Recycling

It'll affect everyone in county

By LISA R. KRUSE The Register

The green glass goes in one container. The brown glass in another, and the clear in yet another.

Next to those will be a fourth container for aluminum. And newspapers will now be bundled and tied with a cord, no longer thrown in the trash trash.

And depending on where you live, you either place these containers and bundles out at the curb on certain days bundles out at the curb on certain days of the month, or else you load them all in your car and drive to a central dropoff point.

If you don't do this, you face a fine of up to $500 or 90 days in jail.

And none of this is very far off.

Recycling is in your future. As a matter of fact, it's just around the corner.

Most of Monmouth County's 53 municipalities have passed ordinances stating that recycling will start as of April 1. Some towns plan to begin their programs on Jan. 1.

The county has received an extension from the state, giving the municipalities six more months — until Oct. 1 — before recycling has to begin. But most of the towns are going to stick to the old deadline of April 1.

The towns were required by Mon-

The towns were required by Mon-mouth County to send both recycling ordinances and implementation plans into the state. Not all of them did so. But following are what the towns have forwarded to the county's Office of

■ Aberdeen — No recycling plan has been submitted, although the recycling ordinance states that mandatory recycling will begin April 1, and will not include leaves or grass.

GROWTH FOR THE FUTURE — Richard Rosen, owner of Monmouth Recyclers in Long Branch, poses among a collection of clear glass to be recycled. Rosen is expanding his business to meet the expected demands that new recycling plans will incur.

Businessman says simplicity will make programs effective

wat.

Rich Rosen says he has a better way.

"The less restrictions you place, the more compliance you'll get," says Rosen, president of Monmouth Recyclers. "And to top it all off, the icing on the cake is the more money you'll make."

What Rosen is talking about is the plan by some municipalities to require their residents to have municipalities to require their residents to have separate containers for green glass, brown glass, clear glass, aluminum cans, household trash, and

What that means is where there once was one kitchen garbage can, now there'll be five, with a separate stack for newspapers.

And Rosen says that's not going to work.

"The simpler you keep these programs, the more efficient and effective they become," cays-Rosen. "And the greater values you reap from them."

So Rosen sent out letters to all 53 municipalities last week, telling them that he accepts mixed recyclables — colored glass and aluminum in one bin. And he'll handle the separating at his 2.6-acre facility on Joline Avenue in Long Branch, and he'll pay them $5 a ton.

That's less than what he pays for recyclables that already come separated. He pays $20 a ton for color separated glass and $400 per ton for sorted aluminum cans. And Rosen knows that's why a number of towns have opted to do the why a number of towns have opted to do the separation themselves.

But he says there are built—in costs to towns—such as extra labor and compactor trucks.

"When towns review their recycling plans, they should keep their costs down to an absolute minimum," said Rosen. "They should get the material picked up, handle it at one time, get id of it, and then get paid."

If residents are allowed to place all their glass and aluminum products in one container. Rosen and aluminum products in one container, Rosen says there will be greater acceptance to separate out recyclables, which will mean more of the municipal waste stream will be separated out.

And he said that using one container for all recyclables will allow municipalities to use their trucks; whatever, to drop the recyclables off at the plant, where his employees will then separate the materials by hand.

But the biggest benefit to towns he says, is in avoiding new capital expenditures, and avoiding paying high tipping fees at the Monmouth County Reclamation Center in Tinton Falls.

Report puts weapons deal at $1 billion

The Associated Press

A newspaper in Athens, Greece, said yesterday that tapes made of U.S. envoy Robert McFarlane's talks with Iranians showed that the United States shipped more than $1 billion worth of military equipment to Iran.

That would be about 100 times more than the amount U.S. officials have said was sent.

McFarlane did not return telephone messages left at his home and office in the Washington

Omiros Emmanouilidis, who wrote the Dimokratikos Logos story, told The Associated Press story, told the Associated Fress the contents of the tapes were given to him by reliable sources. He declined to say if he heard the actual tapes or read transcripts.

The paper has not previously broken a story of major international significance, so it was difficult to gauge the reliability of its report.

The paper has close ties with Premier Andreas Papandreou's Socialist government. The article was based on what it said were tapes of McFarlane's talks with Iranians in Tehran.

McFarlane, a former national security adviser, reportedly made two trips to Iran this year as part of an effort, begun in 1985, to improve relations with so-called moderate elements in that country's revolutionary leadership.

President Reagan has ac-knowledged that U.S. weapons were shipped, but he said the arms were "defensive" and only small amounts were involved. He denied that the arms, some of which were shipped via Israel, were intended as ransom to gain the release of Americans held in Lebanon by fundamentalist Shiite Moslems believed to be loval to Iran.

Political star burns brightly for Kean

Associated Press

WASHINGTON - A millionaire, blue-

WASHINGTON — A millionaire, blueblooded Ivy Leaguer, New Jersey Gov. Thomas H. Kean seems more like the Republican Party's past than its future. But the 51-year-old Kean has become the Garden State's most popular politician in decades. And he is increasingly obvious in the national Republican picture — one of his party's "brightest stars," a GOP leader boasts.

Aristocratic and a bit awkward, the prep school and Princeton-educated Kean seems an unlikely messenger of new ideas for the Grand Old Party.

Yet, the teacher-turned-politician draws invitation after invitation to preach his "politics of inclusion," as he calls his bid for minorities and other traditional Democrats to join a modern, moderate Republican Party.

Kean comes from a thoroughbred family, with a real estate and utility fortune. He seems to have been born in a gray suit and tassel loafers.

66 Tom Kean is one of the brightest stars on the Republican horizon. 99 central New Jersey town Keansburg bears the family name, as does Kean College to the north. The governor's father, Robert, was in Congress from 1939 to 1959. Other ancestors include senators and New Jersey's first constitutional governor.

In an age when most politicians aren't far from their blow dryers, Kean sometimes needs to be reminded to comb his hair and straighten his tie.

He speaks with his own variation of a Boston Bramin accent, once described as "marble-mouthed."

In short, he could be an image maker's nightmare. Instead, he's had to hire new staff to handle demands for his time.

They re-elected him a year ago by the largest margin in the state's history. Obliterating party and color lines, the gov-ernor won majorities in every county and all ernor won majorities in every county and all but one town in the state.

Other governors apparently like him. They voted Kean chairman-elect of the Republican Governor's Association, the annual meeting of which he will host next week in New Jersey.

Even Democrats pay him his due. During his five years as governor, members of the opposition party either have made way for the Kean bandwagon, or gotten run over by it.

"With Tom Kean, what you see is what you get. The man is sincere ... he just has absolutely unquestioned integrity and that shows through," explains Frank Holman, chairman of the New Jersey Republican State Committee.

"He's been straight with me," said New Jersey Senate President John Russo, a Democrat from Ocean County who normally would be the governor's Nemesis. Kean and Russo are tennis partners.

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — A Christmas television special starring singer Amy Grant has some people around these parts upset because "Montana" isn't in the title.

The original proposal for the title, "Amy Grant: Christmas in Montana," was changed early on to "Amy Grant ... Headin' Home for the Holidays," Rick Ludwin, NBC vice president for specials, said Friday. The show is to be broadcast Dec. 21.

Douglas Hammill, who helped bring the production company Smith-Hemion to Montana, said he and others don't like the title: A letter-writing campaign is under way to get "Montana" back in the billing, said Hammill, of Glacier Horse Ranch.

Ludwin said the Montana con-nection will be obvious to viewers: "The first 45 seconds show Amy Grant and her husband in a montage of scenes from Montana. There are constant references throughout the show to Montana." He's a hit!

SEARCY, Ark. (AP) — Sam Walton, rated by Forbes magazine as the richest man in the United States, says he created a $3.6 million scholarship fund so Central American students can learn shout free enterprise about free enterprise.
Walton, chairman of the Wal-

Mart discount store chain, also said he hopes to demonstrate to young Central Americans that democracy is better than communism.

Walton said he wanted to "let them know what we have in the United States — how many good things are achievable here through work and through our democratic system of government under free enterprise."

The program has been established at three Arkansas schools, Harding University, College of the Ozarks and John Brown University.

Since the program started last year, 100 students from Central American countries have enrolled, and about 20 students a year will be added indefinitely, Walton said.

A-Teamer recovering

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The "A-Team's" George Peppard is walk-ing on crutches while recovering from removal of a bone spur in his left heel.

"It bothered him for quite a while but he couldn't have surgery because he was filming the 'A-Team,'" publicist Cheryl Kagen said Wednesday.

The actor worked through a season on the TV show before the spur was removed last week. He will be paid for 22 guaranteed segments, although the show was canceled after 13.

JOAN RIVERS AND SEAN PENN: Send in the clowns

An elite bunch of bozos

Sean Penn and Joan Rivers join Kurt Waldheim and Moammar Gadhafy on the list of those honored in the fourth annual Bozo Awards. The original television Bozo, Larry Harmon, said Friday that the only criterion for his awards is "Bozo-osity," a term that should need no explanation. In the show business category, Penn was the hands-down choice for his bouts with those trying to photograph his bride, Harmon said. "Ever since he met his wife, Madonna, he seems to be a prima donna, and he can't even sing." Harmon said. Miss Rivers is the Funster of the year, Harmon said. "Her family feud with Johnny Carson could have used a little of what the comedian always seems to say: 'Can we talk?'" Miss Rivers, once the permanent guest host on the Carson's "Tonight Show," left NBC abruptly earlier this year to begin her own syndicated late-night talk show.

Wyckoff Road reopens for Christmas traffic

By GREG OVECHKA The Register

EATONTOWN — The revamped Wyckoff Road/Hope Road intersection, leading directly to Monmouth Mall, has opened several months ahead of schedule in time to accommodate the holiday shorping season traffic shopping season traffic.

Wyckoff Road had been closed for three months to allow completion of the Route 18 overpass.

Melvin Schectman, N.J. Department of Transportation resident project engineer based in East Brunswick and working out of a construction site in Ocean Township, said that Yonkers Contracting Co., of New York, responded to a need to open the road before the start of the Christmas shopping season and winter.

"There was nothing in their contract" stipulating that the road had to be opened at this time, Schectman said. But the DOT, noting that detours were causing traffic delays and the need for delays and the need for additional police, appealed to the com-

"We explained to them that the holiday season was fast approaching and that we'd appreciate if they could open Wyckoff Road," Schectman said.

"This would help us avoid major disruptions during the winter season, too."

The result, Schectman said, "is the Wyckoff/Hope intersection opened three to four months ahead of schedule.

And Yonkers spent a lot of extra time and money to assure minimum disruption. They even worked one night around the clock."

Yonkers widened Hope Road about 1,000 feet north and south of the intersection, and Wyckoff Road 2,000 feet east. There are now four lanes in the area, and turning lanes were also widened to improve the flow of traffic at the intersection.

"We pushed up our efforts and worked right through the night to accelerate construction," said Yonkers field engineer Mike Waters. Now, he added, "there's a safer mode of travel."

Yonkers Contracting is also working to complete, possibly in 1988, the Route 18 "missing link" from Deal Road in Ocean Township to Wyckoff Road.

Responding to a local group's concern that Wyckoff would become the northern terminus for Route 18, Schectman said there would be no eastbound exit ramp off Route 18 at Wyckoff, but that there would be a tbound exit, leading onto Hope Road and Route 36.

The Concerned Citizens of Eaton-town's Southwest Quadrant group is organizing a letter-writing campaign to prevent the DOT from making Wyckoff an exit for Route 18 when that section of the highway is completed. A letter will be distributed to about 800 borough residents on Dec. 6. They will be asked to sign and send the letters to Gov.

Thomas Kean, state Sen. Thomas Gagliano, R-Monmouth, state Walter Rand, D-Camden, and U.S. Rep. James Howard, D-N.J.

The citizens' group wants DOT to provide connectors allowing eastbound traffic getting off Route 18 to exit directly onto Route 36 and parkway-bound traffic to exit onto Hope Road.

There's actually another Route 11 "missing link" needed to connect Wyckoff Road north to Route 18 above Tinton Falls, but work on this segment may be held up indefinitely because of a lack of funding

Because of all this, Eatontown residents fear that Wyckoff Road and local residential developments will be subject to increased traffic.

Foster parents always find room for one more

OLD BRIDGE - When most people think about the holiday season, they think about families, shopping for family members and planning for the big family hol-iday feast.

But one Old Pridge agents

But one Old Bridge couple never knows quite how many people will be in their family by the time the holidays arrive so they always plan to have a few extra presents under their Christmas tree. And they never set the dinner table for less than 12 people — just in case someone new arrives on the scene. Peter and Patti Gecek are foster parents. During the past nine years, they have cared for 22 foster children. "When I come home from work each day, I don't know how many kids will be in the house," said Peter Gecek, who works for Mobil Chemical Corp. in Edison.

For Thanksgiving, the Geceks had six children — three toddlers, a 6-year-old, an 11-year-old, a teen-ager — and a 27-pound turkey.

A few weeks ago, in addition to the six children, the couple had another toddler, a 7-year-old and an 8-year-old staying with them, making a total of nine children in the house.

"It's zooey here sometimes, but it is basically fun," said Mrs. Gecek, who is a kindergarten

Four of the children are the Geceks' own. Visitors to the Gecek house are greeted by the pitter-patter of many feet and the sounds of children laughing, crying, playing, one large dog and a guinea pig.

Caring for three or four toddlers at one time, along with five other children, is no easy trick. But the Geceks say that everyone helps out, including the children.

"Nobody comes in the front door without milk or diapers," Mrs. Gecek said. "It's an unwritten law around here.

Bath time for the toddlers is a team effort, Gecek said. One person mans the bathroom, to keep the children from diving into the tub before they get their clothes off, someone washes the children and anyone else who happens to be around waits in the hall with towels to catch the children as they run out after their same time declaring their opposition to mass incineration.

"Each member of the board here is against incineration," said Freeholder Director Harry Larrison Jr., to the applause of the 350 people in the audience. "We're going to do everything we can to prevent it."

The unanimous vote was the first step in the county's drive to adopt its solid waste management plan.

The county has greatly modified its original proposal by approving only one portion of the original three-part plan.

In addition, the county gave homeowners bordering the landfill the option of selling their home to the county. If they choose, the homeowner can live in their home county, however, will acquire their property.

The federal surplus food is distributed through the state De-partment of Agriculture to antipoverty agencies in each county four times a year. Check-Mate Executive Director Georgia Berry explained that her agency is desprogram in Monmouth County. She predicted that about 12,000 low-income heads of households will collect food.

Check-Mate tried to register recipients in the past month, so that the agency could estimate the amount of food to be ordered. However, because of low turnouts at some of the registration centers, the agency is permitting people to register the same day they take the food. In the future, Check-Mate will require people to register in advance of distribution times. Potential recipients can register any-time at any of Check-Mate's offices, and at special registration centers throughout the county that will be set up for several days shortly before each distribution

l would help agency get hard-to-find funds

By MARY GAY JOHNSON The Register

SHREWSBURY - Family Resource Association may be a relic in the medical community because it still makes house calls. But workers there say it is precisely that service that gives the agency its one-of-a-kind quality.

Ironically, that uniqueness has hindered the non-profit agency's ability to garner state and federal funds to match its needs. Because it crosses so many boundaries, accepting children from birth to with all handicaps, the agency is too broad in many senses to qualify for grants, which are usually doled out for specific purposes.

However, help may be on the way, via a funding bill sponsored by state Sen. Frank Pallone Jr., D-Monmouth, that would net a $127,000 state grant for the association.

The association provides families and their handicapped children throughout Monmouth County inhome counseling and therapy. The agency currently serves 120 children. The clients have all types of disabilities, both physical and mental, such as genetic disorders, learning problems and speech and bearing impairments.

hearing impairments.

According to Nancy Sharow, executive director of the program, the in-home services are an advantage to families for several reasons.

"The families are better able to learn how to help their children and help themselves," she said.

The agency is awaiting word on whether it will receive the Pallone-sponsored grant that would help pay for program costs for children newborn to age 3.

The funding is necessary, both Pallone and association officials said, because the agency was unexpectedly denied funding from the state Department of Education in June.

in June.

Sharow said the non-profit agency charges a fee for services, but still not enough to meet all its budget needs. The association does not qualify for many state and federal grants and must seek dollars from community contributions and fund release specials. tions and fund-raisers, she said.

In most cases of dealing with handicapped children, parents have to bring their children to a school or program where they receive physical, speech and occupational therapy.

However, for the past seven years, the resource association has done exactly the opposite and brought the therapy to the children. In this way, parents can dren. In this way, parents can learn how they can join in their children's therapy program,

Instead of using expensive lab equipment, the therapists can get many of the same results in physical therapy, for instance, by adapting household items, such as furniture, that parents also can

The therapist's presence on the 'parents' territory," is another benefit, Sharow said.

"It gives the opportunity for a whole different set-up," she said, adding that parents are usually more relaxed in their own homes and can pick up hints about how they can better help their child's

"I think that's why we have clung to the belief that the home-based program is to the advantage of the family," she said.

The home-base program is a plus to therapists as well, she said, because it gives them a chance to glean an insight into the family life of a client. As the therapist life of a client. As the therapist gets to know a family, he or she will come to realize its capabilities and well as better know what kind advice to give.

Some therapists have followed a child's progress for five or so years and have become a resource person and ally for the family.

"By being there and letting them (the family) vent their feelings, they're not as likely to take it out on their children," Sharow said.

Therapists being on hand for the many problems and difficult times in a handicapped child's life in a handicapped child's life makes the going a lot easier for parents, she said.

"We are able to help the parents

"We are able to help the parents through all of their 'firsts' ... When the children have so many other medical problems there's just such tension that by having people come in who are supportive, they know they have a larger support group.

Union Beach bars fighting fake IDs

By KEVIN FRECHETTE The Register

UNION BEACH — You're a tavera owner tending bar on a Friday night when a rather young-looking customer approaches and orders a beer.

roaches and orders a beer.

Keeping in mind the state's legal drinking age is 21, you ask for identification, and the customer promptly hands you two — a copy of a birth certificate and a college photo ID listing date of birth.

Do you serve this person alcohol?

No, according to Union Beach Patrolman Timothy Kelly. Not unless you're looking for a lawsuit.

But distinguishing between valid and invalid forms of identification has become an increasingly common problem for local barowners as teen-agers discover more sophisticated ways to dodge the drinking age, Kelly said.

Ever since the state upped the drinking age from 19 to 21 recently, Kelly said minors have been using a variety of fake identification forms to fool local tavern owners into selling them alcohol. While minors are rarely prosecuted for the offense, Kelly said tavern owners are offensed. said tavern owners are often made the target of lawsuits for serving underaged drinkers.

"People read in the newspaper that a bar is being closed for serving alcohol to a minor and they think, 'Gee, that must be a terrible place.' But no one ever tells them that the kild may have paid up to $300 for fake identifi-cation," said Joyce Bengyel, manager of the Colony Inn.

In an effort to protect themselves, Bengyel and fellow em-ployees are accepting only valid New Jersey driver's licenses as proof of age. The bar/restaurant also has begun a policy of holding suspicious identification for prosecution.

"But it isn't easy," Bengyel said of screening underaged drinkers. "You have to be as smart if not smarter than these kids because some of the things they try to pull are unreal. You have to be on their toes all the time."

Currently, seven out of 12 businesses in the borough that have iquor licenses are facing lawsuits involving the sale of alcohol to

The threat of possible litigatio has the remaining tavern owners implementing drastic measures to protect themselves and their businesses from a problem they claim is compounded by rising insurance costs and the state's new host liability laws.

Bobby Belmonte said no customer of his Sandbar Tavern and Restaurant is served alcohol un-less he or she can produce two forms of picture identification. Even then, Belmonte said, he is reluctant to take the risk. "Unless they're over 25, I pretty much tell people to go someplace else to drink. And then, I only let people stay if they're going to sit in a booth and eat. No one's allowed to just hang out at the bar and drink anymore," Belmonte said.

Belmonte's is the latest of the borough's watering holes to offer customers food as well as drink in an effort to reduce insurance costs. Those costs were said to have doubled with the state Supreme Court's 1984 host liability ruling which holds businesses legally responsible for the actions of intoxicated customers.

Earlier this year, the state Senate approved a measure limiting a host's liability for motor vehicle accidents caused by customers who were "visibly intoxicated." However, local bar owners said the measure offers little relief in the way of lawsuits and insurance

On the average, bar owners in the borough pay $15,000 a year for liquor liability insurance

"And that doesn't cover you against fire. That doesn't cover you against flood. Or against someone coming into your bar and falling off their chair while eating dinner. That's just to protect you from someone coming into your bar, having a drink and leaving," Belmonte said.

"It's extortion," said another bar owner who asked not to be identified. "I look around my bar and I see seven people. Seven and I see seven people. Seven people on a Friday night. How am I supposed to be pay those in-surance costs doing business like

At a meeting with Kelly earlier this month, tavern owners called for stricter enforcement of penalties for minors who illegally purchase alcohol.

Kelly said minors who are ar-Kelly said minors who are ar-rested and charged often receive little more than a $50 fine for first offense while bar owners are often liable for up to $1,000 in criminal fines and hundreds of thousands of dollars in civil costs.

Kelly, who called the meeting in effort to educate bar owners on spotting fake IDs, warned those in attendance against accepting state identification (thing.") and college IDs listing date of birth ("Date of birth is never listed.")

Acceptable forms of identification include military IDs, driver's ligensee and birth cartificates.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1986

Yes, a special prosecutor

even those who consciously ignore political scandals recognize certain buzz words that signal trouble in Washington.

They're terms like "shredding documents" ... "Swiss bank accounts" ... and "anonymous sources" 'special prosecutor."

These and other unsettling terms are beginning to color the language coming out of official Washington be it the White House or Capitol Hill as more and more is revealed about the diversion of money from Iranian arms sales to Nicaraguan rebels.

The message is becoming increasingly clear that Ronald Reagan is teetering on the brink of a major credibility gap while also facing the most serious foreign policy crisis of his six-year presidency.

In most recent developments, the House Foreign Affairs Committee has asked Reagan to provide the panel with relevant papers - papers which, we learn from anonymous sources inside the White House, may have been shredded. Meanwhile, the House Judiciary criminal justice subcommittee has called for appointment of an independent special prosecutor to investigate possible violations of U.S. laws

At the same time, other congressional committees are scrambling to conduct investigations as well. But all of them are focusing on three main issues: The sale of U.S. weapons to Iran, the private U.S.-backed network that was set up - a la Eugene Hasenfus - to help the anti-Nicaraguan guerrillas, and the administration statement last week that millions of dollars from the arms sale went into a Swiss bank account controlled by Contra leaders. In announcing the connection between the two controversial programs, Attorney General Edwin Meese said his own Justice Department would conduct a full investigation of whether any U.S. laws were violated.

Now the criminal justice subcommittee, headed by Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., has sent a report to Meese supporting the panel's contention that a special prosecutor should be appointed.

A cover letter from Conyers tells Meese that "your closeness to the president, your prior involvement in approving the arms transfers to Iran, your alleged involvement in planning the private contra aid effort, and your recent statement that 'every member of the administration owes it to the president to stand shoulder-toshoulder with him' create the appearance of a conflict of interst on your

In the report, the panel cites seven laws that may have been violated by the private contra aid effort which started when Congress cut off direct U.S. military support for the rebels. And, according to the report, several actions could be construed as misuse of public money, including "diversion to the contras or the supply network that supports them of funds obtained through the sale of U.S. arms to Iran" or "the establishment of Swiss bank accounts to funnel payments to the contras.'

Finally, the report questions the possible involvement of a number of administration officials, including Meese himself, Vice President George Bush, White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger as well as Pentagon and CIA officials.

Because so many questions continue to swirl around the White House (Who knew? Where's the money? Etc.) and because Attorney General Meese is so closely identified with Reagan, the administration should seriously consider seeking an independent prosecutor.

Such a move would benefit President Reagan in the long term. It would indicate his administration's willingness to get all the answers - at whatever cost — and help restore his credibility as a world leader. No matter how thorough Meese's investigation might be, there always could be doubt that he was trying to protect his friends in the White House.

Secondly, it would benefit the American people who are still trying to put the ugly Watergate scandal behind them. Any suggestion of another cover-up could seriously undermine the public's confidence in government.

Some White House insiders probably would see the appointment of a special prosecutor as a sign of political weakness. But, in reality, it would be a genuine show of strength.

Pro-abortion presents a 'slippery slope'

"Choice-Clergy support rights in abortion" (Register, Nov. 15) seems to me to contain a number of blatant fallacies. It posits the idea of a "right" to choose abortion. From where did this alleged right come? This seems to be elevating choice to the position of a right. The assumption is that choice is itself the highest morality, the ultimate moral category. The clear implication is that what is chosen is unimportant; what really matters is the act itself of choosing. Indeed, humans are free in that we can and must make choices, but we are not free to choose whatever we desire at the time with no reference to an absolute moral law.

It doesn't take much reflection to see that any concern in abortion is for the immediate consequences of action (terminating an "unwanted" pregnancy) with no consideration of the long-range effects in the lives of the would-be mothers, or in society as a whole.

But as morally repugnant as abortion is, it is only the tip of the iceberg. Abortion is the jettisoning of 2000 years of Judeo-Christian tradition, and millenia more of Judeo tradition. The clergy who advocate it place them-selves outside the Judeo-Christian tradition. The ethos created by the ov-erthrow of traditional values is a mindset of the quality of life rather than the sanctity of life. And who defines the acceptable quality of life? Selective birth is followed by selective death the handicapped, the aged, members of a certain race, etc. Whoever happens to be enough of a "nuisance" to society at large becomes eligible for selective

This is not to say that everyone who favors abortion ipso facto favors infanticide, euthanasia, or racial killing. But, abortion is doubtless a slippery slope that can create a mentality that leads to further "quality" choices. Once we sever ourselves from an objective, transcendent moral referent — the living, personal God who reveals himself in Jesus Christ and the Bible we leave ourselves to the mercy of a sometimes capricious and hostile ruling elite. Anything becomes legal that they say is legal.

Beach proposal could be worthwhile

Once again, a group of good people called the Leonardo Citizens Group is letting power go to their heads. They are to be complimented for their resolve in fighting when the state or Navy sought to make changes that would have a negative effect on all residents.

As expected when you get a group of people together, power starts to take over good judgement and only their wishes seem important. I'm talking about the beach improvement and fish-ing pier proposal for Leonardo. Their arguments are weak at best.

This proposal could be an attractive addition to the beach area and substantially increase the property values for all residents. However, strict rules governing use, traffic, parking and swimmer safety must be to everyone's satisfaction.

Let's stop a few people from making decisions for all Leonardo and Middletown residents. Why give $350,000 dollars to some other community? Want to see beach improvement? See Ideal Beach in East Keansburg.

Meese's advice would produce chaos

ARCHIBALD COX

To accept the constitutional doctrines recently advanced by Attorney General Meese, the Chief Law Officer of the United States, would have disastrous implications for our historic constitutionalism and the rule of law. A decision by the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Meese said, binds only the parties and the Executive Branch "for necessary enforcement" against the parties. "The Court's decisions do not establish a 'supreme law of the land' that is binding on all persons and parts of government, henceforth and forever The Executive Branch and Congress, State and local government, and the people are all free to disregard the Court's interpretation if they hold a different view ad literally "henceforth and forever more," the words contain three small grains of truth. It is only a violation of the decree by a party that may be punished as contempt of court. The body of law built up by court decisions may change and grow within limits in later cases. It is not wrong for an Attorney General to seek change within the limits while conforming to existing law.

But Mr. Meese said nothing about ompliance while see about change within limits. In consequence, his public advice that government officials, legislators and individuals who were not technically parties should feel totally free to disregard any and all Supreme Court decisions with which they disagree is an irresponsible distortion of our constitutional tradition. The advice, if followed, would produce chaos; it invites much the same kind of free-wheeling judicial activism that Mr. Meese criticizes on the part of anyone not sharing his radically-conservative politics; it threatens to undermine the respect for law that makes an independent judiciary the ultimate bulwark of liberty.

The advice threatens chaos, because voluntary compliance with law, including the Court's interpretations of the Constitution, is essential to a free society. The opinion on Cooper v. Aaron, the case criticized by Mr. Meese because all nine Justices joined in observing that the Constitution as interpreted by the Court is "the supreme law of the land," was calling for compliance with Brown v. Board of Education -- the ruling that racial segregation in the public schools violates the Equal Protection Clause. Mr. Meese's advice, applied to that context, would have licensed, indeed invited, every school board then engaged in racial segregation to disregard Brown in the school district brought suit and obtained a decree. Is Mr. Meese now calling upon every school board not previously a party to litigation to restore school prayer? Is he calling upon every police department in the United States to disregard every interpretation of the Constitution limiting police practices made in cases of which Mr. Meese does not approve? That is the plain purport of his repeated assertions that the Court's decisions do not establish a "supreme law of the land.

The Attorney General and other political conservatives have been criticizing the Supreme Court for imposing the individual views of a majority of Justices upon the country instead of adhering to existing law. The criticism rests partly upon the number of precedents and earlier rulings on constitutional interpretation changed by the Court's decisions in the years 1950–1975. Now Mr. Meese seems to be trying to prepare the way for the judges the Reagan Administration chooses to sweep aside unreservedly all the de-cisions with which he and they disagree. But an activism that was wrong for Justices that Mr. Meese regards as liberal is equally wrong for judges from the political right. To overrule a few specific decisions from time to time is both necessary and proper. Otherwise the law could not change and grow in response to the needs of the country under changed conditions, and to the opportunities for better realization of traditional ideals. But to sweep aside major parts of the constitutional ideals

But to sweep aside major parts of the constitutional law expounded in Su-preme Court decisions whenever there is a shift in the political winds would destroy the ideal of a "rule of law" that binds everyone, officials as well as judged. Apparently Mr. Meese cannot accept that principle because he has his sights upon too many settled constitutional principles in the areas of race and sex equality, of limits upon Presidential power, and of civil liberty in relation to the investigation of alleged crimes.

Now, the Chief Law Officer of the United States is teaching the Executive Branch, State and local officials and the people not to honor the law as expounded by the Supreme Court. If he succeeds, the people, even in times of crisis, will not rise up and overwhelm those officials who violate the Constitution as the Court interpets it. Even if they were named as parties, there would be no response. The distinction between "named as parties" and "not named as parties" is too technical, too formal. The best bulwark of liberty would have been destroyed.

discourage other countries from providing arms to Iran and to press for a negotiated settlement of their war. All those goals have been imperiled by the American arms now known to have been shipped to Iran.

Whatever the White House's motives, whether the return of hostages, restoration of a strategic relationship or something more distant, the arms were of sufficient quality and quantity to be a significant factor in themselves. They consisted, at the least, of 2,000 TOW antitank missiles and a large consignment of Hawk antiaircraft missiles or spares. More arms sales may yet come

The White House's claim is that these are purely defensive weapons. As is usual with this tattered rationale, the defense is without merit. The cutting edge of Iraq's strategy is to strike economic targets in Iran with its air power. Hawk missiles may blunt that thrust substantially. Even with many failures, 2,000 TOW missiles could destroy plenty of Iraq's 4,500 tanks. Most are Soviet-made T-55's, with plain rolled steel armor, against which the TOW is very effective. And the missiles also perform well against reinforced front-line infantry bunkers, like those that guard the Iraqi forward positions.

As Charles Mohr noted recently in The Times, "Iran has now received American weapons that represent a or six years, the United States has real threat to Iraq." That may prove seemed to pursue a steadfast only a foretaste. The weapons will policy in Mesopotamia, one in- legitimize sales by allies, which to prevent an Iraqi collapse, to American diplomacy has so far restrained. Just as Iran's war machine was grinding to a halt for lack of spare parts, Western suppliers may now rush to put it back in motion. Iranians who seek to end the war may have to yield again to those pressing for one more grand offensive.

Iran has a long border with the Soviet Union and a long history of Russian depredations on its territory. The United States is a natural ally, or at least counterweight. But after years of manipulation by Western powers, Iranians have another priority: to restore their self-esteem as a nation. The form of that restoration, a messianic fundamentalism, is hardly attractive to outsiders, but the purpose is understandable. The White House was right to explore possible openings to relations with Teheran. But its manner of approach invited derision. How else could the proud mullahs in Teheran react when the same power that overarmed the Shah came furtively currying favor with vet more arms?

The high road soon became lost. The President's men found themselves mired in the worst possible trade, of arms for hostages. Disdaining expert advice on Iran, their overtures were disdained in turn. Their fumbled grope for a quick fix has put off, who knows for how long, the natural reconciliation of interests, between Washington and Teheran.

BLOOM COUNTY

OMMENTARY

DEPUTY TREASURY SEC. DAYMAN CHARGES CORPORATE AMERICA WITH BEING RISK-AVERSE, BLOATED AND INEFFICIENT. THE NEWS IS NOT TAKEN LIGHTLY...

The lesson of Jefferson Who's inefficient and bloated?

The Reagan Administration just suffered its worst couple of weeks ever, and the American press is having a field day covering all the bloopers. (Actually, the press just came out of hibernation, and not a moment too soon.)

So you'd think that after shooting themselves in the foot four times in about 30 days on the foreign policy front, the Administration would at least try to bring us together on the issues right here at home. Instead they send a couple of their loyalists out on the stump to attack American business.

First, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige told a Washington think tank that American companies were just plain being "outmanaged" by the guys overseas.

Considering that this Administration has been "outmanaged" every time it has tried to get Japan to open its markets, Baldrige's harangue probably fell on deaf ears.

Then Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard Darman really blasted merican business before a friendly audience of Japanese executives as "bloated and inefficient." And, as you might expect, the audience approved and applauded.

By the way, I talked to the same audience just four months before, but I hardly felt it necessary to just tell them what they wanted to hear. I told them the blame was 50-50, half theirs and half ours, and they also applauded.

But this guy Darman really got wound up. He said American business was so bad that you could hardly find an American executive at work before 10 a.m., and that these same executives knew more about their golf scores than they did about their R & D investments. So much for trying to bring business and government together.

We might have our share of dead-beats and goof-offs, but they're really a very small minority. I'm sure we have no more than the federal government. And a lecture from a political appointee who has never had to meet a payroll or make those miserable decisions to put good people out on the street is a little too much to take.

I know because I've been there. When Chrysler was dying, we closed 21 plants, laid off 50,000 hourly workers and cut our white-collar force by 20,000. Like GM today, we had no choice. But it hurt then, and it still hurts now. With auto industry employment in this country already down almost 20 percent from seven years ago, we don't need to hear Washington tell us that the way to make America more productive is to keep throwing more and more people out of work.

Why all the finger pointing, anyway? With a $220 billion budget deficit and $160 billion trade deficit, we've got plenty of blame to spread around. Why not get on with some solutions? If this Administration is going to make productivity its main economic theme for its Last two years in office, this is a hell of a way to start. There's absolutely nothing productive about trying to fix the blame for the economic mess we're in We all probably had a hand in it. There's a better way. I call it the "Jefferson Lesson," and it doesn't have a thing to do with Thomas Jefferson. Baldrige and Darman and a hot of others can learn something about productivity, if in fact they really give a damn, from Chrysler's Jefferson Avenue Assembly Plant in

As much as we all wanted to do it, none of us could save Jefferson — at least acting alone.

So we got together. Management, labor and government sat down and decided that if we all made some sacrifices and brought something to the table, maybe we could save Jefferson. It a lesson we learned well in Chrysler's dark days of '80 and '81. We Called it "equality of sacrifice." It saved Chrysler back then, and now it's going to save the Jefferson Avenue Plant.

The company agreed to invest a billion dollars in a brand-new plant to be built in stages on the same site, gradually replacing the old one.

That's a lot more than it would cost to build a new plant in a vacant field somewhere. But we can swing it because the union voted a new, progressive labor agreement that will help us recover part of the difference through greater productivity. And because the city, the state and even the federal government agreed to put $200 million into land acquisition and tax abatement to make the project feasible.

We all wanted the same thing bad enough to bleed a little together: We wanted to save jobs where jobs are needed the most these days, and where they're most at risk — in the inner city. But we're also all realists. The sacrifices would mean nothing and all the money would go right down the drain unless the whole deal made us more productive and better able to compete. In end, it was competing, not compassion, that drove

So because we all got together, by 1991 the industry's most state-of-the-art auto plant will be built right over the top of the industry's most obsolete one.

And the symbolism is obvious: We don't have to run away from the inner cities, and we don't have to fold our tents in the face of tough overseas bompetition. Management, labor and government can make America productive and competitive again, if they just get together.

Competing used to be just the job of manage-ment. We decided on the strategies and drew up the business plans. The job of labor was to build the products and keep the plants running. And the job of government was to try to stay the hell out of the way.

But that won't work anymore. If Chrysler is going to compete -if Detroit, and Michigan and America are going to compete and hang on to our jobs -- then it has to be a team effort of management, labor and government. That's the lesson of Jefferson Avenue.

I wish Administration officials would learn that lesson and get on the team. I've got a couple of suggestions, just for starters.

Before rapping corporations as bloated, do something about the $1.2 trillion in red ink this Administration has accumulated. And before saying we've been "outmanaged," do something about the lopsided trade arrangements that wipe out the effects of our productivity improvements almost as Fast as we come up with them.

Because if America's going to compete, we have to first pull the team together. Only then can we

WASHINGTON — Friends of Ronald Reagan knew the meaning of nightmares Tuesday night. In their dreams they experienced a sickening sense of terrible times remembered, of a Senate select committee, of criminal trials and impeachment hearings, of a question that took on a life of its own: What did the president know, and when did he know it?

The Iranian imbroglio cannot fairly be equated with the Watergate scandals of 1972 -- not yet, anyhow. Watergate involved the crime of burglary. We do not yet know what crimes, if any, may have been committed in the bizarre shell game that was played with Israel and Iran.

But there are similarities, and these are bound to disturb the White House sleep. Richard Nixon had his Gordon Liddy, mastermind of the break-in at Democratic National Headquarters. Ronald Reagan has his Oliver North, apparent mastermind of the Iranian operation. North is no burglar. He has a fine reputation as a loyal officer in the Marine Corps, but what did he do and who authorized him to do it? what did he do and who authorized him to do it?

what did he do and who authorized him to do it?

On the Wednesday morning after the Tuesday massacre, the memories and lessons of Watergate come vividly to mind. Nixon himself never authorized the burglary. I am certain that Reagan never authorized the clandestine scheme that saw millions of dollars transferred to the contras of Nicaragua. In the Watergate affair, Attorney General John Mitchell weakly gave Liddy a free hand. Who served as John Mitchell to Col. North?

The scandal of Watergate was not the break-in itself. The scandal came with Nixon's effort to conceal other criminal operations by his White House "plumbers." The scandal was obstruction of justice. The scandal was lying.

Since the Iranian story broke three weeks ago, the

Since the Iranian story broke three weeks ago, the Since the Iranian story broke three weeks ago, the White House has been engaged in damage control. The effort hasn't worked. Time after time reporters questioned chief of staff Donald Regan and Vice Adm. John Poindexter, the now ousted national security adviser. We left these briefings as if we had left a Chinese dinner — nice, but not filling.

This won't do. It simply will not do. On Tuesday the president named his own investigating board. It will be composed of honorable men, but these will be the president's men. Much more is required. The the president's men. Much more is required. The country rightfully may demand the equivalent of the Senate's select committee on Watergate. We need another Sam Ervin, another Howard Baker.

The Washington press corps, slavering over the juiciest story in 14 years, will hold a journalistic bucket for any leaks it can catch, but unattributed revelations in the press are a poor substitute for public testimony under each substitute for public testimony under oath.

A hundred questions press for answers. On this Wednesday morning it seems inconceivable that Robin and Batman could have acted alone. No one will believe it. Who provided the complaisant wink, the encouraging nudge? Where was Secretary Shultz when the lights went out? Where was William Casey, director of the CIA? Where were the joint chiefs of director of the CIA? Where were the joint chiefs of staff, the vice president, the secretary of defense? Was everybody in the dark? Everybody?

Maybe so, but if so, the inescapable conclusion will pain the president's friends. If the president cannot be charged with complicity, he will stand charged with incompetence. It was his responsibility to establish such controls that North and Poindexter would have found it unthinkable to go barging off establish such controls that North and Poindexter would have found it unthinkable to go barging off on their own. Donald Regan's poor analogy, that bank presidents can't be expected to keep tab on bank tellers, will not wash. This basement plot was hatched almost literally under the president's nose. "The Watergate affair," said the Senate committee 12 years ago, "reflects an alarming indifference displayed by some in high public office or position to concepts of morality and trust. Indeed, the conduct of many Watergate participants seems grounded on the belief that the ends justified the means, that the laws could be flouted ..."

Something of that sort may have happened here.

Something of that sort may have happened here. At the moment we do not know what happened. We have to have the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and we have to have it soon.

Here's to good old wars

Wars used to be so simple.
In World War II, it was us against them. There was no doubt about who the good guys were and who the had guys were, and Americans were behind their president 100 percent.

But the war between Iran and Iraq? Do we know which side we're on and why? Our secretary of defense says supplying arms to Iran to help it win the war is not in our best interest but that's what the President authorized.

I haven't the slightest idea why these two countries have been fighting each other for six years. I suspect it's for the same reason the Irish Catholics are fighting the Irish Protestants in Belfast. People take a great deal of satisfaction from

After Israel sold the weapons to Iran, we sold Israel replacements for an undisclosed price. You have to think Israel didn't lose anything on the deal.

Iran doesn't make anything except barrels of money from its oil; it has to buy all its weapons. According to published accounts, Iran buys weapons from the following countries: Ready? "Andy," the President says, real friendly like, "I think I've already answered that question."

I don't remember him answering that question but I figure maybe I wasn't paying attention and I don't want to make a fool of myself so I say, "And one follow-up question, sir. Is there any chance that

China, Korea, the United States, Russia, Japan, England and Germany are also selling weapons to Iraq because they don't really care who wins the war and wouldn't care if Iran and Iraq blew each other off the face of the earth just so long as they paid us in full for the weapons they bought before they did it to each other?'

"Andy, as I say, ah, there are, that is, some things just can't comment on at this time but I think when all the truth comes out, God forbid it ever should, we will be completely vindicated. In making these mistakes I've been making I can only say I don't feel I have anything to apologize for because I have not made a mistake."

If I were a Soviet journalist, I'd like to ask Gorbachev a few qustions.

I suppose a vague war that uses up a lot of weapons and doesn't kill anyone we know personally is good business for weapons makers. It makes them money, gives them practice and enables them to unload the lemons that don't work.

The question I wouldn't dare ask the President is

"Shouldn't we be ashamed of ourselves, sir?"

Donald Regan is at fault

President Reagan has run into a series of blunders because of the obtuseness and arrogance of his chief of staff, Donald Regan. We got further evidence fuesday that Regan is a madnity after President Reagan's ouster of his national security adviser, Adm. John M. Poindexter, and his resident gunslinger, Lt. Col. Oliver North.

Asked how the White House chief of staff could slinger, Lt. Col. Oliver North.

Asked how the White House chief of staff could have no knowledge of a scheme in which North could sell arms to Iran and skim off up to $30 million for transfer to the contra rebels in Nicaragua, Regan revealed a lot about himself with this answer:

"Does the bank president know whether a teller in the bank is fiddling around with the books?"

Does Regan not know that it is ludicrous to compare himself to a bank president, while regarding Poindexter and North as mere "tellers"? People at the "teller" level do not plan invasions of Grenada, a bombing of Libya, arms deals with ayatollahs and mullahs, as North and Poindexter did. The banking analogy might have merit if a teller on his or her own secretly negotiated a merger with one of Ivan Boesky's companies.

The chief of staff who uttered that "bank teller" nonsense is the same Don Regan who said American women don't care about nuclear throw-weight and arms issues, just what Mrs. Reagan and Mrs. Gorbachev are wearing; the same "chief" who wonthe moniker "Diamond Don" with his assertion that the U.S. couldn't impose sanctions against South Africa because American women don't want to give up their diamond jewelry; the same Regan who compared the senior White House staff to a "shovel brigade" that "cleans up" after a parade (or circus) has gone through town.

The Congress and the American people have told the president in many ways that his policy toward: South Africa is wrong and a danger to America's future security. But Reagan, prodded by Oliver: North and those of like mind, continues to play South Africa's game of giving money and arms to Jonas Savimbi and a band of black rebels who seek to overthrow the government of Angola. This is a nowin policy for the United States.

We may yet have a scandalous revelation that the Reagan administration has been giving "intelligence" to the Botha regime in South Africa, enabling it to strike militarily in neighboring countries and kill those fighting for majority rule in South Africa.

We — and Mr. Reagan himself — have joked about our president's age, his need for afternoon naps, his lack of facts about important matters. The Irancontras scandal tells us that the president's lack of grasp is no joke. Ronald Reagan needs the very best chief of staff the nation can give him. That is not Dong

On Thursday, Regan had dis-counted the concern over possible document destruction. "All national security documents are not in the possession of just one person," Regan said. "There are copies of them; there is a central file."

However, Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., chairman of the House foreign affairs subcommittee on Latin America, said that in 1985 he was shown a stack of North's papers related to the Contras on the desk of McFarlane, Poindexter's predecessor.

At the time, Barnes said McFarlane offered to show him selected documents from the stack, but Barnes objected to McFarlane's ground rules limiting note-taking and access by Barnes' staff

White House officials have made a distinction between official security council files that include presidential decision directives and supporting memoranda and personal files kept by the council's staff officials. While the decision documents are numbered and logged in central files, no such safeguards are provided for the personal files.

The governor also permitted backers to set up state and national fund-raising committees to pay for his travels. So far, Kean's friends reportedly have contributed about $300,000.

"It's like very strong perfume," Kean said recently of the attention paid him. "You can sniff it a bit, but don't swallow it."

"I do sniff it and enjoy it, frankly," he said.

Conservative columnist George Will has suggested Kean might be presidential or vice presidential timber. Top party consultant Roger Stone says, "He's an ideal future candidate for us."

"Tom Kean is one of the brightest stars on the Republican horizon. I wish I could put in a bottle the type of leadership that Tom has exhibited," says Frank Rahrenkopf Jr., chairman of the Republican National Committee.

But some say Kean's political inowess could be a double-edged sword in a quest for higher office.

Anything but a Ronald Reagan Republican, Kean lauds the president's leadership but breaks often with the White House. Kean has differed with Reagan on environmental and social issues.

All the President's men — again

At the least, Reagan was very naive hat did the President know, and when did he know it?

The question recalls Watergate. Like Sen. Howard Baker then, U.S. legislators are getting ready to ask it now.

Baker asked it of Richard Nixon in the wake of Watergate. Now the question soon may be asked of Ronald Reagan.

The House and Senate intelligence committees have launched their own probes. So has the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is about to follow suit. The Justice Department is investigating. The State Department is running its own probe.

By week's end Vice President George Bush was linked to the growing scandal in two cases.

SOME MEMBERS of Congress are skeptical that $10 million to $30 million in profits from U.S. arms sales to Iran could be diverted to Nicaraguan rebels with only two administration officials knowing

The two, fingered by Attorney General Edwin Meese, are John Poindexter, director of the NSC, and Oliver North, a free-wheeling deputy. Both have been forced out.

Reagan heard about it only on Monday, the attorney general said.

"CIA director Casey, Secretary of State Shultz, Secretary of Defense Weinberger, myself, the other members of the NSC, none of us knew," Meese said. But Jim Wright, the Texas Democrat who will be the new House speaker in January, said "it defies logic" that a policy decision was made at such a low-level — by North. "Surely someone else had to be involved," he said.

In the same vein, Sen. John Glenn, the Ohio Democrat due to become chairman of the Govern-

Democrat due to become chairman of the Government Affairs Committee, said of Reagan: "If he did know about it, then he has willfully broken the law. If he didn't know about it, then he is failing to do his job."

Sen. Bill Bradley of New Jersey, a potential Democratic presidential candidate in 1988, declared:
"If the president, his chief of staff and his director of central intelligence were ignorant of these illegal activities, they are guilty of gross negligence."

Brent Scowcroft, President's
Ford's NSC adviser, whom Reagan named Wednesday to a commission to study NSC operations, said: "It would think" that someone "higher up" than Poindexter "must have directed the operation."

There are only two people on the George Bush

There are only two people on the George Bush White House staff "higher up" than Poindexter was — Ronald Reagan and Donald

Early polls show that the public is also skeptical. Six in ten of those questioned in an ABC News poll said they think Reagan knew about the diversion of money to the contras before last Monday, when he said he first learned of it. Two out of three persons said they think Reagan knew about it from the start.

Overall, Reagan's job approval rating dropped to 53 percent last week from 67 percent in September, according to the ABC survey.

THE SCANDAL unquestionably has damaged the Reagan presidency. It may destroy whatever chances the administration had of providing new Still, Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia, one of the sharpest critics of the operation, and a potential Democratic presidential candidate, said in sorrow: "We must, all of us, help the president restore his credibility in foreign affairs. We can't have a crippled president for the next two years.' Reagan's way of running the presidency is to leave the details to others. He has not tried to stifle dissent. In fact, he has encouraged advisers to argue out their divergent positions in order to help him come to a decision.

When presidents are in trouble, they regain their footing by stepping in front of their unfolding woes to retake the all-important initiative.

President Reagan tried to do that Tuesday, but succeeded at best partially, and even his limited success could prove fleeting. With one can of worms open but largely uninspected, the lid on an even larger one has now been cracked.

Reagan was at least able to claim Tuesday that he flying by the seat of his pants during the crisis of confidence and credibility that his arms dealing with revolutionary Iran has become.

However, Tuesday's hastily written announcements dealing to the product of the confidence and the conf nouncements generated far more questions than answers, and set the stage for a prolonged and painful examination — most importantly by a newly invigorated Democratic Congress, quite apart from any panel Reagan intends to establish — of the most intimate and messy details of the president's foreign policy operations.

FOR THE MOMENT, George Shultz' State Department is filling a huge policy vacuum. It remains to be seen, however, whether he will repair a seriously frayed relationship with the president, whom he has directly and publicly challenged over the Iran affair. Within Reagan's White House and among some of the president's long-term friends not now in government, there is real fury directed at now in government, there is real fury directed at Shultz; it stems not from the fact he disagreed with show of it at a time when Reagan needed loyalty.

In all of Tuesday's statements and actions, there was an unmistakable attempt to begin repairing the Shultz-Reagan tie, but some White House officials remain implacably angry despite Shultz' apparent internal victory. Especially noteworthy was Meese's televised shot across Shultz' bow in the form of his statement that Cabinet members should either support the president's policy decisions or leave. In the meantime, a host of pressing foreign policy concerns — beginning with a colossal mess in the Middle East and continuing through the stalled arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union — could fester if the administration becomes bogged down in investigations of the unfolding scandal.

In addition, the revelation of North's actions — regardless of the larger questions of who knew precisely what about them — could endanger fragile Congressional support for the cause to which North is ardently dedicated: keeping U.S. aid to the Contras going.

IT IS ALSO UNCLEAR what is to become of Donald Regan, the president's chief of staff, on whose watch the Iran affair has occurred. Regan wanted Poindexter as the national security adviser wanted Poindexter as the national security adviser in the fall of last year in part because he felt the Navy vice admiral would be a subservient team player. Regan clashed bitterly and frequently over turf and access to the president with Poindexter's predecessor, Robert McFarlane, who was a participant in the arms dealing after leaving the White House and who also knew about the diversion of money to the Contras involving the man he once said was like a son. Oliver North. was like a son, Oliver North.

But what matters most of all is the standing of the But what matters most of all is the standing of the president for the remainder of his time in office. In less than two months, his party has lost control of the Senate despite his personal all-out efforts, his arms control efforts have become seriously snagged after a bizarre summit in Iceland, the initiative in domestic policy has been largely lost, and now Reagan himself has become entangled in a major foreign policy scandal. The president's simple popularity may not be so much endangered as is his political primacy.

ANOTHER QUESTION as yet unasnwered, is whether of not the action of North and others—if there are others— is illegal.

A few weeks after Congress barred U.S. assistance to the Nicaraguan rebels in 1984, North picked up the telephone in his National Security Council office and arranged for a planeload of weapons to reach the insurgents in Central America

Central America.

Last month, when military aid to the rebels was still barred, the Nicaraguan government shot down an arms-laden cargo plane that had been dispatched from a Salvadoran airbase by a shadowy anti-Sandinista network overseen by senior U.S. officials.

These and other incidents are contributing to a perception by some that Reagan administration officials and private American citizens may have violated U.S. laws before military aid to the contras again became lawful last month.

Critics of President Reagan's policies, such as Sen.
John Kerry, D-Mass., a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who has been tracking alleged violations for almost a year, claim that U.S.
officials and private citizens have violated U.S.

BUT LEGAL analyses by the State and Justice departments, congressional aides who monitor contra affairs or wrote some of the contra aid restrictions, and legal experts in and out of government suggest that the laws are too weak and the available facts too murky to make a solid case against U.S. government officials for their involve—

State and Justice department documents interpret the laws narrowly and suggest that some do not apply to government leaders, or that their scope is too broad to cover certain activities.

A&P to buy Waldbaum supermarkets

ONTVALE (AP) — The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, indicating it plans to continue to expand from its place as the nation's sixth largest supermarket chain, says it will acquire a controlling interest in Waldbaum Inc., another supermarket operation. Waldbaum, the 12th largest supermarket chain in the country, has 140 stores in New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts.

The $287 million agreement includes a tender offer by APW Partnership Corporation, com-prising A&P and members of the family of Ira Waldbaum, of $50 per share for 5.7 million shares outstanding, according to A&P spokesman Michael J.

The stock closed at $28.50 on Wednesday, when the agree-ment was announced at the end of the market day.

The Waldbaums have already tendered their 60 percent share in the company to the new corporation.

"The combination will be good," Rourke said. "They are an excellent company. They run excellent stores.

"We do have a growth strategy and are looking at ways to improve our efficiency," he said.

A&P will provide financing for the acquisition and own the majority interest in the new partnership. Ira Waldbaum, the 59-year-old company president, and other family members will continue to manage the stores under the Waldbaum name.

MORRISTOWN — The ruddy-jowled, red-clad embodiment of holiday cheer we conjure in our mind's eye at the mention of Santa Claus belongs to Thomas Nast. So does the elephant as a symbol of the Republican Party.

"There are very few cartoonists who can say they can sway an election the way Nast did, or throw a whole group of politicians out who had their hands in the public's pocket," said Alice Caulkins, president of the newly incorporated Thomas Nast Society.

Rutgers fire kills woman

PISCATAWAY (AP) — A 29-year-old South Korean woman died early yesterday in a Rutgers University dormitory fire apparently caused by faulty wiring in a lamp, authorities said.

Giewon Min was pronounced dead at the scene, said university spokeswoman Barbara Dawson. Her husband, Byongil Min, was injured and taken to St. Francis Medical Center in Trenton, Dawson said.

Min, 36, an engineering student, was in critical and unstable condition with burns over 35 percent of his body, concentrated around his upper torso and head, said an administrative supervisor at the hospital.

Dawson said the couple were South Korean citizens who had come to this country 1½ years ago. Min was working towards his PhD in engineering, with a specialty in polymers, she said.

She said Mrs. Min was not a student at the university.

The blaze at the Russell apartment building, a graduate and married student dormitory at the university's Busch campus here, was reported at 2:48 a.m. Firefighters found Mrs. Min in the living room of her one-bedroom apartment, and Min outside the residence. 'Apparently the cause of the fire was faulty wiring in a lamp,"

The second-floor apartment was seriously damaged, and there was water damage to the dwelling below in the two-story, eight-unit building, officials said.

The site of the crash was about a mile away from the nearest road, inideen by a stretch of woods, and police said the boys played a key role in rescuing the men.

"Lucky for these guys, it would have taken us a long time to get there. We would never have seen them," said Jones. "They went back and showed us how to get there. We're going to try to get there. We're going to try to get there. We're going to try to get them merit citations," he said. "They're heroes to the guys they took out of the fire," the lieutenant added.

Farino was in satisfactory condition at The Medical Center at Princeton after being treated for second— and third-degree burns on his face, hands and legs, said hospital spokeswoman Carol Kiser. She said Cordoba was treated for hand and facial burns and released.

Cordoba did not return calls to his home yesterday.

The chopper's last moments in flight, about 6 feet off the ground, were discribed by one of the boys, 12-year-old Michael Ochsner.

"It was spinning around and around. Then the tail dug into the ground and the front part blew up;" he said.

Flames reached about 30 feet high and one boy was sent for help as Ochsner and the other went to the aid of pilot and instructor.

The boy said both men jumped out, on fire, and rolled around on the ground. He said he and his cousin, 13-year-old Philip H. Heinz, of North Brunswick, took the men to Cordoba's residence at the nearby helicopter enterprises complex he owns.

Cities' mayors face 'grim realism'

AN ANTONIO, Texas (AP)
— Leaders of the nation's cities, after watching Congress eliminate major federal aid this year, faced what one official called a "grim realism" about the future of federal support for urban America as they gathered yesterday for a conference on city problems.

Nearly 5,000 municipal officials were arriving for the National League of Cities' annual meeting, which also was expected to showcase this city's young Hispanic mayor, Henry Cisneros.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., who will be chairman of the Senate Banking Committee next year, said in interviews they plan to take their inquiries beyond the spate of insider trading cases.

Those cases came to a head Nov. 14 when Boesky, 49, Wall Street's best-known arbitrageur, agreed to pay $100 million and plead guilty to one criminal charge to settle a Securities and Exchange Commission insider trading com-plaint. Boesky also was barred from trading for life.

Both Dingell and Proxmire said they do not know the extent of the problem yet. But both voiced suspicions of widespread insider trading in volutile takeover stocks. atile takeover stocks.
"It is a major problem, but it

Proxmire said his committee will be looking at the broader question of hostile corporate takeovers and their effect on American business. But the senator said the committee plans a close look at insider trading itself because of suspicions of widespread abuse.

Wood alcohol kills two teens

EL CITY, Okla. (AP) — A teen-ager died yesterday from drinking toxic wood alcohol passed off as "moonshine," part of the same batch that killed one youth and sickened others who had attended a party where it was served, authorities said.

Kevin Elder, 17, died at Plano General Hospital in Plano, Texas, detective Mark Edwards said.

John Lowery, 19, of Oklahoma City remained in custody yesterday on a second-degree murder complaint in the death Friday of partygoer Timothy Scott Tilson, 23, of Oklahoma City.

A witness told police that Lowery poured the methanol into a 2-liter soft drink bottle and told people at the party

Iran arms deal defendants say Bush knew of operation

By FRANK GREVE, KEN FIREMAN and ALFONSO CHARDY Knight-Ridder News Service

The memos state that Iranian officials were prepared to restrain terrorists and hostage-holders, permit renewed U.S. surveillance of Soviet military movements from Iranian soil and allow U.S. inspection of captured Soviet weaponry in return for urgently needed U.S. arms.

The proposed deal added up to $2 billion worth of helicopters, fighter planes, tanks, cluster bombs, missiles and spare parts. The administration last week announced it sold $12 million in arms to Iran since the 1979 arms embargo, which Reagan has acknowledged secretly skirting.

The only official response to Brenneke, on the vice president's stationery, came from Menarchik on Feb. 6. He stated to Brenneke that the U.S. government "will not permit or participate in the provision of war materiel to Iran and will prosecute any such efforts by U.S. citizens."

Weinberger seeks to allay SALT II cancellation fears

By NORMAN BLACK Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defense Sec-retary Caspar W. Weinberger will fly to Europe and northern Africa this week for consultations that are sure to be dominated by nuclear arms control issues and recent developments in the Middle

The defense secretary's main purpose on the eight-day trip is a regularly scheduled meeting of NATO defense ministers. But he is also making a special sidetrip to improve relations with Moroco, and will have to allay European concerns about President Reagan's decision last week to break out from the restrictions of the SALT II nuclear arms accord.

Weinberger expects to be questioned by the allied officials about secret U.S. arms sales to Iran and profits being sent to Contra rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government. But he has little to add to the disclosures, because he was not disclosures because he was not aware of the secret cash transfers to the Contras, said a Pentagon source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The consultations with European defense officials will more likely center on arms control; arms cooperation projects; the president's "Star Wars" initiative; and the need for NATO countries to increase their spending on conventional defense, said Pentagon officials who asked not to be named.

Allied leaders in Europe had previously urged Reagan to hold to the limits of the unratified SALT II pact in the absence of a new agreement, "and the sec-retary is now expecting lengthy discussions on this matter," one source said.

Reagan decided to exceed the SALT II limits on nuclear missiles and cruise-missile equipped

Dissident won't emigrate, wife says

OSCOW (AP) — Dissident Anatoly Marchenko would rather serve out his 10-year prison sentence than succumb to pressure by the KGB secret police to emigrate to Israel, his wife said vesterday.

yesterday.
"I know he does not want to emigrate," the wife, Larisa Bogoraz, said in an interview with The Associated Press.
Bogoraz said KGB officers urged her Nov. 21 to seek exit visas for herself, her husband and their 13-year-old son, Pavel.

She said she told the KGB she wanted to talk to her husband before making a decision, but the KGB has not replied. Marchenko turned down two previous official demands that he emigrate to Israel.

Bogoraz said she last saw her husband in April 1984, when she was allowed to visit him in prison in Chistopol, 500 miles east of Moscow

She complained that Soviet authorities have not given her reliable information about her husband's health. She cited sources as saying he began a hunger strike on Aug. 4.

"They (the KGB) told me, 'Marchenko is feeling wonderful,'" she said. "Obviously he is being force-fed, but I don't know when this began."

Marchenko, one of the most prominent Soviet dissidents, has served more than 20 years in prison and internal exile. In 1981, he was convicted of anti-Soviet propaganda and agita-Soviet propaganda and agitation and sentenced to 10 years in prison, to be followed by five years in internal exile.

The KGB has not said why it wants Marchenko to leave the country, but the intent apparently is to get rid of people who oppose the system. Many dissidents prefer to stay in the Soviet Union and fight, rather than become politically ineffective in exile.

Soviet Asian initiative stalls

Chicago Tribune

EW DELHI, India — The Kremlin's new Asian initiative appears to have run out of steam, at least temporarily, after talks here between the Soviet Union and India ended without agreement on several key issues, particularly relations with China and Pakistan, analysts say.

But it would be incorrect, diplomatic experts warn, to call Mikhail Gobachev's first journey to non-communist Asia as Soviet leader a failure. The Soviet Union and India remain in total agreement on many issues, including nuclear disarmament. Gorbachey and Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Ghandi also signed a new economic pact providing for new hydroelectric plants, coal min-ing and oil exploration in India.

New embassy in Moscow said riddled with listening devices

WASHINGTON — The new U.S. embassy being built in Moscow is riddled with Soviet listening devices planted in its main structural listening devices planted in its main structural components, according to several members of Congress who received secret briefings about its problems.

They said an elaborate and far-reaching network of spying equipment was concealed inside precast concrete construction units, including beams, walls and floor slabs, and that the devices may be impossible to remove without wrecking the building.

Construction has been stopped at the ninestory building, already three years behind schedule and more than $20 million over budget, while U.S. officials decide what to do. The building is not occupied. "We'll either have to make a decision to go ahead (and attempt to remove the devices) or we'll have to blow the building up," said Rep. Dan Mica, D-Fla., chairman of the House International Operations Subcommittee, which oversees U.S. embassies. "The building itself is a monumental disaster."

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., confirmed that espionage equipment has been found within the building, which was begun in 1979. He said the devices were imbedded in prefabricated building components manufactured outside of the building site and without U.S. inspection.

An agreement signed in 1977 required the United States to employ Soviet laborers and materials in its new embassy. Only nine U.S. government inspectors were permitted inside the 10-acre job site, according to Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Richard N. Dertadian, director of the Office of Foreign Buildings.

Dertadian said he could not discuss the existence of any listening devices in the building. He did say a painstaking inspection is under way that will not be completed until next spring or summer.

Real estate 'equalized' by new law

Over the last two decades, real estate has been virtually "an investment that could not lose." In addition to the capital gains created by appreciation in values, real estate owners have enjoyed tax benefits which made even marginally profitable property a valuable investment.

These benefits included ac-

These benefits included accelerated depreciation, investment tax credits, favorable capital gains tax treatment, and "at-risk" rules which allowed investors to deduct mortgage interest even if they were not personally liable for the loan. All have been eliminated by the new law by the new law.

This tax law might be titled "the great equalizer." In one stroke of the president's pen, it creates a so-called "level playing field" on which investments must compete on their economic merit alone. Stripped of many tax benefits, the huge real estate tax shelter industry which grew during the 1970s and early '80s will decline. The focus of real estate investors will shift from tax deductions to properties which have the potential to earn a profit, or take advantage of surrounding growth, or increase revenues through superior management.

With encouragement from a powerful real estate lobby, Congress left intact the investment advantages of owning your own home. If you itemize, you may continue to deduct mortgage interest on a first or second residence along with state or local property taxes. In addition, you may continue to defer capital gains on sale of a principal residence by "rolling over" your cost basis to a new residence purchased with 24 months. As under prior law, homeowners age 55 or older may take a one-time exclusion of up to $125,000 in gains from the sale of a principal residence.

What qualifies as a "principal residence" for purposes of deducting mortgage interest? If you own a vacation home, you must live in it at least two weeks per year to qualify. However, if you rent out the home, you must live in it at least 10 percent of the number of days for which you receive rent. Therefore, take an extra week of vacation, courtesy of Uncle Sam.

Therefore, take an extra week of vacation, courtesy of Uncle Sam. The law gives homeowners a big financial planning asset — your home equity. Since "consumer interest" is no longer fully deductible after 1986, a 100 percent deductible second mortgage may make good financial planning sense. For example, you might use a second mortgage to consolidate and pay off credit card loans, thereby converting non-deductible interest to deductible. You may only deduct interest on a mortgage equal in value to the home's original purchase price plus improvements; however, if you use the loan to pay for medical or educational expenses, there is

The changes regarding investment real estate are so significant, and so complex, that we are advising our clients who invest in real estate to undergo a complete financial planning review. The major points are as follows:

If you are a "passive investor,"
you may no longer use losses

partnerhip to offset your salary, portfolio income or active business income. This provision applies to all property placed in Special capital gains tax treatment will no longer be available for any investment, including real estate, sold after Dec. 31, 1986.

This means that long-term gains will not qualify for a 60 percent exclusion. Tax planning will be more critical in avoiding a large tax liability on the sale of

It's so hard to choose one

OK, citizens. Time for another update on the 1988 presidential election campaign, now entering its sixth year and starting to really heat up.

This is a critical election, citizens. It will be up to us, as voters, to continue a tradition we have established over the past 20 years of always electing the most comical possible president. And we do not face an easy choice, not with potential candidates such as, on the Republican side, the un-usually Reverend Pat "Pat" Robertson. Pat, of course, is the central character in the now-famous 1985 miracle wherein Hurricane Gloria appeared to be headed smack toward Virginia, where Pat has his headquarters, and he and his people prayed about it, and lo and behold, the hurricane actually changed direction and missed Virginia. Afterward Pat went on his TV show and head a little chart to illustrate this ward Pat went on his I'v show and used a little chart to illustrate this wondrous event, although he did not mention that Gloria went on to whonk the Northeast and kill several people.

Pat's major competition for the Republican nomination will probably come from George Bush, who has never taken an active role who has never taken an active role in the weather, but who does have the experience of meeting face to face with many of the world's top leaders, although unfortunately the vast majority of them were deceased at the time. But George is very strong in the area of drugs, which as you know is an extreme-ly hot political issue these days. It has completely eclipsed farmers.

This is good for George, because he got into drugs on the ground floor, back when President Reagan made him the leader of the Drug Task Force and gave him a badge and Secret Decoder Ring and and Secret Decoder King and everything. Every few months, when there were no horizontal embalmed world leaders for him to go look at, George would fly down to Miami and hold a press conference where he'd announce that Real Progress was being made in the War On Drugs, after which his motorcade would rush back to the airport, using back roads so as to airport, using back roads so as to avoid the cocaine spills on the expressway.

So George had a head start on the drug issue, but he faces stiff competition as more and more bold ing up and coming out against drugs and proposing bold new programs featuring the following comprehensive list of extremely practical and innovative and Peeing into Jars: At first the plan was that this program would apply only to people with extremely sensitive and crucial jobs, such as airline pilot or quarterback, but the current trend is toward includ-ing everybody. Many courageous politicians have led the way by taking time out from busy election campaigns to produce samples of campagns to produce samples of their own personal urine. The thinking here can be summed up-by the old expression: "It may be meaningless, but at least it's a gesture." So we are making tremendous progress, but more needs to be done. We, the voters, need to start demanding more from our candidates for public from our candidates for public office than bodily waste fluids. We should also demand blood sam-ples. If it's a really important political office, we could demand tissue, maybe even organs. That's the kind of commitment we're going to need if we're going to lick this thing. I see I've drifted some distance away from our original topic, the 1986 presidential campaign, so in what little time I have remaining here I'll review the Democrats. The Democrats are starting to realize their actions have been somewhat self-defeating in the past, as evidenced by their official 1984 campaign slogan: "Walter Mondale: He's Going To Lose." So this time around there's a New Generation of Democrats; smart, serious guys in wing-tipped shoes serious guys in wing-tipped shoes who represent the essence of what today's more-conservative voters want their Democratic politicians want their Democratic politicians to be: Republicans. Many observers feel the Democrats have a serious chance to win back the White House, and, without question, one of the highlights of the next two years will be watching the party Brain Trust figure some way to flush this chance right down the toilst "Ill keap you." down the toilet. I'll keep you

They watch the home-bound commuters file off the trains, and they remember the endless days, six days a week for 10 years in all, when Darryl Dworkin caught the 6:45 a.m. train into New York City and did not arrive home until 8:30 p.m.

That was almost seven years ago, and although Dworkin and his wife still work long hours, his commuting days are over.

In 1980 the couple called it quits in the corporate world. Darryl left his job as vice-president of LJN Toys in New York and Vita left hers as director of purchasing and package development of Johnson and Johnson's Ortho-Pharmaceuticaldivision in Some-rville to open The Bright Acre in Shrewsbury.

rville to open The Bright Acre in Shrewsbury. A year-round store specializing in outdoor furniture, fireplace equipment and installa-tions and most recently, a Christmas shop, The Bright Acre and its satellite store in Wall Township represent successful endeavors by two people who dared to risk it all. "We made the switch for ourselves," says

Dworkin. "Vita and I were working so hard, putting in so much time and effort for someone else. One day we just said, 'Why not do it all for ourselves?'."

Although the Dworkins' original intent was to purchase the store and have Vita run it while her husband continued to work and earn money, the idea was abandoned within three months. The Dworkins found out that owning their own business was a bit more "In the corporate environment, you pick up a phone and call for help if something needs to be done," says Vita Dworkin. "In your own business, you're doing it all. It was a shock, especially the physical work that was involved."

The owners of Shrewbury's Bright Acre traded the corporate world for a furniture store that doubles now as a one-stop Christmas shop.

Story by Arlene Kielty Photos by Bill Denver

Because Vita was unable to unload merchandise from trucks and stock it on the shelves by herself, Dworkin stopped work to help his wife full-time in the store.

Beginning with an inventory that included fencing and garden supplies, the Dworkins found little profit to be gained and concentrated, instead, on patio furniture. They found the community receptive to the idea, and in the last few years, they have expanded their business to include a complete line of fireplace equipment and custom installations and a one-stop-shop Christmas shop which includes a wide selection of cut Christmas trees brought in each year from contral Pennsylvania. of cut Christmas trees brought in each year from central Pennsylvania.

The Dworkins are especially proud of the five-year-old Christmas shop which contains a varied selection of decorations for the home and tree.

The holiday season, says Darryl Dworkin, is still the busiest time of year for him and his wife, and having been in the toy industry for 14 years prior to his 1980 exit, he says he is quite used to the pace.

"We work just as hard and put in longer hours than when we worked in the corporate world," he says. "We do a lot of work at home, but we also have the best possible lifestyle because we are working together and have more freedom in getting things done and being our own bosses." our own bosses.

And with Vita in charge of the marketing and sales aspects of the business and her husband overseeing the operations, the cou-ple says they work very well together and make an excellent team.

Vita Dworkin says that although she is grateful for the management, financial and analytical tools that she learned in the corporate world and which she applies in her business today, she does not miss all the red tape she had to go through whenever she presented an idea for approval.

"I receive a lot more satisfaction now when I can come up with my own idea, develop it and succeed in getting it down," she says. "There is no other feeling like that in the world."

Christmas toys

Take care to select toys that are appropriate for your child's age group

Because play is so necessary to a child's healthy development, a little thought, investigation and careful planning should go into selecting the right toy for each individual child.

Select playthings that are appropriate to the age, interests and capabilities of the individual child. Although a manufacturer's suggested age labeling on packages is helpful as a general guide, no two children are exactly alike in their development, skills and interests

Look for certain qualities in toys. The best playthings should enhance the three main areas of development — think-ing/cognitive skills, muscle/motor skills and social/creative skills — as well as develop competence and as well as develop competence and mastery in the four main areas of play activity. They should possess some of the following qualities:

Provide some degree of realism: A toy is only an idea about something. It cannot teach and inspire a child by itself. There must be some type of interaction between youngster and plaything. A somewhat realistic reproduction of an adult—world object such as a of an adult-world object such as a baby doll, model car or play telephone will make it recognizable to the child and help promote the youngster's interests, mastery and playfulness through

Be functional: It should do or suggest something that can be controlled or learned by the child. It might be a toy that can be asssembled, taken apart and put together again and perhaps just a little beyond the child's current level of competence.

Provide a variety of play experiences: It might be a toy that can be used in various arrangements to suggest different objects or activities such as putting blocks together to make a dollhouse or a

Choose toys as an investment. A plaything should challenge and stimulate the child's creativity and invite active involvement. Make sure the toy fits within the family budget. Consider the expense of accessories, replacement parts and batteries, if necessary.

Ask yourself if it has repeat play value and if it is durable enough to pass on from child to child.

Toys should be safe to use. Stringent industry voluntary safety wanderdo and government. regulations have made American toys the safest in the world. However, there is no substitute for responsible adult supervision. When buying for younger children, avoid toys with sharp points and edges or those with small parts which might be hazardous to them. Above all, be sure to read carefully all instructions included in and on the toy packaging by the manufacturer.

The following are some general suggestions for suitable toys for children of various ages. They are offered merely as a guide to help in your selection. Remember, all children are different.

BABIES AND TODDLERS Today, experts agree that even babies need toys. Many studies have been conducted indicating that babies are responsive to their environment from birth and babies learn about size; shape, sound, texture and how things work from their playthings. For babies under 18 months, choose playthings that are too large to swallow, that are lightweight for handling and grasping, that have no snarp points or edges, that are brightly colored, and are non-toxic for exploring mouths.

Celebrating a golden future

A Golden Future is what members of the Congregation B'nai Israel were celebrating when they held their second annual Golden Future Ball last Saturday night. Boutonnieres for women are in but corsages are out

By LINNEA LANNON Knight-Ridder

Q. I am taking a friend to a black-tie-optional party in December. She is wearing a long black skirt, a white top and — perfect — a black tie. I thought it might be fun to buy her a boutonniere. Is this a) too hokey, b) totally impractical or c) a fashion faux pas of which I am unaware?

Speaking of which, whatever hap-pened to corsages? I haven't seen one since the prom, which was more than a few years ago. — A.N.

A. I think your idea of a boutonniere is clever and should win you extra points if your date has a jacket to pin the flower to. She would rightly be loathe to pin a boutonniere to a silk blouse (or other fragile fabric) because the pin would leave holes in the material. Also, the weight of the boutonniere might be too heavy for the blouse, and the flower could be drooping all night.

As to corsages: I have actually worn one to dinner in recent memory. It was a joke, though. For better or worse, corsages have gone the way of fins on Cadillacs. The upside of that is that a bunch of flowers will last in a vase on a woman's dresser much longer than a woman's dresser much longer than corsages lasted in the refrigerator.

More on mothballs: A number of readers have suggested remedies for getting the smell of mothballs out of a suit. Some suggested putting the suit in a hanging bag containing baking soda (presumably scattered in the bottom) on the theory that the baking soda would eat the odor. Another suggestion is to put the suit in a small closed area with a bowl of vinegar, which also seems to kill or wheeth had odors. Or soak cotton balls in absorb bad odors. Or soak cotton balls in vinegar and put them and the suit in a hanging bag for a few days.

Debate continues

Dear Ann Landers: Recently a woman whose life was changed dramatically as a result of a kidney transplant wrote to say she would give anything to learn whose kidney she received so she could thank the family for she could thank the family for their enlightened generosity. You said you hoped she could learn the identity of the donor and that you didn't see how any harm could come of it. You wished her luck.

Hold it, Ann. Not so fast. Two years ago my husband (age 34) received the kidney of a 19year-old lad who was killed in a car accident. We, too, wanted to know the family so we could thank them properly. Well, now we can't get them out of ourlives.

The mother (a divorced woman) was emotionally destroyed by the tragic death of her only child. She has attached her only child. She has attached herself to my husband in the belief that her son is living again in my husband's body. The women telephones him almost every day, shows up at our door uninvited and does everything possible to be a part of our lives. She has become such a problem that we have considered moving out of the

So please don't be so quick to advise people to become socially advise people to become socially acquainted with the families of the donors. We wish we had let well enough alone. — SORRY IN THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST DEAR SORRY: Here's a letter from someone who agrees with

Dear Ann Landers: Before I finish reading the paper I want you to know there are some very good reasons why a recipient should NOT know the family of the donor.

I worked in the records de partment of the liver and kidney transplant unit at the University Hospital in Denver before Dr. Tom Starzl moved his program to Pittsburgh. I left Colorado in '80.

I saw many donor families who expected recipients to fulfill the fantasies they had for their dead child. It was common. s common was the family who later wanted money from the family of the recipient. I could go on and on about the psychological enmeshment that occurs when these two families get to know each other. It rarely ends in a simple "thank you."

Please get this information before the public. It could save a lot of grief. — NO NAME, SIMPLY DATEMARK USA.

DEAR DATEMARK THANKS for

DEAR DATEMARK: Thanks for the testimony. And now here is another point of view from one of the world's leading transplant surgeons, Dr. Norman Shumway, chief of cardiovascular surgery at Stanford University Hospital.

In a telephone conversation, Dr. Shumway said, "Not all donors want to know the family of the recipient and not all recipients want to know the family of the donor. When they do express the want to know the family of the donor. When they do express the wish, however, we screen both families carefully for psychological problems and hopefully weed out the troubled ones. So far we have had no unhappy repercussions. The families we have put together have all been very grateful and everyone been very grateful and everyone has benefited."

Dr. John Najarian, head of the Department of Surgery at the University of Minnesota Medical School, expressed a different point of view. He said, "We have done more than 3,000 transplants by bere and regist introducing up here and resist introducing donors to recipients. If donors reveal their identity to the newspapers, we can't do anything about it, but we have a strict policy against putting families together. Too often donors want to get chummy and celebrate the transplant anniversaries with re-cipients or they demand money and become troublesome."

The experts have spoken, folks.

Take your pick.

Taking a close look at a three-year-old

Three, like any other age, has very special way of being. Three, as other ages, represents partially developed young human being. Because a three-year-old is only partially completed in his development, it follows that his talents are also only partially developed. If your parts are learning to work, then you are able to do what they will allow you to do, no

Keep in mind that each gen-etic gift and home environment bestows on each developing child unique talents and background information, as well as, experiences. And since each child has his own way of expressing this special composition, we can look at norms of behavior with the idea that we will need to modify our expec-tations, or better, perhaps live in the reality that each human model is an entity unto itself, and that children pass through the "norms" in their own way.

Three is a relief from the often turbulent behaviors of the two-and-a-half year-old. the two-and-a-half year-old. Three is beginning to be interested in other people and to include other people in their own calculations. A three-year-old gives evidence of wanting to please others and wanting to be right. He almost appears to be leaning how to buy into the clan and its ways of doing things. Three is more social than the self-willed two-and-a-half-year-old. Three and-a-half-year-old. Three loves language and finds new

Three tries to be a clone of mother and wants to do what she does. Helping with house hold chores and conforming to expectations of others close to him makes him attractive to parents and pleases himself. Threes are calm to be with because they have mastered to a greater degree making their body work and seem to rejoice in better management of self than the previous six months allowed them to do.

The gentle conforming three is short lived, as develoment marches on. Three-and-a-half-year-olds make enough progress to have to relearn how to live in social, emotional and bodily terms. This makes for discomfort with self and similar parental discomfort. Three-and-a-half seems bent on making his self will as strong as possible. He often resists mother's directions and de mands. Dressing, eating and bathroom routines may all be-come contests of will for this emerging person.

This is an age of insecurity in all aspects of living and it makes for a tough survival time for parents. What worked as parenting skills prior to this may not work at three-and-a-

That a half year's growth could be so different makes many a mother feel insecure in her parenting skills. Survivial tips include the use of sitters as a parent needs time off to regroup. Dear Heloise: I always had a problem keeping decorative laces and rick-rack together in my sewing drawer until I came up with a solution that I would like to share with you and your readers.

I keep a plastic bag filled with empty thread spools in my sewing room. When I purchase any lace or trimming, I take it out of its package and wrap it around an package and wrap it around an empty spool, then secure it with a straight pin. A great use for those empty thread spools. I always hate to throw them away because they seem so versatile. — Heloise

Dear Heloise: Here is a neat trick if you don't like cleaning the top of the refrigerator every time you turn around.

After you clean it the next time, put an old towel on top of the refrigerator. From then on, oc-casionally pull off the towel and throw it in the laundry and re-place it with a clean towel.

No more dirty, grimy refriger-ator top. — K.M.

Mending knit skirts
Dear Heloise: I have found the best way to mend holes in knit shirts is to use lightweight fusible interfacing and iron it onto the wrong side of the shirt.

It's neat and, best of all, it doesn't scratch. — Donna

Padded hangers
Dear Heloise: I want to share this hint on how to make your own padded hangers using pantyhose. The best part is they are really easy to do.

Just put the hanger hook through the crotch of the panty section, wrap each leg loosely around the hanger and pull the pantyhose over all this. The elastic that is in the waistband will keep the hose in place. will keep the hose in place.

This sure beats buying padded hangers as they are quite expensive and these work just great!

TV, home violence related to crime

By JIM SPENCER

Chicago Tribune

Heavy doses of TV violence combined with a violent home environ-ment are related to the commission of violent crimes by young adults, according to a study by a Loyola University of Chicago researcher.

Watching lots of violent shows on television in and of itself doesn't lead to violent criminal behavior, according to researcher Linda Heath. However, "getting the same violent message from two sources—TV and Mom or Dad—increased the effect of each source." says the effect of each source, Heath. "The message seems to be that television is not fiction when either Mom or Dad or both also are

Heath and two associates from the University of Minnesota interviewed 47 men convicted of violent crimes, such as murder, rape, rob-bery and aggravated assault, and compared them with 46 men of the same race, age and childhood neighborhood who had not been convicted of violent crimes.

Children reared around domestic violence tended to see TV violence as examples of conflict resolution or as a way people get what they want, while those in nomes not marred by strife saw TV violence as fantasy and "a bad thing to do."

Kiddie calls

For those who've experienced the sinking feeling of discovering their pre-schooler perched by the phone in the den dialing God-knows-where, Globe Toy Co., Menomonee Falls, Wis., has come up with a comforting option. The people who gave you the kiddiesized gym locker are now offering the Walk-In Phone Booth for chilthe Walk-In Phone Booth for chil-

Salvation Army couple receives new titles

Commissioner Robert
Rightmire, former commanding officer of the Red Bank Salvation Army, has been named Territorial Commander of The Salvation Army for the Central Territory, U.S.A., which is headquartered in Chicago. His wife, Katherine Rightmire, also a former officer of the Red Bank Salvation Army, has become Territorial President of Salvation Army Commissioner Robert dent of Salvation Army Women's Organization in the Central Territory. Commissioner Rightmire is now administrative and ecclesiastical leader of 1,325 officers, 24,150 lay members and 6,090 employees in 3,941 centers of operation in the eleven midwestern states.

Commissioner Rightmire became a Salvationist in 1937 at the Cincinnati Cumminsville Corps. He became a Salvation Army officer-can-didate during WorldWar II, entering the school for of-ficers' training after the war. He was commissioned a probationary-captain in June 1946. In 1947 he married Captain Katherine Stillwell.

During World War II, Commissioner Rightmire served in the US Coast Guard as Petty Officer aboard the USS Admiral Earle, a troop transport ship. Commissioner and Mrs. Rightmire served together in corps appointments in the Yorkville and Times Square Corps in New York City and in Red Bank, New Jersey.

Commissioner Rightmire's first overseas appointment came in 1964 in Kyoto, Japan, where he served as divisional commander.

Returning to the United States in 1969, Com-missioner Rightmire was appointed divisional secretary

Katherine and Robert Rightmire

for the Eastern Pennsylvania Division, going next to the Eastern Territory's School for Officers' Training as general secretary and chief side officer for men.

For the thirteen years preceding their present appointment, the Rightmires have been stationed in the Far Fast where they be Far East where they ex-perienced the challenge of serving in cultures in which the Christian community is a small percentage of the population. Commissioner Rightmire was appointed chief secretary for the Japan Territory in 1973. Following a project as exist. brief appointment as chief secretary for the South Africa Territory, the commissioner was appointed territorial commander for Japan in 1978. He came to the Central Territory following three years as territorial com-mander for Korea, a territory experiencing unprecedented corps growth.

Commissioner Rightmire was a member of the Salvation Army's High Councils in 1981 and in 1986. He has been a member of Lions and Kiwanis service clubs and Rotary International in Tokyo, Japan, and Seoul, Korea. Mrs. Commissioner Robert (Katherine) Rightmire be-came Territorial President of Salvation Army Women's Or-ganizations in the Central Territory also on July 1. In this capacity she is responsible for the oversight of such Salvation Army-sponsored organizations as the Home League, League of Mercy, Nurses' Fellowship, Order of the Silver Star and Women's Auxiliaries, as well as for relationships with Church Women United and other groups in the midwest.

Katherine Ruth Stillwell was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the third daughter of Bandmaster and Mrs. Railton Stillwell and grew up in Passaic. She is a fourth-generation Salvationist.

Marriage to Captain Robert Rightmire in 1947 was the beginning of a shared ministry in corps appoint-ments and on the staff of the school for officer's training

Born today, you have been endowed with a quick mind and an agile body. You are invariably the first to grasp even the most complex ideas, and you are rarely bettered on the athletic field. You are not, however, a particularly eager team player; you prefer those activities that allow you to shine brightly on your own. You are not one to depend upon others, just as you would prefer others not to depend upon you. You can be, however, more than dependable when you make up your mind to be so.

KEYPORT — The Holmdel Hornets captured the "D" division crown yesterday by defeating the Keyport Red Raiders 10-3 yester-

It was the consistent Holmdel 10 Hornet defense and the Keyport 3

play of quarterback Tom Serluco that led to the vic-tory. Serluco was the main force behind the Hornet winning drive early in the fourth quarter to break a 3-3 tie. The senior started his team on their own 21 yardline to begin a 79 yard touchdown drive. Of the seven plays run by the offense, Serluco ran the ball four times to account for 64 yards. Arnie pockets hole, $25,000 in Skins Game

By BOB GREEN AP Golf Writer

LA QUINTA, Calif. Even with four of the greatest players in the world competing, fear is a factor in golf's Skins Game.

"We're all scared to death we're net going to win a skin, and be embarrassed," said Assoid Palmer, at 57 the oldest of the four men who teed it up yesterday in a two-day, 18-hole chase for $450,000.

Nets owners urge Wohl to keep job despite bad start

NEWARK (AP) — The three principal owners of the stumbling New Jersey Nets yesterday said they were 100 percent behind Dave Wohl, just hours after the second-year coach said he was considering quitting.

The 37-year-old Wohl indicated he was thinking of stepping down on Friday night after the Nets dropped a 119-94 decision to Dallas for their eighth straight loss.

loss.
"The New Jersey Nets management is 100 percent behind Dave Wohl and our team," owners Alan Aufzien, David Gerstein and Bernie Mann said in a statement read by team spokesman Jim Lampariello. "No one enjoys losing and this has been a very frustrating month for us. ing month for us.
"We are confident however that our current coaching staff will turn things around," the owners said in a statement. "Dave Wohl is a good coach and this organization is going to do everything in its power to support him."

Wohl seemed to be at the end of his rope Friday after the 25-point loss to Dallas, the team's biggest loss this season pointwise.

"Maybe it's time for me to make a decision, that they would be better off with another coach," Wohl said after the game according to Newsday. "I'm not reaching them. I just can't seem to get through to them. I could stand the losing if I thought we were playing hard.

"In the last seven, eight, nine games the players haven't given the effort physically, and mentally they aren't in the games," the coach said in the Newsday story. "The competitive spirit isn't there. I'm judging by my own standards." I'm judging by my own standards. They aren't understanding, and they're confused. And that's a reflection of me as a coach."

The Nets are 2-12 this season, the worst record in the NBA.

"I've been thinking about (quitting) for the last few games," Wohl told Newsday. He went 39-43 last year in his first season with the Nets.

St. Rose represented by four players, Shore Regional by two

For three weeks, the Purple Roses were struggling just to reach

This year's team presented Cox with a 5-3-1 record although it was rated as a question mark at the beginning of the season. The team's real tribute to its coach came Thanksgiving Day, when it upset tough Mater Dei, 20-7, as a farewell gift. Cox may remember and savor that final win for a long time.

"One of the hard things about quitting is that there are some kids coming up who will be outstand-

Every day is a calendar milestone of a sort, I suppose. The first day of the rest of your life, for example. But this last day of November seems like a good one on which to stop and see where we Tomorrow is December. The winter solstice is only 20 days away. And today we begin the darkest six-week period of the year. The days of our year dwindle down.

And that means planning is underway for Christmas bird counts. This year's count period runs from Dec. 18 through Jan 4. The first of the local censuses, the The first of the local censuses, the Sandy Hook will be done Saturday, Dec. 20, with George Wentzelburger of Freehold Township directing the effort.

find birds in winter in our part of the world is south of the Mexican High score in that list for the United States and Canada was turned in by the Freeport, Texas, team: an impressive 207 species. But the best over-all tally was 324 species found in the Atlantic Canal area count in Panama. And that was with 47 observers against Freeport's 147.

Freeport's 147.
Corpus Christi, Texas, had the second-best Untied States count with an even 200 species. Of the 14 counts done south of the border, five had more than 200.
At the other end of the list was Bethel, Alaska, where the lone observer found 56 birds of just two species, common rayer and two species, common raven and common redpoll.

Looking at things closer to home, we find that Cape May, as usual, had high count for New Jersey with 163 species. Among counts done entirely within the state, Oceanville, whose circle in-cludes the wildlife refuge there, usually takes second place. This time its 124 was topped by Barnegat's 130. Long Branch was fourth with 117.

New Jersey contributes to another count that isn't included in the state list because half of its circle is in New York. It's the Lower Hudson count and its center is in the Hudson River off 60th Street in Manhattan. Its 76 observers found 135 species. servers found 135 species

That an area that includes so much urban development can produce that kind of variety may seem surprising. Actually, there is a lot of bird-rich habitat in the wetlands on the New Jersey side of the river.

Sandy Hook had 96 species last year, and Assunpink 69. Both these counts were done early in the period, which in the average year might give an advantage of slightly milder weather. Last year, however, conditions were better at the end of the period, in early January, and the two counts were below their norms.

Many factors, including the weather, affect the results of each count. A major one is the size of the count team.

Best showing in that catagory.

Best showing in that catagory last year was by the Millis, Mass., count with an army of 501 observers. But only 60 of these actually worked in the field. The other 441 were feeder watchers. The largest traveling troop was fielded by the Oakland, Caifornia, count with 150 in addition to 17 at feeders. Greenwich, Connecticut, feeders. Greenwich, Connecticut, had a total force of 181, of which 112 worked afield.

A number of counts were done by single observers. One Texas birder who couldn't muster any help found 131 species on his own to set a record for a one-man

While many people detest steel shot because of its shorter range, I experienced no trouble bagging geese in Maryland with No. 1 steel. But there were lots of geese coming over, and I passed up shots beyond

However, guides in Delaware refuse to steel and they all carry 3-inch magnum guns loaded with No. 2 lead shot. They hunt every day and kill geese beyond 50 yards.

The goose hunting in the south isn't anywhere near as good as it was just a few years ago because of changing habitats of the birds. Now the bulk of the birds seem to be wintering in Ontario County. Patty Roe, Jim Urig win County Mixed Doul

The 17th Annual Monmouth County Mixed Doubles Tournament drew 276 teams this year for a two-weekend stand at Strathmore Lanes.

The complete listing of all those who finished in the money, both Handicap and Scratch Division, are listed in the bowling summaries below.

The leaders listed here after the first weekend set too high a pace for those bowling out the schedule on the final weekend and held on to cop the titles. Patty Roe of Howell and her partner Jim Urig of Farmingdale walked off with the biggest share of a $2,700-plus prize fund.

Patty turned in a 446 series while Jim Patty turned in a 446 series while Jim overpowered the pins for a 531 set. Since both had entering averages of 131, they gained the advantage of having a 474 pin handicap to help them take the 1986 Championship title.

This year the tournament management committee decided to make the event a 100percent handicap event. In all the previous years, the tournament had been an 80 percent event.

The bigger handicap did not attract more teams to participate. Actually it drew fewer teams than in many previous seasons. But the reasons why fewer teams participated is not necessarily be a factor, but there are others that all add up to a lack of communication.

When we realize that Monmouth County has close to 15,000 men and women bowling in mixed leagues alone this season, it would seem that a draw of only 276 teams to a tournament that is tailor-made for them is a proof showing. made for them is a poor showing. Even 500 teams would not be considered a large percentage from the field that large to draw from. But that is the way it is. The Scratch Division Championship was won by Bonnie Bartlett of Cliffwood Beach and Bob Serbe of Hazlet. This team to the beach is the best teach teach is the Beach and Bob Serbe of Hazlet. This team bowled the highest scratch total in the history of this tournament when they banged out a towering total of 1314.

Bonnie fired games of 237-217 and 192 for a respectable 646. Her partner, Bob, used his talents to record games of 224-239 and 205 for a 668 series. Added together, they walked away with the Scratch Division title.

Both Bonnie and Bob are well known for their bowling shillities: each have Both Bonnie and Bob are well known for their bowling abilities; each have participated in many challenging events and captured their share of titles. It is interesting to note that Bonnie has won the Monmouth County Queens tournament, while Bob has taken the counterpart of that event when he won the Monmouth County Masters Tourney.

This year the Handicap Division paid off to the top 28 teams, while seven teams cashed in the Scratch Division. This tournament allows individuals to bowl more than once providing it is with a different partner. Several bowlers will take advantage of this regulation. As in years past, it can be noted that there are always a few that cash in both divisions and sometimes more than once in the same division.

TOURNAMENT HIGH GAMES went to Bonnie Bartlett, whose 237 game was the best scratch game turned in by a

Lois Steindl took the high game with

handicap when she shot a 222 that advanced to 285 with a 63 pin handicap

For the men we find Dean White with a 277 game as a scratch winner, while Nat Patterson shattered the 300 mark when a 45 pin handicap was added to his 264 game for an over-the-top 309. That is what a 100 percent handicap can do.

BARBARA SERRANO of Atlantic Highlands is an avid bowler who squeezes three leagues into her busy schedule. She broke 600 for the second time in eight years of play. Barbara rolled games of 176-235 and 190 for a noteworthy 601 in the Monday Nite Mixed League at Middletown Lanes.

Barbara usually averages in the 160s.

Barbara usually averages in the 160s and her best this season is a 168. Her career high game of 243 and series total of 607 still stand, but she posted her career next best scores this past week.

NATIONAL COLLEGIATE MATCHES

TODAY
A gigantic field of 95 college teams are winding up one of the biggest and toughest tournament events this Thanksgiving weekend. It could easily be classified as the world's biggest collegiate bowling event.

Men's and women's teams totaling 95:
gathered in St. Louis during this weekend to compete in the National Collegiate Team Match Game Championships. The new 1986 tournament format has been changed to allow an additional 16 des-perate college teams to enter this event

It would appear that they all want the misery of competing in the toughest team bowling tournament. Ten games of team match play where in each game, a college is matched against not one but three new colleges every game.

You name them and they are in St. Louis. Naturally you can include Wichita State, West Texas, UC-Berkeley, Cal Fullerton, Ohio State and little but powerful Vincennes.

The East has all their nationally-ranked teams and all their best ready for this challenging event

National Champs, Erie Community, was expected to lead the Eastern Contingent that includes William Paterson, Penn State, New Jersey Tech, Buffalo State, Bryant College, St. Peters, Maryland, Temple, Canisius, Suny-Buffalo, Rochester Tech, West Virginia and finally, Pitt. They are 14 strong eastern colleges to be reckoned with.

Pair take H.S. X-C regionals

NEW YORK (AP) — T.J. McArdle of Garden City, N.Y. and Denise Bushallow of Auburn, N.Y. won the Kinney Cross Country Northeast Regional Championships at Van Cortlandt Park yesterday, leading the qualifiers for the high school national finals. McArdle, a senior at Garden City High, was a decisive winner among the boys, clocking 15 minutes, 22 seconds for the 5,000-meter course. Carlos Martins of Eastside High in Newark finished second in 15:45.

Bushallow, who placed second in the girls' race last year, took control early yesterday and finished in 17:34, 30 seconds ahead of runner-up Elizabeth Brenden of Rye Neck High in Mamaroneck, N.Y.

The top eight finishers in both

The top eight finishers in both the boys' and girls' races qualified for the Kinney national finals at San Diego's Balboa Park Dec. 13.

Who runs, who doesn't

Runners can be classified by company they don't keep

The running boom in this country has been remarkable, but a lot of people evidently haven't heard the noise. There are significant groups of people who choose not to run. Ergo, an analysis of the type of person who is running has surprising results.

The subject surfaced when Cory Duryea of Middletown, who swims rather than runners, noted once that Yuppies were into road racing, so many of the runners in the local races could be classified as such. Being classified tends to irritate some people, but classification is something runners tend to ignore.

Runners tend to think of themselves as a homogeneous group. Their common running interest makes different lifestyles of social status unimportant; runners are classifed as being faster of ners are classifed as being faster of slower than yourself.

There are occasions when differences are noted. A runner mentioned that I and other, older runners were an inspiration to the younger set. This surprised me, because until then, we thought we were one, large group.

known and a trend is evident. More than half the new runners are females. There are probably several reasons for this — health and fitness chief among them.

Important, too is that there are enough female runners at road races so that first-time runners will not feel uncomfortable. Most people feel uncomfortable if they are somehow different from the others in a group. This would be especially true of a woman attired in a runner's singlet or shorts. There is now evidence that if women want to prevent osteoporosis, one of the things they must do is engage in a strenuous activity, like running and aerobics.

The number of physically-active young women seems to be constantly rising and are totally accepted by the public. Gone are the days when an athletic girl was called a Tom Boy.

Still, one population group that is under-represented is the blue collar worker. Whatever the reason, it is not the fault of the race directors. Most runs are scheduled for Sundays to accomodate people who work on Saturday. Anyone performing manual labor knows that it will build up certain muscles. They should be aware, though, that it is unlikely to improve their cardiovascular pulmonar systems. Proper running will do that.

The elderly are also under-rep-resented, but time will solve that im-

30-39 years-old. Thirty years from now, they will still be physically active and running. If Alzheimers disease is not cured by then, ther will be many frisky patients in nursing homes.

Time will not solve the under-representation of our young. Only one in three of our children can meet the recommended athletic standards. Children of other industrial countries perform much better. Of more concern is that about 30 percent of our children have abnormally high cholesterol levels. Running or some type of exercise will reduce those levels.

Children have so many diversions and options that it is difficult for them to stay physically fit. That brings to mind a soccer match that I had to cancel because many of the players were going to the

The demographics of the 20,049 runners in the recent New York City Marathon were provided by the New York Road Runners Club. The largest group of runner, 6,469, were in the 30-49

Most of the men, but fewer than half the women, were married. Eighty-four percent of the runners had been to college. Of the 91 occupations listed, college. Of the 91 occupations listed, teachers lead the group in numbers of runners. They were followed by managers, lawyers and doctors. Only 538 had been running for less than one year. Curiously, France had 192 women entered. That is more than the combined total of Canada, Mexico, Italy and Puerto Rico. Cherchez la femme.

Rico. Cherchez la femme.

Whoever today's runner are, they are now accepted by the non-running public. In the past, people watching a road race would often remark that the runners were killing themselves. Now you hear remarks, such as, "It's a wonderful thing to see them running."

It would be more wonderful if this year's watchers were next year's runners. They have nothing to lose but their weight, their high cholesterol levels, their poor diet, their constipation, their

who was downed at the four.

Two running plays gained only a yard, but then Jacobson sprinted to his left, slipped past a Monmouth tackler, and went into the end zone for the winning touchdown. Marotta kicked the point-

"Greg Jacobson has been a real leader of the team," Rolak said. "He's thrown only two interceptions all year and today we had to throw the ball," Rolak said. Monmouth played tough defense against us and Greg made the passes when it counted."

"That was a run all the way," Jacosbon said. "We told the defense that if they got the ball back, we would win it. This was a great season and I'm sorry it is over.

Monmouth reached the Shore 32

just before the end of the game on a 27-yard pass from Terry Anderson to Erik Jones, but Marotta picked off a Falcon pass as the game ended.

"That was heck of a football game," Rolak said. "To have it e down to the last play to who is going to win it or lose it is tremendous." Shore got on the board first following a drive that started from its own 28 after a Falcon punt. Two running plays gained six yards and then Jacobson passed to Glen Szenzenstein who got the ball on the 30 and was down at the Monmouth /two. Kevin Cooper went over on the next play and Marotta's kick made it 7-0.

Monmouth used the passing game to good success also when quarterback Steve Pesce hit Jones with a 48-yard touchdown pass and Rasmussen converted to tie it up with 10:35 left in the half.

Shore couldn't move after the kickoff, and Marotta went back to punt, but his kick into a strong wind carried only 17 yards and Monmouth had field position at the Blue Devil 32.

Three plays gained only three yards and then Rasmussen booted a 46-yard field goal to put Mon-mouth in front, 10-7.

mouth in front, 10-7.

Shore almost scored again right before the half after Marotta picked off a Monmouth pass at the Shore 15. With Cooper and Jacobson doing most of the running, the Blue Devils marched to the Monmouth 15 but a field goal attempt by Marotta went wide.

"I'm so proud for the seniors," Rolak said. "They were 1-8 as year along with winning the "C" Division title. "We had two starters out with injuries," Rolak said. "But we had kids who filled in because they worked at it in practice and learned." Monmouth finished at 3-6, but the Falcons played in hard luck with thre of its losses by a

"We've had a solid defense all year long", Holmdel head coach Greg Semenze said after the win, "and Tom Serluco is just an outstanding player on both of-fense and defense."

"Serluco has been coming up big for us all year," Semenze added. "This is just a great victory for us and I'm proud of these kids. We knew we had to shut down Kemp and Cabrera to win this game. Keyport played well, but our kids played a little better."

The Keyport running tandem of John Kemp and Efrain Cabrera were held to 78 combined total yards and the offense was limited to 113. Also, the Hornet defense limited the Red Raider offense to only three possessions in the second half.

The game was intense from the start. If Holmdel won they would be the "D" division champs, and if Keyport won Holmdel would have to share the title. The Hornets, who lost to Manasquan in a state playoff game last week, had not won the Thanksgiving game against the Red Raiders in five

The complementary blend of textures that make the exterior of design C-9 distinctive is reflected inside, as well.

This two-story house architects Samuel and David J. Paul is reminiscent of the French Paul is reminiscent of the French provincial style with its arches over the windows, quoins at the corners, metal grille work and brick exterior. The entrance has a gabled protrusion and is a harmonious composition of double-recessed doors over which is a narrow arched window and metal railing. The quoins frame the two railing. The quoins frame the two elements and the hipped roof tastefully caps the facade.

The spacious central foyer fea-tures a curved stair with a decor-ative railing, recalling the ex-terior, and an opening to the second floor. To the left is the formal living room with its main focus on the heat-circulating fire-place. The brick surrounding the wood mantle goes from floor to wood mantle goes from floor to ceiling, again reminiscent of the exterior. To the rear is a wall of glass with a sliding-glass door leading to the solar porch. Combining the modern with the traditional is acceptable and successful if handled in scale and with ful if handled in scale and with good taste. To the right of the foyer is the formal dining room. At the end of the living room is a solar porch to which a green-house may be added. The family room, which merges with the kitchen, is designed to accommodate an entertainment center with television, videocassette recorder, record player, etc.

Heading toward the rear of the Heading toward the rear of the house, which ideally should face south or close to it, are the informal living rooms. A small hall connects the foyer to the rear portion. Off it is a powder room, privately located. A good size dinette also has access to the solar porch through a sliding glass door. The fully equipped kitchen, although open to the family room, is separated from it by floor and is separated from it by floor and wall cabinets.

Resale home prices on the rise

- Median prices for existing NEW YORK -NEW YORK — Median prices for existing single-family homes ranged from a low of $50,600 in the Grand Rapids, Mich., metropolitan area to a high of $166,800 in the New York/Northern New Jersey/Long Island metropolitan area during the third quarter, according to the latest quarterly survey of 54 metropolitan areas by the National Association of Realtors.

The median price reported for each area in the survey is based on prices of all types of existing single-family homes sold during 1986's third quarter within the metropolitan statistical area (MSA). The MSA, as defined by the U.S. Office of Management and Budget, includes the central city or cities as well as surrounding suburbs. Half the homes sold cost more than the median price, and half cost less. The metropolitan areas of Buffalo/Niagara

Falls, N.Y., with a median resale home price of $52,800, Louisville, Ky., with a median resale-home price of $55,700, Des Moines, Iowa, with a median of $55,200, and Akron, Ohio, with a median of $56,900, also ranked among the areas with the lowest median prices for a previously occupied home during the third

In addition to the New York City area, the metropolitan areas with the highest resale-home prices in the association's third-quarter nome prices in the association's third-quarter survey were: Boston, with a median of $165,600; the San Francisco Bay area, with a median of $164,900; Orange County, Calif., (the Anaheim/Santa Ana metropolitan area) with a median of $149,600; and the Los Angeles area, with a median of $132,900. The Las Vegas metropolitan area median price of $81,300 and the Phoenix area median of $79,100 were closest to the nationwide thrid-quarter median of $80,200.

thrid-quarter median of $80,200.

"Forty-five of the metropolitan areas surveyed recorded increases in the median resale home price from the third-quarter of 1985 to the third quarter of 1986, while eight recorded declines," association economists said. (No third-quarter 1985 figure was available for the Los Angeles area, so a percentage change for that area is un-available.)

available.)

Some of the largest annual appreciation rates were recorded in the northeastern metropolitan areas of Providence, R. I., at 31.7 percent, Hartiora, Conn., at 29.4 percent, Albany/Schenectady/Troy, N.Y., at 23.0 percent, New York/Northern New Jersey/Long Island at 20.7 percent and Boston at 19.3

The Northeast continues to lead the rest of the country in terms of resale-home price appreciation because of the very strong demand for housing resulting form the robust services and high-tech industries," association economists said.

These industries are creating job openings and attracting many people to northeastern urban areas. This makes for a veryactive real estate market and increases the value of housing, as these newcomers seek to meet their housing needs," the economists said.

They noted that existing single-f amily home

sales in the Northeast have been at a record high levels throughout 1986 and have recorded the largest sales gains of the nation's four regions this year.

Atlantic Hills, an innovative concept in planned community development, offers an exciting lifestyle alternative to anyone over the age of 40, Featuring imaginative, contemporary architecture, and all the luxurious amenities a homeowner could want, Atlantic Hills has been designed as a completely self-contained community, with an elegant clubhouse for the ex-clusive use of residents, plus pool, sauna, even miles of bike and walking, trails — all within its gates.

And, of course, its location in the beautiful, unspoiled shore community of Manahawkin — only six miles from Long Beach Island — makes Atlantic Hills the perfect choice for both vacation homeowners and retirees.

The first phase of two— and three—bedroom fully detached homes is projected for completion in about a year. Models are under construction now and will be ready for viewing later this year. Pre-construction pricing will range from $119,000 to $147,000.

Princeton estate home full of historic value

PRINCETON — Built around 1860, noted in the Registry for Historic Landmarks and located on one of the most beautiful on one of the most beautiful streets in Princeton, this stately gem has recently been offered for sale. Toni Ising, sales representative of the Merrill Lynch Realty Millstone Office, has acquired the listing.

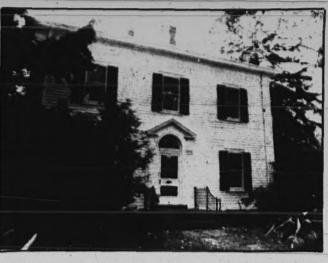

The current owners of this charming home on Bayard Lane, Charles and Agnes Swain, are very proud of the history that lies in their home and town. Longtime residents of Princeton, the Swains have resided here sizes 1979. have resided here since 1972. They are the previous owners of the famous Peacock Inn, still operating near their present home. The Swains, together with Ising, have unearthed some historical statistics about the home. statistics about the home.

In 1701, William Penn sold 5,500 acres to Richard Stockton for 900 pounds. The property on which this home sits was a part of this sale. The Stockton family, very well-known in Princeton, and direct descendants of the Richard Stockton who sited the Pers Stockton who signed the Declaration of Independence, owned the land for some time. The house appears to have been built around the third quarter of the 19th century, with estimates indicating around 1860. Charles Steadman, the suspected builder, is well known for his architectural style of that period. Swain speculates that his home might have been built elsewhere and then moved to the spot upon which it now rests. the spot upon which it now rests.

Multiplying your plants is inexpensive and fun

By ART KOZELKA

Propagating woody plants is pleasant and profitable — and less of a challenge than one may think. Cuttings from established plants can easily become sturdy new, cost-free shrubs to fill in bare

Rooting cuttings is a classic means of propagation, and most gardeners at some time have started herbaceous plants this way. Yet many are reluctant to try the woody subjects because they believe these call for professional propagating skills. Obviously, commercial growers use special techniques to meet production goals, but these can be simplified for novices.

The beginner should be aware

The beginner should be aware that propagating woody plants can be a long-term undertaking, however, because cuttings must be nurtured through several seasons of growth before they become landscape-size specimens. In other words, don't depend on them for immediate effects.

Plants can be propagated with cuttings from green or softwood stems taken from plants in leaf during the growing season, or from hardwood stems taken from plants that have lost their foliage and become dormant. Commercial growers work with both. A gar-dener's first effort should be with the dormant cuttings because they are easier to manage and promise a higher ratio of success. The dormant stems can be col-lected now through February, whenever the weather is mild enough to work outdoors. Some gardeners gather them during rou-tine winter pruning chores, saving the best for propagating. Not all of the stems need to be made into finished cuttings at the same time. Those selected should be of the current season's growth either current season's growth, either from long canes growing from the base of the shrubs or from new wood at the tip ends. When gathering bundles from different varieties of shrubs, tag each with an identifying label to avoid any mix-up when the finished cuttings are prepared.

Plants that propagate readily from dormant cuttings include weigela, spirea, privet, honey-suckle, deutzia, quince, currant, mock orange, flowering almond, pussy willow, viburnum, for-sythia, some varieties of euonymous and red-twigged

dogwood,
Select strong canes from the dormant stems for the finished cuttings. Each cutting should be 6 to 8 inches long and about the thickness of a lead pencil. Make the upper cut about an inch above a dormant bud and the basal cut just below a bud. The first new growth will emerge from the top bud. Then bundle the cuttings of each variety together with the basal cuts at one end and label

The next step is to place each bundle in a plastic bag or container of moist sand, peat moss or vermiculite and store them where temperatures will remain cool but above freezing. The refrigerator (not the freezer) is an ideal storage

Six to eight weeks of storage are required for the basal end cuts to form calluses, which are necessary for later development of roots. The cuttings can remain in storage longer, however.

As soon as soil can be worked in the spring, set the cuttings in the open ground, preferably in nursery rows a foot apart where they can be watered and tended conveniently. Space the cuttings 7 or 8 inches apart in the rows, inserting each with the basal (callused) end deep enough to allow only the top bud to remain above ground level.

The cuttings of some shrub varieties such as forsythia, privet and honeysuckle will sprout new growth more quickly than others, but don't give up on the viburnums, weigelas and others that may take several weeks longer to leaf out. If you succeed in growing new plants from more than half of the cuttings you started with, consider this a good percentage. percentage.

The Brooklyn Botanic Garden offers an excellent handbook that outlines all the propagation techniques, including a chapter on hardwood cuttings by Roy M. Nordine. Nordine for years was chief propagator at the Morton Arboretum near Liele Arboretum near Lisle.

The handbook, "Propagation for the Home Gardener, No. 103," is available for $3.05, including postage, from Brooklyn Botanic Garden, 1000 Washington Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. 11225.

Time to make a big noise

Into the life of every company comes the need to make some noise. About a new product, a line extension or a corporate position. In newspapers you can command attention in a news environment with large space—a page, a double truck, a special section. Newspaper flexibility and short lead time lets you get into the paper before the news value of your message sputters out. Remember us when you want to sound off.
