Christmas tree lighting

The islands' own Santa Claus will be present for the annual Christmas tree lighting across from Sanibel Community Association on Periwinkle Way on Saturday. The lighting ceremony is a tradition organized by the local Kiwanis. Santa Claus will hand out candy to the children and there will be hot apple cider for the adults. There will also be carol singing.

Sundial is Toys for Tots headquarters

Sundial Beach and Tennis Resort is the island headquarters for the annual U.S. Marine Corps' Toys for Tots drive. Members of the public are urged to stop by and donate a Christmas toy for a needy child. Anyone who brings in a toy is invited to enjoy a complimentary soft sandwich in Miami's dining room. A large gift box will be in the lounge until December 16. Sundial is located at 1246 Middle Ford Drive, Sanibel. Last year, islanders made over 350 children happy with their donations. Sundial and the Marines hope to put smiles on even more young faces in 1985.

FOCUS ON:

Grant North

A customer for American stars in Canada naturalized U.S. citizen Grant North has come to Sanibel where he will send his talents to the Ernie Playhouse this season. Coming here from Miami, he found it very quiet. He says that after Toronto, where he worked with stars such as Mickey Rooney, Carol Lombard and Dick Panama, North wants to get away from the noise and the excitement of the big city. He says he has been in the business of producing Canadian and American films companies. He did work in Miami for the Players State Theater in Coconut Grove before moving to Fort Myers with an upholstery business. Ernie Playhouse, which he did most of his work here. After the Ernie Playhouse he is relocating the business to Sanibel. He has a long list of customers for the Ernie Playhouse. He says he has worked on many plays, about making up for the missing of Sanibel's Ernie Playhouse. He says he has worked on many plays, about making up for the missing of Sanibel's Ernie Playhouse. high school course in textiles and tailoring. "I had always sewn. I'd always enjoyed it." But he bypassed an opportunity to go to college to study his craft, choosing the route of experience. He worked for a women's costume shop for many years. Later he started his own shop. The only way to improve is to get out and do the business. Among his credits is work for Walt Disney Productions and McDonald's. He has also worked on the Ernie Playhouse. ## Cyclists collide with city over bike paths

One rider will appeal case

By Wendy McMullen

Some bikers are shunning Sanibel because of the city ordinance requiring them to ride on the bike path local cyclists say

Eric Rosen of Sanibel and Chris Jacobsen heading the Suncoast Wheelmen in Fort Myers say that local cyclists have run head-on against Sanibel police when using roads instead of the cycle paths and as a result some of the Fort Myers cyclists refuse to come over to the island

Rosen himself was given a ticket by Sanibel police on Thanksgiving Day after declining to use the bike path

But the cyclists are well within the law in refusing to use the cycle paths Or at least state law

The laws are definitely in conflict and state law supercedes all local laws said state bicycle coordinator with the Department of Transport in Tallahassee Dan Burden But it's a bit more complicated than that

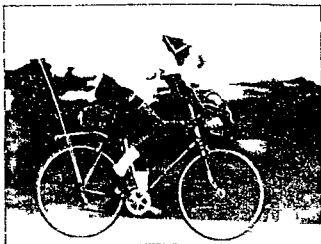

Local governments can add detail but not change the state law he continued So it could be interpreted in different ways

But Sanibel city attorney David LiCron disputes that interpretation

The city is not in conflict with the state It can provide stricter laws he said pointing to the section of the state law which says that it is not deemed to prevent local authorities from regulating the operation of bicycles

The Sanibel law states that bicycles other than mopeds must use the path when it is available

The state too used to have a law obligating cyclists to use a bike path if there was one but this was repealed in 1983 because data showed more accidents occurred on bike paths than on the roads according to Ron Cotterman bicycle coordinator of the state Department of Transportation in Fort Myers

One of the reasons it was repealed is the many driveways that the bike path crosses Drivers are looking for intersections in the road but take little notice of bike paths commented Cotterman Exact data is not available but Burden pointed out that prior to building the bike path on McGregor Boulevard Fort Myers there were few accidents now the average is eight medically treated accidents a month

Quite often the bike lanes or paths go against the flow of the traffic which is particularly dangerous said Burden The mind learns to look selectively and drivers learn traffic does not appear on the near side so they're not looking in that direction

Burden said that there were two types of bike rider what he called the grade school riders who do not like to ride too fast and feel more comfortable with a separate path and the other riders who use their eyes for commuting or who want to maintain a reasonable speed and feel more comfortable on the road

They also might have experienced a number of near misses on the bike paths said Burden

Bike paths on Sanibel according to Cotterman are the most dangerous type running as they do parallel to the road and being narrower in many places than the state minimum standard of five feet

The one on Periwinkle is outdated he said pointing out that it narrows to as little as three feet in some places The ideal he said was an eight foot wide two way facility

Burden however felt the best type of path was the one that ran nowhere near the road and pointed to the one in Boca Grande which uses a disused railroad track

It gets away from cars completely and control lines can be set up at any intersections Burden commented

It's not five feet wide It doesn't meet the criteria for a bike path said Cotterman

Rosen said he intends to contest the ticket which Sanibel police gave him for riding on the bike paths □

Osprey jets from N.J. to migrate

By Paul Luthringer

Two months after it was found in New Jersey with a pellet hole through its sternum an immature osprey flew from CROW headquarters — bouncing off a parked car before navigating its way into the grey sky

Holly Davies CROW's chief of admissions said Sometimes they fly other times they sit there for a while before leaving I had a feeling that she was eager to leave

It will probably stay around here for the winter until joining the northern migration when summer comes Davies explained

Leon Sweeney director of the Raptor Trust in Millington N.J. found the female osprey near Pittsford N.J. Sept. 9 suffering from a gunshot wound Luckily the pellet passed through the osprey's sternum on the right side and passed through the pectoral girdle out the left side going clean through it and missing any vital organs

Sweeney whose Raptor Trust is a rehabilitation organization much like CROW took the bird to his hospital and after caring for it until it was well enough to be sent south he put the osprey on a big bird — an Eastern Airlines DC 9 bound for Fort Myers International Jetport — and Davies

Governor recognizes merchant marines as war 'veterans'

Ernie Guenther

By Anne Mitchell

Ernie Guenther of Sanibel of the American Merchant Marine Veterans believes his group has reached a milestone in its goal seeking status as war veterans

Last month representatives of the Fort Myers based group which is more than 360 strong went to Tallahassee to receive a proclamation from Gov. Bob Graham recognizing merchant marines who served during World War II for their admirable record sacrifices and suffering

Guenther 72 the group's assistant executive officer was at the ceremony with his wife Bib and other former merchant marines from the Fort Myers area He said five states including Florida have recognized merchant marines for their contributions to victory in World War II They are Alabama Arizona California North Carolina and Wisconsin

But state recognition is not enough For the merchant and women to be able to enjoy the same veterans benefits as servicemen they need federal recognition

They are encouraged by the veterans status recently awarded to civilian seamen who took part in a unique D Day operation by sailing "blockships" in Operation Mulberry during the allied invasion of Europe in 1944 The ships were sunken to create breakwaters Recognition by the Pentagon makes them eligible for such veterans benefits as home loans medical care and burial in a national cemetery

The Fort Myers group which is the national headquarters for the AMMV has members from as far away as New York Other groups exist in various parts of the country says Guenther but few in Fort Myers are the ones doing all the work writing to senators and congressmen

Receiving the proclamation from Gov. Graham the group's executive officer Santa Cerza of Cape Coral told the Cabinet Our goal is to bring to fellow Americans the forgotten story and to honor the men and women merchant mariners recognized for their patriotism and heroism

City to meet residents again over Cardium

By Earl Hartman

Sanibel Councilman Mike Klein first said he was inclined to forget it then called for a meeting with the Cardium Street neighbors over the drainage solution the city wishes for their picturesque street a solution many of them vehemently oppose

A meeting this time in council chambers would allow control of the presentation Klein said

City Manager Gary Price and Don Schofield city engineer and public works director Nov. 27 tried to explain the impact of plans to widen raise with shellrock and remove or move trees on the narrow short street where Australian pines cabbage palms and Luttonwood line the right of way some overhanging forming a country lane archway at one point

At most about five trees could have to be removed Price said All else would be moved if the street is widened from an average 36 feet to 20 feet

Price said he felt if he had the tables turned on him during the meeting many of the people who complain of the rain at flooding were standing in the archway silent and in some cases took in 1970 better switch

He said the reaction of Cardium residents who voted strongly against the plan at the meeting resulted from the effect of one resident to sway the others creating a mindset among them

There is now a campaign to stop the project including a petition which is being circulated by Mike Holahan for one who had indicated before the neighborhood meeting was the most vocal opponent of the plan

Rainwater from Tropical Storm Bob in July and a late season downpour of 10 inches in September left Cardium a wash in stagnating water for a number of days until evaporation and natural but slow drainage dried it up

Some residents maintain this is no problem it happens very infrequently and then is only in convenience It is not justification to change their street

Others do want relief from the city One resident who wishes to remain unidentified says that the petition makes it seem all residents are opposed to the city's plans

I feel sure that there are others living on Cardium Street who feel that for health and safety reasons some changes must be made

Maybe they like I was afraid of having themselves to the blackbird or isolated if they didn't go along with the historic outcry of those who met at Junction and Cardium the resident said

ESI eyes Europe for new business

Sanibel based condominium rental business Executive Services Inc has just recruited two European representatives to try to increase the number of European visitors to the islands.

ESI President Bob Buntrock along with rental director Jim Kravits visited London and Brussels on their four day trip to establish marketing representation for their 600 units on Sanibel Captiva and other small islands. Currently overseas visitors make up only five per cent of the renters on the islands but Buntrock hopes to make this ten per cent in future.

The good thing about European visitors is that their high season is our low season so it's a good way of getting people on the island off season Buntrock.

British representatives of ESI are Peter Mackness of North American Representatives in Windsor Berkshire and Bill Couldridge of the package tour operators Renown Holidays.

A number of ESI's Sanibel properties will be featured in the new Renown brochure and ESI hopes to expand the fly drive options to many of its other island properties in future.

In Brussels it is anticipated that Jamison Denby of Motivators Inc will represent ESI.

City offers to buy unbuildable lots

By Earl Hartman

The city is making an offer to purchase four parcels a total of 16 lots in an unbuildable portion of Sanibel Highlands subdivision and a two lot parcel in Sanibel Gardens at from 120 to 200 per cent of their appraised value which is from $500 to $12,000 below what owners paid for them.

The action is the result of the city's wetland ordinance and would be the first purchase under provisions of that law.

The lots in Sanibel Highlands are unbuildable outside the two phases allowed development City Attorney David LaCroux said.

The two in Sanibel Gardens are not large enough to be buildable combined, he noted.

Higher than appraised value prices should be set to be more defensible in court, to offset the low appraisals and to give incentive for owners to sell forestland what could be tremendous pressure to do so when buildout is reached LaCroux said.

Offers approved by city council were $6,000 or 200 per cent of appraised value for four lots owned by Michael A. and William F. Lupski and purchased for $15,000 in 1974 and 1977 and $4,000 (200 per cent) for four lots owned by Stephen A. Centile purchased in 1981.

Also $4,000 (200 per cent) for four lots owned by William F. Lupski Jr. purchased in 1980 and $4,000 (200 per cent) for four lots owned by Michael A. Lupski purchased in 1982.

In Sanibel Gardens $1,800 (120 per cent) is offered Gertha H. Stetzel and Jean P. Nikolous for two lots purchased in 1976 and 1984 for $2,000.

Noting that different considerations apply to the parcel in Sanibel Gardens Councilman Fred Vallin wanted them to still receive what they'd paid for the lots. Councilman Francis Bailey took exception saying their purpose had been profit and won a lower offer from council.

The distraught wife of one of the owners Mrs. Louise Lupski said she'd paid taxes on the property at a value of $16,000. "To know it's useless she said made her feel foolish."

Mrs. Lupski's left column chamber before all property prices had been set. Owners have until Feb. 20 to close and finalize all details of the purchase.

The annual stocktaking of island birds

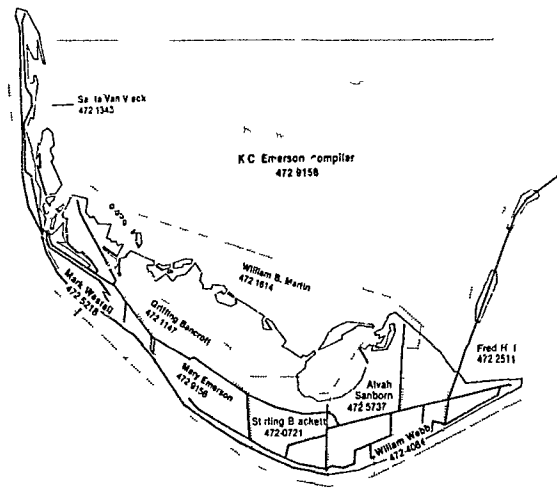

The Sanibel Captiva segment of the annual nationwide Christmas Bird Census, sponsored by the National Audubon Society will take place from dawn to dusk on Dec. 21. Dr. K. C. Emerson, coordinator of the Christmas count on behalf of the major bird-oriented groups of the islands, reports that many birders will spread their quest over the entire 24-hour period of Dec. 21 in an effort to include in the count as many as possible of island owls and other nocturnal species.

The updated bird checklist recently published by the local Audubon Society in cooperation with the Sanibel Captiva Conservation Foundation and the Ding Darling Wildlife Society will be used to record bird observations and other findings of nine teams.

Team leaders include a number of professional naturalists as well as several skilled amateur ornithologists. They are Mark Westall, Griffing Bancroft, Stirling Brackett, Dr. William Webb, Sarita Van Vleck, Mary Emerson, Alvah Sanborn, Fred Hill, and William Martin.

Experienced birders who have not signed up for the event are invited to volunteer by calling the team leader for the volunteer's special interest area as shown on the map.

Participants in the count will assemble at the Dunes clubhouse at 5:30 p.m. to submit their findings for inclusion in Dr. Emerson's overall compilation. An informal dinner will be served starting at 6:30 p.m. Reservations for dinner should be made as soon as possible before Dec. 13 through team leaders. □

Naumann runs foul of new land code

By Earl Hartman

It was difficult for Sanibel Planning commissioners, but they had little choice Tuesday in weighing aesthetics over the law and finding the scales tipped heavily against Realtor John Naumann's new wall in front of offices at 2427 Periwinkle Place.

Commissioners agreed exterior renovation of the former Executive Services Inc. branch office with a new wall and trellis was an improvement, added to the appearance of Periwinkle Way near its end at Tarpon Bay Road, but violated setback requirements and nonconforming structure provisions of the new Land Development Code.

In review of seven criteria for findings required of a resolution to approve a variance for the offending wall, commissioners ruled against Naumann on all counts. All must be met to grant approval.

Naumann told commissioners the wall, which violates the 100-foot setback requirements, was "strictly decorative" and asked to be allowed to leave it.

It was no bigger than the wall it replaced; in fact, was "less wall," he said, and did not increase usable floor area of the offices.

It was attached to the building by crossbeams of the trellis, however.

Commissioner John Seahrooke said the intent

Scott Naumann of John Naumann Associates, Inc. points out the offending wall and trellis. □ of the law was that "you may not expand the usable area...and I think this goes beyond it."

He said the wall "looks better," and "I wonder if by interpreting this literally we aren't kind of shooting ourselves in the foot."

Section 1.2.4.(b) of the code states: "No nonconforming structure may be reconstructed, moved or structurally altered...except...to eliminate the nonconformance or... reduce the degree of nonconformance..."

The building, a nonconforming structure, must also meet front yard setback requirements for the limited commercial district adopted by city council in the new code.

Commissioner Bill Read said, "It's an insignificant change, all right...but nevertheless we're caught with this language here," referring to the applicable code section.

"This thing is so specific," Commissioner Jerry Muench interjected.

"It's very specific; and I don't know what we can do about it," Read continued.

Discussion of denying the variance but sending it with a recommendation for approval on appeal to city council was ultimately rejected after the vote on the resolution criteria.

Naumann can appeal the ruling himself to council or seek an amendment to the land use plan, it was pointed out during the meeting (see related story).

CODE

• from 1A

direct part in formulating the code.

The applicant, in this first test of the procedure, did not meet any of the criteria. An applicant must meet all seven to be approved.

They could recommend appeal to city council, but only if they wanted council to approve it. LaCroix told them. The applicant could appeal to city council himself seeking the variance or could seek an amendment to the Land Development Code.

The issue was one of a nonconforming structure, one of a mixed bag of nonconformities created across the island by the code.

LaCroix noted at the end of the meeting that

Naumann could seek an amendment for the setback, which would then apply to everyone, or an amendment to allow expansion of all nonconforming structures, which the code now prohibits.

On the other hand, he said, city council was not bound to such strict criteria and can "weigh one (factor) against the other...they can approve it anyway." □

Those people at South Seas (Plantation) and Tween Waters (Inn) say beach nourishment is what the people want but whenever it comes to a secret vote it turns out it isn't, Olling said.

He also opposes the current Tetra Tech financing plan for the beach nourishment project because he says only people owning beach front property should pay.

The beachfront owners should have been assessed ten times as much, he commented.

Olling, retired engineer and former chief of future projects with NASA in Houston, is a year-round Captiva resident with a keen interest in environmental concerns.

Helen Kalvin, 61, is firmly against the beach nourishment project for ecological reasons and because she believes it is only a temporary solution.

Borrowing sand from the sea bed disturbs the ecology of the sea life, she explained.

And then that sand pumped onto the beaches eventually drifts into the passes and back into the estuaries, thus further disturbing the delicate balance of the wetlands, she added.

It is also a total waste of money since one good storm could remove it in short order, Kalvin continued.

Kalvin, a former educator, U.S. Air Force lieutenant and school psychologist, has been a year-round Captiva resident for 13 years. Her husband, George, was chairman of the CEPD alternate methods committee which recommended the sand-bag project currently being put underway by the new board.

Mike Cohen, 50, is firmly convinced that beach nourishment offers the only real solution to erosion and says that he would fight for a referendum or a vote on a municipal services benefit unit to find out what the people want.

I am personally pro-nourishment and I believe the majority of people on the island want it," said Cohen.

If it became apparent that the majority did not favor the project, I would drop off the board, although I personally would still be strongly in favor of it, he continued.

I would not want to be on a board which was not serving the property owners, he added.

Cohen first visited Captiva in May 1983 and bought his home in Sunset Captiva, which is now his principal residence, in October that year. At that time he said there was an enormous beach in front.

There's still an enormous beach out there, but it's 30 feet closer to my home, he said.

Cohen is a director of Sunset Captiva Homeowners board. Now retired, he formerly had his own contracting and distribution business in Virginia Beach.

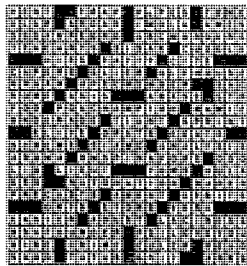

The appointment to the CEPD board will be made by Gov. Bob Graham's office in Tallahassee, which reviews all applications and recommends alternates. The final choice is made by the governor but his staff seek local consultation both directly with Captiva residents and through the local state senators' office, Don Moody legislative aide to state senator Frank Mann said.

Moody said Senator Mann's office had not taken a position although candidates Kalvin and Olling had both sent copies of their application materials and petitions to the senator's office.

If people send materials to us we forward them, he commented, but we don't take a position unless we're asked.

He added that he doubted any decision would be made until Jan. 1 because the governor had other more pressing appointments to make and there was no urgency about the appointment since it was operating efficiently with a four-man board.

The next meeting of the board is on Friday, Dec. 20, when the bids for the perpendicular stabilizer project will be considered.

I was 'plotting my own death', says ex-druggie

LIFE program holds meeting on Sanibel tonight

By Earl Hartman

If the first step for an alcoholic is to admit he's an alcoholic, then the first step for a drug addicted young person is to admit he's a druggie.

The second step is to realize he will always be "I had a serious drug problem, I still do have a serious drug problem," admits 17-year-old Carl Frazier. (This is not his real name but a pseudonym, since the LIFE drug rehabilitation program from which he graduated in September asks for his anonymity, and Carl preferred it that way.)

"I started smoking cigarettes (in the boys bathroom at Cypress Lake High School) which led to one day someone passing around a joint (marijuana), so I decided to smoke it."

Carl said he started smoking marijuana once every two weeks. "I never bought it at that time, you know, someone was passing it around."

"Eventually it led to where I was smoking it in the bathrooms at school. It led to once a week, and then maybe a couple times in a week then it got to the point where I wanted to buy my own

"At this point other kids came my way with (such things as) valium, pills, speed, just as those were passed around the bathroom at school, I started doing those, and I'd go out on Friday night on the weekends and maybe have a beer here and there, until it led like, same thing with the pot... now it's the same thing with the alcohol — the alcohol led to habit, I'd go out every weekend and drink alcohol." And then every weekend, alcohol and marijuana.

Carl relates his indoctrination into the culture of the druggie, as experienced in high schools across America, without pause, almost by rote. He's thought about what's happened to him. He also talks fast to get beyond that part of the interview that deals with the way it was.

"After I started bombing on pot, I just started smoking it, you know, before school, and after school and that's when the ball started rolling. My attitude just kinda got real bad then and I started drinking before school, taking pills before school, smoking pot, so it was a gradual thing, but it started with one thing, like on the weekend until it led to during the week, and then just in the morning and it just kept getting worse and worse."

And it was easy to get, Carl says. "And once I started smoking (pot), I started meeting people who knew where I could get it, and then, there was no problem, anytime I wanted pot, I knew the people who had it, so I'd just go and get some."

Carl also maintained two sets of friends, for a while.

"At first I had my friends, and just pretty much they didn't do any drugs or anything. When I started smoking pot here and there, I had like two sets of friends; that's what it was, because I didn't want the people who didn't do it to know that I did. And, until that point where I was doing it (regularly), I just got by here and there, and they just kinda shied away from me. So, it kinda switched over from my straight friends over to the druggie friends."

He also experimented with new drugs at parties. Some that he tried were speed, cocaine, valium, rush, and others. The majority of people at these parties were into drugs, although sometimes "there were a few straight people there."

Mixing alcohol with drugs was typical, the senior student now back at Cypress Lake High School said, not just at parties but combined during the week, as well.

Carl began to answer the question of what happened to him after he got hooked on drugs. At first reluctantly it's hard to admit to an adult, and habits of distrust don't go away easily. "Besides my health deteriorating...it affected my attitude; that was the biggest thing my drugs did, affect my attitude."

"I skipped school a lot, lied to my parents a lot. At first it was lying a little; and then I just started believing in my lies, like every word out of my mouth was a lie, just to cover up for the lie before. I made bad decisions for myself, like I'd sneak outside of the house at night and everything. Also one time we broke into this house..."

Carl and his friends weren't high on drugs at the time but "I still had the drug attitude...my attitude was I didn't care. It was an 'I don't care anymore' attitude." They robbed the house. "Just made a lot of bad decisions and didn't care," he repeated.

"I didn't care about anything; I really don't guess I cared about myself, as long as I'd been using drugs." His mother, who was sitting across from Carl in their large, well-appointed living room, asked him if he knew he had a bad attitude then, or was it everyone else who did.

Carl said, yes, he knows in retrospect. "I thought I was the greatest, I had everything together." But he didn't.

After entry into two other drug programs — one at which he got stoned on pot after six days there — Carl's parents told him about the LIFE program. He signed himself into it, as all "newcomers" must. After three months, he was still in the first of the seven phases of the program.

Then he realized he needed to make a change. He didn't want to end up "dead, in jail or in a mental institution." He moved through the phases of LIFE — based on the 12 steps of Alcoholics Anonymous — and "seventh-stepped" in September. He's back at Cypress Lake High School, and wants to continue on to college and become a child psychologist.

"I've changed a lot," Carl says, "but I realize to this day I'm not perfect." He also realizes something scary. When he was on drugs, he says, "in a way I was plotting my own death."

"I thank God I went to the program," the ex-drug abuser says of LIFE. "It helped me out tremendously, and, even to this day, things are going a lot better. I'm getting along with my family; still, yet, we fight but at least now I know how to communicate and work things out. I feel good about myself, confidence and..." He changes the subject as if embarrassed to talk about himself in quite such terms, then, "I do have my down days but I pick myself up."

"I think the LIFE program can help anyone with a drug problem," he stresses and adds that he hopes the Sarasota-based program's counterpart in Lee County, OUTREACH, will soon open.

A special meeting on the LIFE program will be held tonight at 7 p.m. at the Sanibel Community Association center. It will include a short film on LIFE's techniques, a discussion of drug abuse by three of LIFE's enrollees and a question and answer period directed by Mrs. Helen Peterman, director of programs, affectionately known as "Miss Pete." She was a co-founder of the STRAIGHT program in Virginia which Princess Diana recently visited.

"I have good goals for myself; I plan on doing good things for myself," Carl said after he'd outlined his plans for college. He had it together, maybe not all, like most of us, but together. □

Court ruling could increase commercial land

Judge rejects city appeal in F&B Oyster suit

By Earl Hartman

The courts have dealt the City of Sanibel a blow which could mean there will be just half an acre more land zoned commercial along Periwinkle Way.

City Attorney David LaCroix told council last week that the city's appeal to the 2nd U.S. District Court of Appeals in the Carbro case was denied without even an opinion from the judge.

The appeal was in regard to the suit by Carbro Inc. over the F&B Oyster House property at 2163 Periwinkle Way. They maintained since the property had been zoned commercial by the county before 1976 it was arbitrary exclusionary and confiscatory for the city to downgrade it to residential making the restaurant a nonconforming use.

The city was issued an adverse ruling in November 1984 following trial proceedings which lasted a year.

The city had maintained that the pattern of development along Periwinkle Way was haphazard in the area of the restaurant, LaCroix said last week.

When the land use plan was adopted in 1976 the thrust of the city's efforts was to residential development. Commercial was kind of overlooked, LaCroix noted until 1980 when the emphasis shifted.

Then a study was made of Sanibel's mushrooming commercial building and the first commercial development project. Market surveys showed there was already two times the amount of commercial development on the island than could be supported, LaCroix said.

This is the Barton Ashmann report recommended a town center concept and commercial development pattern now in the commercial element of the new Land Development Code but partly put in abeyance by city councilmen so they can consider further the permitted uses issue in the city, city planners said.

Measures including increases in residential densities as an incentive to take land out of commercial use were an attempt to find ways to have a reasonable pattern of development for the city, LaCroix said.

In 1982 LaCroix said architects and consultants the Stewart Corp. recommended reducing floor area ratios for new commercial development and restricting it all into four zones: town center, office neighborhood and high intensity which now is called general commercial for resort use in the new plan.

Council then rejected some of the measures but adopted others, LaCroix said.

This left seven nonconforming uses along Periwinkle Way: F&B Oyster House, Jim's General Services, Dick Brodeur's law office, Sanibel Landscape Co. and Nursery, the Pirate Playhouse, Shell Island Realty and Michigan Homes center.

These properties were zoned residential in 1976 and left residential in 1982.

Carbro Inc. sought a specific amendment from council to rezone the F&B Oyster House parcel commercial and was denied. They filed in September 1982.

New facts were presented by the city in arguments in November. Property at the corner of Dunlop Street and Periwinkle Way which had been zoned commercial originally is now successfully being developed residentially as Periwinkle Pines, LaCroix said.

The court turned down the appeal Nov. 17. LaCroix informed council last week. The city had 10 days to file for rehearing.

There is seldom much chance of getting a rehearing on appeals, he said. In fact he told council it was 99 per cent impossible. He would however apply he said late last week.

The only recourse then the U.S. Supreme Court was an alternative council members nearly choked over.

The decision will mean the city must rezone the F&B Oyster House property about another 10,000 square feet to commercial, LaCroix said. Also under the city's land use plan land extending from F&B Oyster to Periwinkle Place and to the Sanibel Community Association parcel about another 15,000 square feet may be rezoned.

LaCroix said this was what he would recommend council do.

An amendment to CLUP to facilitate this may not be possible until November 1986, he said due to the schedule adopted to facilitate the twice a year restriction made in June by the state Legislature.

How this will affect the other properties listed is uncertain at this time, but clearly the city has not heard the end of these commercial zoning woes. □

Shellfish ban is lifted

The state Department of Natural Resources has lifted the ban on shellfish harvesting imposed in early November following reports of red tide in the area.

The ban was removed after DNR officials reported that the waters showed no traces of the poison-producing algae.

Such mollusks as oysters, clams and coquina caught in waters with red tide are contaminated by the poison because they feed by filtering water and microscopic plants through their bodies. Lobsters, shrimp and crabs are considered safe because they do not accumulate the poisons.

The ban has been lifted throughout Charlotte and Lee counties with the exception of the Myakka River and Sarasota counties. □

City vegetation classes continue

Classes for landscapers on native vegetation continue right up to Christmas with the next course held Dec. 24 at 1:30 p.m. at City Hall and the examination the following week.

German couple returns after enjoying island hospitality

By Paul Luthringer

What's a Thanksgiving without the tropical tuberous root the sweet potato? Ask a couple of Sanibel's newest homeowners Klaus and Helga Peterson from Munich. They never heard of nor tasted the orange root put on their plates by Doris Frey of Sanibel. The Petersons were the Frey family's dinner guests and were not only stumped by their first Thanksgiving in history but probably also with the tiny marshmallows that Doris furnishes her sweet potatoes with.

Thanksgiving was completely new to us because we usually spend Easter on Sanibel. Everything was so new to us the blond Bavarians from Munich remarked. We had sweet potatoes for the first time she thought. The Freys did a wonderful job and we appreciate it.

Doris Frey who cooked them a turkey dinner with mashed sweet potatoes garnished with marshmallows recalls. It was interesting in introducing them to American foods and customs of Thanksgiving.

Of course Peterson pointed out. We don't celebrate Thanksgiving at home so we enjoyed the opportunity to learn about the new custom and its history.

Although they returned last weekend to Germany with the construction of a new home on Oyster Drive. The Petersons now have somewhat to unpack their bags and call home.

The family of four first came to know South west Florida on a trip to South Seas Plantation that a German friend recommended. About five years ago we came to Captiva and met the Zeferts who also happened to be from Munich and were building a home on Impet Drive in Shell Harbor. When the house was finished they invited us from Germany to stay in their house as often as we wanted.

Now Helga and her husband Klaus who wholesales photographic equipment and concentrates on Private label films world wide travel extensively to trade shows among other things in the states and as far away as Hong Kong. For the last three months she and her husband have been to Tokyo Hong Kong Egypt and Sanibel on business.

Helga Peterson

She occasionally works at their exhibit at some shows. Next year I will take care of the exhibit at the PMA show in Las Vegas. I don't work but I'm always partly in it she explains. And when customers from other countries go out of their way to attend a trade show Helga acts as ambassador showing them around the exhibits they frequent.

With their business growing in the US her sister married to an American in New Jersey and a daughter at Duke University Helga jokes that they have more friends and contacts here than in Germany. We are somehow related to this country Helga thanks.

There was standing room only in the tent erected in SCCF grounds for the annual meeting Friday.

SCCF elects new board members

Five new board members were appointed to the Sanibel Captiva Conservation Foundation at the annual meeting Dec. 6.

Abbott Byfield, Georgia Hemphill, Peter Cloud, William McKay, Ruth Deuber and Jim Krieger have been appointed for four year terms by the nominating committee made up of foundation members.

Election of the chairman and vice-chairman will take place after the first of the new year. SCCF director of environmental programs Steve Phillips said.

Outgoing board members Dr. K.C. Emerson, Anna Hills, Gailze Allen, Lloyd Jessie Matheson, Sheryl Pharr and James Levy received thanks and line drawings by Steve Phillips.

OSPREY

• from 5A

received the patient Nov. 18. According to Davies, licensed rehabber Len Soucy has sent CROW other ospreys for rehabilitation in the past and gets well over 1,000 birds of prey at his New Jersey facility a year.

The biggest problem Soucy had and we had when he received the bird was that we couldn't get it to eat. Davies noted, Ospreys are very difficult to get to self-feed, especially after an injury.

Her first job was to see if the endangered bird would eat on its own, figuring that it could fatten up in a week and be set free. We had another osprey that was eating in the same cage as the injured one, so we really thought it would take a lesson, Holly thought.

Her first job was to see if the endangered bird would eat on its own, figuring that it could fatten up in a week and be set free. We had another osprey that was eating in the same cage as the injured one, so we really thought it would take a lesson, Holly thought.

Four days after its arrival in Sanibel with a companion laughing gull in a sectioned-off part of the same flight cage, the osprey was being force-fed 107 grams of boned sardines with vitamins between eating on its own. A few days later the bird was eating small mullet on her own as well as herring and Spanish sardines.

Usually, Davies releases her birds from the beach so that they can be rescued by boat in case their rehabilitation may have not been long enough. That wasn't necessary in this case, she said. It was evident that this bird could fly very well when we got it.

It's banded with the Fish and Wildlife Service so if anything happens to it, hopefully it will be reported, Davies said.

The laughing gull, which had an injured wing, has also been treated and released. It was sent to CROW to catch up with its fellow gulls, which had long since migrated from the New Jersey area.

CARDIUM

• from 5A

Councilman Fred Vallin asked Price last week during regular council meeting if the group represented the majority of residents or a vocal minority.

Price answered in part by saying the drainage plans will also include Junonia and Nerita streets a large area, although "Cardium is the area that will have the most done to it."

The rainy season was past, and this project could wait for the study of a city-wide drainage proposal suggested by Mayor Louis Johnson Tuesday.

Klein called for a meeting of the residents with city council. We should not wait for the problem to get worse, he said, suggestions that it just be dropped.

Mayor Johnson then recommended the Cardium Junonia Nerita measures be studied in light of drainage plans for the city as a whole. A meeting date was not set for the council consultation although Price said Monday it would be soon after the first of the new year.

RECOGNITION

• from 5A

Some 7,000 merchant marines were killed in combat during World War II and about 600 taken prisoner of war. Many survivors suffer from diseases and wounds resulting from their war service, he said.

But for men like Guenther and Cerza, it's not only a matter of benefits. It's also a matter of fierce pride. They believe their fallen colleagues also deserve a place on the war memorials and a salute in Memorial and Veterans Day parades along with the other war veterans.

The Fort Myers group meets tomorrow, Dec. 13 at 1 p.m. at the First Federal Community Room, 1901 College Parkway, Fort Myers. For more information, call 939-5730.

correction

It was incorrectly stated in last week's Island Reporter that the Land Development Code passed city council unanimously. In fact, it passed by a 4-1 vote with Councilman Francis Bailey opposed because of what he felt was a need to take longer to consider it. The CLUP amendment and new residential density maps were adopted unanimously. Also, John Smith was not representing a group of Realtors and developers seeking a delay in passage when he praised council for their work and called for adoption. He says he was speaking for himself only. We regret the errors.

WILD BILL HICKOK

By Wendy McMullen

Wild Bill Hickok — the very name conjures up the wild, wanton, wicked ways of the Wild West.

Wyatt Earp, Matt Dillon, Buffalo Bill — the names are legendary and Wild Bill Hickok, gun fighter, Wild West show performer, sheriff, womanizer, gambler, teamster, stage driver, army scout and army spy goes right along with them.

Yet according to relative and namesake of Wild Bill, Captiva resident Bill Hickok, legend sometimes overtakes reality.

For a while it was the historians' place to debunk these so-called heroes, he said.

But now more letters have been found and on a closer look it seems they were if nothing else, fearless men with a lot of bravado, a lot of courage and a lot of skill, he commented.

But Wild Bill wasn't just a tough guy. His letters to Calamity Jane and various law and military officials show a much softer man than is usually portrayed, he added.

The cult goes both ways at one time they're villains, at another they're Robin Hood type figures, he commented.

But the times in which Hickok lived did not allow him the luxury of softness. His relative said, explaining that the corral at the end of each trail were where the cowboys would be paid.

There was a lot of celebrating and lawlessness, he said. And so there would have to be a strong man there — a bastion of law and order at the end of the trail, otherwise the town would have been destroyed.

Wyatt Earp had one town and Matt Dillon had another town and Hickok had another town, he went on.

It is through his grandfather who was a cousin of Wild Bill Hickok that Bill Hickok of Captiva is related to the gunfighter, law officer and tearster.

Hickok's ancestor, a surgeon, also knew Buffalo Bill, who wanted him to come to Kansas to start a hospital. His grandfather refused.

Hickok said he uses the prefix "Wild Bill" on his business cards, not because of any particular hero worship but as a kind of joke.

My corporation is called W. B. Hickok and Associates and it is more fun to claim the W. B. stands for Wild Bill, he explained.

But he admits that his ancestor was a hero to him when he was growing up, particularly after Gen. Lutry and Gen. Cooper had made the very popular movie on his life.

But Captiva's Bill Hickok is a very far cry from his wild ancestor. Builder, architect, humorous columnist, playwright, ornithologist, vintage and sometime poet, Hickok is more renaissance man than pioneer.

Educated at the University of Missouri, he originally wanted to become an architect but his grandfather, the patriarch of the family, insisted he study the classics before entering the family building business.

Graduating with a degree in history and politics, Hickok joined the Marines and then the W. B. Hickok company, to which he introduced many innovative building concepts including the very first solar house in the Midwest.

His current project is equally innovative in its time — housing for the new generation of singles.

I woke up one day and realized all my friends either were divorced, he said, explaining how the concept developed.

It seemed when I got to 30 years old, our world was diverging, he continued. It's sad commentary but I'll be a market there.

When I was 11, I lost my father. I had a very hard time with it. I was in the hospital with a heart ailment. I was in the hospital with a heart ailment. I was in the hospital with a heart ailment.

Bill Hickok

Bill Hickok's varied interests and talents mark him more a Renaissance Man than rascal, a far cry from his wild ancestor.

People I talked to were tired of singles bars, he said. But they enjoyed being together and this gives them permission to do that, he said.

So we announce things like a yoga class Tuesday which 10 people have to sign up for. Or a lecture on low fat diets or a transcendental meditation class, that sort of thing, he explained.

Houses reflect our culture, he went on. If you were Wild Bill Hickok, you'd know what it's like to be lonely and it'd be like, 'Howdy man, what's the news?'

So in our grandfather's time, everyone would sit on the front porch and wave at the mail man or whoever as they went by. Socializing was done from front porch as people would stop their horse and carriage and come or up, he explained.

Then the automobile came and no one stopped so they took the porch off and put it on the back as a patio, he continued.

Architecture and its development is no different, he said. Hickok is an expert.

I get as excited like birds or some or other, he said. I get excited with it, then learn as much as I can to get on with a new interest, he explained.

One of his current interests is as a playwright and he is presently working on a play about family life. He has also had some of his poetry published.

Only a couple of things. Nothing Gloria, the poet. You understand that, he added, hastily referring to his talented wife who publishes a high quality magazine of women's art, poetry and essays, Helicon Nine.

Then there's photography and ornithology. Hickok became interested in birds on safari in Kenya in 1969.

He has since studied and photographed birds in the veldt in South and East Africa and in Malaysia and has had his photographs published in various magazines.

He was also lucky enough to spot the wild jungle fowl, the progenitor of the domestic chicken.

I was in a party of bird watchers and they were all wading waist high in water to try to spot this wild jungle fowl, he related. I got tired of this and hired a jeep one day and there I saw this coveted bird right at the side of the road.

Another hobby is as a restorer of old houses and he has undertaken the old White Heron House on Sanibel Captiva Road on Sanibel and the Fisher House on Captiva Drive in Captiva.

I prefer to renovate rather than restore, he commented. I keep the outside the same but renovate the inside making it brighter and lighter and more in keeping with modern tastes.

Then there's the vineyard in Eureka, North California which he acquired through default and dreams of making into a winery.

It was a 60 acre sheep farm, but that's really boring so I decided to make 15 acres of it into a vineyard, he said.

What I'd like to do is to retire with a little winery which makes about 5,000 cases a year of the very finest wine, all presold to a restaurant, he said, adding that he is little more than a grape farmer right now.

The way to make a small fortune in wine at this time is to start with a large fortune, he quipped, pointing to the intense competition and the devalued franc.

But his interest in wine like some of the others might fade.

I go to a certain extent on things, he explained. I now know all I need to know about birds and I'm just about to the point where I know all I need to know about wine unless I want to memorize every little vineyard of every square foot of France.

Writing is an interest that has been sustained in Hickok's life how ever. He has written humorous columns for The New York City Star, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, The Denver Post, The Kansas City Star and Newsday.

I base my columns on some significant newsworthy event, he said. But you have to choose your topics carefully because some subjects just don't come off as humor.

I'll do one on Sanibel one day, he promised.

Based on the joke — How many Sanibelites does it take to change a light bulb? Answer — Three. One to change the light bulb, one to get an electrical permit from the city and one to get a permit from George Campbell to find out if it passes all the environmental laws.

Hickok feels himself fortunate to have been able to have followed through on his many interests.

I've been lucky. I've met the right people, he reflected.

But then it's not all luck either. I've chosen the right people too, he added, pointing to his wife, Gloria Vando Hickok, who he said introduced him to a whole new cultural life and his sons who are now involved in the family business.

Hickok's main residence is in Kansas City. He spends several weeks at a time in his Captiva home on the gulf.

Verdi's 'Falstaff' will be aired Friday

Giuseppe Verdi's last opera, his comic master piece 'Falstaff' will be presented Friday, December 13 at 9 p.m. in a stereo simulcast over WSPF FM 90.1 Concert 90 and WSFP-TV Channel 30.

Based on Shakespeare's 'The Merry Wives of Windsor' and parts of 'Henry IV', the opera stars the noted European baritone Gabriel Bacquier in the role of Sir John Falstaff, the portly, courtly gentleman whose knightliness has gone to seed, and Richard Stilwell as Ford.

The remaining cast includes Karan Armstrong as Alice Ford, Jutta Runte-Hiloff as Nannetta, Sylvia Lindstrand as Meg Page, Maria Szermay as Dame Quickly, and Max Rene Cosatti as Fenton.

Sir Georg Solti leads the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, the Vienna State Opera Chorus, and the Vienna Boys Choir.

Sir John Falstaff, once the companion of royalty but now a corpulent parody of his former self, sends identical passionate letters to Mistress Ford and Mistress Page, two young patrons of Windsor whose wealth and beauty have attracted his attention. The ladies compare their letters and, with the aid of Dame Quickly, decide to teach the old rogue a lesson. They contrive a series of pranks for his public humiliation. Sir John is dumped from a clothes basket into the Thames and ambushed, attacked and ridiculed in Windsor Forest.

In the process, Nannetta and Fenton, the young lovers, are united in marriage. Mrs. Ford's husband is taught a lesson in trusting his wife, and Falstaff, back in the good graces of his countrymen, leads the crowd in a rousing tribute to folly and humor as the enduring spice of life!

USF Radio Reading Service brings news to the handicapped

Reading the daily newspaper was a lost cause for Wilbur Swennes. 75 Swennes wouldn't know what was in the paper unless someone would take the time to read it to him. He is totally blind.

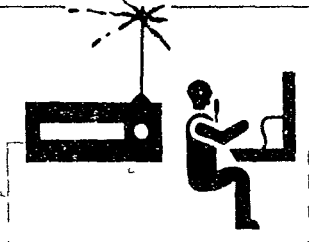

But now with a mere flick of a switch, his print barrier is broken. Swennes hears entire articles read from the daily newspaper and magazines courtesy of Radio Reading Service (RRS) provided by the University of South Florida in Tampa. A similar service operates from UF's Fort Myers campus with a 60-mile radius and 300 listeners.

The University broadcasts the service 24 hours a day from its main public station WUSF-FM to special receivers designed to pick up the signal. The special RRS receivers are given only to eligible persons unable to read a printed page. Listeners are asked to contribute $26 a year for the receivers.

Eligibility for the service requires a physician's certification of impairment ranging from blindness and learning difficulties to physical limitations which prevent persons from holding a book or turning pages. Handicaps included in this category are multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, arthritis, and loss of limbs.

The RRS format features readings of local papers as well as the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal and from magazines such as New Republic, Sport, Astrology, Young Miss and Ebony.

But it is more than a reading service. RRS Station Manager Betty Young says, "You can also call it an information service" funded in part by grants from the Florida Department of Education, the David Falk Foundation, the Florida Lions Foundation, the Blind Inc. and local Lions Club.

Programs entitled 'Your Legal Rights in Information Power and Blind Sight' give listeners current facts about services for their particular handicap. Another show, 'Retired Age Program' focuses on the needs of senior citizens.

An evening news show begins with wire service stories and ends with feature segments on health, business, lifestyle, fine arts and science. In between are issue-oriented interviews with local community leaders.

RRS also has grocery and shopping ads programs. These shows, says Young, are among the most popular because this information could not be communicated to a large group any other way.

Don't forget entertainment. RRS has programs such as 'Detective Stories', 'Old Time Radio', 'Romance Novels' and 'Soap Opera Digest'.

Plans are underway for additional studio facilities at both the Tampa and Fort Myers campuses.

A very special program of music with Bach and Handel will be presented by the combined choirs of St. Michael and All Angels Episcopal Church and Sanibel Congregational United Church of Christ, December 15, at 4 p.m. in St. Michael's Church, Periwinkle Way. "The Bach Contata, "To Us A Child Is Born" will be featured with vocal solos and instrumental works of Bach and Handel in celebration of the 300th anniversary of their births. Robert Foulkes, United Church of Christ choir director and organist will be director and tenor soloist for this program. Dorothy Bunck, St. Michael choir director and organist, will be organist and cello instrumentalists. Other principals include Betty Koree, alto, Ray Koree, baritone, and Margaret Bunck, flute.

■ LIONS CLUB: The Sanibel-Captiva Lions Club held its regular meeting Dec. 4. President Francis Bailey welcomed those returning from the summer in cooler climates and reported that nearly $5,000 had been forwarded to several charities in partial payments to those charities budgeted for the year.

Chairmen Fenton and Affourtit reported net receipts of over $1000 and $240 from the recent plant sale and turkey shoot. Lion Laranson reported that the hearing clinic held on the same day provided tests for 36 people, of whom 28 needed followup testing in order to further assist their hearing. This was a free test and the professional testers were paid as a service to islanders.

Co-chairman Bob Louwers and Joe Sloboda reported the unloading of the Christmas Trees and handed out work schedules to the members for their sales times.

Lion Bob Dormer asked for assistance with the annual party for residents of Gulf Coast Center which will be given at the Dormer home on December 14. Lion George Licht has placed tickets on sale for the barbecue and dance to be held on Saturday, Feb. 8, at the Community Building. All islanders are invited and tickets will be available through Lions members.

Lt. Ray Rhodes of Sanibel police stressed the increasing use of voice analysis test as used in questioning techniques. This is a relatively new technique and appears to be a companion to the polygraph tests often used in present testing. He also commented on the seasonal increase in area crimes in burglary, especially car break-ins and motel thefts. He noted that several organized gangs are present and operating very efficiently in the area.

The next meeting will be on Dec. 18 at the Sanibel Community Building at 6:30 p.m. □

■ CHRISTMAS SERVICES: Captiva Chapel by the Sea will hold its traditional Christmas Eve candlelighting and carol service at 7 p.m. All islanders are welcome.

Meals by FISH offered daily

Meals by FISH is a service provided by the volunteer organization to insure that people who are unable to cook for themselves will receive five nutritionally balanced meals a week delivered to their homes. ### Aquatic camp planned for children-

During the Christmas holiday, the Calusa Aquatic Program (CAP) is conducting a 5 day camp for children aged 7-13. Three days of adventures on Sanibel and nearby islands is planned as well as an overnight camping trip to an island in San Carlos Bay Dec. 26-28.

The first three days include a canoe adventure to Buck Key. This island contains a climax forest community, much like Sanibel 100 years ago. The Calusa Indians were frequent visitors here and one of their burial mounds will be visited.

Also, one of the lowest tides of the year occurs during the camp. This will make possible exploration of marine habitats which are usually inaccessible. Trips to grass and mud flats rich in marine life are planned. Beach and mangrove ecology will also be studied.

The island visited during the camping trip Dec. 30-31 is only 15 minutes from Sanibel but uninhabited. The 10 acre island contains a pine forest, sandy beaches, and mangroves. It is well suited for swimming, exploring, and sampling. Registration is limited to 10 campers.

Call CAP at 472-9282 for more information.

Continuing saga of the Wonder Woman of the Ice Age

By Pat Robertson

Fiction:

The Mammoth Hunters — Jean Auel

Continuing the exciting adventures of the Wonder Woman of the Ice Age. In volume three of the projected series The Earth's Children, Ayla, the independent heroine, and Jondalar of the golden hair, travel to the land of his kin, the mammoth hunters. With them they bring tame horses and the ability to make fire, two of Ayla's earlier discoveries. While living with the Mamutoi, she will experiment using a needle for sewing leather and will work at spreading tolerance among the clans (flatheads are people, too!).

Foreign Land — Jonathan Raban

After thirty five years in an obscure African outpost, solitary George Grey has come back to England only to find that home has changed so much that he feels like a foreigner. This is a haunting novel in which characters and events of the past are interwoven with the demons and uncertainties of the present.

Angela All Over Town — Luanne Rice

Soap-opera actress Una Cavan takes advantage of the opportunity offered when she is temporarily written out of the script to join her two sisters for a seaside family vacation. It makes a tale of the renewed tightening and then liberated loosening of family ties on the way to adult life and love.

World's Fair — E.L. Doctorow

A wonderful, moving creation of the childhood of Edgar Allan Poe that combines the actual life he led in the Bronx in the 1830s and the world that the adult Edgar imperfectly reconstructs in his memory. The climax is a visit to the 1939

World's Fair with its hopeful theme "The World of Tomorrow."

The Winning Streak — Arnold Grisman

It all starts in Las Vegas when Goldberg, an ex-treasury agent, has a stunning run at the dice and meets stunningly beautiful Barbara. A gambling odyssey follows that moves Goldberg from California to Atlantic City and involves murder, kidnapping, and a huge counterfeiting scam. A real page turner.

Non-fiction:

River Runners of the Grand Canyon — David Lavender

The documentation began with Major John Wesley Powell, that one armed Civil War veteran, who first ran the river in the late 1800s. The fascination continues to this day with Georgia White, the woman who introduced rubber rafts to the river. A grand book, filled with the exhilaration of the run.

The Open Net — George Plimpton

For the Walter Mitty in all of us, Plimpton has once again ventured as an amateur into the world of professional sports. This time, it's as the goalie with the Boston Bruins of the National Hockey League. George gives us a wry and penetrating look inside a unique brotherhood.

Biography:

Ferraro, My Story — Geraldine Ferraro

As a Catholic, an Italian American, and most especially as a woman, she had three strikes against her before the campaign; even started. This account of the woman vice-presidential candidate is written with the same gusto that characterized her appearances on the campaign trail.

German-born artist takes inspiration from nature

By Paul Luthringer

Not many people have seen what true Alaskans call The Big One. It still gives me goosebumps. Sanibel artist Hanna Hilger said as she recalls 20,000 foot Mt. McKinley, the tallest mountain in the U.S. and North America.

What a chance to catch this feeling on canvas. German born Hilger thought. And her husband Peter fit the brakes on the van. Hanna pulled the drawing tablet from under the seat and began transferring her feelings into art. That's how most of her work is done. It's inspired from nature for the Hilgers, chalking up 11,000 miles in one summer's driving through America just to camp and sketch is nothing new.

Anything to be close to nature. Hanna summed it up at the showing of her first exhibit at the Sanibel Library now running through December.

Alaska really got to me she added remembering the initial power the peak transmitted to her through the cool grey sky. Her latest work in oil The Big One attempts to capture the awesome power at McKinley — its height, power and presence. That is God's country and it is hard not to feel that when I'm painting. Hilger doesn't bring canvas, paints and brushes with her on such extensive journeys. There's no room for all of it — so she brings an artist's tablet to draw on. After a trip, I think about the scene, relive the sketch and paint by memory. Sanibel's serenity as well as her second studio in Hendersonville, N.C. provide her with the peace and quiet she needs.

• please see HILGER 14B

After 13,000 miles of driving Hilger painted Mt. McKinley in oil from a colored sketch back at her home on Sanibel. Although the highest peak in the U.S. and North America is rarely visible since it's often cloud covered, Hanna had her husband Steve stop the van for this one.

"Antigone" comes to City Hall Saturday

Barrier Island Group for the Arts is presenting the Asolo Touring Theater's production of "Antigone", Saturday Dec. 14 under the tent at Sanibel City Hall.

"Antigone" is the story of a young woman struggling for something she believes morally right — she wants to bury her brother despite the penalty of death imposed by royal command on the one burying him.

The story is based on Sophocles' Greek classic but the version to be presented at 8 p.m. Saturday is that by French playwright Jean Anouilh. When Anouilh wrote the play in 1944 it was set in World War II France with Antigone representing the French underground. In this version it is set in a future time with the imagery coming from films like "Road Warrior".

The nationally acclaimed Asolo Touring Theater plays in Florida throughout the winter season.

Tickets for the production are available on Sanibel at the B Hive Caloosa Canvas Macintosh Book Store or at the performance. The cost is $6.

Chagall works in ECC Gallery

Celebrating the spirit of Christmas in joyous fashion, the etchings and imagery of Marc Chagall will be presented in the gallery at Edison Community College during the Christmas season from Dec. 12 to Jan. 16.

Included are floating fiddlers playing flowers, red horses, acrobats and self-portraits and illustrations for the Bible and La Fontaine's fables. The printings are on loan from the National Gallery. The Local textile designer features collage jackets

Detroit designer and weaver June Payne accomplished in free loom weaving and in the use of textiles in art and clothing has for the first time agreed to feature her women's collage jackets at Sanibel's Limited Edition in Parvinkle Place.

Her unique jackets are a collage of colors in machine embroidery. They are computerized sewing machines from satins, taffets and metallic textiles.

With 32 years of experience in textiles, Payne, who will soon move into her new home in Delray, is primarily a weaver.

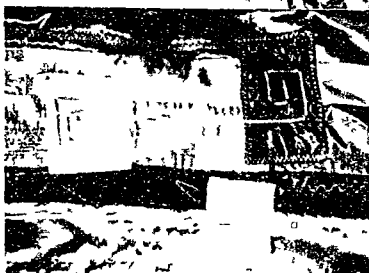

First in the art of textiles is the technique or craft of textiles. First you must study the technique of the craft and finally the art of it. A lot of artists stop at the first two techniques, Payne points out.

What is the art concept in textiles? Payne explains that in her work each individual piece has its own concept and its own place in the total composition. One look at her jackets and you know its true.

The Spanish major from Algon College in Michigan said that her childhood was very creative, but she stayed in textiles rather than switching to another art medium. Since then Payne has traveled extensively through Mexico, Russia, South America, England, New Zealand and Italy, observing and production techniques, studying weaving, spinning, dyeing and quilting, as well as actually weaving with native Guatemalan.

It's very rewarding, both personally as well as materially.

Notice the fine detail and the computerized embroidery and stitching in Payne's work.

June Payne's women's collage jacket fashioned from recycled pieces of taffeta, silk and metallic fabric.

A movie mania for musclemen

By Cliff Potter

A beautiful woman and bulging muscles do not make an attractive combination. Of course if the muscles are on her boyfriend or even her husband then the scene becomes tenable. Let the female brain pulsate and bulge with the intricacies of foreign or domestic affairs but spare us the swollen and vein streaked mounds on her biceps and knotty lumps on what should be trim and tantalizing limbs.

The latest tongue transplant candidate Donald Regan, the White House Chief of staff, suffered a severe case of hoot in mouth disease a short time ago. He made a remark intimating that wives of the dignitaries attending the recent Geneva summit meeting would be more comfortable discussing clothing and styles than they would having their minds clogged by those problems better left to the fellows.

The average movie fan has long been obsessed with male stars endowed with husky torsos and well developed muscular framework. Now we are not concerned with the scores of merely well built men who have graced the screen constantly during the past few decades. John Wayne, Burt Lancaster, Sean Connery, Errol Flynn and Lex Harker are a few prime examples of the tall, lithe and athletic performers not under discussion here. Grade A beef — in the guise of generous portions of heavy muscle — helped a chosen few reach the top of the ladder if only for a short time.

George O'Brien brought his bulk into the movies in the early 1920s as a handsome and virile star. An all-around athlete and boxing champion of the Pacific Fleet during World War I, he invaded the movie scene with a striking smile and a cool charm. All that coupled with a mammoth chest and a rare 19 neck, gave him 30 good years of film prominence. Nobody within hearing distance jeered at his cowboy films when he appeared in short sleeved shirts. This very unorthodox departure from the normal cowpunching attire was justified by the size of his upper arms, each of which could have easily been mistaken for a thigh. O'Brien died at 86 in September of this year.

Victor McLaglen, veteran of two wars and a professional prizefighter, was billed early in his career in the 1920s as "The Beloved Brute." A huge man, he was noticed by talent scouts as he fought (and lost) a heavy eight match with champion Jack Johnson. He won an Academy Award in 1935 for his performance in The Informer and appeared in the John Wayne westerns of the post World War II years. Two of these films are Fort Apache and She Wore A Yellow Rose.

The modern counterparts of those two great physical specimens are now playing to record audiences throughout the movie going world. Rocky/Rambo. Sly Stallone is being copied by the youth of America in its quest for body beauty. Unfortunately his accent and diet is also becoming a symbol of virility. Arnold Schwarzenegger, a real bulk of muscle and bone, carried his family name with him into fame. Few men are built even remotely like Arnold. When he is on the beach usually in bright orange briefs, he attracts more attention than the scantily-clad girls. A quote from Arnold tells a solemn tale about the male competition. "They all fall in the back of their minds these guys to knock off the King!"

Nashville's Lou Graham sings to a 6-under-par 66 win at Plantation's Traditional Cup tourney

Miller lifts a little grass on hole No. 2 the most difficult shot per four at South Seas. The well bunkered elevated green and prevailing winds from the gulf backgrip in forced from over par 3.

Lou Graham didn't even know there was a South Seas Traditional Golf Tournament until Jerry Hearl told him he needed more players. He may have been joined by her partner today.

By Paul Luthringer

Watching Johnny Miller wolf down oysters, stone crab claws and caviar after his sixth place tie with Plantation pro Jerry Hearl at the South Seas Traditional last weekend was evidence that Lou Graham's win with 66 didn't bother the favorite.

The pin placement was atrocious. Miller complained as he wiped cocktail sauce off his face. But even though his putting was off and he drove one ball out of bounds, it was the fun that drew him to the event benefiting Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Lee County.

Amateur contest winners were John Naumann, closest to the pin; longest drive Doug Morris, who won last year's amateur; winning teams second and third place tie at 26; Dave Thomas, John Groom and Jim Welsh; and Bob Hughes, Scott Siler and Walter Priester and first place, Kirk Collins, Maurice Hillmeyer and Eddie Friar.

Professional winners with low team scores were tied between Billy Armstrong and Barry Jaekel, first place; Lou Graham, low gross second place; Mark Lye.

Graham, from Nashville, a surprise entry in the Traditional, came from four shots off the first day pace and fired a scorching 6 under par 66 to take the seventh annual South Seas Plantation Traditional. Graham's rounds of 73-66-139 were one better than the 69-71-140 recorded by first day leader Mark Lye.

His first time on Captiva, Graham commented, "This place is just like Nashville — sunny and hot. But this is a type of golf course where you really have to play position. I got out here Friday afternoon and played a quick nine holes and was hitting some shots that I was sure of. Today the wind laid down and I had a better handle on what I was doing. It's definitely a position course and you can't try to overpower it."

Miller should have followed the advice. If Graham, the winner of five PGA Tour events,

Yesterday the rest of my team was playing golf like they were hitting 150 in baseball. It

The woman on the right looks as if she will never wash her hand after touching pro Johnny Miller. Miller may have been joined by her partner today.

blondie gallery picnic said. They were way ahead, but thanks to my probablis they had a bad day today, he conceded.

Probably was an understatement. Miller had a bad day Sunday, falling totally out of contention when he hit his drive out of bounds and double bogeyed his final hole. His team lost the lead but three quarters of the way into the Traditional. Miller predicted Mark Lye as the winner. "I think it's between Lou Graham and Mark Lye, but we will have to see what happens. Graham is having a good round but I think Mark Lye is the man who will win," though Miller said from the second hole.

From the sultry Plantation, it's off to Boca West for Miller's next week, as he teams up with Jack Nicklaus in the Chrysler Team Invitational.

Johnny's partner by draw, sports anchorman Luke Washington, kept the team together, especially Sunday, while Miller bogeyed the 2nd yard easy par four No. 7 with three putts.

It was very exciting, playing with Miller. I got some tips from him and he is a great teacher and I played, although he didn't have a good day today. Washington, the six foot six former basketball star, insisted it was an honor playing with him and Barry Jaekel. Hopefully, I'll get the knack of this game, hanging around great company like that. Washington was one of three amateurs picked in a draw Friday night to play with 1972 French Open winner Jaekel on Saturday. The following day, Luke tucked out on the drive and teamed up with Miller. "I was a little worried about that because I knew the people in the gallery would be following Johnny, so I was nervous. The pressure was on, but we came through a couple times, but not as often as we would have liked."

The WFV sportscaster is going to hang up the clubs for a while, preferring basketball's hard courts to the soft links of South Seas Plantation. "I'm waiting for Bob Hope to send me an invitation to the Classic," he laughed. "I'm just going to get into basketball where the ball and the hoop are both bigger."

Everything came out as I thought it would, according to Chicago's Bob Youngquist. Miller just wasn't putting well at all. But Lou Graham shot lights-out with his 66, beating Lye by one stroke. "I've really had a tough break when he hit a tree on No. 7 although making par."

Youngquist, who last year played in the Traditional on two teams — one with Miller, the other with Calvin Pete — was surprised that Mark Lye didn't take the tourney after his 3 under par 69 finish the first day. "I really thought Mark Lye would run away with it all after Johnny Miller fell down, although several other good players didn't play up to their potential either like Richard Gilstad."

Last year, Woody Blackburn beat Johnny Miller by one stroke to take the Traditional title. Blackburn was absent this year because he was playing at the PGA's partners competition, which 1984's Traditional winner, Mark McQuibber, was leading Sunday.

Anglers, don't snub the Atlantic spadefish

Researchers to study life history of this species

By Fritz and Normal Stoppelbein

A s stocks of some popular sport fish become scarcer anglers are becoming better acquainted with some lesser known species which put up a good fight when hooked and also provide excellent table fare.

One such species is the Atlantic spadefish which move inshore in late summer and fall to spend the cool weather in the shelter of bays and estuaries. In late winter and spring they begin to migrate offshore again to spend the summer on offshore reefs.

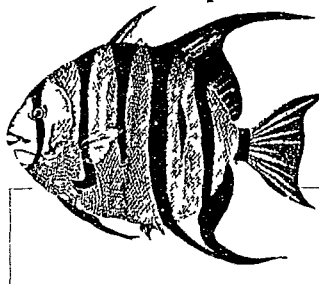

This deep bodied fish is related to the angelfish which it resembles in shape but has four to six vertical bars on the sides. The first bar passes through the eye area and the last bar is just before the tail section. These dark bars fade as the fish ages or after it is killed.

The general color is grayish green with some yellow tinges. Its mouth is relatively small with bands of slender, sharp teeth for scraping barnacles and other crustaceans from rocks, pilings or mangrove roots. In this respect it is similar to the sheepshead and is sometimes mistaken for them when found feeding in the same area. The elongated second dorsal fin and anal fin however serve to distinguish it from the sheepshead.

Although the spadefish can grow to a length of three feet and weigh 20 pounds the average fish caught in this area is less than one foot in length and weighs about a pound.

The flesh of the spadefish is firm and light and makes excellent table fare. The skin is fairly tough so the fish should be filleted.

Their preferred food is crustaceans so fiddler crabs, small clams or shrimp (live or dead) should appeal as bait. In deference to the spadefish's sharp teeth a strong leader is recommended — not only as protection from the teeth — but from abrasion on the barnacle encrusted habits! A hook no larger than No. 2 is recommended for the size fish usually found in this area.

We have mixed emotions about touting the good points of some of these non popular fish when we see the pressure that has been put on some of them — such as tripletail and shark — to the point where they in turn are now becoming threatened. Researchers are trying to keep ahead of the problem by gathering information on life history and food habits of less sought species in order to provide proper management.

The life history of spadefish will be the subject of a year long study by the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department. In a previous study conducted on reefs off South Carolina, biologists developed techniques to catch spadefish on hook and line using strips cut from a common jellyball jellyfish as bait. Because they are abundant and easy to locate spadefish are becoming increasingly popular with anglers.

For the study spadefish will be captured by hook and line by spearfishing and by netting and the stomach contents of the fish analyzed. Techniques will also be developed to age spadefish by counting the annual rings on scales or small ear bones (otolith) removed from the captured fish.

Spadefish probably spawn offshore although larval spadefish occur in estuarine waters and juveniles are usually found near shore. The project leader explained "By catching fish of various ages and in different areas we hope to learn more about their life history."

Knowledgeable outdoorsmen know that you can figure out how old a tree is by counting the rings on a cross section of its trunk. Fisheries biologists can determine the age and growth history of a fish by counting the rings on the middle ear bone (otolith) of the fish.

After removing the otolith from the fish a paper thin section is sliced off and placed in a magnifying projector. Then a sonic digitizer enters the distances it measures between the growth rings into a microcomputer which then calculates how big the fish was at each interval of a life.

Using this method more than a hundred fishes can be measured in a day compared with the 10 to 15 per day when it used to be done manually.

Aging fishes also can be accomplished in some regions by measuring growth rings on fish scales. In climates without prolonged cold spells the growth rings are difficult to distinguish. Colder temperatures slow the scales growth and create a pattern similar to the growth rings of trees. In Florida's warmer climate the technique of ageing fishes from their scales is impractical.

Determining the age structure of fishes is important to fishery management. Age structure information allows biologists to compare past years of fish production to determine conditions which produce bumper crops. It also helps determine which size range of fishes should be protected.

HILGER

• from 7B
to go back in time.
One of seven children born in Stettin, Poland, Hanna Hilger, began as an artist in 1983. "I started painting because I wanted to break loose from the mundaneness of pottery" — the medium she first got her hand into and in which she is still active. "About five years ago I decided I needed to learn more about color." As a conventional potter, Hilger explains, an artist is somewhat limited to the use of a small range of colors. Sketches in pastels as well as painting in oils, provided her with the opportunity to escape.

If it hadn't been for Hans Neubert, a famous German artist, Hilger may still have been at the potter's wheel, and never have entered other mediums.

Neubert and his wife welcomed the Hilgers into their Bavarian home after Hanna's sister, a doctor in Munich who is friends with the artist, mentioned that Hanna was interested in learning more about painting. From there, Hilger and Neubert were on a one-to-one, 12-week teaching basis, a situation that any aspiring artist would call fortunate.

"I was really lucky," she reiterated. "You know, we all have lucky breaks in our lives. The problem is that we must realize when they come, and then take those breaks."

According to Hilger, after two 12-week sessions with Neubert, "he was happy to see that I have my own style and encouraged me to not let anyone influence my painting. Now, I have learned to be in my thought and in my mind, in tune with nature." Today, when she puts brush to canvas, Hilger doesn't necessarily paint exactly what she sees. More important is that she paints what she feels, or smells, or senses.

"Unlike many people, artists, writers and photographers have the freedom to move things around, so they improve the composition of their works. And on a flat canvas, you must have balance in your work, otherwise everything falls out of the picture," she contends. "That's what makes painting challenging."

Hanna's son Steve, who worked on Sanibel before pursuing a career as a lawyer in Orlando, shares in his mother's talents in the field of photography. Her other son is an architect in Minneapolis with her oldest daughter a freelance artist.
Hanna Hilger tries to get herself into the mood of how she felt at a certain time and place. Whether it's painting dogwood blossoms in the Carolinas, or Alaska's Mt. McKinley, or Sanibel's Gumbo Limbo, there is more to oil painting and pastels than painting exactly what's there.

Another unique trait that Hilger's works display is her personal logo that distinguishes her art from others. The porcupine symbol, usually at the bottom right-hand corner of her paintings, was designed by her son and has a family significance. "I'm the seventh of ten children that were born at home. When the nurse delivered me, my hair was standing straight up, thus the nickname porcupine."
