Karen, whose speech as class president will focus on the "personality of the class," agreed.

"A lot of teachers say that we are the best class they have seen in a long time," said Karen, who will be joining Donna at Duke University in the fall. "We all get along really well and we have a great attitude toward each other."

Keep growing

By BOB SULLIVAN
THE CHRONICLE

Graduation is a time for growing — both for those who leave their school, and for those who watch.

In the past, before the advent of au natural zoos, zookeepers had a different way of controlling their elephants.

You might think elephant control was a difficult job, but thanks to the elephants, it really wasn't.

Days after baby elephants were born, the training began. Naturally, baby elephants are easier to handle at that age.

Zookeepers would put a shackle around the baby's ankle and tie it with a heavy chain to a post in the ground. So when the babies would try to roam free, they would feel this painful tug at their leg. In no time, they learned their lesson.

Well, baby elephants grow up...and up, and up. The size of the shackle would change, but never the size of the chain or the strength of the post. A full grown elephant could easily rip the chain in two, or yank the post from the ground.

But the grown elephants never stepped beyond the imaginary circle which surrounded their lives.

Sometimes, people are like elephants. We forget that we grow up, forget to keep graduating.

Keep trying, you never know how you might grow.

Can town help schools to win the space race?

Tonight's meeting is first step

By JOANNE McFADDEN
THE CHRONICLE

Tonight's scheduled meeting between the Board of Education and the Township Committee will focus on addressing the schools' increasing need for space. One option likely to be raised by board members is the Community Center. The Board of Education owns the facility, which previously was used as Bloomingdale School, and leases it to the township.

According to board President Tom Bonhag, parents have raised concerns about rising enrollment, especially in the younger grades.

Bill Cashman, acting superintendent, agreed the days of declining enrollment have ended.

"We are seeing a very slight rise, about 30 to 50 students per year, and they are equally spread out through the district," he said.

What the district did not anticipate, he added, was the large influx of first-graders as parents who sent their children to full-day private kindergartens move them into the system. In addition, he said, kindergarten enrollment is also up, spurring the district to add classes at both Walnut and Hillside schools, and continuing a section at Orange Avenue School that was slated to be deleted.

The board's policy limits classes to 25 students. Ideally, Mr. Bonhag said, the board would like to see class sizes more in the 20 to 22 student range. Adding classes would be a simple solution, said Mr. Bonhag, if only the district had the additional space.

"It's not just a matter of hiring teachers and finding the money for that, it's a space issue," he said in a telelphone interview last week. "The question is where to put them."

Discussions about possibly relocating district-wide programs to the Community Center are still in the preliminary stages, said Mr. Bonhag, as the board looks for additional space and ways to better use existing space.

"We need to talk to the Township Committee and see if there are any rooms that we can use now that will not be disruptive to them, and whether they are adequate for our needs," he said. "We are not looking to displace senior citizens. We really just need to have this discussion so that both bodies will look at the resources they have."

Mr. Cashman agrees with the viability of using the Community Center.

"We could capture the rear wing of the building with little impact on the senior citizen or recreation programs," he said. "We also have space at Lincoln School within our grasp," he said.

In addition, said Mr. Cashman, the district could consider "creative scheduling changes" that would yield classroom space in individual buildings.

"I don't think our space needs are so severe right now," he said. "But we need to look for additional space if our enrollment continues to increase, even as mild as the upswing is."

That is what Mr. Bonhag hopes for: that the meeting will spur the board to conduct a comprehensive space study to determine what additional space is needed and for what programs and also spur the township to examine their options.

According to Mr. Cashman, although the school district had a management study completed several years ago, a space study has not been done since the late 1970s, when the district closed Lincoln, Sherman, Cleveland, and Roosevelt schools.

If the Community Center were to be considered, it would be ideal for programs that are centralized and not school building-dependent. One such program, said Mr. Bonhag, is the school district's Special Needs Assessment for Pre-School Youngsters (SNAPPY) program.

"It would appeal to me because those programs are not part of the neighborhood school system already in place in Cranford," he said. "Parents now must transport their children to Livingston School, with relocation, they would simply transport them to the Bloomingdale," he said.

According to Anthony Sciarrillo, board attorney, the lease between the district and the township has two parts: a two-year lease for the portion of the building facing Albany Avenue and a 25-year lease for the portion of the building parallel to Bloomingdale Avenue. The two-year lease provides for a 12-month notice of termination of the contract, but the 25-year lease has no termination clause because improvements to the building were built using Green Acres funding which requires 25-year leases.

Board adds aide to meet Hillside Ave. growth

Questions arise about blow-by-blow approach vs. long-term solution to enrollment hikes

By JOANNE McFADDEN
THE CHRONICLE

The Board of Education agreed to provide an aide for the crowded fourth grade at Hillside Avenue School. But some board members cautioned that solving concerns over increasing class size in elementary schools on an as-needed basis might lead to trouble.

"A review of enrollment numbers shows that there are other hot spots that may be trouble by September," said board member Richard Salls. "We need to address the issue in a whole fashion, rather than spot-check it," he said.

According to school board President Tom Bonhag, the board is required by its policy to be notified of any class that reaches the 25-student point.

"At that time, we consider the demographics and composition of the classes, not just absolute numbers, and the recommendations of the administration," he said.

The Hillside Avenue fourth grade is just one area of concern, said Bill Cashman, acting superintendent, who at Monday's meeting also identified crowded grade levels at Livingston Avenue's incoming fourth grade and Brookside Place's incoming second grade. At the recommendation of both Mr. Cashman and respective building principals, the board will ask parents of the second-graders to volunteer to transfer to Orange Avenue School. The Livingston Avenue School's class will remain status quo for now, said Mr. Cashman.

The two fourth grades at Hillside Avenue School number 23 and 24, which normally would not require intervention, said Mr. Cashman.

"But when we look at the special education component within that class, there is a pressing concern," he said, referring to the fact that there are six special education students assigned to those classes and an additional five who spend some time in each room for certain programs.

The board agreed to provide a full-time certified aide that would float between the two classes as needed. In addition, two high school cooperative education students will also be assigned to assist. According to Mr. Cashman, an experienced aide from the junior high level, who was scheduled to be reassigned due to the revised resource center concept, will be moved to the fourth-grade level.

While parents seemed to be pleased that action was taken, others including the president of the Cranford Education Association, thought a second certified teacher should be added rather than an aide.

"When you look about to staff that classroom, remember that special education children need a lot more attention throughout the day. At a minimum, they need an experienced aide, and far beyond a cooperative student," he said, explaining that special education teachers will be used at the High School to assist in regular classrooms with mainstreamed special education students.

New superintendent starts tomorrow

By BRIAN P. DUNLEAVY
THE CHRONICLE

For Emalene Renna, tomorrow is like the first day of school.

After rising to the top schools post in North Haledon eight years ago, Dr. Renna, 52, starts tomorrow as Cranford's new schools superintendent, replacing Robert D. Paul, who retired last year. She plans to bring her "cooperative management" and teamwork philosophy to the township schools.

"I feel that in order to accomplish something in Cranford, the district needs to have a group effort," Dr. Renna said in a phone interview last week. "It's not happening in Cranford now and, if it doesn't in the future, we'll just be spinning our wheels."

During 14 years as an educator in North Haledon, Dr. Renna said she established that "team atmosphere," earning credibility first as a teacher then as an elementary school principal. In Cranford, though, she has to start from the top.

"That's the challenge," Dr. Renna said. "You can't operate a school system successfully unless there is an open and trusting environment and that has to be earned over time. I've done it before and I hope I can shorten the process in Cranford."

Dr. Renna faces other challenges as well, including the transition from a K-8, 600-student district in North Haledon to a K-12, 3,100-student district in Cranford. She also falls into the fire of replacing an often controversial superintendent in Dr. Paul.

"What they've got is me, my education and my management style," Dr. Renna said of the transition. "What is past is past and it almost doesn't matter. I plan to work with my management style in Cranford. I certainly hope it works."

After she moves into her new office tomorrow, Dr. Renna will spend the first few days "getting to know my secretary and the office process." She will also begin interviewing candidates for the professional staff, which the school board is scheduled to hire July 12.

Julia Renedo, too

Orange Avenue School officials have asked that one student, inadvertently omitted from the June 23 eighth-grade class night program, be mentioned in this week's issue.

Julia Renedo is a fully accredited member of the eighth-grade graduating class at Orange Avenue School. In addition to her academic work, Julia was a member of the eighth-grade chorus.

"I haven't learned the nuts and bolts of what needs to be done here yet because I have been in North Haledon," Dr. Renna said. "I have to use all the skills I have to make sure the board, the teachers and the parents work together. If we can't, we'll get nothing accomplished.

Once this initial work is completed, Dr. Renna said she and the board will begin developing a "child-oriented mission statement" by September.

"I want to develop a strong sense of mission in Cranford," Dr. Renna said. "And, that mission must be the best possible education for the children. For the spirit of cooperation to work, we have to come with an agreeable mission statement. There has to be give and take and there has to be compromise because the minute that this becomes 'Here is what I want to do,' then it loses its authenticity."

'My style requires more work of others so it's a cooperative effort of work and time from more than just one person'

Following that "spirit of cooperation" theory, Dr. Renna plans to consult all of the district constituent groups before developing the mission statement and her official plan of action. With her as the "educational leader," the district will develop an action plan for the 1993-94 school year and beyond based on a community and staff "perceived needs assessment."

"A school system has to be run like a business and the client is always the children," Dr. Renna said. "My style requires more work of others so it's a cooperative effort of work and time from more than just one person."

'I hope people notice a difference by September. I would consider myself a failure in Cranford if there is not a difference in the classroom for the children'

She will also spend a great deal of time in the individual schools, observing classrooms and meeting with board members, parents, teachers and administrators.

"I am not going to get a sense or feel for the district unless I am out there in the schools," Dr. Renna said. "This goes to back to my teaching days — it mattered to me that the [superintendent] was out there and caring what I did. If you want the teachers to do the best they can, they have to feel it matters. I can't be in every classroom all the time but spending time seeing what's happening with the children is more important than being bogged down with paperwork so I can get out of the office at 4 p.m. sharp."

Dr. Renna said she also brings her No. 1 skill to Cranford — her ability to get others involved.

"People can contribute and I can make them feel like they want to contribute," Dr. Renna said." The real skill is getting people — including kids, teachers and administrators — to be better than they thought they could be. I am a true believer in what I do and I just try to get others to believe it's worthwhile."

In comparing North Haledon and Cranford, Dr. Renna sees a good base of people — staff, parents, board members and administrators — to begin the process here.

"There seems to be a lot of dedicated people but they need someone to pull them together," Dr. Renna said. "People don't do their best in isolation. In any community, there are outstanding educators, average educators and some people you'd rather not have around. But, there is no question in my mind that there is a solid corps of people to get things going."

With that group working as a team, Dr. Renna hopes to lead the Cranford school district toward educational improvement. She hopes the township will notice the change immediately.

"I hope people notice a difference by September," Dr. Renna said. "I would consider myself a failure in Cranford if there is not a difference in the classroom for the children. It would not matter what the board or the press thinks, I don't take failure well. This needs to be done. The community deserves it and, more importantly, the kids deserve it."

Hits & misses

There are so many July 4 hits to anticipate that misses must be from Summer Scrooge

HIT: Cranford's colorful, competitive, celebration of July Fourth Saturday and Sunday offers active and passive events for enjoying the most patriotic of holidays in the most accommodating of community atmospheres. Summer is in full bloom and everyone's feeling great.

MISS: Summer Scrooge notes that, "Hard as it is to believe, Cranford schools reopen in just over two months from the July Fourth festivities — on September 7."

HIT: The glow of pride, class and accomplishment generated by the graduates of Brearley, Cranford, Westfield, Scotch Plains-Fanwood and Union Catholic High Schools in their recent awards nights and commencement ceremonies. It was a treat for young and old to witness the culmination of nine years of education and maturation.

MISS: The federal labor department reports, and Summer Scrooge underscoring, that jobs for teens are scarcer than usual — even as college costs loom and some parents softly tap the drum of financial independence for their eldest offspring.

HIT: The matchless taste of fresh strawberries, blueberries or blackberries mingling with cream or ice cream. What a hit on a hot summer's eve, eh?

MISS: The continuing absence of an electrifying, air-tight medical/nutritional study that proves beyond anyone's reasonable range of doubt that the aforementioned summer desserts actually reduce body weight, build strength, mental acuity and reduce cholesterol levels. "Fat chance," says Summer Scrooge.

HIT: That ever-fresh sensation of taking a plunge into the backyard, club or community swimming pool as yet another hazy, hot and humid day slowly dims to a restless night of tossing and turning.

MISS: The fees, limited parking or bath facilities, inability to swim, agoraphobia, or other restrictions that effectively make truly free and open public swimming in a suburb like ours a goal, rather than a reality. "No pay, no play," Summer Scrooge snuffs.

HIT: A chilled summer drink and supper taken on the lawn, porch or deck.

MISS: Ants, yellow jackets and that blasted Summer Scrooge.

Letters to the editor

Pedas's demotion 'shameful, vindictive'

To The Chronicle:

I am writing this letter to speak out against the shameful and vindictive demotion of Tom Pedas, the vocal director at Cranford High School. I would also like to urge every student (along with their parents) who was lucky enough to have had him as their teacher to do the same.

Tom Pedas is a warm, caring, and talented professional who gave his students 100 percent. He gave his students a sense of pride and a feeling of accomplishment. He took a choir that was mediocre and turned it into one of the best in the state, achieving some recognition nationally as well. He was frequently at school as early as 7 a.m. for rehearsal with students who could not otherwise do so. He also worked late in the evenings rehearsing or traveling with the Madrigal Singers. Mr. Pedas is a teacher of the caliber that we can ill afford to lose.

To the parents who complained about the luggage search before the choir trips, I say, "tough." It is not unheard of for a student to smuggle drugs or alcohol on those trips. Better safe than sorry.

To the people who complained about the religious songs at the holiday concert, may I remind you that the holiday itself is of a religious nature and therefore the music is more than appropriate. Perhaps you would rather they sang Cop Killer or Cocaine. If you don't approve of the music sung at the concert, then perhaps you should not attend or allow your children to participate.

To the people directly responsible for Mr. Pedas's demotion I say, "Shame. Shame on you." Your petty jealousy is unbecoming not only to your profession, but to yourselves as well. Instead of pride and concern for C.H.S. and the students, you chose to unnecessarily humiliate and eliminate a kind and caring gentleman, a teacher who was loved by his students, brought home the awards, and received the applause he did not seek but so richly deserved. The vocal music department at CHS will never again be as great as Tom Pedas made it.

Finally, to Mr. Pedas, a heartfelt Thank You! You taught my children to appreciate music other than rock and roll. You believed in them and taught them how to sing.

Bonhag's speech was out of place at CHS commencement

To The Chronicle:

On Thursday evening I attended the Cranford High School graduation and was impressed with the decorum of the class of 1993 as well as with the speeches given by the students and principal, Mr. Seyfarth. On the other and, I was appalled and angered by the speech presented by Mr. Bonhag, president of the Board of Education.

Mr. Bonhag chose to use the graduation as a political platform to voice his opinion regarding the Supreme Court's decision on separation of church and state. Regardless of his opinion, it was inappropriate for him to express his view at this time. As the representative of our community this statement implies that the majority of those present share his views which has not been determined in any form or fashion.

By discussing this topic, Mr. Bonhag has mocked the Supreme Court's ruling and the township's response to this issue. He also insulted the constituents who were there to celebrate the graduatioin.

If this issue distrubs Mr. Bonhag to such an extent that he finds it necessary to disrespect the highest court of this nation, and his township, perhspas he should consider lobbying in a less offensive and more appropriate manner.

Parts greater than whole with Garwood board of education

To The Chronicle:

It amazes me how nine people, most of whom I know to be reasonably intelligent, can collectively have only one functioning brain cell.

I am speaking, of course, of the Garwood Board of Education. There are many big decisions which must be made quickly — to name a few, renew the insurance policy, put new roofs on the buildings, arrange the pre-K, kindergarten and first grade classrooms for September and finalize teaching assignments for September. As I write this, tomorrow is the last day of school, and none of these decisions have been made. What are they waiting for? What kind of security can the children have if they don't know where they are going in September? I specifically refer to the "Early Learning Center" children, but the poor seventh- and eighth-graders have suffered by the indecision of the Board.

The high school has been taken away from them, and their own Board of Education failed to stand up for them. Now the younger children will form the indecision of the board. I agree that before decisions are made, you must have all the facts, but there comes a time when fact-finding is done and choices must be made.

We are blessed in Garwood with wonderful teachers and despite the board, a wonderful program that our children are doing well in. It amazes me how the teachers can teach as well as they do without support from the board.

I admire the intentions and desires of each of the board members. It requires time and dedication to run for and serve on the board. But it also requires the backbone to make decisions. Please, let's make those decisions before we pay too high a price.

Gratitude for three Cranford Good Samaritans

To The Chronicle:

My wife and I are very grateful to the three gentlemen who helped her pick me up after my fall on the North Avenue sidewalk last on the afternoon of June 21).

As I was in no condition to ask their names, they must remain in our memories as anonymous passers-by. They know who they are even though we do not. The thanks is heartfelt.

The big crime wave in little Kenilworth

To The Chronicle:

It seems there are several hundred vicious criminals living in the Borough of Kenilworth. These dastardly people not only allegedly openly violated a borough code, they also preferred to keep their children at home, in their own driveways, instead of hanging out at Dunkin Donuts, the post office, Krauszer's strip mall, or 20th Street and the Boulevard. Imagine, adults installing basketball backstops in their own driveways. What heinous act will they think of next?

I must confess that I am one of the recalcitrants. There has been a basketball backstop in my double driveway for 10 years, 16 feet from the curb (the telephone pole is right on the curb). Strangely enough, I haven't had a complaint or problem from anyone; neighbors, police, not even the zoning officer around the corner.

Having been an elected official in the borough, I am certainly more than passingly aware of the need for laws and codes and the need for their enforcement. However, the seven-line, catch-all paragraph of Article III, Section 197-7 referring to "structures" and "uses" not specifically authorized does not, I'm sure, intend to concern itself with basketball playing in my own driveway. It's rather sad, especially when I can sit here and list a few wide-open violations never publicly addressed by anyone. It really requires a major stretch of my imagination to think of a basketball backstop as a "structure" or "obstacle" in the strip along my driveway.

This is a major farce. Criminals of the "Basketball Backstop" unite and beat back this stupidity.

By the way, if you have turned your garage into a room ... deep trouble. The borough codes require a garage.

Citizen calls for more to go to school meetings

To The Chronicle:

I urge all Garwood residents interested in providing a good educational program for our young people to start attending our local school board meetings.

In my opinion, our school system is heading toward a serious educational crisis.

As of June 24, our school system does not have the following:

1. A permanent superintendent of schools, school business administrator/board secretary, supervisor of special services, and a complete child study team.

2. A staffing pattern and physical facilities to open our schools in September.

I have served as a school board member, not in our local district, for over 30 years and have never observed such chaos as now exists in our local school system.

Newly elected board members Spina and Toth should review the videotape of candidates night; it might help them to recall what they said that evening. It is about time they stopped following the negative performances of Urrico, Austin and Koenig.

Our schools will reopen in 70 days. If enough people attend the next several board meetings maybe they will open with a full staff and ample physical facilities.

To The Chronicle:

I'm sure we all have things "we must do before we die." Well, add this to your list: Special Olympics.

My father and I had one awesome privilege of volunteering at the New Jersey Special Olympics held at Trenton State College the weekend of June 18. Needless to say, we both were very touched by what we experienced that weekend. The athletes who competed were, indeed, special — not because of their disability, but because of their capabilities and the determination to use the gifts that God has given them.

I will never forget the incredibly talented athletes I worked with that weekend, nor will my father. Words will not adequately express the feelings we felt upon leaving the games. It's an experience that you must engage in "before you die" in order to understand how we felt.

The Special Olympics are on every year. Go for it! And let me know how the experience turned out for you.

Can botany be easier than municipal economics?

To The Chronicle:

In a recent issue of The Chronicle, my dilemma was "What is it?"

After last week's town meeting (June 7), my dilemma is "How do you do it?" I am referring to how far can you stretch that $100,000 "savings" that was so paramount in the politically motivated move to oust Robert A. Guertin from the safety director's job?

The mystery of my plant's identification was swift and clear. Perhaps this week's question could be answered too.

CHS graduates' speeches reflect on challenges

PRESTON MACK/THE CHRONICLE

'We need to act on our beliefs...'

By DONNA LOUIZIDES
CO-VALEDICTORIAN

Today, we the class of 1993, sit together for the last time, waiting impatiently for our diplomas and freedom. The time has come for us to begin new chapters in our lives. Looking back on the past four years, we will never forget how we've all matured and learned a great deal. Each and every one of us now has the opportunity to govern his or her life and create his or her own unique mark on the world.

Many people seem to fear our country's future. They point to the prejudice, the disastrous state of the economy, the destruction of our environment, the ineffectiveness of health care, the corruption of our government, the increase of the poverty-stricken, and the spread of AIDS. They talk about the apathy and selfishness of today's youth and the deterioration of moral principles. Kenny Loggins once wrote:

"Where are the dreams that we once had?
This in the time to bring them back
What were the promises caught on the tips of our tongues?
Do we forget or forgive?
There's a whole other life waiting to be lived
When one day you're brave enough
To talk with Conviction of the Heart."

We, as graduates, must have the ability to communicate our ideas and support our views. Not only must we become involved, voice our concerns, and dream our dreams, but we need to act on our beliefs and work relentlessly to accomplish our goals. Although this may sound relatively easy, it becomes very difficult when you find yourself all alone, a proponent of an unpopular viewpoint. This is the time when Your "conviction of the heart" is truly tested.

We, as Americans, must learn to embrace people of different races, religious beliefs and sexual orientations. Similarly, we must accept and respect those who hold different ideals from ours. By listening with open minds to others who support differing opinions and by constantly reevaluating our own viewpoints, we can help our nation to work together as a whole in the future. Kenny Loggins continued along the same vein:

"How long must we all wait to change
This world bound in chains that we live in?
To know what it is to forget and be forgiven.
It's been too many years of taking now
Isn't it time to stop somehow?
Air that's too angry to breathe
Water our children can't drink.
You've heard it hundreds of times
You say you're aware, believe, and you care
But do you care enough?
Where's your Conviction of the Heart?

I wish that the pessimistic public could witness for just a few hours the kind of idealism and concern which this Class of 1993 exudes. We all realize that the future of our world is contingent upon our solving significant enigmatic problems which have stumped society for years, yet I have faith in our generation. I am proposing that we shoulder these issues as one united front, as one United States; only then will we be able to resolve them as quickly and effectively as possible.

To the Class of 1993, whether you are entering college or the work force, you are a leader of tomorrow. Soon we will go our own separate ways but I want to leave all of you with one final challenge: have the courage to hold onto your own "Convictions of the Heart."

'Graduation ceremony is not goodbye'

By WILLIAM FINNEGAN
SALUTATORIAN

Much has changed during the four years this Class of 1993 spent at Cranford High School. The state chose a new governor, the country elected a new president and the world developed a new order. Most of all, however, we, the graduates of the Class of 1993 of Cranford High School, have changed. We have gone from intimidated, diffident freshman to confident, outgoing seniors in what truly seems a very short time. Indeed, it does not seem that long ago that this class seated behind me first entered Cranford High School and confronted new peers, new teachers, new chances and, above all, new expectations. We were no longer expected simply to work; we were expected to strive, to achieve, to excel, whether it be on the playing field or in the classroom.

As this graduation ceremony comes to its conclusion, so too do our childhoods, times of unforgettable and undeniable change and maturity, trial and tribulation. We have been raised by our parents, taught by our teachers and nurtured by our friends through some of the most difficult and happy times we shall ever experience. Parents, just as you may find it hard to let go of us, we truly do find it difficult to let go of you. Just as surely, though, we find it difficult to let go of each other; many of the graduating seniors you see before you have friends they have known since kindergarten and first grade; it will be these familiar faces and friendships that will be sorely missed in the next few years.

Now, as we prepare to enter the world as adults, we do so hopefully, with open eyes, open hearts and open minds. This graduation ceremony, though it does signify an important rite of passage, is not goodbye. Even though we all plan to go our separate ways this fall — some to work, some to college — we shall all meet again in the future. I look forward to that meeting with great anticipation — anticipation for what I hope we shall become and what I know we shall achieve.

'We have expectations for ourselves'

By ERICA GREULICH
CO-VALEDICTORIAN

When Bill Clinton was chosen to be the 42nd president of the United States, many people believed that he would come to Washington and lift spirits, reduce unemployment and jumpstart the economy. In reality, he did lift spirits, if only temporarily, but today he is struggling to pass his budget package; people are losing confidence that he can significantly change things for the better. The American economy is improving, but at the same slow rate as when Clinton came into office.

Many people see the uncertainty and confusion in Washington, D.C., clouding the economic picture, with no satisfactory end in sight. Given the high expectations people had for Bill Clinton at the time of the election, it would probably have been impossible for any human being to succeed in his situation. There seems to be a vicious cycle: every time a new president is elected to office, popularity, hopes and expectations run high. When that president fails to fulfill people's hopes and anticipation, his popularity plummets.

Our graduation is similar to the election and inauguration of a new president — we have completed our "term" of the past four years and are moving on to the next phase of our lives. As with each incoming president, everyone has expectations as to what we should accomplish. We have expectations for ourselves — to succeed in our careers, in the work force, in our college and throughout our lives. Success — defined as the favorable or prosperous result of attempts or endeavors — can be a vague concept, however, it depends upon what goals we set for ourselves. If we aim high, we may not accomplish all we desire, but we will certainly achieve more than if we were to set other insignificant goals or none at all. By setting goals, we encourage ourselves to work and strive in order to achieve them; hopefully, our hard work and dedication will lead to success...

Like each new president, we will face adversity in the future; it may not be a country needing aid or an unyielding opposing political party, but quite possibly vocational or academic problems, peer pressure, sickness, or injury. We will have to deal with such "checks and balances" in our own way, hopefully learning and maturing from the experiences and profiting from them by using them to our advantage in the future. Setbacks are not failures; by keeping a focus on our primary objectives, nothing will prevent us from succeeding, even if we do not attain all of our goals.

Just as the president makes decisions that affect him as a citizen of the United States, all of us will make vocational, educational, and social decisions directly affecting our lives and our future. By making our own choices and sticking to our convictions, not abandoning them in the face of adversity, we can eventually use our abilities and talents to become unique individuals...

This coming fall, we will be going our separate ways... some of us will enter the working world; some will be in the armed services; some will enroll in college. I hope that, when we meet again, years from now, we will each share and be proven of our respective successes. I look forward to that meeting!

'We came to know each other as people...'

CLASS PRESIDENT

In thinking back over the past few years, I see the class of 1993's high school experience as related to the movie, The Breakfast Club. The students of this year's senior class entered the hallowed halls of CHS in September of 1989. Some were scared, others excited. Some were confused, others lonely. But all of us were freshmen, the lowest rung an the high school ladder, unsure of what would unfold in the next four years. Like the students in the Saturday school class in The Breakfast Club, we slowly let down our guards, got past the images and became friends. We overlooked our diversities, and shared stories, laughter, and sometimes even tears. We came to know each other as people, not just classmates.

In the past four years at Cranford High School, no one event defined our class, but rather many events. We are the class that watched the football team rise to conquer Elizabeth for the first time in many years. We are the class that was the first group of seniors to lose to the juniors at powder puff football. We are the class that saw the high school auditorium sell out for the first time in history, during our production of Grease. We are the class that waved goodbye to Mr. Blasucci, the former assistant principal, and welcomed Mrs. Wilde to the open position. We are the class that witnessed many other events and accomplishments...

Yes, we, the Class of 1993, have set ourselves apart. We are a class that has exhibited respect and sincerity for our peers. Numerous teachers and administrators have commented on the candor and fine accomplishments of our class. One teacher remarked, "A class like yours is very special. It comes around once every five or more years..."

At the end of The Breakfast Club, the students, now friends, prepare to return to reality. One questions, "Will things go back to normal on Monday?" referring to the cliques that would separate them again. Yes, there will be change. After today each person will begin to pave his or her own way. We will enter reality, and our high school years will be a memory...

No, life will never be the same. We will never be high school students again. And we may not even remain friends. But we will always be the "Class of 1993."

Tanker named Len Kernick, his tank named Cranford among first in Berlin — XXVI

By STUART AWBREY
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

A tank named "Cranford" accompanied the first troops into Berlin and was reviewed along with other U.S. armor by President Harry Truman at the end of World War II.

The driver was Leonard Kernick, who named the light tank after his town and fought in it across France and Belgium into Germany in 1945. Mr. Kernick, a bemedaled veteran who lived on Cayuga Road until his death recently, received command of a new tank after recovering from wounds received in Normandy in 1944. As part of a Company "C," the tank's name had to start with that letter, but his captain gave him discretion to choose the full name.

"I chose my hometown," he told the Chronicle later.

His mechanics lettered the name on both sides of the driver's hatch and Cpl. Kernick kept the vehicle intact with the Second Armored "Hell on Wheels" Division to the end of the war. He had fought alongside "Screaming Eagles" paratroopers in Normandy and his unit was called to Belgium to relieve them in the Battle of the Bulge the following winter. The Cranford crossed over the Elbe River into what later became the Russian zone of conquered Germany. Cpl. Kernik, then 22, recalled a number of peaceful contacts with Soviet soldiers.

The war in Europe became a homecoming of sorts for the corporal, who was born in England. He was brought to the United States by his parents at age 6 and he grew up on North Avenue East. He graduated from Cranford High School in 1940 and enlisted in 1942 after manufacturing artillery guns in Rahway. He earned arrowhead honors for the invasions of Sicily and Normandy. Advancing through hedgerows behind German lines in Normandy, he spotted an enemy bazooka aimed at his light tank a second before it fired. Two of his four members were killed and he was hospitalized in England with burns on his face and hands plus shrapnel wounds. He took over the Cranford when he returned to France.

Cpl. Kernick earned six major battle stars to accompany his European Theatre of War Ribbon.

Torch run

Members of the Garwood Police Department accepting the Special Olympics "Torch" from Cranford Police Department runners are Dispatcher Elizabeth Brodie and Sgt. Dennis Lesak. The Garwood Police Department collected the most money in all of Union County with $3,658 for this year's run. The torch eventually arrived at Trenton State College to kick off the weekend athletic events involving some 2,000 mentally retarded children and adults in the Special Olympics events. Other runners for Garwood PD were Officer Mike Lueddeke and his son, Michael; Officer William Legg and his son, Billy; Kristen Lesak, Sgt. Lesak's daughter, and Kristen's friend Tracy Planas.

Garwood woman earns doctorate at Seton Hall

CRANFORD — Roseann Bucciarelli of Garwood, acting director of Union County College's Department of Continuing Education and Community Services, has received a doctorate in higher education administration from Seton Hall University in South Orange.

Ms. Bucciarelli's degree was earned from the College of Education and Human Services, Department of Educational Supervision and Administration at Seton Hall. She received the degree at commencement ceremonies May 24.

Her dissertation was on "A Comparison of Higher Education Delivery Systems for Adults and Implications for New Jersey Community Colleges." It focused on an increase in the number of students ages 25 and older who are attending community colleges, resulting in a necessity for such institutions to adjust their traditional programs to meet the needs of an older student population.

The purpose of her study was to review and compare how college credit courses are made available to "adult" students in New Jersey community colleges, and how these institutions serve the needs of non-traditional age learners through these various course delivery systems.

Ms. Bucciarelli used qualitative-naturalistic inquiry to examine three particular methods of course-delivery. Research procedures included formal interviews with New Jersey community college administrators whose responsibilities include these course delivery methods, document review, and a discussion with "adult" students.

Results of her study indicate that telecourse, off-campus course, and weekend college class programs — learning situations generally preferred by the older students — are stronger and more successful in community colleges where the senior administration fully supports these endeavors. Her recommendations include the colleges applying more concerted efforts in these areas to help "adult" students feel more a part of the college community.

Other suggestions include creating new or enhancing existing telecourses, off-campus courses, and weekend college classes; giving businesses a greater awareness about college credit courses that may be tailored to employee scheduling needs, and encouraging greater participation by community college administrators in state and national organizations that address "adult" continuing education issues.

Ms. Bucciarelli joined the UCC staff in 1988 as assistant continuing education director, and was later promoted to the position of director, lifelong learning. She was named last fall to her acting directorial role.

Ms. Bucciarelli holds a bachelor's degree from Fordham University and a master's degree from Seton Hall.

ASK The PRO'S...
1) What compression ball should I use?
Strong players should use 100 compression balls and mostly balata. Average players should use 90 compression with surlyn covers. Ladies should use 80 compression balls.
2) What's the difference between balata and surlyn?
Balata is more of a rubbery substance where as surlyn is like a plastic. Balata has a softer feel.
3) What is the advantage of Cavity Back Irons?
a) They have a lower center of gravity to hit the ball higher.
b) They have a bigger sweetspot to make your mis-hits more forgiving.
c) They have more toe weight to stabilize impact in the hitting area.
4) Should tall women play mens clubs?
No. Men's golf clubs have stiffer shafts and are generally too heavy most of the time for women.
5) Should golfers play with jumbo grips if they have big hands?
No. Because the thicker the grip, the more it increases a slice. Only in very extreme cases do we suggest jumbo grips.
6) Are all graphite shafts whippy?
No. You can get extremely stiff graphites. To fit a person properly you need to determine club head speed.
7) What is custom fitting?
It is when a golf club is properly fitted to a person's golf swing, club head speed, height, hand size, weight distribution, etc.
8) What are the advantages of graphite shafts?
They are lighter and they generate more club speed for better distance. They also absorb a lot more shock than steel.
9) What makes 'Tee To Green Golf' stand out above the competition?
We pride ourselves with delivering the finest customer service in N.J. Our club fitting is an exact science, leaving very little to chance. Our professional staff, along with our computerized swing analyzer enables us to fit you to the exact right clubs for your swing. We guarantee it!!

Regional brass reworking racial balance plan

By CHERYL HEHL
THE CHRONICLE

The Union County Regional District was sent back to the drawing table two weeks ago to come up with a more defined plan for racial balance in the district by July 31.

According to a source close to the ongoing dialogue going on between the regional district and the State Office of Facilities Planning, the district is still not in compliance with state racial balance requirements. Apparently, the district submitted the required plan late and then was summoned to Trenton to meet with Dr. Gilda Rorro and Marcella Smith, who determined the district was not in compliance.

Earlier this year the Chronicle reported the district was racially unbalanced, but that the state had not been aware of the imbalance until the school closing issue surfaced. The majority of Asian students remain in Governor Livingston High School in Berkeley Heights, while the majority of black and Hispanic students were at Brearley and Dayton. Arthur L. Johnson had the lowest black and Hispanic ratios, but this will change with the impending closing of David Brearley High School in Kenilworth.

While the district has remained close-mouthed about the meeting, and in fact has maintained they have not received a letter sent by county schools Superintend Leonard Fitts outlining the seven areas of compliance, the Chronicle spoke with Mr. Smith in the state facilities planning department who said the letter was in fact received by the district.

According to Mr. Smith, the meeting between the district and the state was "good," but the district failed to meet several areas of compliance. Early this year at a meeting held in Trenton, the district proposed balancing the district through a "thematic" scheme which would target certain schools for separate themes. But when the district filed the required plan, they failed to designate this proposal.

"The imbalance is not severe," maintained Mr. Smith, explaining that the racial configuration of a district such as this is "way down on the list" when it comes to racial balance.

Last week, Kenilworth Borough Council reacted to the news by firing a letter off to the state Department of Education blasting the district for "failing to properly plan for the closing of a school," citing the lack of a racial balance plan as a reason.

"Such acts of neglect by the district will have an adverse impact on the educational system in the years to come," read the letter signed by Councilman Michael Tripodi, who is also a law student about to take the New Jersey Bar exam.

Mr. Tripodi also maintains in the letter that the plan requested by the State Department of Facilities Planning "does not comply with the requirements set forth in New Jersey state statutes.

"Specifically, the department gave 'conditional approval' to the district if several requirements were met," said the councilman's letter, "including racial balance and affirmative action in the district's new school alignment."

Meanwhile, in a related matter, the Bagger-Lustbader bill allowing residents to determine a school's fate was approved by the assembly and was headed for Governor Jim Florio's desk last week. The bill establishes the necessary legal procedures for the dissolution of a limited-purpose regional school district.

Currently the law only provides the legal procedure for the withdrawal of a district from a limited purpose regional district, but fails to specify a procedure for the dissolution of a local district.

Monroe Lustbadder said the bill was "prompted by the proposed closing of David Brearley Regional High School in Kenilworth."

"The plan to dissolve the Kenilworth high school district sparked protests by local residents who demanded a greater voice in the final determination of which local district may be dissolved," said the assemblyman.

Assemblyman Richard Bagger said "the people involved (in a school closing) should be entitled to determine what they deem best for themselves and their children."

Waldorf court date near for U.S. appeal

By CHERYL HEHL
THE CHRONICLE

The $16.2 million Waldorf judgment reared its head in Kenilworth again this week as the borough prepared to argue its case before the Third District Court of Appeals in Philadelphia.

Last September, a U.S. District Court jury awarded Staten Island resident Mark Waldorf $16.2 million for injuries he received more than a decade ago in an accident at the corner of North 14th Street and Monroe Avenue. Mr. Waldorf, left a quadriplegic from injuries sustained in the accident, was awarded $8.4 million during a previous trial in 1988. The borough appealed this judgment and the case was sent back for retrial.

The second appeal was filed immediately after the trial last year when a request by the borough for a mistrial based on an alleged jury taint was denied. Attorneys representing the borough based the appeal on the effect broad media coverage of a similar trial in New York and subsequent award of $30 million had on the Waldorf jury. Part of the appeal was based on the fact the jury passed around a newspaper article about the New York judgment in the jury room prior to deliberation.

In the meantime, Mayor Joseph Rego formed an ad hoc committee several weeks ago to seek alternative solutions to funding the debt. Members of the ad hoc committee include Councilmen Don Rica, Mike Tripodi and Dennis Schultz. To date, council and members of the ad hoc committee have remained tight-lipped regarding potential avenues the borough could pursue.

"We have been trying to lessen the cost to taxpayers," Mayor Rego said, "but we have to have a plan in place if we lose the appeal."

In 1989, former Mayor Joseph Benintente formed a similar committee which recommended selling off vacant borough property and securing bonding through the state to pay off the judgment. This, however, was never followed up on. If the governing body pursues bonding to pay a multi-million dollar debt, special legislation will be needed. A private loan, though, would not require this measure.

Bankruptcy, however, is not an option, says Councilman Mike Tripodi who is about to take the New Jersey Bar exam.

"The state would not allow us to declare bankruptcy," explained the councilman, "and we would not want to." He also pointed out that the state "would not allow" the borough to go bankrupt. But Kenilworth is not down for the count.

According to the mayor, more than $600,000 in back taxes will come into the borough coffers from redevelopment of the former Volco site, as well as the $250,000 earmarked in the 1993 budget toward the Waldorf debt.

Nevertheless, the borough is preparing for what could be a major blow to taxpayers if some other method to finance the multi-million dollar judgment is not found. Compounding the problem is the fact the borough admitted liability last August for the faulty traffic signal at the intersection of Monroe and North 14th Street the night of the accident. Prior to this Mr. Waldorf sought to prove the borough knew the traffic signal at the intersection had been malfunctioning for two years prior to the accident. In fact, it was Mr. Waldorf's attorneys who located a memo issued by a borough official some two years prior to the accident warning of malfunctioning light.

Despite the admission of liability, many questions remain up in the air until the court of appeals hears oral arguments this month. However, it could be up to three months before a decision is handed down.

Borgia is summa cum laude Princeton engineer graduate

Alejandro Borgia, son of Frank and Alicia Borgia of Kenilworth, was awarded a bachelor's degree in engineering at Princeton University's 246th commencement June 8.

Mr. Borgia, who graduated summa cum laude, majored in computer science and will begin graduate studies in the field of artificial intelligence in September at the University of California, where he will eventually earn his Ph.D.

Mr. Borgia was also inducted into Sigma Xi, the National Honor Society for scientific research.

Last summer he worked at Princeton for The National Science Foundation. In the fall, he made a presentation of his research at a national conference in Washington, D.C.

During the three previous summers, Mr. Borgia, who is also a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, Pre-College Division, went on tour to Europe as a concert pianist. He is also an accomplished organist and played in the baccalaureate Mass at Princeton this year.

While at Princeton, Mr. Borgia was on the Tae Kwon Do team, and participated in the rock climbing, volleyball, tennis and racquetball clubs. He also enjoys snow- and water-skiing.

Mr. Borgia attended Harding School in Kenilworth and Delbarton High School in Morristown.

He is employed at AT&T for the summer.

Help line leaders attend national conference

Two directors of Contact We Care, a non-profit, telephone based hotline/crisis intervention service, recently attended the Contact USA national convention in Winston-Salem, N.C. Candy Santo, executive director, and Betty Jacox, director of training and recruiting, met and worked with others from Contact centers throughout the country.

During the four-day convention, Mrs. Santo participated in an intensive two day workshop titled Contact 2000, offered to Contact center executive directors and board presidents, which focused on the strategic planning needed to take Contact into the 21st century.

Mrs. Jacox also attended workshops during the convention, which was attended by more than 300 Contact representatives nationwide. Among those she participated in were "Listening to Understand" and "Empowering the Caller, What You Can Be to the Suicidal Caller" and "Recruiting Volunteers."

Mrs. Santo remained in North Carolina for an additional three days to attend the NACOD (National Association of Contact Directors) convention, where 46 Contact center directors shared ideas and participated in a workshop titled "Assessing Not-for-Profit Performance." The workshop was led by Annemarie Bridgeman DeMarco of Westfield. An employee of AT&T, she has received the company's Rose and Golden Harp Awards, has done community volunteer work and is listed in Who's Who in American Women. In 1990, she was named Young Career Woman in Westfield.

Commenting on the conventions, Mrs. Santo said, "In today's society with the current financial pressures and increasing demand for services, the not-for-profits need to position themselves to provide more of the services our community needs, because we can do it less expensively, more effectively and with more caring than any government bureaucracy. The knowledge I have gained from attending both workshops gave me additional skills which I can bring to the center to help make that happen."

Mrs. Santo was also re-elected to the NACOD board. Previously serving as treasurer, she will now hold the position of secretary of the board.

In addition to serving as a helpline/crisis intervention service, Contact We Care provides Care Ring, a daily telephone reassurance program for the elderly, homebound and disabled. All of Contact's services are also available to the speech and hearing impaired who rely on TTYs or TTDs.

Volunteers are always needed to provide these services, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The next training cycle for new volunteers will be held Wednesday evenings beginning in September at St Theresa's Church in Kenilworth.

Those interested in volunteering or who wish to receive additional information about Care Ring may call 232-3017. For those needing to talk to someone about various issues, including stress, depression, loss of a loved one, etc., the helpline number is 232-2880 or TDD 232-3333. Contact does not charge for the calls which are anonymous.

Contact We Care is a member of the United Way, Contact USA and Life Line International.

Ducks still for sale for charity race on river this Saturday

A toy duck "race" which will raise funds for the Burn Center at St. Barnabas Medical Center in Livingston is scheduled for 2 p.m. Saturday at the Rahway River in Sperry Park.

Prizes include a one-day Bahamas Getaway trip for two, and seven additional gifts. The event is sponsored by the Cranford Fire Department FMBA Local 37.

The FMBA is selling the miniature plastic toy ducks for $2.50 each. Each will be individually numbered for the race. All proceeds go to the aluminum Cans For Burned Children program, which provides financial assistance to child burn victims treated at the Burn Center and their families. The funds also will be used for the school and community education programs of the St. Barnabas Burn Foundation.

Duck owners do not have to be present at the race to win. To enter a duck in the race, residents may call the Cranford FMBA Local 37 at 709-7360, or Firefighter George McGrath at 276-1952. Tickets will be sold up until race time Saturday.

The St. Barnabas Burn Foundation offers comprehensive burn awareness, prevention and fire safety programs for organizations of all ages throughout New Jersey. For more information about these programs call the St. Barnabas burn education office at (201) 533-8071.

Cranford wins traffic award

The Cranford Police Department received a $500 scholarship grant for the fourth consecutive year for attaining the highest overall rating among 312 departments. The competition is sponsored by the New Jersey State Safety Council and its annual Department of the Year Awards for traffic control and management in 1992.

Competing departments are judged on their overall crash reduction activities, with special emphasis on accident investigation, maintenance and use of traffic records, selective enforcement, traffic engineering studies, training of traffic bureau personnel, and enforcement of drinking driver laws.

Lt. Thomas Kane is commander of the Cranford Police Department's traffic division.

The award was presented at a highway safety conference June 15.

Whitman wins backing of Bagger and Augustine

Assemblymen Richard H. Bagger and Alan M. Augustine have endorsed Republican candidate Christine Todd Whitman for governor "on the basis of her commitment to restore fiscal responsibility and economic vitality to the state of New Jersey."

Mrs. Whitman welcomed the endorsement, saying, "I've known Rich and Alan for a long time, and I respect the legislative job they've been doing. They're both dedicated and conscientious public servants. I look forward not only to campaigning with them, but also working with them in Trenton to get the state's fiscal house in order."

Assemblymen Bagger and Augustine, who both represent the 22nd Legislative District (R-Union, Somerset, Morris, Middlesex), expressed praise of Mrs. Whitman for "showing excellent foresight and conscientious fiscal management" in urging state lawmakers to adopt the most frugal budget possible.

Mr. Bagger, who serves on the Assembly Appropriations Committee, said, "Political candidates for governor have a history of jumping to quick conclusions about the state budget without thoroughly examining the numbers — many times at the taxpayers' expense. But Christie Whitman has shown she puts people, not politics, first by stressing that the state get its fiscal house in order — by cutting spending — to prevent the kind of recurring shortfalls created by the Florio administration."

Mr. Augustine credited Mrs. Whitman with displaying "vision and commitment to the future in counseling Republican leaders from both houses to proceed cautiously on the budget and identify those specific areas where reductions can be made to provide either a buffer or finance additional tax cuts."

Largely as a result of advice provided by Mrs. Whitman, Republican leaders in the Senate and Assembly proposed a budget that would set aside $150 million for use as surplus or for tax cuts.

Shenanigans

When the classroom closed

"No more pencils, no more books, no more teachers' dirty looks," we'd yell at the top of our lungs the last day of school. There was no better feeling than knowing school was over at last and summer was starting.

The countdown usually began months before, when the blustery and biting winds of March made every kid wonder if summer was really right around the corner. But sure enough, day by day, we drew ever closer to freedom from school.

We lived to play. Planning when, how and what we would play was almost as important as the actual playing itself. Weeks before school let out, we would begin discussing how many school days were left, and what we would do as soon as school was officially over. In fact, this subject became almost a constant topic of conversation, reaching a fevered pitch a week or so before school ended.

During those last few days, daylight lasted until around 8:30 p.m., so we had a taste of summer before the fact. This only made us want school to be over even more. We would gulp down dinner and race back outside for a rousing game or two of "red light" or "hide and go seek" before we were summoned home because "it was a school night."

There were always one or two kids who never had to be home. We knew they had a home, but they were allowed to "stay out to all hours," as Mom put it. Needless to say, we kids thought this was great and vowed when we grew up and had kids we would never make them come in before they were ready.

There was little we could do to contain ourselves the last few days of school. The good sisters tried their best to keep control, but about the best they could do was use idle threats that none of us believed.

Except one year, on the very last day of school, I was suspended for helping hang Theresa Quigly out the window by her feet. Personally, I do not believe there was any threat to her life because we were only on the second floor, but nevertheless, I was banished to the principal's office.

Being suspended on the last day of school had little clout with me, but Mom certainly took it seriously enough. Saying something about "somebody switching babies on me in the hospital" and telling me I was going to send her "to an early grave," she washed her hands of the entire issue and left it up to Dad to handle the problem when he got home.

Now Dad used to be a kid, and he remembered how it was. Mom, of course, was a kid once too, but she has "milk of amnesia" when it came to her youth. However, her memory was perfect when it came to recalling the misadventures we got into the summer before. This led to our having to endure the annual "State of the Summer" address each and every year.

Mom would walk back in front of my brothers and me, explaining exactly what could happen if we "wandered off somewhere," climbed a tree and fell out, threw a rock and "someone lost an eye," or the ever-popular "stepped on a rusty nail." I lived in mortal fear that I would come down with the dreaded "lock jaw" from some minor puncture wound I always seemed to have.

Once school was out, we kids would meet every morning on one porch or another to discuss what we would do that day. There was a strategic plan involved, and the majority had to agree before we could set out on our ventures. There was a constant tug of war to see who would be the ring leader, but we were a democratic group. Whoever came up with the best game of pretend for the day, and was able to execute it perfectly, became the leader.

Our job was to pack in as much fun as we could during the summer. It was a hefty load, but someone had to do it. It was a science. I wonder if it still is.

Two generations explore common ground

By BRIAN P. DUNLEAVY
THE CHRONICLE

The young and old came together at Walnut Avenue School in June during a special intergenerational program organized by the Cranford Recreation Department.

Students in Filomena Preuss's second-grade class met with several members of Community Center senior citizen clubs recently for a morning of conversation, computers and fun. The event was part of a pilot program organizers hope to expand to all three township elementary schools next year.

"It went well, very smoothly," said Alice Fernandez, who acted as the event's volunteer consultant/organizer for the recreation department. "It was beautiful to see the kids' interaction with adults."

The day earned praise from the senior participants as well.

"It was a lot of fun," Harry Duchez said. "The kids are great."

"I enjoyed the idea so much," Lee West said. "I hope that they are planning to continue this program with the same pen pals or someone else."

According to Ms. Fernandez, the intergenerational program was conducted in a three-phase, pen pal program, developing relationship between the students and seniors through a letter exchange in April.

In the next phase, the children invited the senior citizens to a meeting at Walnut Avenue School and the seniors formally accepted the invitation. The program concluded with the meeting Thursday.

"The letter writing helped the students develop their reading and writing skills," Ms. Fernandez said. "But, above all, the program provided the children with the opportunity to experience the values and wisdom of the older generation."

Ms. Fernandez said the meeting expanded on a pen pal program discussed by the Union County Association of Senior Citizen Coordinators. Several communities, like Hillside, have begun letter-writing programs with seniors and young students, she said.

"The pen pal program is very practical," Ms. Fernandez said. "We just took it a step further."

The 22 children in Mrs. Preuss's class met with 23 senior citizens for one hour Friday, sharing snacks, gifts and conversation. The children also introduced the seniors to computers, showing them how to load a disk and playing bingo and concentration computer games.

"It was really a wonderful experience," Walnut Avenue School Principal Joan Melvin said. "The letters were delightful and the seniors and children really shared a lot of interests in common. They were truly interacting.

"Every year, we have a Grandparent/Senior Friend Day but this was a little more intimate," she continued. "It was a wonderful way for children to see that seniors citizens are still an active and caring part of society."

Gardener training due in fall

Rutgers Cooperative Extension of Union County is accepting applications for its 1993-94 master gardener program.

The program gives people with an interest in horticulture an opportunity to become more educated in a variety of horticultural topics and share their expertise with county residents through volunteer programs sponsored by Rutgers Cooperative Extension.

Master gardeners complete a course that involves attending weekly horticulture and entomology lectures taught by Extension faculty and staff from Rutgers University. They are also trained to answer telephone inquiries, diagnose plant problems, and identify insect pests.

The lectures will be held Fridays 10 a.m.-noon at the Rutgers Cooperative Extension auditorium, 300 North Ave. East, Westfield. Class will begin Sept. 17 and run through April.

For applicants will be accepted into the program. Upon acceptance to the program a $80 tuition fee is due. Tuition covers the cost of a textbook, notebook and other class materials.

Burak resigns as director at UCC

Professor Dorothy Burak of Cranford, director of Union County College's nationally recognized Institute for Intensive English, will leave her position due to a family relocation to California. Her resignation has taken effect; no successor as yet has been named.

Mrs. Burak joined the college's faculty in 1981 and was named institute director in 1984. The institute offers concentrated English instruction to speakers of other languages. Upon completing the institute, the student earns a certificate of proficiency and generally is considered to be well enough acquainted with the English language to function effectively in a business or higher educational setting.

During her tenure as institute director, the program's student population has grown from 350 to 1,100 students, which Mrs. Burak attributed to a more streamlined entrance procedure and more extensive financial aid packages; extra space with the move to the new location of the Elizabeth campus at the former Elizabethtown Gas Co. building in that city's midtown business district; and renovation of the Plainfield campus.

Institute courses now are offered at each of the College's three campuses in Cranford, Elizabeth, and Plainfield.

Mrs. Burak said she has noted over the years a vast increase in the number of students who complete the institute's language program only to enroll in credit-bearing courses in the college's mainstream. Many eventually obtain associate degrees. The institute has been recognized both nationally and on a statewide basis for its excellence, and Mrs. Burak said that extensive research she and her colleagues have done on English as a second language higher educational innovations have contributed heavily to making this happen.

Other accomplishments include Mrs. Burak's active representation of UCC on the N.J. Department of Higher Education Council for the Education of Language Minority Students. Through this role, she was instrumental in conveying a message to the state Department of Higher Education that the community college is an important vehicle in higher education and thus deserving of increased legislative attention. She especially worked to communicate the point that language minority students should have higher educational access.

Last month, Mrs. Burak was presented with the President's Award by New Jersey Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages/Bilingual Education (NJTESOL-BE), a professional organization working with students from diverse languages and cultures in kindergarten through higher and adult education. It is an affiliate of the international Teachers of English to Speakers of other Languages (TESOL) and the New Jersey Education Association (NJEA). The award was given to Mrs. Burak in recognition of her leadership and service to language minority students in higher education statewide.

A graduate of East Stroudsburg State University with a bachelor's degree, Mrs. Burak holds a master's degree from Kean College.

A SPECIAL PAGE OF SUMMER FUN JUST FOR KIDS

CHECK IT OUT

Two thumbs up

By ANNE LEMAY

Have you ever found yourself telling a friend about a book you've read? Have you ever spent time with a friend picking apart a book or movie you didn't like? You may not have realized it, but you were acting as a reviewer.

You have the power to reach hundreds of friends with your opinion about a book by writing a review for this newspaper. It's almost as simple as just writing your thoughts down on paper, but here are a few tips to help you:

First, tell what the story is about in a few short sentences. If you've ever seen Reading Rainbow on public television stations, you've seen kids doing exactly that. For example, if you were telling about The Tale of Peter Rabbit by Beatrix Potter, you might say, "Peter is a naughty rabbit who just can't stay out of Mr. McGregor's garden, even though his father was captured there and put into a pie by Mrs. McGregor."

One sentence tells who the main characters are, where the story takes place and gives a hint of the story problem. Start by listing the main characters (not all of them), find an adjective to describe each.

Once you have all this, put it together in a sentence or two. There is no one way, no "right" way to describe a story. If you are reviewing a longer book you might use a few sentences to describe it. The key is to say just enough to make someone want to read the book — but don't give away the ending, in case they do!

If there are pictures in the book, you can tell what kind they are — drawings, paintings, in black and white, or in color. Do they add to the story? What do you think about the pictures in your book? Did you see the characters the same way?

Now it's time to give your opinion: Did you like it? But that's not enough. Why did you like it (or why didn't you)? For example, what I liked about Peter Rabbit is the exciting chase scene.

If I didn't like Goldilocks and the Three Bears I might say, "I can't believe anybody would be stupid enough to leave their house unlocked." Another reason I might not like the story could be that "I think there is too much repetition, which slows down the plot." Whatever you think, it's your opinion. It isn't right or wrong, but the people who read your review need to know why you think this is so.

Finally, would you recommend this book to others? Do you know any other books like this that the readers also might enjoy? If you didn't like the book you reviewed, you might suggest some books kids might like instead.

Be sure to include the full title, the author's name, the publisher and the copyright date. Your local librarian can help you find this information — it's right in the book. You might also mention whether you bought the book or found it at your local public library, because this might help others find it.

Thumbs up or thumbs down, it's up to you to decide because YOU ARE THE REVIEWER.

Anne Lemay is librarian with Children's Services of the Piscataway Public Library.

Send your reviews to Kids' Stuff, Forbes Newspapers, P.O. Box 699, Somerville, NJ 08876. Be sure to include name, age, address and phone number.

And the winners are...

The first winners of Forbes Newspapers' Summer Movie Circus Contest are Mary Ann Schamberger of Middlesex, Suzanne Wengryn of Somerville, Brenda Hoke of Edison, Connie Osinski of Somerville, and Chris Zarelli of Branchburg.

Each will receive a pass to a General Cinema theater and a poster.

How to be a model child

By RACHEL KURTZ

JACQUELYN ZAMPELLA

Jackie Zampella had a cluckin' good time with Phil Hartman on Saturday Night Live.

Jackie was a principal performer on "Cluckin' Chicken," a Saturday Night Live commercial starring Phil Hartman that pokes fun at fast food restaurants.

When Jackie was 2 years old, people always asked her mother Doris if the outgoing and charming little girl had ever modeled or tried out for commercials. After two years of these questions, Mrs. Zampella, along with several hundred other parents, brought her daughter to audition for an agent. Jackie was one of the few children the agent agreed to represent.

Jackie began to model in catalogs such as Caldor, Ames, and Bradlee's. Her biggest modeling jobs were appearing on the cover of the Kids R Us 1991 calendar and the cover of the 1992 Spiegal Christmas catalog.

At 4, Jackie appeared in her first commercial, for Fisher Price. The company liked working with her and booked her for a commercial about their toy laundry. Since then she has been in several other commercials.

Jackie says of modeling and being on TV, "It's fun. I like it." Her most exciting job, she says, was the Saturday Night Live commercial.

Mrs. Zampella says if Jackie stops enjoying what she is doing, she won't ask her to continue. Mrs. Zampella is careful not to become a "stage mom" and push Jackie to a point where she's not having fun.

Now 7 years old and entering the second grade at Crim School in Bridgewater, Jackie has gotten used to all the attention. While family and friends get excited about seeing her face in magazines and on TV, Jackie is more interested in seeing the children she has met while shooting commercials in New York City.

Despite all the time she spends modeling and shooting commercials, Jackie still has time to be a kid. Jackie takes dance classes, voice and piano lessons and has already sung on a record with her voice teacher and two other girls for an aspiring songwriter, she began to learn piano by ear before she started taking lessons.

When things get busy with her other activities, Mrs. Zampella tells the agent that Jackie needs a break to go to birthday parties and play with friends.

Jackie says simply that the difference between her and other kids is that "I model and they don't."

All of her activity doesn't take Jackie away from her schoolwork either. She did well in her first-grade class and her teacher said that Jackie is a compassionate, patient and disciplined child. Mrs. Zampella attributes some of Jackie's maturity to modeling.

Jackie gets an allowance of $1 an hour for the work she has done but all the rest goes into a fund for her college education.

When she grows up, Jackie says she wants to be a model and a doctor. She thinks she can do both.

CRITIC

Negative reinforcement is a poor way to shape behavior, research indicates. It is effective only when the criticism is regular, and steadily increasing negative criticism is usually required to keep control.

Any individual or society that persists in using this style must inculcate a strong internal negative reminder to keep the desired effect. This is how a large percentage of people have been taught to be extremely self-critical. The results are evident in depression, substance abuse and violence.

However, when people are consistently rewarded or complimented for their positive actions, studies show, they are more motivated, more positive in outlook and more likely to pursue healthy lifestyle patterns. Despite the fact that much early learning comes from childhood — learning what not to do by learning what negative behaviors elicit disapproval — research continues to show that children raised with less criticism and more warmth and self-esteem flourish best in adult life.

Virginia Sykes Senerchia

Musician, clubwoman; was 82

CRANFORD — Virginia Sykes Senerchia, 82, a musician and clubwoman who attended public schools in her native Cranford, died June 27, 1993 at the Monroe Village Health Care Center, Jamesburg.

Mrs. Senerchia lived in Elizabeth for many years before moving in 1975 to Rossmoor, a retirement village near Jamesburg. She entered the health care center in 1990.

She was trained in piano, bassoon, and voice, and gave piano lessons while playing in area orchestras. Mrs. Senerchia also sang in church choirs and during World War II directed the choir at Percy Jones General Hospital in Battle Creek, Mich.

A graduate of the former Hartridge School, Plainfield, she received a bachelor's degree from Smith College and a bachelor's degree in library science from Columbia University.

Mrs. Senerchia served on the budget committee of the United Way of Elizabeth during the 1950s and 1960s. She formerly was on the maternity committee of what is now Elizabeth General Medical Center.

She also held membership in the Junior Service League of Cranford; the Cranford Dramatic Club; the Progress Club of Cranford; the Fortnightly Club of Elizabeth; the Suburban Golf Club; the Liverpool Golf Club; the Rossmoor Golf Club; and a golf club in Nova Scotia province, Canada.

Her husband, Dr. Fred F. Senerchia Jr., died in 1986.

Surviving are a brother, Lawrence A. Sykes of Duxbury, Mass.; and several nieces and nephews.

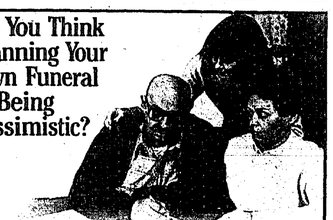
Do You Think Planning Your Own Funeral Is Being Pessimistic?



Many people would answer yes. However, many of those same people have insurance for their health, life, home, car, along with wills, trust funds, etc. In our society we're accustomed to preparing ourselves, financially, for the future. But, we often fail to prepare in other ways by overlooking our emotional needs.

Our booklet, A Guide To Planning Ahead, is designed to help families openly discuss their feelings about death and their individual preferences in regard to funeral services, burial or cremation. It may sound pessimistic at first, but the many families who have used this booklet tell us it helped them become closer. They tell us it helped them make important decisions, together, in a calm and rational way, resulting in peace of mind regarding the future.

Chances are A Guide To Planning Ahead can help you and your loved ones come to a better understanding of your needs, both financially and emotionally. We'll be glad to send you a free copy. Simply return the coupon below.

Business

Tecknit continues to expand and thrive

By BRIAN P. DUNLEAVY
THE CHRONICLE

As American industry struggles through the deepest recession in years, one Cranford firm continues to grow.

In May, Tecknit, a leading manufacturer of EMI shielding materials on Dermody Street for the past 35 years, announced the purchase of Shielding Industries, Inc. (SII) of Passaic. The SII takeover, made and negotiated through bankruptcy court during the past year, is only one of several expansions Tecknit has made throughout its history — including acquisitions in Denver and Europe.

"This acquisition fits the company's growth strategy of expanding within the shielding industry," Tecknit President Paul D. Beck said last week from the firm's corporate headquarters in Cranford. "The newly acquired company's installation capabilities will also be a significant benefit to Tecknit's existing architectural shielding products line."

According to Mr. Beck, SII offers Tecknit, which manufactures shielding materials used in electronic devices, the design, manufacturing and installation of a full line of shielding systems for X-ray, radio frequency and nuclear emissions. The acquisition is a true expansion for Tecknit.

"A new company called Tecknit Shielding Systems, Inc., has been established to operate this acquired business," Mr. Beck said. "Robert J. Hener, former president of SII, and key members of his staff will remain with the newly formed company, which will continue to operate out of Passaic."

In addition to upper-level management, Tecknit will retain SII's 23 employees, who would have lost their jobs if SII went bankrupt, Mr. Beck said. Tecknit Cranford has 215 employees.

"We will keep the key people working there," Mr. Beck said. "Everybody's staying. In fact, we actually saved a lot of jobs."

Currently, more than 50 percent of Tecknit's contracts go to military-related products, including ground systems for Patriot missiles during the Persian Gulf wa.

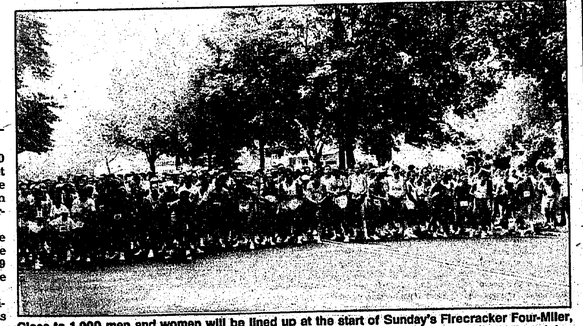
Firecracker Run kicks off the 4th

1,000 runners expected to participate

By KIP KUDUK
THE CHRONICLE



Close to 1,000 men and women will be lined up at the start of Sunday's Firecracker Four-Miler, which will begin at 9:30 a.m. in front of Union County College. The event is rapidly gaining recognition as one of the finer road races in the area.

Once again, approximately 1,000 men and women of all ages will get an early start on the Independence Day festivities in Cranford when the 14th annual Firecracker Four-Miler begins Sunday morning.

The event, sponsored by the Cranford Jaycees, will commence with the one-mile Fun Run at 9 a.m., which will be followed by the four-mile race at 9:30.

The TAC-certified course originates on Springfield Ave., across from Union County College. The runners will turn right onto Kenilworth Boulevard and make another right turn onto Orange Ave. before winding through the Nomahegan Park bicycle trail and finishing between the lake and parking lot at the park. Mile splits and water stops will be spread throughout the course.

The course record is held by Gary Cohen of Edison, who traversed the course in 19:11 in the mid 1980s.

Last year, defending champion Budd Coates was beaten by 34-year-old Keith Coughlan of Roselle Park, who won the four-miler from wire to wire, winning by nine seconds. Cranford's Michael McHale was the first local resident to complete the race, placing eighth overall and first in the 40-45 age group with a time of 20:45.

Last year's female winner was Lisa Mudrick of Far Hills (23:19), who finished eight seconds ahead of Kelly Flanagan. Garwood's Jennifer Teahan was the fourth women across the finish line.

Race coordinator John Martin, who was instrumental in initiating the event, firmly believes the Firecracker Four-Miler is one of the best road races in the area this weekend.

"It's a great course and we have great prizes," said Martin, who is also the boys' head coach in cross country and winter and spring track at Westfield High School. "We have many different prizes in several different categories and we have a computerized scoring and timing system."

While he has won his share of prizes in the event, Coates enjoys competing in the four-mile race because it allows runners to go at full-speed without getting too tired.

"In a four-mile flat race you can go at it pretty hard and recover quickly," said least year's runner-up who lives in Emmaus, Pa. "It's probably the best race in that part of New Jersey."

The grand prize is the $100 which will be awarded to the overall winner. First-place finishers in each age group will receive a gift certificate to The Office Restaurant, while the top three in each class will be given Casio wrist watches.

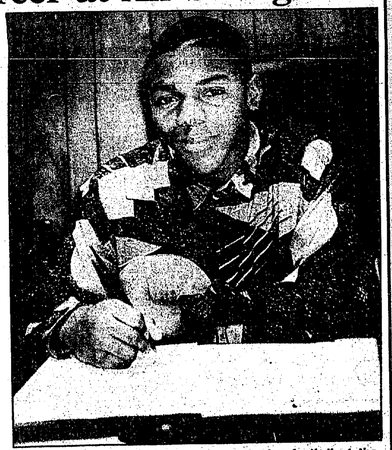
Winners in special partners categories and weight classes also have the opportunity to bring home prizes. Pairs, such as husband-wife, father-son, mother-daughter, etc., who combine to finish in the lowest times in their class are eligible to win awards, as well as bantam weights, light-heavy weights and super-heavy weights.

Even though the pre-registration period is over, runners still have time to sign up. Either contact John Bashaw during the evening at 276-4818, or show up at the registration tent at 7:30 a.m. at Nomahegan Park on Sunday. The fee is $5 for the Fun Run and $12 for the four-mile main event. All pre-registrants receive complimentary t-shirts, as will post-registrants while supplies last.

Thomas ends CHS career at All-Star game

Speedster will play WR in North-South Classic

By KIP KUDUK
THE CHRONICLE



Seen here signing a letter of intent to play football at the University of Massachusetts, Cranford's Darryl Thomas will take a break from baseball to wrap up his high school football career at the First Fidelity North-South High School Football Classic. The game will be telecast live, Friday at 8 p.m. by the New Jersey Network.

Last fall, Darryl Thomas gained quite a bit of notoriety on the gridiron by running with and throwing the ball to his teammates at Cranford High School.

But, on Friday night the multi-talented Thomas will reacquaint himself with hauling in footballs and running pass patterns, as the senior will put on the shoulder pads for the final time during his high school career at the 15th annual First Fidelity North-South Football Classic at Giants Stadium.

While Thomas' quarterbacking skills propelled the Cougars to their best season in recent memory (7-2), his immediate future will involve catching the ball at the University of Massachusetts, where he was recruited as a wide receiver.

Without a doubt, the 6-foot-0, 175 pounder has the sheer speed and elusiveness to make the transition work. As a sophomore, Thomas was one of the Cougars' starting wide receivers, but he was chosen by new head coach Nick Brown to quarterback Cranford's option offense two years ago.

Brown's decision paid dividends, as Thomas scored a school record 27 touchdowns last season, 18 of them on the ground. He piled up 878 rushing yards and averaged a haughty 9.3 yards per carry.

He was also successful on 21 of 28 passing attempts and threw seven touchdown passes. In addition to returning kicks and punts, Thomas was Cranford's finest defensive back.

"I live by the philosophy that you find your best athlete and make him the quarterback," said Brown last year. "He runs a 4.4 in the 40 and has a 32-inch vertical jump."

Thomas will be wearing the familiar No. 24 and will represent the north squad. The teams are selected by a 24-member committee with North Jersey coaches choosing the north squad and South Jersey coaches selecting the south roster.

For fans who are unable to attend the game, the New Jersey Network (Channel 50) will telecast the event live at 8 p.m. Friday.

Three girls selected by prestigious soccer club

By KIP KUDUK
THE CHRONICLE

Three girls from Cranford who will be entering the fifth grade this fall are getting quite a kick out of the summer, thanks to the prowess they displayed on the soccer field.

Susan Flamini, Erica Stewart and Coleen Tretola were among 18 girls selected from a pool of 75 to play on the Mid-New Jersey select soccer team in the 10-and-under age group.

The Mid-New Jersey select club is one of four squads of its age group within the state. Another team is paired down from these four squads to comprise a singular New Jersey all-star team, starting a long process which culminates in the selection of a national team.

COLEEN TRETOLA

ERICA STEWART

SUSAN FLAMINI

For the past two years all three girls played on the "Comets" traveling soccer team under the direction of Mike Stewart. Over the same period of time they were the only three girls to participate on the Mid-New Jersey Regional summer and fall co-ed teams.

The Mid-New Jersey Select team, which includes the best players from Somerset, Union, Mercer and Middlesex counties, just began a stretch which will take it to various tournaments around the Northeast in the next five weekends. Future tournaments will be held at Fort Dix, NJ, the Poconos, Valley Forge, Pa., Charles River, Mass., and Ottawa, Canada.

Flamini, a center forward, scored five goals, Stewart, a center halfback, pumped home three goals, and Tretola, a stopper, added another marker as the squad won the Willingboro Invitational Soccer Tournament last weekend, outscoring their opponents, 27-3, in four games.

Local legion teams gain valuable experience

By KIP KUDUK
THE CHRONICLE

As the American Legion baseball season nears the halfway point, the coaches of both local teams are remaining upbeat and optimistic even though their respective clubs continue to encounter problems which stem from inexperience.

At Cranford, head coach Nick Brown was concerned about his team's sluggish offensive performance during the early going. But, this problem proved to be a temporary one, as Cranford turned things around and exploded to score 41 runs in its last four games.

The outburst was highlighted by a doubleheader sweep of Roselle Park on Saturday, an afternoon in which Cranford touched home plate 33 times and evened its record at 5-5.

"We really wanted to be .500 after the doubleheader and we did that," said assistant coach Bobby Quiles, who is filling in for Brown while he attends a football camp at Penn State University. "The kids rose to the occasion with the bats when we needed it."

In Saturday's opening game, centerfielder Adam DiPaolo led off the first inning with a triple, igniting a four-run rally. Catcher Chris Dorsett belted a pair of home runs and the hosts took an 11-1 lead into the seventh before holding on for an 11-9 triumph. Joe Marmo was credited with the victory.

Cranford continued the onslaught in the nightcap when they won 22-2 in a shortened contest. Dan Wilkin hit one over the fence and Darryl Thomas clouted an inside-the-park homer. Cranford almost batted around twice in the second, where it accrued half of its runs. Hal Hanssen started and picked up the victory, while John Solis pitched the final inning.

On Monday, Cranford dipped below the .500 mark when it lost at Summit, 5-1. Andy Trodden pitched well, but absorbed the loss. Shortstop Justin Evans and second baseman Hanssen played solid defense in the middle infield.

"The kids are playing good ball," said Quiles. "I see a lot more confidence from the younger guys than from when we started. We always set a goal to improve from the year before and, so far, that's happened. We only won five games last year and we have that already."

Victories have been much tougher to come by for Kenilworth. In fact, Post 470 has not won in its first 14 games. Nonetheless, head coach Bill Nickel prefers to dwell on the positives.

"I told them we have nowhere to go but up," said Nickel. "I can see them improving their skills at each position. I see a definite progression, especially defensively. Former players from Brearley are coming in to help and impress some good habits onto the younger players. We'll win, it's just a matter of time."

Kenilworth nearly won its first game Saturday, when it carried a 1-0 lead into the sixth inning at Summit. However, the hosts came back to win, 2-1, making a hard-luck loser out of Mike Keleher, who went the distance, giving up three hits and six walks while striking out five.

Post 470 scored its lone run in the first, as Bucky Perrotta walked, stole second base and scored on Steve Malocha's single. Unfortunately, it was the only hit Kenilworth got all day.

"I think it was our best defensive game of the season, even though an error allowed them to win," said Nickel. "But, one hit isn't enough to win."

On Monday, Kenilworth succumbed to Westfield, 13-2. Mike Emery maintained his hot hitting pace by going 2 for 2 and scoring a run. Joe Kratzer doubled and scored Post 470's other run.

Last week, Kenilworth lost to Roselle, 15-1, on Wednesday and 10-5 to Linden on Tuesday. Emery went 3 for 3 with four walks, a run scored and an RBI in the two games, while second baseman Amilcar Perez and first baseman Mike Pastor both singled in the loss to Linden.

Class of 1993 shows its strengths at Memorial Field commencement

By MARGARET DOWLING
THE CHRONICLE

The proud members of the Cranford High School class of 1993 met for their commencement ceremony on Thursday evening. Under clear blue skies at Memorial Field, a light breeze blew among the white caps and gowns worn by the young women and the royal blue worn by the young men. Gold sashes indicated members of the National Honor Society in the class of more than 200.

Principal Robert C. Seyfarth welcomed the families and friends of the graduates. Members of the class received $1,070,000 in scholarships, he said, and more than 90 percent of the class members planned to continue their education.

Erica Greutich, one of two co-valedictorians, compared the high expectations anticipated of President Clinton's administration at the beginning of his four-year term with those of the class of 1993 as they began high school. She stressed the importance that decision making will have on their lives in vocational and social areas.

Co-valedictorian Donna Louizides said the graduates must have the ability to communicate their dreams and voice their concerns. She urged them to have convictions of the heart and to have faith in our generation to solve problems.

Class President Karen Cirillo described some of the highlights for the class of 1993 since beginning school. She compared the students four years ago to characters in the movie The Breakfast Club, as scared, excited and confused. "A goodbye is necessary in order to meet again," she told her classmates.

Mr. Seyfarth addressed the graduates, telling them they may embark on a series of careers and for many being a parent would be the most important career. While family life is still strong in Cranford, he said, in many areas of the country, the family's influence has diminished to an alarmingly low level.

Acting Superintendent William E. Cashman quoted Aldous Huxley: "Experience is not what happens to you. It's what you do with what happens to you." He told the class that while parents and teachers had provided a foundation, "the future is in your hands."

The audience applauded when Board of Education President Tom Bonhag said, "We are prohibited from calling upon each other and God to wish each other well." He was referring to a 1992 Supreme Court decision to separate church and state at school-sponsored ceremonies. The result was the elimination of the invocation and benediction at the graduation ceremony.

Mr. Bonhag praised the class for its poise, courtesy and intellect. He reminded them that we all have an obligation to each other. He quoted a 13th century Italian peasant, Francis of Assisi (without mentioning his sainthood), "Lord, make me an instrument of thy peace. Where there is hatred, let me sow love. Where there is injury, pardon. Where there is doubt, faith. Where there is despair, hope. Where there is darkness, light. Where there is sadness, joy."

Mr. Bonhag concluded with, "May God bless you and may God bless America."

Row by row, each graduate came forward and received a diploma from Mr. Bonhag and Andrew J. Pellicio, vice president of the Board of Education.

William Finnegan, the class salutatorian, described changes in the class members over the years and he noted that some of them have been friends from kindergarten and first grade.

Musical selections were performed by the Cranford High School concert choir with Tomas Pedes, choir director. Karen Cirillo composed the graduation song, Forever in our Hearts.

At the end of the ceremony, the graduates tossed their mortarboards high, clapping and shouting with excitement.

Graduate Kathy Riekoon said she felt sad but excited to say goodbye to everyone and realize "we'll never be in the same place again." She will attend Rutgers University in the fall.

Michele McGuire said she was sad that it was all over. "I'm looking forward to an exciting future," she said. She will head for Loyola University and law school.

Leo Schaeffer said he felt good now that everything is over with and done. He and his friend Peter Cetera plan to attend Union County College to study liberal arts and later transfer to a four-year college.
