ENERGY...

OR THE LACK OF IT

We will remember this year most for its long gas lines and high fuel cost. Energy, or lack of it, was suddenly important to everybody, including students.

The country's energy problem at once became our own personal energy problem, and if that meant no beach party on Labor Day, it was a true crisis.

Energy awareness penetrated all facets of our lives. While the Kinks sang on the car radio about not being able to find a gallon of gas, we waited hours in stand-still lines to buy five dollars worth at half-gallon prices. No longer objects of worship, our cars became symbols of oppression as the gas gauge slipped closer and closer to E in an effort to stretch our fuel dollar.

If the prices seemed more bearable this fall it was only because then we didn't have the spectre of odd-even gas rationing. Even if the gas supply seemed less limited, few of us forgot the fuel frenzy and the time of the ever hungry gas tank.

Uneasiness & Expectation

BELOW: Student Council members prepare the "Welcome" sign for returning students.

It's a feeling you get, a few days before the official start of school. Deep in your stomach you have a little sense of uneasiness and of expectation. Each time you go down Washington Road you pass the school and read the threat on the sign, "Welcome back." You say to whoever you are with, "I can't bear the thought of going back to that," but you both know you mean you can't wait.

ABOVE: Deep thought can be seen on Linda Almeida's face as she pours over her first test.

BELOW: A vase of flowers helps to symbolize the end of a lovely summer and the return to school.

The Air Is Charged

The day finally comes, the school finally opens. Sure the teams have been practicing for weeks, but the first day of class is what really counts. You stagger through the halls, unwilling to believe it hasn't changed. You meet old friends, and you chatter about the teachers you've seen so far. The air is charged — you're waiting for the boom to drop. Finally the day ends, and whether you had 5 or 8 periods you can't help thinking how fast it went.

TOP: Concentration is etched on the face of Dr. Evanovich as he prepares future lesson plans. RIGHT: During the first days of school, Donna Modzelewski adds some color to the new art wing.

The Heat of the Moment

The next day you're back, and somehow that seems unnatural. You feel a little put upon, you've already had school for the year! You wonder when it's ever going to end, and leave you at peace. The day ultimately passes, and others follow. Soon you're in the middle of the year.

The classrooms are colder now that the crisis has turned down the thermostats. The cold is only noticed at the start of class, and never while you're in the hallways.

It's Not What It Used To Be

ABOVE: Muffler repairs are the order of the day as Jeff Brodzinski gets a hand from a fellow classmate. RIGHT: There are many reports to be done in a school year and Barbara Koch knows they all take a lot of research.

Life goes on during the year like it always has. You may be concerned about where you're going to get gas on the weekend for your date, but you'll still go to the same places, and drive just as fast. When you find a job, you spend your break thinking about how you've worked all day for a half a tank of gas. You try to decide if it's more important to go cruising around town that night, or to eat during the next week.

You long for last year, you think how good it was when you were a junior (sophomore, freshman . . .). Last winter is discussed, and those snow days look so attractive now, but you wish you had school when you make them up at Easter. You wonder what the summer is going to be like after a fall that brought a hurricane on September 6, and snow on October 10.

It Has Its Moments . . .

And there's always school. You try to schedule guidance appointments for gym class, so you don't have to sit on that cold, cold floor in your shorts. You stay up late one night for an essay, and you pray for a power failure to shut out the lights so you can go to sleep. Some heartless rumor-monger suggests that the heating-oil shortage has been caused by cafeteria food.

The teachers find there's no way to take an accurate roll call until three minutes into class. Half of the class rounds the corners of a 43-minute period to stay in the hall and discuss the shows on T.V., or the clothes you bought with the money from your new job, or the gas mileage your new car doesn't get.

Degrees of Change

Warm weather comes. You stop worrying about the radiators in the room, and turn to the windows. Classes that were suspended because it was too cold to think are cancelled because it's too hot to move. You're forced to admire the delicate irony of the fact that even if the school had central air conditioning they wouldn't be allowed to use it anyway.

When the day ends you give up doing your homework to "go out and enjoy the fresh air," because all winter you had to give up doing your homework to go to the movies, or go bowling, or go over somebody's house to listen to records. Nobody hangs out at Woodbridge Center, they've all gone to the beach.

The Flame That Burned Brightest

The year ends, and everything has changed. You swear you'll never let go of your old friends and you can't wait to meet all those new people at college. You wonder what it's like to leave home, and you wonder how you ever lived through this year of shortages and crises.

You won't learn the truth until years later, that this year was the most full of any you ever had, and that you were the flame that burned brightest through the year. It will take a longer while until you realize that on Graduation Day 1980 you left the truest home you'll ever know.

To some students, school is definitely the darker side of life, but to others there is a lighter side. These people make the most of their stay in the building by remaining after school for hours working for some organization. These students make an honest effort towards bettering life in their school and community.

This is the Lighter Side, with students and advisors co-operating creatively in a relaxed atmosphere. Students work now because they want to, on things that appeal especially to them.

Students continue their school relations by "hanging out" at the movies, at parties or at their favorite fast foods places.

Showing that school doesn't always mean anguish and torture, but that there can also be benefits, good times and personal satisfaction, energetic students participate in the Lighter Side.

Quo Vadis 1980 evolved from a unique mixture of personalities. Faced with the task of outdoing previous yearbook accomplishments, a pressure intensified by the success of Quo Vadis '79, this year's staff began early by attending a combination training seminar-swim party held in August at the publisher's house. Only after diving head first into the chore of choosing a theme and cover design were the heat-stricken editors allowed to jump feet first into the swimming pool.

When they weren't fighting over whose turn it was to use the padded chair, managing editor John Lynch (bottom center) and layout editor Grace Karaffa (bottom left) could be found conversing over previous planners in the left rear corner of A-207. With techni-cropper and techni-ruler close at hand, the pair set out early to create a graphic layout structure that would be unique to this year's book.

At the opposite corner of the room, advisor Ms. Joseph and managing editor Sandra Check (below) could always be found diligently supervising the entire production, scanning brownlines, approving articles, and detailing the week's work schedule.

Copy editor Rob Butchko, dubbed the "Disappearing Prince" for his habit of leaving rooms without leaving a forwarding address, could sometimes be found at the typewriter, intermittently clicking away and pausing to absorb creative inspiration from his radio. The radio was in direct competition with Ms. Joseph's headaches, inspiring cries of "Robert, will you please lower that noise!"

ing the center of the room. Caught in the never ending maze of picture schedules and coach interviews, these editors found themselves in constant pursuit of the "exceptional candid." Similarly, the cheery two-some of Linda Rogers (top center) and Lisa Cypa, appropriately appointed as the Lighter Side editors, were faced with the age old problem of organizing interesting group pictures.

Although good photographs are major concerns and universal to all editors, they are particularly important to class section editors. Senior editors Maria Zabaleta and Dawn Zollinger (opposite bottom right) met the tedious work of sorting portraits with enthusiasm, quickly learning to circulate from place to place in their quest to find a place to complete their work. Underclass editors Pam Sowley (below right) and Lynda Giovenco were able to sympathize, having been mutually unassigned to a designated area. When business editor Lynne Kowzan (bottom far left) finished her chores in the economic world, she joined the ranks of the class editors and lent helpful hands and useful ideas to less fortunate editors who still had to complete their sections.

Adding a new dimension to the Curriculum section, editors Lynne Jones (opposite, top right) and Laura Saltzman worked on personalizing the faculty unit of the book.

To the staff of the yearbook, and to the untitled helpers such as editor assistants Rich Platkin and Jerry Lebeda, and "charismatic" staffer Paul La Plante, yearbook work, while often a chore, was always an experience.

Talent Expected to Yield Third 1st Place

It isn't easy following up a success. That was the obstacle facing the literary magazine, as Images scored a First Place in the Columbia Scholastic Press Association judging last year. As comparisons are inevitable, Mrs. Gelsinon assured another magazine "as good or better than last year."

Images was expanded, as pages of material were added. So, with equal quality, the eight editors were faced with a difficult task. Co-Art editors John Wisniewski and Vic Wolski picked a capable staff to illustrate the magazine with drawings and photographs. "We're both first year editors," Wolski explained, "so we might employ a unique style different from past years."

Short story editor Rob Butchko vowed a "representative selection of interesting and provoking writings." Poetry editor Brent Jaffe said he would stress variety with layout editor Penny Silletti promising "an eye-opening magazine." The production was controlled by editorial consultant Debbie Jackubowski, with typing editor Lori Wisniewski and business manager Les Morgan handling the mechanics of the magazine.

Advisor Mrs. Gelsinon felt that she had entrusted the publication to "a very capable staff of editors, who lent a unique creativity to the magazine."

Changed Outlook Gets Echo Lites Off the Ground

"... I don't throw it on the floor anymore." This was one student's response concerning the marked changes in quality, content and regularity of Echo Lites. Mrs. Shur, the new advisor, felt that the competence of the staff and their determination to see Echo Lites respected were the keys to change. The editors aimed at publishing an edition once a month, and were very successful. A monthly edition meant that news was more up to date and relevant to its readers. "We tried to print articles that had a direct effect on the students," explained Mrs. Shur. Feature articles about students, minimum wage for juvenile workers and the cancellation of the senior class trip had a direct bearing on the student body. Artwork of some kind appeared in every issue as well as "Faculty Flashback" which was a tribute to the "athletic achievements of the faculty," remarked editor Brent Jaffe.

"Last year, editorial work was done during homeroom because most of the editors were seniors and didn't want to stay after school," commented veteran editor Don Ferenci. "This year, meetings were held after school so there was more time put into the paper."

Mrs. Shur felt that cooperation within the staff resulted in a better quality paper. "The editors were a capable group of people who worked hard in making the newspaper the important type of school media it should be."

Mrs. Shur recapitulates the ideas being thrown at her.

Council Ranks 2nd in State

491. That was the lucky number guessed by custodian Mr. Angelone in the Student Council "Holiday Happiness" game. The happy winner won the jar of chocolate kisses and $5.00. The remainder of the funds raised was donated to JFK hospital.

A major organization, the Student Council not only held holiday flower sales for the March of Dimes, but also visited the JFK Hospital over the Christmas holiday. Elves and a Santa Claus cheered the children, not to mention the nurses of pediatrics.

For the 18th year, the Council was recognized as an Honor Student Council by the New Jersey Association of Student Councils. The consistently high ranking of this group is based on a foundation of experience. Head advisor Ms. Kwiatkowski has been involved in the Student Council since she was a student at Sayreville High. Continuing her venture into school politics, she became a Junior Counselor in college.

Mrs. Kratinski has also been a very effective advisor for many years. Her creative input has been invaluable to the Council's continuous success. The smooth running of our school government can be credited to the dedication of these advisors.

This active association received a ranking of 2nd place among New Jersey's Student Councils. From its advisors to its student membership, there is no lack of enthusiasm.

Everything Almost Went . . .

After a half-hour of havoc caused while the entire student body was crammed into the gym bleachers, the Student Council's version of "Almost Anything Goes" got off to a flying start. Beginning with the sack race and ending with the dreaded obstacle course, the competition marked the end of a week-long effort to promote school spirit.

Egged on by a twenty-five dollar prize, members of each class competed in the week-long Blue and Gray contest. Throughout the week, both students and teachers were seen wearing such garb as Mexican sombreros, bandana covered T-shirts and country-western outfits. The success of Blue and Gray Week was especially apparent on Friday when the vast majority of students dressed in their respective class colors and over 90% of the faculty wore brown.

The seating problems which started off the "Almost Anything Goes" competition resulted in frayed nerves among faculty members and students, and caused questions over whether the assembly would be a success. However, these doubts were dispelled as soon as the contest got underway and the students reacted enthusiastically to the various events their classmates participated in. The highlight of the competition came about when referee Steve Medlin made a controversial decision and was hit in the face with a pie by an irate competitor.

To the junior class the assembly was especially enjoyable as they won both the basketball throw and the Anything Goes competition. As one student put it, "The assembly was not only fun, but added variety to the humdrum school life."

Fantasies of a Cartoon World

Homecoming Queen Veronica Spolowitz smiles after receiving her crown and cape.

Despite a scheduling conflict with SAT's and a postponement due to a downpour, Homecoming '79 and its festivities were in no way dampened.

The half-time was highlighted by Mark Bender's trumpet solo in "What I Did For Love."

The procession of queen candidates and class floats followed Homecoming Queen 1978, Debbie Richel, as she made her final turn around the stadium. The candidates were carried by the Student Council float, "Raggedy Ann and Andy and the Dolls." Cartoon characters were the stars of the day as each class developed its own rendition of its favorite comic strip. Seniors chose "Ziggy" and his dog "Fuzz," juniors designed a float for "Snoopy," and the sophomores put out a prize-winning effort for "Winnie the Pooh."

The climax of the afternoon's activities came with the crowning of the new Queen, Veronica Spolowitz. The day was one for reliving the fantasies of the cartoon world and rediscovering the joys of childhood, which we too soon leave behind.

Not "Just a Beauty Pageant" Any More

In recent years, cheerleading has grown from a popularity contest and a "beauty pageant" of sorts into a sport of its own. This growth was evident in this year's cheerleading squad. Although still popular members of the student body, the cheerleaders are athletes in their own right. The stunts and gymnastic maneuvers executed required great physical conditioning and self-discipline. The squad had to practice for many hours a week in order to keep in shape. For this reason, dedication played a large role in the characteristics necessary for all of the cheerleaders.

Under the direction of Mrs. Fehrle, veteran cheerleading coach, the girls worked diligently towards their goal of adding life to the games at which they cheered. With her help, they projected spirit throughout the football and basketball seasons. Through their banners and cheers, they helped to bolster the morales of not only the teams, but the spectators as well.

New uniforms added a touch of spirit to the squad. The brand new look added freshness and modernity to their style.

Both in the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat, the cheerleaders remained very enthusiastic. Spirit didn't wane just because of an unsuccessful effort by one of the teams. Spirit abounded when there was victory. The cheerleaders took their "sport" seriously, having an excellent attitude toward it and being very successful at it.

Marching to Success

The arrival of Mr. Timothy Ketterer as band director has brought many drastic changes to the marching unit. Gone are the last place finishes of previous years. Under the expert direction of Mr. Ketterer, the band scored highly in their competitions. Their achievements included a first place award in their division at the Woodbridge Christmas Parade, and a third place in the November 11 competition at Madison Central High School.

The number of drum majors was changed from the traditional two to one. To make up the void that the decrease caused, Mr. Ketterer established some new positions in the band. The additions of "Captain of the Band" and various section captains allowed more students to get more actively involved in the workings of the marching band.

The marching band did not only perform at football games and in competitions. They also enjoyed good, clean fun. The band parents held a Christmas Party at the YMCA. In front of a roaring fire everyone relaxed and enjoyed the spirit of Christmas.

Under the direction of Mr. Ketterer, the marching band evolved into a well rounded unit that gained the respect of the entire student body.

Innovative Approach to Music Brings Honors

"Get Psyched!" Those were the director's favorite words and thus they became the motto of the Band and the Band Front. Under the liberal guidance of Mr. Ketterer, renewed enthusiasm, interest, and novelties became the order of the day.

Streamers, batons, and handkerchiefs became the trademark of the twirlers' "Vaquero" routine. The rifle squad's use of flags in their routine added a new look. A harmonious effort with the silks and Drill Team earned a second place for the entire Band Front at the Madison Central High School Annual Salute To America Competition.

Making Music for the Fun of It

For a more contemporary alternative to concert or marching band, some students chose the Studio Band. Because of the smaller enrollment there was greater emphasis on individual achievement. The students in Studio Band had a sincere interest in music and dedicated much of their time to practice. Modern music provided them with a way to improve their technique.

All of the members were highly enthusiastic about the ensemble. Although the main objective of the students was to enjoy themselves, they performed at various school functions, such as the Pancake Breakfast. As band director Mr. Tim Ketterer commented, "We need diversified groups; concert band is for those who want to keep in practice with their instruments, but Studio Band is to have fun!"

Fog Doesn't Hinder Performance

Erecting sets, painting scenery, and creating special effects whisked away the hours till curtain time for the stage crew. Despite the hectic nights and frequent minor disasters beforehand, the stage crew's work was at its best during performances.

Stage managers Chris Silletti and Frank Sollecito were responsible for seeing that both the Fall Drama and Spring Musical ran smoothly. Some difficulties that confronted the stage crew were a suspected short in the sound system found two days prior to opening night, and a frantic search for, believe it or not, an ironing board. The fog in "The Real Inspector Hound" was one of the special effects created by the stage crew.

The difficulty of arranging settings for surrealistic plays was a challenge well met by the stage crew. To further the atmosphere, the lighting technique used focused on the actors rather than the scenery. Preparation required for the Spring Musical was more complicated than that for the Fall Drama. Arrangements were more involved as lights had to be rented and hung to enhance scenery. More complex settings had to be moved on and off stage between scenes. The audience's enjoyment of the evening was a yardstick to measure the competency of Mr. Cunliffe's staff.

A Stroke of Genius Makes a Colorful Play

Changing young to old and thin to fat was the art of the Paint & Powder club. Through the use of base, "red dots," and rouge, the crew created very realistic effects.

The success of the make-up people or "brushes," as they refer to themselves, depended upon their cooperation with their advisor, Mr. Bordak. One month prior to dress rehearsals, Mr. Bordak gave demonstrations on new techniques involving make-up application.

Make-up application can be readily applied to everyday life. Halloween costumes were given that special touch with correctly applied make-up. Crediting Mr. Bordak's excellent work, Joann Samuel received a $25 bond for her creative Halloween costume.

Although behind the scenes, the Paint & Powder club has firmly established itself as an important part of theatrical productions.

Que Será Surreal . . .

The audience stared in amazement as the stage was lit to show Grace Karaffa crawling on her knees sniffing the rug as Brent Jaffe blew on a light bulb from atop a chair. What kind of play were they seeing in which actor Paul La Plante himself looked on in disbelief? Soon Rob Butchko arrived to straighten things out, stopping occasionally to clutch his forehead in agony. Was this some sort of joke on director Charles Cunliffe's part? No, it was surrealism.

The fall drama consisted of two one-act plays written by Britain's Tom Stoppard. The surrealistic farces, entitled "After Magritte" and "The Real Inspector Hound," were presented on the nights of December 7 and 8. Plays of this kind deal with the fine line between reality and a kind of dream world.

Between the first rehearsal in mid-October and the final one early in December, the cast worked diligently preparing and rehearsing the plays. Time was short and every hour of rehearsal time was precious. Besides having to deal with difficult material and spending many hours of discussion as to the meanings of the plays, each cast member had to work on a British accent to add to the desired English atmosphere. Having achieved that, the cast took to the stage to learn their positioning for individual scenes. Everything finally climaxed in two laudible performances.

In America we call it Columbus Day, but in Spain it's known as "El Día de La Raza." In celebration, on October 9, the Spanish Club held a party to honor Christopher Columbus and the unity of the Hispanic people.

"La Tuna" was invited to give foreign language students a taste of the customs of the 16th century. Performing Spanish folk music while dressed in the mode of their country, students from the University of Madrid serenaded Sayreville High.

Both the Spanish Club and Spanish Honor Society participated in the Foreign Language Festival. The traditional Spanish piñata was a highlight of the Festival.

High school students weren't the only ones to scramble for a piñata's fallen goodies. The students of various elementary schools were visited by the Spanish Honor Society in the fall and spring. In addition to breaking the piñata, the youngsters were taught the art of making Spanish ojos.

A choice of foods, including paella, was offered to club members who attended the dinner trip on December 5. The Newark restaurant was owned by the parents of Linda Almeida, a member of the Spanish Honor Society.

A Delicious Taste of Germany

Marks, Weiner Schnizel, Apple Streudel, and verb tenses — that's what made up the discussions of the German Club and Honor Society meetings. Gluttonous looks entered the eyes of club members when the plans for their annual dinner trip were in the making. Members remin-iscied on the taste of this year's authentic German cuisine with satisfied expressions. Grace Karaffa's opinion of the dessert was simple, "Delicious!" When the Club and Honor Society claimed their members would taste German culture, they meant it literally.

Now Who's the Teacher?

The French National Honor Society put an idea that had formerly been experimented with into practice this year. Once every two weeks, senior members of the society traveled to Eisenhower School to teach sixth graders French. This effort to promote the French language was a complete success according to the seniors who participated in the program. The grammar school students could not wait for the Fridays when they would learn a few more words in French. "It's a frightening experience to be 'the teacher', but as the lessons progressed, our confidence grew and we began to enjoy ourselves," said Michele Golla, the Society's President.

Another precedent set by Mrs. Parks, the advisor to both French organizations in the school, was the purchase of T-shirts emblazoned with catchy French phrases. The French Honor Society also tried another new idea when they opted against taking in the usual Broadway show and instead explored the hidden treasures of New York museums looking for examples of French culture.

Wilkomen à la fête de Navidad

What did the month of December, three European tongues and tastes, candy hanging from a ceiling, and rock music all have in common? That's right, with the holiday season swiftly approaching, it was time once again for the Foreign Language Festival.

An ambitious effort from the combined forces of the French, German, and Spanish Clubs helped celebrate the holidays, continuing a school tradition. Students and faculty members alike mingled in the cafeteria and enjoyed the food, musical entertainment, prizes, and piñata, all for a minimal donation.

The members of the respective clubs brought in foods which were typical of their second language's culture. They went down to the cafeteria early eighth period to set up the tables and furnish the room with a cheery decor. A musical group consisting of seniors Mark Scimeca, Frank Genus, Joe Quinto, and Rick Plewa performed two sets of rock music to entertain the patrons.

Between sets, the audience was treated to a short Christmas skit courtesy of Patricia Kirk and the German Club. Lucky ticket holders won candy furnished by the clubs and the ceremonial breaking of the piñata took place. At the end of the festival, the guests went home, lifted by the holiday spirits and the custodial ritual of disassemblment was carried out by several dedicated club members, reeling in the satisfaction of another successful event.

The Team Without a Sport

Sayreville's newest team will never take the field, and even the toughest contest will probably not draw a sweat. Despite all that, this team has already proven itself a success. Instead of athletic ability, skill in the Olympics of the Mind is measured by mental prowess.

Individual students were evaluated for their ingenuity, intelligence, and originality, then were summoned for a tryout testing their spontaneous problem-solving ability. From the large field, a team of twenty and five alternates were chosen.

Three weeks of training in creative thinking, brainstorming, and group dynamics culminated in their first projects. The team was split into units and given a task to perform while being as creative as possible within the framework of the problem. The teams successfully executed such tasks as creating new musical instruments and inventing a talking robot which doused cigarettes in a can of water.

Olympic advisor Mrs. Gelsinon has great hopes for the bright minds on her "team," not only for their Olympic sessions, but also for their futures.

Putting Logical Minds to the Test

Chess club membership increased again as the popularity of the game continued to rise. This was evidenced by the fact that the younger students in the school are mostly interested in the club with only two of the fifteen members being seniors. One of the seniors, John Sobiranski, has made quite a study of the game. Along with president Anthony Matagrano, John instructed each member of the club on the finer points of the game before the weekly games commenced.

Greater organization was the biggest improvement made this year. Records were kept of each member's wins and losses. In addition, Anthony Matagrano developed a "ladder system" to rate each player, which insured that players competed against opponents of equal ability. This allowed club members to improve their skill while playing with players of the same ability.

"What Did You Get for #4?"

Most students loathe taking tests, yet there are some students who realize that under certain circumstances the taking of tests can be a learning experience. This was the thinking of the students who participated in the Math and Science League tests.

The Math Club took monthly tests administered by the New Jersey Mathematics League. Their scores were then compared to those of other schools throughout the state. In addition, club members traveled to Stockton State College for a state math competition. Vic Wolski led Sayreville with the highest score in the competition, just as he and Lori Rosenkopf consistently led in the monthly tests.

The Science League took four monthly tests in three fields: biology, chemistry, and physics. Four scores from each subject were combined and sent in for comparison with other state schools. Each student who competed in at least three tests received a certificate of participation, and the top four finishers in the state received cash prizes.

All of the tests were difficult, but the students taking them realized they could only help them learn. For some students, taking tests paid off.

Green Thumbs Create Holiday Spirit

Poking sharp green fern into chicken wire might not sound like much, but that was what the Biology Club did this year. Actually it was very important because it was the beginnings of the school's traditional symbol of holiday spirits, the wreath. The pricks and scratches of the student craftsmen did not earn a purple heart, but only a cheerful sense of accomplishment. It was only fitting that a club devoted to the understanding of living things should donate the decorative fern wreath.

Daisies of Yellow, Red and Orange

"Holiday colors" was the theme for the Ecology Club's first project. Daisies of yellow, red and orange, with ferns for decoration, were given to the Oakview Nursing Home residents for Thanksgiving.

The layout for the trees planted in front of the school was due to the efforts of club members who drew the plans themselves. Along with other projects concerning ecology, the club grew flowers to sell for the school's annual art fair.

In celebration of a successful year, the Ecology Club planned a trip to the New York Botanical Gardens to sit back and enjoy the scenery without having to work on it themselves.

Adding Zest to School Spirit

Have you ever nearly fallen over brown poster paper and paint near the gym foyer? Although it may seem annoying at the time, these signs help support the teams during competition.

A general interest in sports and the building of school spirit to match their own was reflected in the enthusiasm of the Pep Club members at school games. This same interest was the reason Miss Johnson chose to be advisor.

As the center of school spirit, the Pep Club distributed sports schedules and sponsored buses to away games so game attendance could be increased. Their hard work was seen whether the teams won or lost. The Pep Club was one of the most consistent extra-curricular activities in its support of athletics.

"What Do You Want to Be When You Grow Up?"

Spaceships, aliens, chocolate cake pills — all these are possibilities for the future. But they weren't exactly what the future clubs had in mind. Their futures centered on different occupations and how to prepare for them.

Future Nurses of America had various visitors to talk to the members. A Registered Nurse and Student Nurse were able to give the FNA members a look at their proposed career from both sides of the coin.

The FNA wasn't the only club to provide their members with this unique opportunity. The Future Secretaries of America were asked what fields they were particularly interested in, so the club could get the most popular speakers in for first hand discussions.

Tutoring was a valuable chance given to the ambitious Future Teachers of America participants. Becoming aware of the difficulties of instructing Junior High students allowed the FTA to decide if this challenging job was for them.

Computers and a highly commercialized future stretch ahead of us. The Future Business Leaders of America prepared themselves for such a society. Concerned with business as they were, they did not forget to care for humanity. They made Christmas gifts for the Oakview Nursing Home and presented them to the patients personally. Each club, though very much concerned with the future, coped efficiently with the present.

A Shade Lighter

There is an intimate link between your life as a student and the one within the community. The impact of school life reaches beyond that of education to your choice of friends and the things you do outside these walls. It enfolds the different shades of your lighter side.

Command Performance for President Carter

The marching band was afforded the privilege of playing for President Carter when he came to New Brunswick last October 25. This privilege caused frantic activity among the band members because they were informed of the event only two days before they were to perform. In between learning the music for "Washington Post" and "Sweet Georgia Brown," the band was plagued by the security problems that were involved with the President's visit. The White House even called Mr. Ketterer and asked for a list of all band members and told him to check all rifles for hidden weapons.

Although band members felt that playing for the President was a "once in a lifetime experience," they were hindered by many problems on the day of President Carter's visit. It was blistering cold and the band members' long wait was increased by confusion over the President's arrival and departure times. However, afterwards band members agreed that it "was worth all the trouble to play for the President."

In a serious frame of mind, band members prepare for their performance for President Carter.

Sayreville Celebrates 13th Olympiad

The teens — no, not the generation, but the temperature, made Monday morning, February 4th, a cold one. Thousands of frozen toes eagerly awaited the arrival of the Olympic flame carried by 52 year old Georgian, DeForrest Jackson.

The torch-bearer arrived approximately 48 minutes late, but the enthusiasm of the Olympic entourage and the gravity of the event were enough to overcome the delay. Jackson was met with cheers and explained that the torch had been lit from the ever-burning flame in Olympia, Greece.

The Student Council, along with borough officials, was responsible for the reception the procession was given. The Council provided signs as a means to identify those clubs representing the school. Speeches were given by Mayor Czernikowski, Mr. John McCormack, Sayreville's liaison with the Olympic Committee, and Assemblyman Alan Karcher.

Spectators came out in droves for this historic event. Everywhere you turned, you could see cameras flashing in an effort to record what most likely would be the only time the flame would pass through this area.

Following the departure of the entourage, the crowds were offered hot chocolate and fresh doughnuts by the Student Council. The atmosphere was filled with excitement and those who remained, young and old, reflected on how lucky they were to have been part of such an historic event.

Torch upraised, DeForrest Jackson brings the spirit of the Olympics to an appreciative crowd.

A Stage for Talent

Music was no longer just a course taken in school. The popularity of this performing art grew so greatly in the past few years that it warranted the formation of a Community Concert Band.

Since its beginning three years ago, the Community Band grew from a mere handful of curious members to twenty-two dedicated musicians. Junior and senior high school students and teachers, along with members of the community itself, made up this qualified membership.

"Involvement with the Community Concert Band has helped me to gain experience while performing in front of a live audience," said vocalist Kathy Diaczyszyn. "The positive response from the audiences has helped to make me more at ease while performing."

The instrumentalists and vocalists combined their separate talents to create near-perfect harmonies and, under the direction of Kevin T. Lawson, the band's reputation quickly became known throughout the area.

A Nighttime Haven

School to some is not a dreaded experience. Some make it a nighttime haven of information, a place where they can increase their knowledge voluntarily. These are the people who are enrolled in the Sayreville

Adult School.

The courses of instruction range from the straight academics of high school equivalency math and college board exam preparation to those for personal enjoyment. There is no

The Magical, Wonderful Weekend

Why do we struggle around the obstacles of homework, tests, and essays everyday? What is the driving force that gets us through the humdrum work week? Why, the magical wonderful weekend, of course!

Friday night brings the chance to party with your friends. Halloween becomes more than a children's day, New Year's Eve more than an occasion to buy a calendar, and now, your 19th birthday is the major event to celebrate.

We might as well face facts. Not only would we fail to make it through the week with our sanity intact, but without parties, weekends would be so boring that we might even begin to enjoy school.

BELOW: Sue Malik and George Jorgensen exchange a New Year's Eve hug.

CURRICULUM

Rita Brumby

This is the heart of the school.

There are activities, diversions, and sidelines aplenty, but it is the everyday life of study that it all revolves around. You can be in every club, letter in every sport, and be on the best terms with every one of your teachers, but there isn't any way you're going to graduate without those 75 credits.

It's always safe to say that this is the most disliked part of the school, and the hardest, and the least immediately rewarding. You'll never get a standing ovation for doing your homework, and no one will ever compliment you on how well you explained that trig problem on the board. Nobody has ever managed to go through school and take only courses they like, and maybe no one ever will.

Still, everyone so far has gotten out all right, and people have been known to admit there were times when they enjoyed themselves. It is a price you have to pay, but the cost really isn't that high.

They're People Too!

DIVERSIFIED INTERESTS

Mr. Counsman's long career involvement with the Sayreville School system has given him enjoyment and satisfaction. "Having students do well is the greatest reward of my job," the Superintendent remarked. But satisfaction is also earned through relaxing with favorite hobbies.

Collecting first edition Hummel plates and figurines is one of Mr. Counsman's diversified interests. As a former industrial arts teacher, he still enjoys woodworking, and recently completed a desk and dresser combination and a shelf for his figurines.

Mr. Counsman describes himself as a "homebody," but given the extra incentive, he does enjoy traveling and has ventured cross-country and to Florida by train. He has never traveled by plane and says he feels "apprehensive about flying." A relaxing cruise to Bermuda was one of his favorite excursions. "It was clean and beautiful, and the weather was perfect," he reminisced.

Mr. Counsman's only regret in life was that he has "never taken time out to learn to play a musical instrument." He has learned through his hobbies that school is not the only form of education. He has found that creative thinking also leads to personal achievement.

A TYPICAL TOURIST

Although her duties as principal require the majority of her time, Dr. Parnell does manage to have time for the "lighter side" of life. "You can always find time to do the things you want to do," she says, showing her key to finding leisure time.

Never fully able to separate her life from her work, Dr. Parnell has traveled as far as Geneva, Switzerland on behalf of the Accreditation Association for Secondary Schools. Besides her school associated travels, she has traveled all over the world to broaden her experience. She describes herself as the typical tourist, saying, "If there's a tour, I'll take it."

Dr. Parnell has journeyed to the Orient, the Midwest, and to Europe. On a less dramatic level, she also enjoys the quieter pleasures of flower gardening, reading, and gourmet cooking.

Her experience has furnished her with the philosophy that "education allows one to do whatever one wishes to do." Dr. Parnell expresses this philosophy through her leisure time as well as through her work in school.

HUNTING — ANGLING — DANCING

When one thinks of an administrator, rarely does a casual image come to mind. Aside from their jobs and duties in school, Mr. Dill, Mr. Weber, and Miss Sowa find time to lead busy and fulfilling lives outside of school.

Mr. Dill's hobbies include many facets of outdoor life ranging from hunting to raising dogs. He also has a passion for golf. A sports enthusiast, Mr. Dill shows his school spirit by supporting the Bombers' athletic program.

Jogging has been a keen interest of Mr. Weber's over the past two years. He also is an avid angler and enjoys salt-water fishing year round. When time permits, he can often be found doing body work on cars and engaging in carpentry, and cabinet making.

A member of numerous education associations, Miss Sowa still finds time to advise the National Honor Society. As a dévotée of the fine arts, Miss Sowa often attends the theatre and ballet in New York City and enjoys listening to Tchaikovsky at home. While cooking and handicrafts are among her hobbies, her true enjoyment is in traveling. She has visited most countries in Europe and South America as well as Japan, Russia, the Caribbean and the Mediterranean.

Teachers Go 'Round the Clock

Did you ever have a lot of work to do but not enough time to do it? Contrary to popular belief, teachers lead busy lives separate from those they lead during school. Feeling as though there aren't enough hours in the day is a common belief among them.

Several times a week, Mr. Boardman becomes a student in a role "reversal" from teacher to student. Teaching all day and going to graduate school at night earned him the nickname the "professional student" ... Mrs. Romano's background in science prepared her for her vice-presidency in the NJSTA, which is involved with the advancement of science education ... Mr. Recine is a respected trainer not only in our school but also nationally. He is recognized as being at the top of his field, working for the U.S. Olympics Committee ... Between her jobs as yearbook advisor, graduate student, and teacher, Ms. Joseph rarely finds time to catch her breath ... After hours of watching and enjoying sports Mr. Newcomer becomes involved as a referee of basketball and soccer ... Mr. Inman has become accustomed to running up and down courts as a state varsity basketball official ... Ms. Sunski's involvement with softball is overwhelming. Not only is she involved with writing and interpreting rules, but she is a softball umpire as well ... Mr. Wybraniec shares his knowledge of baseball with others as an umpire of the sport ... As a professional softball player for the NY Golden Apples, Ms. Popowski will be able to use her talents to help coach girls' softball.

Ms. Joseph is swamped by her many responsibilities.

Pro softball player Ms. Popowski steps into the pitch.

With a colleague, Ms. Sunski evaluates a softball rule book.

Faculty Dabbles in "Fine" Areas of Life

Although self-expression is hard to incorporate into their rigid educational routine, several teachers make use of their hidden talents by performing in the fine arts.

Mrs. McCormack's talent as a pianist was discovered when she was five, and her musical talents are now shared with us when she plays the piano for the school musicals and Christmas Concert ... Mrs. Arthur can be found at home playing the piano for relaxation and enjoyment ... Mrs. Hellwig's voice can be heard in the operas performed by the Monmouth Opera Society ... Mr. Ketterer lends his talent as a musician in the Westminster Faculty Brass Quintet ... Mrs. Gelsinon found she was a born actress when she became involved with the Old Bridge Theatre Guild ... Mr. Paul expresses his acting talent through his involvement with a Little Theatre group ... Mr. Cunliffe's love of theatre not only involves him with high school productions, but has branched out to the Edison Valley Playhouse Company ... A big part of Mrs. Galantino's life is her love of dance, especially ballet ... Dr. Marotta applies his knowledge of mathematics not only to his students, but to a wider scope of people through his metric books ... Mrs. Coppinger's steady hand enables her to develop her talent of calligraphy. She uses this beautiful handwriting to decorate wedding albums, cards, and classroom displays.

Helping Hands in Their Communities

In addition to handling the burdening task of instructing high school students, some teachers find the time to help better their community in other ways. These teachers show their community conscience by aiding in many community services.

"The need for people to reach out to those who need help" led Mr. Carcich to help sponsor the Vietnamese Boat people. This program was started in August 1979 by a group of families from his parish . . . Instead of just complaining about the energy crisis, Ms. Dusel becomes involved with Safe Energy Alternatives in order to make people aware of the growing need for safer forms of energy . . . Mr. Caliando, although new to the high school, is not new to the community. 1980 marked his seventh year as director of the Sayreville Association for Brain Injured Children . . . Mrs. Shur volunteers her services to raising money helping those afflicted with leukemia . . . Mrs. Baumann expresses her involvement with Sayreville by working with the historical society. Trying to preserve historic landmarks and develop a community interest in the history of the area proved to be her interests . . . Mrs. Newton, leader of the Roundabouts 4-H of Sayreville teaches sewing, arts and crafts, and cooking. She also applies her domestic activities by judging the canning at the County 4-H Fair . . . Mr. Ciszewski exceeds above and beyond the call of duty through his involvement with the fire company for fifteen years and volunteer first aid squad for twelve years . . . Dedication seems to be the main requirement of the Sayreville Lions' Club. Mr. Gozora's active participation with the club leads him to a great deal of club sponsored benefits with blind children . . . Beautification of the community is one of the interests that Mrs. Mackin develops through her participation with the East Brunswick Garden Club . . . Miss Leone's spare time is devoted to preparation of religious material for the Adult Religious Education in the Consolata Mission Center in Somerset.

Inflation Misses No One!

For some teachers 2:30 does not mark the end of their work day. After leaving the building many teachers enter into other occupations. While some of these jobs are directly related to their teaching fields, other teachers are employed in totally unrelated areas.

Mr. Koenigsberg entered his tenth year of involvement with the Sayreville Adult School. His job ranges from reviewing courses to hiring and firing instructors . . . Dr. Evanovich can be found teaching an SAT and H.S. Equivalency Math Course after finishing his regular instructions a few hours earlier . . . Mrs. Moore is able to apply her nine years of skiing experience as a ski instructor. She is often found on the slopes of Kill-ton, Vermont and Great Gorge helping novice skiers . . . Miss Bjelka is found filling prescriptions behind the pharmacy counter at Pathmark . . . Mr. Brown handles "odd jobs" ranging from carpet mechanics to bartending in the summer . . . Mrs. Borak extends her knowledge of handicrafts while working at a craft shop . . . Mrs. Coleman spends her time going to showrooms as a buyer of leather goods . . . Mrs. Comeforo helps out in her husband's "In the Running" sport shop . . . Mr. Szabo is involved with the Gallup Organization of Princeton, NJ. By collecting public opinions he is able to make his Critical Issues classes more "aware of contemporary issues."

Come Fly With Us

When students come to school they're learning to broaden their knowledge. There are other ways, however, to broaden your horizons. Some teachers at the high school feel that traveling is a combination of learning and pleasure.

Mrs. Sforza's trip to Egypt brought her face to face with one of the first civilizations of the world... "I finally got to see all of the things I've always studied about," said Miss C. Kwiatkowski. Her trip to Spain allowed her to enjoy Spanish culture and enabled her to "meet nice Spanish people"... "Walking through Rome was like walking back into time and being part of history," explained Mrs. Jardula. Her extensive travel throughout Europe included Switzerland, which she describes as a "country of beauty and wealth whose countryside and mountain scenery are spectacular"... Mr. and Mrs. Simko had the opportunity to experience for themselves life under communist control during their two week stay in Poland. Mrs. Simko says their visit "opened their eyes" and made them more aware of the advantages Americans share... Mrs. Groncki has traveled extensively throughout Europe and her favorite city was Paris, although she says London, Paris, and Geneva "all have something to offer"... During his summer vacations, Mr. Cheskin takes off for parts unknown and has traveled throughout Europe and the United States and Canada... Another summer traveler, Mr. Horvath has been to 48 out of 50 states and has traveled to Bermuda, Italy, Mexico and Canada... Mrs. Haltli enjoys tent camping as a family activity... Mr. Cserr's favorite way to travel is in his trailer. His love of camping has taken him to various campsites throughout the United States and Canada... Mrs. Parks recommends traveling wholeheartedly and describes her travel in France and Italy as "a broadening experience"... Miss Kopec's extensive travels throughout Europe have given her quite an introduction to the romance languages and have given her a chance to put her Spanish to the test... "I've always dreamed of going to Paris," said Mrs. Ludlow, whose dream finally came true. Her trips to Spain and France familiarized her with the cultures she has studied... Mrs. Hazners has the distinction of being born in Latvia and receiving her early education in Germany. Although living in America, she still enjoys traveling and loves "the European flavor" of Montreal... During the summer, Mrs. Rhatican takes time out from her nursing career to travel throughout the United States... Mrs. Logan had the opportunity to teach in the beautiful environs of a foreign country, instructing students in American history during her three year stay in Belgium.

Personal travel inspires Mrs. Simko to research Poland.

Patience, Time and Talent

Students should be very grateful to their teachers, and not only for enriching their lives everyday with amazing facts. Extra-curricular activities would not be feasible without the guidance of club advisors. Patience, time, and talent are constantly given to involved, school-spirited students.

Ms. Kwiatkowski and Mrs. Kratinski dedicate countless hours to the organization of the student council ... Miss Johnson is really in the spirit of things this year as pep club advisor ... The futures of career-minded students are guided by Miss Turowski,

The senior class is sure to end their high school years on a high note with the helping hands of Mrs. Kadi and Ms. Sutherland . . . Miss Nowicki helps the class of '82 adjust to their first year at Sayreville High . . . Leading the class of '81, Mrs. Wasilewski devotes much time to planning the Junior Prom . . . Students' jobs in retailing are acquired by Mr. Schmeyer and the DECA program . . . Mrs. Dulemba helps future secretaries get a taste of the office world through COE.

Applying Learning to Everyday Experiences

One of the major questions in the minds of science students in the past has been the applicability of what is learned to everyday experiences. For this reason, the science teachers this year stressed useful knowledge rather than just book knowledge.

Lecture is the basis for every science course. As Miss Lamprecht (bottom right) uses the board as a teaching tool, the next logical step is the use of the microscope by Kenny Beyer (bottom center).

Declining test scores have brought about a reevaluation of teaching methods. Like so many other teachers, Mr. Osborn has found it beneficial to provide individual instruction to Bob Manzi (bottom far right).

However, limited facilities force mass instruction (top far right) in the physical education department in areas where Mr. Hefelfinger, department chairman, feels specialized instruction would be more beneficial. Varsity lettermen, such as Mike Wasko, feel "... bored when the class is learning the fundamentals of a sport" that they have mastered. Lack of space forces the girls to participate in "en masse line soccer" (top right) during inclement weather.

Specialized Views of Future Opportunities

While academics are a large part of the school, the vocational courses offer a specialized view of future opportunities.

Those students such as Scott D'Al-
courses are prepared to become established in the business world upon graduation.

This preparation for life extends into the Home Economics and Industrial Arts departments. The age-old art of cooking is no longer confined to the home (top far left). With today's prices rising phenomenally, being an expert seamstress like
cuts down on clothing expenses.

On the job training starts early for those students enrolled in the Beauty
Occupations course taught by Mrs.
Moore (bottom center). The Industrial Arts courses provide students
different career objectives, while also offering Dot Hurley the chance to find photography as a new hobby (top center).

Creativity Flourishes in Relaxed Atmospheres

Cut off from the world, stranded in a place without time, with no outside communication, who could find any reason to be cheerful? When speaking of the new art wing, Mrs. Sforza (bottom center) maintains that despite the fact that the new art wing opened late, without a clock or telephone, and that many people were unable to find it for their classes, it is in the best location it has ever had.

Possibly more appreciated than any other class, the new jewelry facilities provided more professional equipment such as the buffer used by Stacy Wexler (top right). This new permanent location affords Mrs. Kratinski (top center) the opportunity to devote her attention to her students' projects rather than packing them away.

The total mobility of the classroom furniture has provided ample space for Dan Pelszynski (bottom far right) to work on his project.

People Behind the Scenes

The secretaries are an enthusiastic group of women, vital to the organization of the school. Although Mrs. Buckiewicz (bottom center), has filed mountains of papers, she still musters a smile. Refusing to be left out, they kept school spirit alive by participating in Blue and Gray week. Mrs. Trent and Mrs. Novak (top right), brightened up their week by dressing up in their favorite T-shirts.

Among the people who are seen and never heard are the custodians. They spend their time cleaning up after the rest of us, but rarely did we notice the enthusiasm which led them through their work. The custodians are an energetic and spirited group, who always have time to smile. Tony Lopez (bottom right), is an optimistic member of the group. Despite his busy work schedule, Tony always found time to take care of Quo Vadis. They showed their appreciation for him by throwing a small surprise party.

The most thankless job in the school, however, may belong to the workers in the cafeteria. Working hard preparing lunches occupied most of their day, but a witty repertoire kept them smiling. Not even cleaning up could dim Ann Szafranski's (top center), cheerfulness.

These people may be taken for granted at times, but they are very important to the rounds of a school attended by 1500 students.

ATHLETICS

Joe Longo

Boys' Gymnastics Team

It all sounds very noble — “the thrill of victory, the agony of defeat — the human drama of athletic competition” — but when you’re scraping the mud off your cleats it doesn’t seem so grand. Wimbledon isn’t what springs to your mind when you’re bandaging the blisters on your hand. Breaking the tape at the Olympics isn’t what you think about as you run laps in the parking lot. You can only dream about the basket at the buzzer as you line up to practice foul shots. No one likes to put out the mats for practice, and forget about putting them back.

Can you imagine a group of people who enjoy sliding in mud, who get pleasure from slamming their body into someone running straight for them? Who would want to give up all their afternoons for something that requires great effort, involves considerable physical risk, and which leaves you spent, worn, and tired every time — which more often than not is just rehearsal for the real thing? When it really counts, when it takes all the previous effort and more, and when the end result can often be nothing more than the epithet “loser” what sort of people would call that their greatest pleasure?

They’re called athletes.

Dramatic Comeback Leads to County Tourney

"... A good total team effort," was what Coach Hudock attributed the turnaround to this season as the team fought back after winning just one of their first six games to raise their record to 8-9-1, the best in six years.

This dramatic comeback culminated in Sayreville's first appearance in the county tournament and their first participation since 1971 in the state tournament. The Varsity Soccer team performed well, despite losing in the first round 2-0 to two highly ranked opponents.

Senior Glen Guido controlled the defense from his center fullback position in front of senior goalie Dave Sutton, who recorded two important midseason shutouts for the Bombers. Senior right wing Frank Devine and sophomore scoring leader John Roros, with 11 goals and 6 assists, spearheaded the offense.

Coach Hudock cited "a lot of accomplishments" in his two years as coach and said that the appearance in the tournament was the highlight of his years of coaching.

Juniors Provide Backbone for Jayvee Teams

Coach Corrigan's adeptness at juggling positions made the difference. After an 0-4 start, he made several key switches in positions which, in combination with a fantastic performance by rookie goalie Jeff Connors, brought the team back to win six decisions in a row and to finish the season at 6-7-1.

Connors, a junior, had three shutouts amidst the skein of victories for the JV Soccer team, and came up with 37 saves in a losing effort against East Brunswick.

"Our defense kept us in games," explained the coach. "Our offense only averaged two to three shots on goal per game." Juniors Stuart Markowitz and captain Steve Krawet were the backbone of the defense. Junior Tom Brady led the team in scoring with 7 goals, providing the team with the offense necessary for victory.

* * *

Once again inexperience is the root of the problem. The team can also blame a lack of playing time for their 0-4-5 season. Only three girls returned from the 1978-1979 season for another year of play.

The mostly junior dominated JV Field Hockey team was lead by Captains Debbie Coyle and Kim Sabine. Debbie was the high scorer with a total of two goals. Other goals were made by Michele Balzamo, Lauri LaBranche, and Kim Sabine.

The team managed to stretch these goals into five tie games. Coach Ryan felt the team had many tough losses, winning until the last minutes of the game, when opponents would even up the score. An example of this was a grueling game against South River. Against a highly skilled team, Sayreville held strong defensively and wound up at a 2-2 tied score.

Because the girls had the necessary elements for a successful season, Ms. Ryan expected, "a better record than achieved." However, the girls couldn't seem to combine these elements effectively, and "the lack of experience overshadowed any potential talent the girls might have had."

Aggressiveness Crucial to a Winning Team

"Go! Fight! Win! Beat Highland Park!" These were the cheers heard before the closely matched Girl's Varsity Field Hockey game against the Highland Park Owls. The cheers psyched the girls up just enough to go on to hold their opponents to a 0-0 tie. It was this spirit and a lot of hard work which led the girls to a 3-5-3 final record.

"Disappointing," was the general feeling Coach Willis had about her final season at SWMHS. It was disappointing only because she felt the team had enough experience to do better through the tough varsity schedule. Seniors Linda Almeida, Nancy Burbank, Mary Ellen D'Angelo, Caralyn Donnamaria, Sue Klein, and Denise Kowaleski all returned for their third year of varsity play. However, experience could not offset the fact that the team had few "natural athletes."

Despite these downfalls, the team did post a Middlesex County Tournament win which highlighted the season. The girls won the game 6-0. Cindy Scavone tallied up 3 goals along with Caralyn Donnamaria, Mary Ellen D'Angelo, and Sue Klein, who each tallied one.

According to Coach Willis, "On a whole the team worked hard. The main problem this season was the lack of aggressiveness crucial to a winning varsity field hockey team."

Cross Country Dynasty Continues

The distance was changed, but the results stayed the same. The Sayreville Boys' Cross Country dynasty rolled along, as the team breezed through its second consecutive undefeated season and conference championship. Needless to say, Coach Carney was pleased, especially with the team's attitude, claiming, "this was the best team I have ever coached."

This year the course was the longer distance of 5000 meters, or about 3.1 miles, but the coach was pleased with his runners' times. The team was led by junior Joe Longo, who turned in the outstanding time of 16:46 and garnered first team all-county honors. Other outstanding distance men included senior co-captain Dale Buchberger, and sophomores John Kiernan, who once ran an excellent 16:52, and Joe Seminaro, the "surprise of the year."

Although the team could have performed better in their "bigger meets," they placed second in the County Championship, with Longo finishing third individually. The coach was very satisfied with the progress of his new runners, and will have seventeen runners returning next year.

"The Best Looking Team in the Conference"

"We had the best-looking team in the conference" was the cheery comment made by Coach Doll. Still, good looks were not the only thing the team had going for them. Talent was the main reason for the 5-7 success of this season's running.

Returning from last year's squad were Ellyn Briody and Elise Green. Ellyn broke the 5000 meter record with a time of 20 minutes and 37 seconds. She, along with senior Donna Gaasbeck, placed in the top 10 in the Highland Park Invitational. The team's talent was not only shown in her personal achievements. The team placed 9th out of 30 in the county tournament, and 10th out of 20 in the state tournament. This title was attained with a strong effort by three freshmen, Jackie Bouchard, Ann Marie Macaluso and Elaine Michel.

The season ended on an upswing. The girls not only won three races against Colonia, Perth Amboy and Woodbridge, but also picked up one minute on their best times. Coach Doll felt "the girls improved tremendously and ended the season strongly."

"Fight to the Very Last Volley"

The final record of a team does not always show how a season actually went. Such is the case with this year's Girls' Tennis Team. An unimpressive 4-20 record only shows the results of point standings. However, the season did bring an important result, a tight unit, a team which worked for each other.

The season began with a less than promising start. The team suffered from an extreme lack of experience, because of the few positions available last year. The team soon developed their own veterans, with Kathy Romer earning the title "star player." The high point of her season was a singles game against South River, which Coach Maurer described as a "fantastic match."

The team's other important players were Dawn Sutter and Darci DeWorth, who played second and third singles respectively. Dawn Locklin returned for her final year of play and did well on the first doubles team.

Coach Maurer felt this year's girls were the most "team-oriented" group ever. "They worked as a whole and never gave up on themselves or each other. Although sometimes frustrated, they continued to work hard and fight to the very last volley."

Saltzman & Wasko Score 2nd & 3rd in State Finals

Two sophomores brought state recognition to the school in one sport this year. All-arounders Mike Saltzman and Mike Wasko led the Boys' Gymnastics team to a third place finish in the State Team Championship and second place in the Central Jersey Division A.

Saltzman placed second in the state finals and fourth in the sectionals in the floor exercise. Wasko took third in the state finals and first in the sectionals in vaulting. In all, six members of the team qualified for the sectionals, including senior captain Rick Plewa on the side horse, seniors Pat Ryan in vaulting, Jim Cassidy in vaulting and rings, and junior Tony D'Arpa in vaulting and the floor exercise.

In addition to his other accomplishments, Saltzman set a new school record in the floor exercise with an 8.4, and participated in new school team records along with D'Arpa and Wasko in floor exercise and vaulting. This year's team, with an 8-3 record, was Sayreville's "best team in six years," according to a pleased Coach Hefelfinger.

Poise, Grace, Agility and Imagination

There is one sport which is unique from any other. It combines skill, grace, agility, poise and imagination, and requires perfect physical condition. When the correct proportions of these qualities are combined, the ultimate in gymnastics is achieved.

As in the past, the Sayreville Girls' Gymnastics team found the talent to achieve this goal. Although their disappointing 2-7 record did not show it, the team had strength in almost every event. Junior Donna Rytel's injury in the beginning of the season caused a critical vacancy in the bar routines. However, in every other event Sayreville placed in the top three in almost every meet. Based upon the finesse of Donna Schneider, Coach Rudge believed "the beam was the team's strongest point."

In an evenly matched meet against Carteret, the girls proved their superiority by winning the meet 64-62. Donna Miara placed first in vaulting, along with Amy Nesterwitz, who also took a first place for her floor routine.

Junior Lisa Orgonas improved the most over the course of the season. Beginning by just performing on the bars she broadened her field and became an "all around competitor." Because the team consisted mostly of other talented underclassmen, Coach Rudge said she had "high hopes for future seasons."

"Condo" Gains All-County Honors

An inexperienced team and a tough schedule against "well-established teams" combined to offset the good efforts of Coach Barnes and his team. The season started at a disadvantage, with a new coach having to teach a new system to the players for the second year in a row.

Coach Barnes was forced, "out of necessity," to start many underclassmen on the Varsity Football team this year, noting that "the experience will help us." The Bombers improved as the season progressed, but predictably finished with a poor record, as all the negative factors caused the team to drop all nine of its contests.

The outstanding player of the year was senior back Steve Condiracci, who earned all-county honors. Other senior starters included Mark Ryan and backs Kevin Shanley and A. J. Sabine, who was injured most of the season. Juniors Mario Mascali and Doug Ryan were outstanding as lineman and linebacker, respectively. Back, Wayne Locklin and cornerback Keith Conlon, both sophomores, also played well.

A major accomplishment for the team was shutting out powerful South River in the first quarter of the Thanksgiving Day game, with Sayreville taking the offensive. The team eventually lost 27-0, but also shut down the Rams in the last quarter. The progress made by Sayreville in the course of the year was reflected in this final contest of the season.

Heroes in Hand-Me-Downs

Half the team doubled on the successful sophomore team, resulting in a long, hard season. Coach Giordano commended his team for "trying hard, never quitting" as they managed two wins and scored in every game.

This year's JV Football season was constructive, as the top starters gained much experience. They included sophomores Dale Raub, Todd McGrath, John Mininno, and Gerard Porpora, and juniors John Kraivec, Ed Neminski, and Glen Lazo. "This should prove beneficial to next year's varsity squad," according to Coach Giordano. The team finished its season by dominating Perth Amboy for a 26-0 shutout victory.

Returning to the sports program after a year's absence, success was very sweet. The Sophomore Football team was Sayreville's most successful gridiron squad this year. After dropping their first two games, the team rebounded, buoyed by their excellent defense, to win their last four contests.

In their last five games, the defense rose to block five punts, scoring four touchdowns. Defensive leaders including Dan Carlo, Dennis Mascali, John Mininno, and Todd McGrath. They aided a capable offense which moved the ball well. Gerard Porpora performed the kicking duties well, scoring on three field goals and as many extra points.

Coach Giordano was happy that his team "pulled it together for the last four games" and cited the team's first victory against John F. Kennedy since 1971 as the high point of the season.

Pressure Builds Teamwork — Key to Success

The tougher games on the schedule were the deciding factors this season. These games tested the all-around strength of each girl and how well the team could work together. "The season was highlighted by our upset win over undefeated Woodbridge 42-32, in our last home game," expalined Coach Sunski.

The team's offense was led by senior Sue Klein, shooting with over 50% accuracy from the floor and over 70% accuracy from the line. Sophomore Cindy Allman, the youngest varsity member, also had a consistent shooting average. Under the boards, the Bombers found strength in the rebounding ability of Cindy Ritter and Caroline McCurdy, who grabbed an average of 11 per game.

Outstanding defensive plays made by the team's offensive "hassler" Nancy McFeeley were the kinds of things which enabled the girls to capture 3rd place in the MCAC. "I think that the way we worked as a team really helped us this year," said Sue Klein. "The pressure in our harder games made us work together more, and was the real key to our success."

Midseason Turnarounds Show Mettle

Growth was foremost in Coach Janet Ryan's goals for the Girls' JV Basketball team. Starting with a disorganized crew of individuals, Coach Ryan set out to mold them into a team.

Six days of practice a week seemed to do little for the team, as they fell into a seven game mid-season losing streak. The team's fortunes abruptly turned about with a victory over J.P. Stevens, a team that had beaten them by fifteen points earlier in the season. Coach Ryan described the win as satisfying, feeling that the team had finally started to vindicate itself.

The team was led throughout the year by Junior Anita Ryan, who led the team with total points, and Kim Sabine, who ended the season as the team's most accurate shooter. Colleen Croszier backed the team's offense by leading in rebounds.

Coach Ryan was pleased by the team's performance, despite the lack-luster 5-14 record. She noted that the team had shown the improvement she wanted to see through the year, and she felt confident that this team will show its mettle next year on Varsity.

A lack of experience was the major problem this season, both in the coaching and the players. First-year coach Steve Hefele of Rutgers fame explained, "It was a good overall learning experience. I learned how to handle my players, and they learned how to play together."

Despite a poor start, the team showed progress in the second half of the season to finish at 7-12. Led by sophomores Jim Besso, Jim Prusarczyk, and Fred Krumbine, the team played "smarter, and could handle pressures" according to the coach. An injury to Besso midseason hurt the team, but the other players took up the slack.

Although the coach termed the season a "disappointment," he believes he can "give the team more direction" in the future, and is sure that "this year's team will help the varsity squad next season."

Eyes affixed to his target, sophomore Fred Krumbine glides to the basket.

Bombers Stun Opposition to Win Conference Crown

"A well balanced attack, with five returning lettermen," was among the reasons for the team's success according to Coach Pat Dineen. Sayreville rounded out the regular season with a 17-3 record and captured the Middlesex County Athletic Conference title for the first time ever. "As always," explained Coach Dineen, "the MCAC was very balanced, very strong. Perth Amboy and Colonia were as strong as ever."

Ralph Novak proved to be the key to the team, leading in both scoring and rebounding. In addition, during the county tournament, he ended his three-year career as starting varsity center by scoring his 1000th point.

The team's other bright spots included play-maker John Tarnacki and the continually improving Tom Callahan. Ricky Garbowski proved a "pleasant surprise" to Coach Dineen, as this was his first year of varsity ball. Junior Dan Ogborne was impressive with his agility and great jumping ability, and juniors Ray Kreiger and Mike Tevis provided depth for the team.

An opening victory over Perth Amboy led the team to believe they were in for a successful season, but they had no idea how successful they were to be. Despite a close loss against Perth Amboy in the quarter-final round ending the team's county tournament play, Tom Callahan spoke for his ecstatic team, saying, "We're all proud to be a part of the first team to bring the Conference Title to Sayreville."

Individual Excellence Sparks County Championship

Despite numerous injuries, "pulling together" was the key to the successful season, according to Coach Carney and the members of his Winter Track team.

Individual excellence led to an outstanding season as the team finished with a 12-1 season record. A versatile Frank Devine led the team, excelling in the 440 in addition to sharing the high jump with Tom Brady and Brian Smith, the 60 yard dash with A. J. Sabine, and being part of the high hurdles relay with Sabine, Brady, and Charlie Nieves. Betty Rathbun, Julie Brady, Marybeth Jones, and Ann Marie Macaluso composed the low hurdles relay team, which won the title of number one in the state. The distance events were performed by Dale Buchberger in the two mile, John Kiernan and Joe Longo in the mile, and Kevin McKenna in the 880 yard run. The weight events were taken by Mario Mascali, Rich Kelly, and Mark Ryan as the shot-putters.

Among the honors gained this season was A. J. Sabine's victory to become the county's 60 yard dash champion.

The consistently successful Coach Carney reflected upon the entire Winter Track team, saying that this has been his "most enjoyable season of coaching."

Forfeits Frustrate Spirited Team

The sickening crack of breaking bone ended the wrestling season for Glen Lazo. For Coach Lenny Zaleski, this was one more cruel twist in an already nightmarish season.

Already struggling with a small turnout which forced the team to forfeit weight classes in many matches, Lazo's practice injury cost the team more than just his skill and experience. As talented as any team may be, it isn't possible to win consistently while forfeiting points in every match. Thus, despite the outstanding seasons of Frank Redding, Mark Mahalick, and Dennis Mascali, the team could only turn in the disappointing record of 1-12.

Coach Zaleski was frustrated by the outcome of the season, noting that the poor record could not be blamed on the skill of his athletes, but rather on the forfeits. He pointed out that, despite his injury, Glen Lazo still attended all meets to support his team, and he claimed that this was only typical of his team. Even though they only wound up with one victory, Coach Zaleski was proud to note that "they always gave 100%."

Camaraderie — Team's Hallmark

"They extended themselves beyond their capabilities ... a total team effort," but, despite Coach Fischer's words, the JV Wrestling team was brought up against the fact that a winning attitude does not make a winning team.

Handicapped by a poor turnout, the small numbers drew the team together. The camaraderie caused every member of the team to treat every teammate's victory as one of their own, and, despite a losing record overall, the team did have moments to celebrate. Sophomore Keith Kovaleski led the team with a 7-3 record in the 148-lb. class, and Fab Munoz provided the season's high point with a fourth place in a county novice tournament.

With starting spots opened by the need to fill weight classes on the varsity level, a lot of athletes gained experience they otherwise would have gotten only by watching from the bench. Coach Fischer was most pleased by the experience garnered and by the spirit shown by the squad. Looking at their future, he said that they may have learned a tough lesson about competition, but the hallmark of his team was that "they supported each other."

Success . . .

... 1979-80 was a special time for Sayreville sports teams. The Bombers gained significant achievements in many sports, making these among the best seasons ever.

The soccer team appeared in both the County and State Tournaments ... The boys' cross country team won the conference championship, led by all-county Joe Longo ... From the girls' cross country team, Elyn Briody and Donna Gaasbeck both were named all-county.

... The boys' gymnastics team placed third in the state team championship and second in their division, thanks to outstanding performances by Mike Saltzman and Mike Wasko ... Linebacker Steve Condiracci earned all-county honors for football ... The winter track team won the county championship ... The girls' basketball team finished third in the MCAC ... Ralph Novak starred as the boys' basketball team finished first in the MCAC.

Driving the baseline, Linda Almeida goes for 2 more in the state tourney.

Against a tight East Brunswick zone, Ralph Novak approaches his 1,000th career point.

UNDERCLASS

Mike Saltzman, Mike Washo

You will always remember your underclass years. For better or for worse, the impressions you get in your first high school years will stay with you.

Perhaps the first things to hit you are the physical changes — the school is now at the bottom of the hill, the lunches are twice as long, and the classes are twice as far apart. The King-of-the-hill ninth graders are now towered over by the behemoths of the senior class, and the swagger is gone from their steps.

The change that stays with you is a more personal one. The teachers now treat you as a young adult, rather than a large child. You have to develop a totally different attitude, as you realize that what you're doing now is shaping your future.

As you move from the Junior High to the Senior High, you're entrusted with greater responsibilities and freedoms. Given time, you learn that you're growing into maturity just as surely as you grow into size.

Spinning Their Wheels Toward Success

Rollerskating is a part of daily life for sophomore Scott Morton and junior Diana Bozan who have been rollerskating a combined total of over eleven years. They each practice over 20 hours a week. For Diana it takes her every spare moment. She echoes Scott's feelings, stating that "the more you put into it, the more you get out of it."

Diana and Scott have been in amateur competition for over eight years. They have successfully competed with skaters in regionals, junior nationals, and national championships. Scott is currently ranked fourth in the nation in freestyle and figure skating. Diana and her 22-year old partner, Long Islander Eric Leaf, are ranked third in the United States in freedance skating.

Scott says that when you win a big competition, "it feels like you've achieved your goals." "Rollerskating," says Diana, "is exciting. You meet a lot of people from all over the nation." The two have travelled as far as Texas to compete in national championships.

Rollerskating requires dedication. Diana and Scott both train in Long Island and make the trip there six days a week. They train under professional coaches in the hope of gaining extra poise and perfection in their performances.

Scott and Diana both hope to skate professionally in the future. Their plans are not certain yet, but one thing they are sure of is that they want skating to be a part of their future.

Without the pressures of competition, Scott Morton and Diana Bozan take a casual spin around the school.

Dancing Into Tradition

One of the requirements of being raised an Unkel, as "family tradition" has it, is to take dancing lessons for at least fifteen years, says junior Laurie Unkel. Both she and her sister Jamie, a sophomore, started dance lessons when they were three years old, following in the footsteps of older sisters in the tradition started by Donna Unkel Cunliffe.

Jamie and Laurie dance at a studio in Spotswood one hour a week and practice continually at home. Their lessons include tap and modern dance.

The two sisters dance together as a team in recitals. Laurie has finished first in many talent shows, including the Sayreville Summer Talent Show.

Laurie expresses her feelings about performing on stage as "really comfortable up there, unless I'm performing of course." Recently Laurie was filmed performing at a nightclub, and this tape was shown on cable TV. Jamie's stage fright and discomfort are erased once she is in the lights. "You think you're going to be afraid, but you're not."

Looking towards the future, Laurie takes theatre courses in school to help her develop a distinctive style to her dance, and hopes to dance on Broadway. Jaimie's not sure yet, she says, but "you never know."

Why Don't Teachers Come to Us?

One student in the high school just started school this year — in the United States, that is. Sophomore Yvonne Baumann was born and raised in Cologne, Germany. She is staying in this country with the Howell family, who had previously sponsored Eustorgio Meza, an exchange student from Mexico.

Yvonne became interested in the exchange student program by reading about it back in Germany. The program was "Youth for Understanding," run by an organization in Washington, D.C. She had an interview and then was placed in the U.S. in Sayreville.

Yvonne compared schools in the U.S. and Germany and concluded, "the schools here are a mess. In Germany we offer advanced courses such as physics and chemistry to ninth grade students. Plus, if tenth graders want to learn a trade, there are apprenticeships available." The changing of classes also strikes Yvonne as unusual. "In Germany the teachers come to us. We only switch classes for the sciences and gym." Yvonne is currently enrolled in two language courses, and she speaks English, German, and French fluently.

"Life is cheaper here," Yvonne says, adding that almost everything in Germany costs twice as much as the same thing here. She has seen a lot of America. She got her first ideas of America from the westerns she has seen, and now she has seen such real places as Broadway and Seaside Heights which she enjoyed very much. Yvonne likes American music, especially such groups as Boston and Kansas.

Yvonne will return to her home country in July, 1980, after her unusual visit to Sayreville, N.J. It wasn't like the America she had pictured from the wild-west movies, but she does admit it was pretty exciting.

Studying French, exchange student Yvonne Baumann perfects her third language.

Looking toward the skies, Theresa Ziobro dreams of unknown adventure.

Flying is "the best feeling! free! the ultimate!"

Sophomore Theresa Ziobro began to be interested in flying when she was young. While growing up, her father related stories of legendary fliers, such as Greg "Pappy" Boyington, a fighter pilot stationed with her father in WWII. The thought of fighter pilots taking off across the Pacific on missions unknown captured her imagination. She was especially impressed with the fact that they flew Corsaires, a propellor driven plane, not the technical marvels of today. The thought of such skill and bravery made her want to become a pilot.

She began ground school in September at Marlboro Airport, and will soon be eligible for her solo in a Cessna 150 Skyhawk, a four seat private plane.

She may not have her pilot's license yet, but with her feet on the ground, her imagination soars.

Ride 'em Cowgirl!

Corrals and stables are familiar scenes for sophomore Karen Bailey and juniors Linda Himey and Cheryl Skutnik. Both Karen and Linda have been horseback-riding since they were about ten years old, while Cheryl became interested just a few years ago through her friendship with Linda.

All three girls have their own horses, which they ride in their free time. Karen can be seen riding Billy, her horse, around the school grounds in the afternoon. The girls also participate in 4-H competitions and public presentations. Cheryl gives speeches and demonstrations at the Middlesex County Fair grounds to new members.

Linda and Karen have entered competitions on county and state levels, and Karen also entered the National Horse Show held at Madison Square Garden. For their riding abilities, the girls have received many ribbons and trophies, including 4-H awards.

Linda also spends a great deal of time with her mare, Lady Heather. "During the summer we go to the farm every day, but during the winter we go on weekends and any time during the week we have time," explains Linda. Karen and Cheryl agree that training and caring for their horses take a lot of time, too.

The three underclassmen plan to pursue equestrian careers. As for now, the girls all agree that horseback riding is a fantastic hobby and a great way to spend their free time.

Away from the stables, Karen Bailey thinks of warmer days when she can ride her horse again.

Sophomore Surprise

Very rarely do sophomores achieve a victory over the upperclasses. Despite usual junior and senior dominance, the class of 1982 succeeded.

"Winnie the Pooh" was the theme of the 1979 sophomore Homecoming float. The class members prepared their float by working constantly for several weeks. Class officers Celeste Del Gatto, Wayne Locklin, Tricia Carlesimo, and Jody Kabat directed enthusiastic sophomores to a victory in float competition. Class advisors Miss Bjelka, Miss Kopec, Miss Lamprecht, and Miss Nowicki put much effort into the competition. The highlight of the event was when the sophomore students paraded around the football field as the imaginary cartoon characters of "Winnie the Pooh."

Sophomores continued to show upperclassmen their enthusiastic approach toward school. Their first major project, the selling of light-bulbs to commemorate their hundredth anniversary, was a success.

Each sophomore class provides a fresh outlook to the high school and the class of '82 has given new life to the halls of SWMHS.

All the World Loves a Clown

Making people laugh is what Brent Jaffe enjoys. It gives him a "supreme feeling" to watch people's reactions to his clowning.

"I became interested at the age of six when a magician came to my birthday party. At age eleven I was a professional magician, and at age fourteen I became a clown," Brent says, explaining his start in entertaining. Brent learned the art from books, magic shows, and of course, other clowns.

He began performing at children's parties and now holds a steady job clowning in Keyport. He also clowns at private parties, banquets and store openings. Brent uses clowning as an outlet for his "inner weirdness" and he hopes "that it will lead a path toward other types of entertaining, such as acting."

He has to practice often, and he thinks the most time-consuming thing is learning to create balloon animals, a task which he is glad to say he has mastered.

In addition to being a clown and a magician, Brent is a member of the Children's Theatre Workshop sponsored by Middlesex County College. He and Penny Silletti collaborated upon directing and performing a children's play.

Brent is aware of the success of Greg Evigan, and who's to say he's being unrealistic if he dreams of being Sayreville's next thespian celebrity.

Making a Difference

Fundraising was a major goal for the junior class. The class of '81 opened the year with the sale of SWMHS t-shirts. Throughout the year, cakes and Easter candies were sold to raise money for the Junior Prom on May 10.

The highlight of the year for many students was receiving class rings in October. Juniors were anxious to obtain "81" turns, the final to determine their prom date.

Hours of diligent effort led by class officers Judy Kalicki, Joyce Schenker, June Hardbrod, and Judy Kaminski on the 1979 Homecoming float proved to be successful despite problems involved in construction. Class advisors Mr. Corrigan, Mrs. Comeforo, Ms. Ryan, and Mrs. Wasilewski added artistic touches. The float's theme, "Snoopy Scores A Point," reflected the determination of the class of 1981 to achieve their goals of

The juniors began the first year of the new decade with a refreshing intent to have their middle year of high school make a difference.

Ice hockey player Richard Becker poses for the Quo Vadis photographer.

"It is an exciting, fast moving sport, one that requires coordination, skill, concentration and tenacity," says Richard Becker, who began playing organized ice hockey in 1974.

Richard has played for the Garden State Hockey Club in northern NJ, and the prestigious New Jersey Rockets. He presently skates left wing for the Essex County Midget "A" team of the NJ Youth Hockey League, a member of the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States. "I decided to play up north because the competition is tougher, and truthfully, the quality of ice hockey is better," Richard admitted.

Last year Richard led his team in game winning goals and assists, and was high scorer in a game against an All-Star team from Long Island. Among his awards, Richard has won several coveted individual honors including Rookie of the Year, followed in subsequent seasons with the Most Valuable Forward, Most Valuable Player and last year the newly instituted Playmaker Award.

Richard credits part of his success to his parents, saying without them it would be impossible both physically and financially to play ice hockey. "I have played games beginning at 5 a.m., and practiced until 11 p.m. My teams play both on the East Coast and in Canada. Parents are the ones who get us there, and make up a very important rooting section. Behind every dedicated hockey player are dedicated parents."

Richard intends to play college hockey, but he is not contemplating playing professionally. His most immediate goal is to organize an ice hockey program in the high school, which he has proposed time and again to the Board of Education. One thing hockey has taught him, "nothing is impossible."

The Captivating World of Magic

Spectacular illusions, slight of hand and disappearing doves are all part of the atmosphere created by junior Marc Toglia's magic. What first intrigued Marc, he now uses to intrigue others.

Marc was first exposed to magic at the age of 11 when he participated in a magic show at Eisenhower School. Under the direction of magician Bill Baker, two years later he became a professional performer. He entertained at Eisenhower School in a show entitled the "Cavalcade of Magic," which he himself produced.

Marc describes magic as a hobby that requires continuous practice and dedication. Every minute of his spare time is spent perfecting his routine. Marc specializes in the field of dove magic, and with the assistance of his nine doves he has created a number of original dove and silk routines. This has helped him win several magic contests, including first place in the "Seaview Square Grand Opening."

"I feel that a magician's purpose is not so much to fool his audience, but entertain them letting them escape from the problems of reality, if only for a short while." He has used his talent to help those less fortunate than himself. Marc has performed at several charities including a Brain Injured Child (BIC) benefit, and an annual Christmas Show for the senior citizens at the Brookdale Nursing Home.

Marc hopes to be performing magic professionally throughout his high school years and also during college to help put him through medical school.

With the finesse of a magician, Marc Toglia opens up the world of magic for his audience.

The Future — So Close You Can See It

When asking what it feels like to be a junior, various replies come, "Like a middle child," "One step ahead of sophomores, one step behind seniors." Regardless of the answers, the message is the same. Junior year is very different from any other.

The future is so close you can see it, with thoughts of S.A.T.'s and possible vocations on a junior's mind. Yet it seems very far away, with a whole year between you and graduation. For all seniors who have lived through it, and for sophomores who anticipate it, junior year is a step toward maturity.

CLASS OF 80

What do you think you're going to remember most about your last year of high school? You probably won't immediately think of the ramifications of the New Deal, or the binomial theorem, nor will you remember your locker combination nor the room numbers of the A-hall.

Most likely the things that will stay will be the congestion in the parking lot, and how many times you nearly lost your front end trying to be the first one out. Maybe the new freedoms; remember the feeling of leaving school at 12 O'clock to drive yourself to work, or of being able to sign yourself in in the morning, thus finally being able to take responsibility for yourself. Perhaps it will be the sense of pride; how good it felt being envied by the underclassmen just because you were a senior, and how you knew that that was right. It could be the little privileges that you recall; how important you felt to get out of class to be measured for cap and gown, and how easy it got at the end of the year when you and your teachers both realized that you were going to graduate, and whatever you didn't learn by now was not going to seriously affect your future.

There's a lot of memories that go into your senior year, but all that you're definitely going to come out of it with is a little piece of paper with the school's name on it. Somehow, that's enough.

The Pride of the Class of '80

In a group that includes at the extreme ends National Merit Finalists, and no one with a grade point average less than 4.0, this year's top ten has distinguished itself as one of the most capable in the school's history.

Valedictorian Lori Rosenkopf and Salutatorian Lynne Kowzan, coping with the exact same schedules, had to face each other the last half of the year with the knowledge that less than two-one hundredths of a point separated their offices. Despite that, both were pleased with their ranks and were proud to be able to speak for their class at Graduation.

So, by way of introduction to the Senior Section of Quo Vadis 1980, you are presented with the scholastic pride of the class of '80, its advisors, and its elected officers.

On the job, Sandy Megill gains practical experience through the DECA program.

A warm Halloween finds Maria Zabaleta and Amy Brent just "ghouling around."

As a French student, Sue Sweeney finds "Le Journal d' Anne Frank" a challenging task.

Tony DiAngelis shows pride in his non-cumulative admit slip.

The enthusiastic "Class of 1980."

"R-O-W-D-I-E that's the way we spell Rowdie! Rowdie! Let's get Rowdie!" That was the cheer that echoed the loudest throughout the football stadium on November 2nd. The event was the 4th annual spirit contest in which sophomores, juniors and seniors competed against each other. This is a big part of the pep rally held before each Homecoming game.

Seniors of '80, like seniors before them, proved that school spirit moved them as they captured first place. Some of the day's other activities were a pie eating contest, tug of war and three-legged race. The various sports teams represented their classes in the contests, though these "athletic events" were not exactly according to Hoyle. The girls' field hockey team had to pass a frozen orange to each other from under their necks. The football team had to run a cold spoon through their clothes. This resulted in tying together half the team.

The seniors were challenged for the Spirit title by the efforts of the enthusiastic junior and sophomore classes. Yet, no matter how diligently the underclassmen tried, the seniors still ranked supreme.

Seniors Split Over Future Dismissals

12:09 finds Joe McDonald heading for home.

Should the half-day option for seniors stay in effect?

The majority of seniors believe that it should. Many feel that it gives the students extra time, which has proven valuable, to work many additional hours on the job. This aids in saving for college or cars, without sacrificing time for study. This group also believed that 12:09 dismissal did not interfere with participation in extracurricular activities, believing that "if people are dedicated to their sport or club, they'll find a way to come back at 2:30."

Contrarily, a small percentage of the graduating class wanted to see a return to the full day program, now that it will no longer affect them. Citing the fact that extra classes provide greater learning opportunities, they felt that "staying until 2:30 would cause school to become more a way of life for seniors than just somewhere to stop by before work."

Though opinion was divided, all the students involved agreed that they enjoyed the five-period option, because it is a privilege which provides everyone with added free time, whether for work, study, or socializing.

Faculty Endorses New "State" Politicians

"Hi, my name is ..." or "I am running for the office of ..." were the introductions of two of many different speeches heard by the 6 delegates to Jersey Boys' and Girls' State held at Rider College in June, 1979. The main purpose of the week long seminars was to instruct the youth of the state in the functions of the government. Each delegate was urged to participate and run for offices available for his or her "city," "county," and "state." Campaigning, voting and inauguration ceremonies were experienced by all.

The four delegates to Boys' State, Scott Kominkiewicz, A. Jay Sabine, John Tarnacki and Brian Teeter were chosen by the faculty because of their demonstrated scholarship, leadership, and patriotism. In addition to the faculty endorsement, the Girls' State delegates, Angela Batissa and Sandy Check, were interviewed by representatives of the Sayreville American Legion Auxiliary Post.

Experiences at Boys' and Girls' State will not soon be forgotten by the six delegates. Although the atmosphere of Boys' State was very military, the boys had fun and met many new people from all over the State. The Girls' State delegates found their experiences rewarding and were sorry to leave the new friends they made. Nevertheless, all found the Boys' and Girls' State week enlightening, giving them insight into the workings of government.

Are You Going to Make Your Voice Heard?

For the first time, the majority of the class of 1980 will be able to vote in the upcoming presidential election. Having the power to vote, however, does not mean that these future leaders of the world will let their voices be heard in November.

A variety of reasons will bring a majority of the graduating class to the polls on election day. Unfortunately, many of these students will be voting only because they see no reason not to. Some, however, have more concrete reasons as to why they will cast ballots next November 4th. A few seniors feel that voting is not only a privilege and a right, but it is the only way that they can let the government know their feelings and opinions. Still other students, through personal experience, know what a difference only a handful of votes can make. Through their energetic work in previous local elections, these seniors have found that their voices can make a difference.

A minority of the graduating class says that they will not vote in next November's election. The prevalent reason for their absence from the polls is "ignorance of public issues."

They do not believe that their one vote can make a difference. Some are "just too lazy" to get out and go to the polls.

Still, most seniors say that they will vote for our next president in November. Actions, however, and not words, are going to count in the election. Only time will tell whether the generation which will supply the energy for the future will put their words into action and put their power to work.

It's Harder to Finance a Date Than to Ask for One

Whether you're dealing with boys and girls, guys and gals, hep cats and chicks, beaus and belles, or young ladies and gentlemen, no matter the time or place, every generation has something in common ... dating. However, dating today isn't as cut and dried as it used to be.

High school students are beginning to feel more and more the financial crunch. Considering that the cost to get into the average movie ranges between 99¢ and $4.00, and the cost of two games of bowling is about $3.00, and those old enough to go to a disco spend at least $5.00 to get in, amusement parks can go to $13.00, and horseback riding is about $7.00, it's now a lot harder to finance the date than to ask for it. Remember, none of these even take into account the high cost of gas and the often criminal cost of food.

Even with people feeling freer to split the costs, couples generally have it harder since they want to be together as often as possible, which is why so many students consider it so important to get jobs. This doesn't always solve the problem, either, when you realize that minimum wage is only $2.90, before all the taxes have been taken out. Still, what use is the little money you earn when you have to work when you should be dating?

Inflation is not a friend of dating, and our generation is rediscovering the joys of walks through the parks, nights at home together, and parking the car instead of driving all night.

A Classic Voice on the Rise

Music is one of those things which has the ability to create emotional impact on both those listening and performing. To Pat Grau, music is a large and beautiful part of her life.

Pat has sung for people as far back as she can remember. Performing in front of audiences in musicals such as "Company," "Mame," and "Funny Girl," has given Pat more theatrical experience than most people her age. Though her age is sometimes a barrier to her for some parts, Pat has overcome this and proven her singing and acting ability time and again.

Pat has been taking voice lessons from Mrs. Hellwig and she feels that, with her new knowledge, she can now appreciate a higher quality of music. Pat was a member of the 1979

All-State Chorus which gave a command performance in Atlantic City. Their singing had such a profound effect on the audience and the chorus members, that before they had completed the finale, all were in tears.

Sayreville High may have a rising star in its midst in the form of the classic voice of Pat Grau.

National Merit — The Top 1%

"A big surprise!" was the shared reaction of Rob Butchko and Lori Rosenkopf in regard to their accomplishments in the National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test.

Both Rob and Lori achieved semi-finalist status in the contest. The test, taken by most college-bound juniors throughout the country, is given in the form of the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test and measures the student's mathematical and verbal skills.

To qualify as a semi-finalist, a student's score must rank among the top one percent in the nation. In all, ten received some recognition for their high scores in the NMSQT. Besides semi-finalists Rob and Lori, eight other students received letters of commendation. They were Nancy Bayus, Gerri DelGatto, Mike Henderson, Lynne Kowzan, Dave Medford, Linda Rogers, John Wisniewski, and Vic Wolski, who gained the highest individual math score.

Mr. Newcomer, the college counselor, commented that the number of commended students is much higher than that of recent years, and that it is especially gratifying to have two semi-finalists in view of the fact that there were none from our school last year, and only one the year before.

NMSQT semi-finalists Rob Butchko and Lori Rosenkopf.

Save the Cetaceans! Save the What?

Save the Whales? Why would anyone want to save the whales? This was a question brought to the minds of many people when Steve Medlin introduced the production of "Save the Whales" in concert.

When asked his motive for doing the concert, Steve's reply was, "In the future I would like to become a concert promoter and I wanted to do one for a good cause. The concert would raise money for 'Save the Whales' and give me the opportunity to promote a concert." The concert was held on October 6, 1979 and 300 whale supporters gathered in the High School auditorium to hear music performed by two very popular bands, Atlantic City Expressway and Whisper.

Although the night was a success, the Master of Ceremonies, Mike Jarmis of WCTC, was less so as he was booed off the stage by the audience. If not for the support of Alan J. Karcher, Ditmas Caterers of Brooklyn, Doo-Bone Inc., Greenfield's of Sayreville, and Platter Puss Records, this benefit would not have been possible.

For publicity, T-shirts, buttons, and signs were designed, which contributed to the attendance outcome. Steve's work in prompting the concert seemed to be a step in the right direction for starting his career. The profit brought music to Steve's ears. After all expenses had been cleared, a charitable $200.000 was happily donated to "Save the Whales Incorporated" in Los Angeles, California.

Body Energy — The Fuel of the Future

Seniors here at Sayreville could end the energy shortage if there were only a way to change body energy into fuel. As always, this year they are burning up a lot of energy!

The Seniors who are supposed to have it easy in their last year seem not to be having it that way. They are always on the move, starting from the time they rush out of bed to make the 8:00 bell, which some actually do. At 8:14 they tear out of homeroom to first period, the first of five frantic class changes, culminating in the last great flood of the 12:09 dismissal. Where to now? Go home? To a job? Get ready for sports practice? Club Meeting? Going out tonight? Homework? Watch some T.V.? Go to bed late?

When they finally get to sleep, the dreams in their heads are about the day that has passed them by quickly, and of the even busier day yet to come. Are you a person that is always going somewhere to do something? If you're not sure where the time goes, stop and think ... If you can find time!

Destruction Deferred in Recent Years

A major problem in American high schools has always been vandalism. Whether vandals use boredom as their justification, or are only satisfying their destructive urges, their actions exhibit a total disregard for property and result in tax retributions. As custodian Mr. Tony Lopez put it, "They don't realize that their parents pay for the damage."

Though it is a serious problem, there has been no detectable increase in vandalism in this school in recent years. In fact, our damage has been less than that of most other schools. Mr. Dill credits the designated "smoking areas" as a factor in keeping down the amount of vandalism.

"Students don't gather in the lavatories," he explained, "and won't be there to cause damage." The vice-principal did cite several costly cases of recent vandalism, including the razing of the stadium's press box, the destruction of trees, and damage to lavatory toilets and plumbing. "Most damage is inflicted by intruders entering the school at night when it is used by other organizations," Mr. Dill added.

Breakage of windows and defacing via graffiti has also been a major problem. As one student put it, "Vandals can't fit into society, and try to change it in a violent fashion." They are a problem which society must deal with, and find a tolerance for.

You Say It's Your Birthday, Too?

Bill McSorley and Jim Schenkel take a break for lunch.

Have you ever wondered if there was anyone in school that was born on the same day as you? According to Dr. Marotta this curiosity is well based because statistics show that out of a group of 30 people there is a probability of at least two persons having the same birthday.

A study of the senior class has shown that these statistics are not so far-fetched. The results reveal that on five separate days of the year, five people have the same birthday. A group of 12 people share 3 separate dates evenly, while 30 people share 10 days commonly. Out of 365 days, it is estimated that on 50 of these days, 2 people will have the same birth date.

Although many students share the same birthday, each can still feel special because to our parents and families we are still unique.

A Most Welcome Distraction

Without a doubt, listening to music is one of the favorite pastimes of students. One shudders to think how difficult life would be without this welcome distraction.

Attending rock concerts has become almost a religious ritual for many rock music fans, especially students who make them short vacations. Walking through the halls, one can't help but notice the many concert shirts bearing names of groups of various styles. The Rolling Stones, The Who, and Neil Young are some of the more popular artists. Country groups such as The Outlaws, and heavy metal groups like Led Zeppelin are also well liked. Representation of the punk rock style are groups such as The Clash and The Ramones, and new wavers such as Elvis Costello and The Cars.

The many different kinds of sounds in rock 'n roll today make life easier for students. With many groups to choose from, each student can find a style which suits him. After all, isn't that what music is about?

A Mecca for Meeting and Eating

At 12:09 on any school day in Sayreville, you can watch half the high school parking lot empty out and make a beeline for the mecca where the Sayreville seniors go to eat lunch, meet their friends, and discuss the day's events. Some seniors hurry there not to eat, but to make a living. McDonald's hires people from the area to work in the kitchens and behind the counter.

When this year's seniors were juniors, they ate in the cafeteria and all they had to worry about was the taste of the food and the sameness of the menu. Now, they have to worry about the price, too. Some seniors find "Micky D's" prices too high, and either eat in school or go home for an in-house meal. Lunchtime has really advanced since the days when everyone just went home for lunch!

Tomorrow's Executive Staff

For most people the Senior year is the last free ride: a time to enjoy themselves, because from that point on it becomes necessary to work. Some seniors in the high school pass up this opportunity, and work. Their reasons are as varied as their jobs.

Most of the Seniors with jobs work to have money for their recreation. For some, this means money for gas in their cars, admissions to movies, or to finance skiing or camping trips. Others use it to pay for clothes, records, or various diversions. Some use their earnings to cushion their futures, as money for future trips, large purchases, and, most of all, college tuition.

Most people picture teenage employment as working in Burger King or McDonald's, but there are students who run their own businesses in such things as photography or promotion. Some students are trying to break into show business by running their own bands, and others have made the first step into civil service by working for surveyors or as census takers. Far from being just a way of making some quick money, some seniors are using their jobs to lay the groundwork for a future career.

Seniors in high school comprise a small, underestimated, and unappreciated part of the work force. Whether they take their jobs seriously or not, one thing must be kept in mind; today's minimum wage is going to be tomorrow's executive staff.

Pumping gas is a popular means of employment for seniors such as Jim Koller.

"Double, Double" Toil and Trouble

After a record senior class in 1979, the class 1980 is markedly smaller. Although the 1980 class was cheated in overall numbers, it wasn't left short of twins.

The 448 seniors have nine sets of twins in their midst. Ray and William Lockwood, who are fraternal twins, along with Dave and George Karlowitz, Patti and Paula Rojewski and Maria and Mike Vaccaro make up more than half of the twins in the senior class.

Identical twins Chris and Sal Benti-venga, Anthony and Louis Dahl, Ed and Larry Meise, Jim and Bob Rolzhausen, and Debbie and Denise Scala make up the other half. With twins occurring once in every ninety-six births, Sayreville has nearly double its share.

Although the twins are somewhat easily identifiable by their fellow seniors, the rest of the students may think they're hallucinating at times.

The Lockwood, Rojewski and Vaccaro twins.

State Police Gain Recruit

The state police trooper has duties and responsibilities that many people are curious about.

For as long as Chuck Jankech can remember he has wanted to pursue a career in law enforcement. "I really wasn't very interested in just being a municipal officer. Primarily my aim was to be a state trooper," Chuck commented. There is a definite difference between the two. According to Chuck, the process is much easier to become a local officer than a state trooper. The main difference is that a local officer remains under the jurisdiction of the municipality, while the state trooper remains under that of the state.

In preparation for his future, Chuck attended the N.J. State Police Trooper Week last summer and enjoyed it both physically and academically. After graduation, he will attend a college for two years and earn an Associate's Degree for Law Enforcement. He will then enter the Police Academy. Now that Chuck is working towards his pilot's license he hopes to someday become a pilot for a State Police.

Future state trooper, Chuck Jankech, displays his New Jersey youth program T-shirt.

The Traumas of College Preparation

Thomas Smith

John Sobiranski

ABOVE RIGHT: Every college-bound senior is familiar with this sight, as the selection of colleges to choose from is unlimited.

In our junior year, most of us took the infamous SAT. Therefore, along with the normal grind of schoolwork, we had to worry about passing a test we were told we shouldn't study for. All for what? To get into the best possible college after graduation.

Along with the college boards, to make our lives even more difficult, we were told we had to take college prep courses. So in our senior year we endeavored to pass such classes as calculus, physics, history, and English.

During our senior year we also began the wonderful task of applying to the colleges of our choice. Should it be public or private, two-year or four-year, large or small? The decision was our own, and it was a difficult one. After this process of elimination, when we decided on the three or four which suited us best, we proceeded to tell our life histories on applications. Then to top it all off, we had to wait two or three months for the colleges to decide if we were acceptable.

In the end, we hopefully got accepted and hopefully the decision of which college to go to was simple; but it wasn't. The good part about it is, however, after that decision is made, our lives are pretty much mapped out for the next two to four years. Our future is set, and hopefully we all made the wisest choice.

Governor "Burns" 18 Year Old Privilege

The legal drinking age in the state of New Jersey was raised to 19 years with the signing of a bill by Gov. Brendan T. Byrne. The bill's designers, Frank Graves and Martin Herman, hoped that it would lessen the incidence of teenage alcoholism and drunk driving. Provisions of the bill included stiff penalties for minors who drank or attempted to buy alcohol, and considerable punishment for adults who bought liquor for minors.

Seniors in the school registered shock and disappointment over the bill. They questioned the practicality of the bill, and voiced anger over the fact that they would now have to wait another year to go into adult places of recreation, such as bars and nightclubs. Other seniors brought up the point that they would no longer be able to work in places where liquor is served. One senior complained that, "... this ruins my plans to work this summer. I had a bartending job all lined up this summer, but now that they passed the law I'll have to find another job — and probably won't make as much money as I would have."

Faculty in the school generally supported the bill, however, as many were concerned by the effects of alcohol on schoolwork. One teacher commented "... we've all heard of students coming in drunk, and now that there's a law to enforce perhaps we'll be able to stop this."

Others supported the bill on grounds of safety. Teenagers drink and drive as often as anyone else, and they are just as likely to crash. One teacher commented that "despite all the controversy, raising the age is the safest thing to do." This point was driven home dramatically this year when a van crashed into a telephone pole right in front of the high school, killing its young passengers, and proving that young people are no less mortal than anyone else.

The controversy over the bill can be simplified as a conflict between privileges and safety, and whatever the outcome of the debate, the fact remains that 19 is the law.

"Live, From New York . . ."

It's about 11:30 on a Saturday night and you're out cruising the exciting town of Sayreville, so what do you do? Find a party that's probably already broken up, or maybe hit McDonald's for the sixth time that night? Heck no! You park yourself in front of the nearest TV and turn on channel 4, what else? It's time for one of the best and most watched shows on the tube — Saturday Night Live. What makes this show so popular? Well, there's the "Not Ready For Prime Time Players", including the likes of Dan Ackroyd, Jane Curtin, Garrett Morris, Gilda Radner, and, of course, John "1941" Belushi. There's also a new host every week, as well as some decent musical attractions, such as the Rolling Stones, Chicago, and Bob Dylan, who have all performed on the show. But certainly, the biggest attraction of SNL is at the same time the smallest — he's only four inches tall — ooooo nooooo — it's none other than Mr. Bill! This high-pitched hunk of "Play-Doh" finds himself in a new situation every week where he is decapitated, dismembered, mutilated, flattened, stabbed, scrunched, or otherwise abused by the end of his adventure — only to return the next week in one piece ready to face Mr. Sluggo again. It's good, healthy violence, but so what — whoever hurt a piece of clay? So, kiddies, be sure to go out and get your Mr. Bill T-shirt — he'll appreciate your support.

A World Full of Turmoil, Trouble . . . and Hope

Maybe now that we're looking back on 1980 we can find the time to take a breath. For the year whose major fear was running out of energy, it certainly had plenty of its own.

"Hectic" may be the word that best describes the year. Every major event that America faced in its 204th year had its reflection in Sayreville. The fall brought a heated mayoral race which foreshadowed the bitter presidential race, and later, students upset over the cancellation of the senior class trip protested in what may have been a preview of future draft resistance. This year the soccer, track, and basketball teams all made tournaments, while the running of the Olympic Flame and the Gold-medal exploits of Eric Heiden showed us that there were still goals to attain.

On a darker side, students who had to travel Ernston Road found the going slow as gas-hungry motorists jammed the road waiting for BP to open to save a few cents, and America was brought up against its greatest challenges as the twin spectres of the Ayatollah Khomeini and the Russian invasion of Afghanistan reminded us that even the brightest future needs to be cared for.

Whether or not there were to be nuclear power plants, Olympics at Moscow, or a Democrat in the White House, or even a half a day for seniors, divided us in our opinions, but through all the squabbles and the troubles, despite the deprivation and the inflation, one fact remained: 1980 was an interesting year to be set off into the world.

Starting their careers early, Debbie Jackubowski and Abida Khan wait for the bus to work.

With glee, Mrs. Newton waves good-bye to the school year.

Even after being called "stupid," Betsy Klein and Judy Kalicki still share their friendship.

The hazards of saying, "Anyone want a ride home?" too loudly.

Senioritis, a common ailment among the graduating class, strikes Bob Butchko, Dawn Zollinger, and Vic Wolski.

Paul McCormack steadies his hand, knowing that one false move will spoil his sculpture.

When the rush to graduation is over, there will be very little left besides memories. A diploma, a tassel to hang in your car, a program to put away and never open again, and a yearbook with not nearly enough pictures of yourself. You'll lose the joy you felt on the last day, and you'll be left with the emptiness that came the day after.

Your close friends will grow farther apart. Their faces will become less and less familiar, like ghosts in the winter sky.

The cheers of your high school years will no longer ring in your ears, and if you ever come back you'll not be able to find your way through the halls without help.

Still, no matter how thick-skinned you grow, every time you pass down Washington Road your voice may catch a little bit, and you may become a little distant for a while. Whoever you are riding with will nod to themselves, and be silent, respecting your time to reflect on those times gone by.

Always expect the unexpected from Tom Grzymski.

Looking on anxiously, Jerry Lebeda awaits the approving of his article.

Once again, Grace Karaffa and John Lynch debate layout schemes.
