State finds radioactive traces in well

by Susan B. Allen
News Editor

SOUTH BRUNSWICK — A homeowner on the Monroe/South Brunswick border listened as a neighbor swept his house with a geiger counter. The ticking and crackling seemed to show a sudden surge as they neared the water pipes. He became very worried.

The New Jersey Attorney General's Office had already confirmed his suspicion that an unsafe level of radiation, a level considered "above" state standards for potable water, had been found in his well. On the basis of its first testing done in March, the Environmental Protection Section of the State Law Division, had grudgingly reported by telephone to the homeowner, Frank Kaler, that the reading of 35 picocuries per liter of gross Alpha taken from his well was more than double the state standard set at 15 picocuries.

The report by telephone also informed Mr. Kaler that the level of Radium 226 found in his well was eight; federal standards call five a safe level. State officials verified the results to The Press.

But when Mr. Kaler later asked for printed copies of the results, he was reportedly told, "We'll send them if we can find them."

THE SOUTH BRUNSWICK resident whose 1975 suit against the Jones Industrial Service (JIS) Landfill brought state and local attention to the contaminated ground water conditions existing in and around the dump, has not used his well for drinking purposes since 1975 when amounts of hazardous chemicals such as benzene, chloroform, touluene, carbontetrachloride, styrene and TCE were discovered.

According to Dr. Peter Montague, a research environmental analyst in the Energy and Environment Program at Princeton University, there is reason for Mr. Kaler to be concerned about these new contaminants.

"The background level for Radium 226 for that portion of Middlesex County," he said, quoting from a federal report, "is 0.29 picocuries. What Mr. Kaler has in his well is 27 times higher than background level. You would expect that kind of concentration from barrels buried in a landfill, for example."

In 1975 Mr. Kaler had observed and photographed a deposit of 55-gallon drums, some painted bright yellow, which he feared might be radioactive. He submitted those pictures to the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection.

"The DEP told me there was no possibility those drums could have contained radioactive materials," Mr. Kaler said. "Then they said there was no way to check because they didn't have a geiger counter." (When Mr. Kaler contacted George Tyler, director of the DEP, this past Monday, Mr. Tyler denied any knowledge of such a statement. "Of course, we have a geiger counter," he reportedly told Mr. Kaler.)

The DEP lost his photos of the suspected drums. Then they lost the physical samples he collected at the landfill site and submitted to the DEP for analysis, Mr. Kaler says. Other reports were misplaced.

Then on July 20, not having received written results from the March testing for radiation done by the DEP, Mr. Kaler made a phone call to John M. Van Dalen, Deputy Attorney General, who quoted him the 35 picocuries figure, an amount several radiation specialists concede is "a little high, but nothing to worry about."

WHEN HE RECEIVED the letter from the DEP dated July 24, purported to contain those results, Mr. Kaler instead found this information: "...there does not appear to be a problem with radiation, at least as far as gross Alpha and gross Beta counts indicate. The values all fall below the safe drinking water standards of 15 for gross Alpha and 50 for gross Beta, except for a gross Alpha of 18 obtained one of the three times that your sample was analyzed."

The level of radiation had decreased to half its original level, a not uncommon occurrence, according to state radiation physicist John Feeney. Seasonal conditions could have affected the readings since they were taken in both March and June, he said.

"The point is," Mr. Kaler protested, "they (DEP) took two tests and both showed an unsafe level of radiation for potable water standards. I wonder what those samples showed the other times? Did they just pick the figure they wanted? And how do they set those standards anyway?"

While state radiation specialists are unanimous in their assurance that the presence of such a small amount of gross Alpha reported by the DEP in these samples is not a threat to health, it is still considered slightly high for the level of background radiation normally occurring in this section of New Jersey.

But Physicist Feeney told The Press that individual well analyses often showed higher concentrations depending on the geology of an area. "Besides, these state radiation standards were developed for community water supplies," he said. "We have no standards for testing individual wells."

IF THE RADIATION in Mr. Kaler's well, and in several other Docks Corner-Cranbury-South River Road wells the DEP acknowledges they tested but would not identify specifically, is naturally caused, the amount of 35 or 18 picocuries is much too small for concern, said Rutgers Radiation Department Director, Dr. Allen Appleby. "I wouldn't be concerned with drinking water that had five times those amounts. The only reason to be concerned would be if the radiation is not natural, but coming from radioactive waste products located nearby."

Identifying the origin of Alpha particles is an easy process, said Rutgers Radiation Health Director Dan Howell. The analyzing process is very expensive, but the results would show the source of any radiation, he said.

Commenting on the level of radiation in Mr. Kaler's well, and assuming it to be naturally caused, Dr. Howell stated that it was "certainly too low to cause measurable biological effects. In lots of health spas, there are even 1,000 picocuries per liter and people drink it all the time," the specialist commented. "I would not be concerned. The amount wouldn't bother me, unless it could be attributed to other than natural radiation."

Mr. Kaler's fears, however, can not entirely be put to rest. He says he feels guilty watching children play in sprinklers nearby or thinking of people taking showers and ingesting the water vapor, if the radiation is not naturally caused. And he has heard it rumored that a pharmaceutical firm in 1975 allegedly "had to unload" radioactive material in the area. "I feel I should be like Paul Revere, riding around the countryside warning people," Mr. Kaler said, "but I just don't know what the real danger is."

THE DEP, ACCORDING to spokesman John Feeney, does not intend to do any more testing of local wells or of the Kaler well specifically. "Before we had radioactive detectors, that area was radioactive," Dr. Feeney said. "If people hadn't found out about it, they wouldn't be concerned. It was around long before we were born and it will be here long after we go. It hasn't affected us drastically and it could even have caused some mutations we enjoy now."

Until there is direct evidence of dumping of radioactive waste or a high rate of cancer cases in the area, the DEP would not become involved,

Kassabs opposed to ruling

Years of work knocked down by federal court

By Susan B. Allen
News Editor

CLEARBROOK — Just a little less than a year ago, Fred and Mildred Kassab were granting interviews to the national media and receiving congratulations from all over the United States. "Justice prevails," was the slogan of the hour.

With a tenacity that few seemed to possess, this couple had fought for seven years to convict their son-in-law, Green Beret doctor, Jeffrey MacDonald, of murdering their daughter Colette and their grandchildren. The courts had finally upheld them. The Kassabs were jubilant.

But Wednesday morning the jubilation turned to outrage. The federal appeals court in Richmond, Va. reversed the murder convictions of Dr. MacDonald in the 1970 slayings of his wife and two daughters, saying that MacDonald's right to a speedy trial had been violated.

AGAIN THE NATIONAL media converged on the quiet Kassab residence. Dan Rather reported a 1975 quote from Fred Kassab on the Wednesday CBS News: "If the courts won't administer justice, I will," he quoted Mr. Kassab as saying.

"But he didn't say I said that in 1975," the former British Intelligence Officer said. "AP really created a small havoc with that remark. I wish they'd dated it."

Other calls came in from around the country all day Wednesday. A reporter broke the news at 9:30 in the morning, "having been leaked the information by MacDonald's lawyer," Mr. Kassab said. "Another man called to offer me $25 for my expenses. A woman called from Seattle,

Council to buy lights?

by Bill Baggitt
Special Writer

MONROE — The Township Council will consider an ordinance which will provide the funds to light streets and roads not owned by the township at its meeting on Monday night.

The council also will consider an ordinance which proposes to prohibit the transportation of toxic waste on township roads and highways without a special permit.

Councilman John Klink went on record as being opposed to the ordinance, and plans to test its constitutionality in court. Mr. Klink feels that since the public will be denied use of streets in Rossmoor and Clearbrook, public funds should not be spent to construct street lights there.

Rossmoor and Clearbrook are communities that restrict public traffic to reduce hazards and noise. Despite Mr. Klink's dissent, the ordinance is expected to be approved by the council, but its implementation will rest on the court's decision.

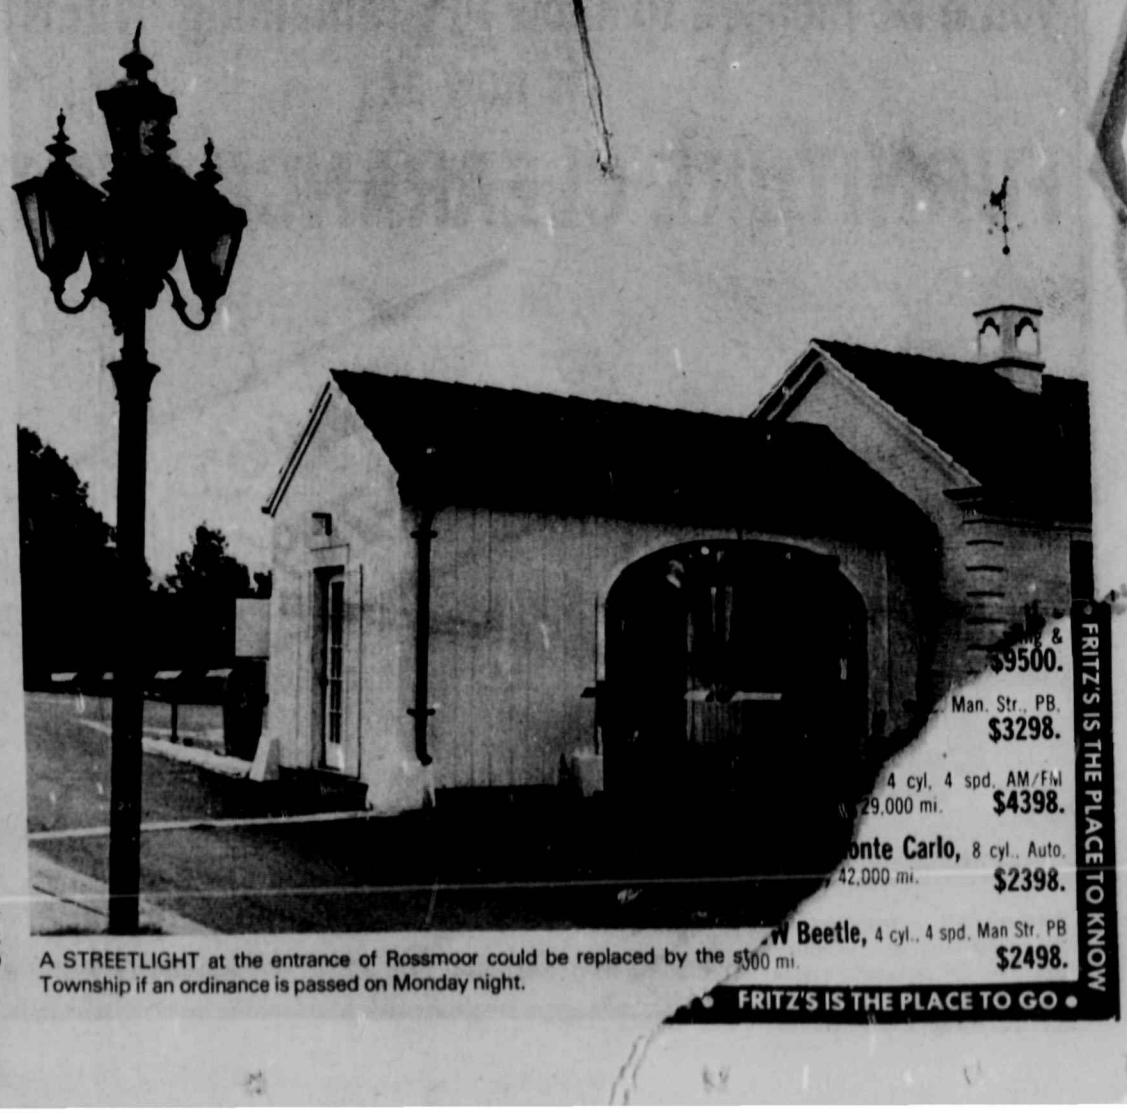

The restriction of vehicles that transport hazardous materials is the only legislation that municipalities can enact regarding the disposal of hazardous waste. The municipality's powers have been preempted by the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

Mayor Peter Garabaldi and Council President Fred Brewer expressed their concern over their ability to prohibit the disposal of toxic waste in Monroe Township in light of Senate Bill 1300.

The bill, sponsored by Senator Frank Dodd, calls for the establishment of a corporation designed to designate dump sights and design treatment plants in the Delaware Basin. Because of the low levels of development and population density, and the location of Monroe's primary aquifer, the township has been designated as a suitable site.

Councilman Klink and Mayor Garabaldi expressed the opinion that the council should "take the DEP to

Sewer scheduled is revealed

MONROE — If the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency issues a FONSI on Aug. 18, the Monroe Utilities Authority could be digging the much-heralded Manalapan Brook Sewer Trunkline by November.

Those cheering words came from MUA chairman Cary Mintz, who explained that a FONSI refers to a "Finding of No Significant Impact" related to environmental concerns. Mr. Mintz said he does not anticipate that there will be any problems.

The Manalapan Brook project, which has been in the planning stages for 10 years, was finally given approval by the federal EPA and the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection in July, after lengthy and involved negotiations between municipalities who would be sharing the line, and the government agencies supplying the lion's share of the funding.

THE SCHEDULE for Phase I of the project was received last week by the MUA, and its immediate deadlines left the Monroe group "very surprised," according to Mr. Mintz. "We expected them (the EPA and DEP) to take another two years to work out Phase 5 of the plan," the pleased chairman commented. "It's a much tighter schedule than we anticipated."

The plan approved by the DEP and the EPA, calls for the installation of sewers in Jamesburg and Helmetta and the Monroe Outcalt section, and the piping of all sewerage through the Middlesex County Sewerage Authority. An additional 1,500 new homes could be tied in once the line is completed, Mr. Mintz said.

The MUA will be required to submit its revised application by Aug. 1, at which point the DEP will perform a complete review of plans and specifications. After further review by the EPA which is scheduled for completion on Aug. 8, the MUA must submit all Phase I documents and revisions in "an approvable form," pursuant to DEP certification by Aug. 15 and the EPA's issuance of the FONSI by Aug. 18.

MR. MINTZ SAID that the grant allocation should be received within the month after the EPA approval, "so we're setting up our advertising for bidding Sept. 1," he announced. Money should be available Sept. 18.

The cost of the project is estimated at $15 million and the federal participation will cover 75 percent of the eligible costs. "That does not mean 75 percent of all costs, however," said William Moran, MUA attorney. "The actual amount usually works out to be about two-thirds of the total when you consider only the eligible costs."

Jamesburg man facing charges following scuffle

JAMESBURG — A motorist and a policeman were each treated and released from a local hospital following a scuffle last Thursday.

Charged with assault and battery and resisting arrest was Anthony Pirre, 22, of 26 Dayton Road.

According to police, officer Henry Kowaleski was issuing Mr. Pirre a warning for a parking violation, when the motorist began fighting with the officer.

In the altercation, Ptl. Kowaleski fell to the ground, sustaining a hairline fracture to an ankle. The incident occurred at 11:10 p.m. at the intersection of West Railroad and Church Streets.

Police officials said they had no knowledge of any traffic summons issued to Mr. Pirre.

Officer Kowaleski refused to comment on the incident, when reached at his home Wednesday, except to say he would be returning to work by the end of the week.

"I put out my last cigarette 2 years ago. Now I'm helping others do the same."

"I attended the first American Cancer Society stop-smoking clinic for Blue Cross-Blue Shield employees and became a staunch ex-smoker. Then I was asked to continue classes at our company. It's one of the best things I ever did. It's really working—and I'm delighted."

We wish every company had an employee like Anne Morham. Anne offers a stop-smoking presentation based on the American Cancer Society program. Blue Cross and Blue Shield offer this program to companies because helping people to stay healthy is a major priority. And no one can deny: Cigarettes are dangerous to your health.

Cigarette smokers have 70% more heart attacks than non-smokers. More strokes. An inordinate share of cancer of the lung, larynx, esophagus, mouth and bladder... not to mention emphysema and chronic bronchitis. Smokers die younger than non-smokers. And women who smoke are far more likely to have stillborn or premature babies.

Grim as it all sounds, there's hope. After ten years, death rates of ex-cigarette smokers from all causes are almost the same as those for people who never smoked.

What can you do about it? If you're an employee, ask your employer about starting a stop-smoking program. If your company is enrolled with Blue Cross-Blue Shield, consider the benefits of having us put on a stop-smoking program for your benefits for you and your people.

For more information on stop-smoking programs, contact: Anne Morham (201) 456-2507 or write to her at Blue Cross and Blue Shield of New Jersey, 33 Washington St., Newark, N.J. 07102.

FRITZ'S IS THE PLACE TO KNOW
FRITZ'S IS THE PLACE TO GO

Bill on toxic waste poses great dangers

The hearings currently underway in Trenton on state Senate Bill 1300 will soon show us whether or not those of us who live in New Jersey have taken the time to learn an important lesson.

The bill proposes the creation of a semi-public authority which will be responsible for disposing of toxic wastes in the state. This authority could have the power to choose a site for a toxic waste dump and to take over the site without input from the local municipality or its residents. This discouraging possibility will undoubtedly meet with loud protests from environmentalists and public interest groups during the hearings which continue on July 30 in the Senate Majority Conference Room in the State House.

An unhappy part of this process was uncovered in the past two weeks when it was announced that the prime areas for the location of a site to bury toxic wastes would be in the clay of East Windsor and its surrounding townships. Local residents have reacted vocally, and properly, to alert state officials of their displeasure that a toxic waste site could be located in a township still growing as a residential community.

New Jersey has one of the country's worst records when it comes to the disposal of toxic wastes. The Chemical Control Corp.'s disaster in Elizabeth, the Kinn-buc landfill in Edison, the Jackson Township municipal landfill and even the emergence of contaminated wells in South Brunswick and Montgomery Townships have served notice that we in this state have not learned how to control the disposal of harmful materials.

The state's legislators will show us soon whether or not they have learned a lesson from these past problems. Their decision on Senate Bill 1300 will show us whether or not they have learned that what we do today will have a long term effect on the quality of life for our future and that of our children.

If the legislators see fit to create an authority to handle these wastes — and this could be the best solution — let them create a working and self-supporting corporation. Let this corporation construct and operate a series of plants which will fully dispose of the chemical miscreants. Let the state's chemical corporations which produce the waste use these plants as the sole alternative for disposal of their unwanted byproducts. Also the legislators should take care to keep companies from other states from using the facilities and also that New Jersey companies do not take a short cut by dumping their wastes in other states.

The next weeks may tell us if our legislators can learn a simple lesson — or not.

Property maintenance: Keep government out

At first blush the suggestion that municipalities adopt home maintenance codes appears preposterous. But after some thought you find you really can't hate the Montgomery Township man who recently asked his Township Committee to consider such an ordinance.

In this specific case the man said a neighbor's failure to keep the outside of her home in good repair or to even paint the house had reduced the value of his home by $15,000 to $20,000.

Of course all the libertarians in our area will spring to the woman's defense — that government which governs least governs best. (One always wonders how their views would hold up if they lived next door to the unpainted home.)

On the other hand, the very conservative among us might well welcome a property maintenance code, arguing that their property rights were being eroded.

But enough of labels. It is a problem encountered in just about every community at some time or another. Consider the property owner who has worked hard and spent a great deal of money to keep his home in good condition and finds upon attempting to sell it that the rundown condition of his neighbor's home makes his place considerably less salable — except at a reduced figure.

But consider also the alternative — the creation of a property maintenance code. Such codes could not be the same as health codes — poor plumbing, harboring of vermin etc. — very objective criteria to judge. Maintenance codes would lie very much in the subjective — what constitutes an eyesore, for example.

If beauty is in the eye of the beholder, isn't also ugliness? All of us have seen homes with natural shake sidings. Many of them weather poorly, turning black and to some eyes, unsightly. Under a maintenance code, the owner of the darkened shakes could be required to paint them — even if they are not ugly to his eye.

Board answers Mrs. Charleroy

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following letter is presented with the approval of the Cranbury Board of Education. Board member Nick Stromtsos wished to record his objection to its publication.

To The Editor:

This letter is directed to address the Carol Charleroy case. It is not only as a response to Mrs. Charleroy's recently published letter, but also, and perhaps significantly more so, as a means of communicating to the people of Cranbury what is intended to be an accurate and comprehensive delineation of the issues and facts.

On May 24, 1979, Mrs. Carol Charleroy requested a leave without pay to provide child care for her infant during the school year 1979-80. It must be emphasized that the leave request was not for the usual pregnancy disability absence from job duties related to the impending birth of her child and the period immediately thereafter. It was stated in terms of child-care leave for a period in excess of a year.

Mrs. Charleroy based her request on a provision in the teacher's union-board agreement current at that time, under Article XVI (Temporary Leaves of Absence): "Other leaves of absence with pay may be granted by the board for good cause." The context of this provision, however, was a listing of instances when a teacher might be allowed the opportunity to take off a few days or a few weeks at most. The very fact that the leave would be approved with pay in itself suggests that limitation of time was intrinsic to this provision.

At the Board of Education meeting held on June 13, 1979, Mrs. Charleroy's request was denied, in the aftermath of the Personnel Committee's recommendation to that effect. In a letter dated June 19, wherein Mr. Charles Argento, Administrative Principal, notified Mrs. Charleroy of the board's decision, it was explained that the reasons for denial were threefold: "(1) the long-term leave request was made under the contract provision, Temporary Leaves of Absence (Article 16), which treats short-term day leaves; (2) the teacher-board contract makes no reference to long-term child-care leave; and (3) the concept of child-care leave is an item currently being discussed in teacher-board negotiations." It was the last cited reason which was most significant, since granting such a leave at a time when it was an item being negotiated would obviously have seriously compromised the issue as a negotiable item. This had been orally stated, in fact, by one of the board members at the time of the negative vote at the public meeting.

On July 19, 1979, Mrs. Charleroy filed a petition of appeal regarding the board's decision with the Commissioner of Education.

On August 22, 1979, Mrs. Charleroy submitted a note from a physician indicating that she "should not return to work until late November or early December. She is still run down since delivering a baby in the early summer." The teacher proceeded to utilize all of her accumulated sick days with pay up to December 21, 1979. In the middle of this sick leave, Mrs. Charleroy submitted a new request for a "maternity/child rearing leave of absence" from January 1 to June 30, 1980. Since this was still an item under negotiation with the teacher's union, the board responded negatively for the same reason as previously stated.

On November 28, 1979, the Administrative Principal notified Mrs. Charleroy that her accumulated sick leave credit would be expended shortly, and that she should advise him regarding her intentions to return. The understanding of the school administrator, expressed in this correspondence, was that failure to resume her position would constitute a relinquishing of tenure. Mrs. Charleroy filed a petition through her attorney for a restraining order on this issue, but this was denied. A request was then submitted to allow use of four personal days with pay for family sickness, specifically Jan. 3, 4, 7 and 8. Mrs. Charleroy was subsequently informed that she would not receive pay for the days in question, since she had never reported to her work assignment or performed her job duties during the school year. Mrs. Charleroy later filed a grievance on this matter.

The best estimate is that Mrs. Charleroy was paid in excess of $9,000 for the period she claimed as sick leave from September, 1979 to January, 1980.

Judge Glickman dismissed Mrs. Charleroy's petition without prejudice on May 13, 1980. In the lengthy and detailed decision, the judge stated the board had not acted with discrimination. Two weeks later she requested from the board a date when she could return to work, but was informed that she was no longer considered an employee in the Cranbury School District. This was founded upon her failure to resume her position back in January, despite two letters informing her that contained absence would jeopardize her tenured position.

Approximately three weeks later, on June 19, Mrs. Charleroy applied for Unemployment Insurance benefits, which were subsequently denied at a formal hearing.

On July 10, 1980 the Commissioner of Education's designee, Mr. Seymour Weiss, ruled on behalf of the commissioner that Judge Glickman's decision be set aside and that the Cranbury Board of Education be directed to give Mrs. Charleroy a year's leave of absence without pay.

A short time later, the board voted to initiate an appeal of the Commissioner's decision with the New Jersey State Board of Education. The primary reason for this decision was the portent and possible implications and ramifications of the commissioner's ruling. A precedent could have been established whereby any teacher in any school district without a negotiated child-care leave provision in its contract would automatically be entitled to such a leave. Moreover, there might even be grounds for deducing that, given the manner in which the ruling was worded, any teacher could conceivably be entitled to a leave for any reason for virtually any length of time. A board of education could be considered "capricious and arbitrary" for denying such a leave request if it had ever granted any leave in the past for any duration. The board's contention is simply that this was a poor decision with the potential for serious negative consequences.

The preceding has been an honest, earnest attempt to present, as fully, objectively and accurately as possible, the sequence of major events in this unfortunate scenario. It was done primarily to inform the community and clarify the issues. I am sincerely hopeful that this principal purpose has been somewhat achieved.

As a postscript, however, I cannot refrain from commenting on at least one of the innuendos contained in Mrs. Charleroy's published letter. The suggestion is made that the board had been pouring out taxpayer's dollars in some kind of senseless personal vendetta against an aggrieved innocent party. The fact of the matter is that it was Mrs. Charleroy who took the initiative to pursue this matter through litigation in reaction to the board's denial of her request for a year's leave of absence. Such a decision, of course, possibly becomes easier to reach with the foreknowledge that one's legal expenses will have been totally covered out of NJEA resources. The board too would have liked to say "enough" at any time in the course of these proceedings, but not at the cost of compromising principles vital to the administration of this school system and possibly others as well. There have never been any personal motivations or elements of vindictiveness involved — only a serious concern about the significant immediate and long-range issues which Mrs. Charleroy has propelled to the point of no return. No group of individuals are more deeply concerned about the tax dollars expended in this affair than the board members themselves. Unfortunately, once the initial plunge into the litigation arena was made by Mrs. Charleroy, we have time and time again felt that we had been forced into a situation of "no choice".

Send not to ask, for you can never go home

Charley's is gone, and a big chunk of my life has been replaced by a stucco, sort of Turkish-type hashery.

It's not that Charley's was a candidate for a historic landmark designation or for any rewards in architectural achievement. It was only a soft ice cream store which had sprouted a lunch counter on the one end. It stood almost surrounded by cornfields on a little used Pennsylvania highway. And now it is gone.

IT WAS THE PLACE which my wife-to-be bought me a milkshake in exchange for a ride home from work. (Little did I realize how dearly I would pay for that milkshake.)

Later it was the spot which we took first one, then two and finally three children for refreshment on hot summer evenings. As far as that goes it was also a favorite spot of a dog, also named Charley, who dearly loved vanilla ice cream.

Charley's was the spot for a quick supper when my wife was too hot or too tired to cook. It was not haute cuisine but neither did any of us ever suffer food poisoning there. It had an ambiance projected by a brick charcoal hearth, an effusive display of plastic wrapped in aluminum and a floor that was never quite clean because of dripping ice cream cones gripped in little hands.

When we first began to take the children there the closest McDonald's was 20 hot miles to the west and Gino was the first name of a Baltimore Colts lineman. I was the burger king on the family grill and Arthur Treacher was playing butler roles in Class B movies.

When Joanne ordered a hot dog with nothing on it at Charley's, it did not take 15 minutes longer to get it. The salt and pepper came out of shakers and the catsup was extracted painfully from a bottle and not a plastic packet.

If you sat at a table a waitress came to take your order and serve it. When you were finished you paid and left and were not expected to deposit your leavings in a garbage can. The waitress did that.

It seems ridiculous to mourn the passing of a dinky roadside eatery. But the news — relayed to me by the former fan of the ungarnished hot dog — summoned up Donne's line of "send not to ask for whom the bell tolls." Surely the bell was tolling for me.

The bell had tolled for Charley (both human and canine) years ago. And although the name had been retained and we had passed Charley's many times in the last decade or so, we had stopped no more than two or three times.

All of which makes the mind leap from the metaphysical poet Dunne to the 20th Century novelist Thomas Wolfe and sadly agree, "You can never go home."

Cranbury marks opposition to DEP landfill site study

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following letter was sent to the state Department of Environmental Protection as Cranbury Township's response to the recent study by the DEP which showed that land surrounding Cranbury could be used for a site for a toxic waste landfill.

Mr. Jack Stanton
Director
Division of Environmental Quality
Department of Environmental Protection
Labor and Industry Building
Trenton, New Jersey

Dear Mr. Stanton:

On behalf of the citizens of Cranbury Township, we oppose the efforts to locate a site for a toxic waste landfill in New Jersey until and unless the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection and Delaware River Basin Commission can guarantee that such a site will not cause any environmental damage either to the land in and around the site itself or along the roads leading to and from the landfill site. We also have reached the following conclusions with respect to plans to locate a toxic waste landfill: (1) the disposal of toxic waste sludge in our land is environmentally unsound and economically counterproductive; (2) there are too many contingencies to guarantee an environmentally sound toxic waste landfill site; and (3) assuming that you reject the above facts, the criteria should place maximum emphasis on the preservation of agriculturally productive farmland, locating the site far from any population centers, and the preservation of our streams and water supplies and less emphasis on finding the "ideal" clay in which to locate the landfill.

In no way do we dispute your good faith efforts in attempting to solve a complex problem. In addition, we recognize that state and regional approaches to these problems are generally desirable. However, it is equally clear to us that those who produce such wastes should have the primary responsibility to dispose of them properly. In addition, the residue, or sludge, which you propose to landfill is generally the most dangerous of the toxic chemical wastes.

You candidly stated that the most desirable solution is to eliminate the need for toxic waste landfills. We believe that the disposal of these dangerous chemicals in our land continues an unacceptable policy of providing short-term solutions which, as history has demonstrated, results in potentially long-term catastrophes. Indeed, as long as toxic waste landfills are readily available, the state discourages the development of alternative environmentally acceptable solutions which cost more than landfilling and creates an industry dependent on toxic waste landfills for its survival.

We are certain that DEP and DRBC will provide good faith assurances that any such disposal site will be environmentally sound and pose no health threat to our citizens. However, at the meeting on July 16, DEP and DBRC indicated that "This is not a risk-free business" and "we want to minimize the damage to the environment." Obviously, no one can guarantee that the toxic waste sludge disposal site will not result in an environmental disaster. Any such commitments are based on the following contingencies: (1) you will adopt regulations to cover all contingencies, known and unknown; (2) the engineering plans submitted by the landfill owner will meet the letter and spirit of these regulations; (3) you will have adequate and well-trained engineers to review these plans in detail; (4) you will have a well-trained and adequate staff to vigorously and continually monitor the landfill operations; (5) you will have an efficient and effective law enforcement staff to immediately enjoin violations; and (6) the owner will have adequate financial resources to remedy any problems.* A weakness in any one of these areas will subvert any assurances you give us. Because of the failures to meet one or more of the above criteria, we have witnessed a number of environmental disasters in the past few years.

Assuming that you reject the above facts, we believe that DEP and DRBC have placed too much emphasis in choosing the proper clay for a landfill site. For example, you indicated that Woodbury clay is geologically the most desirable soil in New Jersey in which to locate a landfill site. However, it is clear that, with additional safeguards, other soils could be suitable for a landfill at a higher cost. However, there is nothing in your reports to indicate that there was any balancing of these increased costs vs. other critical concerns, e.g. preservation of farmland or location of a site far from any population centers. At the present time, the Department of Agriculture is undertaking a study to recommend measures to preserve our precious farmland. Certainly one agency of state government should not undermine the salutary efforts of another. A special Presidential Task Force recently completed a three-year study and concluded that the greatest threat to our environment in the year 2000 is the loss of agricultural lands. In addition, as we have witnessed the disaster at Love Canal and near disaster at Three Mile Island, it is also clear that any site should be far from any population areas. Accordingly, we believe that the above considerations, along with the preservation of our water supplies and woodlands, should take precedence over utilizing Woodbury clay as the soil in which to deposit this toxic waste sludge.

We believe that private industry and, to the extent necessary, the federal and state governments should undertake maximum efforts to fully recover or incinerate these toxic wastes. The continued use of our precious land to cover up this sludge is neither environmentally sound nor an acceptable solution. In fact, it will delay the final solution to the problem. On behalf of ourselves and our future generations, we cannot take the chance that there will be a breakdown in one of the six criteria enumerated above which will despoil our drinking water, precious farmland, or environment.

*We note that S-1300, sec. 30 provides that the State corporation may operate a facility if the owner goes bankrupt. This is not an encouraging sign to us since there is no guarantee that the corporation would be liable for all clean-up costs.

Zoning board should listen

To the editor:

Those BLIMP hangars at Lakehurst Naval Air Station are beautiful compared to the ugly BLIMP hangars the residents of North Maplewood Avenue have to look at.

Thanks to the railroading process (?) of our zoning board approving the C&H Hangar on Route 130, and the HMH Motor Service, we're forced to digest that ugliness. Then the Township Committee rubber-stamped their approval of that ugly mess; meanwhile, have you noticed how spic and span Main Street is kept?

It appears that Maplewood Avenue is silently considered the slums of Cranbury, but we love our homes as much as any other Cranbury neighborhood. Presently, Maplewood Avenue is not represented on the zoning board, so how can the present board members make decisions affecting our neighborhood when they don't live on our street? Remember taxation without representation? Started our country when those in power neglected to confer with the Colonials (or Maplewood Avenue residents).

Why can't the zoning board listen to their neighbors before making decisions affecting the rights and well being of Maplewood Avenue. Just remember, (you) residents of Maplewood Avenue can appeal these zoning board decisions by appealing to the Township Committee. So instead of the zoning board stealing peace of mind, let's give them a piece of our mind before the Township Committee.

Herman's legend is alive

To the editor:

Maybe I can clear up some of the confusion on "Herman, The 10-Day Cake."

I live in the same town as Mrs. Clayton's mother and am one of the first ones to have received Herman. "He" came from our church's choir director who lives in East Stroudsburg, Pa., who had received it from her neighbor who had gotten her starter from a friend in Easton. Lord only knows where those people had gotten it.

Another member of the choir has a brother that lives in another area of Pennsylvania and subscribes to a newspaper directed at farmers. In the paper one week was a lengthy article on "Herman" and several recipes so that the dough could be used for items other than the 10-day cake. It also gave the starter recipe and told how this batter was used by the pioneers and the covered wagons and that it was the cook's responsibility to "save the dough in the event of an attack on the wagons."

It amazes me how the dough has "been spread around," my sister-in-law received it from still another area.

We, too, have enjoyed it.

We bend over backwards for you.

Carole Ann Fisher

Not just for a handful of our larger clients but for every person, family and business we insure.

Recently a family came to us for Liability Insurance on a house they had purchased at the Jersey Shore. The coverage they needed only cost $25.00. And their present agent told them the policy was too small for him to handle.

We don't judge the importance of people's insurance needs on the basis of dollars and cents. We were happy to help the family buy the insurance protection they were looking for.

When you turn to the people at Chas. E. Rue & Son, Inc., you get more quality insurance at the best possible price – you get service. And we all bend over backwards to make sure you get it.

Give us a call, today.

Volunteerism — it's still alive and kicking

Someone forgot to tell the members of the Village Improvement Association, a women's club in Pennsylvania, that this is supposed to be the "Me Decade."

Last year the club marshalled 744 men, women, and teens who volunteered 65,000 hours of their time and performed some 28 different services for the 183-bed Doylestown Hospital, which club members own and operate themselves.

Thanks largely to the efforts of its volunteers, Doylestown Hospital has a newly opened 18-bed psychiatric unit, an accredited radiologic technology course, nurse's aide classes for teens, a "Mr. Yuk" poison prevention program for children, a summer premed program, and prenatal classes for parents, in addition to traditional medical services provided by 140 staff physicians.

"Americans are rediscovering the satisfactions of volunteer work," asserts Duane Gibson, a Michigan State University sociology professor and the editor of a new volunteer's handbook called A Citizen's Guide to Community Development. Just published by Peterson's Guides Inc. of Princeton, for the National University Continuing Education Association, the book tells volunteers how to assess community needs, broaden local support, recruit financial and human resources, establish goals and objectives, develop a plan with a workable timetable, and keep the momentum going.

There's been a terrific upswing in the number of neighborhood volunteer organizations," said Mr. Gibson, who partially credits the bicentennial celebration for refueling Americans' sense of patriotism and community spirit.

The numbers seem to bear him out. Over 10,000 local women's clubs competed in the two-year Community Improvement Program sponsored by the General Federation of Women's Clubs and Sears, Roebuck and Co., which ended last month. For its efforts with the Doylestown Hospital, the Doylestown club garnered a $10,000 first place award in the competition.

Women's groups have by no means cornered the volunteer market. Mr. Gibson and his five co-authors, all members of the Community Development Division of the NUCEA who have had extensive experience with citizens' groups, are quick to point to the long tradition of volunteer work by male organizations like the Kiwanis, Elks, Rotary, Lions, Knights of Columbus, and Policemen's Athletic Leagues.

In addition to providing recognition from one's peers, volunteer work satisfies humanitarian instincts, according to Mr. Gibson. "You can usually learn a great deal while accomplishing something worthwhile," he added.

Jane Edgar, president of the Doylestown group that established its own hospital, explained that her volunteer work introduced her to people from all segments of her community whom she would not have otherwise met. As a member of the hospital's board of directors and president of the 391-woman club, she has learned more about finance, law hospital administration, and management than she could have learned in most paid jobs.

To Mrs. Powell M. Trusler, the satisfactions of volunteer work are of a smaller, more personal nature. Mrs. Trusler is president of the Ladies Reading Circle in Morristown, Tenn., one of three women's clubs that helped organize a Youth Emergency Shelter (Y.E.S.) after clubwomen learned that abused children and juvenile offenders were being locked in adult jails.

Today, after six months in operation, the shelter has served more than 217 children. Youngsters with cigarette burns over their bodies, babies dropped by drunken mothers, and children totally abandoned by their parents have all found refuge at the shelter.

"When you see the smiles on the kids' faces after a few days at the shelter, it inspires you to keep going. Whatever I've given to the project, I've always received much more in return," said Mrs. Trusler.

The Morristown women began their project by forming a Youth Emergency Shelter Board, which included representatives from various human service, law, and medical agencies. Next, they secured land donated by the Hamblen County Court, raised more than $76,000 to build a facility, and obtained materials and services from local businessmen, architects, and construction professionals.

The Y.E.S. project is a working model of the principles and procedures set forth by the authors of A Citizen's Guide to Community Development. The General Federation of Women's Clubs and Sears have adopted the 48-page GUIDE as a handbook for their community improvement training seminars this summer, which will involve leaders of women's clubs from across the country.

Asked to summarize his advice to new citizens' groups, Gibson commented, "Plan carefully, act cautiously but systematically, and have the courage to tell yourself you can do it."

Plainsboro Road will close for construction and repairs

PLAINSBORO — Beginning Friday, Aug. 1, vehicles using Plainsboro Road will have to make a detour between Deer Creek Drive and Fox Run Drive.

A month-long construction project on that section of the road was announced by Plainsboro administrator, Peter Hechenbleikner.

"The purpose is two-fold," the township official said, "to widen the shoulders for joggers and bikers along that stretch, and to prepare for an overlay that will improve drainage."

The township felt it would be better to close the road entirely for one month, the administrator said, rather than to keep it open but under construction for two months.

Drivers from Canbury and Route 130 who plan to go north on Route 1 from Plainsboro Road are being encouraged to turn right on Scott's Corner Road and then left on Dey Road into the village of Plainsboro to rejoin Plainsboro Road and proceed to Route 1.

Those heading for Princeton Junction and south should take Plainsboro Road to George Davison Road, turn left to Cranbury Neck Road and then turn right to intersect with Route 1.

Mr. Hechenbleikner said that Plainsboro Township police would be posted at the beginning of the detour for the first few days to direct drivers.

Ministerium elects 1980-81 officers

Also elected were Rev. James Egan of St. Paul's Lutheran Church as first vice president; Rev. Edward Gaul of the First Baptist Church as second vice president; Rev. Laurence Fish of St. David's Episcopal Church as treasurer; and Rev. George Stefan of the First Baptist Church as secretary.

How we made Bell System Yellow Pages advertising 21% more effective.

One reason for the success of your 1979 advertising program was our advertising program.

A study conducted in New Jersey by a major independent research organization showed that usage of the Bell System Yellow Pages increased 21% in 1979.*

That means if you were a Bell System Yellow Pages advertiser, your ad program could have been 21% more effective than the previous year.

So what can you expect in 1980?

More of the same.

Because we'll be using, basically, the same ads in 1980.

"100% noted.
53% likelihood of remembrance.
56% unaided recall."

"Nearly total understanding of at least one major message."

"All four ads tested were high performers in terms of establishing top of mind awareness."

"Main idea communication was immediate and powerful."

They'll be running in major newspapers circulated throughout the state. Plus, for the first time, in nine consumer magazines in New Jersey. Where the ads will be even more effective because they'll run in four-color.

Again in 1980, we'll be supplementing our print campaign with a statewide outdoor advertising campaign that ties in with something that everybody is worried about these days.

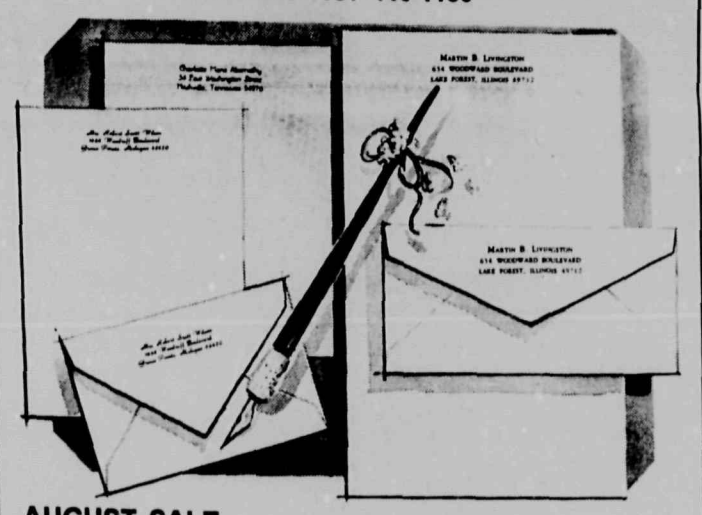

The gas crisis.

Now that you've heard about our ad program for 1980, what about your ad program?

German marching band delights Cranbury

CRANBURY — Ein-swie-drei March!

In crisp red, white and black uniforms the youthful Trossinger Blaserbuben oompahed and boomed down Main Street Wednesday night to the delight of Cranbury townsfolk.

The German high school band, whose members are staying with Hightstown and Cranbury students and other local families, played a German and American medley of marches and folk songs, not only as part of their marching routine, but later at a twilight concert in the gazebo at Village Park.

Several hundred listeners stood quietly for the playing of the German and American national anthems, but then broke into foot-stomping, hand-clapping enthusiasm for the traditional German songs.

Until dark, the lively music echoed across the park, bouncing off the water tower and floating across the quiet lake, children tossed frisbees and perched in the trees. Mothers calmly nursed infants on blankets in the grass. A few gray-headed enthusiasts improvised polkas. Serious devotees puffed pipes and sang along. And everybody had a good time.

The 43-member band, under the direction of Herr Franz Herre, will be staying in the area for another week.

Perdoni leaving office

JAMESBURG — Jamesburg's postmaster Richard Perdoni is leaving the Jamesburg Post Office after 31 years and will be heading the Old Bridge Post Office.

The appointment was made Friday, July 25, and Mr. Perdoni began his new duties Monday, July 28. He will be establishing residency in Old Bridge, local residency being a requirement of the new postal job. The promotion was announced by U.S. Postal Service officials at the agency's New York-based Northeast Regional headquarters.

The 51-year-old Perdoni began working as a substitute clerk-carrier in Jamesburg in 1949, was named assistant postmaster and then postmaster.

Appointed to temporarily replace Mr. Perdoni until a new postmaster is named is William Heindle, 42, superintendent of Postal Operations at Parlin. Mr. Heindle will be "on loan" to Jamesburg for a period of up to six months, he said, while applications for the position are submitted to New Brunswick and interviews are conducted in New York.

The new officer in charge claims that his job is not just "to sit there minding the store," he said Wednesday. "I'm supposed to come in and look around and make any changes that need to be made."

Mr. Heindle has worked for the Parlin postal facility for 24 years, 12 as a carrier and 12 in a supervisory role.

SINCE 1905, this summer house in Culver, Indiana, has been home to a family now spread across the country. Although this picture was taken in the early 1900's, it looks much the same today. Note the phantom image of a woman near the porch steps. We don't know who she is.

Back home again in Indiana

by Jane Bradley
Staff Writer

For a week under big blue Indiana skies, 24 of us gathered from Georgia, from Maine, from California, from Colorado, New York, and even Princeton, to prove you can go home again, if only for a summer vacation.

Home in this case is a cottage on a lake in northern Indiana, where five generations have maintained perpetual summer. Of course, winter, fall, and spring occur in Culver, Indiana, but we've never seen snow dusting the screened porches lining three sides of the house nor felt the spring thaw creak through the whitewashed wallboards. This suspension of time is one reason we return to find memories intact, encased in cool lake breezes and hot summer afternoons.

The assortment of cousins this year included a new batch of babies born to the grandchildren, middle-aged parents (now grandparents too) and two great-grandmothers in their eighties. Let's see, there were Honey, Howdy, and Happy Hays — the ones from Georgia — and their mother; wives, husbands, and children, and an aunt from New York and her family, now moving to California. There were my parents from Indianapolis and my sister's brood from Maine; and my father's mother, whose father built the cottage in 1905. Some of us stayed nearby with my mother's mother, who has been a lake regular at another turn-of-the century house since the 1920's.

In fact, my parents met at Culver. An aunt met her husband there, too. Another cousin is courting a year-round Culver girl, but my grandmother's story is the best of all.

It seems my father's mother has spent every summer since age five at Culver, beginning with the days when a train delivered her family from Indianapolis for the season from May to October. No indoor plumbing then naturally, and women maneuvered golf, tennis, and badminton in bloomers or dresses. Down the way was a young man from Chicago who, as the saying goes, was sweet on my grandmother.

Now this boy went to Yale, where he roomed with a boy from Iowa. When America entered World War I, the two boys left in the middle of the school year with six others to sign up with the Marines and be shipped to the front. Within a year, they had all seen action in France, but only the boy from Chicago and the boy from Iowa survived, and they were sent home with war wounds. To recuperate, the boy from Iowa joined his roommate at Culver, met my grandmother, and maybe you can see the ending of this family legend. The couch where the boy from Iowa proposed and was accepted sits among old wicker and a jumble of 75 years' worth of memorabilia in the cottage living room today.

The cottage itself was built in 1905 by my great-grandfather and -mother, Papa Charlie and Mama Mamie, and as far as I can tell, it was designed for naps. Wide wood shutters swing out horizontally along screened sleeping porches upstairs, and downstairs, wicker swings, wood swings, and canvas swings beckon irresistably on midsummer evenings.

Papa Charlie, a dapper man always pictured with a mustache, straw hat, and suit, must have been a meticulous man. In his free time, he wrote "The Gist of Whist," maintained scrapbooks of his children's early school essays and drawings, and kept a scrupulous log of all visitors to his lake home. The names that flow in spidery script across the long-ago pages still appear on mailboxes along the shore, for ours is not the only family to bring children and children's children to Culver.

At one end of the lake is Culver Military Academy, which operates a summer program for boys each year and provides a focus of activity. Each Sunday, the cadets parade along a grassy lawn bordering the lake as the sun sets, the sounds of military music recalling years of war and peace that have come and gone while Culver remains locked in safe summer. Even at the height of student protest, the parade would stir the most cynical of us, and we would jump to our feet as the flag passed, feeling some nameless pride in the marching and rituals of patriotism. This year, we went again, and this year, it stirred me more, as my two-year-old cousin put his hand to his head and fumbled a salute.

For if truth be told, in summer we conspire to maintain what might be corny in our lives away from Culver. There, we ski, sail, devise endless games of poker, golf, swimming at night (one adult hides in the water to shanghai the squealing children), fishing, turtle-hunting (all are counted, sometimes raced, then returned to the lake) and rounds of cocktails and cookouts. One post in the living room is smeared with pencil markings of each child's growth, recording the overlap in generations as they reach maturity and reproduce. Most everybody plays golf here, because the length of the course runs behind the cottages, and on the golf course, this family reigns supreme.

Now I always play barefoot at Culver, and we sneer at electric carts. The kids may go out with only a few clubs — it's never too crowded and never too serious. This year, there was a tournament among the lake dwellers, and though our family was split into several teams, the winning three teams were carried by four of us. The next day, two other families challenged ours to a rematch, and the U.S. Open was never as exciting to me. Each cousin frowned in concentration in addressing the ball, each shot elicited a cheer or groan. In the end, we were victorious. I caddied.

DRESSED FOR a return to Indianapolis in fall styles of 1919 are my grandmother, Carolyn Coffin (right) and a friend.

CARRYING A DRINK down the long porch that runs three sides of the cottage is Will Hays. His aunt, Honey Hays Barnes from Atlanta sits on one of several old swings (at right) with my sister Sally Kothe from Maine. (Alan Barnes photos)

For if truth be told, in summer we conspire to maintain what might be corny in our lives away from Culver.

I hope this doesn't sound boastful, for victory at the Culver golf course doesn't really amount to much. The triumph is actually in the unity of far-flung family members who see each other for a week each year, who may disagree on politics, hold an assortment of jobs, live in varying degrees of comfort at home, and carry private stores of problems.

On the Fourth of July, the last night of vacation, we staged a celebration that might make the Waltons look cranky. At twilight, we gathered along the front lawn bordering the lake, and lit Roman candles, firecrackers, and sparklers brought up from Tennessee. With each display, the crowd of children and adults joined in whoops and hollers, and we laughed more at our own noise than the fireworks' crackle. Other houses gathered their clans and did the same.

We were promised a grand finale and sure enough, after much preparation it came. Howdy, now 30, lit dozens of sparklers simultaneously, then unfurled an American flag. Another cousin set off a succession of Roman candles, and we clapped in delight, sang snatches of the national anthem, outdid each other in celebrating the noisy holiday.

But that night was hot and still, a harbinger of rough weather in Indiana. Sure enough, at dawn the next morning, the stillness exploded into ferocious winds unseen in hillier places. In minutes, the wind sounded as if a freight train had barreled into the front yard. The wind whipped across the water, churning waves, crashing limbs, and battering boats. My sister and I together could not shut glass doors from the wind's force, but no twisters came this time.

Still, after it was over, a canoe was found on the golf course; the pier was torn apart; and the boat was swamped with water. And then the skies returned to a cloudless blue, a placid countenance masking the intensity of life in these flatlands.

One woman at Culver, the daughter of the man from Chicago, now lives in San Francisco, and she said her friends cannot imagine why she would choose Indiana as a summer resort.

"I've given up trying to explain why I come back to the Midwest every year. But I could never give up coming home," she said.

And as I traveled back from the lake to Indianapolis, I knew what she meant. I saw the black-soiled, lush fields spread out all around me on the contourless land. Corn, hay, and soybeans are abundant, but any crop would flourish here in America's most fertile region. In either direction, one can see farm houses and silos rise up like churches on the horizon, a low line between the green land and the immense blue sky. On clear days, one might see a distant storm miles away, gray fingers of rain moving across the fields.

Not everybody understands why people would leave beautiful, even cosmopolitan parts of the country for this tiny spot in Marshall County, Indiana. But perhaps everybody longs to go home, that one place where the past and present are happily married, if only for a summer vacation.

CAVORTING on the lawn are my grandmother and a one-time beau Steve Hord (at left in picture above.) But her affections were stolen by Steve's college roommate (at right): my grandfather Harvey Bradley.

ALWAYS DAPPER, Papa Charlie holds his little daughter Mary Birch in 1919. The girl grew up to be the grandmother of Will Hays, pictured in the page's far-left column.

The doctor says

Summer family outings can present hazards for all ages

by Joseph A. Lieberman III, M.D.

(Dr. Lieberman is assistant professor of family medicine at the Rutgers Medical School of the College of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey.)

Family outings are wonderful events, especially in summer. Togetherness wrought by tramps through the woods or picnics at the beach can be nearly as much fun as the magazines suggest.

However, to those of us in family practice, summer brings with it a number of hazards for all age groups. I will examine three of these certain day-spoilers in this article.

POISON IVY: Youngsters get this more than oldsters simply because they run through the woods with greater abandon. Their elders are more prone to look before they leap and when they see the familiar three-leafed configuration spelling poison ivy, they usually give it a wide berth.

There are several points to consider with poison ivy and one is that one doesn't have to touch the vine to suffer its effects. The contaminating substance can, and often is airborne. Particularly woeful are the airborne particles coming from a burned plant. This substance can cause the most damage, as all exposed areas of skin can be affected.

The problem is not the rash but the fact that the skin tends to open and get infected. Kids will scratch what itches more than adults, though the latter do, too. While scratching does not spread the rash itself, it may worsen the infection.

Tips for treatment: apply hot water (not too hot) for relief from itching. Calamine lotion is the best over-the-counter preparation. If severe, by all means consult a physician since this can be serious and in extreme cases could require hospitalization.

There are prescription medications available. Of course there is more potential for side effects from these. Some work in some people; others do not. As for prevention through vaccines, this is a risk-versus-benefits judgment but is usually reserved for high-risk people such as forestry workers or telephone linesmen.

Another note of interest: Poison ivy is not limited to summer months. If a person is sensitive, it can be "caught" with snow on the ground. Young plants have shiny leaves which makes them recognizable but this shininess disappears as the plant ages.

SUNBURN: Despite the warnings appearing in all media, we see plenty of sunburn cases every summer. Points to remember include the fact that clouds are no protection and that the worst sunburns are achieved when the rays bounce off white sand or the water. Fair skinned people burn much more readily than those with darker skins, and first time exposure to the sun each summer is especially treacherous, especially if the subject is blond.

Some tips: Shop for a sun screen, not just a tanning agent, and remember that these compounds are water soluble and therefore must be renewed after each dip in the pool. In addition to burn, the sun ages and dries the skin which is why the "country club set" of avid golfers can be 30 years old and look 60. Sunburn can kill; the older one gets, the more often heat stroke is associated with it.

FOOD POISONING: What would a family outing be without food? Remarkable as it may seem, we still see plenty of cases of food poisoning in this day of adequate refrigeration. What people often forget is that during the time it takes to get to that beach or wooded spot, the trunk of the car is mighty hot and totally inadequate (unless ice is present) to keep perishable foods safe. Dairy products, the mayonnaise in potato salad or coleslaw, milk, cream and the like are the worst offenders as well as those delectable pastries.

Foods need not taste or look "bad" to be spoiled. This is an important point often forgotten. If there is food poisoning, the nearest hospital is likely to be the only place for help, as everyone in the family will be affected. The vomiting and diarrhea which ensue incapacitates all and there's no one to take care of others.

Those individuals in the party with a pre-existing illness are at greatest risk; such as those with cardiac problems who will be at hazard with dehydration. The young and healthy will probably recover and merely be inconvenienced by the experience.

Your mental health

by Karl J. F. Gossner, M.D.
The Carrier Foundation

Some men and women look, feel and act old at the age of 50. Others are vigorous and active at 75 and 80 and look many years younger. The former may be going through what is popularly known as "The middle age crisis." The latter very likely passed through middle age without even knowing they were expected to experience a "crisis." The difference between the two groups lies in the way they react to the events which normally occur during the middle years.

First, there are the physical realities which cannot be denied. The average man or woman of 50 certainly has less stamina than those who are 25. The incidence of physical illnesses is also greater in the middle years. Besides, there is for the woman, the fact of menopause and the loss of child-bearing capability which, for some, creates a psychological problem.

Sociologically, too, middle age is a time of added stresses. Most men, at that time in life, have "slain their dragons and captured their castles." Their career goals have been fulfilled. Now, they ask themselves, what is left to strive for? And, besides, there is the threat of being pushed aside from positions of importance by younger men surging up the ladder.

For many women it is the time of the "empty nest." The children are either married, pursuing a career, going to college, or living in an apartment of their own. The caring, mothering, advising, planning for and with the children is all over. Now what is left for this empty-handed mother to do?

For the man whose whole life has been his job and for the woman whose whole life has been her home and her children, there isn't really very much left — at least that is the way they think about it. So they turn from one thing to another half-heartedly, without much joy or drive. These are the people who feel, act and look old at 50. They are the ones who are likely to be having sieges of depression and psychosomatic ailments — headaches, gastrointestinal disorders, hypertension, chest pains, insomnia. sexual difficulties. They are also the people who may be resorting, unwisely, to transquilizers and alscohol.

What about the other group — those who are older but feel and act much younger? These are, in most cases, people whose lives were not taken up entirely with their work and their children and their homes. In addition to these central interests they had others which kept them active, involved, on the go. Then when the central interests of career and home had to take a secondary position, the other interests were there to take their place.

Middle-life crisis does not have to happen to everyone. It happens only to those who see themselves as powerless. A person can say to himself or herself at the age of 50 or 55: "This is the beginning of the end, and there is not much more to look forward to."

Or he can say: "Now that my career responsibilities or family responsibilities have been taken care of, I can start putting much more of myself into enjoyment of living. There are still 25 to 35 good years of life to be lived, and I expect to live them and enjoy every single day of them."

Each of us has talents and capabilities. Middle age is the time to rediscover them, put them into play and enjoy them. We need to be willing to invest ourselves and to use our talents creatively, to put our energies into doing things, instead of letting our energy be consumed by anxiety.

summer fun for children

It's important for children to realize that nature is not just for parks, zoos, or camping trips, it's also "what's in your backyard."

Often times they miss the beauty and wonder of things that are just a few feet away from their own homes. Here are a few activities designed to capitalize on that "backyard" space and designed to increase a child's positive awareness of the world around them.

BIRD FEEDERS — Birds are all around us but it's difficult to keep them still for any length of time. Perhaps the easiest way to do this is through a bird feeder. You will need: pine cones, peanut butter, bird seed.

This is what you do: Tie a string around the top of the pine cone. Smear the pine cone with peanut butter, making sure to pack it into all those tiny little cracks and crevices. Then roll the cone in bird seed and that's it. Now you have an easy-to-make bird feeder that you can hang from trees, laundry poles, roof eaves, just about anywhere. Just remember that the best place to hang it is somewhere that your children can observe the birds feeding, like outside the kitchen window.

POPSICLE STICK NATURE — It's difficult for children to realize all the wonderful miracles of nature which are packed into an area as small as a backyard. This activity does a lot to help them towards that realization. You will need: a medium length of string (1' to 3'). tied end to end and some old popsicle sticks.

This is what you do: Have your children go out into the backyard with their circle of string, pick a spot (any one will do) and throw the string down. Then, on hands and knees, they may begin to explore just what's contained within the circle. Anytime your child comes across something of interest, whether it be an ant, dandelion or beatle shell, have them mark the spot with a popsicle stick.

Now comes the best part — sharing what they've found — and that's where a parent is needed. Go back over each spot marked by the sticks and give your child an opportunity to tell you about what they've found. You just sit back and listen — listen for the wonders of your own back yard.

KID GARDENS — Summer is the season for gardens and no matter which end of the summer you're at, early June or late August, there's always some plant or vegetable ready to be planted. You will need: a garden spot, a spade or hoe, seeds.

This is what you do: Have them pick a spot in the yard — a sunny spot or one with limited shade is best. Gear the size of the garden to the size of the child. A four foot square is great for a younger child and older children usually have a good idea just what they can handle. Next step is to turn over the soil you need not dig down more than a few inches, just make sure that the soil is well mixed and aerated.

Now it's time to plant your seeds and the best planting instructions are the ones found on the back of seed packet envelopes. Interest may wane after the initial seeding but the children must understand that it's their job to give their garden the care that it needs to produce — this also helps to foster responsibility in your child. And when the garden finally does grow...watch for the smiles when your children decorate the table with their flowers or when they taste their first own-grown vegetables.

There are many things that you can do to stimulate your child's intellectual growth during the summer by just using what's around them. We'll end up this column with a baker's dozen of brief, easy activities keyed into this area. Your child can:

— draw a picture of their favoirte backyard plant or animal.

— find four different kinds of leaves in their backyard.

— how about four different kinds of insects.

— find six different things in your backyard that could be recycled.

— find an animal living under a board or rock.

— find a plant that's been partially eaten by an insect.

— find a home that an animal has built for itself.

— identify the birds that fly in and out of your yard.

— look for two different kinds of clouds.

— keep a rose bush free from beetles for a summer.

The list is endless of things that your children can do in their own back yard.

outdoor scene

gerald e. wolfe

Many of today's modern campgrounds have everything from swimming pools to tennis courts, and laundromats to teen centers. In this type of setting, it's doubtful if sitting around the campfire at day's end is regarded as a prime ingredient in the sport anymore. Perhaps it also has to do with the fact that many places now ban open fires.

But to the wilderness camper, canoeist, or back packer, after a long and active day afield nothing can restore the spirit quite as much as a glowing campfire. Whether for comfort and enjoyment, cooking meals, drying clothes, or the extreme possibility that survival might be involved, anyone who spends much time in the real out-of-doors should be able to start a blaze quickly.

Starting a fire under ideal conditions is a "piece of cake", even to those that haven't had much practice. You clear a space, gather dry tinder from the surrounding area, and light it. Add twigs, then larger pieces of wood, and gradually you build it into the kind of fire you want.

But starting a fire in a damp woods after a heavy rain, or even in the rain, presents a whole new set of problems. The sportsman who can do this will feel much more confident and secure.

There are three basic steps to building a fire under difficult conditions and they are:

—carry one or more good firestarters with you whenever you venture into the out-of-doors.

—find good tinder to get your fire gooing.

—select good firewood to keep it going.

THE FIRST REQUIREMENT should always find you carrying matches or some kind of lighter. Wooden matches are preferred by the experienced woodsman. These should be water proofed by dipping the tip and part of the stick in melted parafin or fingernail polish. They should then be stored and carried in small waterproof containers such as plastic prescription bottles or snap lid film containers.

Use lighters of the fluid type and carry a couple of extra flints. Butane lighters are all right, but if it gets too cold they may not ignite.

My favorite fire starting aid under extremely wet conditions is a small box of birthday cake candles. Several of these placed in a pile of tinder will hold a flame long enough to get the other materials started.

One natural aid to firestarting that can be found right in the woods is white birch bark which ignites easily and burns hot. Pieces of pitch or resin from stands of evergreens also burn very well. Old stumps and damaged limbs of pine, spruce, and fir are excellent sources of pitch. Gather it in a plastic bag to use in an emergency and take the older drier pieces rather than the soft fresh ones.

STEP NUMBER TWO is finding tinder. Some of the best kinds are the remains of old birds' nests, the dull, brown needles on the lower branches of spruce and pines, and the shavings from whittling down small twigs. If you come across pinecones during your travels tuck a few in your pack or pocket for use later on. A single match can start one easily and they make one of the longest lasting fire starters you can find in the woods.

Keeping your fire going becomes the third step and this depends on gathering a good supply of firewood first. Hickory is the number one choice, followed by most species of oak, then maple, beech, birch, elm, plus the wood from fruit trees such as apple and cherry. Dead wood is better than green wood of the same type, although green wood burns well once the fire is going and the coals are hot.

Use your common sense when gathering wood. Many state and national parks furnish firewood. But if they don't, make certain you gather only dead material from the forests. Don't cut any living trees or shrubs except in an extreme emergency. Look for the best firewood on high, dry ground away from bottom lands, swamps, and river areas.

Build a modest fire to conserve your supply of wood and clear the area around it to prevent spreading. The best fire is the smallest one necessary to do the job. When you leave make certain it is totally extinguished.

Garden a blessing for Johnson family

by David Salowitz
Staff Writer

ROOSEVELT — The bearded man carefully plucks a Colorado potato beetle off his squash plant and crushes the pest under his bare foot. His wife, also sans shoes, views the execution without emotion as she sips from a glass of sangria. Another threat to their garden has bitten the dust.

While his fellow bankers resort to martinis or pills to escape the pressures of the financial world, Carl Johnson, 38, prefers to cultivate a backyard garden that produces enough fruits and vegetables to rival a supermarket.

"It started out to be a hobby, but has gotten more important as the cost of food has gone up," said Beth Johnson, standing beside her husband near a patch of cabbage behind their Pine Drive home in Roosevelt. "It's sort of like another income. People are amazed by what we get out of the land."

THE GARDEN HAS, in fact, become something of a sensation in the small rural borough. There have been class trips from the local elementary school to look at the rows of plants and a party at harvest time when 200 pounds of watermelon were split open for local children. Mrs. Johnson, who writes a recipe column for the town paper, also whips up dishes like fresh apple or zucchini bread for friends.

She credits her husband with having the "green hand." Between Christmas and New Year's Mr. Johnson draws diagrams to plan for a crop that will yield a wide variety of foods at different periods of the year. He builds a small greenhouse out of wood and plastic to nurture thousands of seeds that will later produce more than 1,000 pounds of broccoli, tomatoes (in nine varieties), onions, shallots, garlic, cauliflower, beans, peppers, potatoes, three types of eggplant and other goodies.

The Johnson family, which includes children Mark, 17, Karen, 8, and Kristin, 6, brings garden food into the house from early April through November. When the cold weather settles in, Mrs. Johnson freezes, pickles, cans and stores the remainder for the winter. She also tends the sage, basil, thyme and other aromatic plants in the herb garden and the brightly colored azaleas and marigolds.

FOR THE JOHNSON GIRLS, the garden is a verdant world ripe for exploration. They have learned to spot and remove harmful insects from leaves (chemical sprays are only used on the pear, nectarine, plum, and apple trees) and have watched their father trap possum and groundhogs, which were later set free. Other garden visitors include hummingbirds, Baltimore orioles, toads and bees. Although the girls are sometimes guilty of raiding the garden for something to nibble on, they've made up for it by raising their own carrots this year.

During the growing season, Mr. Johnson begins working on the 10,000-square-foot garden at the crack of dawn before he drives off to his full-time job in Lawrenceville as an assistant vice president at the Underwood Mortgage and Title Co. Besides keeping him in shape, the physical activity in the garden helps relieve work-related tension.

"A lot of bankers take valium," said Mr. Johnson.

"Working out here is my valium. When you're deciding to give someone $100,000 and you're not sure he should get it, you come here and kick the ground and pull the weeds."

The garden also brings out hidden reserves of courage and creativity. During a late frost in April, the Johnson family spent two days fitting sandwich bags over the fragile plants. Besides the insects and critters from the woods, the neighborhood dogs are also potential vegetable predators and a nearly constant vigil is necessary.

A CITY BOY from Rahway, Mr. Johnson admits that he didn't know cucumber from corn when he moved to the borough 10 years ago. His first garden was "a complete disaster" but over the years he has become an expert in "intensive gardening" — growing plants close together to use almost every foot of available land.

Mr. Johnson estimates that he saves about $100 a month on food and that trips to the market are usually limited to meat, dairy, soda and paper products. But an observer gets the feeling that money alone does not keep the Johnsons puttering in the backyard.

Each year he tries to grow at least one new species of plant, and he is usually successful. Some of the more exotic recent experiments include Israeli cantalope, square tomatoes, giant peas, and sponges. He even grows tobacco and sassafrass which he converts into root beer.

"It's a lot of work but it's something we enjoy doing together," said Mrs. Johnson.

"Each year it gets more interesting and I learn more and the garden gets better," added her husband, his eyes surveying the fruits of his labors.

CARL AND BETH JOHNSON have put many hours into establishing their garden and it pays off for them in both food savings and therapeutic benefits each summer.

THESE TOMATOES are truly vine ripened.

Kassabs

Washington to say how furious she was about this whole thing. It's been like a three-ring circus around here."

But no one was having a good time. "We're going a little crazy," the embattled Clearbrook resident said. of the decision which was handed down Wednesday morning at 10, but he already believes the government will ask for a re-hearing before the 4th Circuit which will involve the full 12-member court. This time, however, the prosecutor will be the Solicitor General, not the Attorney General's Office, Mr. Kassab said. "The Solicitor General could by-pass the Circuit Court, but the Supreme Court is on vacation now, so I don't think he will do that."

Mr. Kassab wants to make sure that no one thinks the reversal of the decision indicates MacDonald's innocence. MacDonald's lawyers are nonetheless filing a motion for bail in California, where the convicted murderer is being held in a medium-security prison. "I would say his chances for bail are vastly improved," Mr. Kassab conceded.

Both Mr. Kassab and his wife, Mildred, have developed a high level of patience in the 10 years since the murders occurred, but this latest decision by the courts could only be called "horrendous," Mr. Kassab said. "The whole situation is ludicrous. It's a mockery of the reason the Sixth Amendment was placed in the Constitution. It was put there to prevent the government from taking a guy and holding him in prison until some far-off trial date. It was not supposed to be used for this purpose. I just can't get over this."

State

Dr. Feeney said. "We can't physically handle everybody. We can't get into the business of checking everybody's well. We have to be in charge of checking on all the reactors in the state. People will just have to go to private companies to get their wells tested."

Princeton's Dr. Montague, however, said he was "worried about the quality of work and the quality of concern expressed by the state in this case. I see no reason to be complacent."

Dr. Montague, who said he came to New Jersey because he had heard of the pioneering programs in environmental protection here, expressed his disillusionment with the treatment Mr. Kaler had received. "I guess they (the state) are not going to get concerned until Jamesburg and Monroe get totally contaminated. An intelligent protection policy is what is needed now, and I just don't see that happening."

Council

task" by enacting an ordinance that would prohibit any hazardous waste disposal in Monroe, despite its legality. The council's position is that the DEP has not established guidelines, nor have they instituted an efficient policing mechanism.

By taking the DEP to court the council hopes to force the state to take a firm, definable stance. "Let's take 'em to court," said Mr. Klink, "We should say 'No toxic waste in our township.'"

In other business, the committee heard a letter submitted by the Recreation Commission requesting the council to approve Middlesex Downs as a suitable alternative park site. Kelly Park had already been considered by the council but met with strong opposition from the public.

Middlesex Downs is a plot of land owned by the township bordering Millstone Township. The council would not give unanimous support to the proposal. Councilman David Rothman objected that the development of the Downs without first establishing a five-year recreation master plan might be "putting all the eggs in one basket."

He doubted that people would be willing to travel to the park and pointed out that Millstone has approved plans for a 380 home development across from the site.

Resumes

THE PLAIN TRUTH ABOUT RESUMES by PRINCETON WRITING ASSOCIATES As low as it may sound, 7 interviews out of every 100 resumes mailed out is considered a good response. When, however, you are dealing with New York Times blind box ads, the 7% goes down to 1%, if even that high. Blind box ads are the single toughest challenge to any job hunter and the single most severe test of any resume. You can send hundreds and never hear a word. Recently a client of ours mailed 11 resumes, all to New York Times blind box ads, within the course of one week. She received interviews with 6 (and was hired on the first one). That is a 55% response rate which is so extraordinary that some may not believe us. Let us help your job search by providing you with one of the best resumes you can obtain anywhere in the Nation. More, we will advise you on how to use it. Call us to find out more, we will answer all your questions & show samples of our work without fee or obligation. 201-359-5948.

On Aug. 3, a tour of approximately 15 miles (round trip) will depart at 12:30 p.m. for Buck Gardens and Moggy Hollow. Designed for those with some biking experience (minimum age 12), this four-hour trip will pass through a formerly private arboretum recently added to the County Park System and will stop at Moggy Hollow, former site of the post-glacial Lake Passaic outlet.

On Aug. 13, an Evening Cycle Run, designed for the whole family will leisurely explore the Great Swamp National Wildlife Refuge, between 6:30-8:00 p.m.

For experienced bikers, a trip to Jockey Hollow and the Morristown Great Swamp National Wildlife Refuge will take place on Aug. 24, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. This 30-mile trip includes the historic sites of Washington's headquarters in Morristown and Jockey Hollow, where his troops spent the terrible winter of 1779, winds along bike paths and back roads through the horse farms and estates of Morris County, and then returns through the Great Swamp. Although the course is mostly flat and the pace will be leisurely, this tour is not recommended for beginners.

Mr. Smith goes to Smithville

A look inside a one-man town

By RUTH WOODWARD

Since there is a Smithville, one assumes there must have been a Smith who built his own town, gave it his name, and sowed seeds of history for his progeny to harvest.

And indeed, there was Hezekiah Smith behind Smithville, New Jersey — a man who lived in 19th century baronial splendor on the banks of the Rancocas Creek. Echoes of his Victorian life reverberate through his still-standing Greek revival mansion, which is now open for public tours two days a week.

Located in East Hampton Township, Burlington County, southeast of Mount Holly, the complex has been designated as the County Cultural and Heritage Center.

Geri Finner

The Smithville mansion reflects a 19th century life of splendor.

worth a trip

In the early 1800's the Rancocas Creek was easily accessible from Philadelphia across the Delaware, and the site of the Smith mansion was the farthest point at which the creek was navigable. In earlier days a mill had been the first structure at the site, and in the 19th century it became a busy textile manufacturing center owned by Jonathan and Samuel Shreve.

The Shreve brothers built the mansion and various other outbuildings. They also put up workers' housing, a school and a store, and called their small community Shreveville. They built a canal to Mount Holly to facilitate transportation and manufactured cotton thread and yards and yards of calico.

Until 1850, the business prospered; then a national depression claimed the cotton industry as one of its victims. During the Civil War there was a sharp drop in the amount of cotton grown and the mills stood idle for long periods. The Shreve property was soon mortgaged to the hilt and finally sold at a sheriff's sale. For a while Shreveville became one of the neglected towns of South Jersey.

In 1865 Hezekiah Smith visited the deserted village and decided it was just right for his purposes. A pioneer in the woodworking machinery business, Smith held 65 different patents on woodworking machines, and his business in Lowell, Massachusetts had outgrown its quarters there.

HEZEKIAH MUST have had tremendous energy. He set to work converting thread mills into machine shops, replacing old water wheels with turbines, and building a foundry. The H.B. Smith Company eventually manufactured 150 different styles of machines and produced a quarter of the country's woodworking machinery.

Smith also looked over the town and envisioned himself as its baronial master. He remodeled the old workers' homes and added new ones. He built a boarding house for the unmarried apprentices, which included a theater with the grandiose name of the Opera House. Town bands were a popular form of entertainment, so a grandstand was built and the H.B. Smith Military Band played for the entertainment of the villagers on summer evenings.

He continued buying surrounding farmland whenever possible, until he had more than 300 acres under cultivation, supplying much of the meat, vegetables and dairy products used in the village.

And the town was rechristened Smithville.

THE LIVING QUARTERS for the master himself were improved. The three-story brick mansion was renovated to include extra servants' quarters and "The Annex," Smith's private entertainment center, which also served as his political headquarters. Here he designed a gaming room, a large billiard room and a bowling alley. The mansion was completely surrounded by a high brick wall topped with cast iron pickets. Inside the wall were boxwood gardens and that favorite conceit of English estates, a maze.

No longer standing is a 110-foot high brick and iron observation tower, where on a clear day Smith could see all the way to Philadelphia. And the marble statue of Agnes Gillkinson that once stood in the garden was long ago smashed into small pieces.

Agnes had been a Lowell mill girl, living in one of the mill boarding homes when problems of the cotton industry were reflected in lower and lower wages for the workers. Smith befriended Agnes, brought her to New Jersey with him, and paid her tuition to Pennsylvania Medical College. Known in Smithville as Madame Smith, she used her knowledge of chemistry to develop and market a hair restorative lotion. She also edited the weekly "New Jersey Mechanic," a trade journal distributed to woodworking shops nationally.

FOR A WHILE it was an idyllic life for lord and lady of the manor house. Smith's manufacturing company flourished and he tried his hand at manufacturing a number of bicycles and tricycles. The best known was the "Star" bicycle which had the large wheel at the back — in a spill the rider landed on his feet rather than over the handlebars. Ever flamboyant, Smith had his workmen form racing teams and trick riding teams to demonstrate the bicycle at fairs and other public events, and one occasion he hired a famous athlete to ride a Star bicycle down the steps of the Capitol.

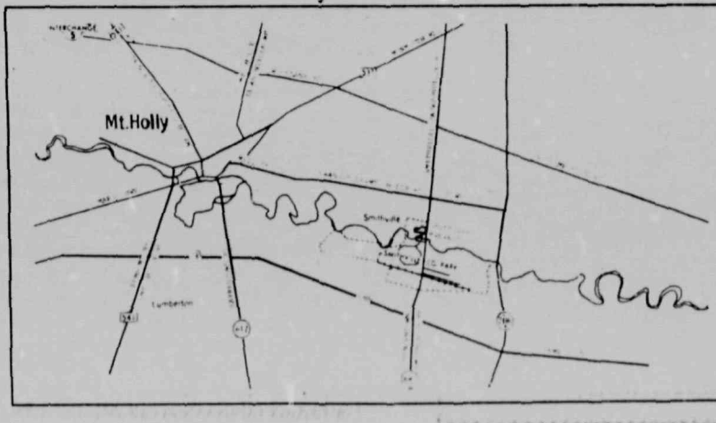

Smith served a term in Congress and one in the New Jersey State Senate, with the H.B. Smith Military Band helping to attract crowds while he was campaigning. But the zest went out of his life when Agnes Gillkinson died, and Smith spent more and more time with her marble likeness in the garden.

Only after his own death did the people of Smithville learn of a wife and family who had been left behind in Vermont.

SMITH left his entire estate to establish a school for apprentices and young mechanics in Smithville. His eldest son Elton sued on behalf of his mother, who died before a long court battle decreed the Smith family in possession of the estate. Elton Smith took over the business, which was operated successfully until the Depression. He renovated the manion, installed a heating system, got rid of all of his father's furnishings and smashed the statue of Agnes Gilkinson to bits.

Many of the buildings are no longer standing, but the main building is a testimony to the way of life of a 19th century entrepreneur with mechanical ingenuity, business ability, a zest for living, and perhaps a share of flamboyance. The magnificent iron eagles flanking the front gate are only one of many architectural details in cast iron.

THE COUNTY is gradually refurnishing the mansion in the style of the period when Smith was in residence. Some of the rooms of the Annex are being converted into exhibit space and the back courtyard is ready to serve as a performance arena for outdoor drama, dance, or music programs.

If you go . . .

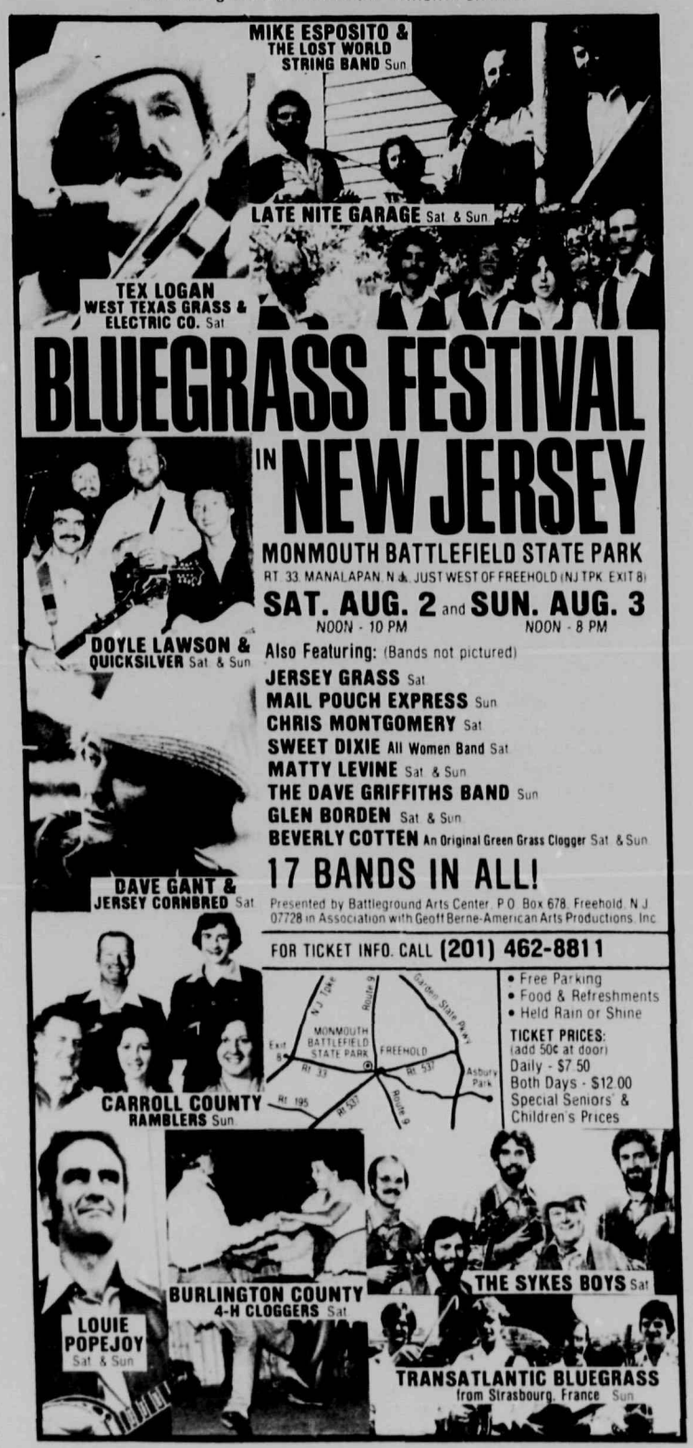

Smithville is open to the public on Wednesdays and Sundays, from noon until 5 p.m., with tours of both the house and the village. Tours start on the hour and the last tour begins at 4 p.m. Admission is one dollar for adults; 50 cents for senior citizens and students, with small children free. If you plan to bring a group of more than 15 people please call the Friends of the Mansion office at 609-261-3780 for an appointment.

By DAVID SALOWITZ

Most rock critics are veterans of the 1960s who actually get paid for reviewing records by glue-sniffing punks young enough to be their illegitimate children. To save time and money, I have decided to go to the crux of the problem and review the performers themselves. I might add, with little or no modesty, that my qualifications are impeccable. My Bachelor of Amphetamines was earned at Filmore East College. After picking up my M.A. in Mescaline at Woodstock Nation U., I received my doctorate from the Studio 54 School for Advanced Snorting.

What's more, I was once pistol-whipped by Dick Clark for accidentally touching him while I was dancing the Watusi on American Bandstand. I was also one of the first people Joe Cocker vomited on. My competence established, here now is my capsule critiques of 40 stars who have clawed their way to the top of the rock heap.

1. Blondie—Whatever she has, Marilyn Monroe had more of it.
2. Paul McCartney — What's cute at age 20, is not so cute at 40
3. Paul Williams — Short people have no reason to live.
4. The Beach Boys — Grow up already and get jobs.
5. Bob Dylan — This year's marketing problem: will Jesus play in Vegas?
6. John Denver — Thinks Marie Osmond is growing up too fast.
7. Donna Summer — Brought prostitution, S&M and obscene phone calls to AM radio.
8. Barry Manilow — Really Marvin Hamlisch.
9. Paul Anka — Not Old Blue Eyes. In fact, ever wonder why his eyes are brown?
10. Dolly Parton — Climb every Mountain.
11. The Rolling Stones — If they were born women they would want to be men.
12. The Grateful Dead — We're grateful too.
13. The Village People — One might suggest putting a padlock on their closet, but they'd probably like it.
14. Debbie Boone — A virgin birth.
15. Elton John — Everybody will be a star for at least 15 minutes. - A. Warhol.
16. Linda Ronstadt — You're no good, you're no good, you're no good, baby, you're no good.
17. Yes — No.
18. Neil Young — Rx: see Wayne Newton's doctor.
19. Tony Orlando — Personal friend of Mike Douglas.
20. Diana Ross — Would be ugly if she were white.
21. Carol King — Would be pretty if she were black.
22. Kiss — Off.
23. Bette Midler — Used to room with the Village People.
24. Peter Frampton — See Elton John.
25. Chicago — Another reason this is the Second City.
26. The Who — Why?
27. The Eagles — Take them off the endangered species list.
28. Fleetwood Mac — The Osmond Family takes acid.
29. David Bowie — Borrows Bette Midler's clothes.
30. Rod Stewart - Makes love, not war.
31. Johnny Rotton — Makes money, not music.
33. Frank Zappa — Yes Frank, we know what that yellow snow is.
34. Stevie Wonder — If Stevie said the damn plant talked, the damn plant talked.
35. Billy Joel — Beware of people with two first names.
36. Elvis Costello — Last year's model.
37. Earth, Wind and Fire — Used to be Blood, Sweat and Tears.
38. Neil Sedaka — Bad then, bad now.
39. Bruce Springsteen — His motorcycle's on fire, his girlfriend's a junkie and he's crying all the way to the bank.
40. Elvis Presley — Roll over Elvis, tell Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin the news.

State museum salutes old age

The New Jersey State Museum on West State Street in Trenton, has two exhibits on display through the summer and two exhibits on display through the fall.

'Images of Old Age' 1790 to the Present' and 'Art by New Jersey Senior Citizens,' are two exhibits with particular interest to old people. They will be on display through Aug. 24.

Organized by the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service and researched by the Institute of Gerontology at the University of Michigan, "Images of Old Age" uses photos and text to examine the realities of aging in three different eras of American history.

The 'Art by Senior Citizens' exhibit, which features award-winning paintings from county-level competitions conducted throughout the state this spring, is being presented by the museum in cooperation with the Division on Aging in the N.J. Department of Community Affairs.

A public reception for the artists and their friends will be held on Friday, Aug. 8, from 2 to 4 p.m.

Also, 'Adolf Konrad Retrospective,' a contemporary artist exhibit, will be on display in the main gallery, through Sept. 14, and 'The Scientific Illustrations of Kenneth L. Gosner,' will be on display in the lower level gallery through Oct. 26.

Mr. Konrad, now an artist in residence at Somerset County College, has had his art displayed at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the National Academy of Design, the Whitney Museum, Butler Institute, Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, the New Jersey State Museum, The Newark Museum and the Montclair Art Museum.

The Retrospective was organized by the Montclair Art Museum and includes 50 paintings and a dozen drawings which cover a span of 30 years.

Mr. Gosner, curator of zoology at the Newark Museum, creates detailed drawings for nature textbooks, magazines, and field guides. He has illustrated more than 20 books, has written articles for scientific journals, and has been an active participant in research expeditions in the Caribbean and South Atlantic coastal waters.

The State Museum, a division of the New Jersey Department of Education, is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. and on weekdays from 1 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

'MACBETH' :

Treat for the eye, not for the ear

By COLLEEN ZIRNITE

review

Shakespeare by the New Jersey Shakespeare Festival in Madison is always a visual triumph. Regulars have grown to expect the authentic and aesthetic pageantry that marks the production fo Macbeth being performed in repertory this summer on the Drew University campus. Artistic director Paul Barry has an ingenious creative instinct.

Yet, although his dramatic inventions and familiarity with the times never cease to thrill, they do not quite obliterate a basic fault in the presentation. It is a dominant operatic inclination that limits Mr. Barry's own performance as Macbeth and that of several other players in lesser roles.

Mr. Barry's rich baritone speaking voice quavers with emotion. It soars to booming peaks and wanes to whispering hushes with a dramatic intensity that may fit the mood of the play but ignores the script. As in operas, the lyrics are often subordinate to the musical measure. He may as well be speaking in a foreign language; it is difficult for listeners who catch only the cadence and miss the sense.

Richard Graham's deliveries are similarly spasmodic. He plays Duncan, the ill-fated king, in this production. Luckily Macbeth murders Duncan early in the play — before Graham has too many lines to spoil the regal image he otherwise projects.

Robert Grossman, who is Ross, one of the Scottish noblemen, seems at times to be leaning in the same misguided direction in this show.

Their performances contrast distinctly with the more natural and realistic portrayals of Dana Mills as MacDuff; Phillip Pruneau as Lennox; Ron Coralian as Banquo and Michael Goldstein as Banquo's son, Fleance. Equally credible, and drenched in drama, is Callan White's portrayal of the sinister Lady Macbeth. Her own sensuous beauty augments the words of Lady Macbeth as she calls upon the spirits to unsex her and fill her "top-full of direst cruelty."

She writhes in evil as she prods Macbeth to commit the murder and then chides him for his remorse. Later, when he is confronted at the banquet table by the ghost, she makes us feel the cold shiver of her fear that he will give himself away.

Mr. Barry's real gift is in directing. He brings to life scenes like that of the banquet table and other gatherings, such as when the soldiers rally together. He adds homely nuances that make the characters immediate and lends spontaneity to their actions. A playful gibe to the shoulder, a whack on the back, a little pinch of the serving girl's bottom, and a tumbling of the wine waitress to the floor give colorful dimension to background tableaux.

His attention to these significant little touches is particularly effective when Lady Macbeth concludes the banquet scene by vacantly emptying a wine glass down the length of the table as she follows Macbeth to bed. It is a superb gesture portending her madness.

Mr. Barry is also gifted in the creation of mood scenes like those featuring the three weird sisters. As the witch trio meets Macbeth and forecasts that he will be king, they grovel in hideous likeness to the witch's wail, "And like a rat without a tail, I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do."

The stage seethes in eerie foreboding as the three hags appear again at a witches' haunt where they stir foul and loathsome ingredients into their steaming cauldron. To provide Macbeth with answers to his anxious queries, they brew mystical apparitions that enigmatically assure him "none of woman born shall harm Macbeth," and that he shall "never be vanquished until Great Birnam Wood to high Dunsinane Hill shall come against him."

Fencing is yet another of Mr. Barry's accomplished arts and under his direction sword play delights with swashbuckling excitement. Shakespeare is truly a spectacle at the festival. Spectacles, however, do not necessarily move and this production of Macbeth drags at times. It will be performed in repertory through Sept. 10.

The murderous tragedy, "Macbeth," stars Paul Barry (left) in the title role and Ron Coralian as Banquo.

Rutgers arts fest presents musical

Rutgers University 'Arts for a Summer Evening' festival, presented by the Mason Gross School of the Arts in association with Douglass College and the Summer Session, will present Joe Taylor Ford's musical The Last Minstrel Show, in the Levin Theater at Douglass College Tuesdays through Sundays, Aug. 5 through Aug. 17, at 8 p.m.

Gospel singer Linda Hopkins will star in the production which deals with the struggle of artists to survive when faced with a new culture that has no place for them.

The show also features Tiger Haynes, who starred in "The Wiz" on Broadway.

The Last Minstrel Show will move to New York following its run at Rutgers. Avery Brooks, professional actor and assistant professor in the Douglass College theater arts department, is directing the musical.

Also, photographs by Sandi Fellman will be exhibited in the Walters Hall Gallery, adjacent to the Levin Theater, on theater performance nights, from 6 to 8 p.m.

'Mound Builders' opens at Murray

The Princeton Summer Theatre will open its third production with Lanford Wilson's The Mound Builders on July 31 at 8 p.m. The show will run Thursdays through Sundays, July 31 to Aug. 3 and Aug. 7 to 10, at Murray Theatre.

Perhaps best known for his popular comedy, The Hot L Baltimore, Mr. Wilson recently won the 1980 Pulitzer Prize for the Broadway play Talley's Folley. His play The Mound Builders was first produced in 1973 and is a humorous, sophisticated drama about a summer-long archaealogical excavation of "mounds" built by early American cultures. As in Wilson's other plays, there are no minor characters and the action and language flow with dizzying speed.

For additional information call 609-452-8181 between noon and 7 p.m.

Lon Galla and Molly Hickok rehearse for "The Mound Builders."

Sew What's New

Sewing for the sheer fun of it

By ALIDA MACOR

What's new?

Mandel Fabrics has a new idea. It is selling quilted lace placemat panels, ready to cut, with no-fray edges for $1.50 each. Optional, matching lace trim for the edges costs 45 cents more.

"That's Our Baby" quilts ($7.98 a panel) has added several new designs to its line.

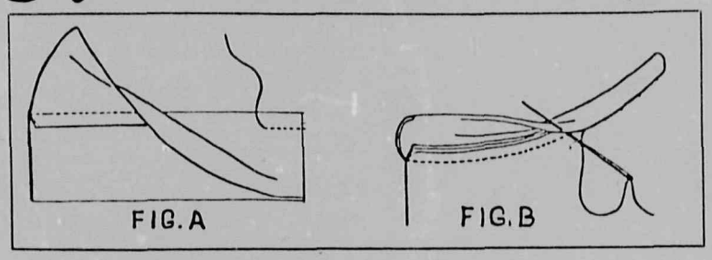

Handling sheer fabrics

If you have been shying away from sewing with sheer fabrics, you are not alone. Crisp sheers such as voile and organdy are easy to sew, but require special finishing techniques because their seams are visible from the outside. Soft sheers, like chiffon, slip and slither posing a sewing problem as well. The following suggestions should make handling these fabrics easier:

1. Select a pattern with soft fullness and a minimum of seams and darts.

2. Leave enough ease in the fitting since the fabric is fragile.

3. Use a large surface for cutting. Place an old sheet or pieced tissue paper under slippery fabric; pin and cut through all layers if this is easier. A towel pinned over your sewing surface also helps. Use fine pins.

4. Try marking darts with only a tracing wheel. The indentations should be visible.

5. Use a new, size 11, ballpoint needle in the machine.

6. Self-fabric is often sued to interface sheer solids. Flesh color voile is a possibility for prints.

7. Many designers underline (or double) a sheer bodice, leaving the sleeves single. This opaqueness usually eliminates the need for special seam finishes. To underline, hand baste two identical sections together on a flat surface; thereafter treat as one.

8. Eliminate a separate front facing, if possible, by pinning facing and front patterns together on their seamline and cutting out as one piece. Eliminate neck facings with self-fabric bias binding.

9. If machine stitching is difficult, try slipping thin typing or tissue paper under your work. Tear away carefully after stitching.

10. Buttons and snaps work better than zippers. You might even hand sew the buttonholes, or use thread loops and tiny buttons.

11. For an easy seam finish when your fabric doesn't ravel, simply stitich again one-eighth inch away and trim or pink.

12. Finally, there are two French-inspired finishing techniques that are particularly appropriate for sheers. The French (or Enclosed) Seam is used for straight seams, especially those that ravel. Place WRONG sides of fabric together and stitch in a three-eighth's inch seam. Press to one side; then trim very close to the stitching. Fold, with right sides together, and stitch on the pattern's seamline, encasing the raw edges (figure A).

French (or Double) Binding is an attractive finish for the outer edges and hems of sheers. For a half-inch finished binding, cut bias strips 3 and one-eighth inches wide. (Bias width equals six times finished width plus one-eighth inch for turning.) Piece on the straight grain as needed. Baste this strip in half lengthwise. Then, with raw edges even (three layers) and right sides together, stitich to garment one-half inch from raw edges. Turn binding to the wrong side and slipstitch its fold to the line of machine stitching (figure B). Do not press flat; this is meant to have a soft roll.

Timely tips:

Choose bobbin thread for hand sewing while at the sewing machine, because its "spool-curl" was removed when it was wound on the bobbin.

To determine the right side of knit fabric, check the small selvage holes. They will appear "pushed in" on the right side.

Wooden doweling, in various diameters, is useful for pressing tubing seams open before turning.

If you're planning to make a coat this fall, try out the pattern first as an inexpensive summer robe.

It's not necessary to buy a special pattern for a beach jacket. Use any favorite button-down dress or blouse pattern and adjust the length. Tablecloth lace, by the way, makes a pretty, if not too practical beach cover-up.

TABLE TALK

Pure Italian without tomatoes

By DIANNE WILLIAMS

I have been waiting a long time for a place like Ristorante DiLullo. To give you an idea just how long, let me backtrack a bit.

I grew up in an Italian neighborhood during the early 50s. Those were the days of horse drawn vegetable carts and arranged marriages. The houses were modest, but in the warmer months, backyards looked like the terraced gardens of sunny Italy with their fig trees, grape arbors, herbs and vegetables — every square inch of space was cultivated for table use. And every self-respecting cook had her own definitive recipes which were closely-guarded family secrets.

My interest in Italian food really began when the woman next door presented her son with a bride from the old country on his 30th birthday. He was handsome; the girl was gorgeous and the situation became a focal point for my budding interest in romance. Each day while the two women were tending the garden, the mother would give her new daughter-in-law an English lesson. I would always try to be within earshot, hoping to learn a thing or two about love and marriage. Instead, I found out a lot about northern Italian cooking.

SINCE THEN it has always astonished me that Italian restaurants only offer a small fraction of the dishes that are regularly served in Italian homes. The wealth of regional recipes carefully handed down from generation to generation are all but ignored. One exception to the dreary spaghetti and meatball routine is Ristorante DiLullo. Bolognese cooking is offered here without compromise and it is worth the trek into northeast Philadelphia to enjoy a meal that would even meet the exacting standards of my old next door neighbor.

The restaurant, is about a 15 minute drive from the Tacony-Palmyra bridge, on Oxford Avenue, a seemingly-endless street of undistinguished shops and row houses. In sharp contrast with its surroundings, the interior of DiLullo's is a dazzling combination of high tech and Italian modern decor. The idea that it once was a Kiddie City is laughable.

In the maze of glass and mirrored room dividers, soft lighting makes it difficult to distinguish between view and reflection. There is enough gleaming chrome and sparkling white woodwork and walls to keep an army busy cleaning. Try and get a table on the ground floor. The newer dining rooms downstairs are lovely, but far more conventional.

Even before July's Philadelphia Magazine named DiLullo's "Best Italian Restaurant," the place was not exactly a well-kept secret. Marcella Hazan, the Italian counterpart of Julia Child, is its menu consultant. Celebrities galore have their names affixed to individual wine bins downstairs. But you don't have to be famous to enjoy the food.

PLAN ON ORDERING an appetizer or soup, a pasta dish and an entree because the portions are not large. Neither are they cheap. The menu is a la carte and a complete meal will run between $20 to $25 per person, but if it is any consolation, the cooking is exquisite and only the finest ingredients are used.

Supplementing the regular menu are specialties of the day. In the appetizer category beefsteak tomatoes were topped with chopped onions, capers, peppers, and Parmesan cheese. Manzo Marinato is a cold beef salad; thinly sliced fillet, medium rare, marinated in red onions and fresh herbs. Mushrooms are stuffed with excellent mortadella sausage, prosciutto ham and Parmesan. Don't ask me to pick a favorite. A large wedge of peasant bread is moist and crusty. With sweet butter, it is totally irresistable.

The soup of the day was a fresh-tasting minestrone flavored with basil pesto. Tortellini in beef broth is one of the two soups always on the menu. On the evening we were there, the meat filled tortellini was undercooked and the returned portion came back to the table only slightly less crunchy (proving, I guess, that even wonderful restaurants can goof.)

All the pasta is made in a glassed-in section of the restaurant. Certainly the high point of the meal, the paper-thin sheets of dough are cut and stuffed every which way. Cappeletti or "little peaked hats" are made with spinach pasta stuffed with meat and served in a deliciously-light cream and tomato sauce. A similar sauce coats extraordinarily good tortelloni — small rectangular pasta pillows filled with swiss chard.

Nowhere is the difference between northern and southern Italian cuisine more apparent than in the sauces and at DiLullo's; if tomatoes are used at all, they are used sparingly. There is a classic meat sauce on the tagliatelle alla Bolognese, a whipped cream sauce on the ricotta stuffed tortelli and fettuccine is served Alfredo or tossed in a rosy shrimp sauce. Tiny fresh peas and unsmoked Italian ham accent the "straw and hay," a white and green noodle dish. A waiter grates cheese over each portion and believe it or not, the added effort makes a difference.

THREE SMALL VEAL scaloppine, sauteed with the faintest trace of Marsala wine in the sauce, are topped with a thin layer of melted Fontina cheese — a dish to be savored but definitely not for the large appetite. A portion of veal rollatine looks even smaller, although it probably isn't. Slices of veal are wrapped with prosciutto, sage and Parmigiano and are cooked in a white wine sauce. Looking at the dish gives you a feeling that you are staring through the wrong end of a telescope and once you have given everyone at the table a taste, you are left with the vegetable of the day: sauteed spinach and pine nuts.

Fillet of beef and sweetbreads were the two evening specials. The steak was good, but the sweetbreads, in a delightfully rich and complex sauce, were even better. When it comes to a choice between quality and quantity, there is really none as far as I'm concerned. No amount of trattoria food can compare with one perfect morsel at DiLullo's. A light refreshing salad is served after the main course.

Skip the fruit course and go right into dessert. Italian gelato (ice cream) is made daily in the kitchen. That evening it was pistachio and chocolate rum: very, very good and so was the zuppa, a custard, rum and cake combination. At least one person at the table should try the hazelnut torta if it is available. We did and wound up ordering two more slices, it was so wonderful. Meringue-like cake, butter cream, nuts and chocolate make it a scrumptious end to a delightful meal.

Drinks are large and well-made: the wine selection is adequate although a trifle high in price.

Service is prompt but, needless to say, this is no place to rush through dinner. With our espresso came an invitation to visit the newest offspring of owner Joe DiLullo, a private disco club. Saturday Night Fever all over again and kind of a culture shock for someone who grew up in the 50s.

End-plays, Squeezes, Coups, and others are all tools used in the game of bridge. It is often not clear-cut, however, as to when and where each one is to be used — and why. The most important reason for their use is to make the seemingly unmakeable contract. Take the above hand for example.

Glancing at the hand, it is obvious there is a sure heart loser plus one or two club losers, depending upon the play of the hand. But since the contract is six hearts and Declarer can only afford one loser, how can he possibly avoid the club losers? Now's the time for an end-play which the opening lead has made possible. Let's follow Declarer's line of play step by step. He ruffed the diamond ace opening lead in his hand and when he played his two high trumps, he got the bad news that he had a heart loser, in addition to the obvious one or two club losers. Being faced with a minimum of two losers, he decided to end-play West, who was known, at this point, to hold a sure heart trick. Therefore, Declarer first played out his A and K of spades and then gave West the lead with his heart queen. Poor West! Any lead he made gave Declarer access to the Dummy and three discards for his losing clubs.

The end-play had done its job.

NFL Rams, Buffalo Bill stamped for approval

By JOE GORDON

Much of the philatelic activity this summer is centered on the issuance of some very handsome souvenir cards.

The Bureau of Engraving and Printing released a card illustrating the U.S. $10 "Buffalo Bill" in honor of the International Paper Money Show held last month in Memphis, Tenn. Cards are $3 each postpaid.

Earlier this month, the BEP issued a card in conjunction with NAPEX, National Philatelic Exhibition, held in Washington, D.C. This card reproduces a block of four of the U.S. $5 stamp issued in 1923 which depicts the head of Freedom statue on the Capitol dome. This card is also priced at $3 postpaid.

These cards will remain on sale for 90 days from first day of sale and can be ordered from Office Services Branch, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, 14th and C Streets SW, Washington, DC 20228. Payment to accompany your order should be made by check or money order.

The U.S. Postal Service currently has available two souvenir cards. The first of these honoring the LONDON 1980 stamp exhibition held May 6 to 14 reproduces the U.S. two cent Jamestown issue of 1907. The cost of this card is $2 (mint only).

The second card also honors a stamp exhibition, NORWEX '80, which was mentioned here last month. This card is available at a cost of $2 mint or $2.15 with a show cancel on a 15 cent U.S. Winter Olympics stamp.

Cards are generally on sale for one year from date of issue. Orders should specify whether mint or canceled cards are desired and payment in the form of personal check or money order should be sent to Philatelic Sales Branch, U.S. Postal Service, Washington, DC 20265. There is a service charge of 50 cents per order, plus a $5 minimum requirement for mail orders. A current Philatelic Order List will be sent free on request from the above address.

This year marks the inaugural season for the NFL Rams, who will be playing in Anaheim. The International Stamp Collectors Society is taking note of the event with a set of two limited edition commemorative covers.

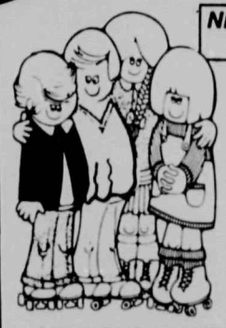

Designed by Los Angeles artist Allan Dordick, they are cacheted with action scenes on the football field and carry an exclusive USPS pictorial postmark which is also in the football motif. Captions are: "Commemorating the first 'Year of the Rams' in Anaheim" and "1980 Rams Official Inaugural Season Souvenir."

Rams Covers are available by mail at $5.95 per set of two. With each order comes a complimentary copy of the 1980 edition of "Football Digest," the annual guide to NFL and college schedules, statistics and rosters, to be published in late August.

To obtain covers, write: International Stamp Collectors Society, P.O. Box 854, Van Nuys, California 91408. Further information is available by calling 213-997-6496.

'Dressed to kill': fashioned from Hitchcock

By MICHAEL PALLAS

review

It is probable that long before the ending of Dressed to Kill you will be able to figure out whodunnit. That should not have you dashing off a mystery novel, applying for the police force, or acting on your suspicions about those weird people who live down the block.

A more appropriate response might be that director Brian DePalma has quite a way to go before he is considered more of an equal and less of an aficionado of Alfred Hitchcock, whom he so obviously emulates.

Before DePalma is worthy of serious comparison with Hitchcock, he will have to be more original. He will have to avoid plagiarizing techniques and settings of the great British master of suspense. And, as was the case with some techniques in Dressed to Kill (especially the final sequence, which bears remarkable similarity to his Carrie), he will have to avoid the folly of copying himself.

What DePalma has yet to learn from Hitchcock is that a suspense film must be somewhat believable; that audiences can only take so much manipulation of occurrences. Hitchcock might have told him of the great disappointment with The Wrong Man (1957), which, although based on a true story, was too fantastic for audiences to buy.

Those viewers who don't care so much for originality might be turned off by all of Dressed to Kill's flesh and blood ... two ingredients Hitchcock usually worked around, not over. Although, Angie Dickinson's revealing all (and I mean all) will probably be a big drawing card.

The story of Dressed to Kill is not an unfamiliar one. A woman (Dickinson) yearns for ... let's call it sexual satisfaction. After confiding her needs to her psychiatrist (Michael Caine), she goes to an art museum and finds what she's looking for with amazing dispatch. But a straight-razor-wielding maniac brings a not-so-happy ending to her assignation.

Soon her son (Keith Gordon) and a hooker (Nancy Allen) are in pursuit of this slasher. The prime suspect is an elusive patient of the psychiatrist and the viewer is treated to some chilling moments before the denouement.

There are also some moments of high technical enterprise and skill. For example, tracking shots and close-ups make the almost totally silent museum sequence quite memorable.

If you like thrillers, I think you will find Dressed to Kill every bit as suspenseful as others of the genre released this summer.

And, finally, if the plot is too simple for you, you might further your detective skills by figuring out a basic miscalculation by the film's amateur sleuth, which would have led to the discovery of the villain about halfway through the movie.

For more summer chills...

..."The Shining" is another much-trumpeted thriller guaranteed to raise goose bumps on the summer moviegoer. Jack Nicholson stars in the Stanley Kubrick film now playing at Quaker Bridge IV Theatres.

Museum screens 'Women in Art'

Five documentaries about celebrated female artists will be shown during the Newark Museum's "Friday Film Series" beginning Friday, Aug. 1, at 12:15 and 1:15 p.m. The films were initially featured on the WNET broadcast The Originals: Women In Art.

There will be no charge to the screenings which include Mary Cassatt: Impressionist from Philadelphia, Aug. 1; Louise Nevelson in Process, Aug. 8; Helen Frankenthaler — Toward a New Climate, Aug. 15; Spirit Catcher — The Art of Betye Saar, Aug. 22; Georgia O'Keeffe, Aug. 29.

This is the first series of films to concentrate solely on women artists who have always been outnumbered by male artists throughout history. The Newark Museum is located at 49 Washington Street. For information call 201-733-6600.

Film classics aired on summer public TV

New Jersey Public Television will continue its film series "Movies, Movies, Movies" during August on Channel 52.

Designed to celebrate New Jersey's obscure but historic role in the film-making industry, the series will air two films each week on Tuesdays at 8 p.m. and Saturdays at 9:30 p.m.

Movies scheduled for the next four weeks are: Angry Silence, Aug. 9; A Novel Affair, Aug. 12; Folly to Be Wise, Aug. 16; The Man Upstairs, Aug. 19; Swept Away, Aug. 26; Monty Python & the Holy Grail, Aug. 30; 7 Beauties, Sept. 2; Black Like Me, Sept. 6.

Women are spotlighted in McCarter films

Julia and The Turning Point — two films centering upon the relationship and conflict between two strongly drawn women characters — will comprise the sixth week of SUMMER CINEMA '80 at Kresge Auditorium on the Princeton campus, from Wednesday, July 30, through Sunday, Aug. 3.

Directed by Herbert Ross (The Seven Percent Solution) and written by playwright Arthur Laurents, The Turning Point is an old-fashioned backstage movie-musical transformed to the world of big-time ballet. The result, in the words of Newsweek Magazine, is a combination of "glorified soap-opera, stormily human melodrama, and ballet slice-of-life."

Shirley MacLaine plays Deedee, a one-time potential ballet star who chose to leave her dancing career to marry and raise a family, which includes husband Tom Skerritt and daughter Leslie Browne. Anne Bancroft is Emma, who stayed with her dancing career to become the prima ballerina Deedee thinks she could have been. The Turning Point examines their lifelong rivalry and friendship, as it also follows the rise to stardom of Deedee's daughter, who chooses the career her mother abandoned. The film includes many dance sequences and segments of various ballets danced by members of the American Ballet Theatre, and the supporting cast includes Mikhail Baryshnikov in his film debut.

Directed by Fred Zinnemann, Julia is based on an episode in playwright Lillian Hellman's autobiographical Pentimento. The story relates an actual incident in Miss Hellman's life when, at her friend Julia's request, she (Hellman) smuggled money through Nazi Germany to help secure freedom for Jews and other political prisoners. The film also examines Hellman's relationship with writer Dashiell Hammett, played by Jason Robards, whose performance won 1978's Oscar for Best Supporting Actor. Jane Fonda is Lillian Hellman, and Vannessa Redgrave's portrayal of Julia won her the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress. Julia also won a third Oscar for Alvin Sargent's screenplay.

Mini Movie Reviews

RATING KEY

Mini movie reviews are provided by Cineman Syndicate and do not necessarily reflect the views of Michael Pallas, TIME OFF'S film critic.

THE SHINING

Stanley Kubrick's haunted hotel film, based on Stephen King's best-selling novel, is a fascinating thriller about horror, rage and frustration. Yet as sumptuous and spellbinding as it is, many horror scenes wind up in puzzling dead ends. Kubrick seems to be trying too hard to be diabolical. Jack Nicholson gives a smashing performance as a congenial father who is gradually transformed into a snarling demon bent on killing his family with an ax. Shelley Duvall and Scatman Crothers also star. (R)

© 1980 CINEMAN SYNDICATE

THE EMPIRE STRIKES BACK

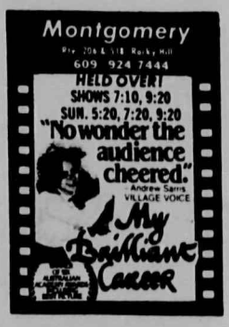

Space opera maestro George Lucas, creator of "Star Wars," scores again with another lulu of a fantasy adventure in a galaxy far far away. It's a worthy and sumptuous sequel with action galore and imaginative special effects that are special indeed. Old friends are back--Luke Skywalker, Han Solo, Chewbacca, R2-D2, C-3PO--galantly adventuring among the stars and planets. And there's a startling plot twist involving archvillain Darth Vader. Mark Hamill, Harrison Ford, David Prowse star. To be continued. (PG)

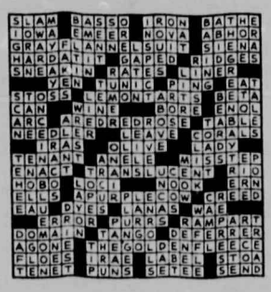

HONEYSUCKLE ROSE

Willie Nelson picks a mean guitar and sings rousing country-Western songs. He does a lot of that rather well in this film. But when the music stops there's only a wisp of a plot (mostly borrowed from "Intermezzo") about Nelson's infidelity while on the road. The scenario is a rather dull hillbilly soap opera. Dyan Cannon plays the long-suffering wife and sings country with style and gusto. Slim Pickens and Amy Irving also star. (PG)
