Your advisors should be around for years

You've probably found that as your income and net worth increase, your financial life becomes more complex: Your investment alternatives increase; you have to plan for college for your children; you worry about paying higher taxes; you find you need more than a one-page will.

To cope with their diverse financial, investment and tax matters, people who are most successful at managing their money build a team of professionals to help them. Typically, the team consists of an attorney, an accountant and an investment adviser.

While each professional has a different area of expertise, some of your financial questions may blur the lines between them.

FINANCIAL FRONTLINE

By Carl Litwin

For example, you'll want input from both your financial consultant and your accountant when discussing tax reduction. The accountant can help you to decide if you should transfer or postpone income; your financial consultant can recommend the best investments with which to do it. Or, if you're establishing a trust fund for your children, you may seek the advice of each member of your financial team.

Although each of your experts may know one aspect of your financial life in great depth, you're the only person who has the big picture. Be sure your team of advisers understands your financial strategy so that they can advise you in a coordinated, productive way as you work toward your financial goals.

How can you get the most out of your financial team? Here are a few tips.

- When choosing advisers, keep in mind that you'll want to rely on them for many years as your finances evolve. So even though your cousin, the corporate attorney, may be able to write a simple will, you'll need someone with more relevant expertise when it comes time to set up trusts or plan your estate.

- Ask business associates and friends whose judgement you respect to recommend professionals who understand personal financial matters.

- When you meet the accountant, lawyer or financial consultant for the first time, explain your current and anticipated needs clearly.

- Make sure you feel comfortable with this person's outlook and methods. If, for example, a financial consultant specializes in aggressive investments and you prefer a lower-risk approach, ask the consultant to refer another associate who will be able to match your viewpoint.

- Ask questions about anything you want, including fees. Lawyers and accountants are usually paid by the hour; rates vary widely around the country. Certain services, such as drafting a simple will, may be done for a flat fee. Financial consultants are paid by commissions on your securities transactions.

- Keep each member of your team abreast of major changes in your situation. Only by knowing all pertinent facts can they advise you properly.

In the end, a carefully selected and properly managed financial team will help you determine and achieve your financial goals.

Construction work on the new Community Bank of the Islands on Periwinkle Way is moving along at a rapid pace. The 7,500-square-foot building will be Old Florida style, complete with a tin roof and a large front porch entryway. The staff, about 25 strong, will be able to serve customers in the new building by the end of November.

Condo manager course offered at Edison

The Institute for Management Development at Edison Community College in Fort Myers will present a course on "Condominium Management for the Professional Manager and Board Members" at the college starting Monday, Oct. 3. The course is designed to prepare condominium managers and board members for day-to-day management of the association.

Frances Schar, Robert White and John Geiger will instruct the course, which will include material in the correspondence course now being offered by the University of Florida. Students who successfully complete the course will be awarded a certificate from USF and ECC, and will receive continuing education units for licensure.

Classes will meet from 7 to 9 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays through Nov. 2. Course fee is $160.

Register at the Continuing Education office on the ECC campus. For information, call 489-9235.

Seekers of financial advice should use caution

If you're seeking help with your financial planning, you will find that many different types of professionals offer this type of service.

In addition to individual planners, many attorneys, accountants and insurance agents also are "financial planners."

A financial planner analyzes the strengths and weaknesses of your current savings patterns, helps to formulate personal financial goals and assesses your needs and priorities with regard to insurance, taxes and estate plans. Based on the degree of risk you're willing to assume, a financial planner will suggest strategies to achieve these goals.

The federal government and most states, including Florida, do not license financial planners. However, a person who holds himself out as an "investment adviser" or who renders investment advice as defined by Florida law, is required to be registered.

Florida law defines an investment adviser (or consultant) as a person who receives compensation for advising others about purchasing, selling or investing in securities. Some exceptions exist for stock brokers and dealers, attorneys, certified public accountants, banks, bank holding companies, and trust companies which offer investment advice in connection with their regular business.

Also exempt are people who give investment advice exclusively to insurance or investment companies or people who don't hold themselves out to the general public to be investment advisers and who have no more than 15 clients within 12 consecutive months in Florida.

If you're dealing with a financial planner, check his educational background and professional certification. A college degree in accounting is useful but not necessary.

In addition, many planners are certified by one of the following organizations: the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters, the Institute of Certified Financial Planners, the International Association for Financial Planning and the International Association of Registered Financial Planners.

Financial planners commonly use initials to specify their designations: CFP stands for Certified Financial Planner, ChFC for Chartered Financial Consultant, and CLU for Chartered Life Underwriter.

If the financial planner offers investment advice, he must register with the state of Florida and with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Registered investment advisers usually use the initials RIA after their names.

The comptroller of Florida, Gerald Lewis, has a toll-free hotline number, 1-800-848-3792, which you may call before investing any money. His office will tell you if your investment adviser is registered with the state. The office also has the addresses of the various financial planning associations to which you may write to confirm a planner's certification.

It will cover such topics as key provisions of Florida law, security deposits, terminating leases, eviction, collection, right to enter and abandoned property.

Leaky copper pipes still under discussion

By BARBARA BRUNDAGE
Islander staff writer

Sanibel city councilmen are not satisfied with Island Water Association's efforts to solve the problem homeowners have been having with copper plumbing pipes that have developed leaks.

The leaks are caused by premature corrosion of the copper pipes, and city staff members have been looking into the problem for some months.

Mayor Mike Klein and Councilman Lennart Lorensen, both victims of leaking pipes, consider IWA's system of adding chemical substances to reduce the "aggressiveness" of water produced by the IWA's reverse osmosis plant "too little, too late."

IWA's General Manager Bob Hollander explained in a letter to City Manager Gary Price that, in the two months since the problem surfaced, IWA has been seeking ways to further protect its water supply system and the plumbing pipes connected to it.

"While the degree of protection has always been within the parameters set by regulating bodies," Hollander said, "We have been successful in increasing it to even higher levels during this period."

"We will continue to maintain the enhanced protection indefinitely," he added.

Councilman Francis Bailey labeled Hollander's explanation "double talk," and Price said the results of tests IWA had conducted on the corroded pipes were not conclusive.

But after increasing the amount of corrosion inhibitors added to the water, a test using tabs placed in various places throughout IWA's system for specific length of time revealed that the water was much less aggressive, Price said.

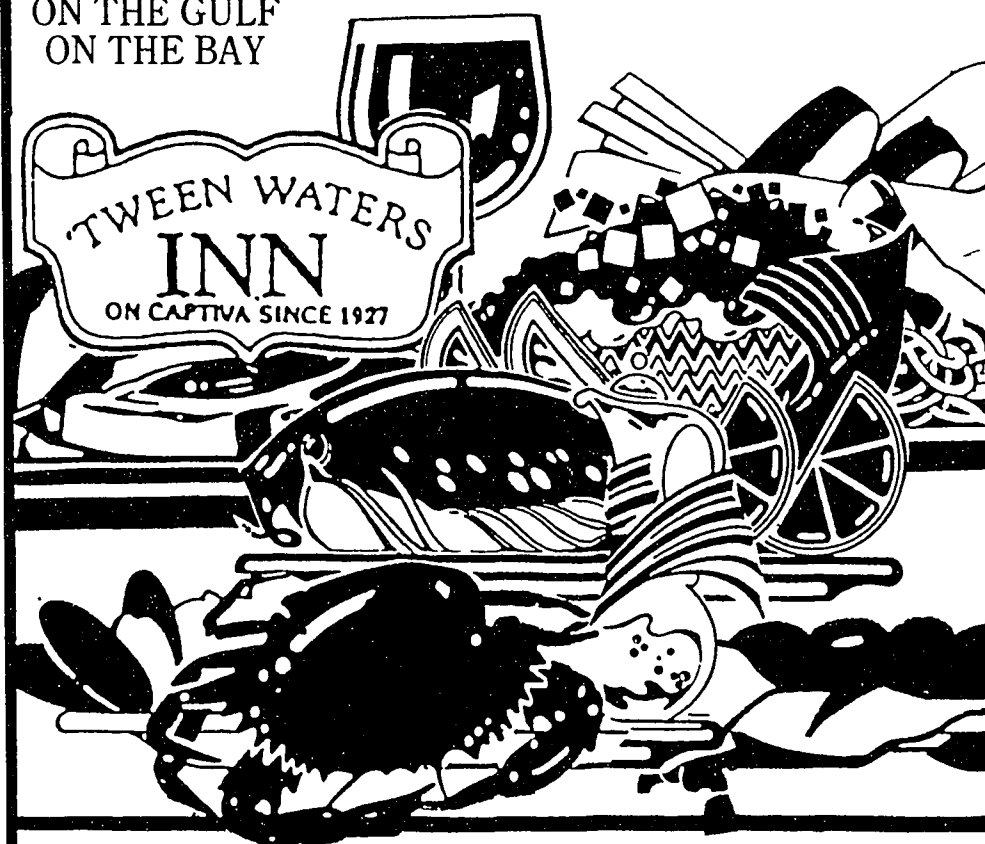

Klein said IWA has not solved the problem and suggested the corporation conduct more extensive research into what components in the water are causing the corrosion.

Police attend firearms instruction school

By SUZETTE BEIGEL
Islander staff writer

Picture the following scenario: You're on routine patrol with your partner when you get a call on the radio about a bank alarm that has sounded. Knowing that in the past this particular bank has had numerous false alarms, you pull in the parking lot and let your partner enter the bank alone. A few seconds later, you hear gun shots. A man suddenly comes running out of the bank. Your gun is pointed at the man. Do you shoot?

If you did, it's bad news. The man who came running out of the door happens to be the bank president.

If you didn't shoot, you're in luck. You just scored high on the Firearms Training System, or F.A.T.S. test.

Last week, three Sanibel police officers trained with F.A.T.S., a computerized system that presents different police-related scenarios to its audience for training purposes, as part of a week-long firearm instruction course. Three days of classroom lectures were held at the Southwest Florida Criminal Justice Academy in Fort Myers prior to the on-site training held in Naples.

Once in Naples, Sanibel Police Department Lt. Lew Phillips and sergeants Jack Primm and Dick Church trained with other officers to qualify for the state required certification course.

Primm explained that most of the work was reviewing shotgun and police combat procedures and barricade shooting. "It's a refresher course to practice shooting by sitting and kneeling in certain positions," Primm said.

At the F.A.T.S testing site, each officer was able to react in two scenarios.

"It's realistic training for any officer," Primm said. "It shows you how you would react in certain situations and it surprising how some officers respond."

All three Sanibel officers scored high in the firearms tests. Each was also awarded a certificate for the completion of the training.

Both Primm and Phillips said the techniques and procedures they learned at the school will be applied and taught to other SPD officers in the future.

Animals can be seen on Sanibel beginning at 1 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday. Arrangements should be made by calling the above number.

Dog laws

Sanibel law requires that dogs be leashed whenever they are on property not belonging to their owner. You are responsible for the behavior of your pet.

The Chamber of Commerce can tell you which island accommodations accept families with pets.
Remember: Wherever you go, clean up after your dog. "Leave nothing on the beach except footprints" applies to dogs, too.

Fishing

No permit is required for the saltwater sport, but fishing in freshwater ponds or on the Sanibel River requires a Florida fishing license.
Licenses are available at Bailey's on Sanibel.

Fitness

Sanibel Recreation Complex
Next to the elementary school
Sanibel-Captiva Road
472-0345
Regular hours at the center are from 10 a.m. to noon Monday through Friday and from 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Gators

Feeding alligators anywhere is not only ILLEGAL, it is extremely DANGEROUS. An alligator that is accustomed to being fed will become a dangerous animal if left unfed for a period of time. Animals that are not artificially fed are less likely to become problems. A "tame" alligator becomes bold - he loses his fear of man. Then he has difficulty distinguishing between a fish and the hand that holds it. Because of the gator population here, dogs should never be allowed to run on the Islands. Fence your dog, walk him on a leash or, if you must free him for a walk, keep him under voice control. NEVER tie your dog in an unfenced backyard.

For help with a nuisance alligator call the Sanibel Police Department, 472-3111. The dispatcher will contact one of the city's several "alligator assessors" to respond to your call.

The White Ibis

An ancient bird once served for Christmas and Thanksgiving dinner whose crimson beak ensured its survival

The J.N. "Ding" Darling National Wildlife Refuge is a favorite feeding ground for many water birds. But since only the white ibis boasts a crooked beak, it always stands out from the crowd.

This salient feature, which ornithologists tactfully call a downcurved bill, serves two purposes. For the benefit of budding bird watchers, it immediately distinguishes one white species from all the others. But in the pale-blue eyes of Eudocimus albus, its crooked beak ensures survival.

Indeed, the downcurved bill with a pointed tip is perfect for probing holes and pulling out the bird's preferred prey; crustaceans. Although hopeful herons and egrets frequently follow the white ibis, the latter generally swallows its catch before tailgaters have a chance to steal it.

At a pinch, the white ibis will settle for small frogs, fishes, slugs, or snails. But the bird's predilection for crayfish plays an important ecological role.

By consuming vast quantities of crayfish, ibis colonies prevent the crustaceans from destroying fish populations. Moreover, ibis droppings in the waters around their mangrove roosts promote the growth of plankton, the foundation of the marsh food chain.

Since the fossil record of the ibis family is about 60 million years old, the birds have played their ecological role for an extraordinarily long time. While their record in human history is much shorter, ibises have generally fared far better than some of their relatives.

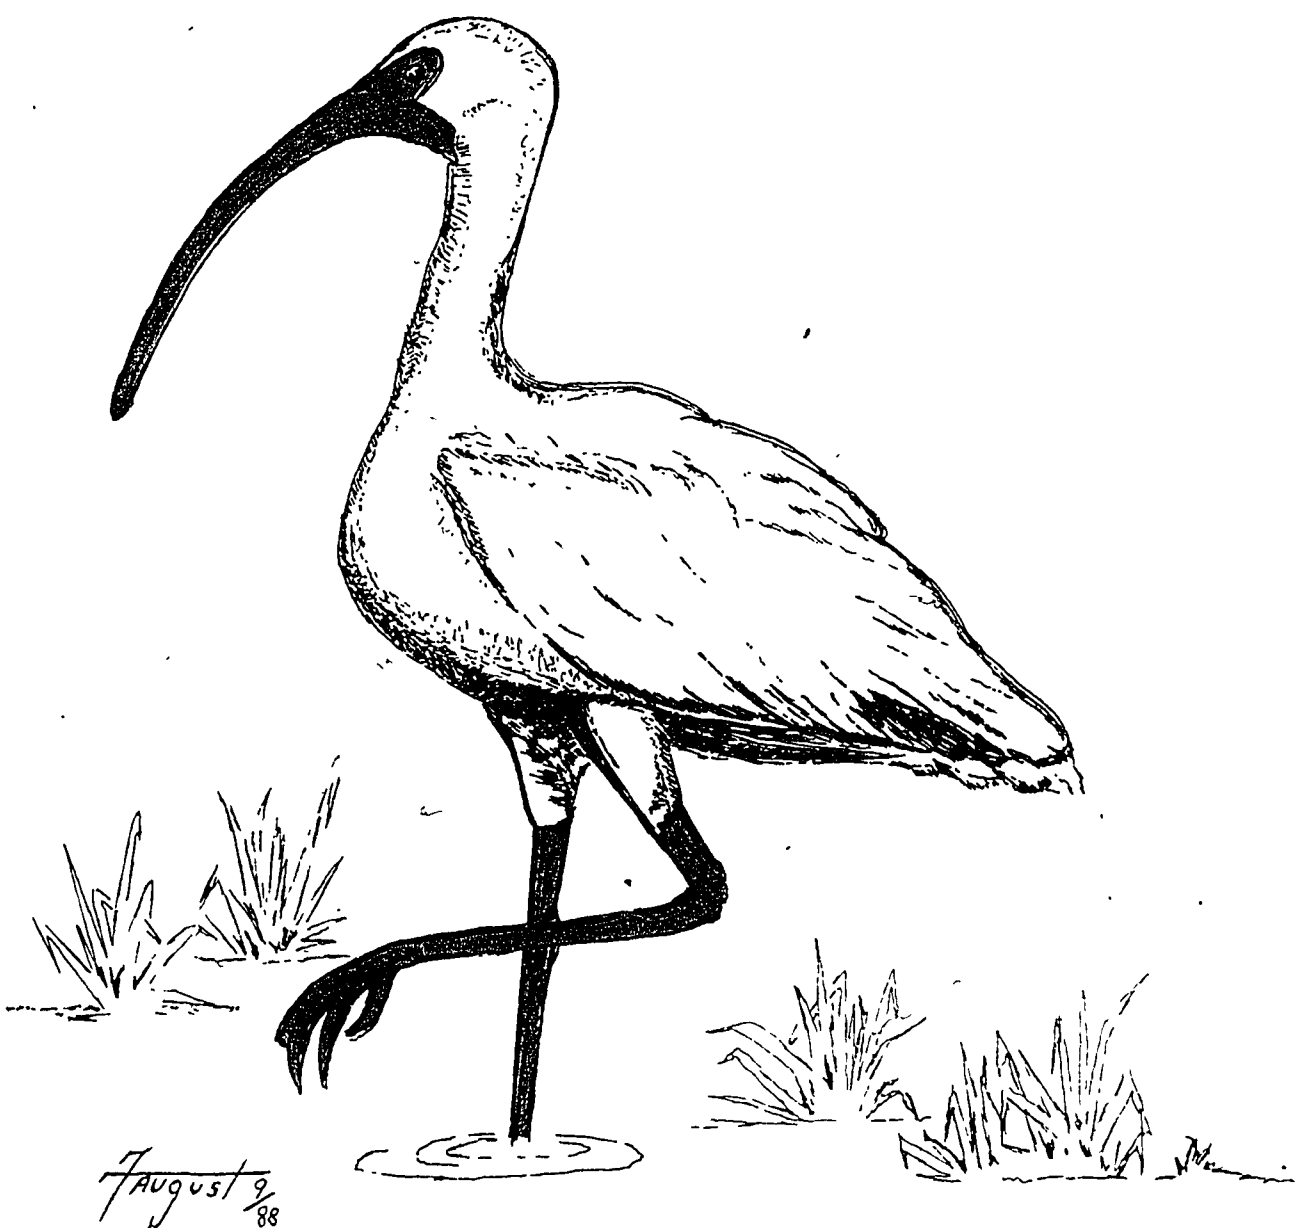

The ancient Egyptians believed that one of their gods, undeterred by the prospect of sporting a downcurved bill, periodically appeared in the form of an ibis. They revered the sacred ibis to such a degree that the bird was often mummified, buried with a dear departed pharaoh, and guaranteed immortality.

Unlike the Egyptians' sacred ibis, our white ibis was once a source of nourishment rather than reverence. Indians hunted them extensively, and early Floridians often served eudocimus albus on a hot platter at Thanksgiving and Christmas.

But although plume hunters decimated the ranks of great and snowy egrets, they generally ignored the white ibis. After all, milliners who paid a small fortune for lacy nuptial plumes were not interested in adorning their fancy chapeaux with crimson bird beaks.

During the breeding season, the white ibis's reddish bill, face and legs turn bright red, a come-hither color that the opposite sex finds utterly irresistible. Thus between bites on the feeding grounds, an ibis often attracts and courts a mate simultaneously. Other wading birds should be so lucky.

For example, egrets spend a lot of time parading around and displaying their nuptial plumes in order to attract a mate. Subsequently, courtship takes place in the rookery. While their mating game may not be tiring, it's certainly time consuming.

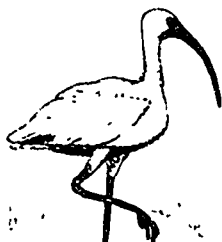

"During the breeding season, the white ibis's reddish bill, face and legs turn bright red, a come-hither color that the opposite sex finds utterly irresistible."

But when a white ibis goes a courting on the feeding grounds, it often turns to the rookery with a willing mate. Without further ado, the pair gets down to the business of building a nest and producing eggs.

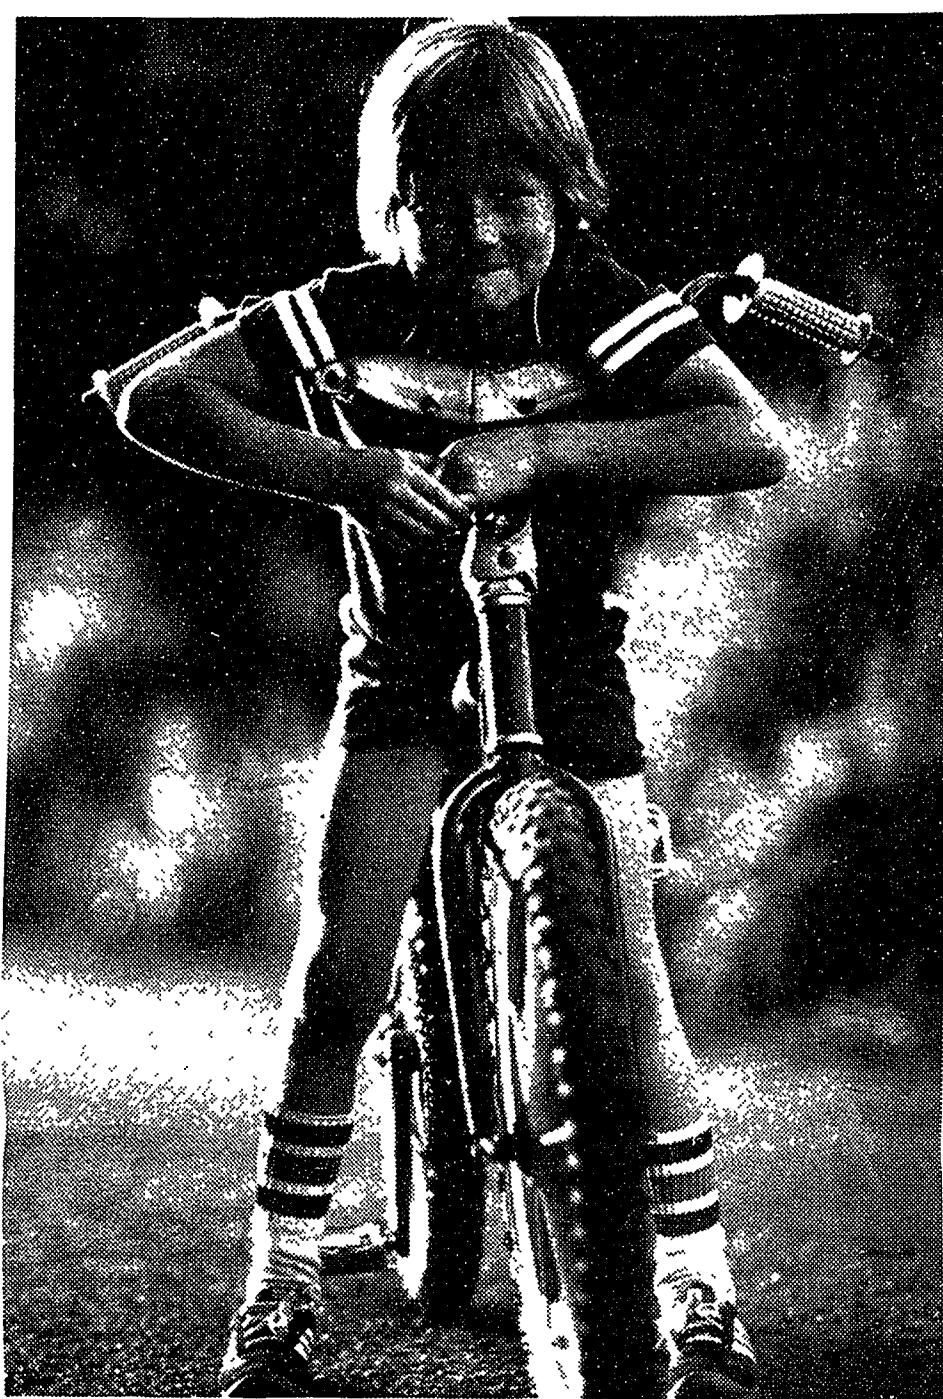

In terms of ensuring survival of the species, a crooked bill that turns crimson has much to recommend it.

Understanding The Benefits Of Master Planning Is Easy. Ask The Experts.

The process of master planning is complicated. But understanding the benefits of it are so simple, kids easily grasp their significance. When Westinghouse began planning Gateway, they were working from a clean slate. So they built in all the neat stuff, the benefits of a master planned town.

Bike paths give kids a terrific place to ride, private and away from traffic. Plus, winding streets — which make people slow down and enjoy the ride. An absolute minimum of through streets and four-way intersections also make neighborhoods more quiet and more safe — master planning is the best way to make sure there's less traffic on the street right in front of your home.

Speaking of safety, the master plan includes street lights: They're like night lights for the town. Kids enjoy playing outdoors later. For instance, they don't have to trick or treat in the afternoon, they can go with the rest of the ghouls and goblins at night. In fact, on your street, the street lights will be the only things besides the houses and trees that are above ground, so there's no way your kite could get tangled in telephone lines.

Basketball courts, swings, teeter totters, slides, soccer fields, baseball diamonds, and more will be right down the street. Plus lakes for fishing. Lots of neat places to explore. And best of all, because it's master planned, it'll always be here to discover.

With elementary, middle schools and high schools planned right in the neighborhood, you can go to school with your friends for a long time. And since school will be close by, you can sleep later in the morning and have more time to play in the afternoon. Besides going to a brand new school, some of the best times are walking or biking to school and back home again.

The kids are a little disappointed with Gateway's state of the art drainage system, because there won't be any puddles to play in after the rain. And the innovative dual-water system means the yard grows a lot faster.

Understanding the things making Gateway a wonderful place to live is easy. A child can do it. And adults will quickly become experts in benefits only they understand — like protecting property values, deed restrictions, living in a golf course community, the prestige and enjoyment of living in a community with a welcoming and memorable entryway and first-class landscaping.

Living or working at Gateway will let you use your imagination to explore the advantages of Lee County's first fiber optic communications system to access services like energy management, security, data, cable television and sophisticated communications like video conferencing for your home or business in Gateway.

All of these elements combine to make Gateway a town masterfully planned by Westinghouse. Westinghouse knows a lot about making life more fun for kids, and grown ups, because they've been doing it for a long, long time.

Single-family homes will premier this fall.

Design your own sampler with counted cross stitch

Counted cross stitch doesn't scare people anymore. Once their arm was twisted to try it, they found it to be quick, easy, and attractive. A blank fabric comes to life as the needler counts from a printed chart and makes corresponding stitches. The stitcher chooses the color, size, fiber, and weave of the fabric. It can be bold and easy, or minute, requiring a magnifying glass. Now, they can make their own chart.

A popular project of many is a stitched poem, wedding, birth announcement or favorite saying. Often there is no chart to follow, but there are many alphabets designed for these customized samplers. I have included a very basic upper and lower case alphabet. The letters are all worked in back stitch not cross stitch and are quick to do.

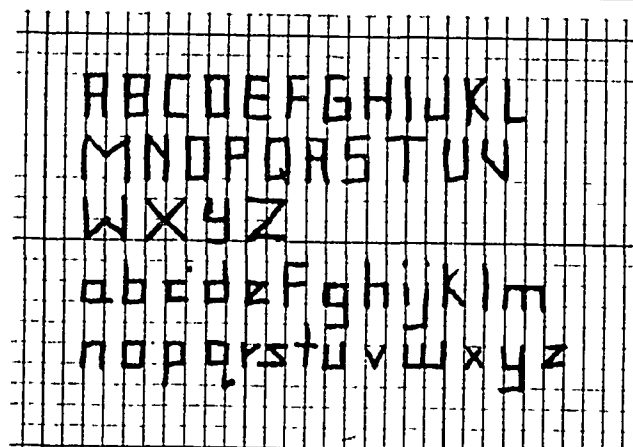

Print your sampler line by line on a piece of paper. Count the squares needed for each letter. Notice that no squares are needed for the letter "i", but two squares are needed for the "m" and "w". Write this number at the end of the line.

Count one space between each letter and two spaces between each word. Add this number to the end of the line. Total the two numbers. Calculate the other lines in the same manner. Now, will the longest line fit on your fabric? Use a large enough piece of fabric to allow for a border and 4" extra for a framing border.

NEEDLE POINTS

By Barbara Boulton

Fold the fabric into fourths and mark the center. This mark will be the middle of your center written line or, if there is an even number of lines, it will be between the two middle lines. Divide your calculated total at the end of this line by two and count that number of spaces to the left of the fabric center. Stitch this line. Working either downward or upward, allow at least three spaces between lines. It is not always necessary to center each line. You could just maintain a straight margin on the left hand side. Just make sure your longest line will fit.

Work a pretty cross stitch border. Let your imagination be your guide or use one of the many available pattern books on the market. It's not too late to make that special gift for someone!

Barbara Boulton has had her shop on Sanibel for 12 years. Previously, she taught school for 11 years. Two of her knitting books have been published and 200,000 have been sold. She urges anyone with questions to stop in Idle Hours at 2400 Palm Ridge road on the corner of Wooster Lane.

Ken Turney

Painter who reveals the world's beauty in his works

By SUZETTE BEIGEL
Islander staff writer

When Fort Myers artist Ken Turney was president of the Arts Council of Southwest Florida, he used to open up the meetings with a word of thanks to God for creating such a beautiful world.

"As we paint," Turney explains, "we're trying to convey a message to people. In a beautiful painting, we're telling people that the world is beautiful. The artist just happens to capture the beauty on canvas."

At 77, Turney has been capturing the beauty in the world for more than half a century. Painting with the Sanibel-Captiva Art League on a Thursday morning, Turney can turn a simple island sun scene into a masterpiece on canvas with brilliant corals, hazy violets and shady pastels. The historical Lighthouse turns into a rugged symbol of the island when portrayed by Turney. And the beach, with its beige sand, skyblue waters and a slick, yellow umbrella covering peaceful beachgoers, comes to life on canvas with Turney's brushstrokes.

But Turney's love for beauty goes beyond portraying it on canvas. The work he does with his hands can be seen in the variety of International Fireball and El Toro class dinghies he has built over the years. His love in using his hands to create, and using his mind to supply the creativity, can also be remembered by the many display windows he designed for retail stores and for an entire floor of offices for the Alexander Grant firm of accountants.

As a creator, Turney has seen and done it all, it seems. As a member of various art leagues, Turney has gained exposure on and off the island and residents of Sanibel and Captiva have appreciated his work for many years. Next month, islanders can enjoy his work as it will be featured at the Sanibel Public Library.

Turney came to Southwest Florida in 1978 after having visited the area several times. While on a December vacation in Periwinkle Park, Turney and his wife, Dorothy, decided to transfer their roots permanently. Turney left his wife on the sunny beaches of Florida while he traveled back to Boardman, Ohio, to sell a boating operation.

"It took me two years to sell out," Turney says of his boat business, "but I knew I wanted to be in Florida so I waited and waited."

Finally, with the business sold, Turney bought a place on McGregor Boulevard and settled in to the comfort of warm weather.

Often down at the Fort Myers Beach marina, Turney found himself admiring the artists who painted beach scenes every week.

"At the time, I said to myself, 'I used to do this,' and decided it was time to paint again," he says.

He joined the Fort Myers Beach Art Association and soon became affiliated with the San-Cap Art League and the Naples Art Association. During the next several years, he added the Lee County Alliance of the Arts, the Florida Watercolor Society and, most recently, the Barrier Island Group for the Arts.

Joining the various leagues, Turney says, gave him a chance to see different artists' works and learn more about art.

It also helped him obtain more creativity for his own work.

But, Turney explains, he's always had a knack for creating something and over the years, he's realized how everything has a place in society.

From an early age, Turney began displaying his talents in the art field. At the age of 12, he designed and had printed hand-colored Christmas cards that he sold to neighbors and friends of his church. In high school and college, he won awards for poster

From college he went on to become a display director in retail stores. "I loved working with others in creating a window," Turney says. "Our ideas would come together and we'd use certain colors to attract our audience. It was a great thrill to see customers walk by and admire your window."

At the age of 50, Turney was taken sailing for the first time. He was so taken back by the beauty of the sport, that he bought a day sailor and learned to sail and race. Sometime later, he dabbled with building boats and went on to surprise his daughter at her graduation with a boat he had built especially for her. The following year, his second daughter, who was envious of her sister's boat, requested a boat and again, Turney built another.

In the meantime, Turney continued to paint. But with other projects in the works, Turney didn't devote his entire attention to the art until he settled in Florida.

He turned to watercolor painting in 1981 after visiting Maine. "I was so taken back by the mountain scenes and brilliant colors that I knew watercolors would capture the scene best," he says.

At home in Florida, Turney turns to the beauty of the Florida sky, sea and environment for his inspiration.

"Just the other day, I was watching a sunset over Sanibel," Turney says. "It was unlike any that I've ever seen. After the sun went down, I relaxed for awhile and thought about the beauty of the scene. In my head, I chose the colors I would work with and how I would use the sequence of paints. I predetermined the painting in my head."

Turney smiles when he speaks of his own work but says the greatest compliments on his paintings come from the audience not reviewers.

"Everyone always thinks it's so complimentary to be given a review from an art critic. I believe that mass judgment is more accurate and more acceptable than the highly refined end products delivered by specialists," he says.

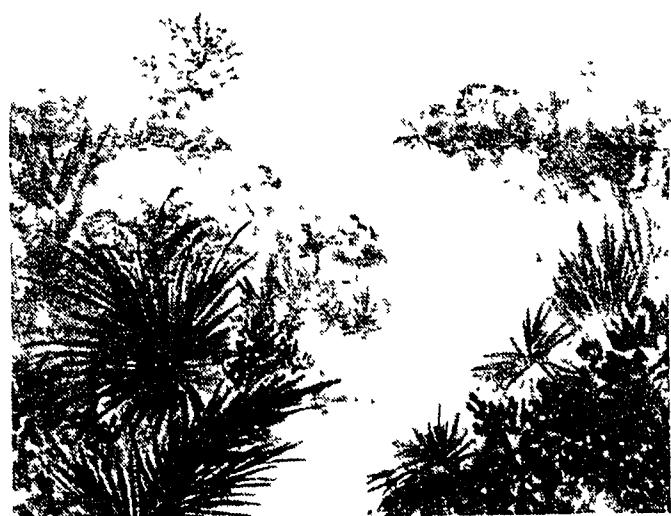

"In fact, I value my wife's opinion simply because she's an integrated part of the mass."

In reality, Turney says, his wife does provide input to each painting and of course, there are a few pieces of his work she likes better than the rest.

And he does not mind criticism, he says, because he's learned to deal with individual comments, whether good or bad.

"I know my work isn't going to appeal to everyone, but if it makes at least a few people see the beauty in the world, then I've gotten my message across," he explains.

The San-Cap Art League's October show will feature Turney's watercolor paintings at the library weekdays from 1 a.m. to 4 p.m., Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon.

Above and below: Artist Ken Turney's watercolor paintings will be on display next month at the Sanibel Public Library. His works will feature sunrises, sunsets and beach scenes.

BIG Arts presents two views of realism

This Friday, Sept. 30, will open the fall season of the Barrier Island Center for the Arts gallery with an exhibition entitled "Two Views of Realism" with works from artists Rocky Ferris and Alice Durick.

A native of Florida, Ferris grew up in Indian Rock Beach where his talents led him to drawing old houses and scenes of Florida in its prime. He went on to learn graphic artistry and advertising but was later turned on by his first art festival. He now displays his own watercolors in festivals featuring unique views of Florida, both past and present, which reflect his memories of the 50s and 60s. Currently, Ferris has been published by a New York firm which markets fine arts prints internationally.

Durick, born in Ohio, came to Florida in 1952 after having learned to paint at the age of 10. She kept up with her talents by becoming a teacher specializing in art. She went on to obtain her master's degree from the University of South Florida and became the director of the Lower Keys Arts Center. It was during time that she attended juried art shows.

Durick prefers to work from sketches, but photos at times for the basis of photo-realistic work. Her work is in many private collections and exhibits, invitations and awards are numerous.

"Two Views of Realism" opens from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday and will run through Oct. 24. Slide lectures from the two artists will be presented also. Dinner program will be featured at 8 p.m. Friday, Oct. 27, at the Barrier Island Center. For more information call 472-6686.

'Moon over Parador' has moments of charm

Directed by Paul Mazursky
Starring Richard Dreyfuss, Raul Julia and Sonia Braga
Rated PG-13 (profanity, sexual situations)
Playing at the Bell Tower West, Fort Myers

"Parador" is a hypothetical hybrid of Paraguay and Ecuador that exist only in the imagination of Paul Mazursky ("Down and Out in Beverly Hills"). It's also the banana republic setting for the new film that he produced, directed and co-scripted, "Moon Over Parador."

Richard Dreyfuss stars as Jack Naoh, a New York actor of moderate success who's just completed a film in Parador as a cut-rate Don Johnson. He bears a striking resemblance to the puppet dictator of Parador, one Alphonse Simms. (Dreyfuss' older brother was used when both actors appeared in the same frame. Part of the fun is figuring out which one is being used in these opening scenes.)

When Simms dies suddenly, Jack is called on by the Fascist chief of secret police, Roberto Straussman (Raul Julia), to take his place. Unwilling at first, Jack is ultimately persuaded by an absurd combination of flattery and the threat of violence. When Straussman snarls, "Play the part or I'll kill you," Jack replies, "You'd make a very good director."

Jack embraces the role wholeheartedly and is soon called on to give a speech to a throng of Paradorians. Encouraged by their enthusiastic applause, he ad-libs with borrowed lines from "Impossible Dream." His job is made even easier with the tutoring of Simm's former mistress, lo Madonna Mendez, played by Sonia Braga ("Kiss the Spider Woman").

AT THE MOVIES

By Mary Schultz

"Moon Over Parador" is Mazursky's ode to acting and it works best when he focuses on that. Dreyfuss as Noah is the embodiment of the egocentric performer: vain, nervous, susceptible to flattery, slightly paranoid, but always lovable and enthusiastic. Unfortunately, Mazursky gets bogged down in the fake storylines about politics and responsibility that's neither interesting nor inventive.

Raul Julia gives an annoying rather than amusing performance as the psychotic power behind the throne. He has several scenes with Dreyfuss where he bursts into maniacal laughter, and none of the work.

Dreyfuss is and has been at the top of his art in his most recent films (i.e., "Nuts" and "Tin Men"). He romps through "Moon Over Parador" as Jack Noah, and the film's modest success is due to his vivid characterization. Sonia Braga is also very good as his instructor, first in impersonation and later in intimacy. She has a steely beauty and intensity that Noah describes as a cross between "Marilyn Monroe and Eleanor Roosevelt."

"Moon Over Parador," a film about actors and acting, is occasionally awkward and silly. It's also a film of moments, and some of them are quite charming.

Mary Schultz lives on Sanibel with her husband and two school-age sons. A Michigan native, she moved to the island five years ago. She is a life-long movie fan and enjoys sharing her enthusiasm for the medium with others.

Sea trout shortage makes finding a keeper almost impossible

If you are having a difficult time finding some legal-size sea trout, you're not the only one. The rest of us are hunting hard to find a few keepers, too.

It's sad to see the decline of this fish and very few people in higher places are paying much attention to what I see as a steady decline in trout. If you've been fishing specifically for trout, you might agree.

It seems that the commercial net fishermen get the blame for just about everything from the cost of a fish dinner in a restaurant to killing sea grass. The truth of the matter is we are all gradually contributing to the loss of what used to be our most easily caught fish.

Ten years ago, on a bad day my charters could catch a dozen legal-size 12-inch trout. And in that bunch, there would be a couple of fish 15 inches or more. I had a trout mounted for a lady which went 28 inches.

Now, it's a good day to get six legal fish, and finding one over 15 inches is a rarity. It's a shame for two reasons.

One is that the once-popular trout could be caught by just about anyone, with or without a boat. Heavy fishing experience was not a factor. Just cast out a popping cork over the grass flats and sooner or later, a trout would come to it. We used to drift the same flats time after time, catching a fish or two each drift. Last time I drifted the flats for trout, we caught some pinfish, a lizard fish, several catfish and a couple of undersized trout.

ON THE WATER

By Capt. Mike Fuery

The other disturbing factor in this problem is that the net fishermen have been cut off from catching redfish, as we all have. The result was that in order to keep an income flowing, they had to look for trout to fill that redfish void.

Lots of anglers I know are quick to jump on the netters for the shortage of trout, but there are several other factors entering into the situation.

A man on the mainland who sells bait and tackle was talking with me a few days ago about the trout. He had an interesting point. He said to think about the catfish population. It hardly ever declines. The trash fish are unhooked and released in most instances. Their numbers are probably about the same as 10 years or even 100 years ago.

The competition for food between the trout and catfish has to be fierce. The loss of grass beds, the hunting grounds for trout, are continuing, while the growing catfish population gobbles up food.

There are still some fine catches of sea trout made each day, but lower your expectations when you head out, because the number of fish around the islands is declining and the average size being caught is smaller than just a few years ago.

It's starting to become obvious, at least for this area of Florida, that yet more fishing laws are in works to set catch limits and increase the minimum size for these fish. It reminds me of an old Pogo cartoon: "We've met the enemy, and they are us."

Victims of rough sea conditions now landing on beaches

The round-shaped shells suffer the most during periods of rough beachfront weather. That's why shellers have been having a bonanza finding shark's eyes, pear whelks, olives and other rotund mollusks.

These weeks of strong winds from hurricanes continue to make for excellent shelling, particularly for the ones we have not been seeing much of in the past few months.

However, shells with strong holding abilities can dig into the sandy bottom when waves build in front of the winds. Shells like the pens, the left-handed whelks, horse conchs and others with body weight and the ability to hold on usually weather bad storms.

The rounded shells lack those strong foot muscles of the whelks and conchs and often are washed ashore — to fulfil the dreams of collectors.

Olive shells are one of those easily dislodged and sent to the beaches. The living olives burrow only an inch or so below the sand. Unlike angel wings or some other clams, the olive doesn't burrow down, it lives parallel with the sand.

SHELLING TIPS

The pear whelks are favorites of collectors and some wonderful specimens are coming to the beaches, because, once again, they have no holding power in the moving sands. The operculum of this shell is relatively small. That, combined with its habit of living on top of the sand, is why so many have been found recently.

The shark eyes are members of the moon snail family. They could be the size of a golf ball, and roll about as easily. A close cousin is the natica, one of my favorites. Both are easy victims of rough sea conditions and many of each have been found in the past month.

Oddly enough, another member of the moon family, the lady's ear, digs into the sand very well. It uses a massive muscular foot to anchor itself and although any shell can be sent to death on the beach, the lady's ear hold its own on a wave-battered beach.

Good shelling this week, so please observe the two-living-shells-per-person law. There is great temptation to load up a bucket when you are lucky enough to find many living shells, but please help us keep a few for the new generation.

Capt. Mike Fuery has been showing residents and visitors alike the ins and outs of shell collecting since 1976. For information on his charters call 472-3459.

Combatting your diet saboteurs can prevent diet relapse

QUESTION

It never fails! As soon as I seemingly begin to control my weight, something manages to distract me and I fail again. What can I do?

ANSWER

OK, you've finally done it! You've achieved your ideal weight through regular exercise and consistent healthy eating habits. Your combined efforts have rewarded you with personal weight triumph and satisfaction. But then it happens! For one reason or another something or someone distracts you from continued success. Your personal weight control program becomes sabotaged and the pounds begin to pile up. Don't despair and give up! Learn to combat diet relapse and once again take control of your weight.

To combat diet relapse, recognizing several key factors and dealing with them effectively will restore your successful weight control program. First, know your enemy. Being aware of situations which distract or causes you to lose sight of weight control goals is the first step in winning your battle. Ask yourself, "Is it that stressful situation I keep getting myself into?" Or maybe the in-laws visitations. Or even that triple-layered chocolate cake in the freezer waiting to be defrosted. Whatever the case, be quick to recognize these frequent situations that can sometimes affect your consistent weight control program.

ON FITNESS

By

Once you have recognized these saboteurs, prepare a plan of action to defeat them before they have a chance to undermine your weight control goals. Step in front of your mirror and play out the situation. Begin your script by saying "I'll fill up on fresh vegetables at home before I go out to the party." Then when the host offers you a piece of her famous cheesecake, simply say, "The cheesecake looks wonderful as usual, but I'll have to take a raincheck this time." End your script by remembering that the nature of temptation is that it is hard to resist. But not impossible.

Occasionally, even the best-written script can fail to curb your impulse to give in. If this happens, simply retreat. If you can't resist the temptation, remind yourself. For example, leave the buffet if it's too hard to resist. Take a brisk walk or offer to clear the dishes rather than clear the dessert plate. If the temptation to stop off at your favorite bakery for pastries is great, simply take another route home. Remember, you're doing something good for yourself when you decide to control your weight, so make your weight control plan as easy on yourself as possible.

Finally, realize that a momentary temptation most likely not defeat your forces against diet relapse. And if it does, going off your weight control plan temporarily is not the end of the world. Be forgiving to yourself and pick up and start where you left off. Health and fitness instructor Troy de Mond is a known aerobic instructor who does consulting for the Aerobics and Fitness Association of America.

Three-diamond bid leads to wild leap

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD
and FRANK STEWART

Some players take an opposing preempt as a personal insult. Today's South let West's three-diamond bid goad him into a wild leap to slam.

Declarer won the first trick with the king of diamonds and led the king of hearts. East won and returned the jack of hearts to South's queen.

South then led a club to the ace and finessed with the jack of clubs. When West showed out, the slam was doomed. Declarer salvaged 11 tricks only with complex play, ending with a heart-club squeeze against East.

SILLY OR OBVIOUS

"Who would finesse with the nine of clubs?" South pleaded. "I'd look silly if I lost to the doubleton ten."

"Maybe so," North agreed, "but in that case, you could never make the contract."

To take 12 tricks, South must find the six missing spades dividing 3-3. West has shown two hearts and probably has seven diamonds for his preempt. If West has three spades, he can have only one club.

So the finesse with the nine of clubs is the "obvious" play.

DAILY QUESTION

You hold: ♠ 10 8 6 ♥ 8 6 ♦ Q J 10 9 8 6 3 ♣

POINT COUNT

7. Partner opens one club, and the next player passes. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid three diamonds. If partner has a minimum hand, the opponents can probably make game in a major; and your jump will crowd their bidding. If partner has a fair hand, you may make your contract; if he has a good hand, he'll raise you to game. (Some tournament experts use this kind of jump to show a singleton or void. If that's your partnership agreement, bid only one diamond.)

Jimmy Buffet & Danny Morgan play together during Danny's Summer Tour

Danny Morgan

A balladeer from Cincinnati, Danny Morgan fell in love with Sanibel and Captiva and began writing the romantic, island beat ballads for which he is famous. Songs like, "Oh! Captiva" and "Farewell Casa Ybel" have become local island favorites and are part of the 200-song repertoire (60 original compositions) of Danny Morgan and his band. Danny will be playing songs from his new album, "Beachlife."

Dick Wedley wins Pigskin Picks contest after smashing comeback

A quick phone call to the home of Dick Wedley early Monday morning, a double check with the subscriptions manager and Pigskin Picks recipient, Heather, proved that yes, Wedley's chit was delivered before the 5 p.m. deadline on Friday.

Phones began ringing, and faceless voices started demanding wisdom immediately. But where was the real story? Yes, the world must know about Dick Wedley's smashing comeback from ignominy, about the dark pre-dawn hours after the last NFL game ended and the results screamed out for the right interpretation...but how?

Wedley's winning tally found it's way into the story long after the first was finished. But then Wedley's turned up. His near perfect ticket mocked the conventional wisdom and locked him in as this week's guru of the Pigskin Picks.

Congratulations, Dick Wedley, on your amazing, out-of-nowhere victory. Enjoy your dinner at The Dunes.

Circle the team you think will win each game. For Game of the Week, also include your guess of the points that will be scored in the game.
