Snow piles 2 cents on tax rate

By KEVIN COLLIGAN THE RECORD

Westfielders displeased with the hike in the municipal tax levy should forward at least some of their complaints to Mother Nature.

Nearly half the increase is due to the now-infamous Blizzard of '96, said Town Administrator Ed Gottko.

Municipal taxes will rise 4 cents per $100 of assessed value in 1996 — an increase of $69.60 for the average Westfielder with a home assessed at $174,000. Blizzard-related snow removal costs account for 1.8 cents of the growth — or $31.32 for the average homeowner.

Combined with the proposed school tax increase of 8 cents per $100 of assessed value, the average Westfielder can look forward to paying $208.80 more in property taxes in 1996.

The proposed 1996 municipal budget, which was tentatively adopted by the Town Council Feb. 27, totals $21,807,062 — an increase of $333,245 from the year before.

Pension costs increased $180,000, said Mr. Gottko. Last year they decreased $385,000.

Also, the proposed Elizabethtown Water Company rate hike will add $50,000 to the town's expenses in the last five months of 1996 alone, said the administrator.

In addition, municipal court revenues were off $70,000. That drop, said Mr. Gottko, was due to the fact the town had caught up with the backlog of ticket scofflaws in preceding years.

Helping to ease the blow, Westfield meter attendants issued 2,000 more tickets in 1995 than they did in 1994.

To trim expenses, the town is paring six positions through attrition and are spread throughout several departments.

The impact of the newly negotiated police contract, which includes drastically lower starting salaries, has yet to be determined.

The council will have a public hearing on the budget and vote to adopt or amend it on second reading Tuesday, March 26.

The 1995 property tax rate in Westfield was $3.66 per $100 of assessed value. Of that, $2.35 went to the school district, 79 cents went to the county and 52 cents went to the town.

The average Westfielder paid $6,368.40 in property taxes in 1995.

Who is 'ideal' superintendent?

One of the most important decisions the next Westfield Board of Education will face is the selection of a new superintendent. So to help Westfielders decide which school board candidates to support April 16, The Record posed the following question to the five remaining school board candidates:

If elected, you will be on the Board of Education which chooses a new superintendent. What qualities will you look for in the administrator who will lead the Westfield School District into the next century?

CAMPAIGN '96

In no particular order, this is what the candidates had to say:
Annamarie Puleis: Academic leadership and judgment with business and fiscal acumen of the highest order. These are the baseline abilities that the superintendent will have to demonstrate to guide the Westfield community through enrollment and technological growth in a fiscally austere climate.

The best candidate will have a proven track record in the development of a technological plan that advances the educational goals of the curricula while meeting the cost constraints of the community at large. The superintendent will show the successful implementation of a multi-year plan that brings schools in line with the technological sophistication found in personal and business use. Experience will be expected in the development of a prudent ongoing plan to keep the technology current over time.

The candidate will demonstrate proficiency in accommodating enrollment growth while observing the district's dedication to its class size policy. Experience with building projects — both their development as well as their efficient and cost-conscious execution is a must.

The candidate will show the ability to translate parental concerns (Please turn to page A-6)

Student counselors bear budget burden

By KEVIN COLLIGAN THE RECORD

Keeping Westfield teenagers off drugs and alcohol will get a little tougher next year.

The proposed 1996-1997 school budget shaves the number of Westfield High School Student Assistance Counselors — one of the town's frontline defenses against teen substance abuse — from 1 1/2 to one full-time position.

Non-tenured Student Assistant Counselor (SAC) David Manning will not return next fall. His tenured colleague, Maureen Mazzaresse, who works part time as a health teacher, will assume SAC duties full-time next year. The savings to the district is about $20,000.

"In an ideal world, we would probably have more of these type of people," said Westfield Board of Education President Susan Jacobson. "In this year's budget we re-times at point blank range with a .357 Magnum. Mr. Bauer was struck at least twice in the torso and once in the head with hollow point bullets. After killing her husband, Mrs. Bauer, of Durham, N.C., put the barrel of the gun in her mouth and pulled the trigger, killing herself.

Student counselors bear burden as budget ax cuts part-time post

The board president said SAC funding may be restored in the future.

Mr. Manning is, understandably, against the cutback. But he said WHS students have more to lose than he does.

"It's not me. It's the position," he said. "I will do well outside of here. But these kids desperately need these services."

Since SACs are bound by federal law to maintain confidentiality, at-risk kids are more likely to talk about their problems, said Mr. Manning. And with that start, the counselors are often able to steer kids onto the straight and narrow.

The head of the Westfield Police Department's juvenile bureau agrees.

"I find their work to be invaluable," said Det. Sgt. James Schneider. "Believe me, Westfield has a definite problem with drugs and alcohol. I'm sure there is more than enough work to go around."

Rev. Marc Trister of First Congregational Church, another fixture on Westfield's anti-drug and alcohol abuse scene, was stunned by news of the cutback.

"As simply as I can put it, I think it is too bad," said Rev. Trister. "These are documented problems we are talking about. The schools need as much help as they can get. Where's a kid going to go for help?"

WHS Senior and tri-editor of the Hi's Eye James Abels said SACs perform a vital service.

"I think some students need someone to talk to when things aren't going their way," he said. "Having someone for them to talk to is important for the school."

Both Rev. Trister and Mr. Manning said the reduction reflects a town-wide refusal to cope with teen substance abuse.

"My personal belief is the community is still putting its head in the sand," said Mr. Manning. "I call parents and tell them I believe their kids are using drugs and alcohol and [the parents] get angry. All we can do is watch the kids go into a downward spiral and there is nothing we can do."

"We are dealing with a town in denial," said Rev. Trister. "As long as the teams are winning and the kids are getting into college, people think everything's okay."

Mr. Manning is working on a three-day seminar detailing the legal, personal and physiological consequences of drug use to be held at the high school during the last week of March.

Ms. Phelan drops out of race for position on school board

By KEVIN COLLIGAN
THE RECORD

The field of candidates vying for three seats on the Westfield Board of Education narrowed by one last week with the withdrawal of challenger Carol Phelan.

Mrs. Phelan cited time constraints as the reason for her withdrawal.

Still in the race are incumbent school board President Susan Jacobson and challengers Mike Farrell, Arlene Gardner, Frances Masterson and Annmarie Puleio.

Also facing the scrutiny of the voters is the district's proposed $48,728,989 school budget. The proposed budget has an increase of 3.4 percent over that of 1995-1996. If it passes, the average Westfielder will pay $4,228.20 to support town schools this year (see chart on this page).

Mrs. Phelan, a mother of three children in the school district, has been a resident of Westfield for 22 years. She has been involved with numerous community organizations, which, before her exit from the race, she maintained would benefit the board.

With just five school board hopefuls competing for three open seats, the results of the April 16 election is sure to please the majority of the field. Last year's hotly contested election, which had one two-year and three three-year seats open, drew nine candidates and a nearly unprecedented 27 percent registered voter turnout. Like the candidate field, however, the turnout in this year's election will likely be smaller.

Ms. Jacobson has stressed her experience on the board in her election bid.

Mr. Farrell, who finished 191 votes shy of a board seat last year, has cast himself as the candidate who will ask tough questions.

Ms. Gardner said she supports "creative, collaborative" approaches to maintain school funds.

Ms. Frances has made the maintenance of "age-appropriate" material in the district's Health and Family Life Curriculum a centerpiece in her campaign.

Ms. Puleio said she wants "rigorous program evaluation(s)" to ensure Westfield's curriculum is up to snuff.

Interest in principals

From budgets to school spirit to top-notch academics to high morale, principals are it

Much hand-wringing goes on among school board members and candidates, superintendents of schools and assorted parents and teachers about "the quality of education."

The questions echo through national media news programs as well as neighborhood coffee klatches: Are test scores really high enough? Is it too easy to get an "A?" Is discipline at a level where it needs to be to foster learning? Is student and faculty morale noticeably positive and steadily building? Does advanced placement have a real meaning? Would uniforms for students help the learning climate? Are computers in the classroom the answer, or just another costly diversion?

As the well-meaning and the experts debate such quandaries, time slips by, grades founder, morale drifts and another class of seniors graduates without much really being done to help all those behind them. The cycle is perpetual, or so it seems.

Perhaps in the midst of all the rhetoric and the loud ticking of the school clock, more attention ought to be given to the school building principals. They are in literally and figuratively the right position to both listen to such concerns and to respond to them. Consider these facts that illustrate their potentially pivotal role in casting the qualitative direction their staffs and students should take:

☑ The state's annual "report cards" focus on individual school buildings. Students' performance on standardized tests, class sizes, faculty education levels and more left-handedly emphasize the fact that in parents' eyes public education comes down to that building and its principal and faculty.

☑ The primary confluence of students, parents-taxpayers and faculty occurs in the local school building. School board meetings and even school elections just never pull turnouts like a school play or parents night. These events are really where public education meets the consumers nine times out of 10.

And here is a major opportunity for the principal as in-building manager to meet the public's demand for quality face to face.

☑ Each year, the state asks that educational goals be set by a school building-oriented committee of principal, faculty and parents. The process is little-publicized, although results have to be posted with the state at year's end. But again, the state is acknowledging the importance of the school building as focus for identifying and satisfying parents' expectations for quality public education. What a role opportunity here for a strong principal to set high goals — and guide the school community toward meeting them for the good of the students.

☑ Returning to the national media, consider the number of student achievement stories that have keyed on the children's school principal. It's almost never the superintendent, faculty or parents who provide the leadership that brings about such positive excitement and achievement. It takes a motivated principal.

☑ Principals are among the administrators whom the state has identified as now requiring a special mix of their own academic achievement plus classroom experience to qualify as a certified education administrators. Again, the state is acknowledging principals' potential for fostering real leadership and real achievement, building by building, student by student.

☑ Seasoned principals with both classroom and administrative experience know how to turn on teachers and students. They also know, at least as importantly, what turns teachers and students off. This knowledge is irreplaceable and should be fully utilized in the buildings-up revitalization of our school systems.

Bolstering principals' morale could start with a symbolic hug from parents. Principals don't necessarily have to be literally hugged by parents; they'd probably appreciate more having a call from a parent volunteering to help in the classroom or in any other way that lends personal and moral support to the cause of rejuvenating learning.

Are you registered?

Monday is deadline to vote in school election

Monday is the last day for those unregistered to vote to sign up and be eligible to participate in the April 16 school budget and candidate election.

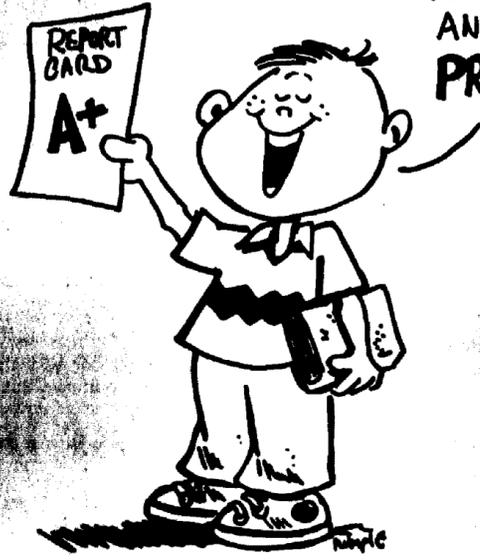

Traditionally, turnout in these elections has been dismally low. This, despite the fact that the school budget on the ballot normally accounts for about 80 percent of the property tax bill in each district. This, despite the fact that sweeping curriculum questions about "family life" courses and multi-cultural instruction flare in the school board meeting rooms and across the front pages.

And this year for the first time sample ballots are to be mailed to further instruct and hopefully inspire registered voters to come out and make a representation about their taxation.

In Scotch Plains and Fanwood district, the school board has moved to maximize voter turnout. Registration forms and instructions are in all district buildings and can be obtained from the PTA presidents of each building. Forms also are available in all municipal buildings and the county Board of Elections.

Additionally, municipal clerks in Scotch Plains and Fanwood will keep their offices open until 9 p.m. Monday to accommodate procrastinators wishing to register to vote at the last possible minute.

'Goals 2000' unnerves some parents of students in 1996

To The Record:

As local school boards throughout the nation begin to comply to the passage of Goals 2000, Educate American Act, H.R. 1804, parents are networking to express their uneasiness about this new education reform. Many believe it lacks strong academics and is psycho-educational in nature.

The following are questions Westfield parents addressed to the school board at its Feb. 27 meeting, relating to the proposed family life education curriculum (kindergarten-12th grade).

Is the board aware of the importance of giving full disclosure of the risks involved when suggesting the use of condoms to minor students? It is a scientific fact that the natural flaws in latex rubber are 50-500 larger than the AIDS virus (C.J. Roland, Ph.D., Naval Testing Laboratories, Washington, D.C.). What is the liability risk for schools should a teen contract AIDS? Who will finance lawsuits? How would this affect our school budget, taxes and educators' salaries?

What evidence can the board give that the "safer sex" message has reduced teen pregnancy, HIV and other STDs? States that use "abstinence-based" sex-education programs have the lowest rates, namely: Wyoming, North Dakota, Minnesota, Maine and Utah.

Why is a relaxation technique called "guided imagery" suggested in the 12th grade curriculum? This is a religious practice that would be inconsistent with the law if used in school. This "innocuous term" is used to disguise hypnotic activity," according to a world-renowned authority on hypnosis, Dr. Michael Yapko. He said, "Hypnosis is undoubtedly a medico-psychological procedure which should only be used by a thoroughly trained physician or mental health professional. The use of hypnotic methods in public schools should be stopped."

What a burden to place on our teachers. They're stuck between a rock and a hard place, by dealing with parents' objections and being loyal to the administration. Perhaps we should let our teachers know that we appreciate their teaching of academics for which they were trained.

One of the concerns of Congressman Bob Franks is that "Goals 2000 represents an uncalled for intrusion into issues best left to be decided by parents and the local school boards responsible to those parents."

In conclusion, I would like to say, kudos to you, Keith Hertel, for your insight and concern by urging the board to "slow down and take another look." Thanks also to the other board members who voted "no" to hastily implement this questionable program. Let us consider how thoroughly we investigate a large financial investment such as a car or house. How much more meticulous should our research be concerning the "quality" and "cost" of educational programs for our children. After all — our children are our future.

My view/ Who was your best teacher?

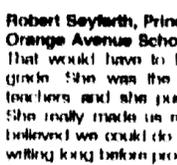

A poll of area principals by Ellen Cahill

Frederick Rice, Principal Harding School, Kenilworth
The teacher I think of as best was one I really didn't like at the time. He was Lou DeFesta, my high school English teacher. He was strict, orderly and well-disciplined and he motivated us to do our best. Back then, I couldn't figure out why I worked so much harder in his class and wanted to do better.

Sam Hazell, Principal Edison Intermediate School, Westfield
Joseph Clerty was the greatest inspiration to me. Without him, I probably wouldn't be in this office. It was my sophomore year in Perth Amboy and I was an honors student in a general curriculum. I had no intention of going to college. Mr. Clerty said, "Sam, you're college material," and he kept on me until I went to the guidance counselor and changed my curriculum.

Robert Seylerth, Principal Orange Avenue School, Cranford
That would have to be Sister Doris Ann, in eighth grade. She was the toughest, most demanding of teachers and she pushed her students to the limit. She really made us reach beyond anything we ever believed we could do. And she was teaching process, willing long before process willing was given a name.

Ken Shulak, Principal Roosevelt Intermediate School, Westfield
Definitely John Anselmo, my seventh grade social studies teacher. He was a master teacher with a great sense of humor. He presented history in a way that piqued my interest. It was Mr. Anselmo who encouraged me to run for Student Council. I ran and won and I've been involved in government ever since.

Carl Kumpf, Principal Coles School, Scotch Plains
Mrs. Beck, my fourth grade teacher in Newark Public Schools, made school so interesting. She was at the forefront of "hands-on" activity and made it exciting to be there.

Argeko F. Pateroster, Principal Walnut Avenue School, Cranford
My grandfather. He was an immigrant lacking a formal education, yet the things he taught couldn't be found in any school book. He taught by his example. From him I learned the most important lessons of life: self respect and respect for others, loyalty, kindness, family values... and he did it all in a second language!

League backs state's juvenile reforms

To The Record:

The League of Women Voters commends Governor Christine Todd Whitman for promoting reform of the juvenile justice system now under way in New Jersey. A new state-level agency, the Juvenile Justice Commission, has been created to oversee all facilities, services and sanctions for juvenile offenders, including programs on county and local level administered by county youth services commissions. Paul Donnelly, former deputy director of the Texas Commission on Children and Youth, has been appointed the commission's first executive director.

A key element of the new system is its emphasis on community-based programs for delinquent youth, including programs for prevention and early intervention. Research studies analyzed by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency indicate that services and sanctions for juvenile offenders are most effective when provided in the community with the support of families, schools, churches and other concerned individuals and agencies. Long-term studies also show that pre-school and family intervention programs for children at risk can significantly reduce later criminal behavior. Adequate funding is essential to ensure the success of these programs; past reform efforts failed due to insufficient funding.

The League of Women Voters believes that New Jersey has taken an important step toward achieving an accountable, efficient and effective juvenile justice system. With the new system in place, and the provision of adequate resources, we have an opportunity to reduce juvenile crime and violence and increase the safety of our neighborhoods.

Madaras trusts campaigns won't be 'personal'

To The Record:

This year Westfield is fortunate to have six citizens seeking election to the Board of Education.

I concur with former school board president, Susan Pepper, that these individuals would serve the best interests of the children, taxpayers and town by refraining from personal attacks while conducting their campaigns and solely addressing the issues the school system and town are facing. I would also hope that the candidates would make it clear to their supporters that either public or private personal attacks are unwelcome.

Currently the school board and town are facing enough issues the candidates should address so that the citizens can make an informed choice when they vote April 18. The most important issue that the 1996-1997 school board will face is the selection of our next superintendent. This is based on the impact this decision will have on our property taxes and education of our children. Additional issues which can be addressed are: our budget; the proposed legislation in Trenton that may impact both the financing of our schools and the curriculum; the academic performance of our students, especially on tests such as the eighth grade Early Warning Test and SATs; how to finance and bring technology into our curriculum and finally; and the upgrading and maintenance of our facilities.

Superintendent

(Continued from page A-1) regarding the curricula to administrators and faculty in order to achieve certain and consistent improvement in student performance and test scores. The experience and competence to conduct the most rigorous program evaluations and refinements will be required in order to maintain a high level of excellence in times of fiscal restraint. The superintendent will represent Westfield's concerns to the larger academic and political community.

And finally, the superintendent will appreciate the strengths and achievements of Westfield's schools and especially of its committed teachers and administrators. He or she will respect the tradition of parental participation and encourage the ongoing support and advice of the community at large as well.

Mike Farrell: As we begin a new era in the Westfield School District, we should look for very specific qualities in the new superintendent of schools.

First and foremost we need to look for someone with a proven track record of raising levels of competence within their district. The state's analysis of the Early Warning Test clearly shows Westfield as having a problem at the intermediate grade levels and within the district a distinct separation of skill levels between Edison and Roosevelt. The fact that the Board of Education has formally recognized this problem means that we should seek someone with the ability to address a key issue like this.

Secondly, we might look at asking the new superintendent to become a Westfield resident. It's important for a key, highly paid employee to have a personal stake in the entire community.

We should use this opportunity to totally update the current job description of the superintendent. The present job description was created in the mid-1970s.

The recent community survey shows that the level of education of the residents has changed during the past 10 years. These parents have as many expectations for their children as their predecessors. Their personal life experiences have made them understand the effect that technology is having on their lives and careers.

Lastly, we need a leader who will continue to aggressively pursue outside funding, like grants, corporate donations, etc., to help offset the growing burden on the taxpayers. The private sector understands the need for strong public education and is much more supportive than ever before. Someone who has the desire to reach for the highest performance goals in the state should be our top priority in Westfield.

Arlene Gardner: The next superintendent for the Westfield School District will face many difficult decisions. We need an administrator who has exceptional leadership abilities. I would look for the following qualities: intelligence, open-mindedness, integrity, a willingness to work hard, the ability to bring together diverse viewpoints, respect for the rights and needs of others, and courage. The new superintendent must be able to think clearly and creatively in order to maintain the highest educational standards within budgetary constraints. He or she should be open-minded to a variety of viewpoints in order to maintain community support for our schools but have the courage to make difficult decisions about school facilities, curriculum and staff. The superintendent must be able to bring together diverse groups and work collaboratively with community leaders. We need a strong administrator. (Please turn to page A-7)

WOMEN IN TECH

Be sure to plan your deck project with care

Entertaining or relaxing outdoors is popular even where the climate is warm only half the year. That's why decks are in high demand. Remodeling magazine in its recent 1995-96 Cost vs. Value report ranked the addition of a deck tops for providing the best rate of return among projects requiring less than a $7,000 investment.

"Compared to most other building projects, their cost is quite low, they are the least expensive way to add usable living space," says Dave Beckman, owner of Archadeck of Hunterdon, one of nearly 80 independently owned Archadeck offices building custom-designed decks and related outdoor remodeling projects in 24 states. Although a new or remodeled deck can easily return anywhere from 80-100% — or more — of its cost in added market value for your home, recovering a lion's share of your investment is possible only if you plan your project carefully and invest in quality.

Design the deck to be an extension of your living space, not a mere appendage to the house. Break away from the rectangle: Customize your deck with cascading levels, angles and areas of defined function, like an octagonal eating area. Add a privacy screen, shade trellis, built-in benches and table, planters, a garden work center or storage area, outdoor cooking center or spa. Archadeck can design and build a deck for between $1,500 and $3,000. Since establishment in 1980, Archadeck has built decks ranging from about $1,000 to over $45,000. Financing plans are available. Call Archadeck at 788-7422 or (800) 462-1407.

Superintendent

 for who is committed to educational excellence and has the leadership qualities to create a learning environment which challenges and encourages all of our children to succeed.

Frances Masterson: There are many qualities that a superintendent must have in order to advise, assist and carry out his duties effectively.

These qualities would include a participation with the state Department of Education and with federal agencies in the development of policies and activities for the improvement of education, knowledge with what is happening on the state level with our tax dollars, personal characteristics and a similar philosophy to the board of education, school principal's and the superintendent's central staff.

The Board of Education sets objectives based on the needs and wants of the community. A few 1995-96 objectives which need to be carried out would be:

- Continue technology integration into the instructional program.
- Complete a study on how best to measure student achievement and district performance.
- Increase the percentage of Westfield students who score in the highest level of the state's Early Warning Test in grade 8.

The new superintendent must work closely with the board of education in developing a "game plan" in regards to budget and tax estimates for the school year.

The superintendent works closely with the principal of each school and it is imperative that he develop positive relationships with each principal in our district. The superintendent is the chief liaison between the Board of Education and our schools.

The central staff is broken down into specific departments in order to properly handle the many demands of the school district. A positive relationship with the central staff is essential in order to run the district effectively.

In addition to having positive relationships with the board of education, central staff and school principals, I would look for a superintendent who has the foresight in the ever-increasing field of technology, experience with dealing in overcrowding and success in increasing student achievement.

A fresh approach to old and new problems would be key to my superintendent search that would lead the Westfield School District into the next century.

Susan Jacobson: Our new superintendent should be an experienced educator possessing a combination of strong administrative skills and some teaching background. We must be able to confirm a demonstrated record of success and leadership as a superintendent in another district. This superintendent must be well respected by that board, staff and community.

Communication is an important part of the superintendent's role. The superintendent serves as a spokesperson for the district. Therefore, this person must be articulate and be able to write clearly, concisely and effectively. Being a good listener is an important skill and includes being sensitive to the needs and concerns of various constituent groups including students, parents, staff and the community at large. The superintendent also must demonstrate the ability to listen to and respect those with differing views.

Additional qualities would include:

Kohler leads innovations in whirlpool technology

Kohler Co. reasserted its leadership position in whirlpool technology in 1995 with a series of improvements and innovations in its mid-priced System II whirlpool category and in its luxury System III whirlpool.

The company drew upon its long experience with whirlpool technology, extensive consumer research, and observations of massage specialists at work, when planning revisions to its whirlpool line.

"For the last several years, we have been developing new technologies for whirlpools that allow us to offer features that consumers ask for most," Mr. O'Connor said.

All Kohler System II and III whirlpools now include an integral heater to maintain the bath water temperature for all of the whirlpool users who favor long, leisurely soaks. The new heater is incorporated into the whirlpool pump assembly, creating a simple, compact, easy-to-service package.

The major innovation in System III whirlpools is a pillow that cradles the bather's neck comfortably and conceals two neckjets that pulsate alternately to create an effective neck massage. A separate control allows the bather to adjust both the intensity of the water flow and the speed at which the neckjets pulsate.

All Kohler whirlpools, including the company's value-priced System I models, are equipped with Kohler's fully-adjustable Flexjet whirlpool jets, and a fully-supported self-draining whirlpool harness.

Technology skates into the future thanks to Rollerblade

Rollerblade Inc. has introduced a high-performance skate line, designed for the serious fitness skater. The Fusion line features three models that focus on advanced comfort, fit and technology.

"We've addressed every issue that serious skaters consider important in a top-performing in-line skate," said Noel Shadko, Rollerblade's vice president of marketing and strategic planning. "The Fusion line features a highly customized and performance fit and maximum ventilation so feet stay cool when skating many miles at a stretch. As well, the Fusion skates offer the best frames, wheels and bearings available."

The Fusion line has numerous technical innovations. The three models include the Fusion 10K, a five-wheel model for the serious fitness skater who logs many miles, featuring a pulley-lace closure system; the Fusion MX, with an extended four-wheel frame designed for an advanced fitness skater who is looking for highly customizable fit and performance features; and the Fusion, a high-performance skate that offers a 45-degree heel lock for a better performance fit.

All three models include a Flow-through

Ventilation System (FTV), which provides cooling and venting capabilities throughout the entire skate; Rollerblade's first overlap shell design, providing smooth, uniform closure throughout the forefoot; and a multi-adjustable frame, maximizing a skater's stroking efficiency.

The Fusion line will carry suggested retail prices of $399 for the Fusion 10K, $339 for the Fusion MX, and $289 for the Fusion.

Electrolux offers taste of 21st Century

By CHRISTINE RITZ
 FORBES CORRESPONDENT

Electrolux, Inc. has been a fixture in the American home technology market for nearly 75 years. In that time it has become one of the premier companies not only for canister and upright vacuum cleaners, but also for its latest line of central vacuum systems, carpet shampooers and floor polishers.

A major reason for the popularity of the Electrolux line of products is actually a combination of a number of factors contributing to the items' overall performance superiority. Richard Grap, Electrolux division manager, commented, "For several reasons, our products are the best on the market today." These reasons are as follows:

1. The best purification system on the market.
2. Tiring (not rubber) belts.
3. Bags that fill with an internal cyclonic action, not from the bottom up. This is most important because the Electrolux method of bag fill does not cause the machine to lose suctioning power, as happens with bottom-fill bags.
4. Electrolux takes pride in its service. The company offers complimentary pick-up and delivery of parts and/or service for its products for the life of its products.
5. Electrolux holds the leading edge in technology. It is the first company in the world to invent a power nozzle/brusher for canister vacuums.

"This combination of advanced technologies really puts us 5-10 years ahead of the competition," Mr. Grap says.

Despite its reputation for the highest quality product on the market, Electrolux has an equally good reputation for competitive prices. "Consumers are pleasantly surprised to find our products at prices beginning at less than $400," Mr. Grap said. "We also have easy payment plans."

Electrolux currently has seven retail outlets in central New Jersey, and plans to add seven more within the next 18 months. Overall, the company is expected to double in size in the next 2-3 years. The company currently has nearly 600 stores.

All Electrolux products are now made in the USA, with its major factory in Virginia, and corporate headquarters in Atlanta. "Our state-of-the-art robotics factory is a modern wonder," Mr. Grap said. "Technologists from all over the world come to see what we do here."

Check is to check problems

A check for $9,000 to battle drugs and other problems of Westfield youth is presented to Milton Faith, executive director of Youth & Family Services, by Barbara Bell, chairman of the Westfield Foundation's grants committee.

What is 'ideal' superintendent

 Personal qualities that are important include: honesty, sincerity, integrity and high moral standards. The new superintendent will be entrusted with the education of our children and therefore must be acceptable to the entire Westfield community. Choosing a new superintendent is a formidable task. The board must incorporate the wishes of the community and staff, be conscientious in its deliberations and make a reasoned and wise decision.

Similar questions will be posed to the candidates over the next three weeks. Readers are invited to submit their own questions to The Record, 102 Walnut Ave. Cranford 07016.

The new superintendent must be able to manage a large, diverse staff. He/she should be a collegian but have solid management capabilities. The ability to delegate responsibility and encourage leadership from staff are important attributes. This individual will need both the trust and respect of the staff to be successful.

CVV makes computers a personal experience

Computer Vision and Voice (CVV) a local startup company in Westfield, has embarked on a venture that is quickly growing to epic proportions.

The reason for the company's early success and promising future is primarily because of the way it does business. It has gone up against the trend toward depersonalization in the sales and service of computers that is causing the computer industry which is cold by nature to become even colder.

CVV has made personal attention and commitment to customers' individual needs the cornerstone of their business.

"Providing good service and creating good will in the community is our company's bottom line," says Jonathan Klausner, CVV's founder.

 Bob Stern, CVV's Director of Technology concurs.

"We believe that by doing good and creating good, money will pursue us," says Mr. Stern. "We make it a matter of policy to know all of our customers by name and to have refreshments available for anyone visiting our showroom."

From the outset, CVV has sought out ways to use the new PC technology to provide the most benefit to individuals and the community. For this reason CVV has initially directed its marketing efforts toward providing speech operated computer systems for people with limited mobility.

Where this is all leading.

A few months ago Michael was in charge of network management and software support for a local college. He left work late one evening and was accosted by a gang of kids, one of whom shot him in the neck. Michael's spinal cord was severely damaged and he is suffering loss of motor ability from the neck down. Thanks to speech recognition technology Michael has an option to resume his job in network management and software support at the college. Additionally, Michael will join forces with CVV's Obediant Systems™ development team.

"Obediant Systems™" is CVV's trade name for its speech recognition front ends for applications.

Dave was a thrill-seeking teenager 13 years ago until he broke his neck diving into a water-filled rock quarry. With his zest for life undampened by the fact that he is paralyzed from the neck down, Dave has joined CVV's Obediant Systems™ development and marketing team. Computer Vision and Voice will employ Dave as a commissioned telephone salesman for 30 hours a week. Dave will be responsible to receive telephone inquiries regarding CVV's PC-based speech driven telephony system and other speech recognition products and services. Dave hopes to utilize the CVV Labs computer system purchased for him by the N.J. Department of Vocational Rehabilitation (NJ DVR) is to become a gainfully employed productive member of society. Dave will use CVV's speech operated speakerphone system to answer sales phone calls for CVV regarding the CVV speech automated speakerphone system Dave is using. Thus in the course of a phone call Dave will demonstrate to prospective customers over the phone the myriad of features of CVV's speech automated speakerphone system. Dave will also enter data, manage contacts, send letters and faxes, and enter orders by speech without any need for the keyboard or mouse. And as CVV's Obediant™ Systems make their way into peoples' businesses and homes, the company hopes that many other people will join in on the fun.

Anyone wishing to contact CVV can do so by calling (908) 317-TALK.

Tune in to sights, sounds of home theater

Rampaging dinosaurs, the touchdown roar of a stadium crowd, the symphonic vibrations of a concert hall — these are the sights and sounds of a home theater system, and you can bring this excitement into your home, perhaps more easily, and more economically, than you think.

Rick Souder, national TV buyer, and Mike Wilburt, national audio buyer, for Circuit City Stores Inc., say that most consumers already own some components of a home theater system. Additional components can cost as little or as much as you want to spend. Souder and Wilburt say a typical system will include:

- A color TV of any size. Souder recommends a screen size of at least 27 inches, but says screen sizes of up to 80 inches are available.
- A high fidelity videocassette recorder.
- A surround sound audio system, which includes up to five loudspeakers positioned front left, center and right, as well as rear left and right, and a stereo receiver that decodes and sends surround sound signals from the TV or VCR to each speaker. The system creates the most realistic or dramatic effect by "surrounding" the listener with sound.

• Finally, a subwoofer, which creates the bass rumble that made theater seats vibrate in Jurassic Park.

"Consumers should base their decision to buy home theater on all their TV viewing options," said Wilburt. "Almost all TV programming — NFL football, network news, most of the prime time network TV, and even soap operas — is broadcast with surround sound."

If you consider these factors when selecting home theater components, you can look forward to enjoying the Super Bowl, your favorite performers in concert and movie videos as never experienced before.

Clean sweeping: Let this vacuum eliminate the dirt

True or false — If you can't see carpet dirt, it isn't worth cleaning up? False — foot traffic can grind dirt so deeply into a carpet that dirt becomes virtually undetectable to the naked eye.

"Embedded dirt, including sand and silt, can destroy the appearance of a carpet," said Jerry Lauer, vice president of marketing at the Hoover Co.

To remove embedded dirt, Hoover has developed a new vacuum cleaner line, the Dirt FINDER™, which offers two models that let the user know when dirt is being picked up and when the carpet is clean.

A sensor inside the vacuum cleaner, roughly the size of a watch battery, picks up the sound of dirt rushing toward the bag and transfers it into electrical impulses. The user sees a red light on a panel at the top of the cleaner while the vacuum is picking up dirt. When the light turns green, you know it's clean.

Adding to the innovative Dirt FINDER system on the top-of-the-line model is the best cleaning effectiveness in a vacuum cleaner ever produced by Hoover.

Community Life

Scouts' work gives meaning to their 'Week'

The Girl Scouts of Westfield started celebrating Girl Scout Week early with activities that began with a Junior Girl Scout event, and culminated in the Girls Scouts' Around the World badge. The event was coordinated by Girl Scout leaders Malissa Cass, Kathy Gilmartin and Nancy Kielar.

The Cadette troops at Roosevelt Intermediate School, under the direction of Debbie Solon, conducted the Brownie-In-Gathering "Back to Basics." At this event, the Brownies learned firebuilding and safety, knots, cooking and dishwashing techniques, packing, care, use and safety of knives, songs and how to read trail signs. Many of the Brownies will put these skills to use at the town encampment, April 12-14, at Camp Lou Henry Hoover in Middleville.

Westfield Mayor Garland "Bud" Boothe proclaimed March 10-16 as Girl Scout Week in Westfield, signing the certificate in the presence of several town Girl Scouts. He congratulated the girls on their celebration and noted the commitment the organization has had over the years to the many community opportunities for service and leadership. Leaders of the 81 troops in town from the Daisy to the Senior level were thanked for their time, effort and dedication by community managers Liz Fallon, Bernadine Liebrich and Pam Orbach Tuesday, the 84th birthday of Girl Scouting in the United States.

Their work with all age levels of Girl Scouts in coordinating trips to work on badges and interest project patches, community service, career exploration and leadership opportunities helps to prepare the Girl Scouts of Westfield to become tomorrow's leaders.

Culminating this annual celebration is a day of service set for 9 a.m. 3 p.m. Saturday in the Westfield High School cafeteria. Troops from throughout the town will gather to complete baby quilts they have been working on since January. There will be a total of 75-80 quilts for AIDS and HIV infected babies.

Also being made are stuffed felt mobiles for nursing home patients, hand-rubbed note papers, Easter baskets for homeless children, decorating containers for homeless teens at Covenant House and more. This event is being coordinated by Shirley Walsh, service project chairwoman. Members of her Cadette Troop 573 are handling various aspects of the day for their Cadette Silver Award, the highest award at the Cadette level.

Anyone interested in joining a Girl Scout troop in Westfield, Scotch Plains or Fanwood should call the Washington Rock Girl Council at 232-3236. Girls from kindergarten-high school are welcome.

Ireland leads series of travelogue shows

The first of three travelogues during the spring semester of the Westfield Adult School will be "An Evening in Ireland" 7-9:30 p.m. Monday featuring a special performance by harpist and singer Aileen O'Donnell.

The program will begin with a video of castles, pubs and country side of the Emerald Isle. After a short coffee break with desserts from Ireland, Dubliner Aileen O'Donnell will perform traditional Irish folk music for the next hour.

Two other new travelogues are in the curriculum: "The Wonders Down Under, Australia and New Zealand" Monday, April 1, and "Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and German" Monday, May 6. Each of these programs will be held 7:15-9:30 p.m. with a short coffee break in the middle. Students may register for one, two or three travelogues.

The first overnight trip offered by the Westfield Adult School will be to view the cherry blossoms in Washington, D.C. The bus will depart from Roosevelt Intermediate School 7:30 a.m. Saturday, April 13 and return to Westfield 9:30 p.m. Sunday, April 14.

The itinerary includes a stop at Baltimore's Inner Harbor on the way and guided bus tour of Washington designed to see the spectacular display of cherry blossoms, if Mother Nature cooperates. On Sunday there will be time to visit the Smithsonian Institution or the National Gallery before the return trip, with dinner en route.

Italian-American Club helps hospital

The Italian-American Club of Westfield recently donated $700 to Children's Specialized Hospital in Mountainside. Mario Guernero, president of the group, presented the check to the hospital on the club's behalf. The club also conducted fundraising efforts last year on behalf of the young patients of Children's Specialized.

Artists to hear show judge's critique tonight

W. Carl Burger, artist and professor, will judge the Westfield Art Association's 72nd annual Members' Watercolor, Graphics and Photography Exhibit, on display through Thursday, March 21 in the Community Room, in the front of the Westfield Municipal Building, 425 East Broad St., next to Minko Waskin Park.

Mr. Burger will conduct a critique session on all pieces in the show 8 p.m. today. The exhibit and events are free and open to the public.

W. Carl Burger, tonight's judge, is an artist and fine arts professor at Kean College.

Mr. Burger holds two degrees from New York University, and he studied further at the Art Students' League, Parsons School of Design, Columbia University, and Rutgers University.

His artwork has been exhibited in numerous one-person shows in New Jersey, most recently in the summer and fall of 1995 in the state Capital Building in Trenton in the executive suites of New Jersey Secretary of State Louisa H. Hoopes. Her request for the exhibit was part of her ongoing efforts to promote interest in New Jersey artists.

Mr. Burger's work has also appeared in many group and invitational exhibits across the nation and in a traveling exhibition in Germany.

In the 1995 Trenton exhibition brochure, artist Clarence H. Carter wrote "W. Carl Burger [has] a great respect for the old masters. The work is detailed in the main but never labored. When watercolor is used, the result is free and liquid, [and] still well planned and controlled. It is amazing the way he can meld the figurative with non-game forms and relate them all in an expressive whole. Almost everything he does has meaning. He is a master craftsman weaving dreams together in a most unusual and personal way...conveying his skepticism of the follies and absurdities of humanity."

Mr. Burger was active in Union County for many of his early working years. In Westfield, he was the first art teacher in the then new high school building on Doran Road, which opened in 1952. He taught at Westfield High School for six years.

An avid exerciser before weight-lifting came into general popularity, Mr. Burger belonged to the Westfield YMCA for 20 years. He continues to work out early in the morning near his current home in Long Valley.

He taught art next in Union County public schools and then at Thomas Jefferson High School in Elizabeth. Having served as an art professor at Kean College in Union for 30 years, he has had the title of professor emeritus since 1994, yet he continues to teach at Kean as an adjunct professor in the fine arts department.

In the past, Mr. Burger had his own studio in Cranford. He gave monthly critique sessions in a transformed Cranford dining room, in a home which belonged to a woman who ran an art and typewriter supply store on Central Avenue in Westfield.

"It was wild. It was a circus," said Mabel Winch, one of the participants from Mr. Burger's Westfield Adult School art class. "He was tough."

He questioned the students' satisfaction in pictures they liked. If he knew a developing artist could do better, he would encourage and prod.

The Westfield Art Association has depended on Mr. Burger's expertise as a judge more than once. He is known to members as an adept critic with a lively personality. He sees what is good and bad in a piece and can clearly say why. The association anticipates his return tonight for a stimulating evening at the critique session. Pickup of work is 7:0 p.m. Friday, March 22.

Hadassah show to open

Nancy J. Ori will have her work exhibited in the Hadassah Art Show and Sale Sunday-Wednesday at Temple Emanu-El, 756 E. Broad St. Hours are 1-9 p.m. Sunday, noon-9 p.m. Monday and Tuesday, and noon-5 p.m. Wednesday. Call 233-6531 for details.

Tough luck for Posey in Atlantic City

Westfield's Corey Posey has his hands full with eventual 152-pound state champion Maurice Worthy in Atlantic City Saturday.

Blue Devil grappler exits in 152-pound semifinals

By JAMES REILLY
 THE RECORD

In the city famous for high hopes and dashed dreams, Corey Posey fulfilled the former while suffering the latter.

The Westfield High senior 152-pounder took third place in the NJ-SIAA Wrestling Championships Saturday in Atlantic City. That's a superb accomplishment for any grappler, but not quite the ending envisioned by Posey.

"I didn't reach the goal I've been working for and that's very disappointing," he said after dropping an 8-5 decision to eventual state champion Maurice Worthy of Central Regional in the semifinals, before winning two straight wrestling-back matches to place third in the state.

"But after the loss, I couldn't let myself think about it," added Posey. "I've been in enough big tournaments to know that if you take a loss with you onto the mat, you're in trouble."

Posey didn't compile a 32-1 record this season by quitting, and his two opponents in the wrestling-backs found this out quickly. West Deptford's Brad Entreklin lost 5-2 as Posey scored a key two-leg takedown midway through the second period.

That led to the consolation final for third place overall, where Posey faced familiar foe Greg Francesca of Union. Francesca fell to Posey in the Region 3 final the previous week and has lost seven matches in his career against the Blue Devil. Including Saturday, when Posey won 5-3.

Winning both consolation round matches despite the obvious heartbreak after falling to Worthy, was one of the most inspiring performances at Atlantic City's Convention Center to everyone but Posey.

"I never like to lose, so I'm glad to win both matches," said Posey, who'll continue his wrestling and educational career at Michigan State in the fall. "But losing to a guy I beat last year is bad enough (Posey topped Worthy in the 145-pound semis last season) — there was no way I wanted to lose again. I just tried to focus on taking third, because that was the only goal left for me."

Thus Posey ended his high school tenure with a 120-10 record, including a fifth-sixth state finals finish his freshman season, third place in his sophomore and senior years and runnerup as a junior.

"I wasn't mentally focused at all for the match with Worthy," said Posey. "I just froze up and didn't get into any flow. But I came back to win the next two, and now I'm looking forward to getting better and wrestling at Michigan State. High school wrestling is over and now I've got even tougher competition waiting for me in college."

Blue Devils sophomore Mike Baly at 160 pounds and senior Kevin Sullivan at 130 also competed in Atlantic City, albeit with different expectations.

Baly won his first match Friday night 6-4 over Spotswood's Justin Legg, but then fell to High Point's Jeff Harrison in a battle to reach Saturday's action.

Sullivan was edged 9-5 by Bridgewater-Raritan's Mike Keester in his last match as a Blue Devil.

"He was a real tough guy and I didn't really get comfortable at any time in the match," said Sullivan, who compiled a 25-7 record on the season. "But I'm glad to have the opportunity to go against the best, which I did this season."

'One-woman wrecking crew' Junior forward Amy Williams named All-Area

By JAMES REILLY
 THE RECORD

As far as the Westfield High girls basketball team was concerned this season, good things came from a small package.

Junior forward Amy Williams stands all of 5-foot-7 but played big all season in the highly-competitive Watchung Conference, substituting an uncanny knack for the ball and wonderful athleticism for height and strength.

"Amy was a one-woman wrecking crew for us this season," said WHS Head Coach Kathy Hauser, who guided the Lady Devils to a 9-13 record. "She was our leading scorer, rebounder and she led the team in steals. Plus she did a lot of work on the boards against some formidable opponents who had a distinct height and weight advantage. She did it all."

Averaging 11 points, five rebounds, an assist and two steals a game for the season, Williams has earned third-team honors on the All-Area squad as selected by the sports staff at Forbes Newspapers.

"We started the year strong with a 5-1 record and I thought we were on the way to a big year," said Williams. "But then we had a few injuries that really hurt the team. After that, I guess I had to try and do more than I expected to help us score and rebound, and I did."

Hauser couldn't say enough about Williams' leadership, especially on the court.

"Amy was just a constant source of strength in the games," said Hauser. "She isn't just a basketball player, she's a real athlete in every sense of the word. She used every tool she had to be successful and her teammates couldn't help but see that."

A recurring problem for the Lady Devils was the frequent breakdown of their set offense. Point guard Vicki Nusse suffered an ankle injury early in the season and missed much of the year, as well as center Erin Zeilenbach, which resulted in an often-stagnant offense. That's when Williams would take matters into her own hands.

All Area Girls Basketball

"Amy's not what you'd call a vocal leader, but she's funny in that she wouldn't be shy about trying to make something happen for us when things were not going well," said Hauser. "We'd try to run the offense and it wouldn't work, and she'd just say 'OK, I'm just going to put the ball down and drive to the basket.' Either she'd make it or draw a foul and that would get us back on track."

Keeping a team on track must seem like second nature to Williams, who also earned All-Area honors in the fall, when she excelled in goal for the Union County champion girls soccer team.

After having such a promising season on the hardwood, Williams is now contemplating working hard this summer to sharpen her basketball skills.

"I think I can practice more on my shooting," said Williams. "That's an area where I think I can get better. I'm thinking about going to a basketball camp in the summer so I can work on that."

Hauser thinks improved ball-handling would also be beneficial to her game.

"Dribbling well with both hands is always something I look for because it can open up your whole offensive game," said Hauser. "With Amy's driving skills that could make her even more dangerous than this year."

"Another thing we'll try to do for next year is give Amy a chance to play the small forward so she doesn't have to do all of the dirty work under the boards," said Hauser. "She can handle the power forward slot, but we'd like to give her the freedom to do more shooting, instead of having to always position herself under the basket for a rebound."

Williams feels the future is bright for the Lady Devils next year.

"I think we should be pretty good next year," said Williams. "We'll have so many players back, like Vicki Nusse, Nicole DeSantis, Katie Brahm, and Jen Kemps. We have a good group coming back and if we play together I think we can have a solid season."

With Williams leading the way.

Making a splash Westfield diver Jesse Hershkovitz qualifies for Winter Nationals with second-place dive

By JAMES REILLY
 THE RECORD

Westfield High diver Jesse Hershkovitz continues to reach new heights. The freshman recently competed in the Junior World Championships on the heels of a promising performance at the state meet.

Hershkovitz traveled to Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass. last week, where he took second place for 14 and 15 year-old boys in the three meter dives at the Junior championships with a score of 306.

He later scored 280 on the one-meter board. Each time he reached the qualifying score for the Winter Nationals, which are held next month in Virginia.

"It was real exciting to go to Harvard try to qualify for the Winter Nationals," said Hershkovitz. "I tried to make sure I finished off my dives well to get a decent entry and I did pretty well. It was a great experience."

Hershkovitz is becoming accustomed to new diving experiences, as he prepared for the Juniors by competing in his first state championships at Trenton State College last Tuesday.

The Blue Devil diver placed 11th in the meet with a 292.2 score, good enough to put him 13th on the all-time Westfield High School record books, in just his freshman year.

"He did extremely well, especially when you consider he's only a freshman," said WHS Co-Head Coach George Kapner. "Most of the guys who scored ahead of him were seniors. Plus, this is an event where you get judged, as opposed to working to hit the tape first, and this was a chance for the judges to get a look at Jesse. Hopefully in the future they'll recognize him and as he improves his scores will, too."

JESSE HERSHKOWITZ

Hershkovitz confessed to having a bout with nerves as he attempted his last two dives at the states.

"I was a little nervous about the whole atmosphere and the judges, and I let it affect my concentration," he said. "I didn't do well on my last two dives and if I did I'd have scored better."

Sullivans score at prep tourney

At the New Jersey Prep State Wrestling Tournament a few weeks ago at the Peddie School in Hightstown, there was a distinct local flavor.

Westfield wrestlers Nolan and Nick Sullivan of the Wardlaw Hartridge School earned first and second place finishes, respectively. Wardlaw Hartridge, located in Edison, placed third overall and first among the schools in the B Division.

Powerful Blair Academy, ranked first in the nation among public and private schools by USA Today, won the state team and A crown.

Nolan Sullivan, a 171 pound junior, has compiled a 21-0 record on the way to the prep state title. After pinning opponents from Lawrenceville and St. Benedict's Prep, Nolan delivered a stunning upset in the final, pinning Blair's Matt Kenny in 1:40. Nolan was the coaches' selection for the Outstanding Wrestler Award.

Earlier in the season Sullivan placed first in the Union County Tournament, the Reed Invitational Tournament and the Prep B Conference Tournament.

Nick Sullivan, a 135 pound sophomore whose record stands at 17-0, advanced to the finals in the Prep state tourney but fell victim to Blair's Chris Ayres in the third period, settling for second place.

Little Devil grapplers finish strong

In the Westfield Little Devils wrestling team's last three matches of the year, the grapplers provided some great highlights that bode well for the future of Westfield wrestling.

Against Roselle Park, the top team in the standings, John Leonardis (70 pounds) stood out with a 9-0 shutout as he put on a take-down clinic. Lee Tomasso racked up another win with a powerful pin in one minute 45 seconds.

Joey McCabe provided the match of the night as he entered the third period of his 85-pound bout trailing a tough Park wrestler 0-2. In an exciting and dramatic moment, McCabe threw a devastating headlock and took his stunned foe to the mat for a five point move and a sensational 5-2 win. McCabe is quickly becoming a scientific wrestler who is excellent on his feet.

Against Berkeley Heights, Kramer ran out to a 6-0 lead before nailing his foe with a jethal headlock for a fall in 1:39.

Craig Hewitt, another state tournament-bound wrestler, took a tough and well-wrestled 2-1 victory. Hewitt, a third grader, qualified for the state tournament in the Tom's River Regional Tournament with a third place medal and has had an impressive season.

Dave Lanza, a fourth-grader at Jefferson School, continues to make great progress as he moves up in the rankings using his quickness and strength. Lanza registered a third period fall after dominating his opponent with a series of driving takedowns, before setting an airtight half Nelson and showing his foe the lights.

Leonardis put on another clinic with a 7-0 shutout using a variety of moves including a shrug, arm bar and a well-executed switch.

Sullivan won a hard-fought 6-0 decision against a well-schooled opponent as the Westfield star was up to the task.

Charmatz turned in a well-wrestled 7-1 win as he used his great balance and cat-like reactions to outmaneuver his overmatched foe.

Against New Providence, the Little Devils were in high gear with a 7-0 romp. Ryan Shallcross started off the rout at 53 pounds as he nailed a hard takedown on his way to a strong 4-0 win. Shallcross is a first year traveling team member who appears to be ready to have a big year next year.

Powerhouse Craig Hewitt (37 pounds) nailed a first period pin.

Mike Checchio, another first year wrestler with great potential, has had a difficult year health wise, but has shown a lot of determination. In his 60-pound bout, he showed that potential as he dominated his opponent en route to a 13-0 win. Checchio fired in for a double leg takedown, stuck a powerful half Nelson and never looked back.

Tomasso registered another pin as he cradled his opponent in 21 seconds. Matt Dupont (77 pounds) looked great in his 10-4 win and has made a big jump in class during the second part of the season. A physical wrestler, Dupont used a double leg takedown and a strong half-Nelson to rack up points.

Sullivan added to his win total with a third period fall over a tough 90 pound grappler. Charmatz (110 pounds) has become a consistent force and put another stamp on his record with a 9-2 win as he used a series of half Nelson's to crush his opponent. Andzel looked sharp at 118 pounds as he flattened his foe in 47 seconds, after a takedown he used his great strength to drive his opponent to his back.

Brooke Smith swims into Junior Nationals next week

By JAMES REILLY

THE RECORD

Westfield's Brooke Smith completed her first season of high school swimming competition, and jumped right back in the pool to qualify for the Junior Nationals in Nashville, Tenn. next week.

Smith took first place in the Regional Championships at Syracuse University two weeks ago in the 100-yard breaststroke in 1:06.62, and also scored with a time of 2:23.09 in the 200 breast. Both performances were good enough to garner spots for the Junior Nationals.

"We've been working up to the regionals to qualify for Nashville for a couple of weeks so it's real exciting make it," said Smith, a freshman at Mount St. Mary Academy in Watchung and a member of the Berkeley Aquatic Club. "We'd been tapering our times and shaved before this meet because we really wanted to make the nationals."

BROOKE SMITH

Smith has been reaching superlative times all season, as she took first place in the 100 breast at the Mountain Valley Conference Meet and at the Somerset County Meet.

She also finished her first high school season with a flourish, taking fourth in the 100 breast and seventh in the 200 individual medley at the New Jersey Meet of Champions at Rutgers March 2.

"The competition was really tough at the states," said Smith. "But I did pretty good, because the better the competition the more it pushes me to do better."

At the moment Smith is gearing up for the biggest meet of her young career when she heads south to Nashville. She has her sights set high.

"I hope to make the top 16 swimmers in the qualifying heats," said Smith. "If you make the top 16, you come back in the afternoon to swim the final heats. I've got maybe five teammates who are all hoping to make it, and we're all helping each other get psyched up."

Smith's mother, Ginny, will be accompanying her to Nashville, which was good news for the young swimmer. Kind of.

"Yeah, my mom is coming with me," said Smith. "Most of the time that's good."

Hope Hospice growing on spirit of its founders

The Center For Hope Hospice exists today because of the vision of Peggy Coloney, R.N., and Father Charles Hudson. While working together at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, they recognized the need for holistic supportive services for patients facing the final stages of life.

The greatest challenge in presenting hospice services to the community is in helping people to understand that it is about choices. The Center For Hope Hospice is dedicated to providing individuals diagnosed with a life-limiting illness the opportunity to choose the manner in which they wish to live, to be remembered and to die.

The Center For Hope Hospice, a free-standing, non-profit organization, was founded in the late 1970s. With a clear picture of the work to be done, Ms. Coloney and Father Hudson, aided by a small staff of dedicated individuals and empowered with a strong sense of commitment, set out to serve the patients and the families of patients in need.

Their mission, which is to provide comprehensive quality patient care without regard to the patient's ability to pay for the services rendered, serves as an inspiration to many others who have since joined the hospice team. Today, The Center For Hope Hospice employs a professional staff of more than 95 and benefits from the generosity of about 250 volunteers.

The growth of the organization since inception has been remarkable. In addition to developing a successful home care program, The Center For Hope Hospice is recognized for the development of Theo House, the first residence hospice in the state of New Jersey, located at 851 N. Broad St., Elizabeth.

Theo House addresses the need for hospice care for patients that do not have a family member or close friend who is capable of performing the responsibilities of a primary care person. Since its opening five years ago, Theo House remains at full capacity.

The success of Theo House prompted the recent opening of Heritage Home, a 25-bed, assisted living-residence hospice also located in Elizabeth, at 111 De Hart Place. A major construction project at Heritage Home, planned for the near future, will make it possible to offer residence hospice services to non-ambulatory patients.

In 1994, The Center For Hope Hospice began providing hospice care to patients in many nursing homes within Union County. The goal is to create a team of caregivers with the combined expertise of long-term care and hospice care to address the needs of all patients in a nursing home. This program has been received with great enthusiasm by the medical staff, the patients, and the families of patients.

One of the greatest achievements of The Center For Hope Hospice is its bereavement program. The Center For Hope Hospice team of grief counselors have mastered the professional skills necessary to assist survivors in attaining closure with a loss due to death. This program is open to all individuals, regardless of their participation in the hospice program. The spiritual journey of an individual or a family in seeking acceptance, resolution, and ultimately peace with the death of a loved one is a painful process. At Acadia House, a former summer estate located in Scotch Plains, a team of grief support counselors offers individual and group counseling sessions for adults and children. The Rainbow Program is renowned for its success in dealing with children in grief.

Ms. Coloney and Father Hudson believe the need for hospice services is as great today as it was 15 years ago. No one can predict the duration of a life-limiting illness; therefore, it is the goal of The Center For Hope Hospice to assist every patient in the program to live each day and to have hope for tomorrow.

Peterson visits trade exhibition

Keith Peterson of the Eardly T. Peterson Co. recently returned from previewing the latest in floor care and sewing machine technology at the Vacuum Dealer's Trade Association (VDTA) national show held in January in Las Vegas.

The Eardly T. Peterson Company has just become the sole area dealer for a state-of-the-art upright vacuum line made by a firm called Lindhaus. Lindhaus products offer unparalleled engineering — their vacuums are beautifully designed and constructed and will filter to hospital specifications. This product line will further complement other Hepa-filter machines such as made by Miele, Numatic, Royal Appliance and others.

Peterson also selected a Swiss-made steam cleaning system that enables easy, effective cleaning of almost any surface in a house with dry steam. Millions of these steam cleaning systems have been sold in Europe for many years, and the company is pleased to be able to offer this first-quality system to our many customers. Now anybody can readily clean bathroom floors, showers, and tubs, tile, toilets, sinks, ovens and ranges, grills, refrigerators, carpets and upholstery, mattresses, wood floors, painted walls, wallpaper, windows, fireplaces, silk flowers, patio furniture, and much more.

The Eardly T. Peterson Company is located at 224 Elmer St.

After just three years in the Army, your college loan could be a thing of the past.

Under the Army's Loan Repayment program, each year you serve on active duty reduces your indebtedness by one-third or $1,500, whichever amount is greater, up to a $55,000 limit.

This offer applies to Perkins Loans, Stafford Loans and certain other federally insured loans which are not in default.

“ It wasn't that I'd-rather-be-at-the-dentist- than-buying-a-car experience. ”

What is it about buying a used car that's so darned horrible? We're not sure, actually. But then, we sell used cars — Saturns and other used makes — in a way that's pretty different than most. That is, with honesty, courtesy and no pressure. We call it the Saturn Certified Used Car process. Hope to see you soon.

SATURN Certified Used Cars

Every used car we sell is backed by a limited warranty, not to mention the fact that it undergoes a thorough 150-point plus inspection and reconditioning process. Each one is also cleaned and given an oil and filter change. To top it off, a 3-day money-back guarantee and a 30-day 1,500-mile trade-in policy are included, as well as only at participating Saturn dealerships. ©1995 Saturn Corporation.

Audi's A4 sedan is the carmaker's best vehicle yet

By TOM and BOB HAGIN
FORBES CORRESPONDENTS

Bob Hagin's Audi experiences go back to the days when he owned and drove a 1978 five cylinder Audi 5000 sedan. He remembers it with mixed emotions. Tom Hagin only remembers that it was a far cry from the Audi A4 he's testing with his dad this week. The Audi A4 has a manufacturer's suggested retail price of $26,500; as tested, $31,615.

Tom — This is the best-looking Audi yet. It uses a radically arched roof line, sloping hood and a shorter, but wider profile that's just plain handsome. This is fortunate for Audi, since there's lots of competition in the $30,000 near-luxury car market. The company has done quite a job of modernizing the A4's exterior, and the standard 16-inch five-spoke alloy wheels seem to complete the package. The company has rounded the shape of the car to produce a remarkable .29 drag coefficient, which slices the wind and increases fuel mileage, without making it look like a Star Wars lunar machine.

Bob — That's not what you said when you climbed in the back seat, Tom. You complained of it being too tight back there for your tastes and your head rubbed the roof near the back window. But I like the car. It gives that classic German car solidness, especially so in ride quality. Its chassis is noticeably stiffer than the Audi 90 model it replaces, even though it's shed over 150 pounds. What I like best is all the new front suspension technology Audi put into production. I'm just lukewarm to front-wheel-drive with any car, but Audi has all but eliminated the pesky torque steer - a pet peeve of mine.

The Audi A4 sedan can go from zero to 60 mph in 9.1 seconds.

Tom — Right, Dad. The front suspension uses an unequal length A-arm setup, but by using four separate links, each with its own ball joint attachments, the wheel is steered from an axis that's been pushed well outboard of the ball joints.

Bob — And what happens is the car's "virtual" steering axis is just a smidgen from the center of the wheel, which nearly eliminates torque steer. Now, not only do you get the advantages of front-wheel-drive (good traction in snow, compact design and less cost), you don't have wrestle with the steering wheel at full throttle. Torque steer was a problem with the '78 Audi 5000 I owned and on the turbocharged version, it was even worse. The extra power kept you on your toes in the rain.

Tom — Speaking of power, Dad, the A4 uses the same 2.8 liter V6 Audi's been using for a few years now. It has a cast iron block and aluminum cylinder heads, along with 12 valves and single overhead camshafts. With just 172 horses, it's smooth but not fast.

Bob — True, Tom. The A4 looks much like a car that should be very fast, but its acceleration is more adequate than furious. New this year, however, is a five-speed automatic transmission like that used with a few luxury cars costing over 50 grand. It is electronically controlled, and its computer will choose instantly between 200 "maps" to match shifting patterns to the way the car is driven.

Tom — For once, I actually liked an automatic. It shifted so smooth, I couldn't tell where it changed gears. But you can still get the A4 with a five-speed manual, and it's noticeably quicker that way.

Bob — The A4 is loaded with standard comfort features like a power driver's seat, polished walnut trim across the dash, and electronic climate control. As expected, there's standard power windows, all with a "one-touch" function to roll them down, and a powerful AM/FM cassette stereo with speakers everywhere.

Tom — I like the ability to raise the windows and close the sunroof after the ignition's been switched off. And the standard power outside mirrors that are heated as well. With our test car's $450 all-weather package, (heated seats, windshield washer nozzles and driver's door lock) the A4 makes a great ski vehicle.

Bob — True, and adding Audi's Quattro all-wheel-drive option for around $1500, getting to the slopes would be easier, and safer too.

Tom — Dad, one of these days, I'm going to get you back up on those ski slopes. It's been a long time.

Bob — Better check with you mother first, Tom. She thinks I'm getting pretty fragile.

Long, proud history of the Studebaker Corp. — yes, Studebaker

By BOB HAGIN
FORBES CORRESPONDENT

During its 114 years of existence, the Studebaker Corporation made some pretty innovative and interesting vehicles. It produced horse-drawn wagons for the Union Army during the Civil War, entered its own team of racers in the Indy 500 during the '30s, and produced the Euro-American "GT" look of 1953.

But to me, the most memorable of all its products was the Starlight Coupe circa 1947 to 1952. I was driving a '49 Studebaker Champion Starlight Coupe when I met and married my wife, Carole.

Before you label me maudlin and sentimental, I must point out that the Starlight Coupe was a member of the Studebaker lineup that burst on the American car scene in 1946 with a design that was miles ahead of the competition. It was lower than cars from the competition by several inches, with an "envelope" body (front and rear fenders integral with the body) that featured fenders almost as high as the hood. This came at a time when other American car makers (save for the maverick Kaiser) relied on pre-war designs that utilized detachable front and rear fenders. It avoided the slab-sided look of the Kaiser by blending the front fender lines with the body just behind the center of the car, and stamping onto it a non-detachable rear fender.

But best of all was the design of the rear windows of the two-door and it was a stroke of genius to label it the Starlight Coupe. Just the name evoked visions of moonlit rides under a canopy of stars with the radio softly playing romantic melodies like Moon Over Miami or Stars Fell On Alabama. The rear window wrapped from door-to-door and in truth, looked a bit like the canopy windows of a World War II bomber.

This further capitalized on the romantic notions of the day.

The interior of the Starlight Coupe (and, indeed, all of the "modern" Studebakers) had probably 10 percent more interior space than its pre-war predecessors as well as its contemporary opposition. By moving the engine to a location over the front axle line (another Studebaker innovation), the rear seat could be placed 5 inches lower and made 10 inches wider, another advantage for a romantic young couple.

Mechanically, those old Studies weren't as progressive as their styling alluded. The engine that powered my first Starlight Coupe (I eventually owned three) was a little 170 cubic-inch flathead six that produced around 80 horses and hadn't changed much since '39. Its claim to fame was that when it was teamed with the three-speed transmission and equipped with an overdrive, it could achieve 30 mpg. Gasoline then cost about 30 cents per gallon, so mileage wasn't a major consideration.

And I always found it interesting that when the driveline was put into overdrive and the car was under way, the operator could shift gears without using the clutch.

When I first acquired my '49 version, it was leaning precariously to the left, like a front spring had collapsed or the suspension on that side had broken. This was the main reason I was able to buy it so cheap from its original owner in 1958. Being a mechanic, I felt that there was nothing under there I couldn't fix, so I jacked it up for an inspection. I found that the suspension springing relied on a single transverse (crossways) leaf spring that was anchored to the frame in the center by two "U" shaped bolts. One had broken, causing a dollar and raised the car to install it. I was surprised and amused to find the remains of four more broken bolts on top of the spring. The previous owner had the job done several times and, tiring of paying for the repair, passed it to me.

After our nuptials, Carole and I bought two more Starlight Coupes to replace their compatriots that I sold for a profit. Both were later versions (a '50 and a '51) that enjoyed a styling fad that consisted of a large "bullet nose" up front. It was strictly for style and looked much like an aviation propeller without the blades.

Actually, Studebaker made two Starlight Coupes, the small Champion model and a larger, more powerful Commander. I never owned a Commander, with its 100-horse "big" six engine and later in '52 with an overhead valve V8.

Studebaker went on to another futuristic and more "European" design in 1953, which became even more noteworthy than my Starlight Coupe. Unfortunately, bad times were ahead for the company and by 1966, the Studebaker name was just another footnote in automotive history.

But somewhere in my photo archives I have a rear-end shot of a '49 Studebaker Starlight Coupe (well past its prime) onto which some wag had roughly painted the legend "Ain't Life Grand."

And at least in my case, it certainly was the truth.

Oddball automobiles still spark fond memories

By BOB HAGIN
FORBES CORRESPONDENT

Being a sports and foreign car mechanic in the '50s and '60s was great fun. There were always a bunch of eccentric cars to repair, mostly owned and driven by eccentric people. Over a 20-year span I worked on many, but only a handful are committed to my memory. The following are a few "oddballs" from my past.

Allard — Sidney Allard was a British hot-rodder who built sports cars using hopped-up Ford parts. His J2 model was an early road racing favorite in the late '40s and early '50s, but in most cases, they arrived in this country sans engine.

I was asked to help Les Cave install a flathead Mercury engine in one and was amazed to find that the quality of construction was awful. Once we got it going, it handled horribly and was about as comfortable to ride in as going over Niagara Falls in a canoe. That Allard experience was my first exposure to the fact that "Made in England" wasn't always synonymous with "quality."

Excalibur — Bob Potter, a friend of many years and a dealer in unusual cars, appeared one day with an Excalibur. Designed by Brooks Stevens for Studebaker as a show-stopper for the New York Auto Show in '64, the Excalibur resembled the 1929 Mercedes Benz SSK roadster, but was built on a modified Studebaker Hawk chassis and used a supercharged V8 engine.

It was a show-stopper alright, but wasn't enough to save Studebaker. After its demise, Stevens went into production himself but subsequent cars used Chevy V8 engines. Potter had one of these, a '68 model, and my Excalibur experience came from this car. It weighed about 2,200 pounds and produced about 325 horsepower, so drivers always had their hands full. Potter still owns the car, and as a dealer has sold and repurchased his Excalibur several times over the past 30 years.

Dellow — Among the other oddballs that Potter owned was a '51 Dellow, a quirky little low-volume British sports car. Unfortunately, the "sport" in which it was intended was called English Trials competition — a hillclimb held on muddy slopes. The speeds were very slow and the idea was to make it as far as possible before bogging down.

Potter sold his Dellow to a friend, Marge Wilson, and as there were no "trials" to enter here, Wilson decided to drive it in our club autocrosses. By design, trials cars are tall, narrow and very light at 1,100 pounds, so the Dellow was ill-designed for autocrossing which requires higher speeds and a low center of gravity. Wilson tipped it over the first time out and immediately sold it back to Potter.

Subaru 360 — Malcolm Bricklin is a name well-known to auto enthusiasts (he produced the Bricklin SV gull-wing sports car in the mid-'70s) but he made his millions in the hardware business before he was old enough to vote. In the mid-'60s he became the U.S. importer for Subaru, a chapter in its history that the company must now view as a nightmare.

Bricklin brought in a shipload of Subaru 360 sedans and traveled the West Coast selling them to dealers. The 360 was a really tiny car that used two forward-opening doors and a 16-horsepower, two-stroke engine. In its homeland, the 360 was intended as minimal transportation in crowded Japanese cities. The dealership I was working at picked up the franchise and a half-dozen cars and began selling them off. Ours was a suburban dealership and our customers were accustomed to lots of highway driving, which beat the engines to death.

We had many of them returned and it was up to us mechanics to figure out how to get them going again. The final blow was when a smashed 360 arrived connected to a wrecker. While traveling on the freeway, the passenger-side door flew open and, acting like an airplane's rudder, made the car instantly turn right and roll down an embankment. The plastic top popped off and the occupants ejected. At that time, the dealership's owner disposed of the remaining inventory and parts.

Goliath — The Goliath was a small German car that was bought to the U.S. to gain some market share from Volkswagen for Goliath's parent company, Borgward. It was powered by a well-built 1.1 liter four-cylinder "pancake" engine. We had to overhaul one that came into the shop and after a long search, we acquired enough parts for a rebuild, but couldn't find a shop manual. After laboriously cleaning and re-assembling the engine, my mechanic re-installed it and topped off the oil. When oil began to drip from the radiator petcock. It was then we realized that the cylinders weren't part of the block and needed to be removed for the installation of a rubber seal. We found some in Canada several weeks later and I then vowed not to repair unusual cars without having its manual.

Those were great days to be involved with the foreign and sports car business, but I view them as I do my two years in the Army: I'm glad I experienced them but I sure wouldn't do it again.

When it comes to fuel, gas is gas

By BOB HAGIN
FORBES CORRESPONDENT

There is something I've always wanted to ask an expert (since my two "experts" differ in opinion). You seem knowledgeable in auto maintenance, so perhaps you will know the answer. Is there any difference between the name-brand gasolines and the fuel that you can get from "cheapie" stations? My dad says there is, but my husband says there isn't.

I've heard of people who have had car trouble and were told by their mechanics that it was the result of using "bad gas." Please explain the difference, if there is any. My husband says that you won't answer this question so you can prove him wrong twice with your reply.

— J.B. Eugene, Ore.

How can I resist a challenge like that? The truth is that the discount (I hate the word "cheap") gas stations can and do buy whatever gas is available at the best price and also what's the most available. Living in a refinery town, I've seen tankers come out of some pretty high-class outfits and dump it right into the local convenience store storage tanks. I've also bought gas at these places and the engine in my not-so-high performance car pinged so loud I couldn't hear the radio.

Off-brand gas can vary in octane rating (although they're not supposed to) and in rare cases, can actually contain contaminants, although these may have come from the storage tank under the pumps. I've bought "stale" gas (it smells like varnish) and gas with a high sulfur content. The problem with high-sulfur fuel is that it can wear fuel injector tips as well as make the exhaust fumes smell like rotten eggs. It's smart to try a half-dozen gallons of no-name gas at first just to test the quality.

Otherwise, stick with a name brand. Then if you have a problem, you have someone to gripe to.

We have a 1988 Jeep 4X4 Cherokee with a 2.8 liter engine and an automatic transmission. The engine has been rebuilt and has about 17,000 miles on it. Recently it's developed an oil leak from the rear main bearing. The leak is small, but messy. Various manufacturers claim to have products that can be added to the crankcase to cure this problem. Are these products safe and effective? Do you recommend them?

— J.C. Walnut Grove, Calif.

I never recommend any chemical product that claims to fix things. Nothing is going to grow material back on a leaking seal, but in some cases it will soften a seal somewhat which swells it a bit. It's usually somewhere in the neighborhood of 5 percent — which isn't much — but it may be enough to get the seal doing its job again. Don't bet on it, however.

I don't think the stuff will hurt your engine, however. Make sure that your engine isn't building up excessive crankcase pressure and pushing out the oil through a weak seal. Maybe the PCV valve is sticking. But the only way to make sure the leak stops is to replace the seal.

NADA certification is on its way to an area showroom near you

The U.S. automotive industry celebrates its 100th anniversary this year.

In this unique and dynamic business, technological advances are occurring at a dizzying pace, and today there are more choices — in styles, models and options — than Henry Ford or Louis Chevrolet could ever have dreamed.

The buying process has changed, too. Today, manufacturers and dealers alike are taking steps to make choosing, buying and owning a vehicle completely consumer-friendly. Choice is now the watchword. Some people look forward to negotiating the price of a new vehicle and the trade-in while others seek out "one-price" or "no-haggle" dealerships. You might even choose not to buy at all, but to lease, an increasingly flexible and attractive alternative.

Another major change — a revolution, really — is coming soon to a showroom near you: Salespeople who have earned professional certification by the National Automobile Dealers Association. This elite group — which already numbers in the thousands and is growing quickly — has been educated in three areas: ethics and law, customer satisfaction and loyalty, and professional sales practices. They have proven their knowledge by passing a tough test and by demonstrating a complete understanding of the products they sell.

NADA certification guarantees new-car buyers a high standard of service and professionalism in the showroom. When you choose a NADA-certified sales professional, you know you're buying from someone who has met demanding requirements and who has committed to uphold a strict Code of Conduct. Certified salespeople who violate the Code will lose their certification. Once lost, it can never be regained.

NADA certification offers advantages for salespeople, too. Once certified, they become members of the Society of Automotive Sales Professionals. The Society's aim is to create a career path for salespeople who take pride in their occupation and who value a long-term relationship with their customers.

And dealers who employ NADA-certified salespeople report increased sales and higher customer satisfaction ratings by their manufacturers. Repeat and referral sales are a key to success, and dealerships that fail to satisfy customers simply won't be in business in the 21st century. In short, NADA certification is a "win" for everyone.

Over the coming months and years you'll see the NADA-certified logo more often in new-car and truck dealerships and in their advertising.

Dealers who employ NADA-certified salespeople report increased sales and higher customer satisfaction ratings by their manufacturers. Repeat and referral sales are a key to success. Dealerships that fail to satisfy customers won't be in business in the 21st century.

The thin lines in the alphabet

WEEKEND CONFIDENTIAL

Weekend Confidential, impatiently awaiting the arrival of cruel April with its mix of memory and desire that allows us to roll down the windows of the car and blast Bon Jovi tapes at the peak of middle-age insanity, has been thinking strange thoughts.

On a recent premature March night too warm for cognac and too cold for beer, Weekend Confidential began to wonder about the Comic Alphabet.

The Comic Alphabet literally spells out our destinies. For most of us, the Comic Alphabet has done a decent job spelling out the obvious. Some of us see the message clearly; others see letters randomly floating in a supernatural alphabet soup. In any case, Confidential is convinced that we're the victim of a typographical error.

There is only one letter in the Comic Alphabet that separates "lover" from "loser." And Confidential is on the wrong side of that error.

Why couldn't there have been a different error? It is far better to be a "loner" than a "loser" (Clint Eastwood vs Al Bundy). Even "logger" would have been better. But, no, Confidential is stuck with a chain of letters shackling our destiny.

We're not comforted by the doggerel that "it is better to have loved and lost than not to have loved at all" (though we suspect it was written by another Alphabet victim). In this time of decadence, Confidential harbors the dark thought it might actually be fashionable to be a loser — someone has to atone for the century's excesses.

Yet being the poster child for a dawning era of lowered expectations does not answer the howls of the hounds tugging on the leash of our ego and libido. And we're approaching the age when the author of the Comic Alphabet, proofreading the final draft of one's life, may be inclined to correct "lust" to "rust."

Ah, well. We have nothing to lose except being a loser.

Hey Lucy, we're home!

Weekend Confidential and our spouse spent Sunday afternoon with friends, but enjoyment turned into a Ricardo Mertz farce when friend number 1 inadvertently locked the four of us out of Confidential's house.

We had only planned to be out side for a few minutes to see the friends off, so Confidential was seriously ticked off when we realized we were standing outside in February in shorts, exposing a pair of not shaved all winter legs. That's permissible with close friends, but we did not look forward to calling the local police or a locksmith.

Presently, an unlocked window was found and a ladder was located. Spouse was annoyed when Confidential suggested that someone of smaller girth might more easily fit through the window. As spouse stood sputtering over the insult, friend number 2 pointed out that friend number 1 should climb up the ladder since number 1 was a lot younger than our mate. Spouse was, by now, apoplectic.

But it seemed only fair, since friend number 1 was the one who fiddled with the lock in the first place. Up the ladder our hero climbed, and as a chinoclad butt disappeared through the window, Confidential was mollified by the satisfying thud of a body hitting the floor headfirst.

Now that the dust is cleared, the friends continue to argue about whether Confidential, who prides himself on our ability to handle crises, actually got hysterical. True, we were a bit annoyed, but panic? Never.

The debate rages on.

Pride & pub life

St. Patrick's Day means more than it

By STEVE WALLACE
Weekend Plus writer

There's something in the spirit and history of St. Patrick's Day that just can't be diminished by the commercialized green beer and shamrock shakes

"It's a little more commercial here," said Deirdre Doyle, a native Dubliner and waitress at Jack O'Connor's Beef N Seafood House in Bridgewater. "But it's the one day a year it gets as close to the real thing back home as it probably will. In fact, it's a bigger deal in America in some ways."

Traditionally, St. Patrick's Day celebrates the arrival of Ireland's still dominant religion—Roman Catholicism—in the fifth century. The holiday is full of extraordinary tales of banishing snakes.

"Some of that's just legend," said John Walsh, director of the Irish American Cultural Center in Morristown. "Ireland never had any snakes to begin with."

What is known about St. Patrick, Walsh said, is that he was a slave from the Celtic Britons who returned to Ireland as a bishop in about 480 A.D. to confirm what was then called pagan Ireland.

"The significance of the shamrock—he may have used it to explain the trinity, but that's not for certain," Walsh said. But even if the lore of St. Patrick is not quite rooted in fact and more the stuff of legends, Walsh and other historians have found a bounty of information on the history and significance of the holiday here.

The American tradition, Walsh explained, began when a group of Irish born British officers stationed in New York City in 1765 marched to the Bowery after a St. Patrick's Day breakfast.

"It occurred again sporadically over the years, often with music, and then it really became a regular event in the 1830s," Walsh said. "Today, there's something like 144 parades around the country, including 18 in New Jersey and even one in Hawaii. There really aren't many other ethnic holidays that are as large and universally celebrated as St. Patrick's Day."

Part of the universal appeal of St. Patrick's Day in America has to do with the legacy of Irish immigrants—one that captures the American experience in a way few other ethnic groups can.

There have been several waves of Irish immigrants to America, including significant numbers in recent decades. The most distinct exodus, however, occurred between 1845-51 during the anguish of Ireland's great potato famine.

"Most immigrants come to America looking for opportunity, a chance at prosperity," Walsh said. "But during the potato famine, the Irish immigrants were escaping death."

The potato famine was triggered by a massive crop failure afflicting the staple of the Irish diet, potatoes. As farmers began harvesting the crop, a mysterious fungus turned them into mush. Given that Ireland was still operating under an arcane feudal system, the government was unable to intervene effectively and a devastating famine ensued.

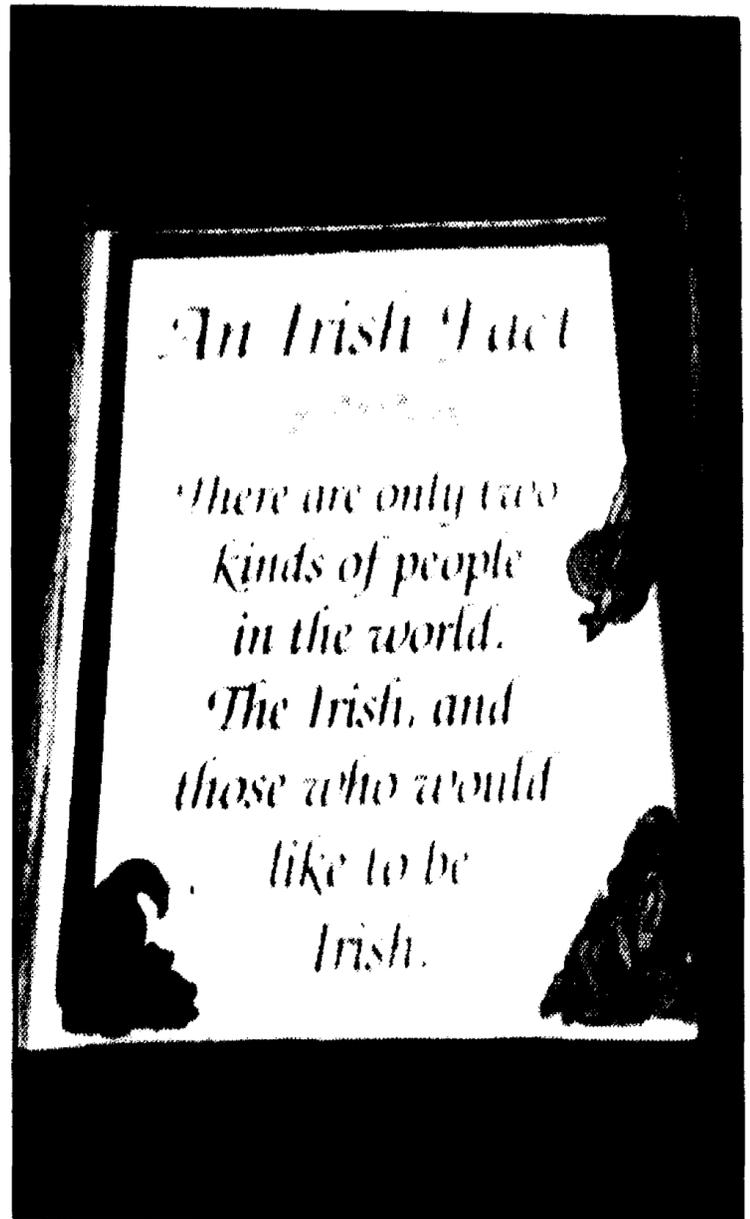

"These immigrants were uneducated people that were penniless," Walsh said. "Some of them literally had the clothes on their back. The Irish immigrants to America today are generally very well educated and less apprehensive about coming because Dublin's a four or five hour flight away. But when the immigrants from the potato famine left, they knew it was forever. They would never see Ireland or their families again, so this" (Please turn to page 8)

'The other function the parades served was a demonstration of political power. Seeing large numbers of Irish Americans marching through the streets was something, if you are a politician, that you'd pay attention to.'

was really traumatic for them."

Arriving on the cruel streets of America, those immigrants would face some of the most xenophobic racism ever seen as "No Irish Need Apply" signs went up in businesses and city fathers forced them into ghettos.

It was not until after the U.S. Civil War, Walsh said, in which large numbers of Irish immigrants were drafted, that America finally began to accept them and as a result, an enhanced sense of ethnic pride has grown in the immigrants' descendants, who honor the rigors and obstacles their ancestors faced.

What the parades became, was really two things," Walsh said.

Part of it was ethnic pride. A chance to demonstrate pride in being Irish. But the other function the parades served was a demonstration of political power. Seeing large numbers of Irish Americans marching through the streets was something, if you are a politician, that you'd pay attention to."

Despite the commercialism of St. Patrick's Day, Walsh said, some parades still prohibit corporate sponsorships and keep it strictly an expression of ethnic pride. There are some similarities between the celebrations in America and the real thing back in Ireland.

"In Ireland today, St. Patrick's Day is a very religious day," said Irish native Bridget Lawn, owner of the Bridget's Irish Cottage stores at the Bridgewater Commons and in Martinsville. "Most people will go to mass in the morning, maybe go to the parade and then stop at the pub later."

Lawn said the American tradition of going out to a bar or party on St. Patrick's Day seems to be modeled after what is a part of daily life in Ireland—the pub.

"In Ireland, the pubs aren't just for drinking. They're where people meet each other and you get to know your neighbors," Lawn said. "You don't have neighborhood pubs like that here, so on St. Patrick's Day, people seem to want to do that, to experience that pub life. Be a little Irish for a day even if you're not."

Lang opens in Misanthrope

Acclaimed stage actor Stephen Lang will play the leading role of Alceste in Jean Baptiste Moliere's classic comedy The Misanthrope, the next theatrical production at the McCarter Theatre in Princeton. Directed by award-winning Belgian director Andre Ernotte, the production opens Friday and runs through Sunday, March 31.

"I very much wanted to include a classic European comedy in our season," McCarter Theatre Artistic Director Emily Mann said. "I greatly admire the work of Andre Ernotte and Stephen Lang, two consummate theater artists I have known for years. I believe that with The Misanthrope we have the right combination of artists and the right play. I'm thrilled to have them both here."

The production marks a reunion for Mann, Ernotte and Lang, all of whom were involved with the Brooklyn Academy of Music's resident theater company during the early 1980s. Mann and Lang have known each other since the late 1970s, when they worked at the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis.

Lang is best known for his Broadway performances in The Speed of Darkness (nominated for a Tony Award) and Death of a Salesman (nominated for a Drama Desk award). He made his feature film debut alongside Gene Hackman and Ann Margaret in Three in a Lifetime. Following roles in Manhunter, Project X and Band of the Hand, Mr. Lang took on one of recent cinema's most complex and heart-rending characters for his first major starring role—that of doomed strike leader Harry Black in the gritty epic Last Exit to Brooklyn. He has also played leading roles in Gettysburg, Tombstone, The Hard Way, Another You and Gully as Sin. Lang's extensive television credits include Crime Story, Tribeca, Stone Pillow, The Mother and Season of Hope, plus the title role in Babe Ruth.

Lang last appeared at McCarter during its 1976-77 season in Angel City, a play by Sam Shepard, and Major Barbara.

Ernotte has directed and written for stage, film, television and opera in the U.S. and Europe. He is currently represented in New York with the musical Bed and Sofa at the Vineyard Theater. Last season, he directed Wildwood Park for McCarter's "Random Acts" festival of new plays. His New York stage credits include My Gene, Coming Attractions, Goblin Market, Lady Day at Emerson's Bar & Grill and Sunset. Ernotte won an Obie award and a Drama Desk nomination for his direction of Christina. Alberta's Father. He has directed at leading regional theaters across the country, including the Goodman Theater in Chicago, where he directed A House is Not Meant to Stand, by Tennessee Williams.

Ernotte also directed the film High Street, an official Belgian-French entry for best foreign film at the Academy Awards. The Music Keeper, a play he co-wrote with Elliot Tiber about Richard Wagner's music and its impact under Hitler's Third Reich, will have its Italian premiere next summer.

The cast also features Jim Abele, Nancy Bell, John Ellison Conlee, Gilbert Cruz, Wally Dunn, Chris Hietikko, Valerie Leonard, Rod McLachlan, Ted Rooney and Anne Torsiglieri. Ms. Torsiglieri appeared on the McCarter stage as a member of the Princeton University Triangle Club.

The design team for The Misanthrope includes Douglas Stein, sets; Martin Pakladinaz, costumes; and Michael Chybowski, lighting.

With such plays as The School for Wives, The Doctor in Spite of Himself and Tartuffe, Moliere revolutionized theatrical comedy, delighted audiences, scandalized critics and exasperated his rivals. Widely considered his greatest play, The Misanthrope has been an audience favorite for more than 300 years.

The Misanthrope is a classic 17th century French comedy in which Alceste (the title character) can see no good in his fellow man while remaining blind to his own shortcomings. Exasperated by polite society, he resolves to spend the rest of his life in solitary exile until he has the misfortune to fall in love with a woman who represents everything he professes to detest.

Tickets for The Misanthrope are $24-$32. A "Pay-What-You-Can" performance (subject to availability) will be 7:30 p.m. Sunday, March 24. To purchase tickets, or for more information, call (609) 683-8000.

Villagers stages I Hate Hamlet

The Villagers Theatre in Somerset is now staging Paul Rudnick's hilarious comedy I Hate Hamlet.

The play tells the story of a successful, but mediocre, TV star's struggle with drama's most difficult role, Hamlet, and the outrageous coaching he receives from the drunken ghost of the theatre's greatest Hamlet, John Barrymore. Director Mary McMurry has been diligently working on the show with her cast. The laughs are non-stop.

Performances run through March 31 at the theater. Show times are 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday, 3 p.m. Sunday.

Admission is $17 Saturday, $15 Friday and Sunday. Discounts are available Friday and Sunday for senior citizens and students. Infrared listening devices are available for the hearing-impaired.

To order tickets, or for more information, call 873-2710.

Flamboyant scene-stealer Nathan Lane has a conniption as his (in this case) straight man, Robin Williams, looks on.

Who's the star here?

Lane steals Birdcage from Robin Williams

By JEFFREY COMEN
Weekend Plus film critic

Robin Williams is one of the most popular movie stars on the planet, and he makes two kinds of comedies: the kind in which he's unleashed to perform his signature brand of improvisational madness, and the kind in which he tries to act with his hands tied. The Birdcage is both.

Only on rare occasions in Mike Nichols' new comedy, adapted from the French farce La Cage Aux Folles, does Williams' wild side show up. Mostly, he is reacting to other actors and suffering the machinations of the farcical plot. But that's okay, because Williams has a hole card here: he's acting with Nathan Lane.

Lane, best known for his Broadway roles (he's about to star in a revival of A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum), has had what they call "limited success" in the movies. That is to say, his most notable role until now has been the voice of a monkey in The Lion King.

But as Albert, the more "obvious" half of a gay couple, Lane finally has the kind of role and turns in the kind of performance that can make him the star he always should have been — freeing Robin Williams, who plays Albert's partner Armand, to show what a great reactor he can be.

The story is as thin as Kate Moss: Armand owns a Florida nightclub called The Birdcage, where men dress up as women and put on shows. Albert is his star performer and life partner. Albert is given to pumps, floppy hats and yellow shirts. Not to mention tantrums that make Zsa Zsa Gabor seem reasonable.

They also have a son, Val (Dan Futterman), from Armand's brief marriage to Katherine (Christine Baranski of TV's Cybill, in a small role) 20 years ago. Val wants to marry the daughter of a Senator (Gene Hackman) who thinks Bob Dole is too liberal. And there's the rub.

The movie kills a lot of time waiting for the families to meet; Albert gets to throw a lot of tantrums and try to learn how to walk like John Wayne. And sooner or later, everybody gets to sing, dance and dress up.

Don't let the billing fool you. It's Nathan Lane's movie, and he's worth the price of admission all by himself. That guy he's acting with isn't bad either.

Video Rewind

Keanu Reeves works his mysterious (and, to some of us, invisible) charm on A Walk in the Clouds (Fox Video) as a WWII veteran who, after being discharged, poses as the husband of a pregnant woman to placate her father (Glencarlo Glennini), a winemaker. And Anthony Quinn, as the grandfather, plays Zorba the Greek again.

Axious to jump on the Quentin Tarantino bandwagon before it rides off, Miramax has issued a cassette version of Pulp Fiction that includes the writer/director explaining (sort of) 12 extra minutes of footage from a film that's already almost three hours long. For wide-eyed fans only.

Cabin fever makes habits grate

BY RACHAEL HIP-FLORES

Weekend Plus writer

Am I the only one in the world who gets a little depressed by March? It just seems that in March, when winter is squeezing our necks for one last time, we get housebound. And when we get housebound, little habits of family members normally overlooked in, like, June, tend to crawl under our fingernails into our nostrils, behind our ears and under our skin.

Take, for example, my dad. Where in God's name did he learn how to dress? He makes the worst fashion statements I have ever seen.

First, he tucks his Van Heusen shirt into his B.V.D. underwear and lets the elastic waist hang out, like, 3 inches! To make it worse, he's got all these pen caps (the kind that are on strings and tie around your belt loop) dangling down, with no pens, and he wears them anyway! When he finally finds a pen, it's usually not the same color as the cap. Heaven forbid anything he wears should match!

And of course, let's not forget the all-purpose white lab coat, which serves as a dress jacket, windbreaker and rain slicker. He just keeps forgetting to take it off as he barrels from hassle to hassle.

Not to mention dad's mooching habits. I seriously doubt he has ever eaten from his own plate! He comes home from the office and just goes around the table to see who has what. "Can I have a bite? Can I have a bite?" Let me just tell you that one of his bites is like three of mine! He can polish off half a sandwich in a single mouthful! It never ceases to amaze me.

To top off dad's mind-boggling list of habits to swear by—or at least he never quite listens or hears, one or the other. I mean, he'll walk into a room, ask where the mail is, flip the tube to Moneyline, then sit down and ask where the mail is about five more times before the light penetrates and he understands that it's under his plate. Oyl!

And let's not forget good 'ol mom. She must be getting old or something because I honestly can't understand why she constantly repeats herself.

"Rach, it's supposed to snow tomorrow."

"God, mom."

Five minutes later...

"Rach, it's going to snow tomorrow."

"Yeah, mom, you told me."

"No, really, it's going to snow."

"No, really, you told me about three times!"

It goes on like this for another 10 minutes and then she'll change the subject and repeat something else. I have come up with a solution, but it involves a complicated series of injections and tests.

My mom is also unbearably cheerful in the morning—at 7 a.m. Naturally, I don't have the initiative to go and buy an alarm clock, so she has to wake me up. She is so unbelievably happy when she wakes me up. In a sing-song voice, "Rach H, wake up! It's time to wake uppp, Rach H!" How can anyone be that chippy at that hellacious hour? It takes me till about 9 to remember how to spell my own name.

Anyway, my older sister Christina's habits are worth a good drive up the wall. See, Chris has this unique way of zoning people out. When she's tired of listening to you, she'll just break out into some urla, directly in your face, when you're in mid-sentence. And she'll get on these "improve your diction" kicks. She'll start talking... really... slow... like... this in something that might pass for a British accent. Older sisters, go figure!

Oh, and how could I forget my beloved older brothers, David and Ricky? In all fairness, Dave doesn't really have habits that annoy me. It's more like his presence that absolutely kills me. There's no real way to describe it, but if you met him, you'd know.

With Rick, on the other hand, it's both. Boy, is it ever both. Like, whenever there's work to be done, he sorta just slips into the shadows. But when I have some tacky news to report, like what I told mom I might have blown a CTBS test, Rick materializes back in the glow of it. I don't know how he does it. I guess it works the same way as, say, a bloodhound picks up a scent. Eerie.

As for my own annoying habits, I asked mom to make a list of them. They are:

Giving detailed plot summaries of impossibly complicated X-captacles.

Playing dead in the morning.

Procrastinating until the last minute to write these articles.

Yes, mom, you told me I had to wrap it up.

Yes, mom, I know it's 10 p.m. You told me.

Yes, mom, you told me that minutes ago.

Yes, mom.

Rachael Hip-Flores is an 11-year-old student at Martin Luther King Elementary School, Pleasanton, Calif. Her column runs once a month in Weekend Plus. Unlike the rest of her family, she has no annoying habits whatsoever.

Too Much Joy: In the moment

Band takes on the crucial question of 'Whatever happened last night?'

By NATHAN SHASHOUA
Weekend Plus editor

Too Much Joy plays brash, bratty songs that sometimes slow down and get really interesting. Weekend Plus asked them some questions so you could get to know them before going to see their show at the Metro Lounge in Long Branch Saturday.

The band is touring in support of their first major-label release, ...Finally..., whose Crumb-inspired cover art is so risqué we couldn't get away with printing it here. Tim Quirk, the band's singer, spoke to us from an Econo Lodge room somewhere in Ohio.

Q: After seeing the cover art, we were wondering if you read lots of comics.

A: "Not really, but we just had this vision in our head and we went through five or six artists trying to get what we wanted. One guy came to us with two people with clown faces. We always had a vision of a post-coital couple in bed looking at each other and both thinking the same thing, 'finally,' which became the title of the album. For some reason, that guy came to us with clown faces."

Q: Did you see Crumb?

A: "I have to do this before the Academy Awards—I'm trying to figure what my top 10 movies are, but that's number one or two. (Answering someone in the room) What, Babe? He's a fine pig, but I'm much more down with the message of Crumb. Families suck, but they're all we've got."

We asked Crumb to do it. We knew he'd say no, because he hates rock music and has been screwed in the past with stuff Doug (the Crumb cover artist) is one of Crumb's favorites. He has a self-portrait of Crumb's."

Q: How did you end up playing the 2 Live Crew album at that show in Florida?

A: "We saw 2 Live Crew getting bussed on MTV. Everyone was sitting around saying how bad it was. Our bass player said we should go down there and play their songs. Then our publicist—the light bulb went 'ding' over his head. We played five of our songs, five of their songs. The original idea was to get a lot of bands to each play a song, so they'd end up arresting 30 or 35 people and it would get ridiculous. But we had to go on alone. The record company flew us down there and everything, but when the trial came up three months later, they were nowhere to be found. We had to get ACLU attorneys and everything, but we won."

Q: What was the resulting night in jail like?

A: "It wasn't your average night in jail, because there was an army of friends and helpers, getting bail and a lot of other things. It came on the news at 5 a.m., so we were minor celebrities in the holding pen. We were basically arrested for cursing on stage, but the cops arresting us—then cursing, was unbelievable. Our songs were funny, but they were just nasty."

Q: Everyone has a great drunking story—what's yours?

A: "Oh, you could pick one at random. Whatever happened last night, I can't remember now. Wait, I've got one for you. In New Orleans, we had a devoted Too Much Joyophile following us and we decided he needed to work for our attention. There were five work stands and we had a rocket with a tripod. We were grilling him about how devoted he was and told him, 'if you mean it, you'll launch this off your head.' So we lit the fuse and we were standing far away—we didn't even see it. After, he was just standing there with smoke coming out from under his hat. It was a beautiful sight."

Q: Was he shaken up?

A: "Well, he got bought a lot of drinks. That's the level all fans must rise to and no one's ever lived up to it."

Q: What was the best show you ever played?

A: "Whatever happened last night. Too Much Joy lives in the moment. We don't dwell on the past. We only deal with our really miserable lives at this (expletive) moment. We've played festivals, and with 40,000 people staring at you, it's really hard to do a bad show. What Too Much Joy excels at is being incredible in front of three people. That's a hard job."

Q: This is for our St. Patrick's Day issue. What are your plans for St. Patrick's Day?

A: "It's a Sunday, right? Probably recuperating from the night before. I was going to meet a friend then and he goes, 'oh, that's St. Patrick's Day—what kind of a drunk are you?' I'm a drunk who doesn't need an excuse. It's kind of like Super Bowl Sunday or the Fourth of July. I just don't understand it."

RANDALL MILLER/WEEKEND PLUS

High-backed booths and Mayan decor make Jose's Cantina the place for a private, romantic evening.

At Jose's, you can have an intimate rendezvous

BY PHYLLIS RECKEL

Weekend Plus culinary correspondent

Bring your own cocktails for two to the classy cantina and you'll have an interesting and intimate rendezvous.

Jose's Mexican Cantina in Warren is an enchanting restaurant. Below a lattice ceiling, butterscotch colored walls hold huge colorful murals of Mayan symbols and high-backed booths decorated with Mexican blankets and beautifully tiled baffle walls separate the small entry into several private dining areas. It's perfect for a business discussion or a place to propose.

And the food is a treat! You can, of course, have chicken, beef, cheese or pork enchiladas in mild red or spicy green sauce ($9.75 for two). But these are not fast food enchiladas; they are moist and meaty and you can taste the delicious difference between chicken and pork. And if you've never tried cactus enchiladas ($11.50), you have missed a winning culinary creation. The menu calls for a red Monterey sauce, we had it with a green sauce of wine, butter, green tomatoes and celery.

Less spicy and more refined than the Tex-Mex style, the culsine at Jose's is Mayan, reflecting the rich culture and sophistication of the Indians who settled in southern Mexico and El Salvador.

The chilled gazpacho is rich with finely chopped fresh cucumbers, onions and bell peppers in a flavorful tomato soup, and the black bean soup is just as delightful ($1.75 cup, $2.50 bowl). Queso fundido, chile con carne made with sausage and ground beef and served with tortilla chips ($6.50) is another treat.

Among the appetizers we tried were sauteed calamari in a brown chile barbecue sauce ($7.50), a very tender, moist and spicy dish; the hongos borrachos, mushrooms sauteed in a sauce of brandy, butter, cinnamon and garlic ($4.75) and camarones al Ajillo, baby shrimp sauteed in garlic, paprika, cilantro and chiles ($7.75). Each was different from the other, and it's impossible to say which was better. Although I found the calamari a bit too hot, Jose said next time I should mention I want it milder. He told me they are happy to accommodate, even making it better.

The pollo en mole poblano, boneless breast of chicken sauteed in garlic and lime ($15.15) is covered in a Mexican brown sauce and sprinkled with sesame seeds. The sauce was so good — when we learned its ingredients, we knew why: chile powder, peanuts, cocoa and a few secret things.

Jose's offers several vegetarian dinners and meat dishes in several flavorful sauces. Pork, beef and chicken also come with or in burritos, stew, sliced, marinated and grilled. Fish dishes include snapper and swordfish (each $18.50), plus shrimp and crabmeat combinations, and, in addition, Jose offers specials every day.

There is a Jose's Mexican Cantina in New Providence. We visited his second restaurant tucked in a new small strip mall in Warren. If you want a cozy place in which to have some different, delectable dishes, brimming with quality and freshness, try Jose's.

Jose's Mexican Cantina, 125 Washington Valley Road, Quail Run Shopping Center, Warren; (908) 563-0480. Hours: 11 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday-Thursday, to 10:30 p.m. Friday-Saturday, 3-10 p.m. Sunday. BYOB. Major credit cards accepted; handicapped-accessible.

Women's concerns top conference

The Industrial Commercial Real Estate Women will sponsor an all-day conference for and about women 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Thursday, April 18 at the Sheraton Woodbridge Place, Route 1, Woodbridge.

Rene Redwood, former chairwoman of the Federal Glass Ceiling Commission, Elizabeth Christopherson, executive director of New Jersey Network, and Judy Shaw, lobbyist and former chief of staff for Gov. Christine Todd Whitman, will be among the featured speakers at the conference, titled "Women of the '90s: Setting the Agenda 2000."

A series of break out sessions will help participants obtain valuable skills to help elect women candidates, achieve success in business and take their places on corporate and not for profit boards.

The conference is expected to draw women from Massachusetts to Washington, D.C. and from across the state. Registration information and a conference brochure can be obtained by calling Meryl Gonchar at 540-5600 or Marilyn Orloff at (201) 730-1144.

County hosts buyers workshop

The Somerset County Coalition on Affordable Housing will sponsor a first-time homebuyer workshop beginning 8:30 a.m. Saturday.

The Fifth Annual First Time Homebuyers Workshop and Homebuyers Fair will be held at the Marriott Hotel, Davidson Avenue, Somerset. Last year, more than 400 people attended the fourth annual event.

The workshop includes information on mortgage financing, budget planning, real estate, home inspections and legal questions. Immediately following the 8:30 a.m. seminar, a homebuyers fair will be held 12:30-3 p.m. to allow Somerset County realtors and other homebuyer service providers to meet the program participants and talk with them about what they have to offer.

The fair will provide exhibit space adjacent to the seminar room for local Realtors and other first-time homebuyer services. Cost for renting a booth is $225. Realtors who are interested in exhibiting at the fair should contact Sharon Clark at 356-8879.

SCCOAH's workshop and fair targets families with incomes of $70,000 or less, but all interested first time buyers are welcome to attend.

Steeplechase Manor approaches sellout point

Somerset County's Steeplechase Manor by builder Michael J. Reddington of M. Reddington & Associates Inc. is closing out fast.

This luxury home community in scenic Hillsborough now has just two one-acre homesites left, and buyers may choose from a variety of classic home designs, ranging from 2,800 to 4,000 square feet. Close out prices start at $289,000.

In making the announcement, marketing agent Eilyn Ciliberto of the Branchburg Office of Weichert Realtors said, "Presently, we have a 4,100-square-foot 'Greenbalm' model under construction that will be available for occupancy in March. It's a very stately home, reduced to $389,900, that includes a brick front, a circular oak stairway located in the grand entrance foyer, and beautiful hardwood flooring in the dining room, the library, and in the foyer. It also comes with $5,000 worth of upgrades free." All M. Reddington homes at Steeple Chase Manor include such popular home features as ceramic tile flooring in all the bath rooms, dramatic cathedral ceilings, skylights, a brick fireplace, two story entry foyers, Andersen insulated windows, central air conditioning, a whirlpool in the master bath, and nine foot ceilings on the first floor.

As this new established community progressed, M. Reddington & Associates made some remarkable modifications to the standard floor plans, Ms. Ciliberto said.

"Michael Reddington believes that a home should be personalized to the buyer's needs and fully appreciates that when building a home, flexibility is imperative," she said. "He has always prided himself not only on the top rate quality materials used during construction, but also with the customized approach he takes to each individual home.

We have created floor plans for buyers whose bedroom/space needs cover a broad range. We've even had buyers come back to build their second home with M. Reddington because they loved the quality construction and excellent value for the money."

"This established community is conveniently located between Montgomery and Hillsborough, with beautifully scenic country settings and peaceful, serene surroundings. This ideal location also offers ready access to key commuting arteries, including Routes 78, 287, 22 and 206.

Steeplechase Manor is open Saturday and Sunday from noon-4 p.m., or by appointment. To visit, take Route 206 to Hillsborough Road; go about three miles and look for signs on the right.

For more information, call Ms. Ciliberto at 685-7650, Ext. 10, or at 626-5444.

Edison home has those sought-after custom touches

This beautiful five-bedroom, two-and-a-half bath contemporary, located in North Edison, has a stone entranceway and a two-story foyer.

A short hall leads to its spectacular center-island kitchen, featuring upgraded appliances, custom fixtures and a large eating area, all with ceramic tile floors. The eating area leads to a 23-by-14-foot outdoor deck.

The two-story skylighted family room, next to the kitchen, has a floor-to-ceiling stone fireplace and upgraded carpets. The living and dining rooms boast hardwood floors. Also on the first floor of the residence are a library, a den which doubles as a bedroom, a laundry, a half bath and a side-entry two-car garage.

On the second floor of the residence is the entirely separate master suite with its own luxurious skylighted bath with whirlpool tub. Another ceramic-tiled, compartmented bath and three additional bedrooms with huge closets complete this level.

This 3,500-square-foot home is full of custom touches, including ceiling fans, track lights and a central vacuum, and it has two-zone gas hot air heat with central air. It is located on a professionally landscaped ¼-acre corner lot.

To visit this residence, which lists for $399,000, call Sanjeev Anja at On Track Realty in Metuchen at 494-2211.

Purchasing power rises for area home-seekers

A drop in home prices, coupled with low mortgage rates, boosted purchasing power for all buyers, the National Association of Realtors reported.

NAR's composite Housing Affordability Index, which measures affordability factors for all homebuyers, was 120.7 in the fourth quarter of 1995, compared to 123.3 in the previous quarter and 128.9 in the fourth quarter of 1994.

"The low interest rates that we've experience over the last year have really helped relat buyers see housing as more affordable than ever, as you can see from the national index," said Art Godi, NAR's president.

"In addition, we are now seeing lower prices and rising incomes, which have favorable affordability conditions for both repeat buyers and first-time buyers," he said.

When the index measures 100, a family earning the median income has exactly the amount needed to purchase a median-priced resale home. According to this measurement, half the families in the nation had more than enough, at least 129.0 percent of the income needed to qualify to purchase at the median national fourth quarter price of $113,800.

NAR's first-time buyer index, which shows the ability of renters who are prime candidates to qualify for a mortgage on a starter home, also rose in the fourth quarter. The first-time buyer index was 84.1, up from 79.9 in the third quarter and 82.4 from the fourth quarter a year ago.

"Home price decreases combined with the low mortgage rates have opened up opportunities for some first-time homebuyers who might otherwise had problems meeting the down payment," Mr. Godi said.

Despite a rise in the affordability index for first-time homebuyers, the gap between repeat buyers and those purchasing their first home remains wide, according to John Tuccillo, NAR's chief economist.

According to the index, a typical first-time buyer would have 84.1

purchase a starter home, with the median-price at $96,700 in the fourth quarter. The index shows that the buyer would need a qualifying income of $30,043 with conventional financing, yet the median income is only $25,268, a difference of $4,775.
