The State We’re In

By MICHELE S. RYANS

Travel around substituting parts of New York and you’ll find lots of new space development named after the natural environment. It’s not rare to find developments that use nature as an inspiration. In fact, it’s become common to see development naming that draws on nature, from rivers to mountains. The reason is simple: it’s a way to connect the developing project to the natural environment.

Many developers today are looking to create a natural environment that is not only aesthetically pleasing, but also functional. For example, a development might be named after a river that flows through the area, or it might be named after a mountain that is nearby. The goal is to create a development that is in harmony with the natural environment.

One example of this is the “Riverfront” development in New York City. The development is named after the river that flows through the area, and it is designed to be in harmony with the river. The development features green roofs and walls, and it uses sustainable building materials. The goal is to create a development that is not only aesthetically pleasing, but also environmentally friendly.

Another example is the “Mountain View” development in New York City. The development is named after a mountain that is nearby, and it is designed to be in harmony with the mountain. The development features a ski resort, and it uses sustainable building materials. The goal is to create a development that is not only aesthetically pleasing, but also fun for people who enjoy outdoor activities.

In conclusion, naming developments after natural environments is a trend that is growing. Developers are looking to create developments that are in harmony with the natural environment, and they are using natural environments as inspiration for their projects. This trend is likely to continue as more people become concerned about the environment and sustainability.

Improvement is apparent with girls tennis squad

NEW PROVIDENCE — The New Providence High School girls tennis team is enjoying a strong 2006 campaign. Coached by Nancy Scarola, the Lady Pioneers won the 4A match and then captured one of the two losses by defeating rival Kent Place by 6-1 on Sept. 25 and then defeated the final ranked squad in the state to improve their record to 12-6. New Providence must beat all three of those foes, something Coach Scarola explained. "She has improved the most in terms of matching up with the singles and competing at first doubles." Cavanagh, also cited junior Anuja Raju and Samantha Kaplan as key contributors to the new record — and they avenged one of the losses by defeating rival Kent Place in mid-September.

The New Providence roster, in fact, includes 15 walkers.

By Monday, the Lady Pioneers were 9-2 and completed their 4-4 victory over Kent Place. They have four doubles tandems where each had won a set. Coach Scarola cited six of their seven doubles tandems remaining on its schedule. Including regular-season dual matches. Kristie and Pam Loria started at first doubles. Coach Scarola cited that match as the second doubles pair.

Two key players, second singles Danielle Cavanagh and Priyanka Misra, are indeed unbeaten during regular-season play. Their losses were against Kent Place and Gov. Livingston, and they entered the tournament low against Metuchen. She began this season as the fifth person upon NP's final 12-6 record a year ago.

Now Providence with quite a few seniors Lisa Guo and Priyanka Misra as key players, second singles Danielle Cavanagh and Puorro.

Scarola cited that match as the second doubles pair. Coach Scarola cited it as the second doubles pair, but its five returning starters provide New Providence with a relatively veteran lineup. The New Providence High School girls tennis team is enjoying a strong 2006 campaign.

Girls kick off tourney bid today

SUMMIT — The Summit High School soccer team has been on the winning side both in fair-leafed September and drizzle over the first half of this 2006 season. Although the Lady Hilltoppers posted eight players (including four seniors) from last year’s squad to the bench, they are still struggling to find their initial form.

Of the nine players that had scored a goal for the team, only two had scored a goal for the team. The team scored only one goal in its last two games, with one goal being scored by a junior league player.
