Many hostile to house size restrictions

By Erik Burris
Staff writer

In their introduction to the public last week, Sanibel's appropriately-sized homes consultants were greeted with much skepticism.

Mackenzie Hall was packed with a standing-room-only crowd — mostly hostile to the idea of putting more restrictions on house size in place — that spilled out the room's back door for the Aug. 28 Clarion Associates' initial workshop. The meeting was part of the consultant's visit to determine the conditions existing on Sanibel.

The two Clarion representatives — Craig Richardson, a planner and attorney and Leslie Bethel, an urban designer — were accused by members of the public of being "hired guns" whose sole purpose is to take the heat off of City Council by drafting house-size restrictions for the Land Development Code.

Over the course of the two-hour meeting, Richardson repeatedly denied that Clarion has any ideas of what, if any, amendments to the code are needed.

"We have no preconceived notions on the issue," he said. "The community needs to make the decision."

About three-quarters of the 25 or so people who got up at the meeting spoke against adding restrictions to house sizes, saying the current codes are strict enough. A size cap would play havoc with the housing market and would increase infringement upon property rights.

Manny Fernandez compared the possibility of increased restrictions to the conditions which drove his father from his home in a nearby country 43 years ago.

"To grow up in a socialist environment was not what he wanted for his son," Fernandez said.

Others wondered why the matter was being considered at all, saying that no one has demonstrated any flaws in the current regulations.

"Already coverage is limited to 15-30% of lot size, effectively limiting oversized homes and overdevelopment on all lots, large and small," Erika Foye of Foye Builders said in a letter to Planning Director, Bruce Rogers. "Also, height is limited to 35' and by the angle of light ordinance so homes do not overshadow neighbors. Setback regulations further limit impact on neighbors."

Foye went on to say that more limitations would mean fewer rights for as-yet-unbuilt homes compared to existing structures and for redevelopment after a flood or fire.

"It's a good code; there's absolutely nothing wrong with it," said Michael Valquette, owner of Sandcastle Construction.

A look at neighboring communities from Marco Island to Fort Myers Beach show how Sanibel's regulations have effectively stopped that kind of development on the island, Valquette said.

The ugliest moment in the meeting came when opponents of changing the code attempted to shout down Barbara Anderson. Anderson's comments about "nouveau riche" and how "lots of people are able to live in non-faux mansions" were met with boos and catcalls, prompting the planning director to ask for order.

"Please be respectful of people and let them have their say," Rogers said.

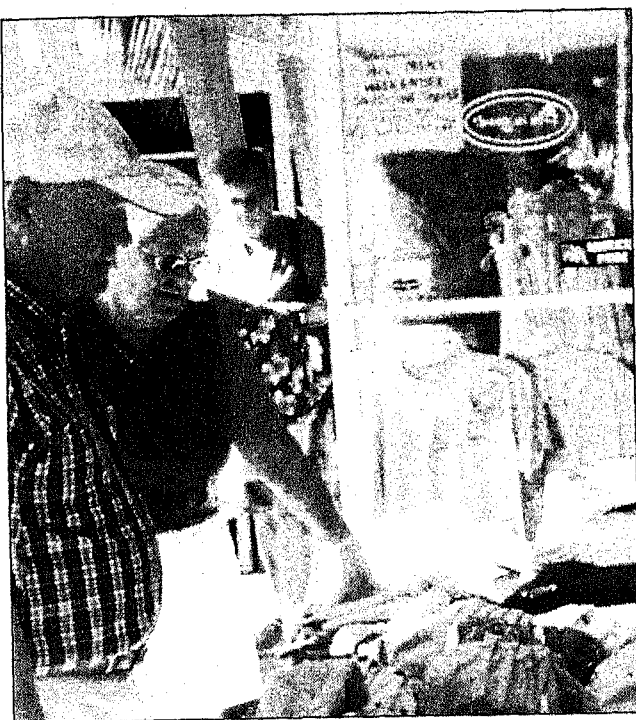

Ellis Robinson said increased restrictions would help keep Sanibel diverse and "not just a place where wealthy people can afford to live," adding that larger homes mean larger usage of energy and water.

Echoing those sentiments, self-described tree hugger Paul Andrews asked: "Can we please match our homes to the environment we claim to respect?"

Larry Thompson proposed a committee be set up to look at the issue, but left no doubt where he stood on the issue.

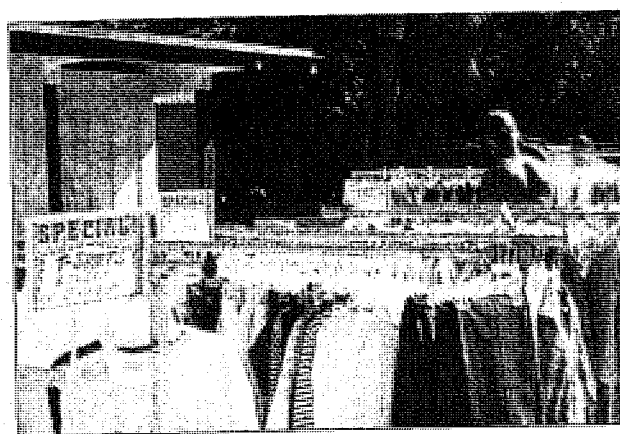

"I want a nice house to live in," Thompson said. "If you take my property rights away from me in this process, I'm going to defend them."

Proposed budget

By Erik Burriss
Staff Writer

The city manager's proposed budget for the next fiscal year represents a change in fiscal thinking.

City Council will take up the matter at its first hearing for the proposed $28.13-million operating budget at 9 a.m. Saturday. The proposed budgets for the sewer revenue and beach parking enterprise funds will also be presented Saturday.

The budget is based on the goals the council set in April, supplemented by goals from set by the city's department heads, City Manager Judie Zimomra said.

While the single largest source of revenue will remain the property tax — $6.3 million in operating money plus $387,892 in taxes voted for debt service for land acquisition — a large chunk of money is coming from user fees, the city's next budget represents a change in thinking for how to fund the municipal government, the city manager said.

Variance request sparks opposition from CPOA

By Amy Fleming
Staff writer

Captiva resident Cindy Fumei's request for a variance was postponed Thursday, pending a site visit from the Lee County Hearing Examiner's office. Fumei was seeking a variance from minimum local street construction standards to allow for a lot split of a .86-acre parcel on Dickey Lane. The proposed lot split would allow Fumei to rebuild two existing single family structures.

County staff recommended denial of the request, stating that among other problems, it "would create two lots, neither of which would have access to a road complying with the requirements of LDC Section 10-296."

The staff report went on to state that "the likelihood that the new homes will be larger than the existing residences is high. In fact, the Office of the Hearing Examiner has formally recognized 'the growing demand for larger, more elaborate, stilt homes on Captiva Island.' Larger homes — whether stilt or not — will result in a greater impervious area and the attendant increase of run-off onto surrounding properties."

Staff also expressed concern over the impact of heavy construction traffic that would be using the narrow roadway, should the variance be granted.

Additional opposition has come from the Captiva Properties Owner's Association.

Scott Barker, representing the CPOA at the hearing, stated the organization's opposition to granting variances whenever possible and echoed county staff's apprehension toward more large homes on the island, as well as "the lack of substantial plans indicating what would be developed on the parcels."

Attorney Robert Winsett was present, representing noted Captiva resident Robert Rauschenberg, who is also opposed to the variance. Other letters of opposition from Captiva residents were sent to the hearing examiner's office as well. There was no information available regarding residents who may have spoken in support of the variance request.

Robert D. Hutcherson of Morris-Depew Associates, Inc. represented Fumei. In the variance request, he noted that "the structure and their impacts have existed since the 1940's and therefore the lot split will not result in an increase in density and therefore will not result in additional impacts to the area." Hutcherson also stated that Fumei met with the Captiva Fire Prevention District regarding access for emergency vehicles by providing a turn-around on the property. At present, emergency vehicles have to back out of Dickey Lane.

parking, user fees will bring in an estimated $2.45 million, a $600,000 increase over the current fiscal year. Numbers for beach parking and sewer fee revenue will be available Saturday, Finance Director Renee Lynch said.

"It's a shift in philosophy from just milking the property tax," Zimomra said.

User fees — which City Council raised in July — will be used to pay for processing applications for Planning and Building department permits, and a stepped up police presence on the beaches and waterways freeing up ad valorem tax revenues for other services, she said. Money generated by increasing weigh station's hours of operation and overweight fees will take the burden of road maintenance off the property tax.

The proposed budget calls for the creation of up to three Police Department positions for beach patrol and one-half of a position for marine patrol, if the increased beach parking and beach parking permit fees generate the necessary revenue.

"We'll only proceed with those if the funds follow the fees," Zimomra said.

The budget also proposes adding a positions in the Planning Department — both recommended in a management

Agency appoints new General Counsel and Press Secretary

The Agency for Health Care Administration (AHCA), Secretary Rhonda M. Medows, M.D., has announced the appointments of General Counsel Valda Clark Christian and Press Secretary Christine Osterlund. Both assumed their positions mid-August.

As General Counsel, Ms. Christian will provide legal advice and representation on issues including licensure and regulation of health care facilities, regulation of managed care plans, administration of the Medicaid plan and recovery of Medicaid overpayments due to abuse or third party liability, and civil litigation related to various Agency programs.

"AHCA is privileged to have a general counsel with Ms. Christian's professional background and experience in Florida health care," Dr. Medows said. "Her breadth of experience in both the insurance industry and litigation will be invaluable to AHCA."

Prior to joining AHCA, Ms. Christian was Assistant General Counsel for Blue Cross & Blue shield of Florida ("BCBSF") where she provided litigation support and managed care legal support, specifically for the grievances and appeals program. Ms. Christian represented BCBSF in coverage determination reviews and hearings before external review panels and administrative law judges. Additionally, she served as lead privacy counsel and primary HIPAA-AS counsel.

While working at BCBSF, she received the General Counsel's Award for exceptional individual performance in 2001, and in 1999, she was honored as a member of the tobacco defense discovery team which earned an "Outstanding Efforts" Team Award.

Ms. Christian received her Bachelor of Arts from Williams College, Williamstown, MA and graduated from the Yale Law School. Ms. Christian has worked for Andersen Consulting (now known as Accenture), the Honorable John R. Hargrove, United States District Court for the District of Maryland and the law firm of Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering.

As Press Secretary, Ms. Osterlund will serve as AHCA's spokesperson and will assist in promoting and educating Florida residents about programs and services provided by AHCA.

"Ms. Osterlund brings 15 years of media relations and marketing experience to this position," stated Dr. Medows. "Her experience in health care and knowledge about Medicaid managed Care and contract implementation makes Ms. Osterlund uniquely qualified for the position."

Ms. Osterlund's professional experience includes positions at ACS (formerly Benova, Inc) who operates the Medicaid Options contract, the Florida Medical Association, Florida State University, and the Donna Reed Foundation. She received her Bachelor of Arts degree in Corporate Communications from Corporate Vista University, Storm lake, Iowa, in 1987.

Working to improve access to affordable, quality health care to all Floridians, the state Agency for Health Care Administration administers Florida's $11 billion Medicaid program; licenses and regulates nearly 19,000 health care facilities and 32 health maintenance organizations; and publishes health care data and statistics.

Cape chief challenges incumbent for House nomination

By Erik Burriss
Staff Writer

A former police chief may not seem like the kind of person who would be promoting affordable dental care, but such is the power of dreams.

Retired Cape Coral Police Chief Arnold Gibbs is the chairman of the Dream Foundation, a non-profit Fort Myers-based group aimed at bringing free or inexpensive dental care to the underprivileged. Gibbs spoke to the Sanibel-Captiva Kiwanis at their Aug. 28 breakfast about his foundation.

"Dental problems are more than just mouth problems," Gibbs said, they can become life-threatening medical conditions.

The Dream Foundation hopes to be able to establish clinics providing affordable dental care in every Florida county. Also, the foundation wants to provide scholarships for training dental care workers.

"Once we get that going, within three years we'll start to reap the benefits of that," Gibbs said.

To raise money, the foundation hopes the Legislature will approve a specialty plate, featuring Martin Luther King Jr. If approved, each plate sold will generate about $20 for the foundation.

"Here's a opportunity to make a difference, we're all able to do something to help our neighbors out," Gibbs said. "We can't depend on the government to do everything and we certainly don't want any more control over our lives."

Of course, Gibbs hopes to be able to put that theory of politics into practice — and vote for the plate himself.

The former Miami cop who retired after eight years as Cape Coral's police chief in July is seeking the Republican nomination for Florida's 74th House District in a three-way race with incumbent Jeff Kottkamp and Chris Mancare.

Dental and health insurance issues are number two on Gibbs' platform.

"Insurance rates are so high, even working people can't afford them in many circumstances," he said.

Insurance rates for disaster coverage are also too high, Gibbs said. In the wake of Hurricane Andrew, companies asked for increased rates, rates that are still in effect 10 years later.

"Why are they still able to charge these exorbitant rates?" asked Gibbs, who then proposed the state take over storm insurance. "Someone should have stepped up to the plate a long time ago."

Number one on Gibbs' platform is education. Gibbs attention was drawn to the issue by the declining standards for police officers, he said.

"That speaks to the horrible education of people in this state," he said.

Gibbs thinks schools should be stressing the basics, making sure that students — who should not be allowed to drop out at 16 — can function in the workplace.

"You must have a child that is literate," Gibbs said. "You can do math, you can do abstract thought, but above all else, you must be employable."

To reach that level, Gibbs proposed vocational programs that would allow student to spend half the day learning the reading, writing and arithmetic, and half the day learning skilled trades in vocational apprenticeships with local businesses.

And while learning to be employable, children must also learn about not breaking the law, Gibbs said.

"People don't start committing crimes after 18," he said. The vast majority of criminals are career criminals, "and they start when they're young."

The key is to getting to them before they turn to crime with intervention and counseling programs, such as the ones Gibbs has instituted in Cape Coral. Money spent on locking up criminals after the fact could be put to better use in preventing crimes, he said.

"We can make a difference in time," he said.

Gibbs blames entrenched interests in the capital for not solving these problems.

These are all long-term issues, they are talked about year after year after year," he said. "There are some good people in Tallahassee, but they need someone to rally them."

Q

Mike Hanan

Should the United States invade Iraq?

Paul, Hudson: I don't think so. The consequences are too great, not only for our troops, but also in this country.

Jeff, Big Pine Key: It's an awful mess. We need more proof. We are relying on the word of politicians who think we should do it.

Brock, Atlanta: Can we act as peacekeepers and ignore the origins of aggression? Iraq is stockpiling weapons from the former USSR. We either act now or in five years.

Tim, London: Not without appropriate information. Colin Powell is right. We need assurance before we move.

'It is, it is a glorious thing To be a pirate king'

By Michael Hannan
Staff writer

While most of Florida's pirates preferred the east coast — especially the St. Augustine area — several plundered the Gulf.

In the 17th Century, the Spanish were trying to cement their claim to Florida, especially on the Panhandle where they hoped to establish forts that would curtail foreign ships from making incursions. One of the forts they built there was at the junction of the St. Marks and Wakulla rivers, nine-miles inland from the Gulf. The fort was a stockade but made to look as though it were built of stone. In 1677 a group of French and English pirates decided to test the fort. When they realized it was made of wood, they threatened to burn it down. The Spanish fled inland and the pirates looted the warehouse and destroyed a good deal of the fort, demonstrating how vulnerable such isolated sites were and how tenuous was the Spanish claim.

Jean Lafitte was reputed to have marauded the west Florida coast from Apalachicola to Cedar Key to Tavernier. Whether he did or not is open to speculation; however, such speculation has given rise to legends that still survive. According to one such legend, Lafitte entrusted his friend, Pierre Le Blanc, with guarding the treasure he had buried near Cedar Key. Lafitte had given Le Blanc a palomino horse to speed him on his rounds. One night, Le Blanc encountered a trespasser on the island. A fight ensued and the trespasser got the better of Le Blanc, cutting off his head. The legend, which continues to this day, claims that locals sometimes see a headless horseman riding a palomino on the beach of Seahorse Key.

William Bowles, on the other hand, was a very real presence on the Panhandle. He may have begun as a pirate, but shortly thereafter he organized the Indians of the area and declared himself head of the State of Muskogee. Bowles played England against Spain, acquired ships and funding, and attracted polyglot privateer crews by offering them protection and supplies in return for one third of their plunder.

Bowles was a very effective organizer, and his plan worked well until Spain and England made peace. Then the British started arresting his crews when his ships arrived in Nassau for trading or refitting. Bowles was ultimately lured to what was supposed to be a peace conference, where renegade Indians whom the Spanish had bribed betrayed him. After capture, Bowles was quickly transported to Morro Castle in Havana. There, he starved himself to death rather than suffer the lingering ignominy of prison.

Gasparilla Festival 2001 poster

The most famous of the Gulf pirates is perhaps José Gaspar, for whom Gasparilla Island is purportedly named. And why Tampa Bay's professional football team is called the Buccaneers. However, Gaspar might have died in obscurity had it not been for John Gomez, his cabin boy.

Gaspar, who is alleged to have captured and sank 36 ships, was finally captured himself by Commodore David Porter. Not wanting to be hanged, Gaspar wrapped himself in anchor chains and jumped overboard. Gomez and several other crewmembers also jumped overboard, but they had more long-range plans. They swam to shore on Gasparilla Island.

After hiding out in the Everglades for a precarious period, Gomez settled down to a peaceful life, fishing and hunting in the Ten Thousand Islands. A press agent, trying to attract tourists to the Charlotte Harbor area, tracked him down in the hopes of getting Gaspar's story. History doesn't record exactly what Gomez recounted, only that the press agent — as is their wont — seriously embellished the tale.

Several attendant legends sprung up after a while. One of which was that Captiva was named for the dozen or so beautiful captive Mexican women that Gaspar kept on that island. Another related story is that the captive women became jealous of Joseffa, the most beautiful among them, so Gaspar moved her to a nearby island. Local lore says her corrupted name became Useppa.

Whether there is any validity to Gaspar's legend, one thing is certain: over time enough people believed it to pillage several Calusa burial sites in the Charlotte Harbor area looking for Gaspar's fabled buried millions.

Most of pirate lore is shadowy because of the isolated lives they lived, but that their legends still exist, gives credence to their color.

Blotter • Anne Bellew

On August 22 Marcello William Mason of Lehigh Acres was stopped on San-Cap and cited by Officer George Krivas for driving 56 mph. (Krivas' note indicated "poor attitude.") After Krivas was through with him, Mason proceeded to accelerate very rapidly into oncoming traffic, nearly causing a crash, and was issued another ticket on the spot for exhibition of speed.

Krivas also stopped Alfredo Sigla-Martinez of Fort Myers who was driving west on Periwinkle. He was weaving and pulled into Traders directly in front of traffic, also almost causing a crash, before Krivas could stop him. He was cited for failure to maintain a single lane and arrested for driving with no driver's license.

On August 23 two other drivers were arrested for driving on suspended licenses. Rodolfo Polanco-Sanchez of Fort Myers was cited for passing in a no-passing zone. He was knowingly driving on a license suspended for failing to appear in court and had a September court date for the suspended license.

Juan Carlos Alba of Fort Myers rove by Officer Dustin Worth as Worth was assisting on another traffic stop on San-Cap Road. Worth knew Alba's license had been suspended. When he finally caught up with him on Casa Ybel Road, he asked Alba if his license had been reinstated, which it had not. Dispatch confirmed the suspension on March 21 for failure to pay a fine. Alba was arrested for knowingly driving on a suspended license. Worth checked Alba's record on the in-house computers when he got back to the station and found that Alba had received a citation from Officer Jared Gallagher on June 30 for driving on a suspended license, another one he himself had issued on July 7 along with one at the same time for attempting to elude an officer.

RE: Arbor Day Trees

Dear Ms. Zimomra:

I have observed the Recreation Center staff in their daily interaction with the children for a number of years. We are very fortunate to have such reliable personnel. In turn, parents and children are fortunate to have this after-school program available to them. The children re the future, our heritage.

Over the years the Arbor Day Trees have been planted by the third grade classes at the Sanibel School. The trees had to be moved across the road to the Pick Preserve because of the School's Expansion. These trees belong to the children. As they grow the trees will grow. Parents have made comments such as "My Child planted this tree when he or she was in the third grade. He or she is in college now". Good memories are something to behold.

I especially want to thank Recreation Superintendent Ron Orr, and his landscape staff, for the attention given by them to the replanting of the Arbor Day Trees. This is over and above their regular duties. Carry your responsibilities around with pride guys. We appreciate you!

Also A BIG THANKS to Mr. Jim Gould, owner of Green Earth landscape next to the Pick Preserve where the Arbor Day Trees were replanted, offered the use of his water spigot. He was very concerned how the trees were going to be watered.

Sincerely,

Berdenna Thompson
Arbor Day Chairperson

Big Houses response

I was at the "big house" meeting and let's not fool ourselves that is what it was about. We were told that Clarion was going to approach this study in an unbiased manner. Yeah right! It took them all of thirty seconds to bring up the issue of big houses and cities in which they addressed the problem, none of which had any bearing on Sanibel. That they were biased did not shock me. They, after all were hired by Mayor Theiss, Vice Mayor Walsh, and Councilperson Workman and were expected to parrot their views on this subject. The same views held by some members of the planning commission and the devoted followers of the Earth Charter.

Marilyn

What did shock me was the bigotry. One of the Clarion associates said that the island must protect itself from the kind of people who would move into this community. Now just what kind of people was she talking about? Was she talking about ax murders? No. Was she talking about sex predators? Nope. Was she talking about terrorists? Not a chance. She was talking about (and you may want to cover your children's eyes for this) people who had worked hard and had accumulated some money and wanted to buy or build a house on Sanibel. She did suggest that we build a lot more inexpensive houses so that the people who work in stores and restaurants can afford to live here. Let's see, she had been on the island what, a couple of hours?

The most blatant bigotry came from islander Barbara Anderson, an ardent supporter of no big houses. Among other things she said we should all live in Florida type houses. Well, I was born in Florida and have lived here most of my life and if we adhere to that we better all tear down our houses and build chickees because those are the real old Florida houses. She decried houses built of stucco with tile roofs. She called the houses in the Sanctuary "Mc Mansions" and monstrosities and said that the people who owned them were the nouveau riche. She went on to say that Sanibel was fine as long as Midwesterners peopled it and it was when the "others" came in is that we began to have problems. Fortunately, sanity prevailed and she was roundly booed.

Let's talk about those evil people from whom we must protect ourselves. You know, the ones who live in houses bigger than ours. Many of them are part timers and thus have a much higher tax base than those of us who live here permanently. According to the five-year budget committee report we are facing a deficit situation and we need to increase our tax base. Who are these people from whom our friends from Clarion will protect us? They are the ones giving their time to various island projects. They are the ones contributing to CROW and BIG ARTS and theaters, and churches and conservation groups and the Shell Museum and they are at the head of the line when it comes to giving money to purchase land so that it can be held forever in conservation.

It was of course, no coincidence that this meeting was held on the Wednesday before Labor Day when you can count on the fewest number of home owners being in residence. Had this been held when they were here there would not be a facility on Sanibel large enough to hold them.

Did anything good come out of this meeting? As a matter of fact several things.

First, we learned that we could stop this contract at any point. My suggestion is now. But this is not going to happen. This hugely divisive issue is going to play itself out. We already know what the Clarion is going to do. They are attempting to change ordinances based on such a biased report is going to cause a firestorm the likes of which this island has never seen.

Secondly, the best idea of the evening was that no comparison of housing on Sanibel should include those homes that do not meet FEMA standards. That only stands to reason because when we do get the hurricane they will not be able to be built back to current configuration. We must hold Clarion to this issue.

Thirdly, and best of all, it is not that long to March when we will have the opportunity to change the balance on city council.

A Chiaroscuro illustration of the Sunshine Law

By Michael Hannan

"Are we on yet, Eddie?"

The technician counted the newswoman down from five, folding his fingers. When he pointed his index finger at her, she began speaking.

"This is I. B. Quidnunc here for Channel WOWW News. I'm on the steps of the State Supreme Court in Tallahassee, covering what the media has dubbed the Morton/Cargill Gang of Five Case. This court has convened to determine if the members of the De-salinization Committee of the Communal Ken Initiative of the City of Sanibel, Florida have violated the Sunshine Law. I've just received word that the jury has finished its deliberations and is about to enter the courtroom. I can't see if they have yet because the court is so crowded that I can't get past the doorway. Also, since I'm bringing you this broadcast live, I'm not allowed in the courtroom.

"Wait, now, I can see Judge Athelstan entering from his chambers. Yes, that's his gavel rap calling the court to order. He is asking Madame foreperson, if the jury has reached a verdict. She stands and says, that yes, they have.

"Before she begins, let me catch our viewers up on the instructions that the Judge gave the jury before he sequestered them. The Judge clarified the reasonable person clause of deliberations. He told the jury that reasonableness had nothing to do with the law, nor with the circumstances of the situation, but only with whether the defendants had broken the law. Oh, now the Judge is signaling the defense legal team and the defendants to stand.

"Judge Athelstan asks Madame foreperson to respond to each of the three counts of the indictment. Madame foreperson is looking at her notes. The court is absolutely quiet. She pauses, and here comes the verdict."

"On the first count of the charge, failure to provide adequate notice," she reads. "We find the defendants not guilty. While Times New Roman 10 is a suspicious font, there is no proscription against it in Section 286.011, F.S. Also, even though the notice was posted in an unlighted area and technically it appeared for only 36 hours in the sunshine, it was posted 72 hours before the meeting."

Sheldon Richman • USPSTF recommendation: newest medical threat around?

How would you like it if every time you went to your doctor, for whatever reason, he asked, "Over the past two weeks, have you felt down, depressed, or hopeless? Have you felt little interest or pleasure in doing things?"

Get ready for a further medicalization of the common tribulations of life.

The U.S. Preventative Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommends that primary-care physicians ask their adult patients those questions, or use some other depression-screening method, whenever they visit. The USPSTF, a panel of independent, private-sector experts in prevention and primary care, is part of the federal Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality.

Under the recommendation, if a patient answers yes to the questions, it would trigger full diagnostic interviews that use standard diagnostic criteria to determine the presence or absence of specific depressive disorders, such as major depression and/or dysthymia, which is defined as a chronic low-grade depression. If a disorder is found, treatment may include antidepressants [drugs] or specific psychotherapeutic approaches (e.g., cognitive behavioral therapy or brief psycho-social counseling), alone or in combination.

The USPSTF says the recommendation is valid because depressive disorders are common, chronic and costly. The task force estimates that 5 percent to 9 percent of adults in primary-care settings suffer from depression and that primary-care physicians miss half of them. The prime candidates are said to be women, those with a family history of depression, the unemployed, and those with chronic disease.

I have two questions of my own. What if a patient refuses to answer the questions? Or, having been diagnosed with depression, what if he refuses to be treated?

These aren't smart-aleck questions. As psychiatrist Thomas Szasz has pointed out, in the regular medical context, it is well recognized that there is a difference between being ill and being a patient. Illness refers to an objective medical condition, ascertainable by diagnostic tests that reveal a problem with cells, tissues, or organs. Being a patient is a social role that isn't established until freely undertaken.

A diabetic is not a patient until he chooses to be treated by a doctor. Just as one can be ill without being a patient, so one can be a patient without being ill (by faking, say). The rules are different in the mental health context. First, there are no objective diagnostic tests to confirm or disconfirm the diagnosis of depression. Psychiatrists do not even perform physical examinations, writes Dr. Szasz in "Pharmacracy." Despite all the pharmaceutical commercials on television about chemical imbalances, depression and other mental illnesses are not detected through blood or urine tests.

That's because they are metaphorical illnesses, like homesickness. As the USPSTF indicates, diagnosis is based on what people tell doctors. (This doesn't mean depressed people don't suffer, only that they don't have a disease.)

Another difference is that in the mental-health context, the patient role does not require consent. It can be imposed through commitment to a mental hospital and, now, outpatient commitment. Thus, someone who does not regard himself as sick and does not wish to take potent, even risky drugs can be legally be forced to do so at a psychiatrist's command rubber-stamped by a judge. However, as Szasz writes in his newest book, Liberation by Oppression, the belief that mental diseases are curable with antidepressants and anti-psychotics is founded on faith, not fact.

Hence, policies based on it are destined to fail. Policies such as the one being pushed by the USPSTF.

These considerations along with a final element make this a potential horror story. As tort law now stands, a psychiatrist in private practice can be held liable if a patient kills himself or someone else. This is the so-called duty-to-warn principle. Under the USPSTF recommendation, if a person commits murder or suicide, will others be able to sue his primary-care physician for not asking the depression-screening questions or for not imposing treatment? If so, a patient who refuses to answer the questions or accept treatment will pose a threat to his doctor's practice. This will assuredly be detrimental to the confidential doctor-patient relationship.

As Dr. Szasz writes, Every psychiatrist has been transformed into an undercover agent. The USPSTF recommendation would make every primary-care physician an undercover agent, too.

Pet otter survives flea powder poisoning

Following six days of round the clock attention, Winston is regaining his health and cuddly character.

The 8-year-old Asian otter, one of several exotic animals in Nora and Don Dietlein's household, almost died last week from flea powder poisoning. His companion, 4-year-old female otter Clemantine, succumbed to the toxicity.

While getting organized in their Poinciana Circle house, the couple boarded both otters at a private zoo in northern Florida. The animals quickly became the target of fleas.

Both were doused with a flea powder commonly used on dogs and cats, but for the otters, the powder was highly toxic. Clemantine died within a day of the application. Winston, with the aid of Nora's tender loving care and expertise as a biochemist, endured through six crisis-filled days.

Swimmer pleads innocent

Lee County Sheriff's Department's crackdown on nude bathing at Bowman's Beach led to the appearance in court of a Miami man on an indecent exposure charge.

But the man, Donald E. Bishop, 43, pled innocent to the misdemeanor charge. Bishop said he does not believe his behavior fits the definition of indecent exposure in the state statutes. He claims he was not nude sunbathing, nor did he expose himself to anyone since he was taking a swim.

He said he plans to be represented at his Oct. 5 trial by his own attorney and one from the South Florida Free Nude Association, which has advocated nude beaches in the Miami area.

State inspectors say no pink hibiscus mealybugs yet

Island Gardening
Ron Simpson

If you have a question for Ron Simpson to answer in his column, you can reach him via e-mail at ronsimpson@earthlink.net, or by snail mail at P.O. Box 809, Sanibel, FL 33957.

Dear Ron Thank you for following up on my questions (about a possible local infestation of pink hibiscus mealybugs) in your column (Island Reporter, Aug. 15). Last Tuesday the inspector from the Department of Agriculture came out. He doesn't believe it's the Caribbean Pink Hibiscus Mealybug, but took samples and is having them analyzed anyway.

He said that I'd get a report in a couple of weeks. He said that he couldn't recommend what to feed it with, because if anything went wrong we'd sue the federal government. It's a great world we live in, isn't it?

My neighbor had brought a sample to the Lee County Extension Service and they also said they were just [ordinary] mealybugs. They recommended Diazonon. I had been using Orthene, which as an aside in our conversation, the inspector mentioned as being good because it is systemic. I also brought a sample over to ten Native Plant Conservation Center.

They had never heard of the pink hibiscus mealybug and had not seen your column or the follow-up in the News-Press. They dismissed it as mealybug that's prevalent here on the Island. They were upset with me for using Orthene and recommended soap and water, which I didn't think would do the trick.

I wish I could say I've had success, but I cut back a majority of my fire bush this morning. I also discovered it has spread to my remaining hibiscus tree in the back of my property that hadn't been previously attacked.

I'm really worried because it is also on a beautiful very large palm leaf. Tomorrow I'm having a company come in to professionally spray. My husband doesn't think it will do any good, but it breaks my heart to see my shrubs destroyed without doing anything.

I appreciate your responding to my correspondence. Thank you so much — Kay Liptak, Sanibel.

Dear Mrs. Liptak: At least we can take heart in knowing that the pink hibiscus mealybug (Maconellicoccus hirsutus) has not yet been identified as taking up residence in Southwest Florida.

To recap, this vile critter is a sap-sucking insect appearing in "cotton-like" masses on almost any part of a plant, and in some cases, covering the entire plant. Though its life cycle is less than a month, during that time a mature female mealybug can produce up to 50,000 eggs.

More than 200 plant species are susceptible to the pink hibiscus mealybug, which feeds on the plants, sap, while releasing a toxic, often fatal, substance that is easily spread by the wind or other insects.

And as I reported in my column, this mealybug — last seen in plants on Caribbean Islands — has now been spotted in Broward, Miami-Dade and St. Lucie counties on Florida's east coast.

As far as controlling the ordinary mealybugs, I would not suggest using Diazonon. As far as chemicals go, Orthene is probably the most effective and one of the few insecticides that is safe for hibiscus. As you mentioned, it is systemic, meaning that is absorbed by the plant and kills insects when they feed on the leaves.

The danger in using any chemical insecticide is that good living things — such as ladybugs, garden lizards, birds and butterflies — are also endangered. An insecticidal soap, such as Safer's, will often control common garden insects, and so will "pure" soaps, such as Ivory. I wish you the best of luck in getting your landscape restored to its former beauty.

Knowing the value of water

By Steve Brookman
Guest Writer

The cashier runs your jug of pure mountain spring water over the scanner, the bar code is read, and $1.69 appears on a screen in front of you. You now know the value of water, end of story. Of course it's not that cut and dry (or wet.) Economics is one of the fuzzy sciences with too many variables and nuances to always give sane answers. Supply and demand should relate to price and cost, but the price of a good or service can have little or no relationship to its value. Is a $25,000,000 ball player really worth 1,000 times more than a $25,000 8th grade math and science teacher?

Water and most other components of natural systems provide more examples of goods with skewed values. While essential, they have little or no far greater than the demand. Natural resources have fueled our growth. Water, air, trees and minerals, essentially free for the taking, are converted into tangible assets with value: food, lumber, energy, etc. Without clean water, breathable air, forests, and swamps to stabilize, purify and provide habitat there would be no economy. But our economic system never put them on the ledger, so they have little value, an accounting error that makes the Enron scandal pale by comparison!

Over the years it has become increasingly obvious that the supply/demand curve has shifted as the human population has risen almost exponentially while the quantity and quality of the natural resources that we depend upon have been on an opposite tack.

Not having an adequate supply of potable water is not an option. There are two ways to assure that we have a sustainable supply of water: manage the watershed, or engineer solutions.

The case for managing the watershed is much more than tree hugging or anti-growth sentiments. It is based on economics. It costs less and brings with it a myriad of other economic benefits: water supply, flood value in our economic system. This is understandable as historically the supply of natural capital was and drought mitigation, pollution control, fish and wildlife nursery and habitat, and recreational uses. In 1997, New York City ran the numbers and saved its citizens over $5 billion by deciding to protect the natural systems of their watershed rather than build mechanical systems to do the same thing: provide clean drinking water. Nature showed its value was a sound economic investment.

The cost of designing and building engineered solutions (aquifer storage and recovery wells, desalinization plants, reservoirs, etc.), as well as their maintenance, needs to be compared with the cost of watershed management. The costs of system failures due to age, human error, acts of God, natural disasters and even human ill-will must also be factored into the equation when evaluating watershed management strategies and engineered solutions.

When all factors are entered into the ledger the choice seems clear. We can pay now to preserve the watershed and reap the benefits for generations to come, or we can continue our present course hoping to be able to design solutions that will solve the problems of our making, spending many times the amount that conservation would cost and committing future generations to forever pay to operate, maintain and rebuild our "solutions."

The latest on the mysterious black water is...

By Amy Fleming
Staff Writer

Some of the test results are in on the strange black cloud of water that was seen creeping up on Sanibel a few weeks ago.

"What we've got are two different blooms," said Scott Willis, of the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission. "Around the Sanibel area, its cyanobacteria and diatoms. There have been no fish kills associated with either bloom."

Cyanobacteria is a non-toxic algae. The early reports of 'dead water' were misleading according to Willis.

"The oxygen levels were fairly high. Its possible that with the dark water there was some avoidance, particularly with bait fish, just because it was a darkened area."

The assumption at this point is that the bloom came from the Caloosahatchee River, since the chlorophyll has a fresh water signature.

A report issued by the FFWCC August 28 states the blooms "do point to a riverine source. The rainfall in the southwest Florida region approached, and may have surpassed, record conditions in July, and rainfall during both June and July 2002 were six to eight inches above normal. Diatom blooms and discolored water are...often associated with periods of high river discharge."

The report went on to conclude that the discolored water was "dominated by healthy living organisms typical to Florida waters."

Lighthouses: fixed sentinels so

By Michael Hannan
Staff writer

The first lighthouse, the lofty Pharos of Alexandria, near the mouth of the Nile, designed by the Greek architect Sostratos, was completed under Ptolemy II, about 280 B.C. While its height and fame have never been surpassed, and while it is considered one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, lighthouse construction has come a long way.

There are three major factors to lighthouse construction: height, light, and site. Aside from rhyming, all three factors are closely related. Light — no matter how intense — has a limited range because of the Earth's curvature. So, not only must the light be sufficient for the area, the tower has to be tall enough to project the light.

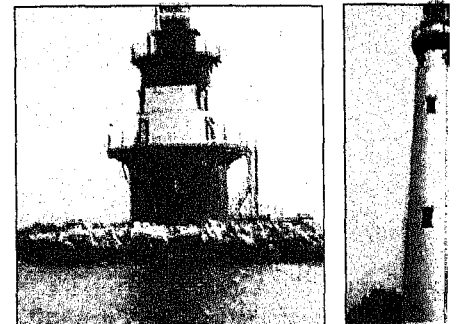

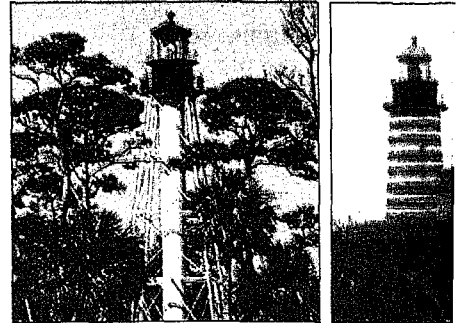

Early lighthouses in the United States were constructed of wood or stone. The stone towers were built simply by piling one mortared stone on top of another. Since the walls contained no additional support, they had to be tapered so the base could support the ever-increasing weight. The higher the tower, the thicker the base. Colonial lighthouses peaked at about 90 feet, so we may assume that this was the maximum practical height for a tower built during that era.

During the early 1800's, cut stones and brick were used for the first time. This method permitted the construction of taller and stronger towers because the weight could be more evenly distributed.

In 1822, Augustin Fresnel, a French physicist perfected a lens that was to revolutionize the lighting of lighthouses. Prisms at the top and the bottom of the lens refracted light so that it was concentrated in a narrow sheet. At the same time the light was intensified at the center of the lens by a powerful magnifying glass.

Fresnel devised seven orders or sizes of lenses depending on the power of light needed. The first-order lens was the largest and most powerful, generally used as a seacoast light. The smallest was a sixth-order lens for use in harbors. For whatever reason, he dubbed one size the three-and-a-half-order lens.

With this invention and with new engineering technologies lighthouses became much our country was expanding consideration, a design that the coast of Maine would sounds.

In the 1830's, Alexander A. protected, screw-pile weight, wooden tower on tipped with cork-screw lilt into the soft bottoms of permitted the construction support the weight of a heavy tower.

Screw-pile technology continued to be enhanced to allow for different lighthouse needs; for example, the Florida reef lighthouses needed first order lenses weighing a number of tons. Therefore, they had to be tall structures, so screw flanges, large, iron foot plates were added above the screw tip in order to diffuse the pressure caused by the weight of the tower.

The screw-pile structure that revolutionized lighthouses in the bays and sounds of southern waters was not feasible for northern waters due to the screw-pile's vulnerability to swift currents and ice. Lighthouses in these areas needed a stronger hold on the sea bottom. In 1845, Lawrence Potts, an English physician and inventor, sank a section of hollow tubing into the sea floor. He then attached a powerful pump that sucked up sand, allowing the tube to sink deeper into the sea bottom than had other technologies.

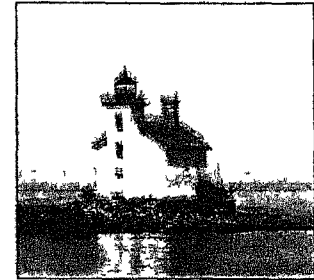

Beginning in the 1870's, crib foundation construction was used extensively on the Great Lakes. Wooden cribs were constructed ashore, towed to the site, and then filled with stones. Once the crib had settled to the bottom, it was capped with concrete or some other masonry. The introduction of reinforced concrete once again changed the direction of lighthouse construction. This material was in many ways superior to iron and steel. It was cheaper, required much less maintenance, and was extremely strong. Many lighthouses built in places susceptible to earthquakes, most notably on the west coast, were made of reinforced concrete.

Post World War II technology permitted lighthouses to be built far off shore. These structures were based on technology developed by the oil industry. The legs of the lighthouse were driven as much as 170 feet into the seabed. These towers were designed to withstand 65 foot seas and 125 mile per hour winds.

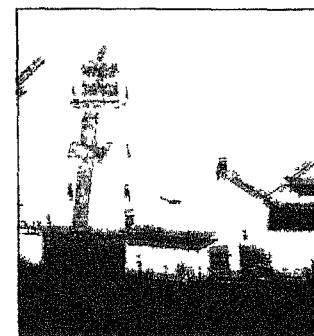

Today, Large Navigational Buoys, LORAN, and global positioning have considerably diminished the importance of lighthouses as guides for mariners. And while they are more efficient and less costly, they lack the human drama of a light-keeper sending a signal seaward, across dark waters, cautioning mariners about rocks and reefs, shoals and headlands. What we have gained in technology, we have lost in romance. Perhaps, we haven't come quite as far as we think. - study — to help assist permit applicants and a plan examiner, adding an additional police officer and an administrative position for community education to work on issues like recycling and volunteer coordination. Two positions in City Hall's front office, currently held by temps, would be switched over to city employees. The part-time computer support position would be upgraded to full time.

The intern program for the Planning and Public Works department would also be continued from this summer.

"We got our money's worth from them," Zimomra said. "They were probably the hardest workers in City Hall."

Selected service enhancements and additional programs for the city's next fiscal year include:

- A $150,000 study of the redevelopment issue.
- Bicycle path improvements of $570,000.
- Increasing the Police Department training budget by $18,057.
- An additional radar/speed sign for $6,500.
- $500,000 for relocating the city's ball field and improvements at Sanibel Recreation Center, plus $200,000 for acquiring additional park land and another $200,000 for other park improvements.
- A new, $140,000 bicycle path and street sweeper.
- The first phases of upgrading the police department's computer system ($50,000) and converting the city's records to electronic format ($50,000).
- $500,000 for acquiring environmentally sensitive lands.
- Completing — if City Council so authorizes — the appropriately-sized home study for $90,000.

"Surprise erupts from the courtroom. Judge Athelstan is pounding his gavel in an attempt to restore order. The judge warns that he will clear the court if there is another outburst. ... Now that it is quiet, Madame foreperson continues reading from her notes."

"On the second count of the indictment, failure to record the minutes of the meeting, we also find the defendants not guilty. While minutes for that meeting do not today exist, the members of the jury felt that the defendants had made a good-faith attempt, not only to record them, but also to retrieve them when their laptop washed overboard. That they managed to recover the computer after several dives attests to their effort. Moreover, since the salt water had destroyed the machine, the jury felt that there was no basis of malfeasance aforethought."

"On the final count of the indictment, attempting to hold a closed meeting by putting undue obstacles and restrictions in the way of public access, we find the defendants guilty. That decision was arrived at after a very careful scrutiny of the subsections of Section 286.011, F.S."

"Specifically:

"Subsection 3-d - while the meeting was ultimately held in the environs of the City of Sanibel, it began at 6:00 a.m. at Barnacle Bill's Marina in Estero. That ten members of the public were present did not mitigate the charge, nor did the purported reason for holding the meeting on a boat (to collect water samples and core samples of the Gulf's floor), nor was the jury swayed by the defendants' explanation that the Committee had to take advantage of the combination of tide and estuary flow that existed at that time."

"Subsection 4-1 - the boat that they rented wasn't large enough for all of the members of the public who braved the hour and the elements to attend. Two people had to be left on the dock. Moreover, there was no access for the physically challenged; nor was there Dramamine for the nautically challenged; and there weren't enough USCG- approved life vests aboard."

"Subsection 4-4 - while the Committee did allow cameras and tape recorders at the meeting, the wind and the waves and the absence of Dramamine made their use just about impossible."

"Subsection 4-2 - the conversations of the committee members were inaudible because most of them took place 40 feet below the surface. That the Committee members themselves were limited to hand signals and slate messages wasn't sufficient mitigation. And on at least one occasion, members of the Committee met separately. Some were on board; others, overboard."

"Subsection 5-2-b - the Committee provided no opportunity for public participation. Had they provided a SCUBA-certified stenographer or bathyscaphe, we might have found in the defendants' favor on this charge. That they did not, suggests to the jury, that Committee had flagrantly violated the public's right to know."

"Judge Athelstan thanks the jury for doing their civic duty. Now he is addressing the defendants, asking them if they have anything to say before he passes sentence?"

You won't believe this. How brazen! Right after the defendants have been found guilty of inaudible conversation, they are whispering among themselves and to their lawyers. I wouldn't be surprised if the judge found them guilty of contempt as well. They have stopped now and the lead council for the Gang of Five is about to address the court."

"Your honor, our clients were doing valuable scientific research that could reduce their community's reliance on the aquifer they share with the other communities of Southwest Florida. They were just trying to serve the task for which they had volunteered; they never meant to break the law."

"Counselor, the road to hell is paved with good intentions. It makes no difference what your clients thought, just as it makes no difference that the judiciary is not held to the Sunshine Law; or that the legislative and executive branches are only partially bound by it. Your clients are volunteers who have violated a sacred duty entrusted to them by their city's government. That they broke that trust, I find despicable. Therefore, I hereby sentence each of them to an indefinite period of service on the Sisyphus task force. This court is adjourned."

"There you have it. Harsh actions call for harsh penalties. This I. B. Quidnunc for Channel WOWW News reminding you that whenever there is a late-breaking story, I'll be there to cover it, because I know that you want to know."

"OK, I.B., we're clear."

"Eddie, what's the Sisyphus task force?"

"Dunno, I. B., but I'll bet it ain't rock and roll."

Time to score a goal!

By Angie Pinault
8th Grade Reporter

This year soccer is really big at The Sanibel School!

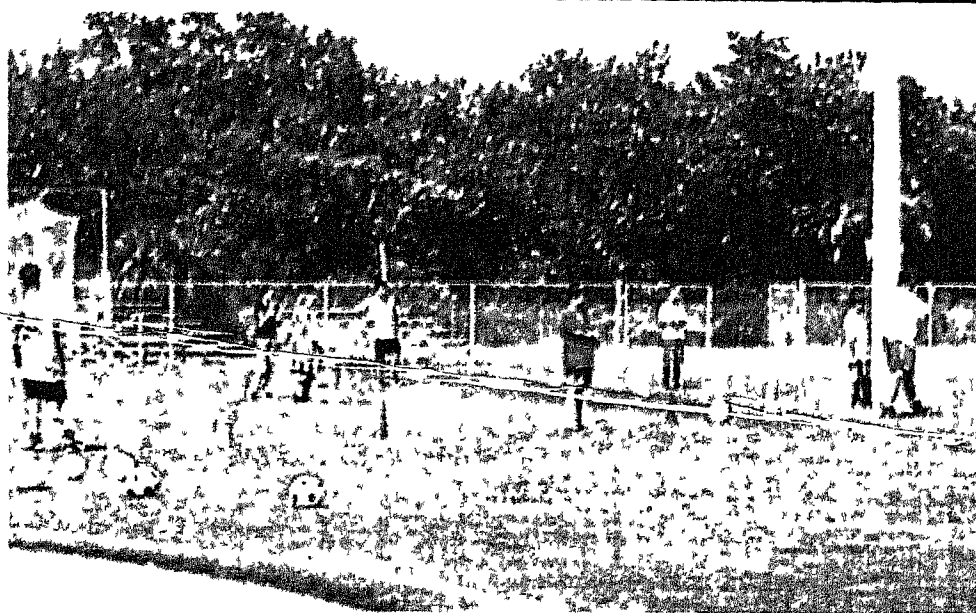

Two great coaches, Dan Mitchell and Mrs. D. Kridle, will guide the players throughout this year's soccer season running from August to October with student athletes playing all around Fort Myers, Naples, and Bonita.

The Sanibel School soccer team is made up of middle school students. Twenty-four players tried out with both guys and two eighth grade girls hoping to make the team. Soccer tryouts started August 13 to prepare for the first game of the season on September 4 at the Canterbury School. The first home game will be on September 9.

Soccer is a favorite sport around the world and the benefits of playing include learning the rules of soccer and how to play the sport, getting healthy exercise, developing teamwork, making friends, and experiencing the excitement of playing against other schools!

This year's team includes Kit Antalick, Tyler Baer, Terrence Burney, Matthew Cacioppo, Alec Cohn, Andrew Corke, Pedro De La conception, Britt DeGenero, Rob Ham, Alexis Healy, Wesley Hoffman, Chris Larsen, Justin Messinger, Scott Messinger, Joel Mitchell, Sean Murphey, Guy Pepitone, Erik Richardson, Nick Rinaldi, David Roberts, Crystal Robinson, Enrique Salazar, and Zack See.

Good luck to coaches and players as The Sanibel School's team enters its fourth season!

Students take the reins

The Sanibel School elected their student government officers on August 28, 2002. The Sanibel middle school students cast their votes for a 6th grade president which went to Nick Carriero, 7th grade president to Brenna Williams, and 8th grade president to Abby Traucht. The student government's vice president is Sabrina Bunch with secretary Erik Richardson and treasurer Brandi Rider, all eighth graders. Kasey Harrell, another eighth student, will serve as president for the 2002-2003 school year.

Sixth, seventh, and eighth grade presidents will be in charge of voicing their grades' ideas and opinions and attending all of the meetings.

The vice president of Sanibel student government will work very closely with the president Kasey Harrell. Along with working together they will also run the meetings and the student government program together.

The secretary, Erik Richardson, will be in charge of taking minutes containing facts from each meeting and will also be in charge of making sure each advisory representative has a copy to share with their advisory classmates.

Brandi Rider, the treasurer, will keep track of all the money and will work with Mrs. Schulte the school's bookkeeper to keep records of money earned from each fundraiser and spent on each project.

Good luck to the student government with the first fundraiser of the year which is selling shaker poms for the upcoming pep rally on September 6.

Pinault, Brandi Rider, Abby Traucht, and Brenna Williams.

Time to fiesta

By Cherie Gelpi, Sarah Kukol, and Lauren White
Eighth Grade Reporters

As The Sanibel School's students returned to school for a new and exciting school year, a few new teachers awaited their arrival. One of those is Ms. Nohora Rivera who is teaching Spanish to both elementary and middle school students.

Ms. Rivera transferred to our beautiful island from New Jersey because she loves tropical weather and thought she would have a great teaching opportunity here on Sanibel. She noticed that the Sanibel School had advertised a job opening for a Spanish teacher while looking at the Lee County website.

Ms. Rivera taught biology and anatomy at the University in Columbia where she is originally from. Later, in New Jersey, she taught Spanish in a Catholic school which was kindergarten through eighth grade. She transferred from there to a Spanish position in a public middle school.

We welcome Ms. Rivera and hope she makes herself at home here because we look forward to having a great year with her while she helps expand Sanibel students' knowledge of Spanish.

Another Shining Starr

By Sarah Kukol, Lauren White, and Cherie Gelpi

Ms. Starr Watson, the new Exceptional Student Education (ESE) teacher at the Sanibel School has started sharing her twinkle of kindness with her students from grades kindergarten to 8th grade.

Ms. Watson was introduced at Open House on August 7th and loves her job working with the students. "I like the school, both staff and kids. I am looking forward to a great year," said Ms. Watson.

The new ESE teacher worked at Caloosa Middle School prior to working here but says that working here has been a relief from driving an hour to and from school.

Ms. Watson was born and raised in Michigan and has been enjoying the tropical weather, here in Florida for one and a half years.

We welcome Ms. Watson to our school, and we're looking forward to seeing her shining smile in our hallways.

Board Games: new challenge

By Whitney Wolanin
7th Grade Reporter

Board games are coming to the Sanibel School!

Ms. Greer, the new science teacher, took on the new elective. This year, students will be playing many board games that suit the players' interests and also play outdoor sports.

Although it sounds like just fun and "games," students will learn strategy, team-building skills, and logic.

Already, a chess tournament has begun with most of the students in the class participating in the event. The tournament will take place every Tuesday and Thursday.

Besides chess, the students will be playing Risk, Monopoly, Bop-it, and Stratego and participating in sports that have been taught in physical education.

Let the games begin!

Sanibel Students will be blowing horns

By Angie Pinault
8th Grade Reporter

This year at The Sanibel School we have a few new electives for the education of the students. Band is one of these. Middle grades students will be learning how to use some great instruments taught by Mrs. Skinner, the school's music and art teacher.

This new and exciting elective was added because it will provide students with instruction that will develop musical and performance skills.

For years middle schools in the county have had bands, but it is quite a surprise to see that a small school like The Sanibel School had begun one.

Sanibel's band has fourteen students: sixth graders Alec Cohn, Sam Halverson, and Derek Slabosz; seventh graders Skyler Bauer, Connor Fratus, Ashley Marks, Justin Peeke, and Brenna Williams; as well as eighth graders Margie McDowell, Scott Messinger, Karl Murdock, Zack See, and Tess Walsh.

Band members will perform at pep rallies and other school events.

Check the Monday Reporter for news of upcoming performances and support the first Sanibel Middle Grades band!
