NOTICE OF

OUR CHICAGO LETTER.

Shyann Leaves Hoboken Sans Homage but Determines to Return with "Colors Flying."

CHICAGO, Ill., October 9, 1881. To the Proprietors of the Advertiser.

DEAR SIRS :-- I have got this far only in my projected tour "around the world," and from present indications, I am likely to swing bridges. These bridges are opened meander no farther. This roaming at large is not what it's cracked up to be, by any means; particularly at this season of the year, when country roads are almost as filthy as the streets of New York, while the pedestrian craze has died out to that extent that there is neither money nor glory in a long tramp. I was sorry to miss your genial countenances about the festive board at the Park Hotel prior to my departure. A very grand farewell supper was not tendered me on that occasion, and all the distinguished men of the country were not present: but what's the difference? I know your rival would-be editor makes such the lock. Several persons were crossing at statements about himself and friends without any real cause, and why should not I ?

Our trip over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was very pleasant as far as Cumberland, O., where we stopped for a genuine railroad breakfast, and were obliged to swallow down very hot victuals against time, or at the rate of about "a mile a minute." From that time until we reached Defiance, O., about 3 o'clock the next morning, nothing occurred to mar our pleasure. or in fact to otherwise disturb the monot ony of the surroundings, except the usual ludicrous and ridiculous incidents on board night trains. For instance, one very sleepy passenger inquired of his ponderous and sleepy Teuton neighbor the name of the next-station. The latter replied "I don' no'." "Ish dot so," replied the other, "I

A contrivance on we struck a most beautiful wreck, or rather board the car will enable the conductor to came within a block of striking it, just slip the cable from the wheels when he pulling up in time. We were somewhat wishes to pull up, and return it so as to start behind hand, which proved very fortunate again. It is expected to work wonders, and under the circumstances. Three railroads cross at the point referred to, and a few is introduced mostly owing to the trouble moments prior to our arrival a freight train and unreliability of horseflesh in this quar ter. of the Wabash line ran into a heavy train The Board of Trade chaps are almost be-
