WILLIAM J. ROSS NAMED OFFICIAL OF RED CROSS

First Aid Vice Chairman On Executive Group; Duval Resigns

William J. Ross of 182 Floyd street, vice chairman of the Red Cross first aid committee, was elected a member of the executive committee of the Belleville chapter at a meeting at the Woman's club Monday night.

At the same time the resignation of Joseph C. Duval of 30 Rossmore place from his post as public relations chairman was accepted. Duval pleaded pressure of other business in his resignation letter.

Reporting on the activities of the first aid committee, chairman Paul Baxer revealed that 39 advanced cards have been issued during the past two months together with 38 standard and 19 junior cards.

He recommended the first aid program at the Walter Kidde company, pointing out that 14 persons had recently completed the accident prevention instructor's course and that there are more than 500 first aiders trained in the plant.

Mrs. Louis A. Noll, head of the home service department, announced that the Red Cross had been made an agent to handle all cases for the Army Emergency Relief. Her division is caring for about 110 cases of all kinds every month.

Other department heads reported usual activity: 25 members of the motor corps worked 400 hours during March, eight canteen unit helpers devoted 62 hours, 13 nurses' aides spent 314 hours in hospitals and at blood banks and eight staff assistants put in 46 hours (volunteers added another 246, due mainly to J. Claude Powers' 200 hours).

Youthful members of the Junior Red Cross in Passaic avenue school made numerous toys and presented them to the hospital and home for crippled children in Newark, according to Mrs. William H. Williams, chairman.

Cortlandt, Montgomery and Silver Lake schools added scrap books to the donation while high school students constructed a book

JERALDO MAIORAN, BUILDING PIONEER, PASSES AT 73

Developer, 'Unofficial Mayor' Of Silver Lake Succumbs After Long Illness

Jeraldo Maioran of 184 Belmont avenue, who developed nearly all of present-day Silver Lake, died at his home last week after a long illness. Thus ended nearly a half-century devoted to the interests of that southwestern portion of the town.

Mr. Maioran, for decades considered the "unofficial mayor of Silver Lake," had lived there since 1896. Born in Cassano Irpino, Italy, 73 years ago, he braved the Atlantic alone as a boy to seek his fortune.

He was appointed the first postmaster of Silver Lake in 1899 and served until his death as postal clerk of station No. 3.

He soon felt the urge to develop the then-barren Silver Lake and this forced him into the construction and real estate business. During the following years his firm erected nearly every house in the area.

He helped build the first schoolhouse, erected the old St. Anthony's Catholic church, organized the first fire department, set up Americanization classes, helped build roads, cut in streets, sewerage and lighting.

At one time he served as a member of the Belleville boards of health and trade and for many years acted as justice of the peace. He was insurance broker, notary public, commissioner of deeds and a patron of music and art.

He often said that his greatest aim was to see that all of the poorer people had their own homes and he actually built and sold houses on a $5-$10 monthly installment plan.

Organizer Mr. Maioran instigated the beginnings of 14 lodges and fraternal organizations, mostly in St. Anthony's church, and organized the Silver Lake building and loan association.

Politically he was the acknowledged Republican leader of the Lake and helped organize many GOP clubs in the section.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Concetta Saulino Maioran, and two sons, Jeraldo Jr. at home and Cpl. Louis P. Maioran in the Army medical corps.

He also leaves six daughters: Mrs. Andrew Canfora (whose husband is in the Marines overseas), Mrs. Dominic Lally (whose husband is with the Army engineers on the Alcan highway), Miss Filomena Maioran, all of the Belmont avenue address, Mrs. Louis Stefanelli and Mrs. Michael Galia of Newark and Mrs. Anthony Anselmo of Bloomfield.

Other survivors are four brothers: Gen. Louis P. Maioran (retired), of the Italian Army engineers at Milan, Prof. Paul Maioran of Avellino, Italy, Pasquale of Morristown and Bartolomeo Maioran of 118 Heckel street; a sister, Mrs. Orazio Mercuri of Newark; and six grandchildren.

Principals In Police Controversy

Mayor Williams

Commissioner King

Editorial

Put Up Or Shut Up — But Fast

Mayor Williams and Commissioner King, both of whom have been fairly treated by the taxpayers of Belleville for many years, each have a new obligation today toward the town's citizens. It is their bounden duty now to clear up the controversy begun Tuesday night and to do it with a minimum of vituperative and recriminatory mudslinging, which can accomplish nothing but the lowering of the name of Belleville and the eventual extinction of their own political hopes. The charges which the mayor made at Tuesday night's meeting and the many more which he claims to have in reserve for future use are sufficiently serious to warrant a complete expose.

The sum and substance of the mayor's allegations is that the police department is being mismanaged, that the commissioner and Captain Leighton are working together to the detriment of the department. The incidental injury to his own reputation and character is a side issue as far as the townspeople are concerned. If his charges are true and if they can be proved, then the usefulness of King and Leighton to the town is seriously impaired and the former at least (being an elected official) will be a political has-been.

On the other hand, if they cannot be substantiated, the mayor will obviously be guilty of a grandstand play, full of political drama, a line in which the mayor is not exactly inept. If he fails to carry through and prove the charges against King and Leighton, he also will be a cooked political goose for he will have been guilty of needless character blackening. Therefore, whichever way this present duel turns out, at least one political head may fall. For unity and harmony (only a shaky thing in town hall for many years anyway) will no longer be possible and the absence of unity can work only against the best interests of the town.

Mayor Williams evidently thought well and long about what he was doing and for that reason the seriousness and implications of his thundering challenge must have been fully impressed on his mind before he acted. Now that the Rubicon has been crossed there can be no turning back: the charges cannot be allowed to die a death of neglect. We agree with Commissioner Mertz in his assertion that, now that the matter has been thrown into the open, it must be cleared up immediately. It is a clean-cut case of "put up or shut up." It is the showdown hand and it will be a case of winner take all. Let's get the hand over with and deal the next one.

Radio Patrol Car Spots Fire, Broadcast Saves Bambo Tavern

Radio came to the rescue in preventing a possible major fire in the small hours of Saturday when a police patrol car discovered a blaze in the tavern of Angelo Bambo at 16 Bloomfield avenue.

Officers Lee and Mallack were making a routine check of the area and, when they tried the door of the tavern, saw the fire. A radio call to police headquarters and the relay to fire headquarters brought the engines in a few minutes.

Cause of the blaze was said to have been a cigarette dropped into a rubbish barrel. The jukebox and part of the bar were badly damaged.

Child Care To Be Settled Soon, Registration Report Ready

Final settlement of the child care question which has been hanging fire for more than two years is expected in the next few days when the special committee headed by Wayne P. Parmer reports to the board of education the results of the recent registration.

Says King Suppressed Leighton Statement

Wachenfeld Calls For Transcript Of Sensational Meeting; Mayor Promises Many More Disclosures

A sweeping investigation of the police department and its functioning since Joseph King became director of public safety was demanded yesterday morning by Mayor Williams in a conference with county Prosecutor Wachenfeld. The confab took place in the prosecutor's office less than 12 hours after Williams had blown the whole Belleville political and governmental structure apart with a series of sensational charges directed against King and Deputy Police Chief Elmer Leighton.

Wachenfeld made no decision on whether or not to prosecute the accused officials, according to the mayor, but asked for a transcript of the severe cross-questioning which the mayor pursued after hurling the bombshell into the commission meeting Tuesday night. Williams declared last night that he had in his files much additional data and many signed statements of alleged misdoings in the police department and that "they would be brought to light at the proper time."

King Will Welcome Investigation; Williams 'Through With Scandal'

He would welcome an investigation of the police department, Public Safety Director King declared yesterday to a Belleville Times reporter when questioned about possible future steps following Mayor Williams' announcement of demanding a county investigation.

At first King said he had no statement to make but termed the commission meeting Tuesday night "a farce." "It was not a trial," he said, "just a lot of personalities."

"An investigation would be fine because a lot of stuff would come out. I'm not afraid of an investigation."

His intention to push the demand for a search into the operation of the department was earlier enunciated by the mayor in a statement to The Times.

"For the $2,550 a year I get from the town I'm all through with the machinations of cheap politicians, gossips and scandal-mongers. I intend to obtain all the protection that the law gives to ordinary decent citizens and to public officials."

Radio Police Rescue Handbag Containing Cash, Diamonds

Mrs. Caroline McGeehan of 104 Davis avenue Kearny, was thankful this week for a different reason for the widespread use of radio in police work. It saved her several hundred dollars.

She left a Jersey City-Clifton bus near her home only to discover, when it had moved on, that she had left her handbag in the bus. It contained $127 in cash and several diamond rings.

Mrs. McGeehan telephoned Belleville police, Sgt. Flynn, who was on the desk, radioed Officer Donnelly who was on patrol and the latter intercepted the bus at Washington avenue and Holmes street.

The bag was recovered five minutes after the telephone call and returned to the grateful woman.

United Jewish Appeal Campaign Begins Tuesday At Synagogue

Belleville Jewry has been invited to a community assembly at Congregation AAA at 317 Washington avenue, Tuesday night when the program of the United Jewish Appeal of Essex county will be outlined in connection with the current campaign for funds.

Announcement of the meeting was made this week by Edward J. Abramson of 85 Hornblower avenue, Belleville division chairman.

Guest speaker will be Dr. Jacob B. Shohan, chairman of the campaign commercial and industrial division, and a leading member of B'nai B'rith.

Officers of the Belleville division are Henry W. Zandkoff and Barnett Yudin, vice chairman; George Cherin, secretary; William Abramson, treasurer; Samuel J. Kogan, industries chairman; and Jack Steinhauer, personal solicitation chairman.

misdoings in the police department and that "they would be brought to light at the proper time."

The controversy, which threatens to rock the foundations of town hall as nothing has in the past ten years, grew out of an alleged statement, in the possession of King for six weeks, claiming that the mayor had dealings with Newark gamblers.

The text of the statement, which was admittedly signed by Leighton, was not revealed but it is understood to charge the mayor with compliance in the schemes of the gamblers to open a house of chance in Belleville.

Locked Up Statement Williams asserted that King has been in possession of the document for six weeks and that after conferring with commissioners Noll, Mertz and Waters he locked the statement in his safe "to be used when the proper time came."

This, the mayor declared, amounted to suppression of evidence which should have been immediately investigated and, true, made the basis for prosecution.

The mayor began the heated discussion by reading a prepared statement about the value of character and good reputation of any man, but particularly a public official.

He spoke of diabolical political schemes aimed at him and that they were aided by a "public official" who had served on the board with him for many years.

Amid deathly silence, he turned slowly and asked in clipped tones: "Commissioner King, did you or did you not pose as a detective in Captain Leighton's office about March 25?"

King denied he had been introduced as anything but "commissioner" at the meeting at which Leighton, Mertz and the two gamblers were also said to have been present.

Don't Know Names King and Mertz both declared that they did not know the names of the other men; and Mertz added that he "just happened to be there when they came in" and he paid no attention to what was said.

It was after the conference that the Leighton statement is said to have been made solely, Leighton said later, on what he had been told by the two men.

King refused, under questioning by the mayor, to deliver the original copy of the statement to the board of commissioners "unless compelled to do so" by the county prosecutor.

Williams charged the matter was a "political frame-up" and demanded to know why King had not called him (Williams) on the matter and why he had failed to take the case to the prosecutor.

King defended his action, after admitting that "it was not the sporting thing to do," that he had not consulted Wachenfeld because he believed the statement to be just "supposition" and without proof.

This action of locking up the document while word of it spread around town, Williams declared, was "trial by scandal" and declared that "King was 'scandal-ridden'."

After King refused to answer further questions "without representation," the mayor ed the attack on the grounds that "this is a matter of prime public importance."

Charges Frame-Up

"I am all through with having my reputation and my character besmirched by scandal-mongers," he announced, claiming that the matter was an "obvious frame-up."

"If Captain Leighton could organize a secret meeting that would damage my reputation, don't you think you might be the next victim?" Williams asked.

Beginning on a different tack, the mayor started to ask questions intended to prove that Leighton refused to accept the authority of Police Chief, George Spatz.

Leighton, according to Williams, reports directly to King and not to Spatz, his "immediate superior." The detective chief "has tried for years to separate the detective bureau from the police department."

A brief shouting spree occurred after Williams characterized William Gow, campaign manager for George Stewart in the 1942 election, of being a "messenger boy who contacted the representative of a prominent newspaper in the middle of the night to go to police headquarters" to get the story.

Election Order

Gow, who was in the audience, rushed to the front of the chamber to protest: "You're not the judge and jury in this case." Williams ordered Spatz to eject anyone who caused a disturbance and Gow resumed his seat.

Turning again to King, the mayor averred that "this is the second time I have confronted you with ungentlemanly conduct" and charged that Leighton had arranged for King to listen in on telephone conversations in police headquarters.

Williams also questioned Leighton, Spatz and Mertz at the meeting. He charged that the detective had attempted once more to institute charges against the chief and that Leighton, not Spatz, was given the power to select chance-men.

Leighton thought he "might have a copy of the statement in his files but refused to turn it over to the commission except on orders by King."

POSTPONE ACTION ON AUDIT VOTE

Williams Objects To Cost Of Making Duplicates Of Past Ten Years

The demand of Roy Voss that the commission place all copies of the town audit from 1934 forward in the public library was tabled "for a few weeks" Tuesday night.

Voss had submitted a resolution to the board of commissioners two weeks before and gained Mayor Williams' promise that he would introduce the measure after it had been checked by the town attorney.

Tuesday the mayor brought in a resolution providing only that future audits will be placed in the library, a move which Voss deemed inadequate.

Williams asserted that it would cost $500 to make up copies of the old audits and would require much longer than the thirty days demanded by Voss.

The latter was willing to give way on the time element but stuck to his request for the audits of the past ten years. Williams sidestepped Voss' query as to the source of the $500 estimated cost.

Voss then turned to the other commissioners and asked: "Is there any other member of this board who would be willing to introduce this resolution?"

Commissioner Noll suggested that the matter be laid over for several weeks for further study. Commissioner King agreed.

FUEL OIL SUPPLY HAVE TO LAST

Rationing Board Chairman Outlines Five Suggestions For Conserving Quotas

Too many fuel oil consumers are not aware that the remaining portion of their year's ration must last through September 30 for hot water, it was pointed out today by Herbert C. Schmutz, chairman of the Belleville-Nutley war price and rationing board.

Urging consumers to budget their fuel oil supply to last out the season, Schmutz outlined the following five suggestions for conserving fuel oil used for heating water during the summer.

1. Use hot water carefully. Don't let it run off wastefully. Use a dish pan for washing dishes; use another for rinsing, instead of letting the tap run.
2. Replace leaky washers.
3. Insulate your hot water tank.
4. Don't reach for the thermostat on cool days; use fireplaces and auxiliary wood-burning stoves, if possible.
5. Set your aquastat for the summer at a level that will supply water of an adequate heat, but which is not so scalding as to require mixing with cold water.

He reached the top of the stairs and collapsed. He was found there by his brother, Gerald, 10, and Robert Miller, 12, of 24 Minker place when they returned from school.

The Petrean club (Leonard Mc Guire, Nygard, Dillon and Candura) eked out a 585-555 win over the Social society (Westlake, Higgins, Mary, Jean and Joe Salmon).

The Knights of Columbus turned in the high team score when they shattered the Holy Name Society 740-622. Barberly, Urieola, Palumbo, Leonard and Dacey rolled up the big score; Baney, Lukowiak, Dowd, Candura and Weisthoff rolled for HNS.

Mike Dacey was high man for the night with his 180 while to Doc Brown went the honor of tossing in the first strike on the alleys.

A Safe and Inexpensive Way To Protect Your WAR BONDS

BUY WAR BONDS to protect your country! Use our inexpensive safekeeping service to protect your War Bonds.

Much more than half of the people in the United States have bought War Bonds — a very small proportion have gone to the expense of buying a Safe Deposit Box. Often Bonds are kept in bureau drawers or under the mattress.

Again, as after the Liberty Bond drives of the last World War a great number of bonds will never show up for payment — lost. Treasury Department officials estimate that about 20,000 War Bonds are being carelessly lost by owners every month.

We are offering to store fifteen bonds, or less, for you for $2.40 a year, and 10c for each additional bond. You will receive a passbook in which we make a record of the receipt of Bonds, by number. You deposit your bonds with us, just as you deposit money, subject to your order for withdrawal or deposit, during banking hours.

The low cost — some 20c a month — will make the cost of safekeeping no burden to you — considering the safety and convenience — and yet will pay us for the handling.

To avail yourself of this new service, bring in your bonds on your next visit to the bank.

OUTCALT ELECTED BELLE LEADER

Junior Achievement Firm
Selects Officers, Greets
Two New Members

Under the Junior Achievement regulation which calls for semi-annual election of officers the Belle Chemical company chose Alvin W. Outcalt for the presidency last Tuesday night at 362 Washington Avenue, base of operations of Belleville's youthful concerns.

Outcalt was recently distinguished when he was chosen as the only representative of the juniors to address the annual dinner meeting of the national Junior Achievement association in New York.

Other firm members who have taken new officerships are Robert Kanouse, secretary; Nan Chesley, treasurer; Robert Rame, sales manager; with Betty Armstrong, assistant; Ciriaco Maffia, production manager, with Irma Iannelli assistant. Business publicity and advertising manager is Robert Minkler.

Semi-annual elections permit the officers of these little companies to assume various duties and thereby determine the ones for which they are best fitted.

The company, unable to obtain priorities for the ingredients of their initial project, has turned to the manufacture of indoor flower boxes in which trellises are mounted.

Present outlet for the product is through a Washington Avenue gift shop and arrangements are being made to retail them through florist shops.

The company accepted Paul McConnell and Walter Godfrey into membership last week. A member is required to own at least one share of stock and must be proposed by a fellow member.

The Resistoflex corporation, whose general manager, Edgar S. Perls, heads the central committee of Junior Achievement here sponsors the Belle Chemical company.

Aitken Foresees Topping Quota In Red Cross War Fund

Collections in the Red Cross war fund drive were announced yesterday as $31,730 which, "with some $10,000 receivable in pledges and assurances from local industries, would result in a total of $41,800 or $300 over our quota."

The announcement was made by chapter chairman B. Thomas Aitken, who also offered his "thanks and appreciation for the hard work of all the canvassers and committee members which has made the success of the drive possible."

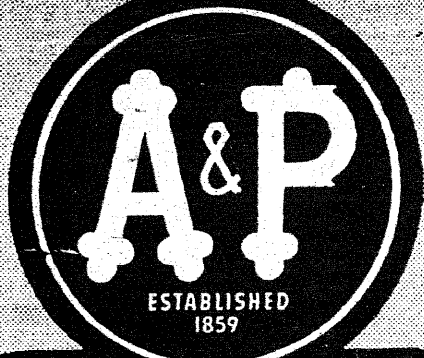

Catholic War Veterans Joan of Arc post 209, Catholic War Veterans, will hold its first regular monthly meeting tomorrow at 8:30 in the hall of Holy Family church, Nutley. Commander Harry DiGiovanna will preside.

Searching For Lost Liberator

THE COCOS ISLAND searching party resting in the jungle between stages of their arduous climb to the scene of the crash of a Liberator bomber on the island's highest peak. Capt. James A. Castner of 188 New Street and the Sixth Air Force bomber command is making contact with another section of the party by means of a walkie-talkie. The other men are Lt. Richard Vasquez and Sgt. Ernesto Montijo, both of Puerto Rico. (Army air forces photo).

Bellevillite Leads Searchers For Bomber Crash Survivors

Captain James A. Castner
Hears Rescue Mission
On Cocos Island

The charred, twisted wreckage of the Liberator bomber strewn on the rugged, almost vertical side of the mountain, offered mute testimony that there was less than a 1000 to 1 chance that any human being could have survived the crash.

Yet, the AAF policy and tradition to leave not the slightest possibility of survivors of crashes going unaided resulted in one of the most stirring accounts of hardship and daring by members of a recent expedition to Cocos Island, famous old "Island of Mystery".

One of the leaders of the party was Capt. James A. Castner whose wife, the former Adeline Kieferdorff, resides at 188 New Street with her aunt, Mrs. James Lackey.

Other Army air force men were Maj. Alfred S. Wolfe of Henderson, Texas, Lt. John F. Sanchez of Los Angeles and Cpl. Irving Glasser of Baltimore. They were accompanied by ten Puerto Ricans, members of an infantry squad from the Panama Mobile Force.

One hardship after another, each more severe than the one just surmounted, confronted the searchers at every turn.

Vertical stone cliffs with little or nothing to which to cling and where one slight misstep could mean a fall to certain death.

Torrential tropical rains together with chilling blasts of wind which kept them cold and wet night and day.

Then with success and their goal in sight, the expedition bordered on disaster when they became lost, and, after five tortuous hours picked up their elusive trail only by perseverance and determination to fulfill their mission.

Sheer Cliffs

A most uninviting vista of sheer cliffs rising abruptly from the sea to heights of from 200 to 800 feet, and an extremely steep and dense interior confronts the visitor from all sides of the mystic island where, legend says, more pirate treasure is buried than anywhere else in the world.

These were the conditions which promised no easy going for the small band of the Sixth Air Force and Panama Mobile Force officers and enlisted men who set out on the grim expedition to determine beyond all doubt if any of the bomber's crew survived or to give their comrades a proper burial.

Ironically, the Liberator was lost while searching for an overdue Navy PBM whose crew and single passenger were later picked up by a destroyer. An intensive aerial search, made more difficult by poor weather and the low clouds which hovered over the island, failed to yield a clue or sign of the missing bomber.

Then, while on a routine patrol flight, the crew of a B-24 sighted what appeared to be a patch of scorched foliage on the slope of the Highest Peak of Cocos Island. Subsequent observations and aerial photography confirmed their belief that the wreckage was that of the missing Liberator.

Fourteen Days

The search mission was ordered and the party organized. Between the Navy dock in Panama from where the searchers began the first leg of their journey, and the scorched patch on Highest Peak, lay fourteen days of struggle against a violent sea, the smoldering damp jungle, jagged and slippery volcanic slopes, gorges and ledges.

After establishing headquarters in an abandoned, delapidated shelter, and splitting into two groups, an advance party under the leadership of Castner started out the next morning with the second party following about two hours behind.

The advance party soon confirmed by walkie-talkie to party number two under Wolfe their expectation that they would have to equal the feats of the most nimble-footed Alpine climbers if they were to reach their goal and return safely. The trail was always on the ascent, with the grade never less than 60 degrees and at times as steep as 75 degrees.

To make matters more unpleasant, ants, mosquitos and other insects formed an unwelcome reception committee and it rained almost constantly during the day.

Except on the very tops of ridges, the jungle growth was a thick, enmeshed mass of vines and undergrowth through which the trail blazers had to cut their way step by step, leaving machete marks to guide the second party under Major Wolfe.

Compasses Fail

Slowed down by the heavy jungle growth, the advance group was soon joined by Maj. Wolfe's party and the snail-paced trek continued toward the general direction of Highest Peak. Because of mineral deposits on the island, there were places where the compasses, by which the party oriented itself, either failed to function completely or gave inaccurate readings.

As yet Highest Peak had not come into view due to the high mountains and trees, low clouds and generally miserable weather. These same natural obstacles made it impossible to see a scouting plane which had been requested from the Sixth Air Force Bomber Command by Capt. Castner via the walkie-talkie.

The plane was heard overhead for almost two hours but what- ever directional aids, signals and flares were given from the air to point out Highest Peak and the scene of the wreckage were totally obscured by the low clouds. Patrols were sent out and all of them returned without having sighted the peak.

It was a weary rain-soaked outfit that gathered around the small fire after supper on Sunday, the third night on the island, to map out a systematic search for the following day. Throughout the night it rained in torrents, but not even this, together with a piercing cold wind, could sink the spirits of the searchers.

Shortly after noon of the fourth day, while Maj. Wolfe was scanning the area from the top of a ridge, a slight break in the clouds permitted the sun to spotlight the peak and the scene of the wreckage long awaited by the searchers. Two-man patrols which had fanned out were called back and by the time all but two had returned, it was too late in the day to proceed.

The two patrols which did not hear the call to rejoin the group, proceeded to the wreckage. One of the patrols returned to the camp with a brief preliminary report that there were no signs of life at the scene. The other, lost in the darkness, worked its way back to the main camp at Chatham Bay.

Eager To Start

Every man was up earlier than usual the next morning, eager to start, now that their goal had been sighted. But the uncooperative forces of nature were still to be reckoned with.

Seeking a short cut in the fog-shrouded maze of jungle growth, with no sun to guide them and the compasses again "jammed" by the surrounding mineral deposits, the party stopped for rest and reorientation.

Here, for the first time on the trip, they faced a situation which could easily have dire consequences—they were lost. Their jungle rations were few and the inaccuracy of their compasses called for cool, clear-headed thinking and expert woodsmanship.

After a grueling five hours of climbing up and down ridges and steep slopes, the searchers made their way back to the original trail and finally reached their temporary camp. Although exhausted, they hastily made a meal of jungle rations and dried fruit, and planned for resumption of the trail to make up their lost time.

Undaunted by their temporary setback and spurred on by the fact that one of the patrols had reached the plane, the searchers were more determined than ever to reach the wreckage that day. Following the one azimuth established by Maj. Wolfe, the party trudged on, wading through ankle-deep mud, flooded creek beds, and scaling one last steep cliff, they at last reached the wreckage.

That the eleven-man crew of the Liberator had perished was definitely established. Brief and simple funeral services were observed.

Start Home

After the necessary survey of the wreckage and investigation for official reports, the party returned to its temporary camp for a good night's rest before the long and equally dangerous trip back. Even though a trail had been hacked through the jungle, it was the rocky cliffs and ledges which were again to test the stamina and courage of the searchers.

Arriving at the beach the next day, the party broke camp that afternoon, took a welcome freshwater bath in a nearby stream, and boarded the little "YF" for the trip home.

Castner is now attending a special course of instruction at the AAF school of applied tactics in Orlando, Fla. Upon completion of the course, the captain will return to his Caribbean base.

He is an alumnus of Washington high school, Temple university, Washington and Lee university, and Brooklyn school of law. A Newark attorney before the war, he resided in Nutley.

Mrs. Castner attended Belleville high school and lived here all her life prior to her marriage. She is employed by a Newark law firm.

Fanning Race Prejudice For Selfish Reasons

A handful of southern politicians are playing the recent anti-racial discrimination decision of the Supreme Court for every vote they can filch out of it. They are deliberately fanning the flames of racial bigotry and hatred so that another civil war, bloody or unbloody makes little difference to them, can be fought all over again. They exist on their ability to keep the pot boiling, in the canny knowledge that unrest creates interest and furthers the cause of their own political hides. What they do not publicly acknowledge that they are among the foremost enemies of democracy at work within the fiber of our national structure today. The Reds and long-haired radicals only want to tear down the Constitution; men like Bilbo actually are tearing it down.

What the Supreme Court said in effect was that the fourteenth amendment still applies today, three-quarters of a century after it was written into the Constitution. In all these years it was the first real crack at the individuals who have persistently refused the right of the Negro to vote and to enjoy the other blessings of American life. The reasons behind the southern fight to prevent equality are many and varied, but the principal one is pride. They once owned these men body and soul and it rankles to have them granted equal opportunities to live. On the other hand stupid downers tried to shove the decision down their throats in one gigantic gulp and they refused to swallow it. Thirdly, a small minority of Negroes hurt their own cause by letting their sudden freedom run away with them at first. Another reason is cheap labor: as long as you treat Negroes as sub-human, you don't have to pay them so much.

Time should heal these wounds and normally would have; but certain individuals have found it expedient to keep that fire burning through the years for their own selfish political or economic reasons. Now it is shameful to realize that in this day, when America — and its rebels and its damnyankees — are fighting shoulder to shoulder to establish the right of man to freedom, men like these southern politicians have the effrontery to stand up publicly and say — nay, shout — that there are men in their own country who have no right to that freedom and equality. How can the slave peoples of Europe look with hope to shabby politicians like them?

Those individuals have little or no understanding of the vast interracial program which has gone on during the past decade and longer. The program calls for equality of education, of earning power, of social privileges and responsibilities. It does not call for comingling of the races any more than it urges mixture of whites and yellows and redmen, for that would lead to race deterioration. While the whites have been trying to educate the members of their race, great Negro leaders have been taught to make haste slowly, to take it easy in attempting to gain their objectives. The Negroes who think realize that America is primarily a white society and they must learn to take their place in it, not to try to convert it to their standards; that they must conform the same as whites are expected to abide by the rules of the society in which they live.

Physiologically there is no scientific basis for the notion that Negroes are an inferior race. Their blood is precisely the same. Intellectually they are equal except for the fact that real education has been denied them in many sections of the country. When people sit down to discuss the "Negro problem" they might also give some thought to the fact that there is also a "white problem." If we have any secret yearning to think of ourselves as a master race, we have only to pick up a newspaper to see that nobody is giving odds on master races these days.

Infantry On Land, Fliers In The Air

Suddenly the public seems to have realized the value of the footslogging infantryman in the real fighting of the war and of necessity in a lot of shallow minds the conclusion is reached that the air force is not as valuable as previously thought. Of such stuff are commentators made. There are so many of them trying to make a living out of spouting on the ether waves and in the columns of newspapers and magazines that they are hard put to be different. When one of them starts a new idea it spreads through the parasitic host like wildfire.

The fundamental idea of modern war seems to have been lost somewhere in the shuffle and that is the warfare today is a matter of solid teamwork. The Germans proved it in their early victories back in the days when they had their lesser neighbors and the rest of the world dazzled by their display of military prowess. They early learned the secret of utmost and continuous cooperation among the various branches of their armed forces, of using each arm for a particular use and tying it in with the effort of the whole body.

To some extent the Allies have caught onto the idea and have enlarged on it. When Allied teamwork has been present the forces of democracy have been well-nigh unbeatable. It is only in the minds of the commentators and their gullible fans that the impression has existed that each of the branches is fighting for individual supremacy. When Rommel was being chased across North Africa they would have had us believe that armored troops were going to win the war for us. When a handful of Italians at Pantelleria surrendered after a few days of incessant aerial bombing, air power was the fair-haired knight in shining armor. From that time on they hammered away at our ears to impress on us the importance of air power and air power alone.

Practically all of the load of the Pacific war they have placed on the shoulders of the Navy. When it is suddenly learned that you can't rout the enemy out of the jungle with a battleship, they will probably tell us that our Navy is inadequate to do the job alone just as they are now dinning into us the "fact" that a lot of bombers four miles in the air were unable to capture and hold the town of Cassino. Next they will be blaming the quartermaster for not destroying Hitler's factories.

The air force has its job to do in this war, the infantry has its. True, the former has received most of the publicity for several years but that can be chalked up to the shallow thinking of the columnists and commentators who chose to do it that way. Army and Navy men have been telling the public for generations and ever since this war began that foot soldiers alone can take and hold ground. Airmen can control the skies, bluejackets can rule the seas; but the so-called "common" soldier, the poor sucker who does it on foot, is the man who has always been depended upon to make the gains in his element. A drastic weeding out of our overgrown crop of commentators would probably make for better harvesting in our victory garden.

Community Service Bureau Clients Are Appreciative

by MRS. JULIA O. REINER
Executive Secretary, Community Service Bureau

Social work is not easy to publicize because of the involvement of particular families whose confidences must be guarded. Of ethical necessity the clients of a social agency must remain anonymous, for it is understood at the outset that the personal problems discussed at the Community Service Bureau are held in strictest confidence.

The agency has ways of measuring its successes and failures in rendering service, but it is heartwarming when those who have received some of these more or less tangible services go out of their way to express appreciation.

One hot day last July we encountered a former client, a woman with severe handicaps, working busily and happily in a local factory.

Months previously we had helped her to better understand her personal difficulties and limitations and, incidentally, we also helped her financially over a hard spot.

Her greeting was warm and friendly and she insisted that she wanted to make a contribution to the agency, which she succeeded in doing before we could leave.

A mother who last year consulted us about her boy, who was failing badly in school, stopped in the office at 338 Washington avenue last month to report progress.

She had been able to put into practice the suggestions which we had made after a study of the particular situation, with the result that her boy is happy, acceptable and doing much better work in another school.

This mother wanted us to know that she appreciated the individual help we had given her and mentioned her participation in the Community War Fund campaign in which she had been an active worker.

Physical Ailment

A former client who came to us depressed and discouraged because of a serious physical ailment was helped to get specialized medical care. Within a year he made far better recovery than the hospital had predicted and at the same time his outlook on life had changed from pessimism to a more normal and happy viewpoint.

This man has continued to express appreciation of the personal recognition of his needs which he received at the Bureau. He has contributed his help in redecorating the offices and periodically continues to offer his services. He has also worked on Community Chest drives.

When chronic illness creates changes in the family structure, there necessarily follows the need to understand and readjust to changed living arrangements. People are most appreciative of the services of the Bureau in relation to such problems.

Last Illness

A letter received today from the daughter of an elderly woman, whom we had known in her last illness, contained a substantial gift and: "My father asked me to send you this money."

"It isn't much. I wish it could be more, for you people have been very nice to us and mother."

These services are social work in action and it is interesting to note in this connection that social work has been declared an essential occupation by the War Manpower commission.

To do the job of social work takes courage, tolerance, a love of fellow man, and a knowledge of the inner working of his mind. This requires more than a genuine liking of people; this son, Williams, King, Gerard for commission.

er The WOMAN'S DESK

by Peggy Patterson

We cannot help reverting to a caution which was expressed here at the opening of the war and the influx of parents into defense employment; the need for tact and restraint in discussing home arrangements in the presence of children, no matter how young. The situation becomes acute again, and much more significant, as mothers of young children try to adjust their living schedule to the departure of their husbands into military service.

It seems to us, and that was the main plank in our personal platform for the founding of a day nursery here, that it is worth any sacrifice to disturb as little as possible the normal setting in which a child should develop even though his father must go to war and his mother into the business or industrial world.

We find ourselves in accord with the opinion recently expressed by leading child psychologists who go so far as to ask mothers to leave their absent husbands' paraphernalia in sight—some of his clothes, pipes, the materials which signify his favorite hobby.

Many fathers will leave their little sons at the very age when these children first seriously need the presence of a man to emulate and a man's companionship in play time/hours. This lack is disturbing enough to them without suddenly finding themselves in a new and smaller home—a purely feminine, makeshift establishment in many cases; or if doubt-ling up, a home crowded with adults.

We have always felt preferable the daily session in a nursery where part of the association would be with other little boys, if the child in question is a boy, and where there would be return at night to the familiar scene which would make daddy's absence seem more like a temporary affair even to the littlest tot.

Casual Change

Whatever the change—let it be casual. And we can all help this problem which seems to be entirely a matter for the individual parent to decide, by never discussing it with a mother in the presence of her children and by attempting to dissuade her if over-anxiety leads her into opening the subject.

The next time you are involved in such a discussion, watch for the tell-tale signs in the child present: widening eyes, the barely perceptible frown, restlessness and, usually, some mention of "home" or the suggestion to his parent that they return there now.

We all have a job to do insofar as it is possible to help these mothers keep their children in their own homes. We have a minor job, but one that is terribly important, to try and persuade these mothers to make their arrangements when the children are not present.

Servicemen's Sons

On the same all-important subject, if you have a husband or father with leisure time see if you can't get him to give a little time each week to the young sons of a relative or friends in service.

A short session with ball and bat, a bit of victory gardening in the back yard, a visit to a real "he-man" movie will do the trick and make the youngster know that it's still a man's world.

For the older-man-little-tot combination, sharing a radio program or a walk around the block will serve the same purpose. Grandmothers, aunts and best friends, put your husbands to work on this little project and watch a mother's spirits soar.

Helping The Red Cross

A special way of aiding the Red Cross, exclusively a woman's way, has been brought to our attention for the fourth consecutive year by the National Needlecraft bureau. There are many of us who wouldn't sew for ourselves who must surely often visualize the plight of scantily clad war sufferers. We can directly aid them by contributing home-sewn garments to that merciful agency which never has enough to go around.

Last year more than a million garments were furnished the Red Cross by American women. They are the best kind of gift to that harassed body since the sewer furnishes her own material and pattern and Red Cross knows nothing of the gift until it arrives.

As the demand for infants' and small children's clothes are heaviest (sizes 2 to 4 most desired), there is a good opportunity to use materials on hand if you are experienced enough to cut a tot's garment out of one of your own "ripped up" ones. If not, purchase sturdy, washable fabrics for dresses or underwear and heavier cloth for children's outer garments.

Patterns Available

The Needlecraft bureau has prepared a list of patterns which are effective and yet simple to cut and sew. A request to the office of this newspaper will bring you one. Or choose your own, remembering that simplicity and ease of fastening count most in small children's clothing. Undergarments, night clothes and dresses for adults are also needed.

If you're not an expert sewer you'll never have a finer opportunity to learn. Buy a pattern for a little girl's frock—plain, mind you, with no tucking, pleating or frilling—and rip up that cotton housecoat or other voluminous garment you may have contemplated turning into dust.

Decorate the little gown with an appliqued flower or fruit if the material is in solid color and just imagine what it will do for a destitute, dark-eyed war child.

To "little women" as well as big a whole new world opens up when there's a delicious new garment to slip into—a new texture to feel, a new color to light dreams.

Child Care No Problem for RCA Worker

Mrs. Helen Ryan, war worker at the RCA plant in Harrison, has neatly solved the problem of caring for her small children while she is on her job at the plant. Both Mrs. Ryan and her sister-in-law wanted to get war jobs, but each of them also had two children to tend. When they found that they could work on different shifts at the RCA plant, they decided to share a house for the duration. Now one of them is always at home with the children.

Sandwich Filling With A Punch

Meat is the favorite sandwich filling; and with a dirth of tempting slices any meat-flavored filling becomes an asset in the lunch box or at table. Especially nourishing for children and adults is a spread made with liver.

Chopped Liver Spread

$\frac{1}{2}$ pound liver, 3 hard cooked eggs, $\frac{1}{2}$ cup finely chopped celery, salt and pepper to season, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup finely chopped onion, Mayonnaise.

Simmer liver in water until tender, drain and chop fine in chopping bowl or put through food grinder with fine knife. Add celery, onion and finely diced hard cooked eggs. Season and combine with enough mayonnaise or tart salad dressing to moisten. Chill thoroughly.

Here's one suggestion for tastily disposing of the remains of your Easter ham!

Ham And Noodle Casserole
 $\frac{1}{2}$ pound ham, 1 cup sliced stuffed olives, 4 tablespoons flour, 1 cup cooked vegetable, 2 cups broken egg tables, noodles, 1/3 cup grated cheese, 1 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon pepper.

Dice the leftover ham (about 1 1/4 cups) into a hot frying pan and brown for 10 or 15 minutes; add flour and stir until each piece is coated; add milk slowly stirring constantly until thick and smooth.

Cook noodles eight to ten minutes in rapidly boiling salted water, drain and add to ham mixture with olives and seasoning. Carrots, peas, mushrooms, beans, asparagus or corn are suggested for use as the vegetable in this recipe. Mix well and place in individual casseroles or one large one.

Sprinkle tops with grated cheese and bake in a hot oven (400 degrees) for 20 minutes.

YOUR VICTORY GARDEN

Insects And Their Control

By Dr. Charles H. Connors
College of Agriculture Rutgers University

The frequent rains during the past few weeks have been a blessing, for we need rain badly. However, these rains have kept the soil so cool and wet that in many sections of New Jersey it has not been possible to dig. While waiting to prepare the soil, it would be well to give some thought to protecting the garden from the insects which will come later on. We may be sure that such pests as cutworms, flea beetles, Mexican bean beetles, and other insects, will be present to help add to our work.

If we understand something of the life history of insects, advises Dr. Bailey B. Pepper, Acting Entomologist of the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station, we may know the reason for using a particular kind of spray at a particular time.

In the control of insects we try to hit them at a time when they are in the stage when they can be most easily killed. This is when they are feeding most voraciously or when their bodies are softest.

Two Types Of Insects

The life history of insects falls into two general types. One is incomplete metamorphosis, in which the insect which hatches from the egg is like, or very similar to, the adult. An example is the grasshopper, in which the only difference between the nymph and the adult is size and absence of wings. The aphid or plant louse is another example, although the aphid hatched from the egg may also give birth to young alive, so that if one aphid is present today, here may be 20, 30 or 40 tomorrow.

The other type, known as complete metamorphosis, may be represented by the cabbage worm. From the egg hatches a larva or caterpillar, a totally different looking individual from the adult. This larva feeds awhile on foliage, then surrounds itself with a case called a chrysalis or cocoon where it changes to a pupa and later emerges as a butterfly.

This type of metamorphosis is common to all moths and butterflies, many of which do no feeding at all except perhaps to take in moisture. The mission in life of these adults is to lay eggs to produce more larva which eat. Most of the hard-shelled beetles undergo complete metamorphosis, and usually, as in the Mexican bean beetle and the Japanese beetle, both the larva and the adult feed.

Feeding Methods

Insects fall into three classes according to their method of feeding, and control measures are largely upon this act.

First there are those insects which bite off, chew and swallow a portion of plant tissue. They chew by a sideways motion of the jaws instead of the up and down motion humans use. Their presence is known when holes are seen in the leaves.

To control these insects, apply a spray or dust of some material that will position them through the stomach, as lead arsenate or calcium arsenate, and for some, rotenone, pyrethrum or derris, which are poisonous in the stomachs of some insects.

The second class consists of the sucking insects. These, by means of lancet drillers, like a mosquito, pierce the upper layer of a leaf, thrust in a tube and suck out the plant juice. The aphids, leafhoppers and plant bugs are examples. No amount of stomach poison applied to the surface of a leaf will injure these insects to any extent, so application of the correct poison, called a contact insecticide, must be made when the insect is present.

Breathe Through Body

An insect breathes through holes in the sides of its body. Nicotine sulphate, pyrethrum, derris or rotenone applied to the insects in such a way as to cover them, will enter the breathing pores, and so carried into the "blood," which fills the whole body cavity. The poisonous material first paralyzes, then kills the insects.

The third feeding type is represented by the thrips and red spider mites. The mouth parts of these insects are very small.

First they chafe off the upper layer of plant tissue. Sometimes they swallow this and so some of them may be killed by stomach poisons if the insecticide is finely enough divided.

They get most of their food, however, by sucking it from the exposed, ruptured plant cells. With this type of insects, a contact insecticide is usually more effective.

Dust Or Spray

Insecticides are applied either in the form of a dust (dry) or in solution or suspension as a spray. The dry dust may be applied at any time of the day and will usually be more effective in the small garden than a liquid spray.

The liquid application or spray is most effective when it is broken up into a mist. The small hand sprayers generally do not have enough pressure to do this as effectively as larger sprayers.

For effective control, the plant parts infested must be covered, and in the case of sucking insects, the poison will be toxic only if the insects are coated. Gardeners should remember that insects of work on the lower surface of the leaves.

Control of insects should start at their first appearance. The proper kind of poison must be selected, and it must be applied to the part of the plant where the insect is feeding. It is a good plan to cover the whole plant, stem, branches and both sides of the leaves.

NEXT WEEK: Cultivation and Weed Control.

Engineers Hear Kidde Official

Speaking on production control during the period of large wartime, volume Lundegran covered questions of records, new routines and short cuts by which bottlenecks and shutdowns can be prevented, and shipping commitments on schedule.

Questions, Answers About the WAVES
Do WAVES get a regulation haircut when they arrive at the training school?
No. Members of the WAVES determine for themselves the style of hair-do they want. The only regulation is that the hair shall not cover the coat collar.
Where is a girl sent after enlisting in the WAVES?
She goes to recruit school in New York City, for six weeks' indoctrination. Some WAVES are assigned to duty stations as soon as they complete this basic training. Others are sent to schools in Georgia, Florida, New Jersey, Ohio, Indiana, Oklahoma or other places for specialized training.
Does the Navy provide transportation to the training school?
Yes, also subsistence en route.
How much civilian clothing should be taken to the training station?
Enough for a week or two. As underwear, sleeping garments and stockings are not issued by the Navy, enough of these items should be packed to provide for a girl's needs until she wishes to replenish her supply.
Young women interested in joining the WAVES should write or call the Navy Recruiting Station or Office of Naval Officer Procurement for a new booklet, "The Story of You in Navy Blue."
