preface

we were sitting around
discussing our plans for the yearbook.
we were thinking of ways
to improve it and make it more interesting.
someone said, "let's not have any senior write-ups."
there was a silence.

someone else said,

"we have to have senior write-ups."

"why?"

"we've just got to have senior write-ups!"

then everyone tried to think why
we had to have senior write-ups;
or capital letters; or paragraph form;
or "mug shots" of homerooms; or fancy print;
and no one could think of any reasons
why we couldn't change all this in '66.
so i said, "let's make changes,
but not just for the sake of change,
let's make only those which we think
will make the 1966 west-o-ranger
a better yearbook."

and then someone said, "we surely
are moving away from last year's book."
and i said, "did you say moving?"
and he said, "that's right,
'moving.' "

to corby.
the line makes things work;
a key block by jury sets a runner loose,
or gives a pass play time to work.
the defense pressures the enemy;
filan breaks through to nail a halfback,
or thatcher picks off a bengal pass.

this then is the team.
they do their best and give their all.
no one can ask for more.

and then there are two

all alone on the mat.

cross and shake.

"ready, wrestle!"

quick takedown! hold the ankle!

sit-out! tight waist! predicament!

a whole new language.

born for six short minutes.

pin! pin! pin!

and then it is over;

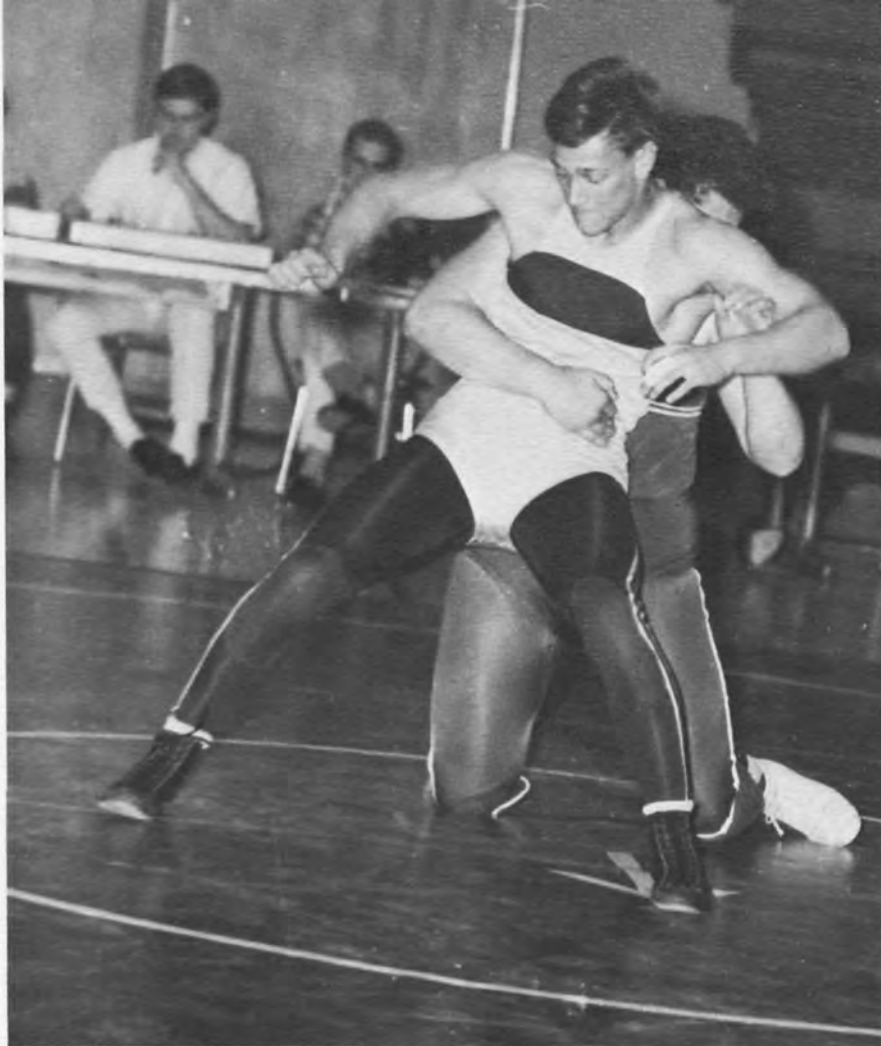

one hand raised

in victory.

of a dance at west orange high.

west orange teenage center—
for the first time,
a place where students
from wohs and mountain high
can meet and congregate.
a jukebox, a color television,
ping pong, pool,
music, dancing—
"teens on the green"

epilogue

comes the spring,
and the tense changes from past to present:
for the spring is now, when we, like flowers,
either blossom in glory, or wither in defeat;
before each of us lies a future tense;
of what does it speak?
college, trade school, the service, business . . .
love, marriage, a home, children . . .
and an endless series of failures and successes,
which make up life beyond the spring.
