reached on causeway County to amend Councilmember to interlocal agreement

In what City Attorney Doug Wyckoff called a "tentative resolution" to the city's dispute with Lee County, county attorneys have agreed to amend an interlocal agreement in a way that provides a commitment to two-lane roads on causeway bridges. Wyckoff and Interim City Manager Sam Ackley met with county representatives last week to hash out recent problems arising from the county's submittal of plans to the U.S. Coast Guard to rebuild portions of the causeway. At issue are a 1987 interlocal agreement between Sanibel and the county and the road widths contained in the county plans.

By Pete Bishop News editor

The existing interlocal agreement supports a high-span, four lane bridge, although both the county and the city agree the bridge system's present configuration is more desirable. Plans to rebuild the middle bridge and possibly the bridge closest to Sanibel place road width at 40 feet, rather than 38 feet as recommended by the Sanibel Causeway Study Group.

propose referendum to buy Causeway By Pete Bishop News editor

Although Lee County attorneys and the city of Sanibel have reached tentative agreement concerning two-lane roadways on causeway bridges, City Councilmember Steve Brown said Tuesday he will propose a referendum asking voters to authorize funds to study a purchase of the bridge system. Brown will present the referendum to council at the Sept. 4 council meeting.

Sanibel's Recreation needs under consideration by city

By Pete Bishop News editor

Although the Sanibel City Council has decided to postpone appointing members to the newly formed Sanibel Recreation Committee until the Sept. 4 meeting, new committee members may have their hands full soon after they are named.

The council decided Tuesday to postpone appointments after Mayor Nola Theiss said she had not been able to read all of the applications and Councilmember Steve Brown said that all of the applications were not included in the packet council members

Although the committee members were not appointed, their numbers have already increased. Councilmember Judy Workman suggested the council name more than the agreed-upon seven members because the quality of applicants is so impressive.

Brown agreed. "It's a very important committee and I think we could even go up to 13 (members)."

The council agreed to set the number of committee members at the Sept. 4 meeting as well.

Once the committee gets started, it may have to help tackle the problem of upgrading city recre ation facilities without much help from Lee County or the Lee County School Board. Interim City Manager Sam Ackley reported Tuesday that both the school board and the county parks and department have recreation declined to help the city finance a master plan of the city's recreation facilities and needs. Although both entities would like to participate, Ackley said, he told representatives from the two entities they would have to help with money issues if they wanted to contribute.

Even without outside support, Sanibel Recreation Director Helene Phillips told council members an request for proposal concerning the master plan was advertised during the past month, and 16

Injured sea turtles now have a home for long-term care onisland with the state's recent approval of the Clinic for Rehabilitation of (CROW) on Sanibel.

A required inspection of the three tanks installed and operating at the center for well over a month now was rescheduled several times by the state before two inspectors showed up the last week of July.

"We talked about the turtle network, how rescue was going to work and how we were going to receive furtles from other counties that we don't currently work with," said Anita Pinder, operations manager at CROW.

"They said they liked it and that it looked wonderful and made a couple of minor suggestions, but nothing hinged on whether we got the permit or

Sanibel's secret war Australian pines?

By Pete Bishop News editor

The recent poisoning and removal of Australian pine trees along Periwinkle Way has caused some citizens to wonder whether someone is secretly trying to eradicate the exotic species without informing the public.

informing the public.

City council members suggested Tuesday a rash of pine tree destruction in recent years is just a series of accidents, however, and that contractors working on the island should be better informed concerning the species' status on the island.

About a dozen pines were killed last month when a contractor working for the city applied herbicide to the trees by mistake. The destruction and removal of the trees might be part of an ongoing pattern, Planning Commissioner Dick Downes told the council during Tuesday's meeting. Downes had also questioned the destruction at a planning commission meeting last week.

again my concern, about the quote, accidental, removal of pines, that always is done on the weekends," Downes said Tuesday.

Downes said that since he revealed his concern at the board meeting, he has received several phone calls from citizens who are either convinced or have knowledge that there is a conspiracy to eradicate the species from the island.

Downes said the pattern of removal includes large trees being removed near Casa Mariposa and Colonial Bank. The trees are protected by ordinance, Downes said, but the repeated destruction which seems to always happen during the weekends are cause for suspicion.

"It is senseless destruction of trees that probably took 70 or 80 years to grow," said Downes.

Interim City Manager Sam Ackley said he has received several phone calls from concerned citizens as well, but that the recent poisonings were accidents that "outraged" the city. He added that four or five Australian pines will be removed from conservation lands in the next 30 days, however, as is required by city ordinance.

Council members indicated the problem might be a lack of communication between the city and contractors working on the island.

pines," said Mayor Nola Theiss. "There may be a conspiracy of ignorance on the part of contractors."

Councilmember Steve Brown suggested Natural Resources Director Rob Loflin review the contractors the city has hired for eradication and other large projects, making sure they understand that many of the island's pines are protected.

Councilmember Judy Workman said the vegetation course conducted by the Sanibel Vegetation Committee would be a good place to educate contractors who work on the island. Vegetation contractors are required to take the course before they work on Sanibel, but Workman reported that the course does not include information about protected Australian pines.

"There's something wrong with the process, and I don't know what that process is," said Councilmember Marty Harrity. "It's a shame we have to be reactive in a situation where we've lost some beautiful trees. Whatever the process is we

Sanibel to hire hearing examiner

The Sanibel City Council approved an agreement Tuesday to hire a Fort Myers lawyer who will serve as the city's hearing examiner. According to the agreement, Anthony J. Gargano will be paid $160 per hour and the city will not be responsible for any travel expenses. The contract is for one year and includes a 60-day termination without cause clause.

City Attorney Doug Wyckoff, who negotiated the agreement, told the council that Gargano has over twenty years experience in land use law plus extensive code enforcement experience, including work as hearing examiner for the county property appraiser.

At Wyckoff's suggestion, the city terminated an agreement with the Lee County Hearing Examiner's office in June. Wyckoff stated that the county office produced inconsistent results and was expensive.

Shared Vision Town meeting set for Dec. 12

Mayor Nola Theiss announced Tuesday that a Shared Vision Town Meeting has been scheduled for Dec. 12.

The mayor and representatives from Shared Vision committees met recently to schedule the town meeting and talk about the progress each committee has made. According to Theiss, several committees have been meeting regularly since being formed last Spring and have made excellent progress, while other groups have met less frequently because of the slower summer season. Committees will report on their goals and progress during the meeting in December.

firms have asked for reports on the project's full scope.

Phillips and a panel of city department heads will select a short list of proposals for the council to consider, once proposals arrive, according to Phillips. As for response from the school board and county, Phillips said, "My phone hasn't been ringing off the hook."

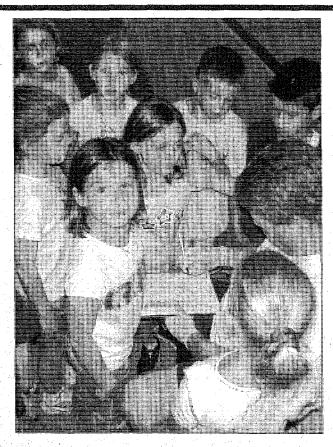

At the same time preliminary steps for the master master plan are being taken, Phillips has been studying the feasibility of a skate park on Sanibel. Council members requested the study earlier this summer.

In the report, Phillips included six options to consider if council members decide to authorize a park, including partnering with a private firm to operate the park, using existing city land to build a new structure, buying land for the park, building the park on school property and building the park on public tennis courts located at the school. The report also outlines user fees that could be administered and the pros and cons of each option.

Estimated building costs in the report range from $100,000 if the park is built on the existing tennis courts to $251,000 for a facility in another location. Insurance costs under most of the options will include a $11,500 yearly premium, according to the report. The total operating budget would be just over $50,000 if the park is built on school property and about $85,000 if built at another location. The city would have to get the school board's approval to build on school property.

If the city owns and operates the park without a partner, Phillips' report estimates it should bring in between $12,000 and $13,000 annually.

Planning directed to solve 'big' house problem

Council decides on department study

By Pete Bishop News editor

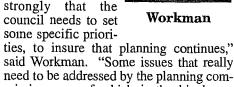

At the request of the Sanibel Planning Commission, city council members decided Tuesday to direct planning department staff to begin work on solving the big house problem. The council also decided a study of the Sanibel Planning Department's resources and efficiency is also needed.

The planning commission made the request after a discussion during last week's board meeting, in which commissioners said they lacked direction and feedback concerning several long-range planning projects that need attention. Board members also noted that the planning department is understaffed and cannot work on such projects without slowing down the city's ability to process permit

During a review of budget goals Tuesday, Councilmember

Workman, the council's liaison to the board, brought the commission's request to the council's attention.

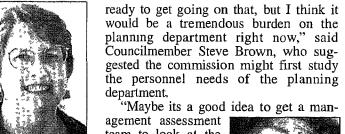

"The planning commission feels strongly that the issue, should be decided today.' Other council members agreed that big houses should be a priority, but whether the planning department staff has the resources to get the job done, and whether the department is using its resources as efficiently as possible, also evaluate the role of the planning commission. "Maybe we need to re-evaluate the planning commission's role at this stage of the game," he said, pointing out that as the island approaches buildout, different planning problems might create the need for an adjustment in the board's focus. "Instead of taking specific items at this stage of the game we should look at the big picture."

"It's my observation that the planning commission has plenty of work to do but there are no staff resources available," said Workman. "The planning commission is hesitant to do more because no action is taken at this level. We need specific direction and we need to inform staff that planning is to occur. The most important thing we do in this city is plan and as far as I can tell we aren't doing that right now."

Ackley said that he would direct the department to work on the big house issue, but pointed out that it is difficult to know whether the department operates as efficiently as possible. Because Sanibel codes are unique, he said, there are no benchmarks in the state for the department to measure itself against.

He told the council he would assign a priority to big houses for the department, begin steps toward conducting a management assessment of the planning department, and schedule a joint workshop for sometime in October.

Ackley, Phillips report on SPD assessment

By Pete Bishop News editor

A report to city council on a draft assessment of the Sanibel Police Department is just the first step in a months-long process toward a more organized and disciplined department, Interim City Manager Sam Ackley told council members Tuesday.

"It's a new emphasis," said Ackley, "to bring this department to a new level of esprit de corps and discipline that, I wouldn't say hasn't been present, but hasn't been evident."

The management assessment is being conducted by Jones, Fletcher and Associates of Jensen Beach. According to Ackley, he first became concerned about the police department when he took the interim city manager job in April and heard negative comments about the department. Although he did not base a decision to conduct the study on those comments, he said that personnel files revealed questionable practices concerning the evaluation of department officers.

There were some personnel files I didn't like, employee reviews with satisfactories straight through," Ackley said. "Some with questionable things, some inconsistent with (the employee) still working here.

"Lew needed help and actually to his credit he suggested management assess-

Phillips will need the support of council as the department makes changes that could cause additional "emotional erosion" among police officers and other department staff, Ackley said. But the assessment will allow the city to define in qualitative terms the department's needs and efficiency.

'The chief is capable, but it is process and it is work," said Ackley. "The department and troops want to do it, they want to be the best.

Phillips outlined the draft report for the council. Stating that there were "no issues" uncovered and describing report as a "short draft," Phillips said the department was already aware of several issues outlined in the assess-

"Some things are already done, some we're working on, and some just need to be formalized," said Phillips. Phillips said the consultants' suggestion to implement a written directive system is an example of an issue he was already aware of, while a suggestion to use crime analysis processes such as pin maps are already being practiced.

We use pin maps and graphic systems, they just didn't have the opportuni-ty to see," said Phillips, noting that pin maps were used to catch the dinner-set

Still, Phillips said, "as you look at the process you begin thinking about the Ackley said that one change the consultants may suggest is the department's use of 12-hour on, 12-hour off shifts, which could cause some discontent. The department also needs to to be more active with other agencies, according to Ackley, such as the Florida Marine Patrol, so those agencies will provide more services to Sanibel.

"Ask, lobby, incentivize," said Ackley. "We already do a lot for environmental agencies, and need to remind them of that

Ackley said the study will also help the city evaluate whether it gets its money's worth for the services the department provides. Responding to any

Wyckoff said the city could still pursue the property owners, but any cases concerning the property owners would appear before Judge McIver and likely result in decisions unfavorable to the city.

"The only reason to do that would be to take it up on appeal," said Wyckoff, noting that appeal is a lengthy, expensive process.

Councilmember Dick Walsh suggested the city should drop any possible past violations altogether, as long as the property owners are no longer renting for less than four weeks.

and begin obeying the law," Walsh said. "If we could, then we'd give them amnesty. We've now achieved that . . . Are we ready to put this thing to bed and not worry about the past, but put the hammer and tongs to those who keep violating?"

"I agree," said Councilmember Steve Brown. "There's no point going after people who rented through those agencies. They should be covered in the amnesty."

Wyckoff told the council he will solicit client lists from the agencies so the city can learn which homeowners are covered. "It's purely a data collection effort," he

"I'm not going along with any of this now," said Brown of the county's willingness to amend an interlocal agreement. "The only thing I'm going to be a bulldog about is buying the causeway — it's the only way to put this behind us."

Noting that plans to rebuild the middle causeway bridge, and possibly the bridge closest to Sanibel, still contain 40-foot loadways that could accommodate four lanes in the future, Brown said the city and the Sanibel Causeway Study Group have made too many compromises for the county.

"Even as a citizen of Sanibel I feel like I've been led astray," said Brown. "We've been smooth-talked, schmoozed, led astray by the county commission... The only peace of mind the citizens of Sanibel are going to have is to buy the causeway."

"I agree with that," said Councilmember Judy Workman. "No matter how they stripe it, it's going to be used by tourists as four lanes."

Interim City Manager Sam Ackley told council members preliminary costs involved in studying a purchase would be a complicated and expensive proposition. Causeway financing is tied up with bonds issued for other county bridges. Ackley estimated that hiring experts who could untangle the bonds and study the purchase could cost the city more than $100,000.

Councilmember Dick Walsh and Mayor Nola Theiss expressed reservations concerning a referendum and the costs the city would incur if voters authorize the

"My concern is a referendum without a price tag," said Theiss, pointing out that most citizens would like to buy the causeway but a study might be wasted money if the county is unwilling to sell.

Walsh said the city has attained most of its goals concerning the causeway's future, noting that current plans include rehabilitation of the drawbridge and a low span structure. The amended interlocal agreement will give the city a legal foothold in case changes to causeway roads result in a lawsuit, he added.

"I thought we'd achieved a great deal and achieved generally what the citizens of this community wanted," said Walsh. "I'm not in favor of spending $100,000 to $250,000 until we get assurance and a commitment that they'll sell and the bonds can be defeased . . . and get consent from federal and state governments (which might be needed) because of the varying property ownership."

"The nice thing about a referendum is it goes to the people," said Brown. "There's no question we have a willing buyer."

causeway bridges if the roads are built with 40-foot widths. Commissioners refused, however, opting instead to create an ordinance restricting the road to two lanes.

After that meeting, council members asked the county to participate in conflict resolution, outlined in Florida Statute 164 Last Thursday's meeting was the first step in a process that also provides for joint meetings between commissioners and council members plus mediation if initial meetings do not result in agreement.

"We left with a tentative resolution," Wyckoff said Tuesday of the first meeting. Wyckoff reported that the interlocal agreement will be changed to reflect two travel lanes on the road plus two breakdown lanes. The breakdown lanes will also be accessible to bicyclists.

"They're going to take the first crack at drafting it up," Wyckoff said. "It's not as specific as some people would like it to be, but it commits to two travel lanes... They would not agree to veto power, and I don't think they legally can."

During the conflict resolution meeting, County Attorney Jim Yaeger and Assistant County Attorney David Owen both stressed that giving Sanibel veto power over causeway issues would not be possible.

"We cannot and will not recommend to the board to release, modify or step back from its plenary right to develop the county's transportation system," said Owen. "Lane width, veto power, plenary rights anything to do with those is not going to happen."

Ackley told the county representatives Sanibel simply needed assurances the roadways would never be four-laned, however, and the city could come to an agreement without obtaining veto power. "We're looking for a fail-safe, a trigger, that will lend the county some credibility to the citizens of Sanibel," said Ackley, noting that council members felt misled after the June 26 board meeting.

"Perhaps we can do something with the language (in the interlocal agreement) benign enough for the county but that will make the city confident of the intent of the county. The city council and the people of Sanibel have a fundamental trust issue with the board of county commissioners."

"Sambel's request to the county, on its face, for two traffic lanes with two breakdown lanes, can be recommended to the board," said Owen. "Doing much more puts us in a morass where we don't want to go."

"If we change the interlocal we want it to solve all our disputes," said Yaeger "We don't want to go to the board, have them accept it and then find out there are other issues."

Ackley told the county representatives the city is mostly in agreement with current plans for the causeway, however, "with some refinements." Yaeger then said the county could delete language in the agreement depicting a high-span, fourlane causeway, and add language supporting two lane roadways.

"It was easy to come to common ground and we did," Ackley told city council Tuesday, attributing much of the controversy to a lack of communication between the city and the county.

"The county attorney was concerned that if we put details in (the interlocal agreement) and then get one change during the permitting phase, he'd have to go back and change the interlocal agreement. Then we'd have big problems," Ackley said.

The International Coastal Cleanup is scheduled annually for the third Saturday ın Septembei — this year, Sept. 15, at 8 a.m. sharp! The Sanıbel-Captıva Conservation Foundation is coordinating the cleanup with the help of The Ocean Conservancy and five local sponsors — Wildside Adventures/Captiva Kayak Company, Sanibel Inn/Song of the Sea, Jensen's Twin Palm Resort & Marina, West Wind Inn and Earthgraphics. Thanks to the local sponsors, all volunteers will receive a free T-shirt.

The mission of the International Coastal Cleanup is

- To remove debris from the shorelines, waterways, and beaches of the world's lakes, rivers, and the ocean;
- To collect valuable information on the amount and types of debris;

- To educate people on the issue of marine debris; and
- To use the information collected from the cleanup to effect positive change — on all levels, from the individual to the international — to reduce marine debris and enhance marine conservation.

Local volunteers join nearly one million people all over the world helping to tackle the problem of marine debris. Last year, worldwide cleanup volunteers scoured 21,894 miles of beaches, oceans, and waterways collecting over 13.5 million pounds of trash — the world's largestever marine trash haul.

not," she said. "We were all standing there with our mouths open, but they said we would be hearing from them soon.'

The final word came in last week's mail 'We don't have turtles, but the permit did come," said Pinder of that short but sweet inspection.

The state permit, which requires an annual report to the state for renewal, allows the clinic to keep injured or diseased sea turtles for long-term care instead of transferring them to other accredited care centers. Currently two sea turtle centers serve Southwest Florida out of Miami and Sarasota CROW's permit is good until January 2002.

"We'll take turtles any time someone gives us one, but we don't go out and actively solicit them," Pinder said, "and the state didn't say they had turtles they needed to transfer here at this moment, although we were expecting them to do that."

This year's cases of ailing turtles is way down, at least in Southwest Florida.

'This year is nothing compared to last year's cold stun," said Pinder, who reports only two Kemp's Ridleys brought to the center two weekends in a row last month with minor hook injuries.

The hooks were removed and the turtles returned to the beach they were found for release with no hold or transfer," she said.

CROW's annual veterinary intern, Di. Cheryl Hoggard, and sea turtle technician, Kristie Horn, stand ready to head up the rehab program at the hospital. The $30,000 project put in place an outdoor pavilion with three 900-gallon tanks equipped with independent filter, heater and chiller sys-

CROW made it a condition of its permit application not to accept any turtle greater than 200 pounds based on its smaller tank sizes. Loggerheads can amass up to 1,000

The sea turtle program, which is now under way, is in need of volunteers.

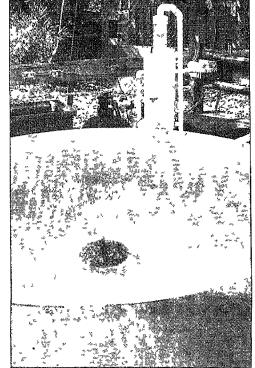

"We are very dependent on volunte make this facility work, and it won't be any different for the sea turtles," said P.J. Deitschel, staff veterinarian. Sea turtle rehab is expected to run $10,000 a year in maintenance, diagnostic treatment and medical costs.

Horseshoe crab numbers down

Horseshoe crabs are an important link in the food chain on the Mid-Atlantic shore, but their numbers have been declining. A new multi-state agreement to limit commercial harvest has one important dissenter: the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The plan, devised by the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission (ASMFC), a regional agency with federal powers, mandates a 25 percent cut in horseshoe ciab fishing. It was due to take effect last year. Maryland, Delaware and New Jersey have agreed But Virginia has balked, claiming economic hardship and maintaining the restrictions are based on bad science and are politically motivated

The U.S. Secretary of Commerce found the state out of compliance and threatened to intervene At the last minute, Virginia relented, but not before persuading the ASMFC to approve transfer quotas, allowing one state to fall short of the reduction rate if another state surpasses it. Says Perry Plumart, director of government relations for the National Audubon Society, "If you allow one state to do that, you are undercutting the other states' conservation measures. No good can come from it."

Mad tarmers

Farmers who tend the alfalfa and potato fields in Klamath Falls, Oregon are mad. Last month, on three separate occasions, they descended on the town's federally owned irrigation system to force open canals that support 240,000 acres of farmland along the Oregon-California border.

Tensions had been building since April 7, when the Bureau of Reclamation shut the canal gates leading from Upper Klamath Lake which irrigates the farms.

Eco-notes By Bob Slayton

The bureau ruled that lake water levels must be maintained to protect suckerfish and coho salmon.

The plight of the embattled farmers, cut off from vital water despite a record drought, has become a rallying cry for groups that seek to amend the Endangered Species Act. Several farmers have asked the Interior Department to convene a federal panel to overrule the Act. Nicknamed the God Squad" because it can weigh economics against a species' survival, the panel is made up of seven Cabinet-level officials. Upper Klamath Lake and the Klamath River are the lifeblood not only of the farmers, but also thousands of fish and waterfowl. The lake holds the largest native wild trout in the world, some approaching 20 pounds, and the area is the second largest winter nesting ground for bald eagles.

Motion defeated

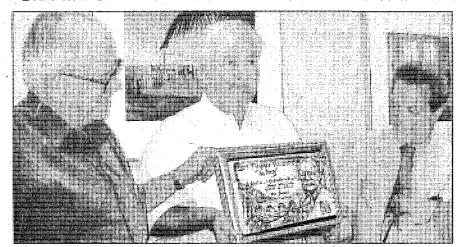

On July 12, the Senate rejected 52-48 an attempt by Oregon Senator Gordon Smith to exempt Klamath Basin irrigators from compliance with the Endangered Act. Two Republicans (Fitzgerald-IL and Specter-PA) and one Independent (Jeffords-VT) joined 49 Democrats to defeat the motion.

CHAMBER WEBSITE 'NETS' AWARD

Smiles abound as San-Cap Chamber of Commerce officials celebrate the 2000 Henry Flagler Award for Web Success they received last week in Boca Raton. Executive Director Keith Trowbridge, Realtor and former chair of the Chamber's Internet committee David Schuldenfrei, and Bob Lade, current chair and Chamber Webmerster accepted the award for the Chamber. Chamber Webmaster, accepted the award for the Chamber.

Local website awarded by conference

Sanibel-Captiva Chamber of Commerce was awarded this week with the 2000 Flagler Award for "Web Success." The award was bestowed by VISIT FLORIDA, the state's tourism promotion agency, at the Governor's Conference on Tourism where the site won First Place in the category of "Web Success: Sites developed for trade, consumer or media use." Applicants in this category were required to demonstrate successful implementation of web strategies in terms of impact and results on their target market. The Chamber's application noted that "An increasing number of educated, high-income travelers make decisions from web site research" and, with that in mind the Chamber mounted a major web site revamp in 1999 "to target a select audience of upscale and sophisticated visitors."

The award is named after Henry Flagler, an early Florida visionary who built railroads, numerous hotels and, essentially, created the concept tourism in the state of Florida. The program is designed to recognize "those whose skill, commitment, resourcefulness, imagination, creativity and innovative spirit contribute to the success of Florida's tourism industry."

Janet Reno welcomes youth to public service

Editor's note: NBC-2 rebroadcasts this year's Do the Right Thing ceremony at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 1.

By Dawn deBoer Staff writer

Six law enforcement agencies in Southwest Florida, from Sanibel to Fort Myers, Cape Coral and Punta Gorda police departments to the Lee and Collier County sheriff's offices, honored 10 young people Saturday for having made some right decisions at difficult times and for all the right reasons at the Sixth Annual Do the Right Thing Regional Awards ceremony at Harborside Convention Hall in Fort Officer Kurt Schulte, who's headed up the Do the Right Thing chapter at the Sanibel Police Department since 1997, said the recognition is a tradition founded in the courage of a youth who, 12 years ago in Miami, found a handgun and made the decision to turn it in to the police.

Former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno spoke directly to that mindful presence and the 10 youths recognized this year in Southwest Florida.

"Your bravery, your kindness, your giving, your caring, I thank you for shining the light," said Reno. "Public service has been one of the most rewarding experiences I have had. I don't like to charge people for protecting their rights. I'd rather serve in some capacity to try and enforce the rights," she said.

Reno spoke of her childhood growing up in a family with four siblings and limited resources in a small, wooden house —

Sanibel PD looking to recognize island youth

The Sanibel Police Department is looking for better ways of reaching youth to recognize acts of courage and community involvement. Currently, nominations are made through teachers and parents, but any community resident or even fellow students can make their observations of a youth's selflessness known. Officer Kurt Schulte, who oversees the program, said awareness of the program and who to contact is all many residents need to acknowledge a youth in the neighborhood or church group who's taken the initiative for the betterment of community in an act of public service or courage.

"We need more community involvement and support," said Schulte, who coordinates the program with Police Chief Phillips. Janet Reno: Decision on bid for governor in September

By Dawn deBoer Staff writer

Former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno hit a double-whammy Saturday at a Do the Right Thing gathering for young people and community leaders by walking on a nonpolitical stage and walking off without a word on her bid for the governorship of Florida.

In an earlier meeting with the press, minutes before she entered Harborside Convention Hall as the keynote speaker, Reno said that announcement would come in September and possibly as early as Labor Day weekend. But her acceptance to speak to Southwest Florida youth on the necessity to Do the Right Thing provoked controversy and threats of a protest outside the doors of the convention center, according to an inside report from the event's primetime sponsor, NBC-2.

Reno, the first keynote speaker at the event in three years, was invited after Gov. Jeb Bush declined. Trisha Routte, "Do the Right Thing" spokesperson for Lee County Sheriff's Department, said Reno's involvement with the program goes back 10 years before her departure for federal office.

"Born and raised in Miami, Janet Reno knew Cape Coral Chief Arnold Gibbs from her time with the Dade County state attorney's office," she said. Gibbs helped initiate the program 12 years ago in Miami after a youth turned over to the police a found handgun.

Reno, who chose not to speak with the media during the event, did take questions before entering the convention hall on her return to Florida and her motivations to run for governor.

"It's wonderful to be back home, to walk in the grass and with barefeet," Reno said of coming home after leaving political office and "being beaten around the ears for eight years," she said.

In a broad look at Florida, she said, "I want to do everything I can to protect the environment, to preserve the beaches and rivers."

Whether Floridians will want her for their next governor, Reno, a Democrat, said, "I think what the people in Florida want is a person who can make decisions, stand by them and be accountable for them. It's a simple matter of values and nothing more."

Of early popularity polls, she said, "I am sure there are negatives, but I let the voters decide."

Health-wise, she feels fine, she said. "You can feel fine and have Parkinson's disease. Try the Attorney General's office for five years," Reno said, noting what one of the oldest signers of the constitution said. "In the words of Samuel Hopkins:

Dawn daRoor

Former U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno spoke with the press Saturday before speaking at the Sixth Annual Do the Right Thing ceremony in Fort Myers.

'My hand may tremble, but my heart does not."

Reno was diagnosed with Parkinson's in 1995 during her first term as the first woman attorney general of the United States. She was reappointed in 1997 to serve through Clinton's second term in office.

Reno says this point-blank while still dealing with responses and reactions to the Branch Davidian siege in Waco, Texas, and, more recently, the return of Elian Gonzalez to his father in Cuba. In letters received from around the country, she refers to one from a young person who wrote of the Elian affair, "I don't agree with your decision, but I think it is probably for the best that you did it," Reno quoted.

"When young people came to Washington, I'd try to speak to classes as often as possible and heard a lot about that decision — not so much from young people who were confused (by the decision) but interested in my perspective and the process that I used to reach it," she said. "It's important to hold people accountable and to involve the American people in the process."

Coming out of federal office, Reno said, "The one thing I have learned is how important it is to build partnerships — federal, state and local. Americans want those who can discuss the issues in straightforward ways and, whether Democrat or Republican, we ought to run our democracy in a civil, respectable way."

In direct response to questions, Reno also touched on renewing priorities for Florida in elderly care and early childhood education programs, while eyeing domestic violence prevention, competitive salaries for teachers and smaller classes as areas of concern.

RENO welcomes youth to public service From page 6

ing, "I am going to learn," Reno said.
"One of the most important lessons I learned as a youngster. She and I lived in that house until she died, and that house was a symbol to me that you can do anything you really want to do and be anything you really want to be, if it's the right thing to do and if you put your mind to it."

Not unused to questions directed to her in the wake of Waco and Elian Gonzales while visiting classrooms in the Washington political arena, Reno did not shy away from the essence of tough calls—"Doing the right thing is easy, It's trying to figure out what's right that's more difficult," she said in the words of former president, Harry S. Truman.

"So often I have found you've got to figure out what's right," Reno said. "After eight years in Washington, I have realized again and again and again that what you've got to do is prepare yourself as much as possible for the decisions you've got to make, then make your decision knowing you've tried your best to be prepared. Don't be afraid to make decisions. Indecision will only lead us further down the road to apathy and indifference to democracy."

In essence, she said, "You feel much better about yourself if you feel like you tried to do the right thing."

This year's 10 youth honored for doing the right thing are Clifford Masson and Ryan Fordiant, both 7; Tyler Cifaldi, 8; Maryanne Bous-fiha, 9; Joe Raney, 10; Samantha Hickey, 11; and high schoolers Lindsey Newell, Chris Stanley, Sarah Dixon and David Crowl.

What to do with Fido when hurricane comes

Now that we're in the most active portion of the hurricane season, a lot of us are making plans about what to do if we're forced to evacuate — figuring out where we'll stay and putting together an emergency supply kit. But what about our four-legged family members?

Since shelters don't accept pets, I decided to leash the resources of the Internet for some advice. Here are three sites I found worthwhile.

Plans for Your Pets — This brief guide was accessed via <tampa, about.com/>. "Make arrangements in advance with your kennel, friends who live on higher ground, etc. to watch your pet if you plan to utilize a shelter. Do not leave your pet home alone unless there simply is no other alternative.

"Be sure to include items and foodstuffs for your pets in your hurricane survival kit. Don't forget the basics like leashes and litter boxes either. Make sure you place vaccination records in with other vital papers to be taken with you, in addition to a recent photo of the pet for identification purposes.

"If you are evacuating with your pet, place your evacuation plans and a phone number in a plastic bag folded small and securely attached to your pets tags.

"If you absolutely must leave your pets behind, separate dogs and cats even if they get along normally. Make sure they are kept in a safe room with minimal chance of encountering flying debris, flooding, etc. Leave plenty of water, food, blankets and familiar toys with the pets. Replace any choke collars with vinyl or braided collars."

■ Are Your Pets Prepared? — This site, accessed via <www.geocities.com/Heartland/>, was the best I found on the subject. Here are some snippets:

Make a pet emergency kit, which should include a carrier or portable kennel for each pet; ownership, registration, photos, health papers; a leash and properly fitted collars/harness to restrain each pet; non-spill food and water dishes;

Toys, blankets and special comfort items; cleanser and disinfectant to properly handle wastes; newspapers, litter, scooper, plastic bags for wastes.

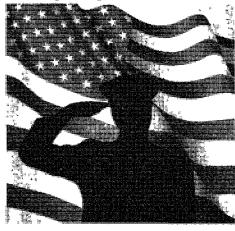

Prepare a pet first-aid kit, to include: hemostat or tweezers; thermometer (normal temp in dogs and cats is 101 to 102 degrees F.). A low temperature can indicate a very sick animal or hypothermia. In either case it is very important to warm the animal. A high temp can indicate infection or hyperthermia. Temps above 106 or 107 degrees can cause brain damage. Scissors to cut tape and to clip hair around wounds; gauze pads and a roll of gauze to clean, cover and cushion injuries. The rolled gauze can be used for tourniquet or muzzle; adhesive tape; iodine prep solution for cleansing wounds or burns; alcohol prep pads to clean scissors, tweezers and hands (Do not use on wounds); triple antibiotic ointment, which inhibits bacterial growth in cuts and abrasions and promotes wound

Some motels and hotels will change their policies and accept pets in an emergency situation, but call ahead first.

And finally, speaking of hotels that accept pets, I discovered a site called <www.petswelcom.com>, which lists lodging places throughout the U.S. and Canada that accept pets. I found only one Lee County place — Crestwood Suites at 7071 Lakeridge Court, SW, Fort Myers, 415-8440. Ciestwood charges a $25 nonrefundable fee per pet for one to five nights, and $90 per pet for six nights or more

As an adviso, I'm certain that other area hotels and motels will also accept pets, and many others bend the rules during hurricanes.

Cabbage Key Inn opens sistership on Pine Island

By Dawn deBoer Staff writer

There's something new in Pineland for island trekkers skirting the Lee Island Coast by water or land at Pine Island Sound's latest lodging on the waterfront with North Captiva across the waterway, Cabbage Key and neighboring Useppa but 15 minutes by boat.

The Cloisters of previous years takes on a new look for a new run on life as a resting and watering hole for day-trippers, weekend trekkers, fishermen, business men and women looking for a getaway and those on holiday in want of a cozy layover on the gulf.

Welcome to Tarpon Lodge, sister to Cabbage Key Inn. Open less than a month after two years of renovation by island owners Rob and Phyllis Wells of Cabbage Key, word is making its way around the islands of the new kid in town.

"Anybody who knows Rob and knows Cabbage Key knows what he was after was to make these three acres a beautiful little destination spot," says Bob Tye, general manager.

Here, where palm tree farms plant palms by the acre, 50 palm trees and some 100 other plantings wave in and around the lodge and its grounds.

Florida locals are a steady stream from Boca Grande to Fort Myers. Boaters trickle in off the water for a long lunch or sunset dinner, the dining room situated for a perfect view of a setting or rising sun. Take in both on a night away from it all.

An Old Florida home, built in 1929 and furnished in "Old Florida hodge-podge," sits at the bend of the road right down the street from neighboring Pineland Marina. Two dock houses are soon to house a waterfront depot for the lodge with services from fishing guide to boat rental and private water taxi.

"We've tried to keep up the Old Florida spirit," says managing partner, John Feagans. "People come here just to get away."

In the main house, telephones and televisions in the rooms of the inn are nonexistent. The Island House, which sits to one side of the inn, does get more modern with its widespreading veranda-style porch resting high off its second floor overlooking an expanse of water, the beneficiary of the breezes off the sound.

That feeling of Southern plantation elegance extends to the main house, where a circular front drive leaves patrons under the protective shading of its long eaves.

Those who dine at Cabbage Key can anticipate something different. Managing partner and also chef, John Feagans, brings a taste of San-Cap to Pine Island dining from his cookery at Greenhouse Restaurant, once owned by his family, and San-Cap mainstays such as the Sunshine Cafe, the Mad Hatter and Sunset Grill.

"The type of food you'd find there is similar to what we would serve here," he says. "It's definitely summer in Florida, but we're happy and so are the folks that have come to dine."

Good food at a good price in country surroundings with the water at your fingertips. Exploratory jaunts head for Bokeelia at the island's northern tip to artsy Matlacha with its galleries and artisan shops at St. James City with music holes-in-the-wall at its southernmost cor-

While Sanibel-Captiva has hotels and shops, Pine Island is basically still Old Florida — fishing towns and small farms.

"It's really just started to grow up within the last two years. Money is being invested here, and people from Captiva and Sanibel who have been there for years have started to come over here to buy properties and get away from the hustle and bustle, because it is Old Florida," said

With the passage of summer and coming of the new season, night strollers might hear guitar or piano coming from the Sportsman's Bar where soft jazz now plays nice and easy for a laid-back feel.

"We keep everything fairly soft and very casual. Come in a T-shirt and flipflops, if you want," said Feagans.

Fishers and boaters can soon look to the twin dock houses at Tarpon Lodge to house an in-house fishing and waterway guide. There are 12 boats slips with plans for another 16 slips in the making of a private harbor for the lodge. Kayaks and sailboats are also in store.

Pineland Marina is next door for water taxi service around the islands, as are the 18 holes of Alden Pines Golf Course right down the road. Randell Research Center is across the street, where nature trails are under way.

Crawling vine taking over

To the editor:

Congratulations to the Sanibel Beautification group. You are doing a great job B-U-T you need to go back and remove some of your work. Someone thought a "crawling green vine" would be neat to put into the triangle stop sign area. WRONG, that vine is now starting to crawl and take over the road area. Please remove before we lose Periwinkle to the vine. Low maintenance, I know, is one of your goals.

SPD professional, humane

To the editor:

After six years of full-time residence on Sambel, I feel that I can make a comment on our local services. In the past week an elderly neighbor had to call 911 for her older sister who was very ill. I had gone to her home at her request. The emergency medical team arrived in what seemed like five minutes and proceeded with gentle care

A day later, another call came from the same neighbor and I went to her home. This involved a very upsetting action by another neighbor. The police were there when I arrived. Officer T.C. Tyus and Sgt. Jamie Phillips had investigated and resolved the situation. Both officers were calming the lady. I was particularly impressed with Sergeant Phillips' careful choice of words and obvious caring. A routine and typical call was handled in a professional and humane manner. This may not be heroic, but it certainly was above and beyond the call of duty.

I had witnessed callous and indifferent actions by police while living in a fine community previously. We should be thankful and supportive of our city's employees when they are doing a difficult, frustrating and necessary job so well.

Sacred pines disappearing

To all the islanders who do love our pine trees and hello to all the winter residents who are today, Sunday, Aug. 19, sitting in the shade of large oaks, elms or even pines up north . . . Think about us as "they" murder our only real shade tree on the beaches and the sacred ones who spread an arbor of dappled light and shade along Periwinkle Way. Twice this summer trees have "mistakenly" been poisoned and cut down along Periwinkle Way. What's going on? We have a politically correct city employee and others who deem it their god given duty to rid us of these dastardly trees and this statement cannot be denied. The trees along Periwinkle Way were protected by ordinance but pooh! What do they care?

Then . . . then! they magnanimously state that they will re-plant trees on Periwinkle like the gumbo limbo that not only sprouts like weeds but has no real shade, and a propinquity to fall over and very breakable limbs at even the mention of a storm. Or nice, but very difficult to clean up after . . . the seagrape, I can see those leaves blowing everywhere. Last, but not least, is the cabbage palmcheap stuff, no shade, lots of dead fronds dropping down along with palm rat droppings. How wonderful, how charming, how awful!

I could give you a litany on the merits and the misinformation about Australian pines but why bother. Just ask the pelicans who use them or the ospreys who use them on the beach to scout out prey or the indigo snake that lived under my pine tree. Perhaps the people along Rabbit Road who had their trees poisoned and no longer s birds they once did. Of course there was the Blind Pass disaster. When those folks protested the destruction of the pines they were deemed "un-American". . . Whew!

It's just great having all this poison go into the ground and into the water but of course it's safe (right). So watch out for your hibiscus, it could be next. After all it comes from Asia and the Pacific Islands. It's not native but then neither are we.

Smart Growth or chutzpah?

To the editor:

Smart growth is good. "Smart Growth" as defined by Mr. Gilkey and his allies is not good. You may ask how I reached that conclusion, even before Mr. Gilkey's group has announced any findings. That's easy. I know that the primary goal of the group is increased profits. And to achieve this goal, the "Smart Growth" operation is being orchestrated toward increasing building density in certain areas, especially in our "Density Reduction/Ground Water Recharge Area" The current allowable density in the DRGR's one home on 10 acres. Smat Growth's soal is to revise the county's comprehensive plan to allow developers to build two or three homes on one acre—a 20 or 30-fold increase in density.

And, to justify this abuse of the DRGR, they rely on the false premise that people are going to keep moving here so we better be ready for them. That's absurd. No one is going to come down and pitch a tent in the swamps. The truth is the developers want to build more homes, so they can entice more people to come down and buy these homes, so they can make even greater profits. Another truth is that any conclusion based on a false premise has no validity. So much for Smart Growth.

But back to increased growth. That would be OK except for one overriding problem—our infrastructure is failing. To cite a few examples: our roads, our schools, our water supply, our hurricane shelters and evacuation routes. They are all woefully inadequate. Some cause the quality of our lives to deteriorate; some are life-threatening. Therefore, the smartest growth plan would be to halt all new home construction until our infrastructure catches up. We know that's not going to happen.

But what must happen, what really qualifies as smart growth, is that we take no actions that would increase the rate of growth currently allowed by the Comp Plan unless and until our infrastructure catches up and is able to provide a reasonable level of service.

Before I close, let me point out that the Smart Growth effort is controlled by the same organizations that gave us the infamous sales tax referendum—and remember how they seduced the commissioners into funding that fiasco with about 250,000 of our tax dollars.

Well folks, history is repeating itself. These same people—developers, the Horizon Council and the Economic Development Council—are back. And believe it or not, they're looking for another handout to fund their mischief. Only this time they want the commissioners to give them 350,000 of our tax dollars to lobby the people and the commission. Talk about chutzpah!

The bottom line is this. If the developers want to try to increase their profits by millions of dollars, make them invest their own funds. Under no circumstance should they get any of my money to help them enhance their profits by reducing my quality of life.

Writer agrees with Workman

To the editor:

I wholly concur with Judy Workman's thoughtful rebuttal in your Aug. 9 issue to Mayor Nola Theiss's commentary concerning the appropriate level of spending and taxation on Sanibel. Ms. Workman demonstrates, in a sound, analytic way, why the mayor's extreme position on Sanibel's future should be rejected.

Nobody wants excessive taxes, but as Ms. Workman points out, Sanibel's property taxes have not risen in nine years. At the same time, new services have been instituted (e.g., sewer system and beach parking) and other needs will surely arise. Services help make Sanibel the wonderful place it is. Sensible and prudent policies, including tax policies, will permit Sanibel to continue its extraordinary way of life.

1976: Island traffic study set for Labor Day

(The following news items are taken from the pages of the Island Reporter over the past 25 years.)

25 years ago, Aug. 20, 1976

If you are on one of the ways or byways of Sanibel over the Labor Day weekend, you might become a statistic in a new traffic study planned by the city for that holiday period

Several volunteers, operating under guidance of a professional firm, are slated to begin a traffic count that will provide a part of the continuing up-date of the circulation section of Sanibel's land-use plan. The new traffic study is expected to provide a basis for future road improvements on the island.

In endorsing the study, Councilman Vernon MacKenzie commented that he thought it should also include some analysis of the increasing impact of the "day visitor" on the island's road network.

Sign comes down, SCCF moves

The Sanibel-Captiva Conservation Foundation vacated its Periwinkle Way headquarters early this week after negotiations for a lease extension fell through.

Dick Workman, director of the foundation, said he learned Friday that the building's new tenant planned to begin remodeling the structure early this week.

Aided by volunteers, Workman vacated the office on Tuesday and Wednesday, setting up temporary headquarters in the storerooms of the National Wildlife Refuge administration building, near the Sanibel Lighthouse.

A $3 million slip of the tongue

County Commissioner Harry Rodda underpriced the causeway by a cool $3 million when he offered it for sale to the city of Sanibel two weeks ago.

The price slip-up was revealed to the council Tuesday by Mayor Duane White, who said a letter from the county's attorney James Humphrey pointed out the

The price the county actually wants for the causeway—tied up with certain conditions—1s $26 million net, White explained. He suggested that the city hold a workshop on Sept. 3 for councilmen, planning commissioners and city staff to decide whether to enter into serious negotiations for the sale.

Relief at hand for thirsty bikers

Ever get thirsty, really thirsty? Say you're on the San-Cap bike path along the perimeter of "Ding" Darling Refuge it's hot, humid mid-afternoon, and you're thirsty, really thirsty.

What do you do? Pedal home or to the nearest store? That could be many miles and untold time away. And all the while you're still very thirsty. Now, if there were just a water fountain a little ways up ahead, you know you could survive to get to it and bicycling would be so much more pleasurable from now on.

This is what the Island Water

Association, the City of Sanibel and island service clubs the city enlists to foot the $200 cost of each fountain, hope to provide bike path users — a place to get a refreshing drink of water.

County officials admit to Causeway neglect

County officials were roundly criticized yesterday by island residents for their failure to maintain the Sanibel Causeway.

The past, present and future of the causeway were discussed at a Community Association-Chamber of Commerce breakfast at the Sanibel Community Center. Present were Lee County officials and about 150 concerned citizens. Several speakers took county officials to task for violating an interlocal agreement to use some bridge toll revenue for maintenance.

Lee County Transportation and Engineering Director George Crawford said the county accepted blame for neglecting the bridge. From 1984 to 1999, no major repairs were made.

Consultant studies have said it would be more cost-effective to replace the causeway with a new $56 million span than to patch it up. A city of Sanibel study said repair costs would overtake construction costs by 1997.

Cuban hijackers crash 30 miles off Sanibel

With visions of freedom just 90 miles away, three Cuban dissidents posing as tourists hijacked a single engine Polishmade Wilfa from Guanabaçoa, Cuba, flew over their homeland dropping anti-government pamphlets and crashed last Friday morning in the Gulf of Mexico, just 30 miles from Sanibel,

The hijackers, who said they were fleeing a government they feared, ordered the plane's pilot to go to Miami, where they would seek political asylum. But with only a compass to point the way, they got lost in the gulf, according to the U.S. Coast Guard.

Running on empty, the pilot, who wasn't hurt in the hijacking and wants to return to Cuba, spotted a Russian freighter, circled it and then crash landed in the water nearby.

Playhouse in turmoil

The Pnate Playhouse-recently renamed the J. Howard Wood Theatre-is the hub of controversy and rumors again. There are strong indications that artistic director Ralph Elias will soon follow the departure of General Manager Rick Stevens and Marketing Director Ingrid McBride.

The dispute between Elias and the theater's board of directors centers on the selection of plays slated for the fall/winter lineup.

While Elias was on vacation, the rights to produce three of his plays fell through and the board opted to replace them with their own selections.

"By contract, nobody is empowered to do any play picking but me," Elias said Tuesday.

and all calls on Sanibel is an example, Ackley said, pointing out that many problems reported to the department do not require a sworn officer to solve.

"In most communities the police would not respond (to those calls)," Ackley said. "They would refer to another agency or queue up to non-emergency calls. We provide a very high level of service on Sanibel that is not typical in other small departments in Florida . . . the deterrent benefit of those calls would still exist if you sent a police aide in uniform"

Councilmembers Steve Brown and Judy Workman said the community has come to expect the department's level of service, however.

"We have a unique police department and a unique community," said Workman. "Because it was set up that way, I think, intentionally. I don't think we want to drop the level of service—citizens are used to it and expect it."

"This will help try to define in quantitative terms response time and an organizational chart along functional lines," said Ackley. "You can define and then make informed decisions. Are you getting your money's worth for that level of service? You'll have the qualitative and quantitative date you need."

Sanibel Fire & Rescue gets impromptu training session

By Anna Liakas Staff writer

It wasn't an ordinary call for public assistance that summoned the Sanibel Fire & Rescue Department to Loggerhead Cay on East Gulf Drive two Thursdays ago But it was a unique opportunity to test their equipment as well as their ability to improvise in unusual situations.

A family leaving the complex and heading home with their disabled son had suddenly found themselves in a dilemma. With the elevators temporarily out of service, the trip down from the third floor with the youth's 350 pound wheelchair had become more than a major obstacle — it had become an impossibility Sambel promptly called in the fire and rescue team at Iona McGregor, who arrived with their ladder truck, and the two departments rigged a net of high tensile strength webbing to the top rung, cradling the heavy chair safely to the ground

"It was a good experience for us," said Assistant Fire Chief David LaCombe "On occasion we have had morbidly obese patients who can't be transported either down the stairs or on an elevator. This rescue provided us with an opportunity to not only serve the community but also to practice how we would lift something heavy in an emergency

"We are very grateful to Lieutenant Steve Johnson," added LaCombe "He and his shift were instrumental in putting this together"

More traditional training

Thanks to the foresight of "Ding" Dailing and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in applying for grant monies, members of Sanibel Fire & Rescue were able to participate in a two-day wildfire power saw course last week, aimed at increasing their efficiency and safety when removing trees in emergency situations The course presented firefighters with the chance to study different hazardous case scenarios, and to ascertain the best way to respond while minimizing 11sk to the chain saw

"Everyone felt that the training was very valuable," said LaCombe, "particularly in the case of a hurricane when we may literally need to cut our way back onto the

The trainees spent one day in the classroom at "Ding" Darling studying the various strategies involved in safely wielding the powerful saws and then moved to the Sambel boat ramp, where they practiced carving pie-cuts into the fleshy bark of eight Australian pines, carefully orchestrating the trees path to the ground These "widow makers" are particularly treacherous, explained LaCombe, as their shallow root system can easily let go in a high wind, throwing their heavy limbs onto other neighboring trees and creating a vulnerable tangle of timbers that can give way without warning.

"This was an important piece of training," said LaCombe "It gives our firefighters a common frame of reference with the folks at public works, which is key in developing a strategy for working together in emergency

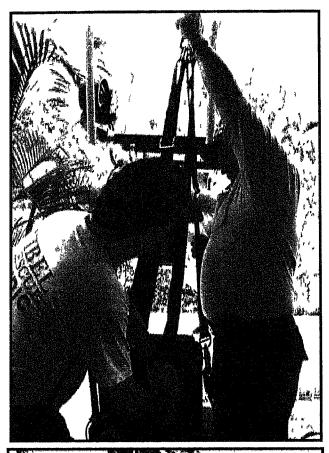

The power saw course was followed last Thursday by a training drill in response to propane leaks and fires Behind the station, a local propane dealer set off a towering inferno for the firefighters, a 20-foot blaze which illuminated the back of the building and alarmed some neighboring businesses, who called it in to the station as a possible structure fire. Three firefighters worked shoulder to shoulder — two advancing the hoselines, spraying a fog pattern of water to disperse the gas and provide protection as the third member of the team attempted to shut explained assistant fire "Which chief could rupture in a hurricane or release combustible vapors if overfilled. It's important that we practice and ıncrease our ability to respond effectively"

"Many homes, condominiums and businesses on the and have underground stationary propage.

The remaining money from the grant will be used to purchase several GPS systems, that will assist firefighters in navigating the route in and out of wildfires

All you ever wanted to know about macadamia nut trees

Dear Ron: I read in the newspaper that you may have an answer to my dilemma. We moved into an older home last year which has a mature Macadamia nut tree (among other mature fruit trees, including carambola and mango) in our back yard. It is producing nuts at this time, but it appears the leaves are turning brown, not all, but it seems more and more as time goes on.

Two months ago a whole limb was brown and very dead, so we had it cut off. We are concerned for this tree and would like any information on the browning of the leaves that you may have.

----V.G., Fort Myers Beach

Dear V.G: There are a number of cultural conditions that you should examine in determining what is adversely affecting your macadamia nut tree, the primary factors being irrigation, fertilization, soil acidity and drainage. But first, here's some background information.

There are two types of macadamia trees grown in home gardens, the smooth macadamia nut (Macadamia integrifolia) and the rough macadamia nut (Macadamia tetraphylla), both of which are members of the Proteaceae family. Native to the rainforests of Australia, the tree does well in almost any mild climate where there is an adequate year-round rainfall.

This explains why the tree does better in Hawaii, where the harvest of macadamia nuts is a major industry, than in Florida, where harvests are generally smaller than in other locations.

This may hold one clue to the problems you're facing with your tree. Though the macadamia nut tree is fairly drought-resistant, it will show signs of stress if it does not receive adequate irrigation during dry peri-

Though some damage can occur with frosts, mature trees are fairly coldhardy, surviving temperatures as low as 24 degrees F.

Size-wise, the macadamia could be considered a medium tree, reaching heights of 30 to 40 feet with canopy spreads to match.

Island

Ron Sympson

Gardening

Leaves of the smooth nut variety are about 10 inches long and appear in whorls of three. The flowers are creamy white in color. The rough nut variety produces whorls of four leaves that may be up to 20 inches long and has pink or cream-colored flowers.

Though there are few pest problems associated with macadamia nut trees, as I mentioned, there are cultivation issues involved which you should investigate.

In addition to ensuring adequate urigation, make sure that you have adequate drainage and that the soil remains acidic The best way to take care of this is by making annual applications of fertilizer (now would be a good time) formulated for citrus, making certain that the feitilizer contains all the important secondary nutrients, such as magnesium, iron and manganese.

If your tree has deficiencies in any of these areas, corrective action should take care of the leaf-browning problem though you may not see results until next spring or summer.

As far as the dead limb on your tree, remember that the branches of the macadamia nut tree are very brittle, and therefore quite susceptible to wind damage, so wind could have been the culprit.

By the way, mature macadamia nuts will fall to the ground from late fall to spring, and you should avoid shaking the tree to bring nuts to the ground.

And finally, here are some hints from the California Rare Fruit Growers on enjoying your harvest:

"Harvested nuts should be dehusked and spread in a dry place protected from the sun and allowed to dry for two or three weeks. To finish drying put the nuts in a shallow pan and place in the oven at the lowest temperature setting (100 to 115 degrees F) for about 12 hours.

'Stir occasionally and watch that the nuts do not cook. Excessive heating will damage nut quality. Store the nuts in a cool, dry area. A heavy plastic bag will prevent nuts from re-absorbing moisture. When the nuts are dry, the shells can be removed with a nutciacker.

"To home-roast macadamia nuts, place shelled nuts (whole kernels or halves only) in a shallow pan no more than two deep. Roast 40 to 50 minutes, stirring occasionally. Watch carefully and remove from the oven as soon as they start to turn tan. After roasting, the nuts store nicely, salted or unsalted, in airtight jars at 40 to 65 degrees F.

"They can also be frozen. Macadamia nuts are excellent raw or roasted. In addition to being a quality snack, they can be used in almost any recipe that calls for nuts, including stuffings, fruit salads, cakes, etc."

Hurricane tips

What to do when

Before the first tropical depression gets ders near the Gulf, there are a number of things a homeowner should do to get ready:

Install hurricarie shutters or pré-cut 3/4-inch marine plywood for each window, of the home. Install anchors for the plywood and predrill holes in the boards so that they can be put up quickly.

* Make trees more wind resistant by removing diseased or damaged limbs, then strategically removing branches to that wind can blow through.

Get a garage-door brace so that this most vulnerable door won't blow collapse in the face of high water and/or winds.

HURRICANE WATCH: Hurricane conditions are a real possibility for the area, usually within 36 hours:

* Listen to NOAA Weather Radio, local radio and TV for up-to-date storm infoma-

* Prepare to bring indoors lawn furniture, outdoor decorations or ornaments, trash cans, hanging plants, and anything else that can be picked up by the wind and act like a missile.

* Prepare to cover ALL windows of your home. If shutters have not been installed, use precut plywood. If you do not have plywood, do what you can to protect windows from breaking. Tape does not work.

* Plan your evacuation route, know where to go, and fill your car's gas tank.

Recheck manufactured home tie-

* Check batteries and stock up on canned food, first aid supplies, drinking water, and medications.

HURRICANE WARNING: A hurricane is expected within 24 hours:

* Listen for weather updates, your ALERT radio, and stay informed. Tune to 98.5 WDRR for Sanibel-specific informa-

* Keep portable radio and flashlight on hand — with fresh batteries.

⁴ Clear your yard of all loose objects.

* Move your boat to safe harbor and moor securely. DO NOT STAY WITH BOAT.

* Store drinking water in clean contain-

Shutter or board all windows and secure double-door entrances.

* IF ORDERED TO EVACUATE, DO SO IMMEDIATELY! Turn off water, gas and electricity. Don't forget your evacuation kit.

Do not re-enter evacuated areas until local officials have issued an all-clear.

* Evacuate manufactured (mobile) homes, regardless of how well you think yours is tied down, for more substantial shelter.

As the hurricane season moves ever onward, it is worth thinking about things we can do as individuals to make an extreme weather situation more bearable for everyone...

During an emergency, you are your own first line of defense!

Be prepared to be self-sufficient for two weeks. Don't be a missing person!

What about family members?

Are your other family members prepared? Have they shared their plans for emergencies? Once you have your plan and know in your extended family are prepared, you can reach out and provide assistance to others.

What about your neighbors?

People who are new to the area will need to know how to evaluate their situation and what they need to do to be pre-You can help! Become a volunteer!

If your own plans are in place, you can help others get ready for the emergency and help again after the impact phase. Providing help to others helps in your own recovery from a disaster. Having a plan and preparing yourself and your home will allow you to help others.

"Natural disasters can make a commumity stronger. The outpouring of generosity makes people more generous. And the feeling of accomplishment that comes after tackling a difficult job gives the community an increased sense of self-confidence." - Joseph P. Riley, Jr., Mayor of Charleston, S.C.

Listen for weather updates on local radio/TV. Do not pay attention to rumors.

Organize your emergency food and supplies. Prepare emergency water storage by sterilizing jugs and other containers, even the bathtub. Scrub, bleach, rinse, dry; fill with water.

Clear yard of loose objects like bikes, furniture and trash cans. Anchor objects (no matter how heavy or large) that can't come inside.

Secure your boat. Lash to trailer, let air out of tires and secure trailer to something sturdy in the ground. If boat is in a marina, you may be required to move it.

Board windows and doors. Tape only reduces flying glass.

Lower water level in your pool only a foot or so. Add extra chlorine. Cover the pump system.

Store valuables and documents in waterproof containers in the highest possible place. If forced to evacuate, take important papers with you in ziplock

Turn refrigerator and freezer to coldest setting, opening only when absolutely necessary. Freeze water in plastic jugs and use to fill empty spaces,

-oil, water and gas should all be full.

Have sufficient cash on hand because, without electricity, banks, ATMS, even grocery stores cannot operate.

Be prepared

One of the best ways to prepare for a storm is to make sure your home is well stocked with necessary items before the start of the hurricane season. You should have enough of the following supplies on hand to last your family for two weeks: canned fruits, vegetables, meats juices and soups; bottled water, baby formula and powdered milk; dried fruit; tea and coffee; pet food; medicine.

Keep your car's gas tank full.

Be sure you have a portable FM radio in addition to your ALERT radio and plenty of extra batteries; a grill or camp stove plus extra fuel; candles and a first aid kit.

If you must evacuate: know the city's flood warning procedures and have your evacuation plan in place; shut off electricity and water prior to evacuation; move as many valuables as you can to upper floors and elevate furniture, if possible

Protect your pets too

Space limitations and concerns for people with health conditions have prohibited pets from entering public shelters. Thus, people needing to use a shelter must leave their pets behind. Following Hurricane Andrew, many animals were displaced and never reunited with their owners because they lacked sufficient identification or lost it during the storm.

Therefore, Lee County Animal Services is offering microchip IDs, a safe and permanent way to identify pets for $20 at the Lee County Animal Services Shelter.

"We hope this will encourage pet owners to provide the extra protection a microchip ID offers," says Ria Brown, Public Promotions Specialist for LCAS. "It is so easy for tags and other forms of ID that attach to a collar to come off during a disaster."

Brown also reminds pet owners to be sure their companion animals are up-todate on vaccinations and to have plenty of pet supplies on hand in case of an emergency.

No drilling amendment
On July 11, the Senate approved Senator Dick
Durbin's "Don't Drill the Mountains" amendment to the Interior Appropriations bill. The Durbin amendment prohibits the Interior Department from taking action to open any National Monument to new oil, gas or coal leasing in the coming year. The amendment was identical to the successful Rahall amendment in the House. Sen. Robert Bennett (R-UT) led the opposition to the amendment. But when Sen. Conrad Burns (R-MT) moved to table the Durbin amendment, it lost 42-57 with ten Republicans, including Fitzgerald of Illinois, Domenici of New Mexico and Allard of Colorado, voting to keep the Durbin amendment alive.

Floodplain restored

The Natural Resources Defense Council has identified the Illinois River floodplain as one of only three large river ecosystems in the United States that has a chance of recovering. By the early 1900s, 400,000 acres, or half of the Illinois floodplain was sealed off from the river by levees that checked the river's natural tendency to spread out over the floodplain. Pumps did the rest. Instead of habitat for spawning fish and migrating waterfowl, the land was converted to rowcrop agriculture.

In 1997, the Nature Conservancy bought and restored 1,157 acres of land at Spunky Bottoms. Native hardwoods and species including grasses, wildflowers, mollusks and Monarch butterflies, are returning. In 2000, the Conservancy purchased a 7,257-acre farm at the confluence of the Illinois and Spoon Rivers, the largest private conservation transaction in Illinois history. The Conservancy plans to return it to floodplain to show what can be done to reclaim farmland up and down the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. The loss of agricultural land is not expected to be a major issue.

-Nature Conservancy: July/Aug 2001 Rio Grande no longer grand

The Rio Grande River is no longer grande. A nine-year drought, the invasion of non-native hyacinth and hydrilla, and a complex system of water rights have reduced the last few miles of the nation's second-longest river to a shallow pool, and a sandbar has silted shut its mouth for the first time in history. Horses and cattle wander freely across the border. Officials in Matamoros, Mexico have begun to ration water.

A biologist with Texas Parks and Wildlife blames state water policy that controls the river and allocates virtually every drop to municipal, industrial and agricultural users. Environmentalists are concerned about the loss of the estuary where shrimp and other marine life have flourished. The situation may improve temporarily at the end of the month when Mexico is due to release half of the 500 billion gallons of river water it owes the United States under a watersharing treaty.

Piping plover plight

Pity the piping plover! It nests where people want to play. The birds, near extinction in the mid 1980s, now number about 5,600, thanks to beach closings, banning off-road vehicles and curtailed building on shores from Maine to North Carolina and around the Great Lakes. But the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is not happy about the recovery rate. The current Atlantic Coast population numbers about 1,400 mating pairs. The service aims to increase it to 2,000 before the bird is delisted. Protected turf was greatly expanded in May when the service designated 35 shore areas spanning 200 miles across eight Great Lakes states as critical habitat for the birds. The court also ordered the service to establish critical habitat for the 1,700-mile Atlantic and Gulf coasts - from North Carolina to Texas. On Marco Island, Florida, angry residents are selling sterling silver and gold dead-plover pins. Five local beaches have been designated critical habitat for plovers, including the southern tip of Estero Island, Bunche Beach, the northern end of North Captiva, Murdock point on Cayo Costa and Tigertail Beach in Collier County.

-Wall Street Journal: 6/7/01 High roadway death rate

Six Florida panthers — about ten percent of the entire remaining population — have been killed on highways in 2001, the worst death rate in 18 years according to the Fort Myers News-Press. Five of the six were hit on Immokalee Road (State Road 846), four within the past month including two 10-month-old siblings, inspiring the Palm Beach Post to dub the road "Slaughter Alley." There are no fences or underpasses for panthers on 846, although the state plans to install an underpass "by the end of 2002."

Wood Theatre names winner of cat essay contest

The J. Hooward Wood Theatre has a winner in its Adopt-A-Cat Contest. Chris Mayo, along with her children Amanda, Carolina and Nick, wrote a wonderful essay to the theatre about why they should become family to the cat known as Mr. Tanner in the current play "Everybody Loves Opal."

Known originally as Norma Shearer Schelhammer, then as Catarina, Mr. Tanner came to the show from the Humane Society of Lee County. The theatre staff came up with the idea of an essay contest to promote community awareness of the work the Society is doing for homeless pets in the area and, hopefully, find a home for the budding "actress."

The Mayos will receive their new family member following the show's final performance, to which they are invited as guests. The $60 adoption fee has also been paid by the theatre.

In addition to the running the contest, the theatre has also been collecting monies for the Humane Society. Donations may be made at the theatre through Saturday evening or after that by calling the Soiciety at 332-0364.

Penguin populations declining

Around the world, penguin populations are declining. Ten species are threatened or endangered. While evidence is mounting that global warming is the prime cause, overfishing and oil spills also pose major threats. Species at greatest risk are those that have strayed farthest from the South Pole. The warmer the water, the more they struggle to find food.

For the Adelie penguin, the only food source are young crustaceans (krill) found in pack ice. Adelie numbers have experienced a sharp drop. "If we don't get ice this winter or next, the whole house of cards will come tumbling down," predicts Dr. Wayne Trivelpiece, director of seabird research for the United States Antarctic Marine Living Resources program.

Since 1987 the number of Magellanic penguins at Punta Tombo in Argentina has declined 30 percent, Dr. Patricia Majluf, Wildlife Conservation Society biologist adds, "We lost half the colony of Humblodt penguins during one bad El Niño, and these are very slow breeding birds. If we get a series of intense El Niños, they will disappear."

During cooler La Niña years, colonies can begin to recoup their losses. But in recent decades, the number and intensity of El Niños has increased while La Niñas have declined. Some birds may also be succumbing to biological toxins like red tide. Such toxic blooms are also associated with warmer water.

Calling all desalination plants

There are 110 desalination plants in Florida, and more than half of them discharge the leftover brine into underground injection wells, or blend it with wastewater for irrigation. Currently, owners of desalination plants have to get industrial wastewater permits from the state. State officials hope to attract more plants by making it easier to obtain a permit to release the brine into canals, estuaries and other waterways. Environmentalists are concerned that rules being drafted by the Department of Environmental Protection won't protect waterways, and will make them too salty for plant and marine life.

"We don't like changing the law from hazardous waste to just a byproduct," says Denise Lay of the Tampa Sierra Club. The new rules are likely to help Tampa Bay Water, which is building the nation's largest desalination plant, one designed to generate some 25 million gallons of water a day, while discharging the salty byproduct into Tampa Bay. Tampa's discharge permit is still under consideration.

Which Suit to Establish?

North dealer. North-South vulnerable. NORTH ♣Q53 ♥AK4 ♦ K 8 ♠AKJ53 WEST EAST ±84 ♥Q107 ★ J 10 9 7 2 ♥J832 ♦642 ♦ A Q 5 ♣Q 10 9 7 6 SOUTH ♠ A K 6 ♥965 ♦ J 10 9 7 3 ♣82 The bidding:

North East South West Pass 1 NT 3 NT

Opening lead — jack of spades.

The problem of which suit to establish in notrump play does not lend itself to flat rules. Every leal has its own identity, and a method of play that succeeds in one case might fail utterly in another, seemingly similar, case.

Consider this deal where South is in three notrump and West leads a spade. Before playing to the first trick, South should orm a campaign plan. It would be noor technique to win the spade in estner hand before deciding what to do next.

Declarer sees seven high-card tricks immediately available, and his problem is to acquire two more. Obviously, the best source of additional tricks lies in either diamonds or clubs, and the question is which suit to attack first.

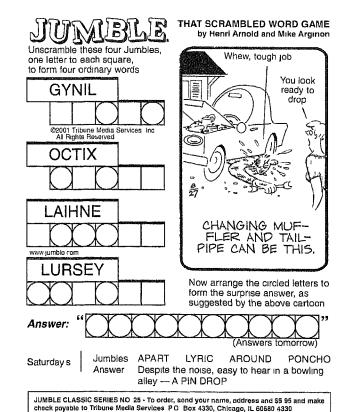

Let's say declarer decides to go after the stronger suit, clubs. If he does so by winning the spade lead and attempting a club finesse, he goes down when East takes the jack of clubs with the queen and returns the ten in order to establish his own long suit.

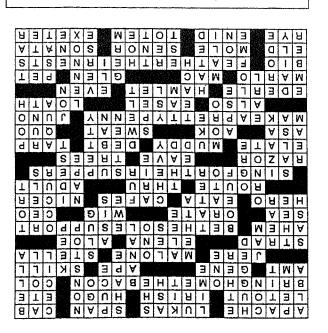

Although attacking clubs offers South an excellent chance for the contract, it is clearly not the best approach. Declarer has a sure way to get home safely by winning the spade lead in dummy and playing the king of diamonds. Regardless of the East-West distribution or how the opponents defend, South cannot be prevented from establishing three diamond tricks and making four notrump.

In this particular deal, therefore, South does best by establishing his weaker suit. This does not mean that declarer should always attempt to establish his weaker suit; it simply means that in this particular case, there is a method of play that is sure to succeed rather than one that might succeed.
