem.

DAILY QUESTION
You hold: ♠8765♥QJ63♦AK62♣Q
62♣Q. Partner bids one heart, and the next player bids three clubs (a weak shut-out bid, according to the system used by these opponents). What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid four clubs, suggesting a slam in partner's suit. If partner has several losers in the unbid suits, he bids four hearts, and you can subside. If he has strength in spades and diamonds, he can accept your slam invitation. A jump to four hearts wouldn't show your full strength.
